Lieut. It was delivered unto my Captain upon the Guard.

Capt. Merriman took the Book into his Hand, and ſaid, This individual Book, ſigned in ſeveral Places by me, I delivered to Mr. Froſt, Secretary to the Council of State; and Mr. Froſt cauſed me to ſign it in ſeveral Places, whereby it could not be miſtaken; and that is the very individual Book.

Mr. Prideaux. My Lords, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, we have thus far gone in the Evidence; That Mr. Lilburne brought the laſt Sheet of it to the Preſs the firſt Time he came with Capt. Jones; and he came the ſecond Time with him to examine it, that is, he had a printed Copy, that was then printing, to be printed, and was the Corrector for the Preſs, reading the original Copy: So far is he privy to the printing of the Book. In the next place, three Witneſſes (Soldiers of the Army) ſwear he gave them one of thoſe Books, and one of them gave it to his Lieutenant, and the Lieutenant to the Captain; and the Captain ſwears this individual Book is that which Maſter Lilburne gave into the Hands of Mr. Lewis. What can be more plain than this? I pray you judge. For here is plain Teſtimony of Mr. Lilburne's delivering this Outcry to the three Soldiers, and one of them to his Lieutenant, and his Lieutenant to his Captain, and his Captain to Mr. Froſt, with Marks upon it: So this is by conſequence proved unto you, this is the individual Book that Mr. Lilburne, Priſoner at the Bar, gave to the three Soldiers; and which is to be made uſe of when you have occaſion upon the Evidence, to read it as now it is in the Court with you.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. By your favour, I have had no Anſwer to the Queſtion, that I humbly craved an Anſwer to; which is, Whether the Soldiers are poſitively able to ſwear that this is the individual Book which they ſay they had from my Hands? And whether they are able to ſwear that this individual Book is a true and exact Copy, without Addition or Subſcription, of that original Manuſcript that the Printer ſaith Captain Jones delivered to his Hands, which, he ſaith, I had an uncorrected Sheet of.

Mr. Prideaux. We ſhall clear that to you when we come to make uſe of it.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I beſeech you, Gentlemen of the Jury, to take notice of my Queſtion, and what I am denied.

Mr. Prideaux. The next Thing that is charged upon him is a Paper written and entitled, A Salva & Libertate. My Lord, I ſhall open the Thing to you, being directed (my Lord) for the Proſecution of Mr. Lilburne. And having Things of very high Concernment that are charged againſt him, I did by Word of Mouth ſend to have him come to me; which I underſtood he did decline, becauſe the Lieutenant had no Warrant. The Lieutenant of the Tower was pleaſed to acquaint me with it; and I thereupon directed my Warrant to the Lieutenant to bring him before me. And Mr. Lilburne, &c.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. My * Lord, and pleaſe your Honours, thus; If we be upon Matter of Fact, let us come to it: Let us have no Introduction to teach the Witneſſes what to ſay, beyond what their own Conſciences dictate unto them.

* This was the firſt or ſecond Time that Mr. Lilburne's Tongue ſlipp'd the calling him Lord.

Mr. Prideaux. I ſhall go no further in it; let the Lieutenant of the Tower ſpeak himſelf.

The Lieutenant of the Tower ſworn.

Mr. Prideaux. Lieutenant of the Tower, you are queſtioned about the Salva Libertate that Mr. Lilburne delivered unto you: Have you the Original?

Lieut. Tower. Yes, Sir, I have.

Mr. Prideaux. How come you by it?

Lieut. Tower. I ſhall be ſhort in what I ſay, becauſe I will not trouble the Court.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Let me hear you then.

Lieut. Tower. Being abroad, there was a Meſſage left with my Servants, That I ſhould bring up Lieutenant-Colonel Lilburne to Mr. Attorney's Chamber in the Temple; and when I came in, I had notice of it. I did then ſend to Lieutenant-Colonel John Lilburne, to let him know what Command I had received from the Attorney-General, the next Day to carry up Lieutenant-Colonel John Lilburne to the Attorney-General's Chamber. But Lieutenant-Colonel Lilburne not well underſtanding whether I had a written Warrant, or no; but before he came at home he recalled himſelf, and came back, and deſired the ſight of my Warrant. I told you before I had no Warrant, but by Word of Mouth. Why, ſays he, do you think I will go upon a verbal Warrant? Saith he, I will not go unleſs you force me. But the next Day Mr. Attorney-General was acquainted that he refuſed to come without a Warrant. When the Warrant was made, I met with Lieutenant-Colonel Lilburne about Ten of the clock in the Tower, who intreated me to let him ſee it.

I ſhew'd it him, he read it, he deſired a Copy of it, takes it; which when he had, he went from me, and about two hours after he came to me, about One of the clock, and ſaid, I pray receive this from me, for (ſays he) I do intend not to own the Authority and Power of that Gentleman that ſent me the Warrant. Whereupon I told him I would ſhew this ſame to the Attorney-General: Why, ſays he, I give you it to that purpoſe. When the time came, Lieut. Col. Lilburne did go along with me in an orderly civil way: I had no body but my Man, for I told him, I will take no body but my Man, if you will engage yourſelf to me that you will return peaceably: which he did, and ſo we went very orderly to Mr. Attorney's Chamber; which is all for that I can ſay.

Mr. Attorney. If you pleaſe that the Lieutenant may upon his Oath declare, whether that be the true Original he had from Mr. Lilburne's own hands or no?

Lieut. Tower. It was never out of my cuſtody ſince he gave it me.

Ld Keble. Mr. Lilburne, you do acknowledge it to be your own Hand-writing; ſhew it him.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I am too old with ſuch ſimple Ginns to be catch'd; I will caſt mine Eyes upon none of your Papers, neither ſhall I anſwer to any Queſtions that concern myſelf: I have learned more Law out of the Petition of Right, and Chriſt pleading before Pilate, than ſo.

Mr. Attorney. Would you had learnt more Goſpel.

Judge Jermin. You may anſwer a Queſtion whether it be true or falſe, and confeſs, and glorify God.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I have ſaid, Sir; prove it: I am not to be catch'd with ſuch Fooleries.

Ld Keble. You ſee the Man, and the Quality of the Man; this is the Paper that he delivered into his own hand, and that is ſufficient, as well as if it was of his own Hand-writing.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Good Sir, your verbal Bench-Law is far ſhort of your written Text in your own Law-Books.

Judge Jermin. Put it into the Court.

Ld Keble. Your writing or not writing is nothing; you delivered the Book.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, I deſire to know in what place, whereabouts in the Tower of London, the Lieutenant of the Tower ſaith he received this Paper.

Ld Keble. Let him name the place where it was delivered.

Lieut. Tower. The place was at the ſteps, at the bottom of the narrow Paſſage at my Garden-end, in the Cart-way where the Carriages come up.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Whether is that place in the Liberties of London, or is it part of the County of Middleſex?

Lieut. Tower. The Tower is in † London, ſome part of it, and ſome part in Middleſex; but unto which place that part of the Tower belongs, I am not able certainly to ſay, but it hath commonly been reputed in Middleſex.

† But it is ſure that place is in Middleſex, as was reſolved in Sir Tho. Overbury's Caſe. See Coke's 3*d part Inſt.* fol. 130. chap. Indictment.

Mr. Attorney. My Lord, you may ſee the Valiantneſs of this Champion for the Peoples Liberties, that will not own his own Hand; altho I muſt deſire you Gentlemen of the Jury to obſerve, that Mr. Lilburne implicitly confeſſeth it.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, I deny nothing: and what now can be proved mine, I have a Life to lay down for the Juſtification of it, but prove it firſt.

Mr. Attorney. My Lord, the next thing to prove the Charge againſt him is a very high one, it is ſtiled Maſter Lilburne's, and his Name is to it: it is intitled, An Impeachment of High Treaſon againſt Oliver Cromwell, and his Son-in-Law Henry Ireton, Eſqs; late Members of the late forcibly diſſolved Houſe of Commons, preſented to publick View by Lieut. Col. John Lilburne, cloſe Priſoner in the Tower of London. My Lord, I doubt he will not own it; but yet, my Lord, he may be asked the Queſtion.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I ſhall deny nothing I do: And yet I have read the Petition of Right, Sir, that teacheth me to anſwer to no Queſtions againſt or concerning myſelf, and I have read of the ſame to be practiſed by Chriſt and his Apoſtles.

Mr. Attorney. You will not own it, the Book you have read?

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. You may make your advantage of it.

Mr. Attorney. We ſhall prove it, call Witneſſes.

Thomas Daffern, Richard Lander Marſhal, Major Hawkſworth, Governour of Warwick-Caſtle; all ſworn.

Mr. Attorney. Mr. Daffern, if you pleaſe he may be asked where he met Mr. Lilburne, the time when, what Book was given him, and to what purpoſe it was given him.

Mr. Daffern. Why, it was upon the 12th of Auguſt laſt. Having been in Southwark, I met with Lieut. Col. Lilburne upon the Bridge, I went back with him to his Houſe at Wincheſter-houſe in Southwark: He had leave to viſit his Family at that time, being very ſick, and I told him I was going into Warwickſhire the next day; and he having heard that Col. Ayres was then removed from Oxford to Warwick-Caſtle, he gave me a Book to carry to him, and I delivered it to him at Warwick-Caſtle.

Mr. Attorney. The Book that he gave you, you gave to the Governour: did you ſee any more of them?

Mr. Daffern. I never ſaw any of them but that, which was both the firſt and the laſt I have ſeen of them.

Mr. Attorney. Lander the Marſhal was preſent at that time, was he not?

Mr. Lander. That I was, and I had it from him, and I delivered the Book to Major Hawkſworth the Governour.

Mr. Attorney. Major Hawkſworth, what did you do with the Book?

Major Hawkſworth. I ſent it to Colonel Pureſoy, in a Paper ſealed with three or four Seals.

Mr. Attorney. Call Col. Pureſoy.

[Col. Pureſoy ſworn.]

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I hear not one word: Under favour but one word, I crave but one word, I have an Exception. Firſt, Col. Pureſoy is one of thoſe that call themſelves the Keepers of the Liberties of England; and for committing Crimes againſt them I am indicted, and he is one of them, and therefore a Party, and in that reſpect in Law he can be no Witneſs againſt me. It would have been very hard for the King to have been a Witneſs againſt that Man that was indicted for committing Crimes againſt him; ſuch a thing in all his Reign was never known.

Col. Pureſoy. I received this Book, ſealed in a Letter, from the Governour of Warwick-Caſtle, Major Hawkſworth; I know his Hand, and I know the day day he ſent me this very individual Book, and my Hand is at it, and the Governour who ſent it up to me, which I declare to be the very individual Book that I received from him.

Mr. Attorney. Mr. Lilburne, you are miſtaken; Col. Pureſoy is a Member of Parliament, he is none of the Keepers of the Liberties of England. But why will you put us to all this trouble to prove your Books, ſeeing your Hand is to them? my Lord, I had thought the great Champion of England would not be aſhamed to own his own Hand.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I have anſwered once for all: I am upon Chriſt's Terms, when Pilate asked him whether he was the Son of God, and adjured him to tell him whether he was or no; he reply'd, Thou ſayſt it: ſo ſay I, Thou Mr. Prideaux ſayſt it, they are my Books: but prove it, and when that is done, I have a Life to lay down to juſtify whatſoever can be proved mine.

Judge Jermin. But Chriſt ſaid afterwards, I am the Son of God: confeſs, Mr. Lilburne, and give Glory to God.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I thank you, Sir, for your good Law, but I can teach myſelf better.

Mr. Attorney. Here Mr. Lilburne makes a Book, which was given to the hands of Mr. Daffern by Mr. Lilburne himſelf; Mr. Daffern he ſwears that the ſame Book he gave to Col. Ayres; Mr. Lander, the Marſhal of the Gariſon of Warwick, ſwears that the ſame Book Daffern gave to Col. Ayres, he had from him, and gave to Major Hawkſworth the Governour; the Governour ſwore, that that Book he received from the Marſhal, he ſent ſealed up in a Letter to Mr. Pureſoy; who alſo ſwears, that that ſame Book he ſet his Hand to it to know it again by, and that the individual Book that is now given into your hands, is the ſame Book that was delivered to him: the Title is, An Impeachment of High Treaſon againſt Oliver Cromwell Eſq;

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, I wonder you are not aſhamed ſo far to preſs the Teſtimony beyond that they themſelves ſwear. Mr. Daffern doth not name the Book at all that was given to him, neither doth he ſwear it to be mine; and therefore, Sir, you abuſe yourſelf, the Court, the Witneſs, and me too.

Mr. Attorney. Maſter Lilburne, I have done you right in it, and no wrong at all; for Col. Pureſoy doth name it. The next is a very dangerous Book of his, called, A Preparative to the Hue and Cry after Sir Arthur Haſlerig. Mr. Lieutenant of the Tower, you are upon your Oath, I pray you ſpeak your knowledge to that.

Lieut. of Tower. My Lord, it is true, Lieut. Colonel Lilburne gave me in the Tower ſuch a Book; but I cannot ſay, whether that be the ſame Book that he delivered to me, or no: I have ſuch a Book alſo at home, but I am not able to ſay that is the very Book he gave me; and whether this be the ſame Book, I know not.

Mr. Prideaux. Call Mr. Nutleigh and Mr. Radney.

[Maſter Nutleigh ſworn.]

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I pray let the Witneſſes ſtand here, the Jury ſay they cannot hear them.

[Edward Radney called and ſworn.]

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I pray you, let me know what theſe Gentlemen are; I do not know them, neither can I remember at preſent that ever I ſaw them before.

Ld Keble. You ſee they look like Men of Quality.

Mr. Prideaux. They are my Servants, Mr. Lilburne.

Mr. Nutleigh. My Lord, and (a) pleaſe your Lordſhip, the 14th of September laſt, the Priſoner at the Bar, Lieut. Col. John Lilburne, being before Mr. Attorney-General, and I being by in the Chamber, I did ſee him deliver this Book to Maſter Attorney-General, this ſpecifical Book; and he did own it, and called himſelf the Author of it, ſave only the Erratas of the Printer.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. The laſt Clauſe, I beſeech you Sir; the Jury deſires to hear the laſt Clauſe.

Mr. Nutleigh. My Lord, he (b) ſaid he was the Author of that Book, the Erratas of the Printer excepted.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Let him be asked this Queſtion, Whether in that Expreſſion, ſaving the Erratas of the Printer, there did not follow theſe words, which are many? I deſire to know whether there were not ſuch words or no?

Mr. Radney. I was preſent, my Lord, when the Priſoner at the Bar preſented this Book to Mr. Attorney, and owned it, ſaving the Erratas of the Printer.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Were there no more Words?

Mr. Radney. Not to my remembrance. [And ſo ſaid they both.]

Lieut. Tower. My Lord, I was preſent at the ſame time, when Lieut. Col. Lilburne did preſent a Book to Maſter Attorney-General, with ſuch a Title as this: And truly if I be not much miſtaken, there was uſed by him theſe words, which are many. Thus it was in the whole: ſays he, Here is a Book which is mine, which I will own, the Erratas or Errors of the Printer excepted, which are many; and if I miſtake not very much, thoſe are the very words Maſter Lilburne ſaid.

Mr. Attorney. My Lords, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, you ſee that here are three Witneſſes, and they do all agree in this, that Maſter Lilburne, the Priſoner at the Bar, did deliver this Book to me, owning it as his (c) own, the Errors or Erratas of the Printer only excepted. And as for that Clauſe, which are many, only the Lieutenant of the Tower ſwears to that ſingly; and therefore I deſire it may remain in Court, as that individual Book that they ſee Maſter Lilburne give me. But, my Lord, there is another Book in the Indictment, intitled, The legal fundamental Liberty of the People of England revived and aſſerted: or, An Epiſtle written the Eighth of June 1649, by Lieutenant-Colonel John Lilburne, to Mr. William Lenthall, Speaker to the Remainder of thoſe few Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes, that Colonel Thomas Pride at his late Purge thought convenient to leave ſitting at Weſtminſter. My Lords, for this Book it owns Maſter Lilburne, if he will own it, it hath his Name to it: But I have my Leſſon from him; my Lord, he will own nothing, he will publiſh enough, but, my Lord, he will not own it when he comes to be queſtioned for it; that is not the true Principle of a true Chriſtian, nor an Engliſhman, nor a Gentleman.

(a) But Mr. Lilburne hath been heard to profeſs, he ſaw not thoſe Gentlemen in the Chamber that he diſcourſed with Mr. Prideaux in, altho he looked divers times about him.

(b) That is an errant Lye; for divers that heard the Words, aver them to be thus: It is my Book, and I will own it; and ſo it might be, altho he had bought it.

(c) So is an Ox a Man buys with his Money, it is his own; and ſo is a Gold Ring he finds, after he hath found it, it is his own: and yet it doth not follow, that the Owner either begot the Ox, or made the Gold Ring.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I deny nothing, by your favour.

Mr. Attorney. And confeſs as little. My Lord, for this you have two Books in proof before you; The Preparative to the Hue and Cry, and the Salva Libertate owns theſe very individual Books: for the Preparative to the Hue and Cry, in the marginal Note at the ſecond Page, owns and avows this Book, called, The legal fundamental, &c. to be Maſter Lilburne's. And Maſter Lilburne himſelf did own the Preparative to the Hue and Cry before three Witneſſes to be his; and therefore the Salva Libertate, Mr. Lieutenant of the Tower hath ſworn that he received it from his own hands. My Lords, as for this Book the Salva, which he does not acknowledge, we ſhall read the Words in the Indictment, altho it had been as ingenuous for Maſter Lilburne to have confeſs'd it, as for us to have proved it: and for the proof of it, read the Title.

Clerk. The Title read: A Preparative to an Hue and Cry after Sir Arthur Haſlerig, a late Member of the forcibly diſſolved Houſe of Commons; and now the preſent Wicked, Bloody, and Tyraunical Governour of Newcaſtle upon Tyne.

Mr. Prideaux. Read the marginal Note in Page 2.

Clerk. Page 2. in the Margin: 'That thoſe 'Men that now ſit at Weſtminſter are no Parliament, either upon the Principles of Law or Reaſon: ſee my Argument and Reaſons therefore, in 'my ſecond Edition of my Book of the 8th of 'June 1649, intitled, The legal fundamental Liberties of the People of England revived and aſſerted, 'pag. 48, 49, to 63.'

Mr. Attorney. This Book hath Mr. Lilburne's Name to it, and here in this his Hue and Cry he owns it, and the third Page in the Margin hath it again.

Clerk. Page 3. 'Peruſe carefully, I intreat you, 'the Quotations in the 6th and 8th Pages of my 'forementioned Impeachment of High Treaſon 'againſt Cromwell: as alſo the 12th and 15th Pages 'of the ſecond Edition of my forementioned 'Book, dated the Eighth of June 1649, intitled, 'The legal fundamental Liberties, &c.'

Mr. Attorney. Read the fourth in the Body of the Book.

Clerk. Page 4. 'At which Tryal, by Strength 'of Arguments, I forced the Judges openly to 'confeſs, that Generals were nothing in Law: 'ſee alſo the ſecond Edition of my Book of the 'Eighth of June 1649, intitled, The legal fundamental Liberties of the People of England, revived, 'aſſerted, and vindicated, pag. 49.'

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Let him ſpeak whether it be 29 or 49.

Clerk. Forty nine, (but there is not ſo many Pages in the Book.)

Mr. Attorney. My Lord, here is a Salva Libertate, which is his own Book, tho he will not own it. My Lord, I had thought the great Champion of England for the Peoples Liberties, would never have been ſo unworthy, as not to have owned his own Hand: but read in the 24th Page of the Salva in his own written Hand.

Clerk. Page 24. 'I have by almoſt eight Years 'dear-bought Experience found the Intereſt of 'ſome of my forementioned Judges to be too 'ſtrong for me to grapple with, and 'the only * Cauſe, to my apprehenſion, that all this while keeps me 'from my own.' And in the Margin he ſaith; 'See alſo the ſecond 'Edition of my forementioned Book, intitled, 'The legal fundamental Liberties of the People of England revived, &c.

* This was brought in by head and ſhoulders.

Mr. Attorney. Now, my Lord, there is the Salva Libertate that was given from his own Hand that owns it; I mean this Book, call'd, The legal fundamental Liberties, &c.

Mr. Attorney. Read the Title of it.

Clerk. A Salva Libertate ſent to Colonel Francis Weſt, Lieutenant of the Tower of London, on Friday the 14th of Septemb. 1649. by Lieut. Col. John Lilburne.

Mr. Prideaux. Read where it is marked.

Clerk. 'But if you would produce unto me a 'written Warrant which hath ſome more face of 'legal Magiſtracy in it than verbal Commands, 'and according to my Right and Privilege let me 'read it; I would go with you either by Land or 'Water as you pleaſe, becauſe I was in no capacity to reſiſt you: altho I then told you, I 'judg'd a Paper-Warrant (altho in Words never 'ſo formal) coming from any pretended Power, 'or Authority in England now viſible, to be altogether illegal; becauſe the intruding General, Fairfax, and his Forces, had broke and annihilated all the formal and legal Magiſtracy 'of England, yea the very Parliament itſelf; and 'by his Will and Sword (abſolute Conqueror like) 'had moſt tyrannically erected, ſet up, and impoſed upon the free People of this Nation, a 'Junćto, or Mock-Power ſitting at Weſtminſter, 'whom he and his Aſſociates call a Parliament; 'who like ſo many armed Thieves and Robbers 'upon the High-way, aſſume a Power by their 'own Will, moſt traitorouſly to do what they like.'

Mr. Attorney. That's not the place, look towards the latter end.

Clerk. Then here it is: 'Sure I cannot chuſe 'but acquaint you, that I have long ſince drawn 'and publiſhed my Plea againſt the preſent Power, 'in my ſecond Edition of my Book of the 8th of 'June 1649, intitled, The legal fundamental Liberties of the People of England revived, aſſerted, and vindicated; which you may in an eſpecial manner read in the 43d, 44th, 45th, to the 49th Page: 'which by the Strength of the Lord God omnipotent, my large experienced Help in time of 'need, I will ſeal with the laſt Drop of my Blood.'

Mr. Attorney. My Lord, for the Book called The legal fundamental Liberties of England, his Name is to the Book; but I ſhall not put much weight upon that: But in others of his Books, as in his Preparative to an Hue and Cry, which he owns, and which is proved he owns by three Witneſſes, in ſeveral places of that Book he owns this as his Book, viz. The legal fundamental Liberties of England revived, &c. he calls it mine, and his forementioned Book: and in his Salva Libertate he owns it again, gives it the very Date, and the very Title that is in this Book. My Lords, we have done with this. My Lords, now I ſhall go on to make uſe of it, and to ſhew my Lord out of theſe Books his Words and Language, to make good the Charge that hath been read in the Indictment againſt Mr. Lilburne. My Lords, if you pleaſe, for that I ſhall begin firſt in reading to the Jury the very Act itſelf, which makes the Fact to be Treaſon.

My Lord, for that, here is the Act that doth declare the Commonwealth for the future to become hereafter a Free State; and the other declaring that Fact to be Treaſon, that ſhall ſay it is Tyrannical or Unlawful. Theſe are general Acts which need not be proved; but if the Priſoner does deſire it, we ſhall prove it.

Clerk.

Clerk. Die Lunæ, 14 May 1649. Ordered by the Commons aſſembled in Parliament.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Hold, Sir! prove your Act firſt, whether it be an Act of Parliament.

Mr. Attorney. My Lords, I ſhall not ſtruggle with Mr. Lilburne in plain terms; but I thought when Acts were publiſhed, the Courts of Juſtice were bound in duty to take notice of them: but if it be ſo he will have it proved, we will, altho it be but a ſlender Cavil, for this is one of the publiſhed Copies.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. But under your favour, Mr. Prideaux, as there may be counterfeit Money, (which we ſee there is every day) ſo there may be counterfeit Statutes too; and this may be one for any thing I know, therefore I deſire it may be proved to be a true Statute or Act of Parliament.

Mr. Nutleigh. This is a true Copy of the Act of Parliament, which I examined with the Record.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. The Record! Where is that to be found?

Mr. Nutleigh. At Weſtminſter, with the Clerk of the Parliament.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Is this Gentleman able to depoſe it to be a true Law in all the parts of it? For by the Laws of England, the People are not to take any notice of Acts made, but by a Parliament; neither are they to take notice of thoſe Acts that are not proclaimed. Sir, I beſeech you let me know where the Record and Rolls are, and where he examined this, and whether he is able to ſwear whether they have been proclaimed in every Hundred and Market-Town, according to the old, and not yet repealed Law of Eagland.

Ld Keble. At Weſtminſter, he tells you.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I beſeech you, where at Weſtminſter?

Ld Keble. The Clerks of the Parliament are known to the City of London here, you know it well enough.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. That is no Anſwer to my Queſtions: I pray let me have fair play; for it is a Queſtion to me, whether the Books of the Clerk of the Houſe of Commons be a (a) Record in Law or no.

Ld Keble. Read, Clerk.

Clerk. An Act of the 14*th of* May 1649. declaring what Offences ſhall be adjudged Treaſon.

'WHEREAS the Parliament hath aboliſhed the Kingly Office in England and Ireland, and in the Dominions and Territories thereunto belonging, and hath reſolved and declared that the People ſhall for the future be governed by its own Repreſentatives, or National Meetings in Council, choſen and intruſted by them for that purpoſe; hath ſettled that Government in the way of a Commonwealth and Free State, without King or Houſe of Lords: Be it therefore enacted by this preſent Parliament, and by the Authority of the ſame, That if any Perſon ſhall maliciouſly or adviſedly publiſh, by writing, printing, or openly declaring, That the ſaid Government is Tyrannical, Uſurped, or Unlawful; or that the Commons in Parliament aſſembled are not the Supreme Authority of this Nation; or ſhall plot, contrive, or endeavour to ſtir up or raiſe Force againſt the preſent Government, or for the Subverſion or Alteration of the ſame, and ſhall declare the ſame by any open Deed: That then every ſuch Offence ſhall be taken, deemed, and adjudged by the Authority of this preſent Parliament to be High Treaſon. And whereas the Keepers of the Liberty of England, and the Council of State conſtituted, and to be from time to time conſtituted by Authority of Parliament, are to be under the ſaid Repreſentatives in Parliament entruſted for the Maintenance of the ſaid Government with ſeveral Powers and Authorities, limited, given, and appointed unto them by the Parliament: Be it likewiſe enacted by the Authority aforeſaid, That if any Perſon ſhall maliciouſly and adviſedly plot, or endeavour the Subverſion of the ſaid Keepers of the Liberty of England, or the Council of State, and the ſame ſhall declare by any open Deed; or ſhall move any Perſon or Perſons for the doing thereof, or ſtir up the People to riſe againſt them, or either of them there, or either of their Authorities; that then every ſuch Offence and Offences ſhall be taken, deemed, and declared to be High Treaſon.

'And whereas the Parliament, for their juſt and lawful Defence, have raiſed and levied the Army and Forces under the Command of Thomas Lord Fairfax, and are at preſent neceſſitated, by reaſon of the manifold Diſtractions within this Commonwealth, and Invaſions threatned from abroad, to continue the ſame; which under God muſt be the inſtrumental Means of preſerving the well-affected People of this Nation in Peace and Safety: Be it further enacted by the Authority aforeſaid, That if any Perſon, not being an Officer, Soldier, or Member of the Army, ſhall plot, contrive, or endeavour to ſtir up any Mutiny in the ſaid Army, or withdraw any Soldiers or Officers from their Obedience to their ſuperiour Officers, or from the preſent Government, as aforeſaid; or ſhall procure, invite, aid, or aſſiſt any Foreigners or Strangers to invade England or Ireland; or ſhall adhere to any Forces raiſed by the Enemies of the Parliament, or Commonwealth, or Keepers of the Liberties of England; or if any Perſon ſhall counterfeit the Great Seal of England (for the time being) uſed and appointed by Authority of Parliament: That then every ſuch Offence and Offences ſhall be taken, deemed, and declared by the Authority of this Parliament, to be High Treaſon; and every ſuch Perſon ſhall ſuffer Pain of Death, and alſo forfeit unto the Keepers of the Liberty of England, to and for the uſe of the Commonwealth, all and ſingular his and their Lands, Tenements and Hereditaments, Goods and Chattels, as in caſe of High Treaſon hath been uſed by the Laws and Statutes of this Land, to be forfeit and loſt. Provided always, That no Perſons ſhall be indicted and arraigned for any of the Offences mentioned in this Act, unleſs ſuch Offenders ſhall be indicted or proſecuted for the ſame within one Year after the Offence committed.'

Mr. Prideaux. Read the other Statute.

Clerk. Tueſday, 17 July 1649. Ordered by the Commons aſſembled in Parliament, That this Act be forthwith printed and publiſhed. Hen. Scobel, Cler. Parl.

(a) And well might he: for Mackwel, in his Manner of paſſing of Statutes, in his Preface thereunto, ſaith, That the Commons had no Journals at all before Edward the Sixth's time.

An Act declaring what Offences ſhall be adjudged Treaſon.

'WHEREAS the Parliament hath abo-
'liſhed the Kingly Office in England and
'Ireland, and in the Dominions and Territories
'thereunto belonging; and having reſolved and 'declared, that the People ſhall for the future be 'governed by its own Repreſentatives, or Natio'nal Meetings in Council, choſen and entruſted
'by them for that purpoſe, hath ſettled the Go'vernment, by way of a Commonwealth, and
'Free State, without King or Houſe of Lords: Be
'it enacted by this preſent Parliament, and by the 'Authority of the ſame, That if any Perſon ſhall
'maliciouſly or adviſedly publiſh by writing, print'ing, or openly declaring, That the ſaid Govern'ment is tyrannical, uſurped or unlawful; or that
'the Commons in Parliament aſſembled, are not
'the Supreme Authority of this Nation; or ſhall
'plot, contrive or endeavour to ſtir up, or raiſe
'Force againſt the preſent Government, or for the 'Subverſion or Alteration of the ſame, and ſhall
'declare the ſame by any open Deed; that then
'every ſuch Offence ſhall be taken, deemed and 'adjudged by Authority of this Parliament to be 'High Treaſon. And whereas the Keepers of the 'Liberties of England, and the Council of State,
'conſtituted, and to be from time to time conſti-
'tuted by Authority of Parliament, are to be un-
'der the ſaid Repreſentatives in Parliament, en-
'truſted for the Maintenance of the ſaid Govern-
'ment with ſeveral Powers and Authorities limit-
'ed, given and appointed unto them by the Par'liament: Be it likewiſe enacted by the Authori'ty aforeſaid, That if any Perſon ſhall maliciouſ-
'ly and adviſedly plot or endeavour the Subver-
'ſion of the ſaid Keepers of the Liberties of Eng-
'land, or the Council of State, and the ſame ſhall
'declare by any open Deed, or ſhall move any Per-
'ſon or Perſons for the doing thereof, or ſtir up the 'People to riſe againſt them, or either of them,
'their, or either of their Authorities, that then
'every ſuch Offence and Offences ſhall be taken,
'deemed and declared to be High Treaſon. And
'whereas the Parliament for their juſt and lawful
'Defence, hath raiſed and levied the Army and 'Forces now under the Command of Thomas Lord
'Fairfax, and are at preſent neceſſitated by rea-
'ſon of the manifold Diſtractions within this 'Commonwealth, and Invaſions threatened from 'abroad, to continue the ſame, which under God,
'muſt be the inſtrumental Means of preſerving
'the well-affected People of this Nation, in Peace
'and Safety: Be it further enacted by the Authori'ty aforeſaid, That if any Perſon not being an Of'ficer, Soldier or Member of the Army, ſhall plot,
'contrive or endeavour to ſtir up any Mutiny in
'the ſaid Army, or withdraw any Soldiers or Of'ficers from their Obedience to their ſuperior Of'ficers, or from the preſent Government as afore-
'ſaid; or ſhall procure, invite, aid or aſſiſt any Fo-
'reigners or Strangers to invade England or Ireland,
'or ſhall adhere to any Forces raiſed by the Enemies
'of the Parliament, or Commonwealth, or Keepers
'of the Liberty of England: or if any Perſon
'ſhall counterfeit the Great Seal of England, for the 'time being, uſed and appointed by Authority of 'Parliament: that then every ſuch Offence and 'Offences ſhall be taken, deemed and declared by 'Authority of this Parliament to be High Trea-
'ſon; and every ſuch Perſon ſhall ſuffer Pains of 'Death, and alſo forfeit unto the Keepers of the 'Liberty of England, to and for the Uſe of the 'Commonwealth, all and ſingular his and their 'Lands, Tenements and Hereditaments, Goods
'and Chattels, as in caſe of High Treaſon hath been
'uſed by the Laws and Statutes of this Land, to be
'forfeit and loſt. Provided always, That no Perſons
'ſhall be indicted and arraigned for any the Offen-
'ces mentioned in this Act, unleſs ſuch Offenders
'ſhall be indicted and proſecuted for the ſame
'within one Year after the Offence committed.
'And be it further enacted by the Authority a-'foreſaid, That if any Perſon ſhall counterfeit the 'Money of this Commonwealth, or ſhall bring 'any falſe Money into this Land, counterfeit, or
'other like to the Money of this Commonwealth,
'knowing the Money to be falſe, to merchan-
'dize or make Payment in Deceit of the People
'of this Nation; or if any Perſon ſhall hereafter
'falſly forge, and counterfeit any ſuch kind of 'Coin of Gold or Silver as is not the proper Coin
'of this Commonwealth, and is or ſhall be cur'rent within this Nation, by Conſent of the Par'liament, or ſuch as ſhall be by them authori'zed thereunto; or ſhall bring from the Parts be'yond the Seas into this Commonwealth, or into 'any the Dominions of the ſame, any ſuch falſe
'and counterfeit Coin of Money, being current 'within the ſame, as is aboveſaid, knowing the 'ſame Money to be falſe and counterfeit, to the 'intent to utter or make payment with the ſame,
'within this Commonwealth, by Merchandize or
'otherwiſe; or if any Perſon ſhall impair, dimi-
'niſh, falſify, clip, waſh, round or file, ſcale or
'lighten, for wicked Lucre or Gain-ſake, any the 'proper Monies or Coins of this Commonwealth,
'or the Dominions thereof, or of the Monies or
'Coins of any other Realm, allowed and ſuffered
'to be current within this Commonwealth or the 'Dominions thereof: that then all and every ſuch
'Offences above-mentioned, ſhall be, and are here-
'by deemed and adjudged High Treaſon; and the 'Offenders therein, their Counſellors, Procurers,
'Aiders and Abettors, being convicted according to
'the Laws of this Nation, of any of the ſaid Of'fences, ſhall be deemed and adjudged Traytors
'againſt this Commonwealth, and ſhall ſuffer and 'have ſuch Pains of Death and Forfeitures, as in
'caſe of High Treaſon is uſed and ordained. Pro'vided always, and be it enacted by the Authority
'aforeſaid, That this Act touching the Moneys and
'Coins aforeſaid, or any thing therein contained,
'nor any Attainder of any Perſon for the ſame,
'ſhall in any wiſe extend, or be judged to make 'any Corruption of Blood to any the Heir or Heirs
'of any ſuch Offender, or to make the Wife of 'any ſuch Offender to loſe or forfeit her Dower of 'or in any Lands, Tenements or Hereditaments, or
'her Title, Action or Intereſt in the ſame.'

Mr. Attorney. My Lords, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, you have heard theſe Laws read unto you: the Clauſes that we are to make out in Proof againſt Mr. Lilburne, are theſe; That if any Perſon ſhall maliciouſly or adviſedly publiſh by writing, printing, or openly declaring that the ſaid Govern-ment is tyrannical, uſurped or unlawful; or that the Commons in Parliament aſſembled; are not the Supreme Authority of this Nation, are Traytors: Theſe we ſhall join together with his Books. My Lord, you are here in Court, and have received the Proofs againſt him, and we ſhall now make it out, that that he hath done what this Statute forbids, out of his own Books that have come from himſelf, as the Author of them. My Lord, we ſhall begin with that Charge againſt him, in declaring the Government to be tyrannical, uſurped and unlawful; and for that end, ſee his Impeachment of Lieutenant General Cromwell, &c. p. 8.

Juſtice Jermin. Mr. Lilburne, doth your Paper of the 17th of May agree with that which was read, or no?

Lieut. Col. Lilb. No, Sir; I conceive, Sir, you ask'd me whether this Act I have in my Hand, do agree with that which was read?

Juſt. Jermin. Yes, Sir, I do.

Lieut. Col. Lilb. It does not.

Juſt. Jermin. Then you will make uſe of it by and by.

Lieut. Col. Lilb. I, Sir, I intend ſo, if you will let me.

Mr. Attorney. My Lord, the firſt is, That Mr. Lilburne hath declared the preſent Government to be tyrannical, uſurped and unlawful; and that in ipſiſſimis verbis, that he hath ſo declared, in a very high way, in the very Words: So his Book, intitled, An Impeachment of High Treaſon againſt Oliver Cromwell, and his Son-in-law Henry Ireton, &c. Read fol. 8.

Clerk. Fol. 8. 'Yea, and the abſolute keeping up 'of a perpetual and everlaſting Army, under which 'the People are abſolute and perfect Slaves and 'Vaſſals, as by woful and lamentable Experience 'they now ſee they perfectly are; which Slavery 'and abſolute Bondage is like daily to encreaſe un-'der the preſent tyrannical and arbitrary, new-'erected, robbing Government.

Mr. Attorney. And ſo, my Lord, it is here expreſſed to be a tyrannical and arbitrary Government, which are expreſly within the Words of the Law; for they are a tyrannical Government. My Lords, we ſhall not ſtick here with him, but you ſhall ſee the whole Courſe of all his Pen's Writing hath been to this purpoſe: that goes very far, my Lord; ſee the Title-page of the laſt Book.

Clerk. Title-page. 'Before a legal Magiſtracy, 'when there ſhall be one in England, which now in 'the leaſt there is not.'

Mr. Attorney. See fol. 1.

Clerk. Page 1. 'I have fully, both by Law and 'Reaſon, undeniably and unanſwerably proved, 'That the preſent Juncto ſitting at Weſtminſter, are 'no Parliament at all in any Senſe, either upon 'the Principles of Law or Reaſon, but are a Com-'pany of uſurping Tyrants and Deſtroyers of your 'Laws, Liberties, Freedoms and Proprieties, ſit-'ting by virtue of the Power and Conqueſt of the 'Sword.'

Mr. Attorney. Read the Title-page of the ſame Book.

Clerk. An Impeachment of High Treaſon againſt Oliver Cromwell, and his Son-in-law Henry Ireton, Eſquires, Members of the late forcibly diſſolved Houſe of Commons; preſented to publick view, by Lieutenant-Col. John Lilburne, cloſe Priſoner in the Tower of London, for his real, true and zealous Affections to the Liberties of his native Country. In which following Diſcourſe or Impeachment he engageth, upon his Life, either upon the Principles of Law (by way of Indictment, the only and alone legal way of all Tryals in England) or upon the Principles of Parliaments antient Proceedings, or upon the Principles of Reaſon, (by Pretence of which alone they lately took away the King's Life) before a legal Magiſtracy, when there ſhall be one again in England, which now in the leaſt there is not.

Mr. Attorney. Indeed, my Lord, and you of the Jury, Mr. Lilburne is a very great Rooter, not a Leveller, but a Rooter to root out the Laws of England by the Roots.

J——. There is not——

Lieut. Col. Lilb. By your favour, Mr. Prideaux, I knew the time when others ſaid it as well of you; and it is not long ſince you were penn'd down in a black Bill, to my knowledge, as unſavoury Salt, with many others, to be thrown out of the Houſe of Commons. I pray, Sir, whether were thoſe Rooters that went about to root up that Houſe by force of Arms, or Mr. Prideaux and others to give them cauſe, at leaſt in their Apprehenſions?

Mr. Attorney. My Lord, a legal Magiſtracy in England as now, he ſaith, in the leaſt there is not: if there be no Magiſtracy, I will conclude, there is no Propriety left in this Nation; but Mr. Lilburne ſaith, thete is no Magiſtracy; and if ſo, then no Propriety.

Lieut. Col. Lilb. It would be a very ſtrange Argument that you would infer; I wiſh you and I were to diſpute that in point of Law for our Lives, that to deny a Magiſtracy legally conſtituted, according to the Formalities of the Law, does not deſtroy Propriety. For indeed, Sir, Propriety is an Antecedent to Magiſtracy, and is firſt in being before it. But, Sir, to end the Diſpute, he that owns the Law of England (as I do) that diſtinguiſheth meum and tuum, can never be a Deſtroyer of Propriety: I wiſh your Practice were as conſonant to Propriety as my Principles.

Mr. Attorney. Read the ſecond Page at the Mark.

Clerk. 'Now, I ſay, conſidering that which is 'before declared, I cannot upon any terms in the 'world, either with Safety, Juſtice or Conſcience, 'as things ſtand with me at preſent, give my Con-'ſent, but hinder (as much as I am able) all Ad-'dreſſes from me, or any other that ſhall own the u-'ſurping Tyrants as a Parliament, eſpecially by 'Petition, which was a Courſe (ſaith the pretend-'ed Parliament Sollicitor, againſt the King, in his 'Caſe ſtated, pag. 24.) which God's People did not 'take with Rehoboam; for they never petitioned 'him (although he was their lawful Supreme Ma-'giſtrate) but adviſed him; he refuſing their Coun-'ſel, and hearkening to young and wicked Coun-'ſellors, and they cry out, To thy Tents, O Iſ-'rael! and made quick and ſhort Work of it.'

Mr. Prideaux. My Lord, here are Words again to make good as aforeſaid, That the Parliament are uſurping Tyrants. Read alſo pag. 28.

Clerk. Read on pag. 23. in the Margin of the ſaid Book. 'And if thoſe very things ſhould be judged 'Treaſon, as they are, and were in the Earl of 'Strafford, I wonder what ſhould become of all our 'preſent Juncto at Weſtminſter, and their new thing 'called a Council of State? Undoubtedly the moſt, 'if not all of them, muſt go to Tyburn or Tower-'Hill, there by a Halter or Ax, to receive their 'juſt Deſerts. Amen.'

Mr. Attorney. There is an Amen pronounc'd to us, let him have it that deſerves it: But to go on. Read the 11th Page of his Book called, The Apprentices Out-cry.

Clerk reads pag. 11. 'We ſay, conſidering what is 'before premiſed, we are neceſſitated and compel-'led to do the utmoſt we can for our own Preſer-'vation, and the Preſervation of the Land of our 'Nativity, and never by popular Petitions, &c. ad-'dreſs our ſelves to the Men ſitting at Weſtminſter 'any more, or to take any more notice of them, 'than as of ſo many Tyrants and Uſurpers; and for

'time

'time to come to hinder (as much and as far as 'our poor deſpiſed Intereſt will extend to) all others 'whatſoever from ſubſcribing, or preſenting any 'more popular Petitions to them; and only now as 'our laſt Paper-Refuge, mightily cry out to each 'other, of our intolerable Oppreſſions, in Letters 'and Remonſtrances ſigned in the behalf, and by 'the appointment of all the reſt, by ſome of the 'ſtouteſt and ſtiffeſt amongſt us, that we hope will 'never apoſtatize, but be able, through the Strength 'of God, to lay down their very Lives for the 'maintaining of that which they ſet their Hands 'to.'

Mr. Attorney. Read pag. 2.

Clerk reads on pag. 2. 'But even our Parliament (the 'very Marrow and Soul of all the People's native 'Rights) put down, and the Name and Power 'thereof tranſmitted to a pick'd Party of your for-'cible ſelecting, and ſuch as your Officers (our 'Lords and Riders) have often and frequently ſti-'led no better than a Mock-Parliament, a Sha-'dow of a Parliament, a ſeeming Authority, or 'the like, pretending the Continuance thereof, 'but till a new and equal Repreſentative by mu-'tual Agreement of the free People of England, 'could be elected; although now for Subſerviency 'to their Exaltation and Kingſhip, they prorogue 'and perpetuate the ſame, in the Name, and un-'der Colour thereof, introducing a Privy Council, 'or, as they call it, a Council of State, of Super-'intendency and Suppreſſion to all future Parlia-'ments for ever, erecting a martial Government, 'by Blood and Violence impulſed upon us.

Mr. Attorney. Read pag. 3. at the Mark.

Clerk. Page 3. 'Trade is decayed and fled, Mi-'ſery, Poverty, Calamity, Confuſion, yea and Beg-'gary, grown ſo ſore and ſo extreme upon the 'People, as the like never was in England, under 'the moſt tyrannical of all our Kings that were 'before theſe in preſent Power, ſince the Days of 'the Conqueror himſelf: no Captivity, no Bon-'dage, no Oppreſſion like unto this; no Sorrow and 'Miſery like unto ours, of being enſlaved, undone 'and deſtroyed by our large pretended Friends.'

Mr. Attorney. Read page 4.

Clerk. Page 4. 'And yet nothing but the ground-'leſs Wills and Humours of thoſe afore-mentioned 'Men of Blood rageth and ruleth over us: and is 'this all the Return and Fruit that People are to 'expect from your hands?'

Mr. Attorney. Take this Preparative to an Hue and Cry after Sir Arthur Haſlerig, and read page 2.

Clerk reads on. 'The Preparative to the Hue and 'Cry after Sir Arthur Haſlerig, at pag. 2. in the 'Margin: That thoſe Men that now ſit at Weſt-'minſter, are no Parliament, either upon the Prin-'ciples of Law or Reaſon.'

Mr. Attorney. Read page 3.

Clerk. Page 3. 'They promiſe to amend, and to 'proceed according to the Form of the Law, as 'fully appears in their laſt fore-mentioned Decla-'ration, and ſeveral others; as particularly the 'preſent Declaration of this preſent Juncto againſt 'Kingſhip, dated the 17th of March, 1648.

Mr. Attorney. Read page 4.

Clerk. Pag. 4. 'But the ſaid Sir Arthur Haſlerig, '&c. more arbitrarily, and more treacherouſly than 'Strafford, having no Pretence of Regal, Legal, or 'Parliamentary Commiſſions or Authority, no not 'ſo much as from the preſent Nothing, or illegal 'Juncto, or the preſent illegal Thing called the Coun-'cil of State, Mr. John Jordan now Member.'

Mr. Attorney. My Lord, he doth declare who he means by Juncto; Mr. Jordan, a Member of the preſent Juncto, the pretended Houſe of Commons. In the third place, for the Proof of this firſt Parti-cular, I ſhall produce his Book, intitled, The Legal and Fundamental Liberties of England revived, &c. Read pag. 41.

Clerk reads pag. 41. 'But, Sir, I ſay, no wonder, 'all the things foregoing rightly conſidered, they 'do own you now (as Thomas Pride hath made you) 'for the Supreme Authority of the Nation; al-'though before they would neither ſubmit to 'King nor Parliament, (when it was a thouſand 'times more unqueſtionable, both in Law and 'Reaſon, than now you are) but fought againſt 'both King and Parliament, their Setters up, 'conquered them, repelled them, ſubdued them, 'and broke them both; and ſo pulled up by the 'Roots all the legal and viſible Magiſtracy and 'Authority in the Nation, and thereby left none 'but themſelves, who ſtand in parallel to none (as 'they have managed their buſineſs) but to a Com-'pany of Murderers, Thieves and Robbers, who 'may juſtly be diſpoſſeſſed by the firſt Force that 'are able to do it; no pretended Authority that 'they of themſelves, and by their Swords can ſet 'up, having in the ſight of either God or Man, 'either in Law or Reaſon, any more juſt Authority 'in them, than ſo many Algier Pirates and Robbers 'upon the Sea have.'

Lieut. Col. Lilb. You read, as I take it, a ſecond Edition; whether is that a ſecond Edition or no?

Mr. Attorney. No, no, it is not ſo in the In-dictment; it is no ſecond Edition, but the firſt. Read pag. 56.

Clerk. Page 56. 'To which I anſwer; Firſt, That 'that Company of Men at Weſtminſter, that gave 'Commiſſion to the High Court of Juſtice to try 'and behead the King, were no more a Parliament 'by Law, or a Repreſentative of the People, by 'the Rules of Juſtice and Reaſon, than ſuch a 'Company of Men are a Parliament, or Repreſen-'tative of the People, that a Company of armed 'Thieves chuſe and ſet apart to try, judge, con-'demn, hang or behead any Man that they pleaſe, 'or can prevail over by the Power of the Sword, 'to bring before them by force of Arms, to have 'their Lives taken away upon pretence of Juſtice, 'grounded upon Rules merely flowing from their 'Wills and Swords.'

Mr. Attorney. Read the Title-page.

Clerk. The Legal Fundamental Liberties of the Peo-ple of England, revived, aſſerted and vindicated; or an Epiſtle written the eighth of June, 1649. by Lieu-tenant-Colonel John Lilburne, (Arbitrary and Ariſto-cratical Priſoner in the Tower of London) to Mr. Will. Lenthall Speaker to the Remainder of thoſe few Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes, that Col. Thomas Pride at his late Purge thought convenient to leave ſitting at Weſt-minſter, (as moſt fit for his and his Maſters Deſigns, to ſerve their ambitious and tyranical Ends, to deſtroy the good old Laws, Liberties and Cuſtoms of England, the Badges of our Freedom, as the Declaration againſt the King of the 17*th of* March, 1648. pag. 23. calls them, and by force of Arms to rob the People of their Lives, Eſ-tates and Properties, and ſubject them to perfect Vaſ-ſalage and Slavery, as he clearly evinceth in his pre-ſent Caſe, &c. they have done) and who (in truth no otherwiſe than pretendedly) ſtile themſelves the Parlia-ment of England.

Mr. Attorney. Read pag. 2.

Clerk. 'Sir, for Diſtinction-ſake, I will yet ſtile 'you Mr. Speaker, although it be but to Col. Pride's 'Juncto, or Parliament ſitting at Weſtminſter, (not

'the

'the Nations, for they never gave him Authority 'to iſſue out Writs to elect or conſtitute a Par-'liament for them;) and a little below, in the 'ſame ſecond Page, I accuſed Oliver Cromwell for a 'wilful Murderer, and deſire you there to acquaint 'your Houſe therewith, (who then had ſome little 'Hand of a Parliament ſtamp upon it.)'

Mr. Attorney. Read Page 28.

Clerk. Page 28. 'The like of which Tyranny the 'King never did in his Reign; and yet by St. Oli-'ver's means loſt his Head for a Tyrant. But the 'Thing that I principally drive at here, is to de-'clare that Oliver and his Parliament, now at Weſt-'minſter, (for the Nation's it is not) having pluck-'ed up the Houſe of Lords by the Roots.'

Page 44. 'So that if it be Treaſon to call this 'a a Mock-'Parliament, yea, and to ſay 'And if this be true, for true it (a) is, 'then there is neither legal Juſtice, nor Juſtice of 'Peace in England.'

Mr. Attorney. Read Page 37.

Clerk. Page 37. 'For if they ever had intended 'an Agreement, why do they let their own lie dor-'mant in the pretended Parliament ever ſince they 'preſented it? ſeeing it is obvious to every know-'ing Eye, that from the Day they preſented it, to 'this Hour, they have had as much Power over 'their own Parliament, now ſitting, as any School-'Maſter in England had over his Boys.'

Clerk. Page 45. 'For your Intereſt and the King's, 'both being Intereſts of Truſt, as your Declara-'tions do plentifully and plainly declare; but eſpe-'cially your preſent Juncto's late Declaration againſt 'the late beheaded King, and Kingly Govern-'ment.

Mr. Attorney. Read Page 58.

Clerk. Page 58. 'And let the preſent Generation 'of ſwaying Men, that under pretence of Good, 'Kindneſs, and Friendſhip, have deſtroyed and 'trod under foot all the Liberties of the Nation, 'and will not let us have a new Parliament; but 'ſet up by the Sword their own inſufferable, inſup-'portable, tyrannical Tyranny.'

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I pray, Sir, are all theſe Quotations in the Indictment verbatim? I do not remember that I heard them there.

Mr. Attorney. No, we do not offer any Book but what is charged in the Indictment: For we do ſay, That he publiſhed thoſe Things among other Clauſes and Things in thoſe Books. So that we bring in no Book that is not contained in the Indictment. Read Page 64.

Clerk. Page 64. 'That ſo they might rule, direct, 'and counſel their Mock-Parliament.

Mr. Attorney. Read Page 68.

Clerk. Page 68. 'That that High Court of Juſ-'tice was altogether unlawful, in caſe thoſe that 'had ſet it up had been an unqueſtionable Repre-'ſentative of the People, or a legal Parliament: 'neither of which they are, not in the leaſt; but, 'as they have managed their Buſineſs in oppoſing 'all their primitive declared Ends, are a Pack of 'traytorous, ſelf-ſeeking, tyrannical Men, Uſur-'pers of the Name and Power of a Parliament.'

Mr. Attorney. Read Page 72.

Clerk. Page 72. 'Then with much more Confi-'dence ſay I, This that now ſits is no Parliament; 'and ſo by conſequence the High Court of Juſtice 'no Court of Juſtice at all.'

Mr. Attorney. My Lord, that which we ſhall offer you next, is the Salva Libertate, which the Lieutenant of the Tower had from Mr. Lilburne himſelf. Read at the Mark.

Clerk. † 'A Salva Libertate: Altho I then told 'you I judged a Paper Warrant, (altho in Words 'never ſo formal) coming from any pretended 'Power or Authority in England, now viſible, to be 'altogether illegal; becauſe the intruding General 'Fairfax and his Forces had broke and annihilated 'all the formal and legal Magiſtracy of England, yea 'the very Parliament it ſelf; and by his Will and 'Sword (abſolute Conqueror like) had moſt tyran-'nically erected, and ſet up, and impoſed upon the 'free People of this Nation a Juncto or Mock-'Power, ſitting at Weſtminſter, whom he and his 'Aſſociates call a Parliament; who, like ſo many 'armed Thieves and Robbers upon the Highway, 'aſſume a Power, by their own Wills, moſt trai-'torouſly to do what they like, yea, and to fill the 'Land with their mock and pretended Magiſtrates, 'amongſt the Number of which is the pretend-'ed Attorney-General: in perfect Oppoſition of 'whom, to the utmoſt of my Might, Power, and 'Strength, I am reſolved, by God's gracious Aſ-'ſiſtance, to ſpend my Blood, and all that in this 'World is dear unto me, ſuppoſing him not really 'and ſubſtantially worthy the Name of an Engliſh 'Freeman, that in ſome meaſure, in this Particu-'lar, is not of my mind.'

Mr. Attorney. My Lord, in the Caſe of this Charge, what Mr. Lilburne is pleaſed to ſay concerning me, I ſhall ſay no more but only this: I ſhall not do ſo by him; I ſhall not ſpend my Blood againſt him. You ſee what he ſaith, That the preſent Government is tyrannical, uſurped, and unlawful; that the Commons of England in Parliament aſſembled are not the ſupreme Authority, but a Juncto, a Mock-Power, a Mock-Parliament, a Company of Traytors, that rule merely by the Dictates of their own Will. I could alledge more of his Books unto you, which have Words in them very notorious, and very publick. He doth in expreſs Words ſay, That the Government is arbitrary, tyrannical, and a new-erected, ruining, inſlaving, robbing Government: To ſtile them Tyrants, Uſurpers, Traytors, parallel to none but Murderers, Robbers, Thieves: No Parliament at all, but Thomas Pride's Juncto, and School-Boys, Deſtroyers of the Laws and Liberties of the Nation, the preſent Juncto, (Chimeras, Fooleries, and the like.) All theſe Expreſſions, and many more, which I am ſorry I have occaſion to repeat to you; that ſo much Dirt ſhould be thrown into the Face of any Magiſtrates of England: My Lords, theſe are now the beſt which do rule. My Lords, I hope you, and the Gentlemen of the Jury, will take notice of it, as to be very clear, pregnant, evident Proof, that Mr. Lilburne hath thus publiſhed, and thus ſaid. And beſides this, you ſee what he does go to: He denies all (b) Magiſtracy. So that now we are all alike, a Chaos, a Confuſion: And this he hath brought us to, or would have endeavoured it. My Lords, I ſhall not aggravate; and if I did ſay no more, it were enough. But I come to the ſecond general Head of the Charge;

(a) Theſe Words cannot be found in Page 44. but are in the Book it ſelf, which Time will not permit to read all over; and therefore at preſent it paſſeth lame and imperfect.

(b) That's falſe: He doth no ſuch Thing; but at moſt ſaith, The Army hath deſtroyed all the legal Magiſtracy of the Nation; and they are the Men that thereby are the real Levellers and Rooters.

which is, That he hath plotted and contrived to levy or raiſe Forces to ſubvert and overthrow the preſent eſtabliſhed Government, in the way of a free State or Commonwealth. My Lords, if I ſhould ſay nothing more to the Jury, this that hath been already read is evident Proof of that: For cartainly thoſe that ſhall ſay that the Governors be Tyrants, that the Parliament is tyrannical, that they are Men of Blood, Deſtroyers of Laws and Liberties; this cannot be of any other uſe but to raiſe Force againſt them, for ſubverting and deſtroying of them, as he himſelf ſaith, as ſo many Weaſels or (a) Polecats; eſpecially if you conſider to whom theſe Words were declared, to the Army in general, eſpecially to the General's Regiment of Horſe, that helped to plunder and deſtroy Mr. Lilburne's true Friends, defeated at Burford; and ſome of which were moſt juſtly, as Traytors, executed.

My Lords, if I would ſay nothing more to the Jury but this, there is full and pregnant Proof already: But yet, my Lord, further to ſhew the Malice of Mr. Lilburne's Heart, and that he did intend to raiſe Force, to incite and invite them to help him to ſubvert and deſtroy the Parliament: And for the Proof of this, read the fifth Page of his Impeachment of High Treaſon againſt Oliver Cromwell.

Clerk reads Page 5. 'But, my true Friends, I 'ſhall here take upon me the Boldneſs (in regard 'of the great Diſtractions of the preſent Times) to 'give a little further Advice to you, from whoſe 'Company or Society (or from ſome of them) hath 'begun and iſſued out the moſt tranſcendent, clear, 'rational, and juſt Things for the People's Liber-'ties and Freedoms, that I have ſeen or read in this 'Nation, as your notable Petition of May 20. 1647. 'burnt by the Hands of the common Hangman, 'recorded in my Book, called Raſh Oaths unwar-'rantable, Page 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35. with di-'vers other Petitions of that Nature; and the Pe-'tition of the 19th of Jan. 1647. recorded in the 'following Diſcourſe, Page 45, 46, 47, 48, &c. 'and the maſculine Petition of the 11th of Sept. 1648. ſo much owned by Petitions out of ſeveral 'Counties, yea, and by the Officers of the Ar-'my's large Remonſtrance, from St. Albans, of the '16th of Nov. 1648. Page 67, 68, 69. The Sub-'ſtance of all which, I conceive, is contained in the 'printed Sheet of Paper ſigned by my Fellow-Priſo-'ners, Mr. William Walwyn, Mr. Thomas Prince, and 'Mr. Richard Overton, and my ſelf, dated the 1ſt 'of May, 1649, and entitled, An Agreement of the 'Free People of England, &c. The Principles of 'which I hope and deſire you will make the final 'Centre and unwavering Standard of all your De-'ſires, Hazards, and Endeavours, as to the future 'Settlement of the Peace and Government of this 'diſtracted, waſted, and divided Nation; the 'firm eſtabliſhing of the Principles therein con-'tained, being that only which will really and in 'good earneſt marry and knit that Intereſt, what-'ever it be that dwells upon them, unto the di-'ſtreſſed and oppreſſed Commons or People of this 'Nation. Yea, the ſettling of which Principles 'is that that will thereby make it evident and ap-'parent unto all underſtanding People in the 'World, that the real and hearty Good and Wel-'fare of this Nation hath cordially, and in good 'earneſt, been that that their Souls have hunted 'for, and thirſted after, in all the late bloody Civil 'Wars and Conteſts; all the Conteſts of the King's 'Party, for his Will and Prerogative, being mere-'ly ſelfiſh, and ſo none of the People's Intereſt; 'and the Conteſt of the Presbyterians, for their 'make-bate, dividing, hypocritical Covenant, no 'better in the leaſt; and the preſent Conteſt of the 'preſent diſſembling Intereſt of Independents, for 'the People's Liberties in general, (read the fol-'lowing Diſcourſe, Page 27, 28, 29.) merely no 'more but Self in the higheſt, and to ſet up the 'falſe Saint and moſt deſperate Apoſtate, Mur-'derer, and Traytor, Oliver Cromwell, by a pre-'tended Election of his mercenary Soldiers, under 'the falſe Name of the Godly Intereſt, to be King 'of England, &c. (that being now too apparently 'all the intended Liberties of the People that ever 'he fought for in his Life;) that ſo he might rule 'and govern them by his Will and Pleaſure, and ſo 'deſtroy and envaſſalize their Lives and Properties 'to his Luſts: Which is the higheſt Treaſon that 'ever was committed or acted in this Nation in 'any ſenſe or kind; either, 1. In the Eye of the 'Law: Or, 2. In the Eye of the antient (but 'yet too much arbitrary) Proceedings of Parlia-'ment: Or, 3. In the Eye of their own late decla-'red Principles of Reaſon, (by pretence of which, 'and by no Rules of Law in the leaſt, they took 'away the late King's Head:) Which, if there 'were any Law or Juſtice in England to be had, or 'any Magiſtrates left to execute it, (as in the 'leaſt there is not) &c.

Mr. Attorney. Read Page 7.

Clerk. Page 7. 'But the Principles of the fore-'ſaid Agreement being ſo deteſtable and abomina-'ble to the preſent ruling Men, as that which they 'know will put a full end to their Tyranny and 'Uſurpation, and really eaſe and free the People 'from Oppreſſion and Bondage, that it is ſome-'thing dangerous to thoſe that go about the Pro-'motion of it; yet I ſhall adviſe and exhort you 'vigorouſly to lay all Fear aſide, and to ſet on foot 'the Promotion of it, in the ſame Method we took 'for the Promotion of the foreſaid Petition of Ja-'nuary 19. 1649. laid down in the following Diſ-'courſe, Page 23, 24, 25. and write to your Friends 'in every County of England, to chuſe out from 'among themſelves, and ſend up ſome Agents to 'you, (two at leaſt from each County, with Mo-'ney in their Pockets to bear their Charges) to 'conſider with your culled and choſen Agents of 'ſome effectual Courſe, ſpeedily to be taken, for 'the ſettling the Principles thereof, (as that only 'which in an Earthly Government can make you 'happy, or at leaſt, to know one another's Minds 'in owning and approving the Principles thereof:) 'that ſo it may become to you and your Friends 'your Centre, Standard, and Banner, to flock to-'gether to, in the time of theſe foreign Inva-'ſions and domeſtick Inſurrections, that are like 'ſpeedily to bring Miſery enough upon this poor 'and diſtreſſed Nation; and unanimouſly reſolve 'and engage one to another, neither to ſide with 'or fight for the Chimeras, Fooleries, and Pride of 'the preſent Men in Power, nor for the Prince's 'Will, or any other baſe Intereſt whatſoever, (the

(a) In calling Tyrants Weaſels and Polecats, he hath ſaid no more but what he hath learned out of Saint John's own Argument of Law againſt the Earl of Strafford; at which you have no cauſe to be angry, becauſe they are the Words of one of your own Brother Lawyers.

'which if you ſhould fight for, it would be but 'an abſolute murdering of your Brethren and 'Countrymen, you know not wherefore) unleſs he 'or they will come up to thoſe juſt, righteous, and 'equitable Principles therein contained, and give ra-'tional and good Security for the conſtant adhering 'thereunto. And upon ſuch Terms, I do not ſee 'but you may juſtifiably, before God or Man, join 'with the Prince himſelf; yea, I am ſure a thou-'ſand times more juſtly than the preſent ruling 'Men (upon a large and ſerious Debate) joined 'with Owen Roe O-Neale, the grand bloody Re-'bel in Ireland: Who, if we muſt have a King, I, 'for my part, had rather have the Prince than any 'Man in the World, becauſe of his large Pretence 'of Right; which, if he come not in by Conqueſt, 'by the Hand of Foreigners, (the bare attempting 'of which may apparently hazard him the loſs of 'all at once, by gluing together the now-divided 'People, to join as one Man againſt him) but by 'the Hands of Engliſhmen, by Contract upon the 'Principles aforeſaid, (which is eaſy to be done) 'the People will eaſily ſee that preſently thereupon 'they will enjoy this tranſcendent Benefit, (he be-'ing at Peace with all foreign Nations, and having 'no regal pretended Competitor) viz. The immediate 'Disbanding all Armies and Gariſons, ſaving the 'old Cinque-Ports; and ſo thoſe three grand Plagues 'of the People will ceaſe, viz. Free-Quarter, 'Taxations, and Exciſe: By means of which the 'People may once again really ſay they enjoy ſome-'thing they can in good earneſt call their own. 'Whereas, for the preſent Army to ſet up the falſe 'pretended Saint Oliver (or any other) as their elect-'ed King, there will be nothing thereby, from the 'beginning of the Chapter to the end thereof, 'but Wars, and the cutting of Throats Year after 'Year, yea, and the abſolute keeping up of a per-'petual and everlaſting Army, under which the 'People are abſolute and perfect Slaves and Vaſ-'ſals, as by woful Experience they now ſee they 'perfectly are: Which Slavery and abſolute Bon-'dage is daily like to increaſe, under the preſent 'tyrannical and arbitrary new-erected robbing Go-'vernment.'

Mr. Attorney. He hath blown the Trumpet for all that will to come in: He hath ſet up his Centre; he would have it to be a Standard for all his Friends to flock to him. And to make them the more quick in betaking them to their Arms, he hath falſly and maliciouſly there ſaid, That the Parliament had joined with Owen Roe O-Neale; which, I can aſſure all that hear me this Day, the Parliament always deteſted, abominated, diſavowed, and declared againſt, and never had any Thoughts that way. My Lord, the falſe Imputations of his laid upon the Parliament, are almoſt numberleſs. But, in the ſecond place, I come to that pretty Bauble, that's of his own making, the Agreement of the People, dated at the Tower the 1ſt of May, 1649. and ſhall deſire your Lordſhips to judge whether this Agreement of the People, which he made, and his Friends then in the Tower, and entitled, The Agreement of the People, as ſigned by them, for they called it An Agreement of the Free People of England, ſtrikes not at the very Root of all Government.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Pray, Sir, look whether it be licenſed, or no, according to the Law of the Nation; and if it be licenſed by publick Authority, how comes it to be Treaſon? That's very ſtrange.

Mr. Attorney. It is ſo.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Pray, Sir, go, and queſtion the Licenſer then.

Mr. Attorney. We muſt queſtion the Author; the Licenſer will not excuſe it. Read Page 2.

Clerk reads Page 2. 'This Agreement being the 'ultimate End and full Scope of our Deſires and 'Intentions concerning the Government of this 'Nation.' And a little below: 'After the long 'and tedious Proſecution of a moſt unnatural, cruel, 'home-bred War, occaſioned by Diviſions and Diſ-'tempers amongſt our ſelves; and thoſe Diſtempers 'ariſing from the Uncertainty of our Government, 'and the Exerciſe of an unlimited or arbitrary 'Power by ſuch as have been truſted with ſu-'preme and ſubordinate Authority, whereby Mul-'titudes of Grievances and intolerable Oppreſ-'ſions have been brought upon us: And finding, 'after eight Years Experience and Expectation, all 'Endeavours hitherto uſed, or Remedies hitherto 'applied, to have increaſed, rather than diminiſhed 'our Diſtractions; and that if not ſpeedily pre-'vented, our falling again into Factions and Divi-'ſions will not only deprive us of the Benefit of 'all thoſe wonderful Victories God hath vouch-'ſafed againſt ſuch as ſought our Bondage, but 'expoſe us firſt to Poverty and Miſery, and then 'to be deſtroyed by foreign Enemies.'

Mr. Attorney. Read Page 3.

Clerk. Page 3. 'Agree to aſcertain our Govern-'ment, to aboliſh all arbitrary Power, and ſet 'Bounds and Limits both to our ſupreme and all 'ſubordinate Authority, and remove all known 'Grievances; and accordingly do declare and pub-'liſh to all the World that we are agreed as fol-'loweth. Page ibid. That the ſupreme Authority 'of England, and the Teritories therewith incorpo-'rate, ſhall be and reſide henceforward in a Re-'preſentative of the People, conſiſting of four hun-'dred Perſons, but no more.'

Mr. Attorney. The Manner of the Choice of whom, &c. they leave to this Parliament. Read a little below.

Clerk. 'All Things concerning the Diſtribution 'of the ſaid four hundred Members proportionable 'to the reſpective Parts of the Nation, the ſeveral 'Places for Election, the Manner of giving and ta-'king of Voices, with all Circumſtances of like 'nature, tending to the Compleating and equal 'Proceedings in Elections, as alſo their Salary, is 'referred to be ſettled by this preſent Parliament, 'in ſuch ſort as the next Repreſentative may be in 'a certain Capacity to meet with Safety at the 'Time herein expreſſed; and ſuch Circumſtances 'to be made more perfect by future Repreſenta-'tives.

'We agree that this preſent Parliament ſhall 'end the firſt Wedneſday in Auguſt next, 1649. 'thenceforward to be of no Power or Authority; 'and in the mean time ſhall order and direct the 'Election of a new and equal Repreſentative, ac-'cording to the Intent of this our Agreement; 'and ſo as the next Repreſentative may meet and 'ſit in Power and Authority, as an effectual Re-'preſentative, upon the Day following, namely, 'the firſt Thurſday of the ſame Auguſt, 1649.

Page ibid. 'We agree, if the preſent Parliament 'ſhall omit to order ſuch Election or Meeting of a 'new Repreſentative, or ſhall by any Means be hin-'der'd from performance of that Truſt, that in ſuch 'caſe we ſhall for the next Repreſentative proceed 'in electing thereof in thoſe Places, and according 'to that Manner and Number formerly accuſtomed

'in the Choice of Knights and Burgeſſes; obſerving only the Exceptions of ſuch Perſons from being Electors or Elected, as are mentioned before in the firſt, third, and fourth Heads of this Agreement: it being moſt unreaſonable, that we ſhould either be kept from new frequent and ſucceſſive Repreſentatives, or that the Supreme Authority ſhould fall into the hands of ſuch as have manifeſted Diſaffection to our common Freedom, and endeavoured the Bondage of the Nation. And for preſerving the Supreme Authority from falling into the hands of any whom the People have not or ſhall not chuſe, we are reſolved and agreed (God willing) that a new Repreſentative ſhall be upon the firſt Thurſday in Auguſt next aforeſaid: the ordering and diſpoſing of themſelves, as to the Choice of a Speaker, and the like Circumſtances, is hereby left to their diſcretion; but are in the Extent and Exerciſe of Power, to follow the Direction and Rules of this Agreement; and are hereby authorized and required, according to their beſt Judgments, to ſet Rules for future equal Diſtribution and Election of Members, as is herein intended and enjoined to be done, by the preſent Parliament.'

Mr. Attorney. Read Page 8.

Clerk. Page 8. 'And all Laws made, or that 'ſhall be made, contrary to any part of this A'greement, are hereby made null and void.'

Mr. Attorney. My Lords, here by this Agreement of the People, that Mr. Lilburne hath publiſh'd to the World, in which, my Lord, he hath deſigned how many the Supreme Authority ſhall conſiſt of, the Time when the Parliament ſhall diſſolve, as alſo the Time when his own Parliament ſhall meet; this Parliament to be diſſolved the firſt Wedneſday in Auguſt 1649. all Laws contrary to this to be null and void: and in it you ſhall find ſome Expreſſions of Treaſon in the height, that whoſoever ſhall do contrary to it, ſhall be moſt ſeverely puniſhed. In the next Book before this, it is deſired by him, that this Agreement of the People may be the Center, the Banner, and Standard of all his Friends, and that they go on vigorouſly with it; which is, my Lord, to diſſolve this Parliament, and to put on this new one of Mr. Lilburne's appointing. This we conceive, which is of Mr. Lilburne's appointing, would (if effected) be an abſolute Subverſion of this in being; and this is High Treaſon. My Lord, we ſhall go on with more yet, and that is with his Outcry. My Lord, if you pleaſe to ſee the Title, and ſee to whom it is directed, what was intended to be done with it: it is intitled, An Outcry of the Young-men and Apprentices of London, directed Aug. 29. 1649. in an Epiſtle to the private Soldiery of the Army, eſpecially all thoſe that ſigned the ſolemn Engagement at Newmarket-Heath, the fifth of June 1647. but more eſpecially to the private Soldiers of the General's Regiment of Horſe, that helped to plunder and deſtroy the honeſt and true-hearted Engliſhmen, traitorouſly defeated at Burford, the fifteenth of May 1649. A good Encouragement! they were traitorouſly defeated at Burford; but we are Rebels and Traitors, and our Army Murderers and Butchers, for giving ſome of thoſe declared Traitors their due Deſerts. But that you may ſee his Tendency by this Book, read Page 11.

Clerk. Page 11. 'We ſay, conſidering what is 'before premiſed, we are neceſſitated and compel'd 'to do the utmoſt we can for our own Preſerva'tion, and for the Preſervation of the Land of 'our Nativity, and never (by popular Petitions) 'addreſs ourſelves to the Men ſitting at Weſtmin-

'ſter any more, or to take any more notice of them 'than of ſo many Tyrants and Uſurpers, and for 'time to come to hinder (as much and as far as 'our poor deſpiſed Intereſt will extend to) all 'others whatſoever from ſubſcribing or preſenting 'any more popular Petitions to them. And only 'now, as our laſt Paper Refuge, mightily cry out 'to each other of our intolerable Oppreſſions, in 'Letters and Remonſtrances, ſigned in the behalf, 'and by the appointment of all the reſt, by ſome 'of the ſtouteſt and ſtiffeſt amongſt us, that we 'hope will never apoſtatize, but be able through 'the Strength of God to lay down their Lives 'for the maintaining of that which they ſet their 'Hands to. You our Fellow-Countrymen (the 'private Soldiers of the Army) alone being the 'inſtrumental Authors of your own Slavery and 'ours; therefore as there is any Bowels of Men 'in you, any Love to your native Country, Kindred, Friends or Relations, any Spark of Conſcience in you, any Hopes of Glory or Immortality in you, or any Pity, Mercy, or Compaſſion, 'to an inſlaved, undone, periſhing, and dying 'People; O help, help, ſave and redeem us from 'total Vaſſalage and Slavery, and be no more like 'brute Beaſts, to fight againſt us or our Friends, 'your loving and dear Brethren after the Fleſh, 'to your own Vaſſalage as well as ours.

'And as an aſſured Pledge of your future Cordialneſs to us, (and the true and real Liberties 'of the Land of your Nativity) we beſeech and 'beg of you (but eſpecially thoſe amongſt you 'that ſubſcribed the ſolemn Engagement at Newmarket-Heath, the fifth of June 1647.) ſpeedily to 'chuſe out amongſt yourſelves two of the ableſt 'and conſtanteſt faithful Men amongſt you in each 'Troop and Company, now at laſt (by corre'ſponding each with other, and with your honeſt 'Friends in the Nation) to conſider of ſome effectual Courſe (beyond all Pretences and Cheats) 'to accompliſh the real End of all your Engage'ments and Fightings, viz. the ſettling of the Li'berties and Freedom of the People; which can 'never permanently be done, but upon the ſure 'Foundation of a popular Agreement: who (viz. 'the People) in Juſtice, Gratitude, and common 'Equity, cannot chuſe but voluntarily and largely 'make better proviſion for your future Subſiſtence '(by the payment of your Arrears) than ever your 'Officers or this pretended Parliament intends, 'or you can rationally expect from them: witneſs 'their cutting off three parts of your Arrears in 'four, for Free-quarter; and then neceſſitating 'abundance of your Fellow-Soldiers (now eaſhier'd, &c.) to ſell their Debentures at two 'Shillings Sixpence, three Shillings, and at moſt 'four Shillings per lib.'

Mr. Attorney. See, my Lord, here we are ſtiled Tyrants, Uſupers, introducing Government-Oppreſſions of the People; and Mr. Lilburne is reſolved with his Friends to join together, and to lay down their very Lives for this. This, I think, is a Trumpet blown aloud for all the diſcontented People in the Nation to flock together, to root up and deſtroy this Parliament, and ſo the preſent Government. But read alſo the ſame Book, pag. 9.

Clerk. Pag. 9. 'For the effectual promotion of 'which ſaid Agreement, we are neceſſitouſly com'pelled to reſolve in cloſe Union to join ourſelves, 'our Commiſſioners (choſen for that end) in Coun'cil, with our foreſaid Burford-Friends, or their 'Commiſſioners; and to reſolve to run all hazards 'to methodize all our honeſt Fellow-Prentices, in 'all

'all the Wards of London, and the Out-Pariſhes, 'to chuſe out their Agents to join with us or 'ours, to write exhortative Epiſtles to all the ho- 'neſt-hearted Freemen of England, in all the par- 'ticular Counties thereof, to erect ſeveral Coun- 'cils amongſt themſelves; out of which we ſhall 'deſire (and exhort them) to chuſe Agents or 'Commiſſioners (impowered and intruſted by 'them) ſpedeily to meet us, and the Agents of all 'our (and the Agreement of the People) Adhe- 'rents at London, reſolvedly to conſider of a ſpeedy 'and effectual Method and Way how to promote 'the Election of a new and equal Repreſentative, 'or Parliament, by the Agreement of the free 'People: Seeing thoſe Men that now ſit at Weſt- 'minſter, and pretendedly ſtile themſelves the Par- 'liament of England, and who are as they ſay '(altho moſt falſly) in the Declaration for a Free 'State, dated March 17. 1648. pag. 27. intruſted 'and authorized by the Conſent of all the People 'of England, whoſe Repreſentatives they are; 'make it their chiefeſt and principalleſt Work, 'continually to part and ſhare amongſt themſelves 'all the great, rich, and profitableſt Places of the 'Nation; as alſo the Nation's publick Treaſure 'and Lands; and will not eaſe our intolerable 'Oppreſſions, no not ſo much as of late receive 'our popular Petitions, having upon Thurſday 'laſt, Aug. 23. 1649. rejected that moſt excellent 'of Petitions ready at their door to be preſented 'to them by divers honeſt Men (our true-hearted 'Neighbours of Surrey) the true Copy of which, 'for the worth of it, altho it be at large already 'printed in Friday-Occurrences, and the Tueſday- 'Moderate, we deſire here to inſert.'

Mr. Attorney. My Lord, this is a loud one! Whom does he join us withal, but only with thoſe very Men that juſtly ſuffered Death, many of them, for it? My Lord, now it's reſolved that theſe Men ſhall be cloſely joined with them; and what to do? ſtill to promote The Agreement of the People, that which Mr. Lilburne hath hatched, and that muſt be the Baby that thoſe declared open Traytors and Rebels, that Mr. Lilburne will join with, muſt nouriſh up. My Lord, we ſhall go on further to ſhew what Mr. Lilburne drives at; which is not much differing from us, for he would have a Free State: but, my Lord, this that is now in being, it doth not go in Mr. Lilburne's way, and therefore it muſt be overthrown by Force and Arms, that ſo way may be made for his new (a) Commonwealth. We ſhall go further on, my Lord, and in the next place quote his Book, intitled, The legal fundamental Liberties of the People of England, revived, aſſerted, and vindicated, &c. Read p. 57.

Clerk reads pag. 57. 'And the preſent Setters- 'up of this tyrannical new Commonwealth, con- 'ſidering their many Oaths, Covenants, Promiſes, 'Declarations, and Remonſtrances to the contra- 'ry, (with the higheſt Promiſes and Pretences of 'Good for the People and their declared Liber- 'ties, that ever was made by Men) are the moſt 'perjured, perfidious, falſe, Faith and Truſt- 'breakers, and Tyrants, that ever lived in the 'World; and ought by all rational and honeſt Men 'to be the moſt deteſted and abhorred of all Men 'that ever breathed, by how much the more un- 'der pretence of Friendſhip and Brotherly-Kind- 'neſs they have done all the miſchief they have 'done, in deſtroying our Laws and Liberties.'

Mr. Attorney. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, you ſee Mr. Lilburne hath been pleaſed very often to give the Name of Tyrants to the Parliament: I would give no other Inſtance, nor ſhew no other Example but Mr. Lilburne himſelf, to diſprove himſelf; and with much confidence affirm it, that never State had before, (neither King nor State) ſince the Foundations of it, ſo much Enmity, nor have endured with ſo much patience any Man whatſoever, as they have done Mr. Lilburne; who notwithſtanding all his traitorous Provocations, and traitorous Deſigns, undertaken againſt them, is yet alive at this day, and now hath fair play to plead for his Life. I would take him for his own Confuter, and ſee by all that has been done by him, and ſee if he could make good his Actings, and make good the Parliament's dealing with him therefore, can be demonſtrated by him to prove them Tyrants. My Lord, I can hardly forbear, to ſee and hear his dangerous and deſperate Expreſſions, to invite all People for to take up Arms againſt the Parliament, to cut their throats like Pole-cats and Weaſels. My Lords, here to ſtile them the moſt perfidious, perjured, falſe, Faith and Truſt-breakers, and Tyrants, that ever lived in the World; and to be the moſt abhorred and deteſted of all the People, above all Men that ever breathed: O inſufferable, and the higheſt of Treaſons!

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, all the Wit of all the Lawyers in England could never bring it within the compaſs of High Treaſon, by the old and juſt Laws of this Nation, that abhors to oppreſs Men contrary to Law; and then if they ſeem but to cry out of their Oppreſſions, to make them Traytors for Words.

Mr. Attorney. I am confident the leaſt Lawyer in England would have brought this within the Statute of Treaſon of the 25 Ed. 3. chap. 2. My Lords, you ſhall ſee there is none eſcaped, the Parliament with him are Tyrants, Traytors, and Uſurpers; and therefore he ſtirs up the People to deſtroy them. But in the third place, you ſhall ſee what Titles he gives to my Lord General Fairfax, and his chief Officers; that, my Lord, he that reads the Books, and doth not know the Perſons, he would think that they were Monſters, and not Men; altho they are ſo famous and glorious, that all the World have rung of them to their praiſe. But, ſaith he, never was there more glorious Declarations made by Men than by them, and yet never performed any of them. Nay, he doth not only call them alſo Covenant and Engagement-breakers, but he calls the Lord General Tyrant, Murderer, and what not; and the Officers, perfidious Officers. My Lords, what I obſerved in the laſt Clauſe of the Act, is, That whoſoever goes about to draw the Soldiers from their Obedience to their ſuperiour Officers, or from their Obedience to the preſent Government, that is High Treaſon: and this likewiſe we ſhall find him guilty of, in his Legal Fundamental Liberties of England aſſerted and vindicated; it is in the firſt ſide of the Epiſtle that in the firſt place I pitch upon, read it.

Mr. Attorney. Which Man, my Lord, was condemned for a Mutineer by a Council of War, where the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland was but one Member; and the Parliament gave him, and the reſt of that Council Thanks, for ſhooting that mutinous Soldier to death: and yet Mr. Lilburne calls him Murderer therefore, and this is laid to my Lord Lieutenant's charge for his part.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Doth not the Petition of Right abſolutely condemn all ſuch Acts in time of Peace, when the Courts of Juſtice are open? And the Judgment of the Earl of Strafford doth abundantly condemn it, who loſt his Life for a Traytor, for doing the very ſame Act in kind and likeneſs, at that time, when he in the eye of the Law was as legal a General, as the General was that condemned that Man.

Mr. Attorney. My Lords——

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I pray, Sir, hear me out: and ſure I am, the Declarations of all the Powers extant in England ever ſince, hath been to maintain the Petition of Right inviolably; yea, even thoſe that are now in preſent Power: and if the Petition of Right be true, to ſhoot Soldiers, as Arnold was, is abſolute Murder. Nay further, if the Judgment of the Parliament upon the Earl of Strafford for ſuch an Act be legal, then all thoſe that had a hand in ſhooting that Soldier, are Traytors, and ought to die for it, as well as Strafford.

Clerk reads on the ſecond ſide of the Epiſtle. 'Of all which Crimes and Charges, and all your 'others againſt the King, contained in your foreſaid Declaration, I know not three of them; but 'Cromwell and his Confederates, in your pretended 'Houſe and Army, are as guilty of the like in 'kind, tho under a new Name and Notion, as 'the King was of the forementioned, if not more 'guilty.'

And this is that which 'turns to our ſmart and reproach, and that which 'we Commiſſioners feared at the firſt, viz. That 'no Tye, Promiſes, nor Engagements were ſtrong 'enough to the grand Jugglers and Leaders of the 'Army, was now made clearly manifeſt; for when 'it came to the Council, there came the General, 'Cromwell, and the whole Gang of Creature-Colonels, and other Officers, and ſpent many days in 'taking it all in pieces, and there Ireton ſhewed 'himſelf an abſolute King, if not an Emperor; 'againſt whoſe Will no Man muſt diſpute. And 'then Shuttlecock, Roe their Scout, Okey, and Major Barton (where Sir Hardreſs Waller ſat Preſident) begun in their open Council to quarrel 'with us, by giving ſome of us baſe and unworthy 'Language; which procured them from me a 'ſharp Retortment of their own Baſeneſs and 'Unworthineſs into their teeth, and a Challenge 'from myſelf into the field. Beſides, ſeeing they 'were like to fight with us in the Room in their 'own Gariſon, which when Sir Hardreſs Waller in 'my ear reproved me for it, I juſtified it, and gave 'it him again, for ſuffering us to be ſo affronted. 'And within a little time after, I took my leave 'of them for a pack of diſſembling juggling 'Knaves: amongſt whom in Conſultation, ever 'thereafter I ſhould ſcorn to come, (as I told ſome 'of them;) for there was neither Faith, Truth, nor 'common Honeſty among them. And ſo away I 'went to thoſe that choſe and intruſted me, and 'gave publickly and effectually (at a ſet Meeting 'appointed on purpoſe) to divers of them, an 'exact Account how they had dealt with us, and 'cozened and deceived us; and ſo abſolutely 'diſcharged myſelf from meddling or making any 'more with ſo perfidious a Generation of Men, 'as the Great-ones of the Army were; but eſpecially the cunningeſt of Macchiavelians, Commiſſary Henry Ireton.'

And altho they have beheaded the 'King, yet I am confidently perſuaded, their Enmity is ſuch at the People's Liberties, that they 'would ſooner run the hazard of ſetting the Prince 'in, to reign in his Father's ſtead, than further 'really a juſt Agreement, or endeavour a new 'Parliament rightly conſtituted.'

Mr. Attorney. See, my Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, you ſee Mr. Lilburne gives the General and his Officers as bad Titles, as he can give the worſt of Rebels and Traytors, or the worſt of Men. But we go on to his Outcry; read the Title of it.

'Deſtroyers and us, all Ways and Means are uſed 'to impoveriſh, deſtroy, and ſuppreſs them; and 'in them to break and vaſſalage the Spirits of all 'the Engliſh, which in all Ages have had the pre-'heminencies of other Nations, that there may 'not be ſo much of Gallantry or Courage left 'amongſt the People, that one amongſt them ſhall 'dare to aſſert or maintain their Freedoms.' And a little below, 'If any do but murmur and com-'plain, preſently their Houſes, as with Furies, 'are beſet with armed mercenary Janizaries, 'Guards, and Centinels ſet upon their Doors and 'Paſſages.'

Mr. Attorney. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, you hear what ſtuff this of Mr. Lilburne's is; yea, ſuch ſtuff as that it would make any Man loath to hear it. The laſt Clauſe of the Act is, 'If any Perſon not being an Officer, Soldier, or 'Member of the Army, ſhall plot, contrive or 'endeavour to ſtir up any Mutinies in the Army, 'or to withdraw any Officers or Soldiers from 'their Obedience to their ſuperiour Officers, or 'to the preſent Government; it is High Treaſon.' You have here the ſeveral Books read to you, and the Calumniation laid upon the chiefeſt of them, to ſtir the reſt up to Mutinies againſt them; but they are very well known, and therefore nothing that Mr. Lilburne can ſay will ſtick upon them, to their prejudice. But, my Lord, you ſee here, and you of the Jury, how he appeals from the Officers to the Soldiers, interrogates to know what they could do, and whether they will acknowledge they will own them, and not fight againſt them, and what Aid and Aſſiſtance they will give to him and his Friends againſt their own General, and the reſt of their ſuperiour Officers. You ſee alſo what he calls that noble General, that all the World doth honour, and his Fame rings through the World; and yet he calls him a grand Tyrant, ſtanding by the Power of his own Will, and a ſtrong Sword, a Deſtroyer of the Parliament, of the Laws and Liberties of England. You ſee what he calls the common Soldiers; Furies, and mercenary Janizaries, which none but Turks have. You have heard the ſeveral Charges proved unto you, for my part I think it as clear as Noon-day. We have not raiſed any advantage upon any ſlipping Words that have ſlipt from him, which we might have done; and I could have urged ſome more Witneſſes, to have proved his Books publiſhed by him to publick View, tho when he comes in the face of the publick Court of Juſtice, he will not own them, which ſhews his Deſign to be the more dangerous. He will write, print, publiſh, beſpatter, and reproach; yea, and raiſe Tumults and Rebellion in a clandeſtine way: but if we chance to queſtion him therefore, he will not own it; you ſee we have been fain to fetch it out of the fire, and yet this is one of England's and its Liberties valiant Champions.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. You have done no more to me, than the Scribes and Phariſees did to Jeſus Chriſt; and in my dealing with you, I have but walked in the ſteps of my Lord and Maſter Jeſus Chriſt and his Apoſtles. For I am ſure of it, Jeſus Chriſt, in his Pilgrimage on Earth, freely, openly, and publickly taught and declared himſelf to be the Son of God, the Meſſias or Saviour of the World that was propheſy'd of; and yet when he came amongſt the Scribes and Phariſees, and Pilate the Roman Governour, who by Queſtions went about to inſnare him, he confeſſeth nothing, but ſaith, I ſpeak openly to the World, I ever taught in the Synagogues and in the Temple, whither the Jews always reſort, and in the ſecret have I ſaid nothing; why askeſt thou me? Ask them which heard me what I have ſaid unto them: Behold, they know what I have ſaid. And when Pilate adjured him to anſwer him whether he was ſuch a one, or no, Well, ſaith he, thou ſayeſt it: So ſay I, Thou, Mr. Prideaux ſayeſt it, they are my Books; but prove it.

Mr. Attorney. But I think here are enough, and too many: And therefore, Gentlemen of the Jury, if you reſpect the Government of the Parliament, the Honour of the Council of State, the Honour of the Nation, or of the Army, or the Preſervation of the Law of the Nation, you cannot ſay but that the Priſoner is guilty of ſuch Crimes and Treaſons as he is now accuſed of, and accordingly find him ſo: For it cannot be ſuppoſed that you will lay him in a ſingle Ballance againſt the Honour of all the Powers in the Nation, and alſo the Peace thereof.

Foreman. We deſire the Act of Treaſons to make uſe of.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I beſeech you hear me a few Words: They deſire to have it along with them. Sir, with your favour, I ſhall humbly crave Liberty to ſpeak a few Words: I ſhall keep me cloſe to that which is my Right and my Duty, and that is to the Matter of Law in my Indictment. There are many Things put into the Indictment by the Teſtimonies of Witneſſes now ſworn, that are pretended to be acted in ſeveral Counties. Whether that be according to Law, or no, I do not know whether you will judge it ſo, or no; but ſure I am, if either thoſe expreſs Statutes that I have already cited to the Jury, or the third Part of Coke's Inſtitutes, be Law, I ought not to be tried for Treaſon but by a Jury of the next Neighbourhood, in the ſelf-ſame County the Fact is pretended to be committed in. And therefore it is very queſtionable to me whether my Indictment be legal, for that it chargeth me with Facts of Treaſon committed in three ſeveral Counties; and that being Matter of Law, I deſire Counſel to argue that Point in the firſt place. There are alſo a great many other Exceptions I have to make againſt the Illegality of the Indictment; and having particularized one, I humbly crave that which is my Right by Law, that I may have Counſel aſſigned unto me. You have ſaid you will do what ſhall become ingenuous and underſtanding Men and juſt Judges in it; and therefore I crave leave, according to my undoubted Right, to have Counſel aſſigned to plead in Matters of Law to the Inſufficiency of the Indictment, and particularly to that Point I have nominated. There are alſo a great many Things ariſes out of the Matter of Fact that will be Points of Law likewiſe, and ſome of them appear to be ſo. There was never two clear and poſitive Witneſſes to one Fact ſworn againſt me; but to moſt of the particular Treaſons there is but one a-piece; and I cannot yield that to be legal, but queſtionable in Law, which I deſire Counſel to diſpute. I know not any of all the Books fixed upon me, but the Outcry, that hath two plain Witneſſes to it; and yet it is not ſworn that I am the Author of it. The State of the firſt is this: That I was at the Printer's before the Copy was taken away; and that I gave one of thoſe Books to a Soldier. To ſum up the Notes of the Matter of Fact that thereon hath been endeavoured to be proved, is too hard a Task to be done by me immediately; and therefore I conceive it but juſt for you to aſſign me Counſel, to agree with the the Counsel against me what are the Points of Fact upon the Proof, from which the Points of Law are to be deducted. And whatever you, that call your selves my Judges, may think of this, yet I hope and verily believe that these my honest Fellow-Citizens, that are the Gentlemen of my Jury, who have (thereby) as Men, the Issues of my Life and Death in their hands, and will think it but a just and rational Motion and Request; and therefore, before them again, I desire to have Counsel assigned, to plead in Law to the Errors of the Indictment, and also to the Law arising upon the Fact. This, with a larger Privilege, was granted by one of your own Brother Judges to Major Rolfe last Year, as his Right by Law; and I do again appeal to Mr. Justice Nichols, then one of Rolfe's Counsel, for the Truth of this. I pray speak, Sir: Is it not true? [But the Judge sitting as if he had neither Life nor Soul, Mr. Lilburne further said,] I hope, Sir, it doth not enter into your Thoughts presently to put me to an undigested extemporary Answer to so large an Indictment as that is that hath been read against me, that it is impossible for any Man's Brain, if it were as big as the biggest Magazine in London, to carry it in his Head: And, Sir, I hope you do not conceive that my Memory is of a greater Largeness than the greatest Magazine in this City. You engaged unto me when I pleaded first to my Indictment, that you would not take Exceptions or Advantage against me for my Ignorance in the Formalities of the Law: I desire you to make good your Promise now unto me, and assign me Counsel to help my Ignorance, that so the Counsel against me and my Counsel may agree, as I have seen it done heretofore in the Case of Duke Hamilton, upon the Points of Fact, from which Law is to be deducted. And if you please to grant me this legal and equitable Favour, I shall think my self very much obliged unto you: Without which Justice, I cannot conceive upon what ground it can be apprehended I can go on; for my Time and Strength now it is so far spent, that I conceive you cannot think my Body is made of Steel, to stand here four or five Hours together, spending my Spirits, to answer so many as I have to deal with, and be able, after all this, to stand to return an Answer to above five Hours Charge, and that upon Life, when it seems you will suffer me to mend no Blots. I hope you do not lie upon the Catch, to weary and tire me out, by putting more upon me than a Horse is able to endure; and then go about to hang me, because I, through Tiredness, want bodily Strength and Abilities to make and pronounce my Defence.

Sir, to my Apprehension, there does arise upon the Matter of Fact divers Disputes in Law: I beseech you therefore allow me my Right in Law, by assigning me Counsel to help me where I am ignorant, and you shall see I shall do that which shall become an ingenuous and rational Man, and I will put my self clearly upon the Tryal of the Country, or my Jury, according to the Law.

Ld Keble. Lilburne, this that you have heard, and that we have patiently sat to hear, and prepared a Stool for you to have sat upon, to have given you that Liberty that no body should interrupt you more than us; you have heard the fair Course that hath been taken in it. The Books, the Charges upon the Matter, they are but three, they are not hard for your Memory. The Particulars of those we do not expect that the Jury should remember them. The Books are here; they have of them: But amongst them there are many more. But free your self from the Matter of Fact, if you can, and these Books: And when you have freed your self from the Matter of Fact charged upon you, and then make it appear that from the Matter of Fact Law arises; and then, if you can, when the Matter of Fact is clear, and Law doth arise, you shall have Counsel, and you shall have no Defect in us to interrupt you, but to help you in what we may properly know as our Right to do. But if you do not first clear and make out this, which is the Issue upon the Point, to answer the Matter of Fact, we cannot allow you any Counsel. The Thing that is to be disputed cannot possibly be much on your side; it will be but very short: For it is not possible, I say, to be much in Time, or Confusion of your Memory, to give an Answer to this particular Matter of Fact: The first is the publishing of those Books, and the owning of them; and the next is the Books of themselves. But this must be first cleared, before you can have any Counsel assigned you at all.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I must confess it is a very hard Task for me to contest with the present Power, whose Agents have free Liberty to say against me what they please; and I am denied, and that upon my Life, all the Privileges of an Englishman, and with your Insinuations and great Words drawn on by my Ignorance to insnare my self: and notwithstanding all your Promises to take no advantage against me for my Ignorance in the Formalities of the Law, yet are the Punctilio's and Niceties thereof more urged against me, than they have been against hostile Enemies. And yet, for my part, no Man can tax me for being in Hostility at any time against them in present Power; and yet upon my Life I am denied that which I had from those, as my Right by Law, against whom I have been in Arms, and fought against in the Field; yea, and that which, in a higher nature than I desire, hath been acknowledged just and legal by some of your own Brother Judges but the last Year, which they have granted to some of my own Countrymen, Freemen of England, but this last Year, in a higher nature by many degrees than I plead for. There is Judge Nichols, that I understand was one of Major Rolfe's Counsel: And I understand from Mr. Maynard's own Mouth, that he and Mr. Maynard was by Baron Wyld assigned of Rolfe's Counsel in case of the highest Treason that the Law of England ever knew, and that before the Grand Inquest found the Indictment; and that Mr. Maynard, &c. had Liberty, as Major Rolfe's Counsel, by Baron Wyld's Order, to stand in the Court, not only to hear the Witnesses sworn, but also to hear the Words of their Testimony, then caused by the Judge to be given in open Court. And there being but two Witnesses to two Facts contained in the Indictment, Mr. Maynard, upon the Allegation of the two Statutes of Edward the Sixth, that requires two Witnesses to the Proof of every Fact of Treason, and that to be plain and clear, overthrew Rolfe's Indictment in Law, that it was never found; and so saved the poor Man's Life, who, in likelihood, had perished, had it not been for the Ability and Integrity of his Counsel. And all this Mr. Justice Nichols knows is very true, and that I have told you nothing about it but what is just. It's true, I have read part of the plain Law of England, that is in English; but I am ignorant of that part of your Law, which is three times so much as that which is in English; and that Law, or the practick Part of the Law is in French and Latin, which I have truly told you I can neither read nor understand: Therefore I humbly crave my Privilege and undoubted Right by the Law of England, (which in a higher nature was granted to Major Rolfe, as his unqueſtionable Right) to have Counſel aſſigned me, to help me in thoſe Things I am ignorant of, I mean the Formalities and Bottom of your Law. I beſeech you, Sirs, do not put me upon Extremities, and upon extraordinary Things, but conſider among your ſelves that righteous Rule of Jeſus Chriſt, and of the Scripture, To do as you would be done to; and do not put Impoſſibilities upon me, by over-ruling by your Power all my juſt Claims and Pleas in Law, and require more of me than I am capable to perform. And therefore I beſeech you, as you would approve your ſelves to be as righteous Judges before the Eye of that God that ſees your Heart, and knows whether malicious and Forethoughts of Malice harbours therein againſt me his faithful Servant; do not cunningly and deſignedly deſtroy me for my Ignorance in the eſſential or circumſtantial Matter or Form of that huge Indictment, that has ſo much Matter of Law in it as it hath, and to take away my Life by denying me that which is the unqueſtionable legal Right of the Freemen of England; the which if you will but allow me, I do not doubt but to come off clearly and freely.

Ld Keble. Mr. Lilburne, you are now at a full Point; and this you have ſaid now, you have ſaid often, and we have heard it; and that which you ſay now, we have anſwered before.

Lieut. Col. Lilb. Sir, it's your own Law; Sir Edward Coke declares I ought to—— Ld Keble. Mr. Lilburne, I ſhall add this more to it, that you at this time have here ſuch a Court, which never any of your Condition ever had in England, ſo many grave Judges of the Law.

Lieut. Col. Lilb. Truly I had rather have had an ordinary one; Sir, I mean a legal and ordinary Aſſizes or Seſſions.

Ld Keble. But this you have, and this is to take off, or prevent that which you would do now, if there had been one Judge and no more; and if you had not had this great Preſence of the Court, you would have been malepert, and have out-talked them, but you cannot do ſo here.

Lieut. Col. Lilb. Truly, Sir, I am not daunted at the Multitude of my Judges, neither at the glittering of your Scarlet Robes, nor the Majeſty of your Preſence, and harſh auſtere Deportment towards me, I bleſs my good God for it, who gives me Courage and Boldneſs.

Ld Keble. That your Tryal is ſo publick, as your Offence is, for this end, that all Men may take notice, that you have fair Play: and therefore according to Law, you ought to make your Caſe, in Matter of Fact, clear; for that I muſt tell you again, and once is as good as if I had told you a thouſand times over, unleſs you can clearly do that, you ſay nothing to it. If you will take that for clear Proof that hath been alledged againſt you, you may ſhorten your ſelf; but otherwiſe make that Defence that you judge moſt ſufficient to diſprove the Fact: for till that time, you are clear gone in Law, and no Counſel muſt or can be aſſigned you.

L. Col. Lilb. I have been a great while yeſterday pleading my Right by Law for Counſel, and now I have ſtood many Hours to hear your Proofs to the Indictment. I hope you will not be ſo cruel to put me to a preſent Anſwer, when bodily Strength is ſpent.

Ld Keble. We know it as well as your ſelf you were here, and ſtood divers Hours yeſterday, and to-day you have done the like; but we came before you, and ſtand after you.

L. Col. Lilb. Sir, will you put a Man to more than a Horſe is put to, or is able to go through with? The righteous Man is merciful, even to a very Beaſt.

Ld Keble. We have been as long as you have.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. But, under favour, you have ſat.

Ld Keble. You had that Liberty too; diſpute no more, we muſt go on.

L. Col. Lilb. I deſire but a Week's time to return you an Anſwer to your large Indictment; and if not ſo long, then give me leave but till to-morrow Morning to conſider of my Anſwer. I am upon my Life.

Ld Keble. No, you muſt diſpatch it now.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Then give me leave but to withdraw into any private Room for an Hour to recollect my Thoughts, peruſe my Notes, and refreſh my Spirits. [And hereabouts Judge Jermin did whiſper the Lord Keble in the Ear; and preſently ſaid Judge Jermin, it's againſt the Law to allow you any more time, the Jury ſtand here charged, the Evidence is given, you muſt immediately go on, or yield that for Truth which hath been proved againſt you.]

Lieut. Col. Lilb. Well then, if it muſt be ſo, that you will have my Blood right or wrong; and if I ſhall not have one Hour's time to refreſh me, after my Strength is ſpent, and to conſider of that which hath been alledged againſt me, then I appeal [which he uttered with a mighty Voice] to the righteous God of Heaven and Earth againſt you, where I am ſure I ſhall be heard, and find Acceſs; and the Lord God Omnipotent, and a mighty Judge betwixt you and me, require and requite my Blood upon the Heads of you and your Poſterity, to the third and fourth Generation. [Immediately after the uttering of which the Scaffold fell down, which was on the left Hand, which occaſioned a great Noiſe and ſome Confuſion by reaſon of the People's tumbling; but Silence being made, the Priſoner was buſy at his Papers and Books, being invited by Sheriff Pack to come out of the Bar, for fear he ſhould have fallen with the reſt, and ſo he might have loſt his Priſoner.]

Ld Keble. How came the Priſoner there?

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I went not thither of my own accord, but by Mr. Sheriff's Invitation; and if I am in a place where I ought not to be, blame Mr. Sheriff, and not me.

Ld Keble. Diſpatch, Sir.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, if you will be ſo cruel as not to give me leave to withdraw to eaſe and refreſh my Body, I pray you let me do it in the Court. Officer, I entreat you to help me to a Chamber-pot. [Whilſt it was fetching, Mr. Lilburne followeth his Papers and Books cloſe; and when the Pot came, he made water, and gave it to the Foreman.]

Ld Keble. Proceed, Mr. Lilburne. [But he preſſed for a little Reſpit, which was granted him with much ado, as alſo a Chair to ſit down upon; but within a very little ſpace the Lord Keble ſaid,] Ld Keble. The Court cannot ſtay for you, proceed on to anſwer.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Good Sir, would you have me to anſwer to Impoſſibilities, will you not give me Breath? If you thirſt after my Blood, and nothing elſe will ſatisfy you, take it preſently, without any more to do. [But the Priſoner ſtruggled out a little Reſpit.]

Ld Keble. The Court can ſtay no longer, take away his Chair, for I cannot ſee the Bar, and plead what you have to ſay, for it grows very late.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Well, ſeeing I muſt to it, the Will of God be done. [But his Brother being next to him, was heard to preſs him to pauſe a little more :] No, Brother, ſaith he, my Work is done; I will warrant you by the Help of God, I will knock the Nail upon the Head. And ſo he went into the Bar, and ſet the Chair before him, and laid his Law-Books open upon them, in order, as he intended, to uſe them; and being ready, ſaid, Sir, I humbly crave the favour, ſince it is my hard Lot and Fortune, at leaſt in my own Apprehenſion, to have ſo much hard Meaſure and Injuſtice as I have, to know whether or no you will permit me, after that I have pleaded to a Matter of Fact, according to the Law of England, that has been allowed to the higheſt Traytors, in all the Books that I have read of, that I may ſpeak in my own behalf unto the Jury, my Countrymen, upon whoſe Conſciences, Integrity and Honeſty, my Life, and the Lives and Liberties of the honeſt Men of this Nation now lies; who are in Law Judges of Law as well as Fact, and you only the Pronouncers of their Sentence, Will and Mind: I ſay, I deſire to know, when I have pleaded to Matter of Fact, whether you will be pleaſed to give me leave to ſpeak to them a few words beſides.

Ld Keble. Maſter Lilburne, quietly expreſs your ſelf, and you do well; the Jury are Judges of Matter of Fact altogether, and Judge Coke ſays ſo: but I tell you the Opinion of the Court, they are not Judges of Matter of Law.

Lieut. Col. Lilb. The Jury by Law are not only Judges of Fact, but of Law alſo; and you that call your ſelves Judges of the Law, are no more but Norman Intruders; and in deed and in truth, if the Jury pleaſe, are no more but Cyphers, to pronounce their Verdict.

Judge Jermin. Was there ever ſuch a damnable blaſphemous Hereſy as this is, to call the Judges of the Law, Cyphers?

L.Col. Lilb. Sir, I intreat you give me leave to read the Words of the Law then; for to the Jury I apply, as my Judges, both in the Law and Fact.

Ld Keble. We will not deny a Tittle of the Law.

Judge Jermin. Let all the Hearers know, the Jury ought to take notice of it, That the Judges that are ſworn, that are Twelve in number, they have ever been the Judges of the Law, from the firſt time that ever we can read or hear that the Law was truly expreſs'd in England; and the Jury are only Judges, whether ſuch a thing were done or no, they are only Judges of Matter of Fact.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I deny it, here's your own Law to diſprove you; and therefore let me but read it. It is a hard caſe when a Man is upon the Tryal of his Life, that you will not ſuffer him to read the Law to the Jury, for his own Defence; I am ſure you have cauſed to be read at large thoſe Laws that make againſt me.

Ld Keble. But I ſhall pronounce to clear the Righteouſneſs of that Law, whatſoever others will pretend againſt it that know it not.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, under favour, I ſhall not trouble my ſelf with any thing, but what is pertinent to my preſent purpoſe: Here is the firſt Part of Coke's Inſtitutes, it is owned by all the Lawyers that I know, or ever heard of in England, for good Law.

Ld. Keble. If you can convince us, that Matter of Law does concern the Jury, you ſay ſomething.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, I have been ſhuffled too much out of my Libertics already, give me leave to read but the Law to the Jury; I will make uſe of nothing now to them, but your own Words; and when I have done, I will leave my ſelf to them, and the Guidance of God upon their Conſcience. And having the Book open in his Hand, he ſaid in the firſt Part of Coke's Inſtitutes, Sect. 366. fol. 226, 227, 228. in his Expoſition of Plowden, hath theſe Words.

Ld Keble. Have we dealt ſo fairly with you all this while? Pray be confident, thoſe that are Quotations there, are not for your purpoſe; but I thought how good a Lawyer you were, for to ſet Coke's Commentaries upon Plowden, when there is no ſuch Book or Commentary. Go to your Matter of Fact, which is clear; but for this, let it fall down, and ſpare your ſelf, and trouble your ſelf no more with Coke; he has no Commentary upon Plwoden. [But Maſter Lilburne preſs'd to ſpeak.]

Judge Jermin. Hold Sir.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. What will not you allow me Liberty to read your Law? O unrighteous and bloody Judges!

Judge Jermin. By the Fancy of your own Mind you would puzzle the Jury; we know the Book a little better than you do; there is no ſuch Book as Coke's Commentary upon Plowden.

Ld Keble. Sir, you ſhall not read it.

Judge Jermin. You cannot be ſuffered to read the Law; you have broached an erroneous Opinion, That the Jury are the Judges of the Law, which is enough (a) to deſtroy all the Law in the Land; there was never ſuch damnable Hereſy broached in this Nation before.

The Cryer cries out, Hear the Court.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Do your pleaſure, then here I'll die: Jury take notice of their Injuſtice; but ſeeing they will not hear me, I appeal to you, and ſay, It is an eaſy matter for an abler Man than I am, in ſo many Interruptions as I meet with, to miſtake Plowden for Littleton; I am ſure here are Coke's Commentaries upon Littleton, and theſe be his Words; In this Caſe the Recognitors of the Aſſize may ſay and render to the Juſtices their Verdict at large upon the whole Matter. Which I am ſure is good Law, foraſmuch as we ſee it continually done in all Actions of Treſpaſs or Aſſault, where the Jury doth not only judge of the Validity of the Proof of the Fact, but alſo of the Law, by aſſigning what Damages they think is juſt.

Ld Keble. I am ſure you are in an errour, in a groſs one, as poſſible a Man can be in; this is ſo groſs, that I thought it could not have come from Maſter Lilburne, that profeſſeth himſelf to be a rational and knowing Man.

Lieut. Col. Lilb. And in another place he ſaith, 'For as well as the Jurors may have Cognizance of 'the Leaſe, they alſo may have Cognizance of the 'Condition.' And further there Coke ſaith, 'Here 'it is to be obſerved, That a ſpecial Verdict, or at 'large, may be given in any Action, and upon any 'Iſſue, be the Iſſue General or Special.' And in

(a) Yes, but there was at Reading, when Colonel Martin, after they were ſworn, cauſed all the Jury before the Judges ſitting upon the Bench, to put on their Hats, as their Right; being they were then the chief Judges in the Court, and the other inferiour to them.

Section 368. Littleton hath these Words; 'Also in 'such Case, where the Inquest may give their Ver- 'dict at large, if they will take upon them the 'Knowledge of the Law, upon the Matter they 'may give their Verdict generally.' Coke's Words upon it are fully to the same purpose, who saith, 'Although the Jury, if they will take upon them (as Littleton here saith) 'the Knowledge of the 'Law, may give a general Verdict.' I am sure this is pertinent to my purpose, and now I have done, Sir.

Ld Keble. You have spent a little time, but you have done your self no good; I thought you had understood the Law better than I see you do.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Now, Sir, as to Matter of Fact, according to your own desire, seeing you will have broke your Promise, and will allow me no Counsel, but lie at catch with me, I shall come to it without any Preamble. The Statute of 1 Edward 6. chap. 12. (I desire the Jury may take notice of the Statutes) and the 5th and 6th of Edward the Sixth, chap. 11. here's the Statute-Book, which doth expresly declare, That no Man shall be condemned for Treason, Petty-Treason, or any such like Crime, but by the Evidence and clear Proof of two legal and sufficient Witnesses. Sir Edward Coke in his third Part of Institutes, Chap. of High Treason, is absolutely of the same Opinion, fol. 12. In this Branch, says he, four things are to be observed. First, this word (provablement) provably; that is, upon direct and manifest Proof, not upon conjectural Presumptions, or Inferences, or Strains of Wit, but upon good and sufficient Proof of two Witnesses. And this is fol. 12. And herein the Adverb (provablement) provably, hath a great Force, and signifieth a direct and plain Proof.

And, secondly, this Word (attaint) necessarily implieth, That he be proceeded with, and attainted, according to the due Course and Proceedings of Law, and not by absolute Power, or by other Means, as in former times it hath been used.

And fol. 24. chap. Petty-Treason, he saith, It hath been holden, That upon the Tryal of Misprision of Treason, there must be two lawful Witnesses, as well upon the Tryal as the Indictment; as it was resolved by the Justices in the Lord Lumley's Case, Hill. 14 Eliz. reported by the Lord Dyer under his own Hand; and in the Margin he hath this Note upon it, That this is the last Resolution of the Judges upon it. And a little below, in the same fol. and fol. 25. he saith, Therefore upon the Indictment, which is in manner of an Accusation, by the Statutes of 1 Edward 6. cap. 12. and 5 and 6 Edward 6. cap. 11. two lawful Witnesses are requisite. And in fol. 240. he hath the same, his Words are these; Attainders of Treason, &c. ought to be upon plain and direct Evidence, (as before is said) for if the Party be executed, Restitution may be had of his Lands, but never can be had of his Life. Now I have done, Sir.

Ld Keble. I hope the Jury hath seen the Evidence so plain, and so fully, that it doth confirm them to do their Duty, and to find the Prisoner guilty of what is charged upon him.

Judge Jermin. This that you have said, makes much for the Jury.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. We shall see that by and by; but I shall proceed on to answer your Proof to the Indictment, and that in the same Method that your Witnesses swore. And therefore, Sir, in the first place, to the first, which is Thomas Newcomb the Printer, he swears in these Words, That I was present with Captain Jones, from whose Hands he says he received the last Sheet of the Book, called The Out-cry of the Young Men and Apprentices of London: But he says, Captain Jones agreed with him for the printing of it, and not I; for in that Particular he doth not in the least accuse me, neither doth he in the least accuse me in any manner in the world of being the Author of it; and that I did any more at his House, but take away a single Sheet of it before it was corrected; which, says he, I brought away with me. In answer to whose Testimony I return this; and I earnestly entreat you, Gentlemen of the Jury, to observe it well; and therefore, in the first place, he is but a single Testimony to this. But, secondly, I answer, That he confesses moreover, that before he had compleated that Sheet that he received from Captain Jones, he was taken; and not only he, but his Forms also were taken from him. So that by his own Confession, that Copy that was brought by Captain Jones when I was present with him, proved abortive, it was never wrought: For he says, it was taken before he had perfected it; and to my knowledge they had it in their possession. So that it clearly appears, it was never perfectly wrought off, and therefore the Books were never perfected: therefore I hope that it will not be Treason in me, being a Freeman of England, to walk the Streets with my Friend, and to go into a House with him where he hath business to do; admit it be a Printing-house, where he intends to have a Sheet of Paper printed: his Affairs, Business or Actions are nothing to me, neither are they now in the least laid to my charge; and if they were, as they are not, yet that Sheet miscarried, and was taken before it was perfected. So that truly, Sir, you may go seek the Printer of it; for you see that miscarried that Captain Jones delivered to the Printer in my Company; and that Sheet which he saith I had away, was an uncorrected one, which could serve me for no other Use, but waste Paper, and cannot be adjudged to be a true Copy of that which was contained in the Indictment: neither doth he or any other swear, that at the Printer's they see, or know where was done the Title of that Out-cry contained in the Indictment. So that for any thing the Jury knows, the first Part of that Book hath no dependance upon the Sheet that was spoiled, and not brought to maturity in Master Newcomb's Hands, as he himself upon his Oath declares. So that truly, Sir, in Law Mr Newcomb's Testimony proves nothing at all against me, as to that Book mentioned and contained in the Indictment: and therefore you Gentlemen of the Jury, my Life is in your hands, I beseech you take notice, That in all his Testimony, there was not one Word that he declared, to accuse me to be the Author of that Book, or that my Name was to it; for you shall find the Names of ten that own it, so that I think his Testimony is gone, and is not worth a Straw.

In the next place, there were three Soldiers, viz. John Tooke, Thomas Lewis, and John Skinner, that swear against me: The Substance of all their Testimonies centers in one; and John Tooke in the first place saith, about seven Weeks ago he met with Lieut. Col. John Lilburne in Ivy-Lane, where Lewis knowing of him, gave him a Salute: and they being glad to see him that he was well in health, and the like, out of Friendship went to drink a Cup of Beer together at the Red-Cross in Newgate-Market, where he saw a Book, called The Apprentices Outcry, given unto Master Lewis, and he heard these words uttered by Lieut. Col. Lilburne, You Soldiers are those that keep us in Slavery. The second Witness, being Thomas Lewis, saith, That the sixth of December or September, for ſo was his words, he met me in Ivy-Lane, and took acquaintance of me, asked me how I did, and I thank'd him: and he further declares, That he was very much refreſh'd to ſee me, that I was well, and in health, and was glad to ſee that thoſe things that were given out of me by common Fame (that I was kill'd or dead) that they were not true. Therefore he being my old Acquaintance, as he ſaith, we went to drink a Cup of Beer together; and ſays he, (as he remembers) Lieut. Col. Lilburne asked him if he had ſeen a Book call'd The Apprentices Outcry, and he ſaid no, he had not ſeen it, but he had heard of it, and was thinking to go and buy one of them, for that he longed to read it, and heard it was publickly ſold: and ſays he, Lieut. Col. Lilburne ſaid he had one which was given him, and if he pleaſed he would give it me, which he thankfully received; and afterwards we ſtaid a little time to drink a Cup of Beer, and had ſome Diſcourſe. But he doth fix no Evil upon me, that fell from me in that Diſcourſe, neither doth he ſay, that I did ſtir him up to mutiny, or to make diviſion in the Army; only he ſaith, I told him that if he went to ſuch a Man, whoſe Name he hath forgot, it is poſſible he might buy ſome more of them, for they were publickly ſold all over the City. So that you Gentlemen of the Jury may take notice, that he declares the things by common Fame were publickly ſold, and one of them he ſays was given to me, and I gave it to him. Truly I hope the Jury hath more Conſcience in them, than to go about to take away my Life for giving away a ſingle Sheet and a half of Paper, that no Man ſwears I was the Author of, or the Cauſer of it to be printed and publiſhed: but the moſt that can be fix'd upon me, is, That I had one of them given me, and I gave it to a Soldier, my familiar Friend, who had a great deſire to ſee it, and was going to buy one of them, being publick up and down London at that time, which is all that he doth charge upon me; only he ſays further, that there was a little Diſcourſe: but his Teſtimony doth not reach to accuſe me of any evil or malicious Counſel given them, or any Aggravations of Spirit, as tho I did incenſe him or them againſt their Officers or Fellow-Soldiers, thereby to ſtir them up to Mutiny and Rebellion. For truly I have made it my work, for to be as ſparing in my Diſcourſe as could be, in the company of any belonging to the Army; yea, and to ſhun coming nigh the place, if I can avoid it, where they are. And he ſaith, I had no aggravating Spirit within me, nor uttered any Provocations to make them riſe in Mutiny againſt their Officers; and there is none of them all that does in the leaſt fix that Book upon me, to be mine, as the Author of it.

Only he ſaith further, That upon his declaring he longed to ſee the Book, that Lieut. Col. Lilburne told him that ſuch a Man, whoſe Name he hath forgot, might poſſibly ſell them ſome of them, if they had a mind to them, or to get ſome of them: and truly I do not believe that Treaſon.

Further he ſays, all the worſt Diſcourſe I had with them, was, that I asked them a queſtion, which was, when they had any Pay? and they told me, they had not had any Pay in five weeks: and that was the worſt of all. There proceeded from me no aggravating Expreſſions upon it, or mutinous Provocations. But truly that this Diſcourſe ſhould come within the compaſs of Treaſon, to ask my old Acquaintance a queſtion, that had oftentimes viſited me when I was the Lords Priſoner in the Tower, or to drink a Cup of Beer with him, or give a Sheet and a half of Paper that was publickly ſold; truly I hope there will be no righteous Jury in the world, that will give a Judgment againſt me for Treaſon therefore; no, I hope for more righteous Juſtice from a Jury of Citizens of London, whom I hope to find Men of Conſciences and Judgment, yea, of ſuch righteous Judgment, as that they will abhor to go about to take away my Life, and my Blood, and lay the Blemiſh and Stain of Treaſon upon me and my Poſterity for ever, upon ſuch a thing as this is. And this is all, and the utmoſt of all, that the Evidence doth witneſs againſt me.

Then in the third place there was John Skinner, who was the third; and he ſays the ſame in effect, and no more: and therefore I need not to go upon that any further, but ſhall leave it I hope to the enlivened Conſciences of my Jury, my Fellow-Citizens of London.

In the next place, the ſecond thing laid to my charge, is the Salva Libertate, delivered to the Lieutenant of the Tower, as he ſays. Now truly the Lieutenant of the Tower is but a ſingle Witneſs to this, and the Law ſaith poſitively there ſhall be two legal Witneſſes, to prove every Fact of Treaſon, whoſe Teſtimony or Evidence ought to be as clear and evident as the Sun at Noonday, without any conjectural Preſumptions or Inferences, or Strains of Wit: and truly the Lieutenant is but a ſingle Witneſs at moſt. I ſhould be loth to reproach or beſpatter the Man, yet I muſt ſay this, being upon my Life, that he is not only a ſingle Witneſs, but a Gentleman in whoſe cuſtody I was Priſoner contrary to Law; who kept me priſoner in times by-paſt, above twelve months together at the Houſe of Lords illegal Command, contrary unto Law and Juſtice: for which above a year ſince, I did commence at the Common Law an Action of four or five thouſand Pound againſt him, as I did alſo againſt Colonel Tichburn, that I have ſeen upon this Bench, ſitting as one of my Judges; which I think is not equal, nor juſt, nor legal, that he with whom I have a Suit of four or five thouſand Pound depending, when thereby my profeſs'd Adverſary, ſhould be one of my Judges: and therefore I deſire he may be commanded off the Bench, and withdraw, as being my profeſs'd Adverſary, and therefore in Law uncapable to be my Judge. And truly having the ſame Action depending ſtill againſt the preſent Lieutenant of the Tower, before the Judges of the King's-Bench, for his detaining me in Priſon above a Year together, contrary to Law; he is thereby in the eye of the Law my profeſſed Adverſary, and therefore in Law cannot be admitted as a competent Witneſs againſt me, upon my Life. Yet the Lieutenant of Tower doth not in the leaſt ſwear that the Hand is mine, or that he did ſee me write it; but only he ſaith, that I did deliver ſuch a Paper to him: but he is but a ſingle Witneſs, and ſo I ſay by the Law of the Land not valid or good, but his Teſtimony is clearly gone and wiped off, as alſo all things that doth depend thereupon. There is beſides five or ſix Witneſſes produced to ſeveral Charges; but the Law expreſly ſaith, that there muſt be two plain and clear Witneſſes to every particular Charge, or Fact of Treaſon, that muſt take away my Life, and this is your own Law: and therefore he is but a ſingle one, and therefore invalid, and altogether not ſatisfactory or binding. And then beſide, which is conſiderable, truly I think the Tower of London, in the place where he ſaith I gave him

thoſe Papers, is not within the Juriſdiction of the City of London; and how I ſhould come to be arraigned by a Jury of my Fellow-Citizens here in London therefore, againſt whom I muſt confeſs that for my part I have nothing for their Honeſty and Integrity to object, I know not: for I know not the Faces of any two of them, and therefore impoſſible for me to ſay any thing againſt them. I ſay, I know not how by a London Jury I can be try'd for a Fact fix'd upon me to be committed in Middleſex? I beſeech you, Gentlemen of the Jury, miſtake me not; for I have nothing to accuſe you of, and I hope you will be ſo conſcientious and tender in the Tryal of me for my Life, that you will put your Caſe as my Caſe, and do by me as you would be done unto by me, if you were in my Caſe and Condition; and the righteous God of Heaven and Earth direct you ſo to do. And therefore the Lieutenant of the Tower being but a ſingle Witneſs at moſt, and in Law not a competent one neither, being my profeſſed Adverſary, that hath moſt illegally kept me in Priſon, for which I have commenced long ſince my Action at Law for my legal Reparations againſt him; I ſay, therefore in the eye of the Law his Teſtimony ſticks not, and I hope, in the righteous Opinion of the Jury, can do me no harm: and if ſo his Teſtimony be invalid, then the Salva Libertate cannot reach me, to do me any hurt; but it and all thoſe my pretended Books call'd by my name, are all waſh'd away and gone, and my Adverſaries muſt go ſeek new Authors for them, or at leaſt procure new and better Teſtimony to prove them mine; for that which they have produced hitherto, is worth nothing.

Then the next is Thomas Daffern; and he ſays, that the twelfth of Auguſt 1649, he met with Lieut. Col. Lilburne upon the Bridge, as he was going home to viſit his ſick and diſtreſſed Family, and he went back with him to his Houſe in Southwark, at Wincheſter-Houſe, which I am ſure is not in London; and therefore at Guildhall in London, by a London Jury, in Law cannot be try'd: for he poſitively ſaith, That at Wincheſter-Houſe in Southwark, which is in the County of Surrey, Lieut. Col. John Lilburne gave him a Book to carry to Col. Ayres, a Priſoner at Warwick-Caſtle; but he does give in no Teſtimony at all that it is mine, or that that Book was Lieut. Col. Lilburne's Book, of his making or penning: but a Book he gave him, and that is all he ſays; which is no more but that he received a Book at Wincheſter-Houſe in Southwark from the hands of Lieut. Col. Lilburne, to carry to Col. Ayres, now a Priſoner at Warwick-Caſtle. Now truly he is but a ſingle Teſtimony, and he ſwears nothing particularly as to me; and beſides, what he ſwears is to a Fact done in another County, and therefore his Teſtimony is not worth a ſtraw; it's gone, it's invalid in Law, it ſignifies nothing, it is not ſo good as a Spider's Web. By virtue of which, the Marſhal's Teſtimony and the Governour's of Warwick-Caſtle, as alſo Col. Purefoy's, need no other Anſwer from me, but to pity them for the long Journey they have made to no purpoſe.

The next thing charged upon me, is the Preparative to an Hue and Cry after Sir Arthur Haſlerig; to which the Lieutenant of the Tower ſays, that Lieut. Col. John Lilburne gave him one of thoſe Books in the Tower, which truly I am confident is in Middleſex: and truly I conceive, under favour, it will be a Point diſputable in Law, that I ſhould be try'd for my Life in this place, admit there were a thouſand Witneſſes to make it good that the Lieutenant of the Tower had one of them from me, either in the place he formerly named, or at his own Houſe; for that Fact was done in the Tower, that is out of the County of London, and ſo not tryable by a Jury of Citizens of London. But he further ſaith, whether the Book that he now has, be the ſame that he received from the hands of Lieut. Col. Lilburne, that he is not able to depoſe.

Then the reſt of the Witneſſes that do depoſe againſt me in relation to the Hue and Cry, are James Nutleigh and Edward Radney, both of them Mr. Prideaux's Servants: and the moſt that they ſay, is, That when I was before their Maſter, upon the 24th of September 1649, at his Chamber in the Temple, to be examined by him, they ſay they ſaw me deliver A Preparative to an Hue and Cry after Sir Arthur Haſlerig, to their Maſter's hands, and tell him that that was mine, and I would own it ſaving the Printer's Erratas; which, ſays the Lieutenant of the Tower upon his Oath, I expreſſed to be many.

In anſwer to which, I ſay, I do not know whether the Temple be within the Liberties of London or no; and if it be not, I know no Ground in Law, wherefore a London Jury ſhould try me here. But more fully I ſay, for any thing the Jury knows, or for any thing the Witneſſes ſwear, the Printer's Erratas, which are many, are all and every of thoſe Clauſes that Offence or Exceptions are taken againſt; for not one of thoſe Clauſes which you except againſt, are not proved to be the Printer's Erratas: and therefore there is no Validity or Weight in thoſe Teſtimonies alſo, for they do not prove in the leaſt that any ſix Lines of the Book is mine, all of them ſay that I owned no more of the Book than was free from the Printer's Erratas. And the Lieutenant of the Tower ſwears that the Clauſe was added, Which are many: And therefore you the Gentlemen of the Jury, I appeal to your Conſciences, and to your Judgments, and the Lord ſet it home to your Underſtandings, that you may not be guilty of the Blood of an innocent Man, by Partiality, Fear or Affrightment of Spirit; for in Law, Equity and Juſtice, all their three Teſtimonies put together has no Validity, no Strength, nor Force in them: and ſo much for that.

The next thing fix'd upon me, is The legal fundamental Libertys of the People of England revived, aſſerted and vindicated; and truly all that's brought to prove The legal fundamental Liberties of England to be mine, is but merely the Relations that are in the forementioned Books: for I do not remember (nay, I am ſure of it) that there is ſo much as a ſingle Teſtimony that does give in any Evidence againſt me that it is mine; and therefore I can anſwer to that nothing more than what I have ſaid already. The Teſtimonies all being invalid, at leaſt in the Eye or the Law; and therefore that's gone too, and blown away as Chaff before the Wind.

Laſtly, For the Agreement of the People, truly that is dated the firſt of May, 1649. And truly, for ought I know, and I am ſure of it too, it is before the Date of any of thoſe Acts upon which I am indicted for my Life, and therefore not within the Compaſs of it. For Paul, that great Apoſtle, ſaid; and he that ſpoke by the Spirit of God that dwelt within him, and to whom it was given in an extraordinary manner, that ſo he might thereby be enabled to write the infallible Truths of God, ſaid, Where there is no Law, there can be no Tranſgreſſion. But that Agreement was in being, and publickly abroad with a legal Imprimatur to it, before any of the Acts, upon which I am arraigned, had a Being: And therefore, admit it ſhould be granted to be mine, yet it can be no Tranſgreſſion, or any thing prejudicial in the Eye of the Law unto me. But beſides, there is not any Teſtimony at all, that ſo much as lays it to my Charge to be mine; and therefore it pinches me not, nor does any of all the reſt of your Charges. And beſides all that I have already ſaid in my own behalf, to ſhew in Law the Invalidity and Inſufficiency of all the Teſtimony you have produced againſt me, I add this by way of Addition to it, That there hath not been ſo much as one ſingle Witneſs or Teſtimony to prove that the Books laid to my Charge are rightly and truly dated, and not poſt-dated; which if any of them, or all of them ſhould be, admit the Proofs were ſufficient in Law, yet unleſs the Days of them be firmly proved to be exactly according to the original Copies, and not poſt-dated, for any thing the Jury knows, they might be made and writ before ever the Acts, they are ſaid to tranſgreſs, had a Being. And therefore if there were ſo many Teſtimonies in Law to prove the Books mine, (which there is not in the leaſt) yet, I ſay, admit there had been a thouſand Witneſſes to the Proof of every one of thoſe Books, yet notwithſtanding in the Eye of the Law, I leave it to the Conſciences of my Jury, whether I be not free in that particular, ſeeing there is none ſwears punctually and poſitively to the Dates of them. But to put all out of danger, as I deny nothing, ſo in that particular I do not own a Jot, a Line, a Word, a Syllable of any of them. Now, Sir, having done ſo far as I have, and clearly diſcovered to the Jury, and all that hear me this Day, that all the Proofs alledged againſt me does not ſtick, in the leaſt, any Guilt upon me, truly I have clearly anſwered and invalidated all the verbal Proofs, according to the clear Letter and true Intention of the Law. I have no more to ſay to all the Evidences that have been read in Books againſt me: I leave it to the Conſciences of my Jury, believing them to be a Generation of Men that believe in God the Father, and believe they ſhall have a Portion in the Reſurrection of the Dead, and ſtand before the Tribunal of the Lord Almighty, to give an Account unto him, the Lord of Life and Glory, and the Judge of all the Earth, of all their Actions done in the Fleſh: I leave it to their Judgments and Conſciences, to judge righteouſly between me and my Adverſaries; and the Lord of Life and Glory, to judge right between me and you, that in all thoſe Things in your long Scrowl you pretend me guilty of, I hope I have ſo clearly and fully anſwered all and every of your Proofs, that not any one Thing ſticks. And to their Conſciences I caſt it; hoping that they do look upon themſelves as ſtanding in the Preſence of him that ſees their Hearts, and knows now whether there be any Malice in them towards me, or no; which, for my part, I do not believe there is; for I profeſs I know no Wrong I have particularly done them as Men, or generally as Engliſhmen. My Conſcience is free and clear as in the ſight of God, and I hope of all unbyaſſed Men. And, to my Knowledge, I never ſee the Faces of any two of them before this Day; and therefore, entirely as an Engliſhman, that loves and honours the good old Laws of England, and earneſtly deſires, and endeavours, and ſtruggles for the Preſervation of Juſtice and juſt Magiſtracy, which I wiſh with all my Soul may be preſerved; and therefore having ſuffered much for the Preſervation of the common and juſt Liberties of England, to their Conſciences and to their Judgments I leave both this Matter, and the conſtant Series of all my Actions in this my Pilgrimage and Vale of Tears here below.

Ld Keble. Mr. Lilburne.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Your Pleaſure, Sir?

Ld Keble. Nothing, Sir, but this: Our Conſciences are before God, as well as yours; and therefore you need not ſpeak thus.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, I have only two or three Words more, which I have ſpoken to you: But theſe Men, that are my Jury and Judges, in whoſe hands only are the Iſſues of my Life, have not as yet heard them. I pray you give me Liberty, according to your Promiſe, to go on without Interruption. You Gentlemen of the Jury, I have many material Things to produce Witneſſes unto for my Juſtification; but no Time in the leaſt will be allowed me, as you ſee, to produce them, which I ought by Law to have had; eſpecially conſidering I have been lock'd up ſo long cloſe Priſoner, and have nothing for which I was firſt impriſoned laid unto my Charge, and have ſo high, potent, and mighty Adverſaries as I have; and truly every Man is ſhy of me, for fear he may come into trouble for coming near me. And therefore, I have but two or three Words more to ſpeak to the Jury, I beſeech you let me freely go on.

Ld Keble. Make them thirty to your Defence, and you may ſpeak them.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I ſhall, by God's Aſſiſtance; I ſhall keep cloſe to my Defence. Now Gentlemen of the Jury, I think I have ſufficiently pleaded for my ſelf at this preſent; and that to clear up fully unto your Judgments, and to your Underſtandings, that by the Law of England there is not ſo much as any one Fact proved againſt me; for the Law is expreſs, that to every particular Fact of Treaſon there muſt be two ſufficient Witneſſes, not by Conſtructions, or the like: Upon which Score and Plea that Gentleman, Maſter Nichols, that ſits there as a Judge, and Maſter John Maynard, ſaved Major Rolfe's Life, being to be arraigned for the higheſt of Engliſh Treaſon before Baron Wyld. Now, Gentlemen, if, notwithſtanding what I have ſaid, any Thing ſhall yet ſtick upon your Spirits, I ſhall entreat you to conſider the Intention of the Law of England: It is repeated ſeveral times in Sir Edward Coke's Inſtitutes; it is a Maxim in the Law, I have it here in the third Part of his Inſtitutes, fol. 6. Et actus non facit reum, niſi mens ſit rea. Sir, if you pleaſe to do me the Favour but to engliſh it, and explain it for the Jury? For tho I underſtand the Subſtance of it, yet I am not exactly able to engliſh the Latin, but only to underſtand the Senſe of it. I conceive the Senſe of it is this, It is not the Act, but the Intention of the Mind, that declares Guilt. But therefore as in reference unto that, I ſhall ſay no more but only this to them, That the conſtant Series of all my Actions, from my Youth hitherto, have manifeſted that I have, with an affectionate and compaſſionate Engliſh Spirit within me, that hath put me forth for many Years together really to endeavour the Proſperity and Good of the Land of my Nativity, and not its Miſchief and Deſtruction; and that hithertoward, in all my Conteſts, I have had the Law and the declared publick Juſtice of the Nation on my ſide, having never done any Miſchief to my Country, unleſs it be a Miſchief to oppoſe great Mens Wills. I have now been ſeven Months in Priſon, I know not wherefore, altho originally I was committed to Priſon pretendedly for Treaſon: And both the Acts, upon which now I am indicted, have been made long ſince my firſt Commitment. There is not any one Syllable of all thoſe Things for which I originally in general, without Accuſer or Proſecutor, was voted a Traytor by the preſent Power; and for which I was proclaimed a Traytor throughout all the Market and great Towns in England ſix Months ago: There is not now, I ſay, any one of thoſe Things laid to my Charge. But truly I have been laid into Priſon for nothing, as by this Day's Work clearly appears, by the Men in preſent Power. Unto divers of whom I have often ſent, to know what it is they require at my hands; and have alſo from time to time declared my ready Willingneſs to compoſe and end all Differences that concern me, having proffered again and again to refer my ſelf unto the final Determination of four of their own Members, finally to end and determine all Differences betwixt them and me; whereof I was willing that Judge Rigby ſhould be one of them: A Gentleman (though now a Judge) I have found very honeſt and faithful, and to whom I have been much obliged for many hearty Favours I have from time to time received from him. I ſay, I have ſent to him and Colonel Martin, and abundance of Members beſides, from time to time; to ſome of whom I have written, with ſome of whom I have ſpoken. I ſay, I have ſent many Meſſages with the earneſteſt Deſire in the World, That if I had offended any Man in the Houſe, that if he would be pleaſed fairly and friendly to refer it to the final Judgment and Determination of four Members of their own Houſe, and would ſtand to it. And let all the World judge whether, or no, this Propoſition was not ſuitable to a Chriſtian, and ſuitable to an honeſt Man; yea, to a Man that judged himſelf in the ſtricteſt Scrutiny of his own Conſcience to be free and innocent in his own Soul, and in his own Conſcience, from all Guilt, Crimes, or Treaſons; or elſe, if I had not, I would not have put my ſelf upon the Judgment of thoſe that were engaged in Intereſt and Self-preſervation againſt me: And yet for the Things that they impriſoned me for as a Traytor in general, which I hear nothing of this Day, which is wonderful ſtrange Law and Proceedings to my Underſtanding. But beſides, Sir, under favour, I have not only done this, but I have yet Thouſands of my Friends, I will undertake I could produce ten thouſand of old and young Males and Females, Citizens and Countrymen, Men of Honeſty and Integrity, that have in the common Cauſe always adhered to the Freedoms of the Nation, that have petitioned the Parliament ſeveral times, yea, from time to time, with abundance of rational and fair Petitions, and truly ſtated my Caſe to them, and acquainted them with my Condition, and with the reſt of my Fellow-Priſoners, and earneſtly begg'd and entreated of them that they would not be haſty in condemning and deſtroying me before they had heard me, and afforded me a legal Tryal, from firſt to laſt, according to the due Forms and Proceſs of the Law of England. And yet for all this, till I came before you, I never ſaw Accuſer or Proſecutor, nor Indictment or Charge, nor nothing in all the Earth, legally to demonſtrate me ſo much as a ſuppoſed Offender. And yet for all this no Satisfaction in the world would be received; notwithſtanding in one Petition they deſiring that they would be pleaſed, ſeeing they were incenſed againſt us, and that they had taken Indignation againſt us, they did not deſire to juſtify us in any Thing we had done; but in regard, to their own Knowledge, we had been all four faithful, zealous, and ſerviceable Inſtruments in the common Cauſe of the Nation: In which, to the Hazard of my Life an hundred times over, I have engaged for them, with my Sword in my Hand, with as much Reſolution, and as much Faithfulneſs, as any Man on Earth ever ſerved a Generation of Men; having never betrayed my Truſt, or ever given any Suſpicion in the leaſt that I would, or ever ſo much as ſtaggered in my Principles, nor ever ſo much as diſputed any Commands, though never ſo deſperate, that was laid upon me; no, nor ever turned my Back in the Field of their Enemies in any of their Services, ſo long as it was poſſible for a Man that had any Brains left him to ſtand; but was one of thoſe ſeven hundred Men at Brentford, (my ſelf being there a Volunteer, without any particular Command) that with Dint of Sword ſtood it out againſt the whole Body of the King's numerous Army for many Hours together, and never ſtirr'd off the Ground till both Horſe and Foot had, as it were, encompaſs'd us round, and till we came to a Readineſs to beat out one another's Brains with the But-end of our Muſquets: where I was taken a Priſoner, and led captive in a moſt barbarous and diſgraceful manner to Oxford, where I ſuffered abundance of unexpreſſible Hardſhips, and underwent the Shock, and rid the Storm, as ſtoutly as any Man there, although I believe I was as much courted by Meſſages from the King himſelf, as any or all the Parliament-Men that were there my Fellow-Priſoners; for there I have had no leſs than four Earls and Lords in one Day ſent unto me by him, to draw me over to them: But I bleſs God, that kept me upright and entire unto my Integrity and Principles, and ſuffered me not to turn my Back upon them. But, Sir, notwithſtanding all this, (I ſay) our Friends deſired of the Parliament that they would be pleaſed to take ſufficient Security, according to the Law, for our forth-coming at all times, to anſwer ſuch Things as ſhall be laid to our Charge: But their Petitions were contemned, themſelves ſlighted and abuſed, and by no means could get any ſatisfactory Anſwers to them. Sir, I ſpeak here to you, and to my Fellow-Citizens the Jury, as in the ſight and preſence of God, that knows I lye not: And if you find me to be in a Lye, in the leaſt, in what I have ſaid, then never credit Man of my Profeſſion again for my ſake. Truly, Sir, I ſay, they deſired them that we might be releaſed from our Impriſonment, putting in Security to anſwer whatſoever legally could be charged upon us; only they craved we might have the ſame legal Privileges that they demanded at the hands of the King, when he impeached the Lord Kimbolton and the five Members of High Treaſon; which Privileges is eaſily and plainly to be read in their own firſt Primitive Declarations, pag. 38, 39, & 76, 77. Now abundance of the Free People of this Nation, in my behalf, having craved the ſame Privileges that was demanded for the Lord Kimbolton, and in the behalf of the five Members, and the like, all that they deſired was no more but the ſame Privileges that they craved for them; which was, That I might have the due Proceſs of the Law, from firſt to laſt; and I and my Accuſers come Face to Face at the beginning before an ordinary Magiſtrate; and if they had any thing to lay to my Charge, that they would legally, according to Law, proceed with me. But, I ſay, none of theſe would be granted, altho themſelves in ſeveral of their Declarations have declared all theſe Things to be the common Right of all or any of the People of England, as well as Parliament-Men. Yet notwithſtanding all this, they continued in their incenſed Condition againſt me, and would come to no legal nor nor fair Iſſue with me; nor let me in the leaſt know what was the end or thing they required of me, or what was the thing that would ſatisfy for the Extenuation of their Indignation againſt me; but contrariwiſe dealt harder and harder with me; in laying new and freſh inſupportable Burdens and Provocations upon me: For, after all this, they cauſed me to be lock'd up cloſe Priſoner in the Heat of Summer, ſet Sentinels Night and Day at my Door, denied me the Acceſs of my Wife and little Babes; for a certain Seaſon neither Wife nor Child could ſo much as ſet their Feet within the Gates of the Tower to ſee me, or comfort me in my Diſtreſs.

Ld Keble. Mr. Lilburne, is this your Defence?

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I beſeech you, as either the Law, or Fear of God, Conſcience or common Honeſty dwells within you, let me have a little fair Play to go on to ſpeak for my Life without Interruption; I ſhall not trouble you long, for I have almoſt done.

Ld Keble. When your Matter of Fact is to defend your ſelf, and to anſwer the Proof upon that; and that is it we are to hear, and not to hear you tell the Story of all your Life: and then if we ſhould reply to theſe particular things, they will be ſuch as moſt of them will vaniſh, and do you no Service, but take up a great deal of time. Do not tell us a Story, but go on to finiſh the Matter of Fact.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. It has been your Favour to give me leave to tell it over to you, I pray give me leave to declare it to my Jury, who hath not heard it before; and it is very material to my Preſervation, and my Life lies upon it: therefore do not deal with me as Proctors, and engaged Men, with thoſe that thirſt for my Blood; and laying aſide that Evenneſs of Hand betwixt both Parties, that ought to be in all juſt and righteous Judges.

Ld Keble. 'Tis nothing to this; if it be any thing in the World to do you good, in the way of your Courſe of Defence, you ſhould have it.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Well, if you will let me go on no further to make my Defence, I cannot over-rule you, though you over-rule me; my Blood be upon your Heads, and the Lord God of Heaven and Earth reward you for all your blood-thirſty Cruelty towards me his innocent Servant this Day; and ſo I have done with it: and what I have ſaid, I have done with it, and leave it to the Jury, earneſtly begging and intreating them to take notice of your cruel and unjuſt dealing with me, in denying me all the Privileges of an Engliſhman, when I am upon my Life.

I.d Keble. What is material, you ſhall not be debarred in it.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. O Lord, Sir! What ſtrange Judges are you, that you will neither allow me Counſel to help me to plead, nor ſuffer me my ſelf to ſpeak for my own Life? Is this your Law and Juſtice, Sir? I have no more to ſay but this, ſeeing you ſtraighten me; although you ſaid you would hear me till midnight. I hope I have made it evident to all rational Men, that all or any part of the Teſtimony given in againſt me, does not in the exact Eye of the Law, in the leaſt touch me, although I have been moſt unjuſtly impriſoned, and moſt barbarouſly uſed, and tyrannized over; yea, and my Eſtate by Will and Power taken from me, that ſhould have kept me and mine alive, and the legal and cuſtomary Allowance of the Tower denied me to this Day. And although I have uſed all chriſtian and fair Means to compoſe my Differences with my Adverſaries, but nothing would ſerve their turns, but I muſt have Oppreſſion upon Oppreſſion laid upon me, enough to break the Back of a Horſe; and then if I cry out of my Oppreſſions in any kind, I muſt have new Treaſon-Snares made to catch me, many Months after their Oppreſſions were firſt laid upon me, that if I ſo much as whimper or ſpeak in the leaſt of their unjuſt dealing with me, I muſt die therefore as a Traytor. O miſerable Servitude! and miſerable Bondage, in the firſt Year of England's Freedom! I have now no more to ſay unto you, but only this; your own Law tells me, Sir Edward Coke ſpeaks it three or four times over in his 3d Part of Inſtitutes, That it is the Law of England, that any By-ſtander may ſpeak in the Priſoner's behalf, if he ſee any thing urged againſt him contrary to Law, or do apprehend he falls ſhort of urging any material thing that may ſerve for his Defence and Preſervation. Here's your own Law for it, Sir; Coke is full and pregnant to this purpoſe in his 3d Part of Inſtitutes, fol. 29, 34, 37. But this hath ſeveral times been denied me in the Caſe of Mr. Sprat, my Sollicitor; and now I demand it again, as my Right by Law, that he may ſpeak a few Words for me, according to his often Deſire, both to me and the Court. I have almoſt done, Sir, only once again I claim that as my Right which you have promiſed, That I ſhould have Counſel to Matter of Law; and if you give me but your own promiſe, which is my undoubted Right by your own Law, and I fear not my Life: But if you again ſhall deny both theſe legal Privileges, I ſhall deſire my Jury to take notice, That I aver you rob me of the Benefit of the Law, and go about to murder me, without and againſt Law: and therefore as a free-born Engliſhman, and as a true Chriſtian that now ſtands in the Sight and Preſence of God, with an upright Heart and Conſcience, and with a cheerful Countenance, caſt my Life, and the Lives of all the honeſt Freemen of England, into the Hands of God, and his gracious Protection, and into the Care and Conſcience of my honeſt Jury and Fellow-Citizens; who I again declare by the Law of England, are the Conſervators and ſole Judges of my Life, having inherent in them alone the judicial Power of the Law, as well as Fact: you Judges that ſit there being no more, if they pleaſe, but Cyphers to pronounce the Sentence, or their Clerks to ſay Amen to them; being at the beſt, in your Original, but the Norman Conqueror's Intruders. And therefore, you Gentlemen of the Jury, are my ſole Judges, the Keepers of my Life, at whoſe hands the Lord will require my Blood, in caſe you leave any part of my Indictment to the cruel and bloody Men. And therefore I deſire you to know your Power, and conſider your Duty, both to God, to Me, to your own Selves, and to your Country: And the gracious aſſiſting Spirit, and Preſence of the Lord God Omnipotent, the Governour of Heaven and Earth, and all things therein contained, go along with you, give counſel and direct you, to do that which is juſt, and for his Glory.

[The People with a loud Voice cried, Amen, Amen; and gave an extraordinary great Hum, which made the Judges look ſomething untowardly about them, and cauſed Major-General Skippon to ſend for three more freſh Companies of Foot-Soldiers.]

Mr. Attorney. Gentlemen of the Jury, you have heard the Evidence in behalf of the State; you have heard the Inſinuations of the Priſoner upon them, them, as calling you his Fellow-Citizens, and the like: He hath said, and spoken; we have proved, and it is in your Consciences to believe Proof, before Saying. The Prisoner begun to cite you two Acts of Parliament; the one in the 1st of Edward the Sixth, and the other 5th and 6th of Edward the Sixth; and by those two Acts he would signify to you, that you should have two plain and evident Witnesses to every particular Fact: yet he did forget to cite another Statute made in the first and second Years of Philip and Mary, that overthrows and annihilates those two Statutes that would have two plain Witnesses to every Fact of Treason; and in all Cases of Treason will have them freed, according to the common Course of Law, the Common Law for the Tryal of them. If that must be material, or if that stick with you, that you cannot determine it, my Lords the Judges will direct you in it, and in all other Points of Law. But certainly that Exception was a little vain too; for we did not insist with one particular Witness in nothing at all: for that of Newcomb, the Prisoner did not repeat fully what he said; for I remember he said this, That Mr. Lilburne and Captain Jones came together, and brought the Copy of the last Sheet that was to be printed: if one come with him, and the other delivered it to the Printer, they are both equally guilty alike. They came again the same Day at Night, and when the first Sheet was printed, to be sure it was true and right, that Mr. Lilburne did take the pains to take one of the Copies into his Hand, and corrected it.

Lieut. Col. Lilb. By your favour, Sir, he urg'd no such thing: by your favour, Sir, they are the express Words of the Testimony, to the quite contrary; and I wonder, Mr. Prideaux, you are not ashamed to aver such notorious Falshoods, as you do, in the open Face of the Court, before thousands of Witnesses; for Newcomb said no such thing, as you falsly affirm; neither is there any such Statute in Queen Mary's time that doth abolish those two Statutes of Edward the Sixth, that I insist upon for two Witnesses: name your Statute if you can, here's the Statute-Book, let the Jury hear it read, and do not abuse them with your impudent Falshoods.

Mr. Attorney. Well, Sir, I leave it to the Judgment of the Jury, Sir. My Lord, as for all the rest, and particularly for that of the Salva Libertate, it is true, there is but one Witness, which is sufficient enough by the fore-mentioned Act of Queen Mary: but, my Lord, it is under Mr. Lilburne's own Hand, he will not deny it.

Lieut. Col. Lilb. By your favour, there is no Man so swears, in the least, that it is my Hand: Jesus Christ denied none of his Accusation; yet when they went about to ensnare him by Questions, he answered Pilate, &c. Thou sayest so; go to those that heard me, they know what I said; why ask you me? Sir, I beseech you produce your Act of Parliament in Queen Mary's time, to prove, in Cases of Treason, there ought to be but a single Witness.

Mr. Attorney. Do not interrupt me, Mr. Lilburne.

Lieut. Col. Lilb. I pray you then do not urge that which is not right nor true, but notoriously false; for if you persevere in't, I will interrupt you, and tell you of it to the purpose..

Justice Jermin. Though you do recite many things, yet I must tell you, the Law of the Land saith, The Counsel for the Commonwealth must be heard.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I beseech you then let there be no more added to the Testimony, than Right and Truth; for my Life lies upon it, and I must and will declare the business, and the Falseness of it.

Mr. Attorney. I would not do the tenth part of the Hair of your Head wrong; but being intrusted, I shall do my Duty, and discharge my Conscience in my Place, which is fully and plainly to open that unto them, which in my Conscience I think is right and just.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I do repeat it thus, as in my Conscience, that he did say, when the Copy was first brought, Capt. Jones gave him the Copy, and Capt. Jones did agree with him for the printing of it; and Capt. Jones did read the Original to his Corrector, which Corrector amended the Printer's Faults, and that I had an uncorrected Sheet away; and that his Forms were taken before he had perfected that.

Mr. Attorney. And Mr. Lilburne came the second time.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Will you spend all day in vain Repetitions? You would not give one leave to breathe, nor freely to speak truth, without Interruption, although you were laying load upon me for five Hours together: I pray, Sir, do not now go about to tire the Jury with tedious Repetitions, nor to sophisticate or adulterate their Understandings with your Falshoods and Untruths.

Justice Jermin. Mr. Lilburne, the Law of the Land is, That the Counsel for the State must speak last.

Lieut. Col. Lilb. Sir, your Law is according to the Law of God, you said; and that Law, I am sure, it will have no Man to bear false witness: why doth Mr. Prideaux tell the Jury such Falshoods as he doth, and takes up six times more time to take away my Life, than you or he will allow me to defend it?

Mr. Attorney. For the Salva, that it was delivered in the Tower, which is not in London, I hear not one Witness to prove that.

Lieut. Col. Lilb. That is a disputable Point in Law, whether it be in London or Middlesex.

Mr. Attorn. And then, my Lord, as for the Agreement of the People, Mr. Lilburne says, it was dated the 1st of May, 1649. and it was before the Act was made that is dated May, 1649. and it is before the Law was made in July, 1649. we do not question him for that; but when he comes to bring in those Books in August last, then he does new publish that Agreement of the People: he incites them to set it up as their Center, Standard and Banner.

Lieut. Col. Lilb. Let me not thus be abused; that Book was never fix'd upon me, I was never tax'd to be the Author of it, or so much as the Disperser of one of them; what Baseness is this in you Mr. Prideaux, thus falsly to use me?

Ld Keble. He does you no Wrong, but all the fair Play that can be; he doth fix that Agreement no otherwise upon you, than by your Books it is.

Mr. Attorney. I do acknowledge the Agreement of the People that you are charged with, is dated the 1st of May, 1649. and that the Evidence may allow this; as also, that that Agreement of the People that was then published, and which you in your Books did own, was and is signed by Mr. Walwin, Mr. Prince and Mr. Overton, your Fellow-Prisoners, as well as your self.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. There is no Book yet proved mine; and if that Agreement were mine, yet it is dated before both your Acts, and was in print before before they had a Being; and therefore in the Eye of your own Law, can be no Tranſgreſſion; and you yourſelf doth not ſo much as accuſe me for publiſhing or diſperſing one of them, ſince your Acts were publickly declared.

Mr. Attorney. That which you owned and ſigned, Mr. Lilburne.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. By your favour, Sir, I never owned or ſigned any Book that is proved againſt me yet; and no Book in the eye of the Law can be accounted mine, until it be legally proved mine, or voluntarily confeſſed to be mine by myſelf.

Mr. Attorney. My Lord, that is own'd to be ſo printed. When he muſt come and incite the People, and ſtir them up upon thoſe Particulars therein contained, to inſiſt with Particulars, as the diſſolving of the Parliament, the having of a new, and ſuch other Particulars therein contained; and that this Agreement ſhall be the Center, the Banner, and the waved Standard, unto which they ſhall flock, and to ſend Agents into ſeveral Countries to put this into execution. Now, my Lords, for this Book it is not doubted but that there are two Witneſſes that the Preparative to the Hue and Cry was own'd by Mr. Lilburne to be his own, the Erratas of the Printer only excepted; and that the Lieutenant of the Tower likewiſe joins in it. My Lords, I think there was not a Clauſe read to you out of it, but what is full and home to the purpoſe: and as for the Outcry, the Printer's Teſtimony is compleat. And The legal fundamental Liberties is owned by him in his Impeachment of High Treaſon againſt Lieut. Gen. Cromwell, and his Son-in-Law Commiſſary Ireton; and he doth there alſo ſufficiently own the Agreement of the firſt of May: And, my Lords, I do not know there was any thing that was offered here in that Book, but was firſt proved in the Court. We do not offer any thing of Error that was paſt, to take Mr. Lilburne upon any Speeches that fell from him unawares, although he hath ſufficiently done it: but in much ſpeaking there wants not offence; it falls out here in this. Mr. Lilburne hath been very free in his writing, in his ſpeaking, in his printing, and it now riſeth in Judgment againſt him, and the Law muſt now give him his due; which you, my Lords, are ſole Judges of, and from whom the Jury and the Priſoner both muſt receive it, for all that which Mr. Lilburne hath ſaid to the contrary. And the Jury anſwers to the Matter of Fact, and they are upon their Oaths ſworn to do the things that are juſt and right. My Lords, I ſhall leave the Evidence to them, with this Note or Obſervation upon it, That notwithſtanding all Mr. Lilburne hath flouriſhed and ſaid, I will not ſay as he hath done, and ſeek by gloſſing Speeches or Inſinuations to wind into the Affections of the Jury, as he cunningly and ſmoothly hath done, by calling them his Fellow-Citizens, and the like. You Gentlemen of the Jury, you are to anſwer now according to your own Conſciences, betwixt God and you; your Oath is, That you are not to reſpect Favour or Affection, nor to meddle with him upon any reſpect, than in Juſtice, and as it is already clearly witneſſed and proved before you. My Lords, you have heard the ſeveral Charges he is accuſed upon, you have heard a great deal of foul Matter and Dirt, that is fit for nothing but to be caſt upon the ground, and returns to Mr. Lilburne again; for truly when he caſt it upon the pureſt Marble or Braſs, it falls off again: God be thanked that it returns to Mr. Lilburne, the right Owner. The Priſoner hath caſt theſe Accuſations and theſe Blemiſhes upon others, but now they are upon the ground they will fall off, and do retort and return upon his own face: he hath taken a great deal of pains to dig deep for Miſtakes, nay, for notorious and groſs Calumniations; had he the Ingenuity to remember the Words of the Scripture, That the Pit he hath digged for others, he is fallen into himſelf, he would have ſome Remorſe of Conſcience in him: but all the Miſchiefs and all the Evils that can be thought upon, which he imagined to heap upon others, is now moſt juſtly fallen upon himſelf. It is ſaid of thoſe Flies whoſe Matter is Corruption, they always light upon ſore places, upon galled Backs, upon Carrion; other Birds, when they fly upon fair Meadows, will not touch theſe. Certainly the Parliament of England, the Army, all the Officers of it, (whoſe Fame both as Parliament and Army, all Men know in an extraordinary manner) are now put in a ballance againſt Mr. Lilburne: but for the Army and the Officers of it, no Man can ſay but they have been faithful and true to their Truſt, gallant and courageous, and extreme ſucceſsful to the Peace and Happineſs of this Nation; and God is pleaſed at this inſtant to own them, and bleſs them in a miraculous manner.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. And yet notwithſtanding, did not you help to vote them Traytors once? I am ſure I was in a Chamber in Whitehall laſt year, when their Commiſſioners (now Members of your Houſe) put your Name down in their black Bill for a Malignant: but it ſeems you have recanted your Errors, and engaged to be a good acquieſcing Creature, or elſe you had not been here this day in the condition you are in. But for all their Faithfulneſs, &c. have they not rebelled twice againſt their Creators, Lords and Maſters?

Mr. Attorney. Never Army hath done greater things, and yet they have not ſcaped Mr. Lilburne's Tongue and Pen; they have not ſcaped it, my Lords, but he hath laſhed them to the purpoſe. I ſhall be as good as my Word, not to aggravate the Offences, for they are ſo vile, they aggravate themſelves enough; and therefore I leave it thus, the naked Truth, and the Worth of it, as the Books themſelves have offered themſelves. But I ſhall ſay thus much more, the Honour of the Parliament of England, all the Magiſtracy therein, the Honour of the Government, the Honour and Renown of the Army, that hath done ſuch great and wonderful things, is now at ſtake againſt Mr. Lilburne; and there being a Law publiſh'd, that did give warning: and Mr. Lilburne had been try'd for his Life ſooner, upon my knowledge; I ſay, Mr. Lilburne had been ſooner try'd, and ſooner condemn'd and executed, if the Law had been ſooner made and publiſhed. But as he ſaith right well, Where there is no Law, there is no Tranſgreſſion; and therefore there being a Law againſt which he hath offended, he muſt ſmart for it.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I am ſure I was impriſoned moſt unjuſtly, without any the leaſt ſhadow or colour in Law, many Months before your Acts were made, and extremely oppreſſed; and now you go about to hang me as a Traytor, for at moſt but crying out of your Oppreſſion. O unrighteous Men! the Lord in Mercy look upon me, and deliver me and every honeſt Man from you, the vileſt of Men.

Mr. Attorney. And that Law was publiſhed and proclaimed in this City, by means of which, Mr. Lilburne and others had timely notice that they ſhould not do ſuch things as are there forbidden; it alſo told them the Penalties of it, which are

[a]hoſe that are due for the higheſt High Treaſon: [b]nd yet notwithſtanding you ſee with what boldeſs, with what confidence, in deſpight of all Law and Authority, theſe Books have been made and publiſhed by Mr. Lilburne. And whereas he is pleaſed to ſay many times, that many Men have petitioned for him to the Parliament, he will not affirm to you that ever he petitioned himſelf; but in all his Diſcourſe here, he calls them the preſent Men in Power, the Gentlemen at Weſtminſter: nay, my Lord, he hath not ſo much as owned the Power of the Court ſince he came before you, but hath often called you Cyphers, and the like.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. That's no Treaſon, Sir: they intitle themſelves the preſent Power; and would you hang me for not giving them a better Stile, than they themſelves give to themſelves? I think the Stile of preſent Power or preſent Government, is a very fit Stile for them.

Mr. Attorney. My Lord, I have told you long, it is the Jury that are Judges upon the Fact; and to you I muſt appeal for Law, if you do believe the Evidence is plain and full againſt him, for which he ſtands indicted: and ſo God direct all your Judgments, I have done.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, by your favour, I ſhall deſire to addreſs myſelf in one word to you; which is, to deſire that the Jury may read the firſt Chapter of Queen Mary, in the Statute-Book, and the laſt Clauſe of the Chapter of the thirteenth of Elizabeth; where they ſhall clearly ſee, eſpecially in the Statute of Queen Mary, that they abhorred and deteſted the making of Words or Writing to be Treaſon, which is ſuch a Bondage and Snare, that no Man knows how to ſay or do, or behave himſelf, as is excellently declared by the Statute of Hen. 4. v. 2. I have done, Sir.

Ld Keble. Gentlemen, you of the Jury, you are ſworn; you are Men of Conſcience, Gravity, and Underſtanding: To tell you of the Duties of your Place, that have gone through it ſo often, is a vain thing. The Sacredneſs of an Oath, which a Man muſt not tranſgreſs in the leaſt, not to ſave the World; you have gone ſo often through it, and underſtand it, that I need ſay no more. The Charge you have heard, and the Proofs; but for Proof ſingle, or double, or treble, as ſome of them do amount unto a Witneſs in this, yea, that doth double another Man's Witneſs; if I ſwear this thing, and another ſwear the ſame, a third the ſame, that is doubled upon all their Teſtimonies. Mr. Lilburne hath cited two Statutes of Edward the Sixth, to prove there muſt be two Witneſſes; but I muſt tell him, were there but one to each Fact, it were enough in Law: for as for that which was cited of King Edward the Sixth, you have had it fully anſwer'd by a later Law of Queen Mary, which doth overrule that, and alſo enacts that the Common Law of England ſhall be the Rule by which all Treaſons ſhall be try'd; which reacheth to this Caſe too, that there need no more but one Witneſs, and this is Law: and therefore, Gentlemen of the Jury, that muſt not ſtick with you. That which you have heard, to concern you, of the Truth of the Matters, is this, You are not bound affirmatively to have two Witneſſes, but in that one Witneſs with the Circumſtances concurs, that is ſufficient: That which ſhould prevail with you, is to conſider the Strength of the Accuſation, which reſts in the Books, and doth conſiſt of three Heads, which are laid down in the Books themſelves; which doth in the firſt place ſo firmly expreſs, and ſo far vilify the Parliament and State, as it is now eſtabliſhed in England; the ſecond doth look unto the Counſels and Incitations of him for the ſtirring up of Tumults, Commotions, and Wars in this Nation; and the third, are the things cited in his Books to that end and purpoſe, to divide the Army, and then the other will take the better effect. Theſe are the three main Charges, and theſe the Books that come from him do ſo plainly teſtify: that the Books are proved to be his, you are fit Judges of; but it clearly appears by thoſe his Books, that theſe things were in his Intention.

For that he ſays, it is Mens that does make a Man guilty, the Mind, that is intended as it is expreſs'd: Actus non facit reum, niſi Mens ſit rea.

Now that Mind is rea, when there is Faith publiſhed; but I tell you this, theſe Books being admitted true, I ſay that never Man that acted the higheſt of Treaſons, as he hath done, hath had ſo much liberty as he hath had: and as I ſaid before, never Man of his Condition, nor any Condition in England, that was indicted in ſuch a caſe, ever had a Tryal in ſuch a Court, in ſuch an Auditory, ſuch a Preſence as he has had.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. The more's my Sorrow.

Ld Keble. The more's your Sorrow indeed! You have good cauſe to be ſorrowful indeed for this Act of yours thus declared: if your Intentions had taken effect, your Plot was the greateſt that ever England ſaw, for it ſtruck at no leſs than the Subverſion of this Commonwealth, of this State, to have laid and put us all in Blood; your Plot was ſuch, that never ſuch was ſeen in the world before, to proceed from a private Man as you are; therefore it muſt needs be heavy upon your Conſcience. Therefore my Maſters of the Jury, look into your Conſcience, and ſee what that ſaith unto you, which he ſtands ſo much upon: The Witneſſes Teſtimonies are now plain and good in Law, in this Cauſe they are multiply'd; I do not know in one Particular that there is a Teſtimony ſingle, but it is aggravated with many Circumſtances: therefore let not that trouble you, you are the proper Judges of the Matter of Fact, being of the Country; and if you have fully apprehended the dangerous things plotted in thoſe Books of Mr. Lilburne's, you will clearly find that never was the like Treaſon hatch'd in England. And ſo in God's name, as the Priſoner doth lead to your Conſciences, ſo go and do.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I deſire your Favour, that there may be a Courſe taken, that neither my Proſecutors, nor any belonging to them, may have acceſs unto the Jury till they have done.

Juſtice Jermin. You Gentlemen of the Jury, I did expect it, it was expected by the Court, that ſome Matter of Law, or ſome Queſtion of Law, might ariſe upon the Evidence; which if it had, it was the Duty of the Court to have cleared it: but there does not appear, and therefore there is an end, as to the Diſpute of the Law.

Foreman. We are no Lawyers indeed, my Lord.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I have begged it, and you have promiſed it, that I ſhould have liberty to plead in Law to the Illegalities of the Indictment; but you have deny'd me that legal Right: yea, you will not permit my Sollicitor to ſpeak a few words for me. I dare undertake, there was never ſuch a Tryal upon Engliſh Ground as this hath been; where a Man hath been deny'd all the legal Rights of an Engliſhman, as I have been. You Gentlemen of the Jury, who now are my ſole Judges, I pray you take notice of it.

Juſtice

Juſtice Jermin. There was never any ſuch kind of Abuſe offered to a Court as you have given, nor never was ſuch Language uſed to any Court of Juſtice before, that I did hear of, as you have given: and certainly the Behaviour at the Bar doth ſet forth what the Humours and Character of the Man is; for in this caſe, if any ſuch dangerous thing of acting of Commotion or Mutiny in the Army or in the Nation ſhould have follow'd, it had been too late then to have thought of the Remedy. Therefore the Wiſdom of the Parliament hath declared, That whoſoever ſhall by writing, printing, or by openly declaring, publiſh that the preſent Government of England is Uſurped or Tyrannical, it is Treaſon. There is the Fact, upon which all the Evidence does depend; and you are to judge, whether in all thoſe Books there be not by Mr. Lilburne a traitorous Fact committed; and how clearly this does appear unto you, with all Circumſtances thereunto belonging, I leave you to judge: and how ſhort his pretended Replies are to be ſeen, or invalidate the Strength of the Witneſſes, I alſo leave you to judge. I ſay, I might eaſily ſhew you, how ſhort his pretended Anſwers are of real Satisfaction, but I leave it to your Judgments.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, my Anſwers are real Anſwers, not pretended ones, as you are pleaſed to call them.

Juſtice Jermin. But in this Buſineſs the Evidences are ſufficient to make a Man guilty of Treaſon; for here was not ſimply a paſſionate Act, or inconſiderate Speech, but what he hath done, he hath done deliberately and adviſedly, which is ſufficient to make him, or any Man that ſo doth, guilty of Treaſon. All this that was publiſhed was in Auguſt, the Act is in July preceding. Now it is very true, and I will engliſh it: for, Mr. Lilburne, Actus non facit reum, niſi Mens rea: The Act of a Man does not make him guilty, unleſs his Mind be guilty. But I pray, how ſhall any Man know the Guilt of a Man's Mind, but by thoſe polluting and poiſonous Words that come out of his mouth? that's the Mind. What I hear a Man ſay, I may lawfully ſay he thinks; and it is a Rule in Law, that the outward Acts do ſhew forth inward Intentions: that very Rule I will not ſpeak it in Latin, becauſe I ſpeak to one that does ſay he does not underſtand Latin, otherwiſe I could ſpeak more Latin. Now here is the matter, whether or no, upon the whole Evidence that you have heard, there does not appear ſufficient matter to make this Priſoner guilty, not of raſh, but of adviſed and deliberate Treaſon; and as plainly of plotting and contriving to raiſe Mutiny and Sedition in the Army, thereby totally to ſubvert and deſtroy the preſent Government: and truly, I have not heard more of Skill has been uſed, and more Attempts made, than I think you have heard, and do remember. I doubt not, but as you will take care of the Life of a Man, that you muſt not take away the Life of an Innocent; ſo will you be as careful of your own Souls, and the publick Safety: and that's all that I deſire, and I pray God to direct you for the beſt.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. If you will not let me have Counſel, let my Sollicitor ſpeak Matter of Law for me.

Juſtice Jermin. Mr. Attorney, you muſt take ſome care to ſuppreſs this, he will not be anſwered by us, I pray demand Juſtice of the Court againſt him.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne Well, Sir, then I have done.

[The Foreman deſires the Act for Treaſon, and one of the Jury deſired to drink a Cup of Sack, for they had ſat long, and how much longer the Debate of the Buſineſs might laſt, he knew not; and therefore deſired, that they might have amongſt them a Quart of Sack to refreſh them.]

Juſtice Jermin. Gentlemen of the Jury, I know for my part in ordinary Juries that they have been permitted to drink before they went from the Bar; but in caſe of Felony or Treaſon, I never ſo much as heard it ſo, or ſo much as ask'd for: and therefore you cannot have it.

[But one of the Judges moved they might have it.]

Juſtice Jermin. I may not give leave to have my Conſcience to err; I dare not. And thus if the reſt of the Judges be of opinion, you ſhall have a Light if you pleaſe, the Fellow that keeps you ſhall help you to it; but for Sack, you can have none, and therefore withdraw about your Work.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, I underſtand the Officer that is to keep their door hath declared ſomething of Bitterneſs of Spirit againſt me; I deſire therefore he may have ſome indifferent Man joined with him, to ſee I have fair play: which was granted, and he ſworn.

The Jury go forth about Five a-clock, the Court adjourned till Six a-clock, and the Court commands the Lieutenant of the Tower and the Sheriffs to carry the Priſoner into the Iriſh Chamber, which they did. The Priſoner ſtays about three quarters of an hour, and the Jury being come into the Court again, the Priſoner was ſent for, and after the Cryer had cauſed ſilence, the Juries Names were called, viz.

1. Miles Petty,
2. Stephen Iles,
3. Abraham Smith,
4. John King,
5. Nicholas Murren,
6. Thomas Dainty,
7. Edmond Keyſar,
8. Edward Perkins,
9. Ralph Packman,
10. William Commens,
11. Simon Werdon,
12. Henry Tooley.

Clerk. Are you agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Clerk. Who ſhall ſpeak for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Cryer. John Lilburne, hold up thy Hand. What ſay you, (look upon the Priſoner) is he guilty of the Treaſons charged upon him, or any of them, or not guilty?

Foreman. Not guilty of all them.

Clerk. Nor of all the Treaſons, or any of them that are laid to his charge?

Foreman. Not of all, nor of any one of them.

Clerk. Did he fly for the ſame?

Foreman. No.

[Which No being pronounced with a loud Voice, immediately the whole Multitude of People in the Hall, for joy of the Priſoner's Acquittal, gave ſuch a loud and unanimous Shout, as is believed was never heard in Guild-Hall, which laſted for about half an hour without intermiſſion: which made the Judges for fear turn pale, and hang down their heads; but the Priſoner ſtood ſilent at the Bar, rather more ſad in his Countenance than he was before. But Silence being made:]

Clerk. Then hearken to your Verdict, the Court hath heard it: You ſay, that John Lilburne is not guilty of all the Treaſons laid unto his charge, nor of any one of them, and ſo you ſay all, and that he did not fly for it?

Jury. Yes, we do ſo.

Clerk. Gentlemen of the Grand Inqueſt, the Court doth diſcharge you. And you Gentlemen of Life and Death, the Court doth diſcharge you alſo. Lieutenant of the Tower, you are to carry your Priſoner to the Tower again, and Major-General Skippon is to guard you; and all whom you ſhall deſire, are to aſſiſt you.

The Priſoner withdraws, and the Court adjourned till Wedneſday following.

Extraordinary were the Acclamations for the Priſoner's Deliverance, as the like hath not been ſeen in England; which Acclamations, and loud rejoicing Expreſſions, went quite through the ſtreets with him to the very Gates of the Tower, and for joy the People cauſed that night abundance of Bonfires to be made all up and down the ſtreets. And yet for all his Acquittal by the Law, his Adverſaries kept him afterwards ſo long in Priſon, that the People wonder'd, and began to grumble that he was not diſcharged; and divers of his Friends went to the Judges, the Parliament, and Council of State, by whoſe Importunities, by the ſeaſonable Help of the Lord Gray of Grooby, Col. Ludlow, Mr. Robinſon, and Col. Martin, his Diſcharge was procured, a Copy of which thus followeth.

WHEREAS Lieutenant-Colonel John Lilburne hath been committed Priſoner to the Tower, upon ſuſpicion of High Treaſon, in order to his Tryal at Law; which Tryal he hath received, and is thereby * acquitted: Theſe are therefore to will and require you, upon ſight hereof, to diſcharge and ſet at liberty the ſaid Lieutenant-Colonel John Lilburne from his Impriſonment; for which this ſhall be your ſufficient Warrant.

* The Jury juſtified in their Verdict by the Council of State.

Given at the Council of State, at Whitehall, this 8th Day of November 1649.

To the Lieutenant of the Tower of London, or to his Deputy.

Signed in the Name and by the Order of the Council of State, appointed by Authority of Parliament.

The Examination of the Jury who try'd Lieutenant-Colonel John Lilburne, at the Seſſions-Houſe in the Old-Bailey, upon Saturday the 20*th of* Auguſt, 1653. Taken before the Council of State the 23*d of the ſame Month, in purſuance of an Order of Parliament of the* 21*ſt.*

THOMAS GREENE, of Snow-Hill, Tallow-Chandler, Foreman of the Jury, being ask'd what the Grounds and Reaſons were that moved him to find the ſaid Lieutenant-Colonel John Lilburne not guilty upon the Indictment preferred againſt him at the Seſſions-Houſe in the Old-Bailey, ſaith, 'That he did diſcharge 'his Conſcience in what he then did, and that he 'will give no other Anſwer to any Queſtions 'which ſhall be ask'd him upon that matter.'

And being in particular demanded of him, whether he conceived it not ſufficiently proved, that the Act whereupon he was indicted was an Act of Parliament; whether he was not ſatisfied that the Copy of the Act produced, was a true Copy of the Act itſelf, or that the John Lilburne at the Bar was the John Lilburne mentioned in the Act; and what other thing it was, which moved the Jury to find as aforeſaid: the Examinant anſwered, 'That he will give no other Anſwer, as above-'ſaid, and deſired that he might be no further 'preſs'd therein.'

And being further ask'd, why he would not give an account of the Grounds and Reaſons of their Verdict, he ſaid, 'He would not do it, for Rea-'ſons beſt known to himſelf.'

MIchael Rayner, of Friday-Street, Leather-Seller: He ſaith, That he was one of the Jury that tried Lieutenant-Colonel John Lilburne, upon Saturday the 20th inſtant; and that he was ſummoned to ſerve the Jury upon Wedneſday was Sevennight, and did conſtantly attended in Court, and upon the Service, until the Tryal was over; and that he was not ſollicited by John Lilburne, nor any other on his behalf. And the Queſtions mentioned in the foregoing Examination being asked him, he anſwered, 'That he was ſatisfied in the Verdict 'he gave in that Caſe; and that he ſhould give no 'other Anſwer thereto.'

And being further preſs'd therein, he deſired that a Day's Time might be given unto him, to conſider of it, and he ſhould give Satisfaction to the aforeſaid Queſtions.

He was further asked who adviſed him to make this Anſwer to the Council: Whereunto he anſwered, 'That the Jury were all of that Mind; 'and that they agreed to give this Anſwer at a 'Meeting they had all together at the Windmill-Tavern in Coleman-Street this Morning; which Meet-'ting they had upon occaſion of the Order of Par-'liament for examining this Buſineſs: And that he 'had notice to come to this Meeting by one or two 'of his Partners, whoſe Names (he ſaith) he doth 'not well know.'

And being further demanded of him, Whether Mr. Scobell, Clerk of the Parliament, did not give Evidence that Lieut. Col. John Lilburne at the Bar was the very Lilburne againſt whom the Act was made? He ſaid he did give that Evidence; and that he did believe he ſaid true; and that the Copy of the Act of Parliament produced was a true Copy: But ſaith, 'That he and the reſt of the Jury took themſelves 'to be Judges of Matter of Law, as well as Mat-'ter of Fact; although he confeſſed that the Bench 'did ſay that they were only Judges of the Fact.'

He further ſaid, He was very unwilling to be of the Jury.

THomas Tunman, of Cow-Lane, Salter, another of Lieutenant-Colonel John Lilburne's Jury, who ſaith that the Verdict was Not guilty. And being asked the Queſtions in the firſt Examination, he ſaith, 'That he was ſworn to find according 'to the Iſſue and Evidence, and that he did find 'according to his Conſcience; and poſitively refu-'ſed to give any other Anſwer: And did deny 'that the Jury, aforeſaid, had agreed together to 'give one and the ſame Anſwer to the Council, or 'that they had met together this Morning, or at 'any other time ſince Saturday-night laſt, until they 'came to the Council.' And being asked in particular whether the ſaid Jury did not meet together this Morning at the Windmill-Tavern in Coleman-Street, he poſitively anſwered they did not.

Emanuel Hunt, of St. Sepulchres; who ſaith, He was one of John Lilburne's Jury, upon his Tryal on Saturday laſt; and that the Jury found him not guilty: But his Memory being ſhort, doth not well remember the Iſſue.

He being asked whether it was not proved that the Priſoner was the John Lilburne mentioned in the Act, ſaith, 'He was not ſatisfied that it was ſo 'proved; and that there are many John Lilburnes; 'and that John Lilburne was indicted of Felony, 'which he did believe he was not guilty of; and that 'what was found was done by the Conſent of all, 'and did ſatisfy their Conſciences therein; and 'refuſed to give any other Anſwer than as afore-'ſaid.'

And it being demanded of him whether the Jury had not met together, to agree of the Anſwer they were to give to the Council, he anſwered, 'They met together the Night of the Tryal to 'drink a Pint of Wine; and that they met not 'ſince until this Day.' And being asked what time of the Day, he anſwered, 'Five of them met 'here.' But being asked particularly whether they met not at the Windmill-Tavern in Coleman-Street this Morning, he did acknowledge they did, and that Mr. Tunman in particular was there: But refuſed to declare who gave him notice of this Meeting.

James Stephens, of the Old-Baily, Haberdaſher; who ſaith, That he was one of Lieutenant-Colonel John Lilburne's Jury; and that having conſidered of the Matter whereof he was indicted, they found him not guilty. And being asked the Queſtions in the firſt Examination, he acknowledged, 'That he was ſatisfied that the Priſoner 'was the John Lilburne mentioned in the Act; nor 'did he yet queſtion the Validity of the Act: But 'the Jury having weighed all which was ſaid, and 'conceiving themſelves (notwithſtanding what was 'ſaid by the Council and Bench to the contrary) 'to be Judges of Law as well as of Fact, they 'found him not guilty.'

He acknowledged that all the Jury met this Morning at the Windmill-Tavern in Coleman-Street, to conſider what Anſwer to give to the Council; and that the Foreman of the Jury ſpoke to him to be there, telling him he had heard there was an Order of Parliament for ſummoning them before the Council: And further ſaith, That Tunman was at that Meeting.

Richard Tomlins, of St. Sepulchres, Book-Binder, who ſaith he was one of Lieutenant-Colonel John Lilburne's Jury; and that the Jury found him not guilty. And being asked what was the Point in Iſſue, he deſired to be excuſed in that, ſaying, 'What he can tell, is one thing; but to accuſe 'himſelf, is another thing.' It being further demanded of him, whether he was ſatisfied that the Priſoner was the John Lilburne mentioned in the Act, he ſaid he was not. And being asked what made him think ſo, he anſwered, 'He was not 'bound to give any account of what he did in that 'Buſineſs, but to God himſelf.'

William Hitchcock, of Watling-Street, Woollen-Draper; who ſaith he was of Lieutenant-Colonel John Lilburne's Jury, and that the Jury found him not guilty. He being asked the Queſtions expreſs'd in the Foreman's Examination, he anſwered, 'He had diſcharged his Conſcience in what 'he had done; and deſireth the Council not to ask 'him any Queſtions, for he can give no other An-'ſwer, and is reſolved to give no other Anſwer.'

And being asked concerning the Meeting of the Jury, to agree of an Anſwer to be given to the Council, he firſt denied that they had any other Meeting than what they had the ſame Night his Tryal was. But being asked particularly if they met not at the Windmill-Tavern in Coleman-Street this Morning, he acknowledged they did; 'But 'denied he heard of any Order of Parliament for 'ſending for the Jury; nor did they meet upon the 'Buſineſs of John Lilburne, or that they did at 'the Meeting ſpeak of it: but only met to drink 'a Pint of Wine, as they had agreed to do the 'ſame Night they gave up their Verdict.'

Thomas Everſhot, of Watling-Street, Woollen-Draper; who ſaith he was one of John Lilburne's Jury, and that they found him not guilty: But denied to give any Anſwer to any further Queſtions, ſaying, 'He was ſatisfied in his own Conſcience 'in what he did.' And being asked whether the Jury did not meet this Morning, to agree of an Anſwer to be given to the Council, denied that they did, or that they met at all ſince the Night of the Tryal, until they met at the Council.

The Perſons following were examined the 29th of Auguſt, 1653. in the Morning.

Thomas Smith, of Cornhill, Haberdaſher of Small Wares: He ſaith he was of John Lilburne's Jury, and found him not guilty. But refuſed to anſwer to any other Queſtions; ſaying, 'He was called to 'ſerve his Country in this Particular; and that he had 'done it according to the beſt of his Underſtand-'ing: Acknowledgeth the Meeting of the Jury at 'the Windmill-Tavern yeſterday Morning.'

Gilbert Gayne, of Dunſtan's in the Weſt, Grocer: He ſaith he was one of John Lilburne's Jury, and found him not guilty. And he being asked what the Iſſue was, he acknowledgeth that he was indicted for Felony, for coming into England. But ſaith, 'That the Jury did find as they did, becauſe 'they took themſelves to be Judges of the Law, 'as well as of the Fact: And that although the 'Court did declare they were Judges of the Fact 'only, yet the Jury were otherwiſe perſuaded 'from what they heard out of the Law-Books.' He confeſſeth he himſelf did at firſt differ from the Jury, but was convinced by their Reaſons. He confeſſed the Meeting of the Jury.

Griffith Owen, of Biſhopſgate Ward, Brewer: He acknowledgeth he was of Lieutenant-Colonel John Lilburne's Jury, and that they found him not guilty, 'Becauſe he was not ſatisfied that the 'Pri-

'Prisoner was the John Lilburne mentioned in the 'Act; and that he had never seen John Lilburne before that Day, nor was he sollicited in his behalf 'by any Person.' He acknowledgeth the Jury met yesterday Morning at the Windmill-Tavern; but made no Agreement what Answer to make the Council.

The Tryal of Mr. Christopher Love, before the High Court of Justice in Westminster-Hall, the 20*th of* June, 3 Car. II. 1651.

THE Court being set, and called over, the Lieutenant of the Tower was commanded to bring forth his Prisoner: And Master Love was brought to the Bar. After the reading of divers late Acts of Parliament concerning Treason, Master Prideaux, the Attorney-General for the Commonwealth, spake as followeth:

Attor. Gen. My Lord, you have heard several Acts of Parliament read, and the Offences therein mentioned. My Lord, I have here a Charge against Mr. Love, the Prisoner at the Bar; and I humbly desire that it may be read. And you may please to take his Reply to it, whether by Confession, or otherwise.

[The Clerk is commanded to read the Charge.]

The Clerk. A Charge of High Treason, and other High Crimes and Offences, exhibited to the High Court of Justice by Edmond Prideaux, Attorney-General for the Commonwealth of England, for and on the behalf of the Keepers of the Liberties of England, by Authority of Parliament, against Christopher Love, late of London, Clerk; by him preferred and commenced against the said Christopher Love.

That is to say,

THAT he the said Christopher Love, as a false Traytor and Enemy of this Commonwealth and Free State of England, and out of a traitorous and wicked Design to stir up a new and bloody War, and to raise Insurrections, Seditions, and Rebellions within this Nation, did in several Days and Times, that is to say, in the Years of our Lord 1648, 1649, 1650, 1651. at London, and at divers other Places within this Commonwealth of England, and elsewhere, (together with William Drake, late of London, Mercer; Henry Jermin, late of London, Esq; Henry Piercy, late of London, Esq; John Gibbons, late of London, Gentleman; Edward Massey, late of London, Esq; Richard Graves, late of London, Esq; Sylas Titus, late of London, Gentleman; James Bunce, late of London, Alderman; and other their Accomplices, yet unknown) traitorously and maliciously combine, confederate, and complot, contrive and endeavour to stir and raise up Forces against the present Government of this Nation, since the same hath been settled in a Commonwealth and Free State, without a King and House of Lords, and for the Subversion and Alteration of the same.

And the better to carry on and accomplish their said traitorous and wicked Design, he the said Christopher Love, together with the said William Drake, Henry Jermin, Henry Piercy, Richard Graves, Edward Massey, John Gibbons, Sylas Titus, James Bunce, and others, (since the Death of Charles Stuart, late King of England, who, for his notorious Treasons, and other Tyrannies and Murders, by him committed in the late unnatural and cruel Wars, was, by Authority derived from Parliament, justly condemned to Death and executed) several Days and Times, in the respective Years aforesaid, at London aforesaid, and at sundry other Places of this Commonwealth, and since this Nation was settled in the way of a Commonwealth or Free State, as aforesaid, did traitorously and maliciously declare, publish, and promote Charles Stuart, the eldest Son of the late King of England, to be King of England, (meaning this Commonwealth) without the Consent of the People in Parliament first had and signified by Authority and Ordinances to that purpose.

And further, to carry on and accomplish their said traitorous and wicked Design, he the said Christopher Love, on several Days and Times in the respective Years aforesaid, at London aforesaid, and in divers other Places within this Commonwealth of England, and elsewhere, together with the said William Drake, Henry Jermin, Henry Piercy, Richard Graves, Edward Massey, John Gibbons, Sylas Titus, James Bunce, and other their Accomplices, as aforesaid, did traitorously and maliciously invite, aid, and assist the Scots, being Foreigners and Strangers, to invade this Commonwealth of England, and adhered to the Forces of the Enemy, raised against the Parliament and Commonwealth aforesaid, and Keepers of the Liberties of England aforesaid.

And further, to carry on and accomplish the said traitorous and wicked Design, he the said Christopher Love, divers Days and Times between the 29th Day of March, 1650. and the 1st Day of June, 1651. at London, and other Places, as aforesaid, did traitorously and maliciously give, hold, use, and maintain Correspondence and Intelligence by Letters, Messages, Instructions, and other Ways, prejudicial to this Commonwealth, with the said Charles Stuart, Son of the late King, and with the late Queen, his Mother, and with the said Henry Jermin, Henry Piercy, and divers other Persons, being of Counsel, and abiding with Charles Stuart.

And further, to carry on and accomplish the said traitorous and wicked Design, he the said Christopher Love, several Days and Times in the respective Years aforesaid, at London aforesaid, and divers Places within the Commonwealth of England, and elsewhere, as aforesaid, did traitorously and maliciously use, hold, and maintain Correspondence and Intelligence with divers Persons of the Scotish Nation; that is to say, with the Earls of Argyle, Lowdon, Lothian, and Belcarras, and with one Bayley Gent. and divers other Persons of the Scotish and other Nations, whom he the said Christopher Love well knew to adhere to the said Scotish

Scotiſh Nation in this War againſt the Parliament and Commonwealth of England.

And further, he the ſaid Chriſtopher Love, within the Times, and at the Places before mentioned, did traitorouſly and maliciouſly abet, aſſiſt, countenance, and encourage both the Scotiſh Nation, and divers other Perſons, adhering to them in this War againſt the Parliament; and did ſend and convey, or cauſe to be ſent and conveyed, Moneys, Arms, Ammunition, and other Supplies, to Scotland, and other Places, and to the ſaid Titus, Maſſey, and others in Confederacy againſt this Nation, without ſpecial Leave and Licence from the Parliament of England, or Council of State, or the Captain-General of the Parliament's Forces.

And further, to carry on and accompliſh the ſaid traitorous and wicked Practice and Deſign, he the ſaid Chriſtopher Love, within the Times, and at the Places before-mentioned, did traitorouſly and voluntarily relieve the ſaid Sylas Titus, Edward Maſſey, Colonel Bamfield, and one Maſon, late of London, Gent. and one Sterks, late of London, Gent. who then were, and yet are under the Power of the Scotiſh Nation, and in Arms againſt the Parliament and Commonwealth of England, with Moneys, Arms, and Ammunition. All which Treaſons, and traitorous and wicked Practices and Deſigns of him the ſaid Chriſtopher Love, were and are to the apparent Hazard of the publick Peace of this Commonwealth and Free State, Parliament and People of England, and to the manifeſt Breach, Contempt, and Violation of the Laws of the Land, and contrary to the Form of divers Statutes and Acts of Parliament in ſuch caſe made and provided.

And Maſter Attorney-General (by Proteſtation, ſaving to himſelf in the behalf of the Keepers of the Liberties of England, to exhibit any other Charge againſt the ſaid Chriſtopher Love, and to reply to the Anſwer he ſhall make to the Premiſes) doth for the ſaid Treaſons, on the behalf of the Keepers of the Liberties of England, impeach the ſaid Chriſtopher Love as a Traytor and publick Enemy to this Commonwealth and Free State of England: And doth pray that he may be put to anſwer all and ſingular the Premiſes; that ſuch Proceedings, Tryal, Examination, Judgment, and Execution, may be thereupon had againſt him, as ſhall be agreeable to Juſtice.

The Clerk. Chriſtopher Love, you ſtand charged on the behalf of the Keepers of the Liberties of England, by Authority of Parliament, of High Treaſon, and other High Crimes and Offences againſt the Parliament and People of England: This High Court therefore requires you to give a poſitive and direct Anſwer, whether you are guilty or not guilty of the Crimes and Treaſons laid to your Charge.

Mr. Love. My Lord, before I plead, I humbly crave leave to expreſs my ſelf in a few Words to this Court; and afterwards to make humble Propoſals of what I deſire in order to this Tryal. In the firſt place, being I am this Day called to a great and weighty Work, in the entrance to it I do earneſtly beg the Prayers of all them that have an Intereſt in God, that he would carry me through this whole Tryal with ſuch Gravity, Godlineſs, and Meekneſs of Wiſdom, as becomes a Profeſſor and Preacher of the Goſpel; and that he would keep me in this Hour of Temptation rather from Sin than from Suffering. Sir, I am this Day made a Spectacle to God, Angels, and Men; ſingled out from among my Brethren to be the Object of ſome Mens Indignation and Inſultation. By my appearing in this Place, I am made a Grief to many that are godly, and a Laughing-ſtock to the Wicked.---

[Here he was interrupted by the Court.]

Lord Preſident of the Court. Mr. Love, how long time do you intend to take up?

Mr. Love. I will be brief, Sir.

Ld Preſident. We have been calling upon God to direct us and you, and all good People, that Juſtice may be done; and you would glorify God rather than Man, if you would confeſs, knowing what was done in that great Sin of Achan; there was great pains taken, and the whole Nation was fain to be examined, and their Houſes divided, and at laſt when it came to Achan, you know what Joſhua ſaid to him, Confeſs and tell the Truth, and glorify God. This is that, that if you reſpect God before Man, you may now clear your ſelf, and ſet forth his Glory upon Earth; and your next work is to plead Guilty or Not Guilty. For we ſee that thoſe ways you go, would take up time, and we have taken all into our thoughts before-hand.

Mr. Love. I do not deſire to protract time, but I would not lie under a Prejudice.

Ld Preſident. When you go out of your way, we muſt help you; and know, if any be under a Prejudice here, their prejudging is rather in Mercy than in prejudice to you.

Mr. Love. I hope you will not be more ſevere to a Miniſter, than you were to Lieut. Col. John Lilburne. When you were at the Court at Guildhall, at the Tryal of Lilburne, you gave him the liberty of two Hours to plead, before he pleaded Guilty or Not Guilty.

Ld Preſident. To a Miniſter! you ſay well: but I tell you, we do more to a Chriſtian than to a Miniſter; and we are all Chriſtians, and your Miniſtry is but an Office; and therefore what Mr. Lilburne had, it was the Favour of the Court then: but time is ſpent, and pray do not you follow that now.

Mr. Love. Whereas your Lordſhip is pleaſed to urge the Caſe of Achan to me, if my Caſe were the ſame as Achan's was, I ſhould do as Achan did, confeſs and give Glory to God; but Achan's was a peculiar and extraordinary Caſe, and therefore I pray it may not be laid to me. God was the Informer and Diſcoverer, and God did by Lot diſcover Achan to be the Man.

Ld Preſident. Will you plead?

Mr. Love. I deſire Liberty to ſpeak a Word. I had not diverted my Diſcourſe, but upon your Lordſhip's Words.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, I hope he will be ſo ingenuous, as not to be long.

Ld Preſident. Take this in your way, Mr. Love, God is as preſent here, as he was in the Caſe of Achan. Go on.

Mr. Love. Sir, by my appearing in this Place, I am made a Grief to many that are godly, and a Laughing-ſtock to the Wicked, and a Gazing-ſtock to all; yet, bleſſed be God, not a Terror to my ſelf. Sir, I am, as Jeremiah was, born a Man of Strife and Contention: Not actively, I ſtrive and contend with none; but paſſively, many ſtrive and contend with me. Yet I truſt God will make me, as he did Jeremiah, an Iron Pillar and Brazen Wall againſt thoſe that do oppoſe me, that I ſhall not be diſmayed at their Faces, leſt I be confounded before them. Strong Suggeſtions againſt me are generally received; and great Oppoſition ſtrongly maintained: And in this Condition no Man dares ſtand by me: But God ſtands by me, and ſtrengthens me.---

[Here he was interrupted again.]

Ld Preſident. Sir, come to the Buſineſs in hand.

Mr. Love. I beſeech you, Sir, ſpare me: You gave Mr. Lilburne more Time.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, when he ſhall come with ſuch Speeches that are nothing to the Buſineſs in hand! My Lord, he inſtances in Lilburne's Caſe: You know that Debate; it was in relation to a Narration.

Mr. Love. Sir, it was the Narration of his Doings and Sufferings, that he might not be miſrepreſented to the Court.

Attorn. Gen. You know you are a Miniſter: And if it be your Purpoſe to ſpin out Time, to think to ingratiate your ſelf to the People, it will not do. My Lord, this is a Court of Juſtice, that proceeds according to the eſtabliſhed Laws, and Laws that have been read to him. Mr. Love is a Miniſter; and had he applied himſelf to God, as he might have done, he need not have been brought hither, if he had not gone that way he did. But, my Lord, I deſire he may go on to the Charge, and give his Anſwer to it. My Lord, before we have done, we ſhall have many occaſions of Diſcourſe between him and I.

Mr. Love. I beſeech your Lordſhip allow me that Favour that you allow to every one you try, that I may not ſtand under Miſrepreſentations to you, who are my Judges.

Ld Preſident. Are not we of as much Credit as you? And are not we judged Miniſters as well as you, and more than you? And I tell you, that which you require we have already done, and wiſh you as much Happineſs as to our Brother: And for you to ſpend Time about that which is nothing to the Buſineſs, it muſt not be ſuffered.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, let the conſtant known Laws of the Commonwealth of England be obſerved, as well as other Laws; of which that is one, That he ought not to ſpeak any thing till he hath pleaded guilty, or not guilty. My Lord, I deſire to take my Courſe. I do not make Speeches againſt him, to miſrepreſent him to you, otherwiſe than he ſtands charged. And, my Lord, I would not have him to clear himſelf till he come to the Tryal, whether he be not accuſed juſtly. It is not my Nature, but the Duty of my Place; and the Duty of his Place, as a Priſoner, is to plead, and to put himſelf upon Tryal. That being done, there will be occaſion enough for him to plead his own Innocency. My Lord, to take up two Hours time in talking of that which is not material, ſhould not be.

Mr. Love. I inſiſt upon that Liberty that Mr. Lilburne had.

Ld Preſident. He did plead firſt.

Mr. Love. No, my Lord, he did not plead firſt: and I have much to move before I plead.

Ld Preſident. You can ſay nothing till you plead.

Mr. Love. My Lord, I deſire not much Time.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, let the Time now inſiſted on be what Time it will, Mr. Love will have Time to ſpeak for himſelf; and it is ſo far from being to the Point, that it is trifling: And this rather makes him ſeem guilty, than it gives him any Acquittance.

Mr. Love. Prove me guilty firſt, Sir. Sir, do not prejudge me.

[Then command was given to read his Arraignment.]

The Clerk. Chriſtopher Love, you ſtand charged, on the behalf of the Keepers of the Liberties of England, by Authority of Parliament, of High Treaſon, and other High Crimes and Offences, againſt the Parliament and People of England: This High Court therefore requires you to give a poſitive and direct Anſwer, whether you are guilty, or not guilty, of the Crimes and Treaſons laid to your Charge.

Mr. Love. I refuſe not to plead; but I beſeech you give me leave to ſpeak before I anſwer.

[Mr. Love having a Paper in his Hand, the Judge ſaid:]

Ld Preſident. How many Leaves is it?

Mr. Love. But two or three: And if this Court be more ſtrict and ſevere to me, than that was to Mr. Lilburne, I cannot help it. What I ſhall ſay, ſhall be ſomething in general; and I beſeech you give me leave to ſpeak to it.

Attorn. Gen. Sir, not before you plead.

Mr. Love. Yet I have this Liberty, That when Matter of Law ariſeth in the Indictment, to make a Motion, and to move for Counſel, and to ſhew the Illegality of it: And though I confeſs I am extremely ignorant of the Law, yet I underſtand that after I have pleaded, I am not capable of Counſel.

Ld Preſident. You are miſtaken, Maſter Love.

Mr. Love. I ſuppoſe I am not miſtaken: For in the third Part of Judge Coke's Inſtitutes I find it thus; 'The Priſoner, when he pleads not guilty, 'whereby he denies the Fact, after the Plea of not 'guilty, can have no Counſel: But if he have any 'Matter of Law to plead before, he may urge it.'

Ld Preſident. He pleads he is ignorant of the Law, and yet can make uſe of it.

Mr. Love. I am to plead for my Life: And I am to uſe Scripture, Law, and any other lawful Means to ſave my Life. Paul did plead the Roman Law.

Ld Preſident. Some of us know as much of Paul and Scripture as you do.

Mr. Love. Sir, I make no Compariſons. [Then Mr. Love reads out of Judge Coke's Inſtitutes: 'The 'ſafeſt way, for the Party indicted, is to plead up- 'on his Arraignment the ſpecial Matter for the 'Overthrow of the Indictment:'] And this muſt be done before I plead. ['And to require Counſel 'for the pleading thereof, which ought to be 'granted; and to require a Copy of ſo much of 'the Indictment which is neceſſary for framing his 'Plea, which ought to be granted. And theſe 'Laws ought to be conſtrued favourably; for that 'the Indictment is commonly found in the Abſence 'of the Party.']

Ld Preſident. But your Indictment is in your Preſence. You are out of your Way.

Mr. Love. Sir, you bring me out of my Way.

Ld Preſident. Your Indictment is not yet found: There is nothing done behind your back, only the reading of this; but that is nothing but a written Parchment till you plead unto it.

Mr. Love. I have ſomething to except againſt the Legality of this Indictment.

Ld Preſident. Go on then.

Mr. Love. Sir, the firſt Motion I ſhall make is for Counſel, to adviſe in Matters of Law relating to this Tryal: And as I do gather from hearing the Indictment, there are ſeveral Matters of Law that do ariſe, in which I deſire to have Counſel aſſign'd me. And the firſt is, Whether the Act, by which this Court is conſtituted, of the 26th of March, 1650. that forbids receiving or ſending Letters or Meſſages to or from England or Ireland, do enable you to receive a Charge againſt me concerning Letters to or from Scotland, Scotland not being mentioned in that Act by which you are conſtituted. There-

Therefore ſeeing this is Matter of Law, I deſire I might have Counſel to adviſe with about it.

Attorn. Gen. Mr. Love then doth admit that he hath received and ſent Letters to Scotland.

Mr. Love. I admit nothing, Sir; you charge me with it, but I do not grant it.

Attorn. Gen. Then you will give us leave to prove it. If he will admit that he hath ſent and received Letters from Scotland, and ſo demur that it is not in your power, I will join with him. But, my Lord, there was a particular Act read, that doth relate particularly to Scotland; and that this Court hath Cognizance of that Act, was read beforehand, but Mr. Love did not obſerve what was read to him: and it is ſo far in favour of Juſtice to him, that you read him the Laws and Clauſes upon which he ſtands impeached; and that there is a Law againſt ſending to Scotland. But, my Lord, theſe Debates are lingring of time; if a Man will demand Counſel, he admits the Fact, that the Fact is true; but being true, he ought not to be condemned upon it: if ſo, I will join with him; but if he plead Not Guilty, I ſhall be ready to prove it.

Mr. Love. I beſeech you, Sir, I do apprehend there is another Matter of Law ariſeth, and that is from the Act of the 26th of March, 1650. there is a Prohibition of ſending Letters or Meſſages to any in Arms againſt the Parliament; now I am charged with ſending and writing in Letters to Scotland; now it doth not appear to me that Scotland was in Arms againſt the Parliament of England, but for their own Preſervation. Therefore I deſire Counſel in this, Whether I that am accuſed of writing and ſending into Scotland, am therefore accuſed of writing and ſending to thoſe who are in Arms againſt the Parliament of England; or whether they were in Arms for the Preſervation of Scotland, or in oppoſition to the Parliament of England.

Attorn. Gen. If you will admit ſtill, that you have ſent or received from Scotland, then I readily grant it.

Mr. Love. I will admit of nothing: I have ſo much of a Chriſtian in me, that I will deny nothing that is proved to be true; and ſo much of an Engliſhman, that I will admit of nothing that is ſeemingly criminal.

Ld Preſident. You are a Chriſtian, and you are here in the Preſence of God as Achan was.

Mr. Love. If it be proved againſt me.

Ld Preſident. Then your Denial of it will be a high Tranſgreſſion againſt God.

Mr. Love. I could urge the Caſe of Jeſus Chriſt, who, when he was accuſed before a Judicatory, anſwered not a word.

Ld Preſident. You are out.

Mr. Love. When Chriſt was accuſed in a civil Buſineſs, to be a Mover of Sedition (as now I am) they asked him, whether he was King of the Jews? and he anſwered them not a word. But this is that I doubt, whether there be not Matters of Law ariſing from the Charge read againſt me, and that in reſpect of the time of the Act of the 26th of March, 1650. which gives power to you to determine ſeveral Crimes, and to proceed to the Tryal of the Offender. And, Sir, it is alſo to me doubtful, whether this be not Matter of Law; viz. whether this Tryal ought not to be by a Jury of Twelve of the Neighbourhood, or whether in any different way from it. And I doubt it upon this Ground, your Lordſhip having given me this Hint; for I was preſent at the Tryal of Mr. Lilburne, and the Formality of the Law tied him to plead to this, That he muſt be tryed by God and his Country. He refuſed it, and your Lordſhip urged it upon him, that he might ſafely plead it by God, becauſe God was in all Judicatories; and by his Country, becauſe, ſaid you, by Country is meant the Jury of a Man's Equals: And this is a Tryal according to the Law of the Land. Now if you have declared that in Guild-Hall, I beſeech your Lordſhip inform me, whether a different way from this of a Jury of the Neighbourhood be according to Law in Weſtminſter-Hall?

Ld Preſident. You ſhall be informed: That was a Tryal by the Law, as it then ſtood; theſe now are all upon Acts of Parliament, and Laws of the Land, that are of as high a nature as they: thoſe are antient Laws, and theſe are Statutes lately made, and of an extraordinary nature, and were made to meet with ſuch Perſons as you, that have done ſuch things as you have done. And now for your Neighbourhood, I hope you have twenty or forty Neighbours that are within the Equity of that Law.

Mr. Love. If they be a Jury, I have Power to except againſt 35 of them.

Attorney-General. My Lord, he pretends Mr. Lilburne's Tryal; but when you come to hear the Evidence, you ſhall hear what he was doing then: he was preparing himſelf then in his Buſineſs; he thought his Time might come; and I am informed, that ſince he hath been in the Tower, Lilburne hath been his Counſel.

Mr. Love. Mr. Prideaux, Sir, you are no God to know my Thoughts.

Attorn. Gen. I did ſay this from his own Expreſſion; he was a diligent Obſerver there, that he might know what was done there, that ſo he might prepare himſelf.

Mr. Love. Sir, you did declare this after the Change and Abolition of a King and Houſe of Lords, That a Tryal by a Jury of Twelve of the Neighbourhood was according to Law; and you urged Maſter Lilburne with this, That he might plead, and do no harm unto himſelf. And not only ſo, but the Houſe alſo declared, That ſince the Change of Government, they would never alter that way of Tryal: and upon the ninth of February, 1648. they did declare, That though they thought fit to aboliſh the Kingly Office and the Houſe of Lords, yet they reſolved they would ſtill retain and preſerve the Fundamental Laws of the Nation, for and concerning the Preſervation of the Liberties, Lives and Eſtates of the People. Now, Sir, they declaring they would never alter this way of Tryal, and you declaring this way of Tryal by Juries to be according to the Fundamental Laws of the Land, I beſeech you give me the Reaſon why it is denied to me.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, it is very unuſual for a Priſoner to debate with the Court; here he is to be controlled: let him know he is a Priſoner upon the Tryal of his Life, before that Court that hath been impowered by the Parliament; they who did never bind their own Hands: I muſt ſay, my Lord, they cannot bind their own Hands; and it is this Tryal that they have thought fit to give him. And for his excepting againſt 35, then you will hardly be a Court left. My Lord, I think, if he look upon the Court, he will find no Enemies here, knowing them to be of his Neighbourhood, and moſt of them of London, and, I think, he known to them, and they to him, the moſt of them. But, my Lord, theſe Diſputes are not allowed to others; and the Gentleman will (I hope) have ſo much Modeſty at laſt, that he will think he hath ſaid a little too much to the Court; and I think it is not good to provoke too far. And, my Lord, he hath ſaid much, and you have given him fair Anſwers, and thoſe that are clear and undeniable. But if he ſpeak of the Juriſdiction of the Court, and that he will not plead, let him ſpeak in plain Engliſh, and he ſhall hear me in plain Engliſh.

Mr. Love. Although I am not ſatisfied as to the Foundation and Original of this Court, yet I refuſe not a Tryal, hoping that Tenderneſs of Conſcience will appear in you, and Clearneſs in me, and Weakneſs of Proof againſt me. Upon this I do not refuſe a Tryal, but I will plead, if I may have that which the Law allows me. And according to my weak Meaſure and Unskilfulneſs in the Law, upon the Charge read againſt me, I do apprehend there may be ſome things objected againſt the Legality of the Indictment, and many things to take it off, both for Matter of Time and Form, and other things, by a Lawyer. Therefore I entreat I may have Counſel to be with me, both in my Chamber, and here in the Court; and then I will plead.

Attorn. Gen. I am not here to make a Bargain; but this I will ſay to him, He hath had ſo much Tenderneſs and Reſpect, as few Men more. He hath had notice of his Tryal above a Fortnight; and, my Lord, he hath not been denied Counſel.

Mr. Love. I could do nothing in order to my Tryal, becauſe I have ſent for Counſel, and they would not come near me, becauſe they were not aſſigned by this Court; and my Studies being another way, and being unskilful in the Law, therefore I could do nothing in Preparation to my Tryal. Therefore I pray do not deſtroy me in a hurry: The more fair the Tryal is, the more juſt you will be, and I the more guilty, if it be proved againſt me.

Attorn. Gen. I appeal to Maſter Love, whether or no it was not denied to Lilburne; and there is none that hears him, but ſees he hath prepared himſelf, and peruſed ſeveral Acts whereupon he is impeached. But theſe are Diſcourſes, my Lord, which if he will put too nigh upon the Court, that we ſhould diſpute, we cannot force words from him.

Mr. Love. Mr. Prideaux is pleaſed to urge Mr. Lilburne, but I have more Matter of Law ariſing from the Charge than he had; and have not that Tryal by way of a Jury as he had; and there are many things in the Charge ſaid to be done before the Act of the 29th of March, 1650. which gives you Cognizance only of things done from that time; ſo that many things there are, in which Counſel would adviſe me: therefore I beſeech you deny me not that Right and juſt Favour.

Ld Preſident. You do not breathe the ſame Air and the ſame Breath, for it comes from you both Yea and Nay: for you ſay you are ignorant, and yet will not be informed by any thing that can be ſaid; and ſo your Ignorance is wilful. But in this Caſe, I am ſure, what Law ſoever you can plead, yet there be ſome Acts and Matters you have denied.

Mr. Love. I have urged Matter of Law ariſing out of the Charge, from the 29th of March, 1650. there was no Act then, that I know of, that did prohibit the ſending of Letters or Meſſages to or from Scotland; and I am indicted for Letters or Meſſages ſent to, and received from Scotland, before that time.

Attorn. Gen. I would fain give you ſatisfaction: do not caſt away your ſelf. My Lord, we do uſe in Law to lay it ſo for the Fact, we cannot tell what the Proof will be; whether the Proof will be within theſe three Months or ten Months; and it is laid in relation to other Offences.

Mr. Love. I have here the Letters of ſeveral Counſellors, and they return to me their Denial; if I could have got their Counſel, I would: and yet if I had had it, I could not tell what they ſhould have adviſed me in, not having a Copy of my Charge.

Ld Preſident. If you had deſired a Copy of your Charge, you might have had it. You muſt know you are before thoſe that have Law and Conſcience, and that are bound to be of Counſel for you, and that is the Court; and it is their Duty to ſee that whatſoever the Law of England allows you to have, that that you ſhould have: but you muſt have it in a due and proper Time and Manner of Law appointed. You are not now for the preſent where Lilburne was, nor before ſuch a Court; he was before a Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer, who are to proceed according to thoſe Laws, and upon that the Commiſſion directs; and that is by that which the known and fundamental Laws of England direct unto: but this is not in all Particulars the like; the Jury there hath a large Latitude, who proceed by way of Grand Jury and Petty-Jury, which are both included in this Court: ſo that in all things the Proceedings upon that, are not as upon this. But thus far the Proceedings are alike; you have your Charge, and you are to plead to it, for that is the firſt thing to be done; there is nothing can anſwer your Charge, but whether you be Guilty or Not Guilty: if you plead Not Guilty, then the Evidence will be called; and if then any Matter of Law ariſeth upon the Evidence, it is the uſual Courſe to aſſign you Counſel, and to be Counſel for you, and to tell you it is Law to have Counſel: but for you to demand Counſel, and firſt to have Counſel aſſigned you, it is againſt that Form and Legality that the Law of England appoints; for till you put your ſelf upon Tryal, we cannot allow you Counſel to the Tryal; ſo that you muſt plead, and it is our Duty to tell you ſo. And it is the Duty of this Court to be as careful when you have put your ſelf upon Tryal, that all the Benefit of the Law may be afforded you; therefore you need not fear it, for if any of theſe things ariſe, you now fear upon the Evidence, then will be your time and our time to ſtand upon this you now do, touching Matter of Law: but in the mean time, in truth that which we are to tell you, and which we are bound in Juſtice and Conſcience to let you know, is this, That you are out of your way; and therefore do not deſtroy your ſelf: for if you refuſe to plead, there is nothing then but a plain downright Judgment.

Mr. Love. In ordinary Courts of Judicature the Judges do counſel for the Priſoner; but you are here Judges not only in Matter of Law, but of Matter of Fact alſo; and therefore I cannot adviſe with you: For ſhould I confeſs any thing, then it ariſeth out of my own Mouth, and you will condemn me upon it. Seeing therefore both lie in you, both Matter of Law, and Matter of Fact, I beſeech you afford me Counſel, and let me have a Copy of my Charge, and Sollicitors, that they may be here with me in Court, and then I ſhall willingly plead.

Attorn. Gen. This cannot be done, nor ever was done, to have Counſel aſſigned, until upon Matter of of Fact ſomething did appear; and for the Copy of the Charge, it was never demanded, I think, before; and it is in vain for us to ſpeak, if the Gentleman do refuſe to plead: I ſhall then preſs you for Juſtice.

Mr. Love. I do not refuſe to plead; but yet I ſhould be guilty of my own Blood, ſhould I not plead for that juſt and neceſſary Means for the Preſervation of my Life: through my Ignorance I may run my ſelf into Hazard and Danger, therefore I beſeech you deny me not that juſt Favour.

A Lawyer, a Member of the Court. Mr. Love, you are not prodigal, you ſay, of your Blood; nor are we, I hope, prodigal of your Blood; we are to anſwer for all; therefore I pray let me beg thus much of you. If you plead Not Guilty to the Charge, then there is a Proceeding to be by Maſter Attorney, to prove you guilty of it; and if by any Evidence that he ſhall produce, or in any thing that ſhall fall out from your ſelf, in anſwer to the Evidence, there ſhall ariſe Matter of Law, truſt us, I pray you, we do promiſe you that we will give you the Benefit of the Law in it; and when there comes Matter of Law to be decided, which we are perſuaded is Matter of Law, then you ſhall have Counſel aſſigned you; but there is no Counſel to be allowed till the Priſoner deſire it, and ſhew Matter of Law, for which he deſires it.

Another Lawyer of the Court. The main thing you ſtand upon, Mr. Love, is this, That there is no mention made in any Act, that this Court can take cognizance of ſending to, or receiving from Scotland; but therein you are miſtaken: for the buſineſs of holding Correſpondency with Scotland, is in expreſs words appointed to be under the Juriſdiction of this Court; therefore I think you are utterly miſtaken in that. Then, Sir, for Counſel, if there comes any thing in the world that is legal, and is a fit thing Counſel ſhould be heard in, I think I may promiſe it, we will not make our ſelves ſo far guilty of your Blood, as to deny you that Juſtice that belongs to any Man; for it is your juſt Right to have it, and we cannot deny it, when a Point of Law ariſeth. And you do not urge Matter of Law, only you queſtion the Juriſdiction of the Court, and we muſt over-rule you in that; for we are not to diſpute the Power of the Court: For if the Parliament give us Juriſdiction, and by a ſpecial Act appoints, That the buſineſs of holding Correſpondency with Scotland, ſhould be within the Cognizance of this Court, we muſt obey, and not diſpute.

Mr. Love. I ſuppoſe, Sir, a Man may demur concerning the Juriſdiction of a Court to one Point; as if he be accuſed for Treaſon at the Common Pleas, he may demur to the Juriſdiction of that Court in that: ſo, Sir, I apprehend there are ſome things read againſt me in the Charge, of which this Court cannot take Cognizance, for that they are ſaid to be done before the Act for the conſtituting of this Court came forth; ſo that I may demur to the Juriſdiction of the Court in that Particular.

Ld Preſident. For you to anticipate your Evidence before we come to it! we do not tie you to the Charge, but to the Proof; and we muſt apply our ſelves to the Proof, and not to the Charge.

Attorn. Gen. And for the Buſineſs of Scotland, which troubles him much, it is expreſs'd in this very Act, That the ſame Offences are to be inquired, tried and judged by the High Court of Juſtice, in ſuch Manner and Form, as other Offences are to be tried, in expreſs Terms.

Mr. Love. But there is no time mentioned; for there are two Acts, wherein if the Priſoner be not indicted within a Year, then the Fact ſhall not be proſecuted. Therefore I muſt demur to the Charge, as not legal in Matter of Form. There are two Acts declaring what Offences ſhall be Treaſon, wherein it is ſaid in thoſe two Acts, That if the Party be not indicted within a Year, he ſhall not be indicted at all. Now the Indictment that is againſt me, looks back to things that are pretended to have been done by me in 1648, and 1649. and ſo according to thoſe two Acts I am not to be queſtioned for them, it being above a Year before I was indicted.

Ld Preſident. How is it poſſible that this comes to be an Exception until you hear the Evidence? If you hear the Evidence, and do find that the Witneſs do ſpeak to this not within the time of the Limitation, then is your Exception proper; but no Counſel can divine what time they can give Evidence for.

Mr. Love. Sir, I am now to look to the Charge of Treaſon read againſt me, and not to the Evidence; and in the Charge I am indicted for thoſe things, for which I apprehend I ought not to be indicted. For according to thoſe two Acts, I ought not to have been indicted for things pretended to have been done by me ſo long ago: and this I apprehend to be Matter of Law. And for the Witneſſes, let them ſpeak to what time they will, yet this I am ſure, they cannot prove that I was indicted within a Year for thoſe things that are charged upon me to be done in 1648, and 1649. for that were to prove an Impoſſibility: So that it appears to me, I am indicted for thoſe things for which I ought not to be indicted.

Ld Preſident. It may be ſo; and if ſo, thoſe things will fall off of themſelves; there may be ſome things true, and ſome things not true; and the Counſel may fail in Proof of ſome of them, and you may clear your ſelf: yet this cannot be before the pleading. When you come to plead, if the matter be not proved againſt you, and within the time limited, it will fall off of it ſelf without any Words at all; and all this time is loſt to all this Auditory, and no Counſel can give you Advice in this.

Mr. Love. I ſtill ſay, I do not refuſe to plead, but if you would afford me Counſel, I ſhould think my Life in a great deal leſs danger. For I do not know, whether I may not, by the Advice of Counſel, confeſs ſome part of the Indictment; whether I may not demur in Law upon ſome part, or a great part of the Indictment, which I have done already: as that I am charged for Treaſon for thoſe things that are not within your Cognizance or Power, as I apprehend, and things done before your Acts; and for ſuch things, that if I had done them, I muſt have been indicted for them within a Year, or elſe not at all: and theſe I deem legal Exceptions.

A Member of the Court. My Lord, he is very ignorant of the Law; for the Fact muſt be put in queſtion before Matter of Law can ariſe: for if the Fact be one way, then the Law falls out that way; if the Fact be falſe, then another way. Now if Mr. Love brings in any of theſe Exceptions for Matter of Fact upon Proof, whether he ſent Letters into Scotland, or in ſuch a time, whether that be any Offence, that will all ariſe after the Matter of Fact proves true or falſe: But before that, under favour, none can ſpeak to any thing againſt an Indictment, unleſs he ſpeak againſt the Juriſdiction of the Court. And then for other Matters, they are ſaved unto him. And you will, I ſuppoſe, admit of Counſel in Matter ter of Law; but his Deſire cannot be granted unto him until he plead, and until the Matter of Fact be ſome way determined.

Mr. Love. I beſeech you acquaint me then with the Meaning of theſe words in Judge Coke's Inſtitutes, The Priſoner at the Bar may have Counſel to overthrow the Indictment. It muſt be either to overthrow a part of the Indictment, or to help the Plea, either to plead Not Guilty in part, or to demur in part. Let me hear then, I beſeech you, what is the Meaning of thoſe words, That the Priſoner at the Bar may have Counſel to overthrow the Indictment. I cannot overthrow the Indictment when I plead; for then Witneſs comes in againſt me.

Attorn. Gen. He may overthrow the Indictment by the Witneſs; and I believe he is convinced, that the Court hath Juriſdiction in as full and expreſs terms as Law and Authority can give them. And for the next, I may ſay, your Lordſhip and the Court did never allow a Counſel to pick holes and find faults. But if he object that to you that is juſt and probable, and that which is dubious and doubtful, and fit to be debated in Law, aſſign him Counſel. You have heard all his particular Exceptions, and given your Judgment upon them all. But I hope, he doth not here expect to have Lectures of Law read him, and to make him underſtand them. But as to thoſe particular Exceptions that he hath made to you, I think ſome Satisfaction is given, and that every Man is ſatisfied, and that there is no Colour of Doubt there, for Matter of Fact, and the Times that he inſiſts upon. For the Act directing what Offences are Treaſon, and not to be arraigned unleſs they be proſecuted within a Year, I muſt tell him, the Impeachment is laid from 1648 to 1651. Yet, my Lord, I ſhall make it appear, that the Indictment doth look backward to ſome Offences, and forward to others. It is laid firſt in general: he committed ſuch and ſuch Treaſons and Offences in ſuch and ſuch Years. And I ſhall come with the Evidence, and apply them to ſuch Times that are within your power, and in which the Law makes them Offences: and this is to be debated then, and not to be once ſpoken of now. My Lord, I ſhall begin from 1648, and run on with him, that he hath continued in a treaſonable Diſpoſition, and in treaſonable Plottings, to the time he was laid up, and ſince; and will juſtify all: and therefore it behoves him to inſiſt upon it. And I will make it appear, that he was one of the firſt that ever did appear againſt this Commonwealth in plotting; and he did continue ſo until the time of his Reſtraint, and after that time.

Mr. Love. Sir, you are no Witneſs; if you be a Witneſs, come and ſwear.

Attorn. Gen. I will uſe you with all the Duty of my Place; and if you give me not occaſion, I ſhall not do otherwiſe.

Mr. Love. I ſhall give you no occaſion.

Ld Preſident. This will make all that hear him to think that this is the very beſt of his Caſe; as we know it is.

Mr. Love. Sir, altho I do not come here to have the Law expounded to me, yet I do come here to have the Benefit of the Law; and if the Law allows me this Benefit (I being unskilful) that if I can find in the Charge Matter of Law ariſing, then to have Counſel to adviſe me, and to overthrow the Indictment: Why ſhould I be deny'd this Benefit? And I do not yet, according to my Underſtanding, ſee that you afford me the Benefit of the Law, you not granting me Counſel to adviſe me to overthrow the Indictment.

One of the Court. Mr. Love, if it were poſſible, I deſire you might have ſatisfaction, for this that you deſire is very juſt; and when it comes to its proper time, then you ſhall have it: but do not by diſorderly demanding of it out of your time, loſe the Benefit you might have of it when it comes to your time. That which you ſtand upon, and call Law, is not Matter of Law; nor can you call it Law, till you hear what the Fact is. For can any Man judge what is Matter of Law, till he know the Matter of Fact? as it hath been told you well, that the Law ariſeth out of the Fact: ſo that if you will anticipate the Evidence, and the Proof of the Fact, by urging this Matter of Law which you did hear read in the Charge, you will do yourſelf wrong, and you are miſtaken in it; for there is no Matter of Law appears there, for it is barely, Thus you have done. And if you ſay this is Law, you exclude all the Witneſſes. Whether you have done it or no, we cannot tell; and if you have done it, whether contrary to Law or no, we cannot tell, becauſe we muſt apply the Witneſs to the Acts of Parliament that authorizeth us to ſit here: and if we find that the Doubt grows upon what the Witneſſes ſay, and upon what the Law ſaith, then doth Matter of Law ariſe, and then it is time for you to ſay, it appears not by this Witneſs that it is within the Act. I do the rather ſpeak this, becauſe we do extremely deſire you ſhould receive Satisfaction, for I would not have any here have any thing put upon him, that may not appear juſt and according to Law; and none can ever ſay that a Man had Counſel aſſigned him, before he pleaded here.

Ld Preſident. It is now the Seſſions at Newgate, and there may be many Priſoners; and if every Priſoner ſhould take the liberty to plead Matter of Law, and ſay, I am no Lawyer, let me have Counſel aſſigned me, and I will anſwer, when ſhould we have any Man anſwer? when would Men be executed for robbing, and ſtealing, and killing?

Mr. Love. That Court is different from this, you here are Judges both of Law and Fact, there the Judges are Judges of Law, and the Jury of Matter of Fact. But, Sir, ſatisfy me in this; if there be any thing in Law before pleading to overthrow the Indictment, (as I perceive by Judge Coke there is, and to which I have received no ſatisfactory Anſwer) let me have that legal Benefit to overthrow the Charge. I have ſaid what I can; but if I had Counſel here, they could ſay a hundred times more.

Ld Preſident. You have heard no body but yourſelf, for whatſoever hath been told you by the Court and your Friends about you, hath not been hearken'd unto. We have ſpent thus much time, and People are weak, and if you will plead, do. Read his Charge once again; and I tell you the next is Judgment.

The Clerk. Chriſtopher Love, you ſtand charged on the behalf of the Keepers of the Liberties of England, by Authority of Parliament, of High Treaſon, and of other high Crimes and Offences againſt the Parliament and People of England; this High Court therefore requires you to give a poſitive and direct Anſwer, whether you are Guilty or Not Guilty of the Crimes and Treaſons laid to your charge.

Mr. Love. I am not ſatisfied, but that Matter of Law doth ariſe from this Charge; and I do earneſtly preſs I may have Counſel, and then I will plead.

Att. Gen. I do as earneſtly preſs, that you would as poſitively ſay, that you cannot allow him Counſel till he hath pleaded.

Mr. Love. I now ſee Mr. Attorney's words to be true. When he came to me to the Tower, and examined me, the 16th of this Month, he ſaid, That ſeeing I would not acknowledge (as he called them) my Treaſons, I was judged peremptory and obſtinate: and I remember he ſaid theſe words to me; Mr. Love, though you are too hard for me in the Pulpit, yet I will be too hard for you at the Bar. And truly now I find it ſo: and it is an eaſy matter for a Lawyer, armed with Law and Power, to be too hard for a poor naked Scholar, that hath neither Law nor Power.

Ld Preſident. Doth this do any good to you? If it were ſo that you are too hard for him, (for you are too hard for every Man in the Pulpit) yet you ſometimes are ſo out, and in that you are controulable. If Maſter Attorney be too hard for you here, let him be too hard for you; but it is the Court that are to deal with you here: we will not do it becauſe of his Saying, but you muſt think that the Court will be led by their Evidence, and not by Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Love. You gave this Favour to Maſter Lilburne, and I do not deny to plead: but I am not prodigal of my Blood, therefore I crave Counſel.

Ld Preſident. I do not know what to ſay more to give you ſatisfaction, than what I have ſaid. You ſay you do not deny to plead, and yet you do not plead; you ſay Mr. Attorney is too ſtrong for you, but you know it is not he, but the Evidence may be too ſtrong for you. And do not you think that you have ſuch Judges, as will let you receive any prejudice. Mr. Love, you are a Miniſter, I pray ſhew forth the Spirit of a Miniſter of Jeſus Chriſt; carry yourſelf ſo, as that you may not either wrong yourſelf or the Court. I would have you behave yourſelf without recriminating. You ſpeak of Mr. Attorney, as if he could be too hard for you, as if we were all of his ſide, be it right or wrong: know that we are Men of Conſcience, and have Souls to ſave as well as you.

Mr. Love. The Charge is long, and I never heard of it before, nor knew of it before.

One of the Court. We give you our Faith and Credit, that if any Matter of Law ariſeth, we will not make ourſelves guilty of your Blood, but we will allow you Counſel: yourſelf hath read a Book in the Court, that ſhews the Court cannot allow you Counſel till you plead.

Ld Preſident. Did you ever conſult with the Lieutenant of the Tower? What, will you caſt away yourſelf?

Col. Weſt, Lieut. of the Tower. I could, my Lord, adviſe him no more than what I knew, and that was the time of your ſitting.

Mr. Love. I hope you will not in a hurry ſpill my Blood.

Lieut. of Tower. Since Saturday was ſeven-night he was not reſtrained.

Ld Preſident. Your Profeſſion goes much in Profeſſion; but when it is abuſed, it is the higheſt Tranſgreſſion; you would evade things with mental Reſervations, and ſay and unſay at the Bar, as high as any Jeſuit can do.

Mr. Love. I will not lye for my Life; you may ſay what you pleaſe, and do what you pleaſe, I ſpeak before God and this Audience.

Ld Preſident. Mr. Love, know that we are here in as ſacred a poſture, as you are in the higheſt Place of your Calling; and if we do not know that God is here preſent, we are the miſerableſt Creatures in the world: and therefore if your Office and ours do not make us know that we are in the preſence of God and Jeſus Chriſt, it will be but ill for us; and yet you hurry out, that it ſhould be ſuch a terrible thing in you, more than in us. You have ſpoken many Words as a Shadow in the Air, there is nothing material in them, but the Strength of your Will againſt the Judgment of the Court.

Mr. Love. If I do plead to the Charge, I do allow the Matter and Form of the Charge to be legal. I deſire to have Counſel to come to my Chamber; I do not ſay, to come to this place, but to have liberty for them to come to my Chamber.

Mr. Steele, Recorder of London. I did not think to have ſpoken, nor have I uſually ſpoken in this Court, yet I will ſpeak a word out of tenderneſs to yourſelf. You have very often inſiſted upon it, that you ſhould have Counſel aſſigned before you plead, that is it you plead for: truly the Courſe of Law is this, That if the Priſoner charged at the Bar, before he plead ſhall demand Counſel, he muſt of neceſſity put in ſome ſpecial Plea before the time he can demand Counſel. The Court doth not inforce you to plead Guilty or Not Guilty to all the Matter of Fact; but they ſay, of neceſſity you muſt plead. If you put in a ſpecial Plea, and tell them that it is a ſpecial Plea, and deſire Counſel upon it, they will conſider it: but till you can declare what that ſpecial Plea is, for there is a general Plea, and a ſpecial Plea; the general Plea is Not Guilty, the ſpecial Plea is in ſome Particulars. Now for you to alledge neither the ſpecial Plea nor the general Plea, it is impoſſible that Counſel can be aſſigned you. And whereas you ſay you are concluded if you plead, and cannot object againſt the Indictment afterwards; no, Sir, I tell you in the name of a Chriſtian, and one that knows a little of the Law, that all the Objections you have againſt the Indictment, the Formality of it, and thoſe things you ſpeak of, as that of your Fact not being committed in ſuch a time that the Act holds out, that the High Court hath no relation to try you for Scotland; all theſe will be ſaved to you, if they ariſe upon Matter of Fact from the Evidence. True, if you make an Objection againſt the Juriſdiction of the Court, that hath no relation either to the ſpecial Plea or general Plea, it cannot be. It is impoſſible an Objection ſhould be received againſt the Eſſence of the Court, there is none can poſſibly over-rule that for you but themſelves; it is ſuch a thing, that no Counſel can be aſſigned you as to that, becauſe it ſtrikes at the very Being of the Court. Now therefore I beſeech you in the name of a Chriſtian, that you will not do yourſelf that prejudice; for Nature teacheth every Man to preſerve himſelf by all juſt ways and means: and I do believe that in this Buſineſs you have apprehended it for your Preſervation, and that you are loth to do any thing that tends to your deſtruction; but you may ſatisfy your Conſcience, in that you have done what you can. And when you have pleaded, and uſed all the Arguments you can, and have heard the Judgment of the Court in it, you may ſatisfy your Conſcience, that in the words of honeſt Men (unleſs it be the Juriſdiction of the Court, though you have tacitly ſpoken there) you ſhall have that Right and Privilege which the Law allows you. I confeſs, I never ſpake here before, and it is a Rule amongſt us, that none but the Preſident ſhould ſpeak; and we have done more to you, than to the greateſt Perſon that ever ſpake here, becauſe we think ſome neceſſity lies upon us towards you, (in regard of your Calling, and the Worth that hath appeared in you) to direct you what you have to do.

Mr. Love. Sir, a Man may demur touching the Juriſdiction of any Court, if he can ſhew any thing in the Indictment that the Court cannot take cognizance of, which he is charged with; tho he do not demur ſimply as to their Juriſdiction in general, yet as to that Particular he may demur: as a Man may demur in Chancery, when a Cauſe is only tryable at the Common Law.

Ld Preſident. You muſt know, that he that ſpeaks againſt the Juriſdiction of the Court, ſpeaks againſt the Juriſdiction of the Parliament of England.

Mr. Steele, Recorder of London. Mr. Love, to help your Underſtanding, I did not ſay that Mr. Love did expreſly ſpeak againſt the Power of the Court, as if they had no power to try him; but this he ſeemed to ſay, That what he hath offered againſt the Juriſdiction of the Court, in any thing he is queſtioned for, if he have not Counſel for it before, he cannot have it afterwards. Now if the Queſtion you offer be a mix'd Doubt, for your Objection is mix'd; for you ſay, the Court hath no power to try the Facts whereof you are indicted: now is it poſſible the Court can judge of that, or know there is Matter of Law ariſeth out of it, till the Fact appear out of the mouths of the Witneſſes? It may be the Fact will not be proved, then there will be no Matter of Law ariſing; if the Fact be proved that it was done at ſuch a time, before the Act was made, when that appears to them, the Court then will ſtrike it off, you ſhall not need Counſel, then we ſhall not regard it: if upon the Fact any other Doubt ariſeth in relation to Scotland, (for it muſt be from two Witneſſes, your Doubting being mixed with Matter of Fact) we ſhall then be able to judge of it.

Mr. Love. Sir, if any Crime be laid to my charge, that ought not to be laid, and that this Court can take no cognizance of, I ſhould have Counſel in it.

Ld Preſident. We have ſpoken more to you than became us, perchance, and that from Tenderneſs to you; and if nothing can give you ſatisfaction, but over and over with the ſame things again, we can but ſpeak our Conſciences, and leave it to yourſelf.

Mr. Love. I do declare I do ſubmit to the Tryal, and am willing to do it; but it behoves me to uſe all juſt Means for the preſervation of my Life: if you will, give me but a day's time to conſult with Counſel.

Ld Preſident. That is in your Learning ſufficient to ſay, you will do it, and yet do not do it; becauſe I ſay I will ſubmit, therefore I do ſubmit; this is no Obedience at all. I know no ſuch Logick as this; it is ſubmitting, that muſt do it; you will ſubmit, but you will not act: pray, Mr. Love, be ſo charitable as to take us to be Chriſtians.

Mr. Love. What prejudice, Sir, can it be to this Court, being I have not ſpoken with any Lawyer, to give me but a day's time? I will deſire no more.

Attorn. Gen. I would fain know, why may not the next Priſoner ſay, You have done ſo in Mr. Love's Caſe?

Mr. Love. You have accepted of ſpecial Pleas, you did it in the Caſe of Sir John Stowel; and if I thro my Ignorance in Law cannot urge the Strength of Law, and a ſpecial Plea, as otherwiſe I might do, I beſeech you let me not be prejudiced by it.

Ld Preſident. Sir John Stowel inſiſted upon ſpecial Matter he had to plead, and that was, the Articles of Exeter; but he did firſt plead to the Charge, Not Guilty: yet we gave him that benefit; and he had that which did laſt a great Debate of this Court, and ſo did Hamilton, and divers others: we will do no otherwiſe with you than with them.

Mr. Love. If you now deny me my ſpecial Plea, I cannot help it; which is this, That the writing or ſending Letters (if it could be proved againſt me) into Scotland, doth not come within your Act; and that it is only for England and Ireland that are mentioned therein.

Ld Preſident. If there be a ſpecial Plea wherein there is no difficulty, then we give no Counſel; but a ſpecial Plea muſt have ſomething that is dubious in the Judgment of the Court: but for this, that in the Letter of the Law every School-Boy underſtands, the Judge will not allow you Counſel in a trivial matter; we have gone over and over with you again, and this is like other Diſcourſes with you: but certainly never was the like ſeen, that a Court was ſo trifled with.

Mr. Love. This is my humble Motion, allow me but Counſel to-morrow, that they may appear here.

Ld Preſident. You may have Counſel to-morrow, as the Caſe ſhall be.

Mr. Love. Shall I have the Copy of the Charge?

Ld Preſident. You ſhall have what is fit, you ſhall have nothing deny'd you when it comes to you to have it, you ſhall have that Reſpect; I do it not to flatter you: but refuſe to plead at your peril.

Mr. Love. Will you give me but this Favour, that I may have but an hour or two's time to conſult with a Lawyer?

Ld Preſident. I do not know but that this that is done, muſt be done for all that comes to the Bar.

Attorn. Gen. I had thought there would have appeared in him that calls himſelf a Miniſter of the Goſpel, more Meekneſs and Obedience to Authority, not out-facing Authority; and it is not well done of him. My Lord, I humbly beg, that having had thus much of your Patience, and Perſuaſion by Arguments, and all Means uſed to him, and nothing will prevail; that, my Lord, you will now be pleaſed to give your Judgment according to the Rules that the Law appoints you, upon him that refuſeth to plead.

Mr. Love. I do not refuſe to plead.

Ld Preſident. Doth a Man of your Learning ſay, you do not refuſe?

Mr. Love. A Man may demur to his Charge, and yet not refuſe to plead; and the Court may grant me a day's time, if they pleaſe; for I come here unarmed and unprepared.

Attorn. Gen. His Demur is to Matter of Fact.

Ld Preſident. Will you put that upon Law, for Law, which is not Law? And by your putting yourſelf upon that, you confeſs the whole Charge.

Attorn. Gen. I deſire one Favour, my Lord, which is of Juſtice to him; which is, that you would be pleaſed to command your Clerk to read that Act that ſays, If any Perſon before you refuſe to plead, he may hear the Sentence of the Law upon him.

Ld Preſident. Clerk, read the Act.

[The Clerk reads that part of the Act about refuſing to plead.]

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, we deſire his final Sentence.

Mr. Love. My Lord, I deſire but the favour of a Day's time to conſult with Lawyers.

[The

[The Lord Preſident conſults a while with the Court.]

Ld Preſident. I now do deliver it from all of the Court, and all of them are of that mind, and now plead, or you ſhall have Judgment.

Mr. Love. But if I plead, I deſire I may have Counſel to hear the Witneſſes.

Ld Preſident. We will not make a Precedent; for it will be ſaid, it was Maſter Lilburne's Caſe, and Maſter Love's Caſe.

Mr. Love. Will you promiſe me, that I ſhall have Counſel to hear the Witneſs?

Ld Preſident. We will promiſe you Juſtice. Read the Sentence.

[The Clerk goes to read the Sentence.]

Mr. Love. Not Guilty.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, we do ſay in the behalf of the Commonwealth, he is guilty of the Crimes and Treaſons laid to his charge. And, my Lord, you now perceive, that when you have been long troubled, you ſee he comes very hardly to it; an innocent Man would not have made ſo much ado, and knowing his Innocency, would not have had ſo much Capitulation and Trifling with a Court of Juſtice. My Lord, for theſe Crimes, you are pleaſed to obſerve they are of ſeveral natures, and of long continuance. And now, my Lord, for the State of the Evidence, it is commended to the Charge of another Gentleman, that is, Maſter Sollicitor-General of the Commonwealth, to open to you the State of the Fact, by which he ſtands here impeached and accuſed, the Nature of it, and how it ſhould have been carried on, the Series of Time, the Perſons with whom he comply'd, how plotted and contrived to undermine this Commonwealth, even to the Foundations of it. My Lord, when that is opened, I will then produce the Evidence to make it good againſt him.

Mr. Sollicitor-Gen. My Lord, Mr. Love urgeth much for himſelf, but he doth not tell you what. For my part, I never ſaw his face till now; but his own Carriage, if that do not do him wrong, none will. He ſays, he is ſingled out from all the reſt of his Brethren, I ſuppoſe he means thoſe that are his Fellow-Conſpirators: the reaſon of that is, becauſe he was the firſt, he had a hand in the firſt Action and laſt Action; ſo that from the beginning to the end he was the principal Man, both by Counſel, Friends, Purſe, and Encouragement: and that is the reaſon he might juſtly be ſingled out to be firſt in the Puniſhment, becauſe he was firſt in the Fact. He ſays, God in Achan's Caſe wrought the Diſcovery. My Lord, I think the Court will think, that God was the great Diſcoverer of this great Treaſon; for through the whole Series of it, it was preſs'd and carry'd on with as much Caution and Secrecy as the Wit of Man could contrive; and nothing but the Goodneſs of the God of Lights, the Father of Lights, could have brought this to light, who diſcovers the Secrets of all Hearts, and hidden things of Darkneſs; he hath diſcovered this. My Lord, the Nature of the Treaſon, it is not one or ten Treaſons, but it is a Myſtery of Treaſons, woven together during the ſpace of two Years, under the Notion of Religion. Many of them that were the Conſpirators giving out, that they were a Party diſtinct and ſeparate, and ſo they did behave themſelves like a Party ſeparate from the reſt of the Commonwealth. Firſt, This Party did aſſume to themſelves Sovereign Power, and did exerciſe it divers ways; they did take upon them to ſend Agents abroad to treat with foreign Princes and States, Enemies to this Commonwealth, and to give Commiſſion to that purpoſe, and to give Inſtructions to that purpoſe; they did demean themſelves in this point, as if this Party had been a Free State. My Lord, the very firſt of their Riſe was that in February 1648. When the Scots had declared for the King, then they ſend immediately to their Brethren here, theſe Conſpirators, to let them know that they intended to make Addreſſes to the new King very ſpeedily, and that there were Propoſitions drawing to that purpoſe; and did deſire a firm Compliance with them, promiſing them faithfully (and how they kept it, we ſhall hear) as their Brethren of Scotland, that their Intereſt ſhould be provided for as their own: and the Covenant, that was the ground of all. When they had thus promiſed, they believed their Brethren, and thereupon went about the Work, and eſtabliſhed a Council at Dowgate, and there they met, and plotted and contrived how in the firſt place to make an Agreement between the King and the Scots, to the intent that when they were agreed, they might come with united Forces to invade this Commonwealth. They were plotting and contriving this about Midſummer 1649. They were taken notice of abroad to be conſiderable Men; and the King of Scots, as they called him, thought fit to ſend an Agent to them, to treat with them, which was one Maſon, my Lord Piercy's Man; his Errand here, was to reconcile both Parties, the Royal and Presbyterian Party, and to make them both ſubſervient to do his work. My Lord, he treated with the Counteſs of Carliſle, William Drake, and divers others, Citizens of London, and this was with the privity of the Miniſters. My Lord, he had Commiſſion from the King to aſſure theſe Conſpirators, that if they could procure the Scots to ſend more moderate Propoſitions than they had formerly ſent, (for the Treaty was broken off before, the Propoſitions were then immoderate) that they ſhould be ſatisfied. Thereupon they were ſo confident of themſelves, and ſo bold, (and in this Maſter Love had a principal hand) that without any more ado he frames a Letter to Scotland, to adviſe them, and to perſuade them by all means to ſend more moderate Propoſitions. The Scots return them this Anſwer, That they ſaw no cauſe to ſend more moderate Propoſitions; but they deſiring a good Succeſs of the Treaty, they ſhould ſend beforehand to the King, to prepare and move him to comply with the Propoſitions when they came. Thereupon they were as ready, where as they ſent with the one hand to the Scots, ſo with the other hand to the King. They framed a Letter to the King, and I will expreſs it in their own Language; this was the Subſtance of their Letter: Firſt, they let the Prince know, that there was a conſiderable Party in England ſenſible of their Sufferings there, (they made themſelves ſo conſiderable;) and by and by you ſhall ſee what became of that. Firſt, The King did underſtand them to be ſo conſiderable. Secondly, They were bound in Conſcience and Loyalty, to the utmoſt to help him to his juſt Rights, if he were once engaged with them by taking the Covenant, &c. and proſecuting the Ends of it. Thirdly, That there was no way to do this, but by cloſing with his Subjects of Scotland. Fourthly, That being done, all the Presbyterians were bound to aſſiſt him. And this, which they did, muſt be ſent away before Commiſſioners come, to prepare the King to give them good Entertainment. With this Letter there was a Letter ſent to the late Queen, to deſire her by all means to work the King to a Compliance with the Scots. And there was a Letter ſent to my Lord Piercy and Jermin to that purpoſe; taking notice that the Queen, my Lord Piercy, and Jermin, were their very good Friends, and ready for this Conjunction: Whereof they took ſpecial notice, and did approve of it as a Thing very acceptable, and which ſhould be remember'd in due time. My Lord, this Letter was ſent; and afterwards Maſon he brings the Anſwer from the King, and Queen, and Piercy; all agreeing to this Work, That the Scots, if they came with Propoſitions, ſhould be complied withal. But Piercy and Jermin writ further, and did adviſe them, to the intent the King might not fall back again, that they would ſend a meet Perſon to be preſent about the King when the Commiſſioners came, that ſo he might ſee fair Play. And thereupon Titus was ſent away, to be an Agent there for them at this Treaty: And this Treaty was at Jerſey. But this Treaty took not effect, as was deſired: Whereupon they reſolved upon another Treaty at Breda. But at the Treaty at Breda the King adviſed in his Letter, (which I ſhall read) in the latter end of the Letter, that they would ſend Commiſſioners then to treat with him. My Lord, the Letter was written by the King back again to the Miniſters: Firſt, The King in the Letter took notice of the Miniſters Non-compliance with the preſent Power, and of their Loyalty and good Affection to him; and that if God reſtored him, he would requite them. Secondly, He promiſed all Satisfaction to the Scots. Thirdly, Made large Promiſes of high Favours, particularly to the Miniſters. Fourthly, Wiſhed them to ſend Commiſſioners ſufficiently inſtructed, to treat at Breda. Now, my Lord, in the Diary that came along with this, (for there was a Diary of all Titus's Negotiations) in that Diary it did appear, that the King was very much ſatisfied with the Correſpondent's Application to him; and that that ſhould be a main Argument to him to ſatisfy the Scots. So, my Lord, if they had not thus moderated and perſuaded the King that they were a very conſiderable Party, he would never, in all probability, have cloſed with the Scots, but have thought them very inconſiderable. But when he was informed that if he cloſed with the Scots, he ſhould have a conſiderable Party in England, that made him think the Scots were worth cloſing with. My Lord, Titus, in his Negotiation at Jerſey, did aſſure the King, That the Miniſters were averſe to the preſent Government both in Pulpit and in Print; and that they were well affected to ſerve him and the Nation; and that the Nation was ready to eſpouſe his Quarrel, if he did join with the Scots. This he did aſſure him in the behalf of the Miniſters. And to ſhew how they did own this, they did like this Aſſurance ſo well, that they ſend him another Letter; and they did likewiſe ſend him a Letter of Thanks for his good Service he had done, in poſſeſſing the King how conſiderable they were. My Lord, after this Buſineſs of Jerſey, when Titus had done his good Service there, he was coming home to make his Relation; but hearing by the way that the Council of State had intercepted ſome Letters, he durſt not come farther than Calais: And from thence he ſends a Letter, to let them know all this; and withal, that he had ſomething to communicate to theſe Conſpirators, that was not fit to be communicated by Letter; and therefore deſired that ſome meet Perſon might be ſent to Calais. Thereupon this Letter being read in Mr. Love's Study, (ſo ſecretly was it carried) there it was agreed that Major Alford ſhould be the Man that ſhould go to Titus, and ſhould receive all this Account from him. Whereupon Alford he went away to Titus preſently, and there he did ſpeak to him; and Titus did acquaint him with all theſe Proceedings; and withal, they did adviſe that a Commiſſion ſhould be ſent in the latter part of the Letter. So that now they had no more to do, but, ſince their Hopes failed them at Jerſey, to have an Eye to the Treaty at Breda, where they deſired to ſend Commiſſioners. My Lord, this Letter, to be preſented at Breda, was managed at Mr. Love's Houſe. Colonel Maſſey, Colonel Graves, Titus, &c. theſe were the Parties. There were Letters ſent to them to act accordingly: And Titus ſent Letters to the King and Queen, and Piercy. And again, my Lord, for the Commiſſion, it was as tranſcendent a Boldneſs as ever was done by private Men: The Commiſſion was corrected by Mr. Love; for it was rough-drawn by William Drake, which was the Engliſh Agent here. But Mr. Love, in his Study, and Doctor Drake, did help to correct it. The Subſtance of the Commiſſion was this: 'We, the 'Presbyterian Party in England, do authorize you 'Francis Lord Willoughby of Parham, Edward Maſſey, 'James Bunce, Richard Graves, and Sylas Titus, to 'treat on our behalf, and the reſt of our Brethren 'the Presbyterians of England, with the King; and 'to aſſiſt our Brethren the Scots Commiſſioners in 'their Treaty with the King, and to do accord-'ing to the Inſtructions annexed.' My Lord, here be the Heads of the Inſtructions; That the Commiſſioners ſhould uſe all Arguments they could to move the King to give the Scots Satisfaction, and to take the Covenant; and particularly to inform him of the Condition of Affairs, and how Things ſtood in England at that time, all which then cried out for an Agreement with the Scots; giving them full Power of all Things; and what ſhould be concluded by them the Commiſſioners, ſhould be confirmed by the Confederates. I think, my Lord, here was a very large Commiſſion; whatſoever they thought fit, they were willing to comply with and make good. My Lord, at Mr. Love's Houſe, at the ſame time it was moved, (according to a Letter from my Lord Piercy to William Drake) that a good Sum of Money might be ſent the King, as a great Means to diſpoſe the King to an Agreement with the Scots. But they did not think fit to be cozened of their Money; but if this Conjunction did follow, then to raiſe Money conſiderably. And they went on ſo far, as to debate how to raiſe this great Sum of Money for this pious Work, as you ſhall hear by and by, under what Notion when propounded. Thoſe Men agreed that the beſt way was, That the Miniſters ſhould have ſeveral Correſpondents; and that they ſhould propound the lending of ten, twenty, thirty, forty, or fifty Pounds for a charitable Uſe: But you muſt not ask what this charitable Uſe is for. And this charitable Uſe, what would it have been? If God had not bleſs'd the Battle at Dunbar, we ſhould have ſeen it. My Lord, a little before the Battel at Dunbar, when they had a Letter from Maſſey, or Bailey, or ſomebody, they then began to underſtand their Brethren better than before: For he did inform them, That notwithſtanding what was pretended, yet for all that there was no Engliſh imployed, nor was the King crowned. This did diſturb the Minds of the Conſpirators very much; inſomuch that they did expoſtulate with a large

Letter

Letter, written by Mr. Love and Dr. Drake, written in a Table-Book in Sack, and ſent there. They did expoſtulate with them, becauſe the Presbyterian Party, which was the over-ruling Party, were grown ſo confident of carrying all before them, that they did neither crown the King, nor mind the Engliſh. They did blame them for this, ſeeing this going upon a ſingle Intereſt, and upon one Party alone, which they did call Godly, would not do well. And, my Lord, it proved ſo indeed: They carried it on upon this till the Battel at Dunbar came, and then they began to be of another mind. After that Battel, there was a Letter from the Commiſſioners of Eſtates, preſſing for Arms and Ammunition; and Letters from Maſſey and Titus for Money to be ſent. My Lord, theſe good-natured Men, notwithſtanding they had been ſo handſomely dealt withal when their Brethren were in Power, yet for all that, ſo fierce and eager were they to carry on this great Deſign, which God knows what it would have come to, they notwithſtanding, upon Mr. Love's Propoſition, (for he was the Man who did propound it) agreed to ſend five hundred Pounds preſently to Maſſey. My Lord, this Money was raiſed, and Subſcriptions taken by Mr. Love himſelf at his own Table. And this is proved by one who brought his ten Pounds: He brought it to Mr. Love, and would truſt no body elſe with it. And this was ſent away preſently by Captain Maſſey. My Lord, there was a large Letter ſent alſo with the Money, wherein was good Counſel; for beſides the Money, he did write to adviſe his Brethren, that it would be notable Service to endeavour after Union. The Letter was ſent; and that large Letter, inviting to Union, had been delivered to the Aſſembly; and that would help to quaſh the diſſenting Party in Scotland, who had made the King a Priſoner. But now the State and Church were all agreed: And this was the Fruit of Mr. Love's Letter. And if they had not been ſo united, they could have done no Harm. This Letter came ſo ſeaſonably, that they conceived it very conſiderable. They preſſing to Union very much, by this means did quaſh the diſſenting Brethren; and by that means they came to be as now they are. My Lord, about Chriſtmas laſt there came a Letter from Maſſey, which gave an Account of crowning their King, and of great Preparations to take the Field; and that the Correſpondents here ſhould beware of unſeaſonable Riſing; and that they were moſt afraid that theſe Perſons would riſe too ſoon, and ſo ſpoil all. My Lord, in anſwer to this Letter, they write back again to Maſſey, to adviſe him, on the other ſide, to take heed that he came not into England but well provided, and not to depend much upon the Aſſiſtance here in England: They were afraid he was too weak, as he was afraid they were too forward. My Lord, after Cook was apprehended, then the Correſpondents met no more at publick Meetings; and yet they received Letters from Drake, Maſſey, Bunce, and the reſt, (whereof Mr. Love was ſtill made acquainted, as a principal Man) that told them of the hopeful Condition of the Scots Army, that they intended to engage in England; adviſing the Party here not to be too forward. This was the ſecond Advice. And ſee the Reaſon of it: For if Mr. Love ſat at the Helm, as he did, all the Meetings being at his Houſe, after Drake went away, he ſtill ſtating the Queſtion, drew theſe Letters, and corrected them. And if he were ſuch a main Stickler, truly there was very great Reaſon for his Advice. My Lord, about the middle of March laſt Colonel Bamfield's Man brings an Anſwer to the Meſſage in the Table-Book, written in Sack, containing four or five Sheets of Paper. Upon this Packet there was nothing written but the Letter L. to deliver to one of the Conſpirators: And ſeeing nothing but the Letter L. written, he carried it to Mr. Love, and Mr. Love did own it as ſent to him. And that was the large Narrative of the State of Affairs in Scotland, after the Fight at Dunbar, how Things ſtood there. My Lord, with this Narrative was ſent alſo a Letter from Mr. Bailey, by Order from the General Aſſembly: They did order Mr. Bailey (which was the Scotch Correſpondent there) to write a large Letter. And there was another Letter from my Lords of Argyle, Lowdon, and Lothian, &c. It is worth your obſerving what this Letter was that came from theſe Men: Firſt, Thanks for the good Affections of Mr. Love and the reſt of the Conſpirators. Secondly, Incouragement to perſevere; and to credit Bamfield's Negotiation for Money. Thirdly, Promiſes to repay all, whatever they ſhould lend. But when and by whom this Payment ſhould be made, the Letter will tell you; and that is, when God ſhall bleſs their Endeavours in procuring a Free Parliament in England. So the Parliament in England muſt pay all the Scots Debts, that theſe Conſpirators ſhall lend. Truly, I think it will be a very free Parliament indeed, when it comes ſo free out of the People's Purſes. My Lord, Mr. Love and others gave Bamfield's Man, that brought this Narrative, out of their own Purſes ten Pounds, and ſent a Bill of Exchange of thirty Pounds to Bamfield: By one Witneſs it will be expreſly proved, that ten Pounds of this Money came out of Mr. Love's Purſe. My Lord, William Drake's laſt Letter did inform that Maſſey would break into England as ſoon as there was Graſs for his Horſes; and therefore he ſent to have a good Bank of Money provided in readineſs; and that they ſhould think of timing a Party; and that they ſhould neither riſe too ſoon nor too late, but juſt when Maſſey came in. This Mr. Love told Major Adams. My Lord, now we come ſo near to the Time, as that one of theſe Conſpirators is apprehended by the Council of State: When he had been in Reſtraint three Days, he ſent to Mr. Love; and Mr. Love came to him. But he had been at a kind of Faſt; for they did keep Faſts once a Fortnight, at leaſt, and Prayers for the good Succeſs of this Deſign; That God would bleſs this wonderful Treaſon, which was for the making, by the Scots Army, an utter Subverſion of this Commonwealth, and the free, and noble, and magnanimous People of England ſhould be made Vaſſals and Contributaries to the Scots Nation. This was the Deſign; and for this Deſign the Miniſters faſted and prayed: But it is plain God did abhor ſuch Things. And, my Lord, Maſter Love took upon him to ſpeak to the Perſon under Reſtraint; 'Take heed, 'ſaith he, what you do, leſt you wrong your ſelf 'or others.' And ſaid, 'It is true, Titus's Man 'hath broken up Papers; but we are all well 'enough: But give notice to the reſt of the Confe-'derates, that they may not be ſurprized: But be 'you not troubled, becauſe we have pray'd for you 'this Day.' And they implored the God of Truth that nothing of all this ſhould come to light, but that we ſhould be in the dark ſtill in generals. My Lord, this is the true State of the Evidence, as near as I can preſent it, with a frail Memory: And, my Lord, I have opened nothing but Generals; your Lordſhip and the Court will judge it; and Maſter Love will have the leſs to do to anſwer.

But it appears by this, that there hath been ſuch a Practice, ſuch a Series of Treaſon, Treaſon upon Treaſon, that one Act of Parliament is not enough to contain it; but all thoſe Acts of Parliament read, every one of them make him a Traytor. And, my Lord, I am ſorry I have taken up ſo much of your Time, eſpecially when you have ſpent ſo much Time before: If your Lordſhip therefore will be pleaſed to have the Patience to hear the Witneſſes, we ſhall prove more than I have yet opened.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, this was an early Treaſon that began betimes to cruſh the Commonwealth in its Infancy; and, my Lord, Maſter Love being ſingled out for Juſtice, you will anon obſerve there was ſingular cauſe for it; and if he had had his Deſert, it had been long before now: but States can play ſometimes with Treaſons, and not take a time till they ſee fit. My Lord, this Treaſon, as I have opened it to you, began in the Year 1648. The King of Scots, ſo called, but take notice, that the ſame Nation and Perſons that proclaimed him King of Scotland, proclaimed him King of England alſo at the ſame Time, in the ſame Nation: and thoſe Perſons that proclaimed this Perſon King of Scotland, the ſame proclaimed him King of England. My Lord, you have heard ſome of the Conſpirators named, Titus and Drake, active Men both of them: Theſe Men have been ſo ingenuous, that they have fled for their Treaſons; notwithſtanding this Gentleman, a Miniſter of the Goſpel, he doth not do ſo: they have confeſs'd their Offences, and are fled for them; they dare not appear, they have ſo much Guilt within them that prompts them to keep away; but this Gentleman hath not ſo much. My Lord, Drake was ſo active, and it was carried on with ſo much Secrecy, and ſo much (as they thought) of Caution, that Maſter Drake writing, as that Gentleman next Mr. Love doth, in Short-hand, he burnt his Papers, and burnt all where any thing was to be ſeen; ſo that no Originals are to be ſeen. My Lord, in this caſe it hath been opened unto you what Tranſactions Mr. Love had with Scotland, and you have been pleaſed to obſerve it was a tender Point, that Mr. Love did enter Diſcourſe with the Scotch Nation, Mr. Love was very much troubled at it, and he may ſee juſt Cauſe to be troubled at it. And will you give me leave, there hath been Blood and Treaſure ſpent, as was told you by Mr. Sollicitor. I am afraid I might too juſtly ſay by that Gentleman, and thoſe he did ſeduce, that they have been too much the Cauſe of this Blood, even that Gentleman that ſtands at the Bar, that ſhould be a Man of Peace, and not of Blood: My Lord, I may juſtly ſay, That that Gentleman hath been too much the Cauſe of theſe late Engagements between theſe two Nations, and making himſelf a Party: And it is a ſad Thing when Parties appear againſt a State. My Lord, I am too much afraid, whatever God pleaſes to work upon him, that it ſhould touch his Conſcience that he ſhould be inſtrumental in ſuch a Work. But I verily believe, had there not been Actings from hence, there had not been ſo much Forwardneſs in the King's Party to the Scots. My Lord, I will mind that Gentleman of what is ſaid of the Fifth of November; I am ſorry for it, that it ſhould be ſaid of our Miniſters, whoſe Faith is Faction, whoſe Religion is Rebellion: It is ſaid ſo of the Romiſh Miniſters, I hope it will not be ſaid ſo of the Engliſh, That their Faith is Faction; and that they pray for Strife, and faſt for Strife. My Lord, for theſe Men, Drake and Titus, they are gone, as I ſaid; and they did confeſs themſelves ſo much guilty, as that they have fled for it: and Mr. Love doth know (I am ſorry to ſee him in that Geſture) that he was converſant with them all, and doth know (I believe) that we can prove it; and when he hears the Men named, he will ſay ſo too. Truly, my Lord, I have nothing to ſay againſt the Perſon of the Man, but againſt his Vices and Faults; and nothing to his Function, and nothing to thoſe whom he pretends ſo boldly to repreſent, that is, the Presbyterian Party. We do all know there are many honeſt, precious, and godly Men, that have received no Diſcountenance from the State; nor this Gentleman, that ſhould give him any Countenance or Encouragement to oppoſe the State. But it is ſomewhat a bold Thing, for a particular Man to be the Head of a Party; and they to engage as repreſenting a conſiderable Party, to engage to ſend Commiſſioners to agree upon Inſtructions: This is very bold. But, my Lord, God be thanked, many of thoſe that were ſeduced at firſt were wiſe, and did come in before the laſt; and did not ſtrut it out, my Lord, with States and Juſtice, as that Man hath done before now, and at preſent, even out-facing Juſtice, and boldly, I ſay, wiping his Lips: He hath done no Offence. My Lord, they were ſo bold with Scotland, that there was a known Agent there maintained and kept between Scotland and them: And I will tell him the Gentleman's Name; his Name was Mr. Sterks. And, my Lord, when he went away, the Act requiring thoſe of the Scotiſh Nation to be gone, that Gentleman did ſupply him with Money himſelf, and others gave him eight or ten Pounds in his Purſe, to carry him away. My Lord, I believe he knows this: And I am ſorry that that Gentleman, that hath gone along with us in much of this War, that he ſhould at laſt ſo much betray his own Diſcretion, as rather to truſt a reconciled Enemy, than to be true to his own Friends. I ſay, he truſts a reconciled Enemy, and a weak Enemy; and that he will think, and will know, that they might betray him; as juſtly may be done, when Men ſo caſt themſelves upon the Party of the King, and Queen, and Piercy, and Jermin. It is no great Policy nor Diſcretion to have ſo many of Counſel: They ſay three keeps Counſel; but this Gentleman hath now twenty, thirty, forty, in Scotland, France, and Holland, and Agitations between them, and frequent Intercourſes. My Lord, I ſhall now call the Witneſſes out to you, which, when Mr. Love doth ſee, himſelf will ſay are honeſt Men, and to be believed.

Mr. Love. My Lord, I beſeech you let me ſpeak a Word.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, he hath heard his Charge in particular; and thoſe Things which, if he be ingenuous to himſelf and his own Conſcience, he cannot but know we ſhall prove them: And before we prove them, I deſire to hear whether, or no, he he will confeſs them.

Mr. Love. I hope this Court will not hearken to the Inſinuations of Inſtruments of State, who are well rewarded for their eager Proſecution of Men in ſuch a Condition as I am in: It is an eaſy matter, through Flouriſhes of Law, and Strains of Wit, to ſtir up the Minds of my Judges againſt me.

Ld Preſident. You have heard the Matter opened to you; which you cannot in any chriſtian or godly Conſcience or Underſtanding but acknowledge, that ſuch Secrets as theſe you were privy to, and came to your hand: You cannot, before God and Man, do better than to confeſs theſe which you know, know, by the urging of them upon you, are come to our knowledge.

Mr. Love. Will you give me leave to expreſs my ſelf as to theſe Things which I am now charged with? I do declare and proteſt, in the Preſence of God and this great Aſſembly, that I never wrote any Letter, either to the King of Scots, or to the Queen his Mother, or to the Church or State of Scotland in the general, or to any particular Perſon of the Scotiſh Nation, ſince the Wars began between England and Scotland, to this day. I do declare alſo, in the Preſence of the ſame God, I never received any Letters, written to me, either from the King of Scotland, or Queen his Mother, or from the Church or State of Scotland in general, or from any particular Perſon of the Scotiſh Nation, ſince the Wars began between the two Nations to this day. I declare and proteſt likewiſe, in the Preſence of the ſame God, I never collected, or gave, or lent one Penny of Money either to ſend into Scotland, or into any foreign Part, to the King, or Queen his Mother, or to the Church or State of Scotland in general, or to any particular Perſon of the Scotiſh Nation, ſince the Wars began to this very day. And as to theſe Particulars, I have ſaid it often, I am as innocent and as harmleſs as the leaſt Child: And if you will take the aggravating of theſe Circumſtances againſt me, and will proceed upon Aggravations of the Crimes againſt me, I hope God will help me with more Peace of Conſcience to undergo the Cenſure, than you ſhall have to inflict it. And as for that Gentleman, that made that great Relation to you of the Treaty of Jerſey; for my part, I am as great a Stranger to all thoſe Tranſactions as any here: I never ſaw the Face of Titus; nor did I ever ſend to him, or receive any thing from him.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, we ſhall call the Witneſſes.

[Captain Potter is called into the Court.]

Mr. Love. I except and proteſt againſt this Witneſs; for he hath been already examined in private, and hath made his Confeſſion there; and that is equivalent to a Conviction: And I hope the Court, in Juſtice, will not admit of this Man for a Witneſs.

Ld Preſident. You ſhall have Juſtice as well as ever any Jeſuit had.

Attorn. Gen. You ſee now what Mr. Love drives at, and you will find his Jeſuitical Evaſions. And, my Lord, let him be asked, whether ever this Man was before this Court, or any Committee of this Court; and I think in Juſtice you ought to examine Witneſſes before-hand. But it is clear and evident that this Man hath been a Party with him. I do humbly conceive it is ſo clear and evident, that rather I ſhould except againſt the Witneſs, as an incompetent Witneſs, than Mr. Love, becauſe he hath been a Party with him: But I deſire he may be a competent Witneſs, and one in whom there is more Ingenuity than there is in Mr. Love.

Mr. Love. Sir, before he ſwears, I beſeech you ask him this Queſtion, Whether he hath not been threatened with Death, if he would not witneſs againſt me?

Ld Preſident. You cannot over-rule us with your Beſeechings and Beſeechings; it will not do it: Your Over-importunity ſhall not prevail with us.

Mr. Love. Let God prevail with you: Though he may be Legalis Teſtis before Conviction, yet he cannot be ſo after Conviction.

The Clerk. The Evidence you ſhall give, between the Keepers of the Liberties of England and the Priſoner at the Bar, ſhall be the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth. So help you God.

[He is ſworn.]

Ld Preſident. Now look upon the God of Truth and ſpeak the Truth.

Capt. Potter. I ſhall ſpeak the Truth.

Attorn. Gen. That Gentleman was pleaſed to truſt others, as I ſaid, even reconciled Enemies, and fell from his Friends. I do grant that this Gentleman hath confeſſed: And if every honeſt Man confeſs his Fault, that is no Offence; for an honeſt Man queſtioned for a Fact, to confeſs the Truth thereof: I have not heard that that is no good Law. And I do ſay, that before ever this Man came to be examined, we did know it all; and perchance from thoſe that this Gentleman thought fitter to truſt than us. But we did ſo know it before, that every Circumſtance was opened by us; and we did convince this Gentleman and others, tho not Mr. Love. But Mr. Love ſaith he muſt not accuſe himſelf, he muſt not anſwer; but this Gentleman did more ingenuouſly. I do affirm that he was queſtioned to every Particular, before he anſwered: And we do know that the State hath long Hands and Ears. Now, my Lord, if you pleaſe, ask Mr. Potter what he knows of this Buſineſs, of ſending to and receiving from Scotland.

Ld Preſident. You are upon your Oath, and in the Preſence of God, than whom there is no higher upon the Earth, that is in the Seat of Juſtice, and without relation (as Mr. Love ſaith) to the Parties: Therefore tell the Truth of your Knowledge in the Tranſaction of this treacherous Treaſon, that hath been now above two Years in the Paſſages, between the Presbyterian Party.

Attorn. Gen. No, my Lord, we will not own that upon them: There are ſome that do ſtile themſelves ſo, the Presbyterian Party, that are conſcientious Perſons, and pious and godly Men; and I ſhould do them wrong, ſhould I lay it upon them: But that which I do, is againſt thoſe that do undertake to ſtile themſelves the Heads of them.

Ld Preſident. Begin then with that which concerns Mr. Drake's Agency.

Capt. Potter. I have taken an Oath to ſpeak the whole Truth in this Buſineſs; but that is the Truth I know. I deſire I may not be preſs'd to Things that I have only heard.

Attorn. Gen. You muſt, and from whom you heard them.

Capt. Potter. I was examined ſeveral times, and had a wide Latitude there; and then I was to ſpeak to every Truth as I thought and heard: But now I have taken an Oath to ſpeak the Truth between the State and this Gentleman. And I beſeech you that I may be held cloſe to thoſe Things, and I will give you the fulleſt and faireſt Account I can. What I ſaid before, was in order to the Diſcovery of the Thing, much of which I had by hear-ſay from others; and in that I may miſtake in Perſons, Places, and Times. What I have done my ſelf, and what I know this Gentleman hath done, that may be put to me fully.

Mr. Love. The Witneſs muſt ſo ſpeak, That we have ſeen and heard, that do we teſtify.

Attorn. Gen. Your Doctrine will not paſs here.

Mr. Love.

Mr. Love. It is Scripture, Sir; and it behoves me to ſpeak, for I am upon my Life.

Attorn. Gen. Mr. Potter, ſpeak what you know, and from whom; and I deſire there may be no Gloſſes put there by thoſe who, I am ſure, cannot do it. I ask you firſt of the Proceedings, and ſending to Scotland, and back again to England; and what you know of it, and from whom.

Capt. Potter. My Lord, the Committee that examined me knows I was not privy to the firſt Tranſaction: I did ſay indeed ſomething of it by hear-ſay; and I did likewiſe ſay that Mr. Drake told it me. But I may err in that Particular; poſſibly Mr. Drake did not tell me ſo; for, as I apprehend, I ſaid I did think it did put a Neceſſity upon the King to agree with the Scots; and then having ſeen ſome Papers, and conferred with that Relation others have made, I collected the Truth of them, as far as I did know. But now I am upon my Oath; let me therefore come to the Matter: I ſpake then many Things as I heard, which I cannot affirm upon my Oath.

Ld Preſident. We muſt judge of what you have heard.

Capt. Potter. My Lord, I cannot be certain of that.

Attorn. Gen. That is receded from. But what do you know of Maſon's coming over here?

Capt. Potter. I know nothing of Maſon: I ſaw him but once; and at that Time there paſt nothing between us of publick Concernment, as I remember.

Attorn. Gen. What was the Anſwer that was returned to that which Maſon did bring?

Capt. Potter. That I can ſpeak nothing to of my own Knowledge: I heard he was come hither; and was here to ſee the Tempers of Men, and to ſee how Things were like to go.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, ask him from whom he came.

Capt. Potter. It was ſaid he came from my Lord Piercy. But theſe Things are ſo remote from me, that I can ſay nothing to them of my own Knowledge.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, let him ſpeak what he knows about reconciling the Presbyterian Parties.

Capt. Potter. I think others can ſpeak more cloſe to that; I can ſay nothing but by hear-ſay: I heard that Maſon did endeavour here to find how the Affections of the People ſtood; and whether there was a Neceſſity that the King ſhould comply with the Scots, or with the Cavaliering Party; and that he found a Neceſſity of complying with the Scots.

Ld Preſident. What Aſſiſtance ſhould he have from hence?

Capt. Potter. I know no more of Maſon than this.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, ask him if there were not ſome Letters returned by Maſon, in anſwer to what he brought.

Capt. Potter. Not that I know of.

Ld Preſident. Did you hear of it?

Capt. Potter. I think I did hear of it: But I cannot tell by whom; I think by William Drake.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, ask him whether he knows of any Petition ſent to the King of Scots.

Capt. Potter. I do not know of any; but have heard ſo.

Ld Preſident. By whom did you hear ſo?

Capt. Potter. By William Drake.

Ld Preſident. Who did Drake ſay did carry the Petition?

Capt. Potter. I cannot tell.

Attorn. Gen. Do you know of any Anſwer returned from Piercy and Jermin?

Capt. Potter. I know nothing at all of theſe Things.

Ld Preſident. Were not you invited to the Meeting?

Capt. Potter. Yes, I was.

Attorn. Gen. What did he tell you?

Capt. Potter. Nothing at all: We had nothing but common Diſcourſe there.

Attorn. Gen. Who was there?

Capt. Potter. There was William Drake, Major Alford; and I think Maſon and Titus were there.

Ld Preſident. Do you remember any more?

Capt. Potter. I do not remember; nor can I certainly ſay they were there.

Ld Preſident. Were not you preſs'd or moved to go to Jerſey?

Capt. Potter. Not that I know of.

Ld Preſident. Did not Titus offer to go?

Capt. Potter. I cannot well tell: But at that Time, or ſome other, he either was ſpoken to to go, or offered to go.

Ld Preſident. How long ago?

Capt. Potter. My Lord, I cannot ſpeak this of my own Knowledge; but I have heard ſay, I think, a Month after the Time.

Ld Preſident. Had he any Money to bear his Charges?

Capt. Potter. I know of none.

Attorn. Gen. Well, what Meetings afterwards was there in Mr. Love's Study?

Capt. Potter. I have been at Mr. Love's ſeveral times.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, ask him whether he was not preſent in Mr. Love's Study, when a Letter was there read from Titus; and who was preſent there; and what were the Debates upon it; and what was the Contents of the Letter; and whether it was not for ſome to come to Calais to him.

Capt. Potter. The Letter I well remember: I cannot ſay it was in Mr. Love's Study; nor can I ſay it was in his Houſe: I do not know Mr. Love was preſent. The Letter, I have ſeen it, or heard of it: It did deſire ſome to come to Calais about the Treaty: And I remember well that Major Alford told me he did go to him.

Ld Preſident. What was the Contents of the Letter?

Capt. Potter. I cannot well remember that I have ſeen it: But I have either ſeen it or heard of it; I cannot tell which.

Ld Preſident. You muſt be true to the State, and ſpeak the Truth.

Capt. Potter. My Lord, I would be true to the State, and to the Gentleman at the Bar too. And, my Lord, I can ſay no more to it: I either ſaw it, or heard of it; I cannot tell which. I am upon my Oath, my Lord: The Letter did deſire ſome body to come to Calais to him.

Attorn. Gen. Was not this Meeting in Mr. Love's Study?

Capt. Potter. I cannot ſay it was in his Houſe: I rather think it was not.

Ld Preſident. Was he preſent?

Capt. Potter. I cannot ſay he was preſent; I think he was not preſent: I think Mr. Alford was ſent to the Tavern.

[The Papers of Captain Potter's Examinations were here produced by the Attorney-General, and by the Clerk read to him.]

Attorn.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, theſe were his Examinations.

Capt. Potter. I intreat this may be remember'd, (which I premiſed at firſt) I had a Latitude then, that I have not now: I am now upon my Oath, and deſire to be true to my own Conſcience, and to the State, and to this Gentleman. I have made (it is true) ſuch a Confeſſion as this is; and I believe the greateſt part of it to be true, according to the Latitude I ſpake it in: But now I am upon my Oath, and now I am to ſpeak knowingly. The Subſtance of the Thing is true; I believe that he was ſent, and ſent upon ſuch Things: So much I do verily believe to be true, upon my Oath; but of the Places I cannot ſpeak.

Attorn. Gen. Alford did go to Calais, and return: And how many Days was it between his going and returning? And where did he give an Account of what he did receive from Titus at Calais?

Capt. Potter. It is a hard Matter for me to ſpeak to the Time: I think about a Week. And for the Relation he made when he came back, as I take it, I met him at the King's-Head in Walbrook upon his Landing; whether he made the Relation to me there, or afterwards at Mr. Love's; whether I heard of the Meeting, or whether I was at the Meeting, I cannot ſay. I am ſure he himſelf made me the Relation; but whether there, or any other where, I cannot make out.

Attorn. Gen. Upon your Oath, did not Major Alford make return of the Anſwer in Maſter Love's Study?

Capt. Potter. I cannot ſay it; but I think it was there.

Attorn. Gen. Was Maſter Love preſent?

Capt. Potter. I think he was preſent; and I think it was in his Houſe: I am ſure Major Alford made me a particular Relation between him and I.

Attorn. Gen. Was Sterks, the Scotch Agent, there, or no?

Capt. Potter. I cannot ſay he was.

Ld Preſident. Was it read in Maſter Love's Study?

Capt. Potter. I cannot ſay I was there.

[His Examination was again read to him.]

Attorn. Gen. What was the Subſtance of the King's Letter?

Capt. Potter. It is ſo much out of my Memory, that I ſcarce remember there was a Letter; it is ſo much out of my Mind.

[More of his Examination was read to him.]

Ld Preſident. What do you remember of this now? Is this true?

Capt. Potter. I remember I have heard as much; and I believe it is true.

Ld Preſident. Have you not heard the Letter read?

Capt. Potter. I do not know there was a Letter ſent; nor do I know there was a Letter read. I deſire to ſpeak the Truth: I had a Latitude then, that I have not now; I had then ſuch an Information ſhewed me, and I ſpake to it ſo far as I thought it was true. Theſe Papers you ſhew me, as my Examination, were not of my framing.

The Clerk. Look upon them: Is not this your Hand?

Capt. Potter. I know it is my Hand.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, I did go to the Tower to him, and was with him, and did examine him. My Lord, here be thoſe that will prove it, that himſelf did confeſs, and ſaid it was true: And he took time himſelf to inform himſelf, and had (as he ſaid) other Mens Examinations and Informations by; and he did add and amend, and gave it under his Hand. This is the Truth, after ſeveral Examinations. And he had Papers by him, and did correct them himſelf, and brought them under his own Hand, written by himſelf, theſe very Things. And, my Lord, ask him whether he did not write theſe Things firſt with his own Hand, and bring them to the Committee of Examinations.

Ld Preſident. Whether did you not bring in your own Examinations, and what you could inform, written by your own Hand?

Capt. Potter. My Lord, that is my Hand; and what is there I muſt own as mine. But I hope you will let me diſtinguiſh between what I delivered then as I heard it and thought, and what I deliver poſitively. I do ſay it is true now, as I have heard.

Ld Preſident. Why did you not ſay of Hear-ſay then, as well as now?

Attorn. Gen. Upon the Oath you have taken, whether do you not know this of your own Knowledge?

Capt. Potter. Upon the Oath I have taken (and I deſire to ſpeak it in God's Preſence) I do not remember that I ſaw the Letter from the King, or heard the Letter read, or the Copy; nor can I ſay Alford told me ſo much, though I think he did, yet I do not know he did.

Mr. Love. I deſire you would take notice whether this be fair, that Mr. Attorney ſhould help the Witneſs, by putting things into his Mouth?

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, I can help the Witneſs by asking him Queſtions.

Capt. Potter. My Lord, no Man ſhall ſo far tamper with me, as to make me ſay an Untruth.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, pray ask him whether he did not write theſe Papers, moſt of them, with his own Hand.

Capt. Potter. True; but to open to the Committee the ground of this Buſineſs: But I did not expect to ſwear to every one of theſe Particulars.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, ask him whether after this Return was made there was not a Meeting, and Inſtructions made about the Commiſſion to be ſent to Breda.

Capt. Potter. My Lord, to that, I have heard ſo much; but I cannot ſpeak it poſitively. I ſaw no Commiſſion, nor Inſtructions: I heard there was both. I do not know by whom I have heard it; I think by William Drake.

Ld Preſident. Were you not at Mr. Love's Houſe when they were drawn up, and Mr. Love corrected them?

Capt. Potter. I never ſaw the Inſtructions.

Mr. Love. Nor I neither.

Ld Preſident. Did you not hear ſo?

Capt. Potter. I did.

Ld Preſident. To whom to be directed?

Capt. Potter. To Captain Titus.

Ld Preſident. And to who elſe?

Capt. Potter. The Commiſſions and Inſtructions were to be directed to my Lord Willoughby of Parham, Colonel Graves, Major-General Maſſey, Captain Titus, and Alderman Bunce.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, ask him whether he hath not heard Mr. Love tell him ſo.

Capt. Potter. Never in my Life.

Ld Preſident. Were you not then preſent at his Houſe?

Capt. Potter. I know not that I was; nor can I remember.

[His

[His Examination was again read.]

Attorn. Gen. Whether were you not at Mr. Love's Houſe? And was there not a Letter agreed upon to Maſſey, and Bailey, and Titus?

Capt. Potter. I have been ſeveral times at Mr. Love's Houſe.

Ld Preſident. Whether were you not at Mr. Love's Houſe with theſe Correſpondents?

Capt. Potter. I have been ſeveral times at his Houſe with them; and I have been oftner there upon other Occaſions.

Ld Preſident. Name them.

Capt. Potter. I mean with Mr. Love, and Mr. Jackſon, and Mr. Robinſon, and Major Alford, and Mr. Drake, and Mr. Gibbons.

Ld Preſident. What was then agreed upon about Letters when you were at Mr. Love's Houſe?

Capt. Potter. I have a very bad Memory, I cannot ſpeak to Time, and Places, and Perſons; ſuch Letters I have heard of were written, I profeſs I can ſpeak no more knowingly. I never had a hand in any one Letter, but ſuch Letters I have heard of.

Ld Preſident. Upon what account did you meet at Mr. Love's Houſe?

Capt. Potter. I met there ſometimes upon a friendly Account, ſometimes upon a chriſtian Account, and ſometimes to hear News, and ſometimes to tell News.

Ld Preſident. Where did you meet with theſe Perſons, William Drake, and theſe ſo often mentioned?

Capt. Potter. My Lord, there was a Correſpondency in point of News.

Ld Preſident. Between whom?

Capt. Potter. Between Captain Titus there, and William Drake here; and he would tell us many times News there.

Ld Preſident. Do you know Titus was imployed as an Agent hence?

Capt. Potter. I think he was.

Ld Preſident. Had he Money collected?

Capt. Potter. I do not know of one Penny I lent him, and I never contributed to him.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, ask him, whether himſelf did not, upon an Occaſion, contribute ten Pounds, and bring it into Mr. Love's Parlour?

Capt. Potter. I confeſs that.

Attorn. Gen. For a Table-book that was written in Sack, do you know of any ſuch thing?

Capt. Potter. I do, my Lord; I went to William Drake in his Retirement, and he was writing out of his Papers ſome Letters in a Table-book, which he told me was in Sack, as I take it.

Ld Preſident. Why did he write them in Sack?

Capt. Potter. I take it, becauſe it ſhould not be diſcovered.

Ld Preſident. Do you not know to whom the Letters written in Sack were ſent?

Capt. Potter. I know not; but he told me to Bailey and Titus.

Ld Preſident. Where was Bailey and Titus then?

Capt. Potter. I know not where Titus was, but I think Bailey was in Scotland.

Ld Preſident. After Drake was gone, where were your Meetings uſually?

Capt. Potter. Many times at Mr. Love's Houſe.

Ld Preſident. When you did meet there, what did you meet upon? Was it not to receive Meſſages from Titus, and Maſſey, and Bunce, and Baily, and to return Anſwers?

Capt. Potter. We had ſometimes Letters read there, but from whom they came, or to whom, I believe few can tell, I cannot tell; ſomething of News we have heard, of Affairs; that was the Occaſion of my coming ſometimes.

Attorn. Gen. Did Mr. Love never tell you the Occaſions of thoſe Meetings, and preſs you to lend Money to furniſh Maſſey and Titus?

Capt. Potter. I can ſay nothing to that.

Attorn. Gen. What ſay you to the private Faſts?

Capt. Potter. There were private Faſts.

Attorn. Gen. What! for a Bleſſing upon the Treaty at Breda?

Capt. Potter. There were Faſts kept, but I never underſtood they were for any other end, but for the Sins of, and Judgments upon the Nations; and for the moſt part there have been hundreds of Men and Women there.

Attorn. Gen. Did Mr. Love often officiate there?

Capt. Potter. He hath preached and prayed.

Ld Preſident. Did any pray for a Bleſſing upon the Treaty?

Capt. Potter. I cannot ſay ſo.

Attorn. Gen. What ſay you to thoſe Letters that came hither after the Fight at Dunbar?

Capt. Potter. My Lord, after the Fight at Dunbar there came Letters from Bailey, and Titus, and Maſſey.

Ld Preſident. And where were theſe publiſhed?

Capt. Potter. My Lord, I can ſay no more; I have heard of theſe Letters too.

Ld Preſident. Were not you preſent at Mr. Love's Houſe when they were read, or made known there?

Capt. Potter. Poſſibly I was; I cannot ſay I heard the Letters read there, I did hear Letters by a private Hand occaſionally afterwards.

Attorn. Gen. By the Oath you have taken, were you not preſent at Mr. Love's Houſe, when thoſe aforeſaid Letters from Titus, and Bailey, and Maſſey, were publiſhed and read?

Capt. Potter. My Lord, I cannot ſay I was there, and I dare not ſay I was not; it is a Year ago: I believe I was there ſeveral times when ſeveral Letters were read, and it may be when thoſe were read.

Ld Preſident. Whether was there not five Pounds given to a Meſſenger that brought them?

Capt. Potter. I have heard there was, but I do not know it.

Ld Preſident. Did you contribute any thing towards it?

Capt. Potter. I think I did contribute ten Shillings.

Ld Preſident. Who contributed beſides your ſelf?

Capt. Potter. I know not.

Attorn. Gen. Was there not at Mr. Love's a Promiſe of Arms or Letters?

Capt. Potter. My Lord, I cannot ſay ſo.

Attorn. Gen. What can you ſay?

Capt. Potter. I have heard there was.

Attorn. Gen. By whom have you heard it?

Capt. Potter. I cannot ſay by whom, or who told me ſo, either Mr. Alford, or Adams, or Far, or ſome of thoſe Men that uſed to meet there; for it was common, when I was not there, for ſome or other to meet with me.

Attorn. Gen. Did Mr. Love contribute to the Meſſenger?

Capt Potter. I cannot ſay he did.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, I do not ask him one Queſtion, but what himſelf hath confeſs'd.

Capt. Potter. I do remember ſuch Letters I have heard did come, but never ſaw thoſe Letters; I do likewiſe likewiſe remember I heard there were five Pounds gathered for the Meſſenger, and I do believe I contributed ten Shillings towards it.

Attorn. Gen. Who elſe gave beſide your ſelf, and who received it?

Capt. Potter. I profeſs I know not.

Attorn. Gen. Whether was there not a Declaration to the Church of Scotland then publiſhed?

Capt. Potter. The Declaration, I know nothing of it, you remembred me of it at the Committee, when I was firſt examined, but I knew nothing of it.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, ask him whether the State and Church did not write for Arms and Ammunition at that time after the Fight.

Capt. Potter. My Lord, I have heard ſo much, but cannot ſpeak poſitively or particularly to it; I have heard of ſuch Letters, but cannot tell by whom; I ſaw them not.

Attorn. Gen. To whom were they directed?

Capt. Potter. I never heard who wrote them, nor to whom they were directed.

Attorn. Gen. Was there not one Letter with L. upon it?

Capt. Potter. My Lord, about the Letter L. I did receive thoſe Letters my ſelf, there was an L. written upon them: My Lord, theſe Letters came from Bamfield out of Scotland. There was in theſe Letters a large Narrative of the Affairs of Scotland, from Dunbar-Fight to the time of the Date of them, which I think was about Chriſtmas: This is a thing I know better than (I am afraid I give offence by ſaying, I think, and I heard, and that I cannot ſpeak poſitively; but of this I can ſpeak poſitively.) Bamfield gave an Account therein of a Narrative of two Sheets of Paper, and I and another or two opened them; and I carried theſe Letters to Mr. Love's; there was one or two more with me, Mr. Jaquel, and I think Mr. Drake, I cannot well tell. There was a Narrative of the Scots Affairs, and a Letter from nameleſs Perſons, which we ſuppoſe to be from Mr. Bailey, and from my Lords of Argyle, and Lowdon, and Lothian, and others, whoſe Names I do not remember. Theſe Letters wrote for ten thouſand Pounds for buying of Arms, and hiring of Shipping. Theſe Letters we diſliked, and we diſſented from them, and agreed to give a negative Anſwer; but we thought fit, for our own Safety, to raiſe ſome Money for the Meſſenger and Bamfield, to which I contributed ten Pounds. I carried all theſe Letters to Mr. Love's; one or two were opened, I think we opened them; the Narrative and my Lord of Argyle's Letter I opened, before I underſtood what they were.

Attorn. Gen. Why did you carry them to Mr. Love's?

Capt. Potter. There was a great deal of News in them: there was a Letter L. and I did in my Examination ſay, I conceived it was to Mr. Love; but now upon my Oath, I do not remember very well, and I do not think it was to Mr. Love. I do confeſs I carried theſe Letters to Mr. Love's, I and Mr. Jaquel; theſe Letters were opened, but whether Mr. Love opened them, or I, or the other, I cannot tell.

Attorn. Gen. With whom did you leave them?

Capt. Potter. I brought them away all of them.

Attorn. Gen. Were they not read?

Capt. Potter. They were all read.

Attorn. Gen. He confeſſeth further, he paid ten Pounds: To whom were the Letters directed?

Capt. Potter. The Letters had no Direction at all upon them, I believe.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, ask him, whether there was not a Sum of four or five Hundred Pounds agreed to be raiſed.

Capt. Potter. The Advice that was given to that, was, That we ſhould do nothing in it, and we did nothing in it more than I tell you; I carried thoſe Letters to them, and had Diſcourſe of them, and reſolved to do nothing in them.

Attorn. Gen. Why did you carry them to Mr. Love's?

Capt. Potter. I went for Advice, what I ſhould do with them.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, pray ask him concerning the four or five hundred Pounds, and for what; and whether this Diſcourſe was at Mr. Love's Houſe. Whether there was not a Propoſition for raiſing four or five hundred Pounds, and for whom this was to be raiſed, and where to be raiſed, and by what Means.

Capt. Potter. I heard there was, I do not know the Place where; to this I contributed ten Pounds, I brought it one Evening to Mr. Love's Houſe, and there I left it.

Attorn. Gen. Where was this Money agreed to be raiſed?

Capt. Potter. I cannot ſpeak to that.

Attorn. Gen. Who took the Subſcriptions?

Capt. Potter. I cannot ſpeak to that neither.

Attorn. Gen. Did Mr. Love contribute?

Capt. Potter. I cannot ſay he did.

Attorn. Gen. Was it in his Houſe?

Capt. Potter. I do not know that I ſubſcribed at all, I do not think there were any Subſcriptions; I am ſure I never ſubſcribed my Name.

Attorn. Gen. When you came into Mr. Love's Parlour, and left the ten Pounds, did you not give him a twitch by the Hand?

Capt. Potter. I cannot ſay ſo. [His Examination was again read.]

Ld Preſident. Is this true?

Capt. Potter. The Subſtance of it is true.

Ld Preſident. Of your own knowledge?

Capt. Potter. Of my own knowledge that I left ſo much Money.

[The Clerk reads more of his Examination.]

Capt. Potter. This is a Section I never worded, or phraſed my ſelf; I have heard as much as this comes to, but cannot ſpeak it knowingly.

Attorn. Gen. Did you not write this your ſelf?

Capt. Potter. I believe not, I cannot poſitively ſay that Mr. Love either drew up the Letter, or received the Letter.

Attorn. Gen. You ſay he received the Letter from your own Hands.

Capt. Potter. But not the Letter from Titus and Bailey.

Attorn. Gen. Do you know of a way of Correſpondency laid at Kendal, or no?

Capt. Potter. I heard there was ſuch a Correſpondency.

Attorn. Gen. By whom?

Capt. Potter. I cannot ſay by whom.

Attorn. Gen. Do you know that Groves was ſent to look for Letters there?

Capt. Potter. Yes.

Ld Preſident. Did Mr. Love know of it?

Capt. Potter. I cannot ſay he did.

Attorn. Gen. What had Groves for his pains for going?

Capt. Potter. Ten Pounds.

Attorn. Gen. From whom?

Capt. Potter. I paid it.

Attorn. Gen. Did you receive any of it again?

Capt. Potter. I did receive ſome of it, I received two 10 s. by ſeveral Perſons.

Attorn. Gen. From whom?

Capt. Potter. From Gibbons, and Alford, and Far.

Attorn. Gen. Not from Mr. Love?

Cap. Potter. I do not know I ever had a Farthing from him in my Life.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, ask him whether there were not Letters returned to Bamfield again, and by whom?

Capt. Potter. My Lord, I did receive a Letter that I ſuppoſe was to Bamfield.

Ld Preſident. From whom did you receive it?

Capt. Potter. It was left in my Shop.

Ld Preſident. By whom?

Capt. Potter. I cannot ſay by whom.

Ld Preſident. Whom do you conceive it came from?

Capt. Potter. I think from Mr. Love or Dr. Drake.

Attorn. Gen. Do you conceive ſo? My Lord, ask him whether Mr. Love or Dr. Drake was not appointed to draw the Letter.

Capt. Potter. When we were together, there was a negative Anſwer reſolved upon; and this Anſwer, to the beſt of my Remembrance, was agreed to be drawn up by Mr. Love and Dr. Drake: but I received this Letter.

Attorn. Gen. And who received the thirty Pounds?

Capt. Potter. I cannot tell.

Attorn. Gen. But you ſent the Letter?

Capt. Potter. I did.

Attorn. Gen. Ask him whether he did not ſend for Mr. Love, and what Diſcourſe paſs'd between them, ſince he was in Priſon.

Capt. Potter. I did ſend for Mr. Love, and he did come to me; and I deſired his Counſel, as a Miniſter, and I told him upon what ſcore I was queſtioned; then I was queſtioned upon Mr. Cook only, and he gave me Encouragement only as a Friend and Miniſter of the Goſpel ought to do.

Attorn. Gen. What was that?

Capt. Potter. He wiſh'd me to make a chriſtian Uſe of my Afflictions, and gave me ſome other Inſtructions; we had an Hour's Diſcourſe, and it was all to this purpoſe: He wiſh'd me to make a chriſtian Uſe of my Reſtraint, and to labour to get chriſtian Wiſdom and Fortitude.

Ld Preſident. What did he ſay more to you?

Capt. Potter. My Lord, no more paſs'd between us; and I gave him an Account of what Queſtions I was examined upon in Cook's Buſineſs.

Ld Preſident. Did you give him an Account?

Capt. Potter. I have ſaid ſo, and he did adviſe me to Prudence, and Fortitude and Courage.

Attorn. Gen. Did he never adviſe you to be courageous, and that unleſs you diſcover one another, you were ſafe enough?

Capt. Potter. My Lord, my Keeper was with me, and we had no ſuch Diſcourſe.

Attorn. Gen. Did he not wiſh you to be ſilent?

Capt. Potter. Either then or ſince he did tell me there was a Letter came from Mr. Drake, that told him, Titus's Man had taken ſome Letters from Titus; but he could not conceive how it could concern me.

Attorn. Gen. But did he diſcover nothing, and wiſh you to be prudent for your ſelf, and them?

Capt. Potter. He did not then.

Attorn. Gen. When then?

Capt. Potter. I ſaw him not ſince; and he told me of Bamfield's Man.

Attorn. Gen. How came it about Mr. Love ſpake with you?

Capt. Potter. I did prevail with my Keeper to go with me to Dinner, and to take a Glaſs of Wine, and then I provided for Mr. Love's coming to me.

Attorn. Gen. What hath Mrs. Love ſaid unto you?

Capt. Potter. I ſaw her ever and anon.

Attorn. Gen. What hath ſhe ſaid to you?

Capt. Potter. She hath wiſh'd me, with Tears, to have a care of her Husband, and not to diſcover any thing; I think ſhe hath.

Attorn. Gen. Did not Mr. Love ſay then, That he had been at a Faſt, where you were remembred?

Capt. Potter. He did ſo.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, I confeſs I was with this Man in the Tower, as I am bound to do by my Place, to examine him; he had made his Examination before I came thither, and I brought it with me. My Lord, I did ask him Queſtions, he did anſwer me upon knowledge; he did confeſs the Truth, but told them, Mr. Attorney-General was pleaſed to help him to Particulars, and bring them to his Remembrance.

Capt. Potter, I profeſs, if it had been to ſave my Life, I could not affirm them; but you putting me in mind of it, I did know of it.

Attorn. Gen. At the Committee of Examinations, then he had more Particulars told him, and he did confeſs he did know them all; and he may give you an Account, whether he did not give an Account under his own hand? My Lord, I am not abuſed, but the Council of State, and the Parliament are abuſed; and if this Man ſhould do this Wrong to Mr. Love, and inform the Court and Council, and the Man be brought upon his Life, becauſe he hath affirmed it; and that ſeveral times before ſeveral Committees; this Man muſt not ſcape unpuniſhed, if for no other Fault but this, to accuſe a Man before Authority, and when he comes to his Oath, to deny every word of it. Captain Fiſher will witneſs, that he did bring all under his own hand, and upon my Credit, he did ſpeak as fully as we did open, and much more fully: and I anſwered upon hear-ſay, How do you know it? And he ſaid, He did know it, he did remember it, and he did put it down poſitively; and that when Mr. Drake went away, all the Meetings were at Mr. Love's Houſe, and Mr. Love did ſtill declare the Occaſion of the Meetings, and the Letters were opened by him, and the Diſcourſe upon them; and every word he ſaid upon his own knowledge.

Capt. Potter. I do confeſs again, that before Captain Fiſher and Mr. Attorney did prompt me——

Attorn. Gen. Prompt you, Sir!

Capt. Potter. Before he did remember me of them, I had forgot them, as if I had never heard them; but it is one thing to remember a thing as I have heard, and as I conceive to be true, and another thing to ſwear to it poſitively: and the Paper allowed me this Latitude; ſome of it I have heard, the reſt I believe, and ſome I know; and upon this account I believe it is all true.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, 'tis poſſible I might wiſh him to expreſs what he did know himſelf, and what he did know by relation of others, and ſo did ſet it down, and he did it fully and clearly; and after all this, brought it in again written with his own Hand, to the Council of State. My Lord, if you pleaſe, Captain Fiſher may go for the Original under his own Hands.

Clerk. The Original cannot be found.

Mr. Love. Here is nothing at all that concerns me about the buſineſs of Titus in Jerſey, and about the Letter from Titus, and the Copy of the Letter from from the King: he tells you he doth not know it was in my Houſe; he tells you it was but a Copy, not the Original.

Captain Potter withdraws.

[Major Alford called into the Court, and takes his Oath.]

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, let him declare what he knows, either by himſelf, or others, and of his Imployment at Calais: make the whole Narrative as much as you can remember.

Major Alford. My Lord, I was one Morning wiſh'd to go with William Drake to the Swan at Dowgate, hearing there was a Gentleman lately come from the Prince, where I ſhould hear all the News from beyond the Seas: when I came there, it was one Captain Titus, one whom I had never ſeen before; and he gave a Relation of the good Diſpoſition of the Prince, and how inclinable he was to take the Covenant, and to caſt off the Cavaliering Party, and thoſe about him, if there were an Opportunity to make it known, that there was a conſiderable Party in England that would ſtick cloſe to the Ends of the Covenant. Upon that, Sir, my ſelf, and ſome others that were there, did think we were bound in Duty, and in relation to the Covenant, to preſs the Ends of the Covenant, for the Prince to take it, and to proſecute the Ends of it. And for that Captain Titus ſaid, If we would appoint another Meeting, he would draw up ſomething by way of Atteſtation or Petition to the Prince for that purpoſe. My Lord, we did meet at the Bear in Breadſtreet, and there he did draw forth ſomething that he had framed to that purpoſe, and he read it; and afterwards (not at that time) it was agreed upon to be ſent over to the Prince. The Subſtance of it was to preſs the Prince to apply himſelf to take the Covenant, and to proſecute the Ends of it, and to caſt off all his Cavaliering Party about him, which had brought ſo much Miſchief to his Father, and would do the like to him. This Captain Titus drew up, and this I believe was ſent over, for Titus undertook to ſend it over. I did ask how the Prince ſhould be made to believe, that this coming from an inconſiderable Party, as we were, ſhould come under the notion of the Preſbyterian Party of England, for it went under that notion? He ſaid, he ſhould undertake that by the means of my Lord Piercy. And the Petition that was agreed upon, he did ſend over, I believe; for I did not carry it to the Poſt-houſe, but he did undertake to do it. Afterwards he went over himſelf, and when he was over, he had Information that there was notice of his being here, and of the Buſineſs he was upon; and therefore he writ over to William Drake (as Mr. Drake told me) that he did deſire ſome of us that knew of the Buſineſs, ſhould be ſent over to him, to receive that Account from him which he had in the Buſineſs. So Mr. Drake did perſuade me to go over to Calais; and having ſome Buſineſs of my own, I did go over to Calais. I went from my Houſe on the Friday Night, and I was back again on the Tueſday following; and he did give me an Account of that Tranſaction: The Subſtance of it was this: It was about his own Troubles he had undergone there by the Cavaliering Party, in managing that Buſineſs. He had likewiſe been impriſoned, and they told him, They would try him as a Spy; and that they urged hard againſt him, and that he was in that Condition till my Lord Liberton, the Scotch Commiſſioner, came over; and by his means he had Acceſs to, and Favour with the Prince: And that was the Subſtance of all. He ſaid the King was averſe to the Covenant, not of himſelf, but by reaſon of thoſe Counſels that were about him. And this was the Subſtance of that Account he gave me of his Tranſaction there at Jerſey, in reference to the Buſineſs he went upon: And this he gave me in Writing, which I brought over to deliver to Mr. Drake, for it was directed to him, which I did deliver. Afterwards Maſter Drake carried them to Maſter Love's Houſe, where they were read: And that is all as to that Buſineſs.

Then afterwards there was a Commiſſion, they called it a Commiſſion, it was agreed upon among us, to be ſent over to my Lord Willoughby of Parham and Maſſey, and I think Graves and Titus, that they ſhould agitate and act for us at Breda, and to adviſe with the Scotch Commiſſioners that were there, in behalf of the Presbyterian Party here in England; and that is all in relation to that. Afterward Mr. Drake read to me the Copy of a Letter in Characters, which he had written himſelf in his own Back-ſhop, which he told me ſhould be ſent to the Queen, which was to perſuade her to perſuade the King, as he came that way, to cloſe with the Scots; for that was the likelieſt way to make good his own Intereſt: but that was at Mr. Drake's Houſe only between him and I. Afterwards Mr. Drake told me he had diſburſed Money about receiving of Letters, and receiving of News, and did wiſh me that I would let him have ten Pounds, and ſaid he would ſpeak to ſome others of his Acquaintance to do the like; and if he could get up a conſiderable Sum, I ſhould have part back again; for he ſaid the Charge was too great for him to undertake: and I do think he had ten Pounds of me for that. After Dunbar-Fight, there was I and ſome others at Mr. Love's, in his great lower Room, where was a Letter read, that was ſaid to be from Major-General Maſſey, that gave an Account of the Buſineſs of Dunbar; and alſo did write for Arms, I know not how many Thouſands; and to that purpoſe, that they might be provided by the way of Holland. But upon that, all that were there did ſay—— I heard no Man ſpeak of providing Arms or any ſuch thing. He writ in his Letter, that for his own Neceſſities, and Captain Titus that was there, that a Motion might be made for providing ſome Money to ſend over for their Supply: and it was then ſaid, We were ſo inconſiderable, and ſo few, that the Sum ſpoken of could not be done; and therefore it was moved, that every one ſhould do by himſelf and Friends what he could. This was the Subſtance of that.

Attorn. Gen. I believe, my Lord, he hath dealt ingenuouſly with you. This in the general: I pray you ask him, what he knows concerning any Letters that ſhould have been ſent at the beginning of the Change of this Government, to Scotland from any part of England?

Major Alford. For that I know nothing, but heard Mr. Drake ſay, That he had Correſpondency with ſome in Scotland; and I have heard him uſe one Mr. Bailey's Name; and he had a Cypher which they writ by.

Attorn. Gen. For the Swan at Dowgate, he gave relation of that; but who was preſent then?

Major Alford. Truly, my Lord, it is ſo long ſince, that I cannot poſitively tell; but I am ſure I can remember there was Mr. Huntington, and William Drake, and Lieutenant-Colonel Bains; and I cannot tell, my Lord, I think there was one Mr. Hall.

Attorn. Gen. Was Mr. Gibbons there or not?

Major Alford. Truly, my Lord, I cannot tell whether he was there at that time or no.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, he says Titus at that time did give relation of the Prince and his Party: Can you remember what that Relation was? And do you know whether this was not afterward communicated, and to whom?

Major Alford. I have given you the Substance of it; but for communicating of it, I knew it from none but only from those there.

Attorn. Gen. Titus took time to draw it up?

Major Alford. He did so: and at the next Meeting at Breadstreet, there were the same Men again: and I think at the same time there was Col. Barton.

Attorn. Gen. Was there no mention then, (when it was propounded to you to be a considerable Party) was it not said the Ministers were to be acquainted with it?

Major Alford. It was asked Titus, how the King should be possessed that this came from the Presbyterian Party in England, because it was agreed upon that there should be no Names used to it? He said there needed none, but only the Engagement of the Ministers in it.

Attorn. Gen. What Ministers?

Major Alford. Truly he did not speak a word of any Man, that I know of.

Attorn. Gen. Was it not then propounded, that Titus should be sent to the Scotch King before Commissioners came to him, to have a Correspondency settled between him and some others here?

Major Alford. I cannot say at that time, but afterwards. Whether at that time or any other, I cannot tell; but one time Titus said, he had learned from my Lord Piercy, which had hasten'd him over, that this Business was of that concernment, that they that did undertake it should be there before the Scotch Commissioners did come. And thereupon Titus (as William Drake told me, for this was not at the Meeting) was persuaded to undertake to go about this Business.

Attorn. Gen. Whether was there not some Directions given for a Letter to be written to the Queen, to prepare the Articles with the Scots?

Major Alford. I cannot say any thing but what William Drake told me privately between him and I, as to that purpose, a Letter to the Queen.

Attorn. Gen. What was that?

Major Alford. I did tell your Lordship.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, ask him whether he was not at Supper with Titus.

Major Alford. No, my Lord, I was not there when he offered himself to go, as I know of.

Attorn. Gen. What Money had Titus to bear his Charges?

Major Alford. Thirty Pounds.

Attorn. Gen. From whom?

Major Alford. From William Drake singly.

Ld President. Did not Drake gather it up again?

Major Alford. My Lord, I cannot tell; I know nothing of any Man, but what I did myself.

Attorn. Gen. We were now speaking of the Meeting at Mr. Love's House, and of Titus's Letter being read, and he sent. Let him give a particular Relation of that again. I make bold to ask him Questions to help his Memory.

Major Alford. The Letter that was read of Titus, was not at Mr. Love's House, as I know of, (but Mr. Drake, for all things came to him, and we knew nothing but only from him, for the Correspondency was settled between William Drake and Captain Titus) nor at any publick Meeting that I know of, but what Drake told me.

Ld President. But you were at Mr. Love's House, you said but now.

Major Alford. I was, but not upon this account, it was after I had been over; for I do not know that ever I was at Mr. Love's House, or ever spake with him till I went over: if I have, I have forgot that ever I spake in my life to Mr. Love about it, till after I came from Calais; and then I did bring over a Relation, and gave an Account of it concerning Titus's Transactions.

Ld President. That Account you gave at Mr. Love's House?

Major Alford. No, my Lord, I gave it to William Drake, for it was directed to him; and it was three or four days after that we met at Mr. Love's House, where Mr. Drake read the thing.

Ld President. At what time was it?

Major Alford. At the time when the Scotch King was at Jersey.

Attorn. Gen. Whether did you bring from Titus a Copy of a Letter from the King?

Major Alford. That I forgot; but Titus did shew me a Letter, at least-wise he said so, that he had it from the King, that he sent to this Presbyterian Party. And, my Lord, he did copy out the Letter, and the Copy he gave me, which I did bring over.

Ld President. To whom did you deliver it?

Major Alford. I delivered it to William Drake, I gave it Mr. Drake himself, and I think at his own House; I think it was the same, and that it was read at Mr. Love's House. The Substance of it was this, as he told me, That he took in good part the Petition or Application that was made to him; and if ever God did restore him, and that he was in a condition, then he should think of it.

Ld President. What did he speak of a Non-compliance with the present Government, and by whom?

Major Alford. I do not remember a word of that.

Attorn. Gen. What said he concerning the Scots, and what he would do for the Ministers, if God restored him?

Major Alford. I cannot tell any such Passage, nor do I remember the Particulars of it.

Ld President. The Letter was then read, you say?

Major Alford. I suppose it was the same that I gave to Mr. Drake, but I cannot say it was the same, because it was not in my custody.

Attorn. Gen. Did not you propose to send Fifty Pounds to Titus?

Major Alford. For that, I heard say that there was Fifty Pounds sent to him, but whether it were or no, I know nothing of it, nor did contribute to it, nor knew nothing of it.

Attorn. Gen. Did not you make a Narrative yourself of what you received by word of mouth from Titus?

Major Alford. It is very like I did speak of it to this purpose I tell you of, I do not know particularly what I said.

Attorn. Gen. Did you not receive an Account from Titus of his Transaction at Jersey?

Major Alford. I did.

Attorn. Gen. Did you not give an Account of that you received from him?

Major Alford. He gave it me in writing, and I delivered it to Mr. Drake.

Attorn. Gen. But when you met at Mr. Love's House afterwards, did you not make some Narrative of what you received from him by word of mouth?

Major Alford. I had it not by word of mouth, but only by the delivery of Papers to me, which he could not bring over with ſafety.

Ld Preſident. Were thoſe Papers read at that Meeting?

Major Alford. I tell you, my Lord, I delivered them to Mr. Drake, and Drake did read ſome Papers, and I believe they were the ſame, but I cannot ſay they were the ſame, for they were out of my cuſtody.

Attorn. Gen. Who then were there preſent?

Major Alford. There was Mr. Love, Dr. Drake, Mr. Caſe, Major Adams, Mr. Gibbons, and Captain Far. Truly I cannot particularly tell.

Attorn. Gen. This was given him at Mr. Love's Houſe, and Mr. Love preſent. My Lord, I pray you ask him whether Titus's Meſſage was not well approved of, and the Letter of Thanks to be returned, and the Hundred Pounds in Money?

Major Alford. I do not remember any of theſe things you ſpeak of now.

Attorn. Gen. What do you remember was ſaid concerning him there?

Major Alford. I do not know what was ſaid; I do not know what any Man could ſay to them which were Papers from him: I do not remember any Particulars, it is ſo long ago; I believe now it is two years ago.

Attorn. Gen. Do you not remember that this was one Paſſage in the King's Letter, that the King wiſh'd them to ſend Commiſſioners to Breda?

Major Alford. I do not remember that.

Attorn. Gen. But was there not a Commiſſion at Mr. Love's Houſe agreed upon to be ſent?

Major Alford. That there was.

Attorn. Gen. What was to be the Effect of that Commiſſion?

Major Alford. It was to adviſe thoſe Men to join with the Scotch Commiſſioners, to take advice with them, and to accept the Presbyterian Party with the King, in relation to the firſt Petition that was ſent.

Attorn. Gen. Was Maſter Love there?

Major Alford. Mr. Love was there; but I do not know what Mr. Love or any Man did direct in it.

Attorn. Gen. Who did correct thoſe Inſtructions?

Major Alford. I cannot tell.

Attorn. Gen. Who was agreed to prepare the Commiſſion?

Major Alford. I do not know, for I believe it was prepared when it came there; I heard that which we call a Commiſſion read there, but who prepared it, or acted in it, I do not know.

Attorn. Gen. Did Gibbons bring it?

Major Alford. Who brought it, I cannot tell.

Attorn. Gen. Who were the Commiſſioners?

Major Alford. As I remember, my Lord Willoughby of Parham, and Maſſey, and Alderman Bunce; and whether Titus and Graves, I cannot tell.

Attorn. Gen. Was this in Mr. Love's Study, or in another place?

Major Alford. It was in Mr. Love's Study.

Attorn. Gen. Was the rough Draught corrected by any body or no?

Major Alford. I cannot tell whether it was or no, nor can I remember any more Particulars of it than what I have given you.

Attorn. Gen. What do you know concerning any Inſtructions to give power to the Commiſſioners what to do?

Major Alford. At the ſame time there was agreed upon ſome Inſtructions for them to walk by, which was the Subſtance of the Petition which had been formerly ſent; that is, it preſt the King to take the Covenant, and to proſecute the Ends of the Covenant.

Attorn. Gen. Who carried the Commiſſion and Inſtructions?

Major Alford. One Maſon.

Attorn. Gen. Who was that Maſon?

Major Alford. I did not know him, but I have heard ſay he did belong to my Lord Piercy.

Attorn. Gen. Was there not at that time ſome Letters propounded to be written to the Queen, and Jermine, and to what purpoſe?

Major Alford. I cannot tell that any of theſe things were propounded there, but Mr. Drake had told me, and read to me in Characters ſome that he had writ thither.

Attorn. Gen. And was it ſent?

Major Alford. I cannot tell, for it was privately between him and I.

Attorn. Gen. When this Commiſſion was thus brought into Mr. Love's Study, was there not a Queſtion propounded, What Warrant have we to ſend Commiſſioners, and by what Authority, and what was the Reſolution upon it?

Major Alford. Well, it may be, but I do not remember it.

Attorn. Gen. Do you remember who went with Maſon, when he carry'd away this?

Major Alford. None went with him but I, and Mr. Gibbons did carry the Papers two or three days after that we had from Mr. Drake, which was this Commiſſion we ſpeak of, to Graveſend, to Maſon; for he was at Graveſend before, and there delivered it to him.

Attorn. Gen. What was the Effect of theſe Inſtructions?

Major Alford. The Subſtance of them was, according to the firſt Commiſſion, to preſs them to uſe all their Endeavour to adviſe, and take Advice with the Scotch Commiſſioners how to preſs the King to take the Covenant, and to join with the honeſt Party, the Church-Party in Scotland; that was the Subſtance of it.

Attorn. Gen. Did he not write to you to ſend Money to the King?

Major Alford. I heard Mr. Drake once ſay, there was a Letter from my Lord Piercy to that purpoſe, but Captain Titus himſelf wrote againſt it.

Attorn. Gen. What Courſe or Way was propounded to raiſe Money?

Major Alford. I know of nothing propounded that way: it was not agreed for me at that Meeting to go down, but Mr. Drake ſuddenly went down, and Mr. Drake alone ſpake to me.

Attorn. Gen. But he told you it was the firſt Advice of ſome others?

Major Alford. Truly, I do not remember that he did tell me ſo: there was a Commiſſion and Inſtructions read at Mr. Love's, but whether agreed upon there or no, I know not.

Attorn. Gen. What know you ſince Dunbar Fight?

Major Alford. For that, we met at Mr. Love's Houſe, in his lower Room, and there was a Letter that was ſaid came from Maſſey, wherein he gave an account of that Buſineſs, how many Men were loſt; and that he did write for Arms to be ſent, and in his Letter did propoſe a way, as I remember, to be done by the way of Holland: I cannot tell the particular number of Arms he writ for, but for Arms: and alſo did ſpeak ſomething in it concerning his own and Titus's Neceſſity, they being there Strangers.

Attorn.

Attorn. Gen. There was a Propoſition made, of raiſing ſome Money for Supply of their Neceſſities?

Major Alford. It was not to purchaſe Money, or Arms, for any ſuch thing, but only a Propoſition made for ſupplying thoſe Gentlemens perſonal Neceſſities.

Attorn. Gen. And how was that to be done?

Major Alford. It was to be done among ourſelves, to raiſe ſome Money; there was Five Hundred Pounds ſpoken of, but it was impoſſible for us to do that, for us that were inconſiderable Men, being Men of mean Eſtates and Fortunes, and ſo it was brought down to a leſs Sum.

Attorn. Gen. What was that Sum?

Major Alford. Either Two or Three Hundred Pounds, I cannot tell which.

Attorn. Gen. How was that to be raiſed?

Major Alford. It was to be raiſed among ourſelves.

Attorn. Gen. And did you ſubſcribe then preſently?

Major Alford. No, I did not.

Attorn. Gen. Who did?

Major Alford. I cannot tell that any did; for I then ſaid, that I did not know that either myſelf, or any there, was engaged by Promiſe to do any thing for any, only for Captain Titus; for he alone was there upon our Intereſt, and therefore I ſaid, for that I would contribute Ten Pounds.

Attorn. Gen. How much did Mr. Love contribute?

Major Alford. I do not know of any particular Sum.

Attorn. Gen. Did Mr. Love preſs you to contribute, or move any to do it?

Major Alford. Truly Mr. Love did move to Contribution of Money, for the Purpoſe we ſpeak of, for the Supply of Titus.

Attorn. Gen. When was Titus there?

Major Alford. I cannot tell.

Ld Preſident. Did Mr. Love move it?

Major Alford. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Love. Was I the firſt that did move it?

Major Alford. Truly I cannot tell that.

Attorn. Gen. Was it at that time that the Letters were read?

Major Alford. It was at that time.

Ld Preſident. And was Mr. Love there then?

Major Alford. Yes, it was at that time.

Attorn. Gen. Do you remember of any Declaration of the Kirk and State read at that time?

Major Alford. No indeed, I do not.

Ld Preſident. You did ſay, that the Letter did mention for Arms?

Major Alford. But we did all, every one of us, diſavow that, but only the Supply of their particular Occaſions.

Attorn. Gen. Was there no Motion then made for a Letter to be written to the Church of Scotland, to preſs them to Union and Moderation?

Major Alford. Not that I know of.

Attorn. Gen. Was there not a Motion of ſending Fifty Pounds to Colonel Graves? And what ſucceeded upon it?

Major Alford. I do not know of any Particular, but only of the Sum to be raiſed in reſpect of Titus.

Attorn. Gen. How ſhould your Three Hundred Pounds be diſpoſed of?

Major Alford. That I cannot tell.

Attorn. Gen. For whom was it to be raiſed?

Major Alford. I told the Court that it was propoſed for Maſſey, and for Titus.

Attorn. Gen. Did you pay your Money?

Major Alford. No, I did not pay it, for I went out of Town preſently: I did promiſe Ten Pounds, and Ten Pounds I paid, but I cannot tell to whom I paid it, I believe it was paid by my Man.

Attorn. Gen. Did he bring it to you upon account as paid?

Major Alford. I believe he did.

Attorn. Gen. What do you know more?

Major Alford. Truly, nothing more.

Attorn. Gen. What do you know of any Correſpondency ſettled at Kendal?

Major Alford. Nothing at all.

Attorn. Gen. This was ſince Dunbar Fight. Do you know of any Letters that came from the Kirk, or Lowdon, or Argyle, or any of thoſe?

Major Alford. No, I know nothing of that.

Mr. Love. You confeſs you went to Calais, and brought the Copy of a Letter from Titus: Did I ſend you to Titus?

Major Alford. No, I do not ſay you did.

Mr. Love. It is alledged by this Gentleman, that it was ſent out of my Houſe: Did I write any Letter by you when you went into Holland? And upon your coming home, you ſay the Copy of a Letter was read at my Houſe: Will you ſwear I was in the Room at the time when the Letter was read? I was in my Houſe, but did not I go often out and in? Sir, I do ſpeak this, becauſe ſome at the Committee ſaid I went in and out often: Do you ſwear that I heard the Letter read in my Houſe?

Major Alford. Mr. Love, it was read in your Study; but that you were there when the Letter was read, I cannot tell.

Mr. Love. He ſays, he cannot tell that I heard the Letter read.

Major Alford. I cannot tell whether you might go out.

Mr. Love. How long ago was this Letter?

Major Alford. I think it was at that time the King was at Jerſey, I cannot remember the Month, I think about two Years ago.

Mr. Love. Was the Letter ſent to me, or was it received by me?

Major Alford. I did not ſay it was, I gave the Paper I brought over from Titus to William Drake; and ſome two or three days after, when we did meet at your Houſe, Mr. Drake read thoſe Papers, for he told me they were the ſame, but I cannot tell they were the ſame.

Mr. Love. I deſire he may be asked, whether I did give my Conſent to the ſending the pretended Commiſſion he ſpeaks of?

Major Alford. Truly, there was not any Man's particular Aſſent asked, that I know of.

Ld Preſident. Was it not agreed in the general, that it ſhould be ſent over?

Mr. Love. I pray ask him this Queſtion, did not I diſſent from ſending the Commiſſion?

Major Alford. I do not remember it.

Mr. Love. For the Buſineſs of Money, he ſaith there was Two or Three Hundred Pounds raiſed: Do you affirm I raiſed a Penny?

Major Alford. I did not ſay it was raiſed, but I ſay it was there propounded to be raiſed.

Ld Preſident. This he did ſay, there was a Propoſal for the doing of it, and you did perſuade the doing of it; and he left Ten Pounds with his Man afterwards.

Mr. Love. Ask him whether there was not a Letter at that time read, that Maſſey was withdrawn at that time in diſcontent from the Court?

Major Alford. I do not remember that Particular.

Mr.

Mr. Love. Ask him whether the Money was ſent to buy Arms, or raiſe Forces, or only to ſupply his Wants, he not having a Livelihood.

Major Alford. It was not for Arms, but it was for Maſſey and Titus, to ſupply their Neceſſities.

Mr. Love. But he proves not that I lent any.

Major Alford. I do not ſay you did.

Attorn. Gen. Obſerve Sir, there was a Letter for Arms at Mr. Love's Houſe, read there, and Mr. Love did propound Three Hundred Pounds to be raiſed, and preſs'd the doing of it accordingly. Major Alford did likewiſe lend Ten Pounds; you may believe there hath been tampering with this Witneſs too. My Lord, ask Major Alford whether there was not a Letter brought to him by his Siſter.

Major Alford. My Lord, after I had liberty for my Wife to come to me, ſhe did give me a Paper, which I knew was my Siſter's Hand; if I ſaw the thing, I could tell, but it did miſcarry.

Capt. Fiſher. My Lord, the Meſſenger is here in the Court that did take the Letter, of which this is the true Copy word for word.

[Major Alford withdraws, and Major Huntington is called into the Court, and is ſworn.]

Ld Preſident. What do you know about Mr. Love's Houſe, about the Commiſſion, and Captain Titus?

Major Huntington. My Lord, I can ſay, that about March 1648, I met with Major Alford, and he told me that Titus was in Town, and asked me if I knew him, and I told him, Ay; and asked him where he was. He ſaid he was newly come from beyond Sea, from the Fry, there being Alderman Bunce. I asked him where he was, he ſaid little to me; but he ſaid he was to meet him the next day at the Swan at Dowgate; that there was to be ſome Citizens in order to thoſe Gentlemen beyond the Seas, to ſpeak with him there. I did meet, and the Citizens there, were Col. Barton, Col. Vaughan, Captain Maſſey, Lieut. Col. Bains, and I think Hollis his Man, I am not certain of it; but Captain Far was there. The Buſineſs at that time, was only Commendations from their Friends there; and to tell them that he was commended to their Acquaintance. And afterwards, he grew into very high Praiſes of the Prince, and that he had the knowledge of it from a Scotch Lord, I know not his Name. After this, he told them the Prince was running very unhandſome Courſes, and they had very great hopes that his own Inclinations did not lead him to it, but it was the Malignant Party about him, that had a prevalency over him there, as over his Father here; but he did rather incline to join with the Iriſh Rebels, and did believe he would incline that way, unleſs he could get ſomething from hence, to divert him from it: whereupon he did hope they would all ſet themſelves that way, and that he would get Letters from Perſons of Honour (whom I know not) that ſhould perſuade him into a good Belief of the Scots, and to take the Covenant. After this, there was a Meeting again, I think fourteen days after, at the White-Hart in Breadſteeet, and there I met too. In the time that I was there, I did underſtand there had been a Meeting or two before, in order to the Buſineſs; and Captain Titus did declare, he had now again Letters from Perſons of Honour, to ſend to my Lord Piercy, and did hope they would ſet ſomething a-foot amongſt themſelves of the like conſequence: for Maſſey, Bunce, and Graves could ſee no way under the heavens but for the King to take the Covenant, and join with the Scots, and to engage the Covenanting Party here. And to that purpoſe, he draws forth a Paper that did purport that they were bound in Honour, and Juſtice, and Conſcience, and I think Loyalty, to maintain him in his juſt Rights, if he would go and join with the Covenanting Party in Scotland; and that he had no other way under God but that: which if he did, they took themſelves bound in Conſcience to help him to his juſt Rights. Upon this, Lieut. Col. Bains makes objection to it, and ſaid, it was a Malignant Buſineſs, and did fear there was no good Deſign in the thing; and thereupon they did break up. I cannot tell whether it was ſent or no, for they were afraid he would betray the Buſineſs.

After that, I was told by Major Alford, that Bains told them he was very ſorry he ſhould meddle in that Buſineſs, and that they would never proſper that had any thing to do with him, for that the Sins of him and his Father were ſo great: whereupon they were very wary, and afraid he would diſcover the Buſineſs. And he, I think, knew no further. After this, I did underſtand this Letter was ſent to the Prince, and I was told ſo by Major Alford, that it was ſent in the name of the ſecluded Members, and Miniſters, and Citizens, and Soldiery, and Noblemen; I remember it fetch'd a great compaſs. Whereupon when the Prince ſaw this Letter, and had it from my Lord Piercy, he ſtormed at it, and ſaid, Who are theſe Noblemen, and the reſt? What can they do for me? Can they raiſe me Ten Thouſand Men? Whereupon there was nothing done, but Titus retired himſelf to his Mother's Houſe, and there lived about three quarters of a year, and came to Town after, and did ſollicit his own Buſineſs. A little after this, I heard (upon the Buſineſs of the Scots) that there was another Letter ſent, that did begin the thing again, and now the Prince had conſidered of the thing, and ſent over the Letter, and I heard, that it was to the Miniſters of London. I did not ſee the Letter, but Alford and Drake told me it was ſo. After this, Titus was ſent away, and that with a Sum of Money, as I heard; who lent the Money, I cannot tell, and what Sum I know not: but preſently after this, I coming to Town out of the Weſt in March 1649, in the beginning of March, the day of my coming to London, after I had been here one or two days at moſt, I met with Hollis's Man in Fleetſtreet, I do not know his Name; he met me, and I asked him, what News? He told me, he wonder'd that I was a Stranger, and asked him what News: Saith he, If you come to Mr. Love's Houſe, you ſhall hear News. What is your Buſineſs there, ſaid I? He ſaid, it was to pray together, and to hear the News. I went about Nine of the clock, and Prayer was over, and the News a great part was over: but after I did come there, that I did hear was this; William Drake pulled a Paper out of his pocket, that I underſtood he had put into his pocket, or withdrawn, becauſe of a Stranger, and afterwards he took it out again. The Subſtance of the Paper was to this purpoſe, as I remember, it was in Characters, and pulled out of his pocket, and by him read:

'In the name of the Commiſſioners commiſſionating the Lord Willoughby of Parham, Major-General Maſſey, Colonel Graves, Captain Titus, and Alderman Bunce, in order to the Treaty, in the behalf of the well-affected Party in England; and theſe to join with the Scotch Commiſſioners, according to ſuch Inſtructions that ſhould be there-

'with

' with incloſed.' And ſomebody asked him, What power have we to give ſuch a Commiſſion? It was anſwered again by William Drake, That we have the King's Command for it, and we have likewiſe the Authority of ſome prudent Parliament-Man, whom we look upon (ſaith he) beyond the power of them that now ſit. Whereupon Mr. Love replies, Come, come, let it go: And after that, I knew nothing.

Attorn. Gen. Repeat that again.

Huntington. When the Queſtion was asked, What power have we to ſend or give Commiſſion? ſaith Drake, We have the Command of the King to do it; beſides, we have the Authority of ſecluded Members. Whereupon Mr. Love replied, Come, come, let it go.

Mr. Love. Pray ask him this one Queſtion, Were there no Speeches between William Drake's Words, and thoſe Words he pretends were mine?

Huntington. I remember none.

[Huntington withdraws. Lieut. Col. Bains is call'd into the Court, and is ſworn.]

Ld Preſident. Speak what you know of this Buſineſs.

Bains. My Lord, concerning any thing that came from Scotland, I never knew any thing, nor did I ever hear any thing. For Dowgate, I was at two Meetings at Dowgate: At the firſt Meeting there was a Perſon that I did not know, which at the ſecond Meeting I was told was Captain Titus; and he at that Meeting (where there was nine, or ten, or more, or thereabouts) he did propoſe ſomething to be done, in order to the reſtoring or preſerving the Presbyterian Intereſt, by way of Application to the King, as he called him, and did adviſe it to be by way of Petition, and that he conceived to be the only way to preſerve the Presbyterian Intereſt in England; and that way would be the way to aſſure him, he had a conſiderable Party in England. And he did uſe many Arguments, as a Duty lying upon us by our Covenant, to apply ourſelves to him, and he offered to draw up a Draught of a Petition againſt the next Meeting to that purpoſe: And he ſaid, it was neceſſary ſomething ſhould be done by ſome Parliament-Men, and ſome Miniſters, and ſome Citizens, that were leading Men, Men that thereby he might be aſſured that he had a Party, and that conſiderable. At the next Meeting, which was ſuddenly after, he did produce a Paper, which, as I remember, was in Short-hand; a Petition, which was to the purpoſe I have hinted. There were ſeveral Debates, whether it ſhould be ſigned or not ſigned, and myſelf and two more before diſliked it; and before he read the Paper, he began to commend the Good-nature of the King, what good Affections he had; and likewiſe did ſay, there was a neceſſity ſomething ſhould be done to the Queen, and Jermin, and Piercy; who, he ſaid, were our Friends, that they ſhould ſtir him up to comply with the Scotch Commiſſioners. And upon this, there was myſelf, and two more there preſent, (I hope it ſat upon them as upon myſelf) diſliked the Buſineſs; and from that time, for my own part, I never heard any thing. The Heads of the Petition I cannot ſuddenly remember. This Paper carries the Sum and Subſtance of the Buſineſs.

[The Clerk ſhews him a Paper, which he had formerly given in.]

Bains. This Paper, if it be not interlined ſince, it was of my own dictating, and writ with my own Hand. [He looks upon the Paper.] I ſee no alteration made at all.

Ld Preſident. And this you deliver upon Oath?

Bains. Yes, upon my Oath, to the beſt of my remembrance. And as to the Priſoner, I can ſay nothing.

[Bains withdraws. Major Adams is called into the Court, and ſworn.]

Ld Preſident. Declare your Knowledge in this Buſineſs.

Adams. Touching Alderman Bunce and Maſon, I know ſomething by relation touching the Correſpondency with them.

Ld Preſident. Tell the manner of it.

Adams. I conceive it was carried on by Mr. Drake, that is now abſent; and in Scotland, by one Bailey.

Attorn. Gen. What do you know of Maſon, and of Letters ſent by him?

Adams. Maſon I do know, and I do know he did receive Letters.

Ld Preſident. From whom?

Adams. He ſaid, from my Lord Piercy.

Attorn. Gen. To whom were thoſe Letters communicated here?

Adams. They were communicated to Mr. Drake, and by Mr. Drake to myſelf, and Mr. Alford, and Capt. Potter, and Capt. Far.

Attorn. Gen. Was Mr. Love privy to it?

Adams. I cannot ſay that, my Lord.

Attorn. Gen. Were there not Letters ſent to Scotland to them, and back again hither, about ſending moderate Propoſitions to the King?

Adams. There was ſuch Letters.

Ld Preſident. Who writ them?

Adams. That I cannot tell.

Ld Preſident. Had Mr. Love a hand in them?

Adams. I cannot ſay he had: I cannot prove a Negative, I cannot ſay he had not.

Attorn. Gen. What know you of the Petition ſent to the King?

Adams. I know nothing of it, only I was told of it.

Ld Preſident. Who told you of it?

Adams. I cannot, my Lord, fix it upon any particular Man, but I believe I was told of it by Alford, or Far, or Bains: for I was not there at that time.

Ld Preſident. What do you know about the Meeting at the Swan at Dowgate?

Adams. My Lord, I was not there.

Attorn. Gen. Then, my Lord, he may tell you what he doth know?

Adams. My Lord, upon our meeting in ſome place or other, I cannot tell where, I cannot tell the time, nor the place, but either at the Swan in Fiſh-ſtreet, or at the Swan at Dowgate, or in Cateaten-ſtreet: in one of theſe three places, I cannot punctually remember.

Attorn. Gen. Who was at that Meeting?

Adams. Mr. William Drake, Captain Titus, Major Alford, Captain Far, Captain Potter, and myſelf; and I do not know how many more, or whether any more or no.

Ld Preſident. What paſs'd there?

Adams. It was there agreed, that Captain Titus ſhould go over to Jerſey.

Attorn. Gen. What was he employ'd about?

Adams. The End of his going was to endeavour to work an Agreement between the King and Scots, according to the Covenant; that was the End

End that was propounded. And in order to his going, we did agree to furniſh him with Money for the preſent, and made ſome kind of Promiſe to maintain him while he was out.

Attorn. Gen. What Money was he furniſhed with?

Adams. I canot be punctual in that, but about a Hundred Pounds.

Attorn. Gen. Who ſhould pay it?

Adams. I paid Twenty Pounds of it, but I cannot tell who paid the reſt.

Attorn. Gen. To whom did you pay it?

Adams. To Mr. Drake.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, ask him whether when this was ſent to Jerſey, was there not a Return made?

Ld Preſident. Well, go on: There was your Twenty Pounds gone?

Adams. This is the Subſtance of what I can ſay of his going.

Attorn. Gen. Was this Twenty Pounds that you laid out of your own, or did you collect it of ſome of the reſt, or did you gather any of it again?

Adams. I cannot ſay that I did.

Ld Preſident. Did you not?

Adams. My Lord, I tell you the truth, I do not know whether I did or no; for I remember, it was determined that we ſhould gather it at that Meeting.

Attorn. Gen. Did not Mr. Love know of the Collection?

Adams. I cannot ſay he did; it may be he might, but I dare not ſay upon my Oath, that he knew of it.

Attorn. Gen. Ask him what Return Titus made, what Anſwer, and what Account he gave.

Adams. Major Alford went to Calais to meet Titus, and Titus did ſend word that the Council of State heard of his being there, and thereupon deſired that ſomebody might be ſent over to him; for he had ſomething to communicate, which he could not well do by writing, and thereupon Mr. Alford was ſent.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, ask him where the Letter was read.

Adams. The Letter that Titus ſent, was read by Mr. William Drake.

Attorn. Gen. Where?

Adams. At his Houſe, as I think, for I cannot certainly remember; I did not ſay upon my Examination, that it was read any where.

Attorn. Gen. Whether were not you moved to go?

Adams. There was ſome Motion to that end, I think in Mr. Love's Chamber.

Ld Preſident. Who moved it, and where?

Adams. Who moved it, I cannot tell; it was moved, I think, in Mr. Love's Chamber.

Attorn. Gen. Was Mr. Love there?

Adams. He was there.

Attorn. Gen. Did Mr. Love move it?

Adams. I cannot ſay he did.

Ld Preſident. He will not ſay it.

Adams. I cannot ſay it, upon my Oath.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, ſo much he ſaith, That it was moved in Mr. Love's Chamber: then he may give you an Account of Mr. Alford's Return, and where the Account was given.

Adams. The Return of Mr. Alford's Account was given at Mr. Love's Houſe.

Ld Preſident. What was it?

Adams. The Return he made in general was by a Narrative, and a Copy of a Letter from the King: there was with the Narrative that which was ſaid to be the Copy of a Letter from the King.

Ld Preſident. What was the Subſtance of that Letter?

Adams. The Contents of the Letter, as I remember, was, Firſt, he expreſs'd a great deal of Affection to the Miniſtry of England in general, and promiſed great Favour when he was in a condition to do it, and deſired them to continue ſtedfaſt in the way they were in.

Attorn. Gen. Was this Letter publiſhed at Mr. Love's Study?

Adams. It was read.

Ld Preſident. Was Mr. Love there?

Adams. Truly, to be poſitive that Mr. Love was there, I dare not ſay; but Mr. Love was there at that Meeting, either at the beginning or ending; but whether the Letter was read at Mr. Love's Houſe, I dare not ſwear. The Narrative from Titus was a very long one, and very well drawn, I cannot give an account of it now: the whole of it was after this manner; To give an account to us of all the Tranſactions that had happened ſince his going out of England, he did give an account of his Uſage by the Cavalier Party, that was againſt the King's Agreement with the Scots, becauſe there was ſome did incline to his Agreement with them, and there was another Party was much againſt it; and he gave a very large account of that. After that, he went on deſcribing his Diſpoſition and Condition.

Attorn. Gen. This was the Subſtance of the reſt. Was there not ſome Propoſitions for giving of Thanks to Titus, for his ſo well managing his Affairs there?

Adams. There was a Motion made by ſomebody.

Ld Preſident. Who made the Motion?

Adams. I cannot tell.

Attorn. Gen. Was not a Hundred Pounds more to be ſent agreed upon there?

Adams. I think ſo.

Attorn. Gen. There was more Money contributed: Who agreed to lend any?

Adams. Sir, to that Queſtion, I cannot ſay who propounded it; but that there was Money ſent.

Ld Preſident. Who contributed?

Adams. I did my ſhare.

Ld Preſident. How much was that?

Adams. As I remmeber, Ten Pounds.

Attorn. Gen. To whom did you pay it, and where did you pay it?

[Then they ſhew'd him his Examination.]

Ld Preſident. Come, look upon it, and be well adviſed.

[Adams looks upon his Examination.]

Adams. I paid it to Mr. Drake, at his Father's Shop in Cheapſide.

Attorn. Gen. Next about the Commiſſion and Inſtructions to be ſent, what do you know of that? When this Letter was read from the King, and publiſhed in Mr. Love's Study, whether was there not a Commiſſion agreed upon, to give Inſtructions to treat with the King at Breda?

Adams. There was a Motion made at Mr. Love's Houſe, that there ſhould be a Commiſſion and Inſtructions drawn and ſent. The Motion was made at Mr. Love's Houſe; they were there ſpoken of.

Ld Preſident. By whom? Who did the Dialogue run between? Did Mr. Love do it?

Adams. Truly, for my part, I did not then take ſuch ſpecial Notice, that I dare at this time upon my Oath deliver any thing poſitively againſt any particular Man; but generally all ſpake ſomething, as I remember.

Attorn. Gen. Was there any Debate to mend the Inſtructions?

Adams. Truly, Sir, not as I remember.

Attorn. Gen. Did not Mr. Gibbons bring the rough Draught of the Commiſſion?

Adams. Truly, I think he did; as I remember he did. I have ſpoken of the Commiſſion and Inſtructions that were debated then and there; and that many of theſe Perſons, here mentioned, were there: But that ſome of them mentioned might not be there then, is very likely.

Attorn. Gen. Was Mr. Love there?

Adams. That he was there ſome part of this time, I am very confident.

Ld Preſident. Was it in his Study?

Adams. It was.

Attorn. Gen. Was there a Commiſſion agreed upon to be ſent?

Adams. For the Word Agreed, I cannot tell what to ſay to it: Agreed holds forth as if a Vote paſſed.

Ld Preſident. Was there not a general Conſent?

Adams. Being upon my Oath, I deſire to be cautious; for I muſt be tender in ſpeaking the Truth in this Caſe; and I do not know what to make of the Word Agreed.

Ld Preſident. Was it approved of?

Adams. To my Underſtanding the Thing was thus: That at ſuch Meetings as theſe we were not abſolutely formal, as if we had been eſtabliſhed by a Court of Juſtice to act thus; and that there ſhould be Prefaces, and ſuch Things, or ſuch Methods obſerved, as that any Man undertook to make a Preface either at the Beginning or Concluſion; but it was ſpoken to by many Perſons, and by every Perſon ſpoken to: And in this Senſe it was agreed.

Attorn. Gen. Were there not Inſtructions agreed upon; and all this in Mr. Love's Study?

Adams. It was ſo.

Ld Preſident. Were they not read there?

Adams. I think they were.

Ld Preſident. Who read them?

Adams. I cannot tell who read them; but they were read: And I think Mr. Drake read them.

Attorn. Gen. What was the Contents of the Commiſſion?

Adams. The Contents or the Subſtance of the Commiſſion was to this effect: [This he reads out o his Examination.]

'We, the Presbyterians of England, do authorize 'you the Lord Willoughby of Parham, Edward Maſſey, 'Richard Graves, Sylas Titus, and James Bunce, to 'aſſiſt our Brethren the Scotch Commiſſioners in 'their Treaty with the King, according to the In'ſtructions annexed.'

I dare not ſwear it in theſe Words; but to this purpoſe it was. The Subſtance of the Inſtructions were to uſe all the Arguments they could, to move the King to give the Scotch Satisfaction, and to take the Covenant: Such Arguments were mentioned as the then Condition of Affairs beſt afforded, particularly how Things ſtood in England at that time; which did all of them cry out for an Agreement, and gave them full Power as to all Things; and what ſhould be concluded by them, ſhould be confirmed by theſe here. But I cannot ſay ſo; but what Words were, were to this purpoſe, ſaving this Concluſion, That what was concluded ſhould be confirmed here: I do not remember that.

Attorn. Gen. Was there not ſome Debate by what Warrant they ſhould act in this Commiſſion and Inſtructions?

Adams. There were ſome ſuch Words at the Meeting.

Ld Preſident. What did Mr. Love ſay?

Adams. I cannot remember what Mr. Love did ſay; or whether he ſaid any thing, or nothing at that time: But that there were ſuch Words ſaid, I have ſaid; but by whom, I cannot fix it upon any particular Perſon.

Attorn. Gen. Was it not debated by what Warrant they ſhould derive Power to themſelves to ſend this Commiſſion?

Adams. There was ſuch Language; but by whom I cannot ſay; I think by William Drake. It was becauſe the King had writ this Letter, wherein he deſired there ſhould be ſuch Inſtructions. There was ſomething ſpoken of the ſecluded Members; but by whom, I do not know. There was a Propoſition, whether the Authority ſhould be taken from the ſecluded Members, or from ſome other.

Attorn. Gen. Did not Mr. Love then ſay, Come, let it go on?

Adams. I dare not ſay ſo.

Attorn. Gen. Was it not propounded at the Meeting to write to the Queen, and to Jermin and Piercy, for them to mediate with the King to agree with the Scots?

[Adams's Examination was here again read.]

Adams. My Lord, ſo much of this as I think to be true, I ſhall own.

Attorn. Gen. Was not a Letter writ from Piercy, that a conſiderable Sum of Money was fit to be ſent to the King? And what Anſwer was given? Was it not to be done till the King and the Scots ſhould agree, and then to raiſe the Money?

Adams. That there was ſuch a Letter writ, I muſt needs acknowledge.

Attorn. Gen. Where was it read? At Mr. Love's Houſe?

Adams. No certainly: I only ſaw it in Maſon's own Hands; and I remember he ſhewed it me.

Attorn. Gen. Next, ask him whether there was not a Letter written about Auguſt laſt to ſome here, that Maſſey had Back-Friends in Scotland, complaining he could not be promoted there.

Adams. I did underſtand there was ſuch a Letter; but by what way, I do not know.

Attorn. Gen. Was not the Letter communicated at Mr. Love's Houſe? And were not you preſent when this Letter was read at Mr. Love's Houſe, wherein Maſſey complained he had Back-Friends in Scotland?

Adams. No certainly: That Letter was not, to my remembrance, read there. I heard of ſuch a Letter, but ſaw it not.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, ask him whether he was not appointed to draw up ſome Letters.

Adams. There were ſome I ſhould have had a hand in drawing.

Attorn. Gen. Who were appointed with you?

Adams. As I remember, Captain Potter, Captain Maſſey, and Mr. Gibbons.

Attorn. Gen. But was there no Meeting upon it? Was Mr. Love named?

Adams. Mr. Love was not named.

Attorn. Gen. Was there not one Sterks, a Scotch Agent here, that kept Intelligence from Scotland?

Adams. I know there was ſuch a one, we took to be an Agent here.

Ld Preſident. Did he meet at your Meetings?

Adams. Yes, he did meet ſometimes.

Attorn. Gen. Was he at Mr. Love's Houſe at any time?

Adams. That he was.

Attorn. Gen. When the Act came forth for baniſhing the Scots, was there not a Collection for his Charges? And were not you at Mr. Love's Houſe when it was agreed to?

Adams. I was not.

Attorn. Gen. Did you contribute Money?

Adams. I did contribute ten or twelve Shillings; I cannot tell which.

Attorn. Gen. What Diſcourſe upon Dunbar-Fight was there from this Perſon that is already ſpoken of?

Adams. This is the Thing: If you pleaſe to help my Memory; for there are ſo many Particulars in this Correſpondency, that I cannot tell whereabouts it is I am to ſpeak to; I am very uncertain whereabouts it is I am to ſpeak to.

Ld Preſident. Speak the Certainty as it was in your Breaſt.

Adams. My Lord, if it be doubtful to me, how can I be certain, and charge it upon my Memory?

Ld Preſident. Speak the Truth.

Adams. I will ſpeak the Truth.

Ld Preſident. Do ſo then.

[Here again Adams looks upon his Examination.]

Adams. There is ſome of it I did ſet down, that I dare not own upon my Oath: I then did deliver it ſo, when I ſet it down.

Attorn. Gen. Did Mr. Love know that this Scotchman was the Scotch Agent? Did you not take notice that Mr. Love took notice of him?

Adams. I do think he did; as far as I underſtand, he did.

Attorn. Gen. Did not Mr. Love generally tell you the Cauſe of the Meetings?

Adams. No, Sir.

Attorn. Gen. Did you not hear Mr. Love ſay that this Sterks was the Scotch Agent?

Adams. I never heard Mr. Love ſay ſo; but I knew this, that by our uſual Meetings Mr. Love did underſtand him, as I did, to be the Scotch Agent.

Attorn. Gen. How often did you meet at Mr. Love's Houſe?

Adams. I cannot tell: It may be ſeven, or eight, or ten Times: An uncertain Time.

Attorn. Gen. He was at Mr. Love's Study?

Adams. Whether ſo many Times, I know not.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, ask him whether it was not at Mr. Love's Study, when Money was propounded to be raiſed for Maſſey and Titus.

Ld Preſident. Was that in Mr. Love's Study?

Adams. I cannot tell whether it was in his Study, or in the Lower Room: I am apt to believe it was in the Lower Room.

Attorn. Gen. Was Mr. Love there?

Adams. Certainly he was there.

Ld Preſident. What was the Contents of the Letter?

Adams. The Contents of the Letter I cannot remember.

Attorn. Gen. Whether did it not declare the Poverty of his Condition? And was it not after Dunbar-Fight?

Adams. Yes, it was.

Attorn. Gen. Was this Letter from Maſſey read at Maſter Love's Houſe? Was this for Money?

Adams. It was.

Ld Preſident. Was it agreed for Money to be raiſed?

Adams. If you take the Word Agreed as I formerly propounded, it was ſo.

Attorn. Gen. How was the Money to be raiſed, and in what manner?

Adams. It was by thoſe that were privy to the Contribution.

Attorn. Gen. Was not Mr. Love there? And did not he write down the Sums that were to be contributed?

Adams. This I muſt needs ſay, That Maſter Love had Papers in his Hand, and he did write ſomething; but I did not ſee what he did write: And every Man did write that was there.

Attorn. Gen. Did not you conceive ſo, That Maſter Love ſummed up every Man's Sum? Did he put the Letter of their Names before them, when he writ the Sums?

Adams. I cannot ſay that.

Attorn. Gen. Was not there a Letter penned by Maſter Love and Doctor Drake?

Adams. To that Queſtion, I muſt ſay there was a Letter; but I cannot deliver it upon my Oath that it was penn'd by Maſter Love or Doctor Drake: But it was taken to be ſo; and I thought it was ſo.

Attorn. Gen. To whom was that Letter directed?

Adams. I cannot tell to whom.

Attorn. Gen. To whom was it declared to be directed? To whom was it declared to be written?

Adams. To the General Aſſembly and Kirk of Scotland.

Ld Preſident. Was this at Mr. Love's Houſe too?

Adams. It was ſo.

Attorn. Gen. Was Mr. Love preſent, and did approve of it?

Adams. Mr. Love was preſent at ſome time of this Meeting. The Reaſon why I thought it to be of Maſter Love's or Doctor Drake's drawing, was nothing but merely the Language of it, it being in order to promote the Ends of the Covenant; and all the whole Language was couched to that purpoſe; and taking notice of the want of Reſpect to Maſſey and the Engliſh, and of their being beaten.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, this is very high: For he tells you this Letter was approved of, and directed to be ſent; and this was after Dunbar-Fight, after we were engaged in Blood.

[Here Adams read out of his Examination, as followeth:]

Adams. There was alſo a large Letter, in the nature of a Declaration, penn'd by Maſter Love and Dr. Drake, and approved of by moſt of the Presbyterian Party, Miniſters, and others, and directed to the General Aſſembly and Kirk of Scotland, ſubſcribed by none: Which contained the Subſtance of what was declared by Titus and Maſſey; but durſt not promiſe any great Sums of Money till they appeared more conſiderable, and grew nearer Action. The Buſineſs required higher Spirits than was for the preſent; and the Buſineſs required a conſiderable Sum: But to leave no Means unattempted when the Buſineſs was feazible. [So far he reads.]

Attorn. Gen. Major Adams is now upon his Oath to tell you.

Adams. My Lord, as well as I remember, it did put forth much after this ſort: But I cannot ſwear it in theſe Words; but that is the Subſtance of it.

Attorn. Gen. Was not this agreed and declared at Mr. Love's Houſe, that ſuch a Letter ſhould be written to the Honourable Committee, and to the Kirk?

Adams. I anſwer that, after the ſame manner as all other Things are agreed at ſuch Meetings as this is: But I have no ground, and do not know why I ſhould ſay Maſter Love and Doctor Drake penn'd it.

Attorn. Gen. Ask him for the Subſtance of the Letter; whether it were not as he hath told you; and whether he did not ſay they could not promiſe a conſiderable Sum of Money.

Adams. Certainly, either in that Letter, or ſome other, there was ſome ſuch Expreſſions.

Ld Preſident. Well, it was about that Time, and in that Letter, or in ſome other Letter, and at Mr. Love's Houſe.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, ask him if there was not an Agent come from Scotland, and a way laid at Kendall for a Correſpondency between theſe Gentlemen here and ſome of Scotland; and whether one Groves was not ſent thither.

Adams. That was ſomething obſcure: That there was ſuch a Thing, I do verily believe, becauſe it went amongſt us for a Truth; but how to make it out for a Truth, upon my Oath I cannot tell.

Ld Preſident. Did Mr. Love know of it?

Adams. I do not know.

Attorn. Gen. Ask him what he knows concerning Colonel Bamfield's Man coming hither.

Adams. Concerning that, I knew nothing: But I confeſs I had ſome Item that at that time there was ſomething found. And this is all I can ſay to that; I cannot gueſs the Time.

Attorn. Gen. Was it after the Fight at Dunbar?

Adams. Yes, that it was.

Attorn. Gen. Were the Meetings at Mr. Love's Houſe?

Adams. I cannot ſay all: But all that I know of were.

Attorn. Gen. Ask whether upon the large Letter Maſſey did not write that Things were well ſettled in Scotland.

Adams. Many of theſe Things were underſtood ſo, and taken for granted amongſt us; but I can ſay no otherwiſe: I thought it to be ſo; but I know not.

Attorn. Gen. Were you not preſent, or at Mr. Love's Houſe, when theſe Letters were read, that they were in a hopeful Condition?

Adams. I cannot ſay ſo.

Ld Preſident. What can you ſay?

Adams. As before, That it went for a Truth amongſt us: And that is as much as I can ſay to it.

Attorn. Gen. Was there not a large Letter inviting your Friends to Union?

Adams. I underſtand the other Letter to be this you propound to me now.

Attorn. Gen. Now we ſpeak of a Letter from Alderman Bunce, and others.

Adams. I cannot ſpeak particularly to that; for I did not ſee them; but they were told me by one or other of thoſe that were of the Correſpondency: And this all I can ſay.

Ld Preſident. What is the Truth? Do you conceive it is ſo?

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, we ſhall not trouble him with that. My Lord, ask him one Queſtion more: What did Mr. Love tell you, that if the Presbyterians got the upper hand again?

Adams. Thoſe words, I think, did but amount to this, That if the Presbyterians were in Arms again, by the Bleſſing of God, the Cavaliering Party might be prevented from getting the day.

Ld Preſident. Who do you mean by the Correſpondents?

Adams. By Correſpondents I mean Alford, Potter, Far, &c.

Ld Preſident. Was not Mr. Love one of them?

Adams. I took him to be ſo, my Lord.

Mr. Love. My Lord, I pray ask him, whether any of theſe pretended or ſuppoſed Letters were ever received by me, any one of them, or that I writ one of them, or mended one of them.

Adams. I cannot ſay that ever I ſaw him do any ſuch Thing; nor did I ever ſee him write any.

Ld Preſident. But you ſaw the Letters there?

Adams. That I have ſaid.

Mr. Love. Ask him whether I gave my Conſent to the ſending away of this he calls a Commiſſion and Inſtructions, about the Time of the Treaty at Breda.

Adams. No, I will not ſwear that; and upon my Oath I cannot.

Ld Preſident. Will you not? I will preſs you to nothing. You ſaid even now, you did not know he did ſend them away; but you did ſay he was privy to them, and to the Debates of them. Did he declare any Diſſent?

Adams. I cannot ſay that.

Mr. Love. Will you ask him this Queſtion? Whether he read the Letters that he pretends were ſent into England or Scotland, or whether he heard them read?

Ld Preſident. That he ſwears.

Adams. I did not ſwear that theſe were the Contents of them exactly: I was there when theſe Letters were read.

Mr. Love. He only heard them read.

Ld Preſident. If there were half a ſcore that had Correſpondency, and received Letters, and come together, and one of the moſt confiding Men read them; will any Man ſay that he will not believe theſe were right read? Such a Hear-ſay as this, is ſuch a Hear-ſay as you may take notice of.

Mr. Love. But let him prove how it was a Correſpondency on my part.

Adams. I did not ſay that Mr. Love was one of the Correſpondents; I deny that I ſaid ſo: I ſaid I conceived him to be ſo; but that is not that he was ſo.

Ld Preſident. They did debate together, and met together, and received Inſtructions; and therefore he may very aptly conceive he was a Correſpondent.

Mr. Love. Doth he ſwear that I aſſented?

Adams. I did not ſwear ſo.

Mr. Love. He ſaith Money was ſent to Titus; pray ask him whether by Agents I employed.

Adams. I cannot ſay ſo.

Mr. Love. Here is no Proof at all that ever I received Letter, or writ or ſent any Letter. Pray ask him if I knew before they came to my Houſe, that they would bring ſuch Letters with them. Do you ſwear that I was preſent in the Room at the time that the Letters after the Defeat at Dunbar were ſent, wherein there was, as you ſay, a Promiſe of Aſſiſtance?

Adams. You were there ſome part of the while.

Mr. Love. Ask him whether he was not threaten'd with Death in caſe he would not, and promiſed Favour in caſe he would, bring in Evidence againſt me.

Adams. I cannot ſay I was threaten'd with Death to that end.

Mr. Love.

Mr. Love. I ſhall bring a Witneſs that ſhall prove from his own Mouth, that he hath confeſs'd, If he did not bring in Evidence againſt me, he ſhould be hanged.

Adams. It is true: Percival did come to me, and I did ſay to him, That upon Examination, I did ſay, if I were not ingenuous, I was threaten'd to be hanged.

Attorn. Gen. When a Man is a Traytor, and doth confeſs, he deſerves Mercy.

Mr. Love. Ask him whether he hath not received Money to give in this Information againſt me.

Adams. I have not.

Mr. Love. Did not ſome Meſſenger come to you, ſome Months ago, from ſome Members of the Council of State, and told you you were poor, and ſhould be ruined if you did not confeſs it? He had three Meſſengers ſent unto him from the Council of State, or ſome of them, that told him, If he would not confeſs, he ſhould be ruined.

Attorn. Gen. Did you receive Money, or were there Promiſes made to you, to teſtify againſt Mr. Love?

Adams. Upon my Oath I did not.

Mr. Love. Hath he never come to Mr. Scot's Chamber? Did he not come a Month before I was committed, being brought there by Major Cobbet? And whether he hath not received Money from Major Cobbet? I deſire that Major Cobbet may be called upon his Oath, to know whether he hath not given him Money to bring in Information againſt me: For he hath taken notice of all Faſts, and of all Things done, and hath brought all to Mr. Scot. I know, by Information, that this Adams is a hired Witneſs. Sir, this Man is a Tobiah and a Sanballat: Some Men have hired this Man againſt me. I deſire Major Cobbet may be called.

Ld Preſident. He did, and might do it: But did he it to teſtify againſt Mr. Love? I hope a State, that watches the Nation, may watch for the Safety of a Nation.

[Mr. Cobbet, a Major of the Army, is called into the Court, and is ſworn.]

Mr. Love. Pray ask him whether he hath not at any time, within this three Months, given any Money to Major Adams, to acquaint Mr. Scot, or the Council of State, with this Deſign, as 'tis called.

Major Cobbet. My Lord, I muſt and do deny that which this Gentleman doth aver: And truly I wonder at his Boldneſs, in the Preſence of this Honourable Court. I do know Major Adams, and have known him a long while; and commiſerating him, as being a Priſoner, I lent him ten Pounds; but for no conſideration that he ſhould betray Mr. Love, or any Man. I paid the Money to his Wife.

Mr. Love. He paid it, he ſaith; how then did he lend it? And he paid it to his Wife: That was to cover the Bribery. But did not you diſcover to this Man, if he would reveal it to Mr. Scot, what Recompence he ſhould have of him? Did not you, walking in the Fields with him, deſire him to reveal what he knew; and promiſed him if he did, he ſhould be a Man preferred?

Major Cobbet. I have been acquainted with Major Adams this four or five Years, and met with him in the behalf of the Presbyters, underſtanding there was ſomething was driven on dangerous to the Commonwealth; and I thought I was bound in Duty to requite them, if it were poſſible, for their Pains of Diſcovery. And I laboured with him that he would deal ſo honeſtly with himſelf and the Commonwealth, as to let the Commonwealth know what he did know of this Deſign. Accordingly he gave me ſome notice; and I ſaid to him, Major Adams, if I find you ingenuous, if there be any thing that I can do for you, I ſhall be ready to ſerve you by Night and by Day.

Mr. Love. It appears then that the ten Pounds was not lent to Major Adams, but was paid him for his Diſcovery: So that 'tis clear he is a hired Witneſs. And have you not brought him to Mr. Scot's Chamber with Promiſes of Preferment?

[No Anſwer to that Queſtion.]

[The Lieutenant of the Tower is commanded to withdraw his Priſoner; and the Court adjourns till to-morrow.]

The ſecond Day's Proceedings, July the 21*ſt*, 1651.

THE Court being ſat, Colonel Weſt, Lieutenant of the Tower, was commanded to bring forth his Priſoner; and Mr. Love was brought to the Bar.

Maſter Jaquel was called into the Court, and the Clerk tendered him his Oath; and Mr. Jaquel ſpake to the Court to this purpoſe:

That there were many Oaths abroad, and he could not tell what to ſay to them; and he deſired to be excuſed. The Lord Preſident told him that he could not be excuſed. Mr. Jaquel ſaid he was a Priſoner, accuſed of the ſame Offences that Mr. Love was accuſed of; and that he conceived he was not a competent Witneſs againſt him. The Court again preſs'd him to take his Oath. Mr. Jaquel ſaid that he durſt not in Conſcience ſwear againſt Mr. Love; and therefore deſired it might not be preſs'd upon him. The Court ſtill perſiſted in it, that he muſt take his Oath, and witneſs what he knew. He anſwered, he would ſpeak the Truth of what he knew, as well as if he was under an Oath. The Court told him that that could not be; for if he did not ſwear, what he ſhould ſay could not be received as any thing in matter of Evidence. Mr. Jaquel ſtill perſiſted in his Refuſal. When the Court ſaw he could not be otherwiſe prevailed with, they fined him five hundred Pounds for refuſing to ſwear. And Mr. Jaquel, after he was withdrawn out of the Court, was called in again, and preſs'd to take his Oath; and was told that the Court had fined him five hundred Pounds for refuſing to ſwear; and again asked him whether he would ſwear. Mr. Jaquel then, when the Oath was read to him, did not ſwear in that manner as the other Witneſſes did, but only put his Hand to his Buttons. And when Mr. Love asked him whether he was under an Oath, he anſwered that he was as good as under an Oath. But the Court not being ſatisfied with that Anſwer, preſs'd him further; and then he did ſay he was ſworn, and was under Oath.

Ld Preſident. Declare now what you know of this Buſineſs.

Mr. Jaquel. My Lord, for the Paper I was examined about, as for knowing Titus, I never ſaw him in my Life, but one quarter of an Hour in a private Houſe, and I knew nothing of his Buſineſs any where. For the other, Alford coming over with Letters, I was at Mr. Love's Houſe, and when I was there, there were ſeveral Men there.

Attorn.

Attorn. Gen. In what part of Mr. Love's Houſe?

Jaquel. I conceive in his Chamber; for I went up to ſeveral that were there, whoſe Names I can poſitively ſay, for two or three of them, though I cannot remember the other abſolutely, though I conceive moſt I have named in my Examination were there; Capt. Potter was there, and Doctor Drake and Major Alford, and Mr. Love was there ſometimes, though divers times he went out, ſome coming to ſpeak with him.

Attorn. Gen. Was there not a Copy of a Letter, ſaid to be ſent from the King, read there?

Jaquel. I remember no ſuch thing.

Attorn. Gen. Was there not a Narrative?

Jaquel. Yes, from Titus, wherein he declared the King's Inclinations to make peace with the Scots, but that his wicked Counſel about him did hinder it.

Attorn. Gen. Was not this of what Titus had related from Jerſey, the Narrative of what had paſs'd between him and the King there?

Jaquel. I think it was.

Attorn. Gen. Was not Major Alford ſent to receive an Account from him to Calais?

Jaquel. William Drake did tell me ſo afterwards.

Attorn. Gen. Did Major Alford deliver no Account there?

Jaquel. I think it was Major Alford read the Narrative.

Attorn. Gen. Did he make no relation by word of Mouth?

Jaquel. Truly I cannot remember.

Attorn. Gen. You cannot remember it was read?

Jaquel. Yes, I am ſure it was read, and at Mr. Love's Houſe.

Attorn. Gen. And he was preſent ſometimes?

Jaquel. Yes, ſometimes.

Attorn. Gen. What Money was there agreed upon to be provided for Titus?

Jaquel. I know of none: it was moved by Captain Potter, that there might be forty Pounds, but I know of none, nor was it agreed by Mr. Love, Mr. Drake, or my ſelf, that we ſhould lay down any at all.

Attorn. Gen. Did you not meet with William Drake, and deſire to go along with him to ſee Titus?

Jaquel. I did ſo, but I think Drake deſired it: I met him in Newgate-Market, and, ſaith he, I am going to ſee Titus, go along with me. I ſaid I never ſaw him, nor did I know him: Says he, You ſhall not ſtay at all. Whereupon he went and found him in a Cheeſemonger's Houſe in Newgate-Market.

Attorn. Gen. What Diſcourſe had you?

Jaquel. He ſaid he was newly come out of Holland, and he had been with the King, and he was a Man of excellent Parts for his Years; and that he was inclinable to what was good, but that he had ſuch deſperate evil Counſel about him; and that he did much pity him, and that his Clergy eſpecially was wicked: and he propounded nothing to us, nor did I ever ſee his Face afterwards; and this is about two Years and a half ago. And for any other Meetings at the Swan-Tavern, or for any Agents, I never met him, or ſaw him.

Attorn. Gen. Do you not remember at any Meeting, that there was Money propounded for Captain Titus, or for Alford's being ſent over to Calais? Speak what you know of that, and by whom it was told you.

Jaquel. Major Alford himſelf told me he was to meet his Son, and he went over upon that ſcore; but after he was gone, William Drake told me he was gone to ſee or meet Captain Titus, I am not certain of the Words: and when he did come again, which was the next time I heard of him, then William Drake comes to me, and deſired me to go along with him, for I think he went up and down to every Man.

Attorn. Gen. You think then that William Drake was the prime Man.

Jaquel. Yes, he was the Actor and Agent that moved all.

Attorn. Gen. When Alford returned, he deſired you to go with him?

Jaquel. To Mr. Love's Houſe.

Attorn. Gen. What was done at Mr. Love's Houſe?

Jaquel. There were ſome Papers read, which Alford, as I take it, read, or William Drake, I am not certain which; but read it was, of a relation, that Titus came out of Jerſey, and had ſeen the King there, and the Scots Commiſſioners; and that the King had a great Inclination to agree with the Scots Commiſſioners, and that he was a Man of excellent Inclinations and Parts, and had a great Deſire to agree; but his Counſel, and wicked Crew about him would not let him: and he ſaid, as I remember, That the King was a kind of a Priſoner with them there, and ſaid, his Counſel did hinder him, or elſe, if he were from them, he would agree with the Scots Commiſſioners.

Attorn. Gen. You ſay this Paper was read, this Narrative was read in Mr. Love's Houſe; was not Mr. Love preſent?

Jaquel. I am not able to ſay he was: when I came in, I remember he was not in the Room, and he was there two or three times while I was there, but he was ſeveral times called out.

Attorn. Gen. Do not you know there was an Agreement of a Letter written back to Titus?

Jaquel. I can remember no ſuch thing, but I think William Drake told me ſo, as I remember, but that was two Years ago, I do verily believe by what I conceived, was of his writing.

Ld Preſident. I could wiſh that Mens Conſciences could not be ſcrupled to believe ſo much of a Miniſter, more than of a Magiſtrate; I hold it pernicious Doctrine for any Man to think he is bound more to obey the Miniſter than the Magiſtrate: I ask you then before the Magiſtrate here, who was preſent at that Meeting?

Jaquel. William Drake, I am ſure, and Major Alford was there, and Captain Potter, and ſeveral others, as I remember, Maſter Jenkins.

Attorn. Gen. This was in Mr. Love's Houſe, was it not in his Study?

Jaquel. I cannot tell that, I ſay as I conceive, that Maſter Jenkins and Maſter Caſe were there, but poſitively I cannot ſay it; and Mr. Jackſon and Mr. Nalton, I think.

Attorn. Gen. What ſay you of Mr. Watſon?

Jaquel. I think he was there.

Attorn. Gen. What ſay you of Mr. Herring?

Jaquel. I think he was.

Attorn. Gen. What ſay you of Mr. Cauton?

Jaquel. In truth I cannot tell.

Attorn. Gen. What ſay you of Mr. Robinſon?

Jaquel. I think he was.

Attorn. Gen. What ſay you of Mr. Drake?

Jaquel. Yes.

Attorn. Gen. Was Colonel Vaughan there?

Jaquel. Yes, I conceive he was there.

Attorn. Gen. Was Mr. Jackſon there?

Jaquel. Yes.

Attorn.

Attorn. Gen. Were Captain Far and Captain Potter there?

Jaquel. I believe ſo.

Attorn. Gen. Was Mr. Gibbons there?

Jaquel. I cannot tell.

Attorn. Gen. What ſay you of Mr. Sterks?

Jaquel. No, Sir, I do not know it.

Attorn. Gen. Did you not know him to be the Scotch Agent? Was he not taken among you to be an Agent from Scotland?

Jaquel. Yes, he was a Scotchman.

Attorn. Gen. And for Contribution of Money, what Money did you pay, and to whom?

Jaquel. Two five Pounds to Mr. Drake.

Attorn. Gen. For what Uſe?

Jaquel. For charitable Uſes.

Attorn. Gen. Then he asked it of you ſo, or for that purpoſe; but afterwards, what did you learn it was employed about?

Jaquel. Sir, he did not tell me how he did employ this Money; but afterwards I heard him ſay, that he had ſent Titus Money.

Attorn. Gen. What did you contribute to Sterks's going into Scotland?

Jaquel. Ten Shillings.

Attorn. Gen. And who elſe did contribute, that was there? And how much was the Sum that was collected?

Jaquel. I cannot tell.

Attorn. Gen. How much do you gueſs, or have heard?

Jaquel. Four or five Pounds, I think.

Attorn. Gen. Ask him, who gave the Scotchmen Money?

Jaquel. Truly, I did give ſeveral Scotchmen Money, both to poor Miniſters, and others that were baniſhed by the Act, becauſe I knew they were very poor, and knew not how to get away; and I did it out of Charity towards them.

Ld Preſident. Becauſe the State had an ill Opinion of them, therefore you had a good Opinion of them.

Jaquel. There was one Miniſter that had twelve Children, that was baniſhed.

Attorn. Gen. Were you at any Meetings at Mr. Love's after Dunbar-Fight?

Jaquel. No not I.

Attorn. Gen. At what Faſt were you at? And who officiated at thoſe Faſts?

Jaquel. I was at Major Adams's and Colonel Bartons's.

Attorn. Gen. Who did exerciſe at thoſe Faſts? Was Mr. Love, Mr. Jenkins, Mr. Caſe, any of them?

Jaquel. I believe they were, I conceive ſo, I profeſs I cannot remember; I believe Mr. Jenkins was there.

Attorn. Gen. Was not Mr. Love one of them?

Jaquel. Yes, he was.

Attorn. Gen. What was the Occaſion of thoſe Faſts?

Jaquel. I know no particular Occaſion, but for the Good of the two Nations.

Attorn. Gen. How do you know they were for the Good of the two Nations? Was it not for an Agreement between the King and the Scots?

Jaquel. I confeſs it was for the Good of both Nations, as both Nations are the Church of God, and do both profeſs themſelves Proteſtants, and of one Religion; and I conceived it was my Duty to pray for the Good of them both.

Attorn. Gen. But was there not ſome Expreſſions for a Bleſſing upon the Treaty at Breda?

Jaquel. I cannot remember ſuch Expreſſions; for in ſuch Duties I deſire to have my Heart lifted up unto God: And, my Lord, it is a great while ago.

Ld Preſident. Will you ſay your Heart is lifted up unto God, when your Underſtanding is in your Heels?

Jaquel. My Lord, I do not remember one Paſſage in Prayer a Week after.

Attorn. Gen. That is in ordinary Meetings, but this is for both Nations: but by what did you know that this was for the Good of both Nations, and why was it pretended to be for the Good of both? And, my Lord, why they ſhould not meet before, but juſt at that time, and at a private Faſt?

Jaquel. I think, that ſince the Nations of England and Scotland were at odds, I have been at twenty Faſts.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, ask him, Whether he were not late with Potter, and did not meet with him about Letters from Bamfield, and whither they went to read them?

Jaquel. This was about February or March laſt, he told me he received Letters, and deſired me to go along with him to Mr. Love's, and after Doctor Drake came in, and then theſe Letters were read; and I profeſs I know not from whence they came, nor the Man; and ſo did Mr. Love declare, That he never ſaw, nor knew, nor heard of Bamfield before.

Attorn. Gen. Did he not make mention of Parties in Scotland, That one Party was for the King, and another for the King and Kirk, and a third neither for King nor Kirk?

Jaquel. Yes.

Attorn. Gen. But who were thoſe he named, that were Men for the King?

Jaquel. I think, Hamilton and his Party.

Attorn. Gen. And who for the King and Kirk?

Jaquel. Argyle and Leſley.

Attorn. Gen. And who neither for King nor Kirk?

Jaquel. Straughan and Car.

Attorn. Gen. What did he tell you of the young King's eſcaping?

Jaquel. Something there was in that, but he was fetch'd back again.

Attorn. Gen. What ſaid he of Argyle?

Jaquel. Nothing at all, as I remember.

Attorn. Gen. Was there not an Expreſſion, That they were now agreed to receive in the whole Nation, unleſs it were thoſe that were notoriouſly ſcandalous and excommunicated?

Jaquel. I believe there was.

Attorn. Gen. Did it not mention five thouſand Pounds for providing of Shipping?

Jaquel. Yes, in the Narrative or Letter, whether there related at that time, I know not.

Attorn. Gen. And what mention was there made, who were fit to command in England, if that Party ſhould come from thence into England?

Jaquel. I conceive there were three Noblemen.

Attorn. Gen. Name them.

Jaquel. My Lord of Suffolk, my Lord of Warwick, and my Lord of Manchester, or either of them.

Attorn. Gen. That was propounded by Bamfield, but I hope thoſe Lords were more noble than to do any ſuch thing. Was there not another Letter that came with that of Bamfield's, ſent by my Lord Argyle, and it was only, That there ſhould be an Approbation of him? And was this Letter likewiſe read at the ſame time, and at the ſame Place?

Jaquel. Yes, my Lord.

Attorn.

Attorn. Gen. What was then propounded for Money to be raiſed for Bamfield?

Jaquel. Truly, Captain Potter did make mention for forty Pounds to be raiſed, ten Pounds for Colonel Bamfield's Man, and thirty Pounds for Bamfield himſelf: but that Buſineſs at the reading was wholly declined, and abſolutely refuſed by all, to act any thing in that relation in which it was ſent over. Whereupon Captain Potter did move, That if nothing were done in that, whether it were not convenient to ſend the Meſſenger ſomething to bear his Charges: ſays he, If you will pay the Meſſenger ten Pounds, and ſend Bamfield thirty Pounds, I will give the Meſſenger the ten Pounds. But there was no Agreement, nor Concluſion I know of, no Bill of Exchange was ſent, but Captain Potter ſaid he would lay down ten Pounds.

Attorn. Gen. But no body ſpake againſt Captain Potter's laying down of ten Pounds; and it was propounded to you to lend ten Pounds, and you ſaid, you would conſider of it: But did Potter lend it?

Jaquel. I cannot tell that, my Lord, he ſaid he would do it.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, let now Maſter Jaquel tell you what was the Cauſe why they did refuſe to do any thing in the Letter about five thouſand Pounds; what was the Cauſe upon the Debate between you at Mr. Love's Houſe, why you did refuſe to do any thing about the five thouſand Pounds?

Jaquel. The Debate was ſoon over, for we abſolutely refuſed it, we would not meddle in it, not liking the buſineſs; it was a Trouble, I am confident, to them that heard it read.

Attorn. Gen. You do not remember that ever any body did acquaint the Magiſtrate with the Deſign in working from Scotland?

Jaquel. No, not I.

Attorn. Gen. Did not ſome ſay, that Bamfield was a Malignant?

Jaquel. I cannot tell, but I never heard of him before.

Attorn. Gen. Were you not told he was a Cavalier, and of the King's ſide, and that that was the true Reaſon why they would not truſt him?

Jaquel. I do not remember any ſuch thing.

Attorn. Gen. Did Mr. Love agree for ten Pounds for Bamfield's Man, and thirty Pounds for Bamfield?

Jaquel. No, I cannot ſay ſo.

Attorn. Gen. Did not Major Alford tell you, upon his Return from Calais, That he was ſent thither to take an account from thence?

Jaquel. He did not, but William Drake did tell me that he was gone to Calais to ſpeak with Captain Titus.

Attorn. Gen. And to take an account of the Tranſaction of Jerſey.

Jaquel. Truly, Sir, I cannot ſay that; but William Drake told me he was gone thither to ſpeak with Titus: and this is above two Years ago that William Drake told me ſo.

Attorn. Gen. To what end?

Jaquel. To tell and hear News.

Attorn. Gen. What did he do more?

Jaquel. I profeſs in the Preſence of God, I cannot tell, Sir, I beſeech you; for in the Paper, I told you before, there were ſome Circumſtances, and ſomething that I cannot ſay; but it was to this purpoſe, To ſpeak with Titus, to hear the News from Jerſey; but I cannot ſay certainly that Word.

Attorn. Gen. We do not preſs you to the Word, but to the Effect of it: My Lord, I think Mr. Jaquel hath given an account already, that this Relation was at Mr. Love's Houſe. Mr. Jaquel, let me bring one thing to your Remembrance, if it be true: At your Meeting at Mr. Love's Houſe upon this buſineſs of Bamfield's Narrative, you ſay, thirty Pounds was moved to be ſent to Bamfield, and ten Pounds to his Man.

Jaquel. Yes, by Captain Potter.

Attorn. Gen. And when it was then ſaid, it was thought fit by Mr. Love, Mr. Drake, and Captain Potter, that it ſhould be ſo done; whether did you not all agree it ſhould be ſo done?

Jaquel. No, there was no Agreement, but it was thought convenient, or to that purpoſe.

Attorn. Gen. It was thought convenient by all the Company preſent?

Jaquel. Truly, Sir, there was not much regard taken in that buſineſs, nor was there much done; for we did not ſtay long, but there were ſuch Words.

Attorn. Gen. But by all preſent?

Jaquel. Yes, there were ſuch Words.

Attorn. Gen. Whether were not ſome Friends at Dinner at Dowgate, and was not Maſon there?

Jaquel. My Lord, there was a Gentleman there, I cannot ſay who he was, nor did I ſee him before or ſince.

Attorn. Gen. Who did they tell you he was? Did they not tell you Maſon?

Jaquel. I profeſs I cannot remember that, nor can I tell, but I conceive it was ſo.

Attorn. Gen. In your Examination you ſay it was Maſon.

Jaquel. I ſaid, I conceived ſo.

Attorn. Gen. Why did you believe ſo?

Jaquel. I cannot tell, but as I remember, William Drake told me ſo.

Attorn. Gen. Whether when Bamfield's Letter came, and the Letters from my Lord of Argyle, Lowdon, and others came, was there not a Letter from Bailey?

Jaquel. I do not remember, my Lord.

Attorn. Gen. Nor from the General Aſſembly?

Jaquel. I do not remember any ſuch thing.

Attorn. Gen. Bethink your ſelf, you are upon your Oath, whether he that brought the Letters from Bamfield, did not bring Letters from Bailey, and from the General Aſſembly?

Jaquel. I cannot remember there was any ſuch thing ſpoken of there.

Attorn. Gen. Was there no Expreſſion of Letters of Thanks for the good Affection of the Presbyterian Party here, and Encouragement to perſevere?

Jaquel. I do not remember any ſuch thing.

Attorn. Gen. Were there no Promiſes, that when they by their Endeavours ſhould get a free Parliament in England, that they would re-imburſe all that was laid out?

Jaquel. I do remember no ſuch thing.

Mr. Love. I would ask him ſome Queſtions; and the firſt is, Whether he hath ſpoken this as a mere Relation, or whether he owns all this he hath ſpoken, as under an Oath?

Attorn. Gen. We are paſt that, my Lord, he did ſay, he was under an Oath.

Mr. Love. If he ſay ſo, I am concluded.

[Mr. Jaquel made no Anſwer to this.]

Ld Preſident. You have asked two Queſtions in a few Words: For the firſt, Whether he ſpake it under an Oath? You know that time was ſpent to declare it before he began: if you ask of his own knowledge, you miſtook it; for he ſaith ſomething he he hath by Relation, and ſome that he knows. This he hath taken notice of, what ſhould we further examine over the ſame thing; for he ſaith ſome of his own Knowledge, ſome by Relation from particular Parties, and ſome from Parties he calls not now to mind: and it was declared by the Court, that he was a Witneſs, and the Court accepted him.

Mr. Love. I deſire your Lordſhip to ask him this Queſtion, Whether the ſuppoſed Narrative that he ſpeaks of, that Alford ſaid he brought over, and read at my Houſe, was read at my Houſe; or only by Alford, and ſo brought over as News?

Jaquel. In truth, my Lord, I cannot tell that.

Mr. Love. He ſpeaks of Sterks a Scotchman; I deſire your Lordſhip to know whether he knows, or can affirm by the Oath you ſay he hath taken, that he was a Scotch Agent. [No Anſwer to that Queſtion.]

Mr. Love. Sir, ask him this Queſtion; he mentions a Faſt at Major Adams's, or Col. Barton's, and that for the Good of both Nations, becauſe he thought they were the Church of God; whether there was any Intimation in that Meeting, that it was under this Notion, for the Good of both Nations; whether that Meeting was for the Scotch Nation to invade the Engliſh Nation? [No Anſwer to that Queſtion.]

Mr. Love. He ſaid (if I have taken him rightly, and if not, I deſire your Notaries to inform me better), that Mr. Love did not agree to ſuch a Sum as Forty Pounds, and afterwards he ſaid, that all there ſaid it was convenient. Now I would ask how theſe two can agree together?

Ld Preſident. You are right; for the thing of Agreement he diſclaimed totally.

Mr. Love. Then I did not agree to it.

Ld Preſident. No, nor any elſe.

Mr. Love. But afterwards he ſays, that they did conceive it was convenient; now I pray ask him, how he knew that I thought it was convenient?

Jaquel. I cannot ſay any thing that Mr. Love did ſay it was convenient; but it was not diſſented from, nor ſpoken againſt by any, as I remember.

[Mr. Jaquel withdraws. Col. Barton is called into the Court, and is ſworn.]

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, let Colonel Barton tell you what he knows of the Meeting at the Swan at Dowgate.

Col. Barton. My Lord, I was there a little while after the Death of the late King. I was going into Cannon-ſtreet, and met with William Drake; he deſired me to go with him to the Swan at Dowgate. I told him I had a little Buſineſs in Cannon-ſtreet, and I would be there by and by. I ſtaid about half an hour about my Buſineſs, and went then to the Swan at Dowgate, and there was, to my beſt remembrance (for poſitively I cannot ſay) William Drake, and one a Stranger, Major Huntington, and Lieut. Col. Bains, and there was one Capt. Titus, as was ſaid, and Major Alford, and I do not remember who elſe were there. My Lord, at that time truly I was under a Defect in my Hearing, and ſince that I have loſt an Ear, through a huge Heat, and Cold taken. But, my Lord, I not coming but to the middle of the Diſcourſe they had, and not perfectly hearing, could not well judge of their Diſcourſe: But afterwards I ask'd William Drake, what the Intent of the Meeting was? He told me, that their Intentions were to make ſome Addreſſes or Applications (ſome ſuch word it was) unto the Prince, to take him off from his malignant or evil Counſel about him, and to put him upon ſuch as would be honeſter and better Counſellors. And this is the Subſtance of what I then underſtood from William Drake. My Lord, I think two or three days afterwards, I know not which, there was a Meeting again at the White-Hart in Baſing-lane-end at the corner of Bread-ſtreet. There were, I think, moſt of them that I have named at the firſt Meeting: I am ſure William Drake was there, and Captain Titus, and Lieut. Col. Bains, and Major Huntington, I cannot tell whether Mr. Alford was there or no, but theſe I am ſure were there. I did not come to the beginning of that Meeting neither, the Paper had been read before I came in, to my beſt remembrance: but I asked William Drake what was the meaning of that Meeting? He told me, it was to the ſame effect that they ſpake of before; and they had Thoughts to ſend ſomebody over to the Prince, to perſuade him from that Condition. A while after I met with Lieut. Col. Bains, and truly I did ask him more fully of the Circumſtances of that Meeting: he told me ſomething, that they intended to make uſe of my Lord Piercy and Jermin, and thoſe about the Prince, which he diſliked. Truly, my Lord, it troubled me extremely, to think that they ſhould make uſe of ſuch ill Inſtruments to perſuade the King, and I ſaid, I thought it was not well. And the next time I ſaid to William Drake, you have not done well, for it is not a Chriſtian Way we take, to make uſe of ſuch Men as theſe to perſuade with the King; for do you think that my Lord Piercy and Jermin, and thoſe Men, will ever perſuade the King to leave themſelves, and their own Counſels? So he put me off, and from that time he was a little more ſhy of me. Afterwards he did ſecretly and cunningly get from me Ten Pounds, and came under a pretence to ſupply a Friend in neceſſity; and I ſaid to him, you have Money of your own. Says he, I have not ſo much as I muſt needs ſupply him with; and he could not do it of himſelf, for fear it ſhould be miſs'd. My Lord, I asked him what Friend it was. Nay, ſaith he, you cannot know that, and you cannot have it till he is in a condition. To tell you truly, he had been a good Cuſtomer to me, both for himſelf and Friends, and I was loth to deny him it, ſuppoſing I ſhould have it again. I afterwards did not, to my knowledge, meddle or make at any Meeting; I was never at any of thoſe Meetings after the Buſineſs at Baſing-lane, becauſe I diſliked them; but afterwards I did ſuppoſe that this Ten Pounds was for Captain Titus, for I did put it to him, and ſaid, I am afraid you did furniſh Titus with that Ten Pounds. What then, ſaid he? Then I ſhall require it again of you. So he put me off, and run out of the Land. My Lord, for any other Meetings, Tranſactions, or Knowledge of any other thing from the time of the Meeting in Baſing-lane, I know none. For the Priſoner at the Bar, truly I do not remember, and I am confident I was never at his Honſe in my life, nor changed one word with him.

Attorn. Gen. Did you meet with Titus in Fleet-ſtreet?

Barton. I did, my Lord, and I asked him whether the King that was dead, (for I knew he was much about the King, becauſe I had heard it;) and I asked him, I ſay, whether the King was a Man of thoſe Parts he was reported to be. Titus told me, not only of his Parts, but Virtues. Truly I ſuſpected then, that Titus was not the Man he ſeem'd to be, and I feared he was a Cavalier in his heart; and truly that did occaſion me, with the diſlike of others, to leave their Company.

Attorn. Gen. There were ſometimes private Faſts at your Houſe; what was the Occaſion of them, and who ſpoke to you for them?

Barton. My Lord, I do not remember the Party that ſpake to me, I am not certain whether it were Maſter Vickars, but cannot poſitively ſay it, or whether it were by Sir Matthew Brand, or by whom they deſired to meet; they met in a Room at my Houſe, to humble themſelves before the Lord: and I cannot ſay any thing of the Faſt, becauſe I had Cuſtomers, and I did think I was bound to ſerve my Calling; and I was not there above half an hour, and it was up and down, off and on, there were divers Miniſters, who did exerciſe at that time.

Attorn. Gen. Who did exerciſe at that time?

Barton. I was not there much of the time, but I think Mr. Jenkins, and to my beſt remembrance Mr. Love was there; there was Mr. Tate the Parliament-Men, to my beſt remembrance: I think Mr. Jaquel was there, and there was Sir Matthew Brand.

Attorn. Gen. What other Miniſters were there?

Barton. I think Mr. Caſe, and to my beſt remembrance Mr. Robinſon; but I am not certain.

Attorn. Gen. What was the Occaſion of your Faſts, and at your Houſe?

Barton. I knew no Occaſion, becauſe I was not there; but have heard, a Servant of my Houſe, who was there, give this Relation. Mr. Jenkins began in this manner; O Lord, thou knoweſt we are not meet to put up Complaints againſt any, but to humble ourſelves before thee, and to pray that the Sins of the Land may be pardoned. But I do not remember there was any word, but for the pardoning the Sins of the Nation.

Attorn. Gen. Was there no Sins named in particular?

Barton. My Lord, I do not remember.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, ask him whether any body hath been with him, to call for any Money for any Parties beyond Sea; for Maſſey, or any others.

Barton. I ſhall give you a true Narrative of that. I underſtood, my Lord, that after the Priſoners that were taken at Dunbar were come down the River, there were divers Citizens, both Men and Women, that came to ſee them, and made a relation of their Miſery to be ſuch, as I have not heard; and there was one among the reſt, that ſaid there was a piece of Meat reached down among the Priſoners, and two or three catching at it, it fell down among the Dung, and they took it up, and eat it. There were divers did move for a Contribution to them, and it was a pretty while before I did contribute any thing: there was Captain Far with me, and deſired me to give him ſome Money, and he did not propoſe the Uſe; but to my beſt remembrance, it was either for charitable Uſes, or for ſome in miſery. Now I was loth to ask him for what charitable Uſe, becauſe I did not deſire to be known to give ſuch a Sum of Money to the Scotch Priſoners. I had a little Money which I had devoted to charitable Uſes in my own purpoſe: When the Parliament granted my Petition for reimburſing the Money I lent, I did promiſe Fifty Pounds to charitable Uſes; and this, I confeſs, I did intend for the Scotch Priſoners, but was loth to ask him, becauſe I would not be thought charitable to your Enemies; but did it not under that relation.

Attorn. Gen. Mr. Jaquel, you know William Drake and Mr. Love very well, do you not know that Mr. Drake and Mr. Love were very familiarly acquainted?

Jaquel. I muſt needs ſay, Mr. Drake would be acquainted with all the Miniſters in London; and I cannot ſay, he was more acquainted with Mr. Love than with any other Miniſter.

[Captain Far is called into the Court, and is ſworn.]

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, let him acquaint you with what paſſed at the White-Hart in Breadſtreet.

Capt. Far. I deſire the Benefit of my Papers.

Attorn. Gen. At whoſe requeſt did you come to the White-Hart in Breadſtreet, and when was it?

Far. By William Drake.

Attorn. Gen. Was that the firſt time you were acquainted with any thing of this nature, for carrying on and proſecuting of an Order, to the furtherance of an Agreement between the Scots and the King? What do you know of that, at what time was the Meeting?

Far. It was about two Years ſince.

Attorn. Gen. What was the Diſcourſe at that Meeting?

Far. It was the drawing up of ſome Heads of a Letter, which might be ſent to Scotland.

Attorn. Gen. What was the Effect of it?

Far. It was to this effect, to the beſt of my Memory; for it is ſo long ſince.

[Here Captain Far was at a ſtand, whether through Infirmity of Speech (for he ſeemed to be ſlow of Speech) or otherwiſe, I cannot ſay; and he, or the Attorney-General for him, made great uſe of the Papers of his Examination.]

Attorn. Gen. To deſire them, the better to bring them to an Agreement, that there might be moderate Propoſitions.

Far. It was to moderate their Deſires in the Agreement between the King and the Scots.

Attorn. Gen. What to do?

Far. That they might abate of their Demands.

Attorn. Gen. Of their former Demands, that they might be the more like to agree; was it not ſo?

Far. Yes, my Lord.

Attorn. Gen. Was it not propounded likewiſe, that ſome ſhould be ſent to the King, to perſuade him to give Satisfaction to the Scots?

Far. It was propounded by Titus, but not approved of.

Attorn. Gen. But did you not agree to ſend to the Scots that you did agree to, and were there not Heads which Titus, or Drake, did undertake to write, and afterwards were drawn up?

Far. I ſaw no Letters.

Attorn. Gen. But did not Drake tell you he had ſent them to Maſter Bailey in Scotland?

[Captain Far being at a ſtand, the Attorney-General asketh him again:]

Attorn. Gen. Did not William Drake tell you, a Letter was ſent accordingly into Scotland?

Far. Yes, he did tell me he had ſent Letters.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, let him give your Lordſhip an account before the Treaty at Jerſey, where Drake met with him, and what he propounded to him, whether to ſend to Jerſey, and what Perſons, and upon what Meſſage?

Far.

Far. Mr. Drake did ſay, that Captain Titus did ſay, It was requiſite for one to be at the Treaty at Jerſey; and I had it from Drake, that Titus did undertake to go himſelf thither.

Attorn. Gen. What was his Employment to be there, and what Money was to be raiſed for him? Did he tell you he wanted Money?

Far. After Mr. Drake deſired I would help him to Ten Pounds, and Titus was in want of Money to relieve his Neceſſities: and upon this Requeſt I did leave Ten Pounds in Mr. Drake's Warehouſe.

Attorn. Gen. Was Drake preſent?

Far. I think he was, I was promiſed it again, but never received it.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, let him inform, after this Negotiation of Titus was ended at Jerſey, whether there was not a Letter written by Titus, and whether this was not read in the preſence of Mr. Love, and ſome others, and whether at Mr. Love's or no?

Ld Preſident. Upon the ending of the Treaty at Jerſey and Breda, were you not preſent at Mr. Love's Houſe, when it was ſignified from Titus, that it was not convenient for him to come into England, becauſe he thought he was diſcovered to the Council of State, and deſired ſomebody to be ſent to Calais, to take an account there of his Negotiation?

Far. Yes, my Lord, I was there.

Attorn. Gen. Where, at Mr. Love's Houſe?

Far. Yes.

Attorn. Gen. In what part of his Houſe, whether in his Chamber or Study?

Far. In his Study, as I remember.

Attorn. Gen. Was the Letter read there, and who read it?

Far. William Drake read it.

Attorn. Gen. What was the Subſtance of the Letter, as you remember?

Far. It was for ſending one over to Calais.

Attorn. Gen. Was Mr. Love preſent when this Letter was read?

Far. Yes ſure, he was preſent.

Attorn. Gen. Was it agreed that one ſhould be ſent to Calais, to take an account of it.

Far. It was deſired, and I was propounded to go.

Attorn. Gen. Who named you to go?

Far. Mr. Drake.

Attorn. Gen. What was the occaſion that Major Alford did go?

Far. It was his Son's being there, that was gone from him.

Attorn. Gen. But then it was agreed that Alford ſhould go? When Alford did return from Calais again, and there was an Account given of his Employment, where was this Account given? and where were thoſe Papers read, that did give the Account?

Far. It was given at Mr. Love's; but I cannot ſay he was preſent at that, for he was abſent ſometimes; I cannot be poſitive to ſay he was preſent: I do conceive he was preſent, but cannot poſitively ſay it.

Attorn. Gen. What was the Subſtance of the Account given by Alford or Drake, or who read it?

Far. It was a Narrative that he had been at Calais, and what Entertainment he had.

Attorn. Gen. Was there a Copy of a Letter brought thither, written from the King to the Presbyterian Party?

Far. I cannot ſay he brought it.

Attorn. Gen. What was the Subſtance of the Letter?

Far. To ſend Commiſſioners to the Treaty at Breda.

Attorn. Gen. What elſe was in the Letter? Did not the King of Scots declare in the Letter, that he would give ſatisfaction to the Scots, and in order thereunto he deſired Commiſſioners?

Far. It is ſo long ſince, that I cannot remember it.

Attorn. Gen. I ask you, whether it were not to this effect, to declare that he was willing to give ſatisfaction to the Scots, and to that end deſired the Presbyterian Party to ſend Commiſſioners to Breda?

Mr. Love. This is groſs Darkneſs, for you to dictate words to him, and then to ſay, Was it not thus, or to this effect? and ſo to put into the mouths of the Witneſſes what you would have them ſay.

Attorn. Gen. When you go in Darkneſs, it is groſs Treaſon.

Mr. Love. Eight Witneſſes have not proved that I either writ Letter, or received Letter, or lent Money.

Attorn. Gen. What was the Effect of the Letter?

Far. It is ſo long ſince, that I cannot ſpeak particularly; but it was to ſend Commiſſioners.

Attorn. Gen. The Copy of the Letter that came from the King by Major Alford?

Far. I do not ſay ſo, Sir.

Ld Preſident. Such a Letter as they conceived to be brought from him, as they read.

Attorn. Gen. What was that?

Far. That he had been with Titus, and did bring the Narrative from him, or to that effect.

Attorn. Gen. Was it not to be communicated?

Far. Yes, it was ſo.

Ld Preſident. What was the Narrative read from Titus? Who were preſent at this Meeting?

Far. There were ſeveral there, but I cannot poſitively remember any.

Attorn. Gen. Was Mr. Love there?

Far. I cannot ſay he was.

Ld Preſident. Was Dr. Drake there?

Far. I cannot ſay poſitively, that he hath been at any Meetings.

Ld Preſident. When you were at this Meeting, and Major Alford returned this at Mr. Love's Houſe, was Dr. Drake there?

Far. I cannot ſay it.

Ld Preſident. Was Mr. Jenkins there?

Far. I cannot ſay it.

Ld Preſident. How many were there?

Far. About ten or twelve.

Attorn. Gen. Ask him whether this Meeting, when this Letter came from the King, adviſing to ſend Commiſſioners to treat with the King at Breda; whether was there not a Commiſſion named, and Perſons named to treat?

Far. William Drake read Papers, but it was not agreed upon by the Company, becauſe private Perſons could not give Commiſſions.

Ld Preſident. Was it not debated at that Meeting for a Commiſſion to be ſent accordingly?

Far. William Drake read Papers there, that was in the nature of a Commiſſion; but it was not agreed upon by the Company, becauſe private Perſons could not do ſuch a thing.

Ld Preſident. Was it not in order to the Treaty?

Far. It was to adviſe with them about the Treaty.

Attorn. Gen. Was it not read in the preſence of the Company?

Far. The Commiſſions and Inſtructions were read in the preſence of the Company, but they were not agreed upon.

Attorn. Gen. Was it not in the name of the Preſbyterian Party in England?

Far. As I do remember, the Commiſſion was in the name of the Presbyterian Party, for I did but only hear it read.

Mr. Love. Let him ſpeak viva voce.

Far. To the beſt of my remembrance, it was for the Presbyterian Party, but poſitively I cannot ſay ſo: My Lord, 'tis two Years ſince, and as near as I can remember, it was ſo.

Ld Preſident. The Commiſſion, you ſay, was not agreed to, but the Letter and Inſtructions were?

Far. William Drake did undertake to draw them up.

Ld Preſident. Were they drawn up and ſent?

Far. I am not able to ſay they were.

Ld Preſident. Who were to be the Commiſſioners?

Far. My Lord Willoughby of Parham, Alderman Bunce, Major-General Maſſey, Colonel Graves, Captain Titus.

Attorn. Gen. What were they to do?

Far. To adviſe, but not to treat in the behalf of the Presbyterian Party.

Ld Preſident. Not in the behalf of the Presbyterian Party?

Far. No.

Attorn. Gen. Was there not an Agreement of Letters to be ſent to the Queen, and no Propoſals that way?

Far. No, my Lord.

Ld Preſident. What was the Subſtance of that Letter read?

Far. It was, as I remember, to have the Queen perſuade the King to give ſatisfaction to the Scots in their juſt Demands.

Attorn. Gen. Was it not moved then to be debated what power they had to ſend a Commiſſion, and by what Authority they ſhould do it, and by whom was it ſpoken?

Far. It was demanded, what Authority had private Men to ſend Commiſſioners?

Attorn. Gen. Did not you go afterwards with ſome over into Southwark?

Far. Yes.

Attorn. Gen. Where did you go?

Far. I went with Major Alford, and with Alderman Bunce his Son, and I went to Graveſend.

Attorn. Gen. What other Company was there?

Far. No body elſe, nor had I gone, but at the requeſt of Maſter Alford.

Attorn. Gen. Did you know that Maſon went?

Far. There was no ſuch Man went along with us.

Attorn. Gen. Did no body tell you that Maſon went with the Inſtructions agreed upon?

Far. There was a Gentleman we met with at Graveſend, that I conceive to be that Maſon.

Attorn. Gen. Did he carry the Inſtructions?

Far. I cannot tell.

Ld Preſident. Did no body tell you ſo?

Far. Not as I remember, I did not ſee any delivered to him.

Ld Preſident. Do you believe he carry'd them, out of theſe Circumſtances you heard?

Far. Yes, I believe he did; I am upon my Oath, and to ſay poſitively, I cannot.

Attorn. Gen. Were there not Letters left at your Houſe, and for whom, and what did you with them?

Far. There was at my Brother's Houſe Letters left, but they were returned.

Attorn. Gen. But for whom were thoſe Letters?

Far. They were directed to Will. Drake by Titus.

Attorn. Gen. Were you at Colonel Barton's Houſe at the Faſt?

Far. I was.

Attorn. Gen. Who officiated there, was Mr. Love one of them?

Far. I cannot ſay poſitively, I believe Mr. Love did.

Ld Preſident. Do you believe, Mr. Love was one of them?

Far. I conceive he was one of them, and Mr. Robinſon.

Attorn. Gen. Did he not pray for a Bleſſing upon the Treaty between the King and the Scots?

Far. That was done, but I cannot ſay it was by Mr. Love; but theſe words were ſaid there.

Attorn. Gen. Were you at a Meeting at Mr. Love's, after the Fight at Dunbar, a remarkable time to this Nation?

Far. I was there, but came in late.

Attorn. Gen. Were you there, when a Letter was read from Maſſey?

Far. I did not hear it read.

Ld Preſident. What do you know of it?

Far. There was ſuch a Letter came, to aſſiſt the King with Money and Arms; but it was not agreed upon.

Ld Preſident. Do you ſwear ſuch a Letter came?

Far. I cannot ſwear poſitively.

Ld Preſident. Did the Gentleman tell you ſo?

Far. He did tell me ſo.

Ld Preſident. The Letter did write likewiſe for Arms and Ammunition, did it not?

Far. Yes, and for Money.

Ld Preſident. Did not Mr. Love tell you, they could not do it?

Far. I did underſtand it was Mr. Love.

Attorn. Gen. Did not Mr. Love tell you, they agreed to raiſe a Sum of Money for Maſſey, and Titus, and Graves, or ſome of them?

Far. Yes, he did.

Attorn. Gen. What was the Sum of Money, and for whom was it agreed upon? did Mr. Love tell you ſo?

Far. I ſay, Mr. Love did tell me it was agreed upon for the ſending of ſome Money, whether 250 or 300 l. I cannot ſay poſitively; and it was to relieve Maſſey and Titus in their Neceſſities.

Attorn. Gen. Did not Mr. Love move you to contribute to this? and what did you contribute?

Far. Mr. Love asked me, and I did promiſe five Pounds, and brought five Pounds, and laid it down upon his Table.

Attorn. Gen. Who was in the Room then?

Far. There were ſeveral.

Ld Preſident. Do you know none of them?

Attorn. Gen. Mr. Love ſaith, he hath neither writ, received, nor ſent; but he doth not ſay, he did not mend Letters.

Far. I brought five Pounds in a Paper, and laid it upon his Table.

Ld Preſident. And was he in the Room?

Far. Yes, my Lord, but I cannot ſay any elſe was.

Attorn. Gen. I could tell you who there were more; Mr. Caſe was there too: My Lord, ask him if it were not agreed between them, that it ſhould be ſo brought.

Far. As I did underſtand, it was ſo; it was ſo for my particular, but I cannot ſay it of others.

Attorn. Gen. Did not Mr. Love ſpeak to you to that purpoſe, to bring it in that way?

Far. I cannot ſay he bid me lay it down.

Ld Preſident. What was the Manner of Mr. Love's requiring of you, or notifying of it to you, and the Manner of your Purſuit of that?

[Here

[Here Captain Far was at a ſtand, and made no Anſwer.]

Attorn. Gen. I will make it very ſhort: Whether this were not done that there might be no Diſcovery of it?

Far. It was done to that effect, that there ſhould be no Diſcovery of it: I did it under that Notion.

Ld Preſident. And do you not think Mr. Love conceived it under that Notion?

Far. I cannot ſay he did.

Attorn. Gen. Were you not ſpoken to by Captain Maſſey, to ſpeak to Colonel Barton to lend Money?

Far. I did ſpeak to him.

Ld Preſident. What was that?

Far. Ten Pounds, as I conceived; for I receiv'd it from him in a Paper.

Attorn. Gen. To whom did you deliver it?

Far. To Captain Maſſey, Maſſey's Brother, my Lord.

Ld Preſident. You received it from Colonel Barton. Captain Maſſey bid you ſpeak to Colonel Barton for a Sum of Money; and he gave it to you; and you gave it to Captain Maſſey.

Attorn. Gen. Was the Money, as you conceived, returned to Maſſey and Titus?

Far. I cannot ſay it was.

Ld Preſident. Do you believe it was deſired to be raiſed to that purpoſe? And do you think it was done according to that purpoſe?

Far. I do not know.

Attorn. Gen. Whether do you conceive that this Money, you thus brought to Captain Maſſey, was not for Maſſey and Titus?

Far. I do conceive it was.

Attorn. Gen. And was not Mr. Love commonly at your Meetings? And whether, after Drake went away, the Meetings were not at his Houſe?

Far. I met with Mr. Love often at his own Houſe.

Attorn. Gen. This Money was taken up under the Notion of a charitable Uſe?

Far. I do conceive it was given them under that Notion.

Mr. Love. Sir, he gave you a large Account of the Negotiation with Titus; pray ask him if I were privy to it.

Far. I cannot ſay ſo.

Ld Preſident. Do you believe it?

Mr. Love. You ſay the Copy of the King's Letter, (you ſuppoſe) that was brought over by Alford, was read at my Houſe; whether did I hear the Letter read in my Houſe?

Far. I cannot ſay you did.

Ld Preſident. Was not Mr. Love, when the Letter was communicated, ſometimes in the Room, going and coming?

Far. I cannot ſay when it was read; but I ſay he was there during ſome part of the Communication; but I cannot ſay he was there at the reading of the Letter.

Attorn. Gen. Theſe are good Queſtions, my Lord.

Mr. Love. The Court will judge of that.

Ld. Preſident. But do you not conceive that he underſtood the Contents of it?

Far. I do conceive ſo.

Mr. Love. But he doth not ſay it was ſo. He ſaid there was a Narrative read from Titus, I deſire your Lordſhip to ask him whether I was preſent whilſt the Narrative was read, yea or no.

Far. I cannot ſay any thing to that; I cannot ſwear he was there.

Mr. Love. Ask him whether I did not go often out of the Room.

Far. I did obſerve, that when Mr. Love hath been there, he hath been often called away, and hath been abſent; and therefore I cannot ſay ſuch a thing was done when Mr. Love was there.

Attorn. Gen. He hath before proved it upon Oath, that he was there ſometimes.

Mr. Love. But look before, and he ſaid he could not ſay I was preſent when it was read.

Attorn. Gen. This Narrative, whether was it a Copy written by Alford, as News brought over, or the Copy written by Titus himſelf?

Far. Alford ſaid it was a Narrative from Titus.

Mr. Love. Pray ask him whether I did ſend Alford over, yea, or no; or agreed to the ſending of him over.

Far. I think he did not; but he was ſent by William Drake.

Mr. Love. My Lord, whether was he not privy to it? He told you Titus's Letter was writ before Alford went.

Far. But it was not agreed upon.

Attorn. Gen. Titus's Letter, that he writ, that ſome might come to him, to receive an Account of him, was read at Maſter Love's Houſe.

Mr. Love. I move this Queſtion, becauſe Alford, who was the Man ſent, confeſſed that William Drake ſent him. He pretended there was a Commiſſion read in my Houſe; I deſire to know when, or at what Time; whether before the 29th of March, 1650?

Far. I am not able to ſpeak to the Time; it is about two Years ſince, or ſomething under.

Mr. Love. I deſire, Sir, to ask him this Queſtion, Whether the rude Draught, written by William Drake, or the original Copy, was ſent away?

Far. There was only a rude Draught that Drake read; and then afterwards Drake was to draw it up.

Mr. Love. Ask him whether I gave my Conſent to the ſending away of this Commiſſion.

Far. I cannot ſay Mr. Love was there when it was ſent away.

Attorn. Gen. Did Mr. Love make any Proteſtation againſt it?

Far. It was agreed by all that the Commiſſion could not be ſent.

Mr. Love. Ask him whether I did not declare in the Company, when there was ſuch Speech of commiſſionating, that it was an high Act of Preſumption for private Perſons to commiſſionate any, and a notorious Falſhood to ſay it was an Act of the Presbyterians; and whether did not I declare my ſelf againſt ſending the Commiſſion.

Far. I did ſay it was agreed upon by all, that we could not ſend the Commiſſion.

Mr. Love. I can prove, if I may have the Witneſſes indemnified, that I declared againſt any Commiſſion.

Ld Preſident. Mr. Love hath declared then he knew of the Commiſſion.

Mr. Love. I acknowledge the diſavowing of any Commiſſion; I gave my Reaſons for it.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, I hope you will remember what the Priſoner ſays.

Mr. Love. I do not own any thing about concurring with any Commiſſion, but only diſavowing of it. After Dunbar-Fight, he ſaith, he came late; and he cannot tell whether the Letter was read at my Houſe, only he ſays, I told him ſo: And whether was that the Letter, or a Copy of it?

Far. I cannot ſay that.

Mr. Love. The moſt that I have done, is but to receive receive News; and I hope I ſhall not die for that. Was this Letter of Maſſey written to me?

Far. I have ſaid already I cannot ſay ſo.

Mr. Love. I would be glad to be freed in Court.

Ld Preſident. You are a very free Man indeed.

Mr. Love. He ſpeaks of a Sum of two hundred and fifty Pounds, or three hundred Pounds, ſent to Maſſey and Titus; pray ask him whether I did agree that it ſhould be ſent.

Ld Preſident. Did he diſagree?

Far. I ſaid it was agreed to; but by whom, I cannot ſay.

Attorn. Gen. Did Mr. Love at that time diſagree?

Far. I cannot ſay he did.

Mr. Love. Did I move Captain Far, or ſay, Captain Far, will you contribute five Pounds to Maſſey or Titus, or any Money?

Far. You asked me the Queſtion, what I would do.

Mr. Love. But for Maſſey and Titus?

Far. I did conceive it was for Maſſey and Titus.

Mr. Love. He ſays he laid it in my Houſe; and he ſo far juſtifies me, that he cannot ſay I received it; and God is my Witneſs, I never did ſee it in my Life. If another Man agrees to receive Money in my Houſe, I hope the Court will not judge me for it.

Ld Preſident. It is an eaſy Matter for you to take it, and convert it to another Uſe.

Far. I do conceive that Captain Maſſey had the Money.

Mr. Love. Now you clear me: Another Man brings the Money, and I do not order him to bring it; and another receives it, and not I.

[Captain Far withdraws.]

Attorn. Gen. Now, my Lord, we ſhall conclude in a very ſhort Word, with a Miniſter to a Miniſter.

[Maſter Jackſon the Miniſter is called into the Court.]

Mr. Jackſon. Sir, I dare not ſwear.

Ld Preſident. Dare you teſtify the Truth when God calls you to it? For God will appear in no other Viſion than in the Power of Magiſtracy.

Mr. Jackſon. I dare not ſpeak againſt this Man's Life.

Ld Preſident. Dare you ſpeak the Truth before a Magiſtrate?

Mr. Jackſon. That that I ſay, is this; That I look upon this Man as a Man very precious in God's ſight; and, my Lord, I fear I ſhould have an Hell in my Conſcience unto my Dying-day, if I ſhould ſpeak any thing that ſhould be circumſtantially prejudicial to his Life: And in regard of theſe Terrors of the Lord upon me, I dare not ſpeak.

Attorn. Gen. I think all the Jeſuits in all the Colleges have not more deſperate Evaſions or Shifts from the Purpoſe than theſe Men have. My Lord, you now ſee what a deſperate Combination here is, that Men being before Authority, and in the Face of Magiſtracy, in ſuch a Court as this is, ſo eminent in the Preſence of it, and ſo authorized as this is; that Men ſhould dare to dally as they do; and that Miniſters ſhould ſay they dare not ſpeak the Truth: not when Treaſon is hatched and contrived, they dare not ſpeak the Truth; that this Man ſhould be more precious, though a Traytor, than the Commonwealth, which ſhould be preſerved. I hope we ſhall root theſe Opinions out, or ſome of the Parties that hold them; that I will ſay.

Ld Preſident. Maſter Jackſon, you are one of the Parties in theſe Meetings, you have been at their Meetings; and we require nothing of you but to ſpeak the Truth. St. Auſtin will tell you, That to conceal a Truth, or tell a Lye, you had better let the World fall about your Ears. You are required nothing but to ſpeak the Truth; and will you ſay this Truth will be a Torment to your Soul? Are you a Profeſſor of Jeſus Chriſt, a Miniſter of God? The great Errand you are ſent hither about, is to ſpeak the Truth from him. Therefore lay your Hand upon your Heart, and do as becomes you as a Chriſtian, and as a rational Man, and as one that will tell Truth; for by the Truth the World ſtands. We are all no better than ſavage Men, if we have not Judgment to tell Truth one to another.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, ſuppoſe Mr. Love ſhould kill one of theſe Men (that do hear the Debate) in the Preſence of Mr. Jackſon, and he ſhould be called to give Evidence, and refuſe it; he may take away any Man's Life. Perſonal Reſpects ſhould be ſet aſide when we come to Judgment. You ſee, my Lord, the Perſon of this Man, how it is preferred by this Man. That which is the Truth, you are required to ſpeak, and nothing elſe.

Ld Preſident. Have you any Oath or Promiſe among your Combiners to be ſecret in this Buſineſs?

Mr. Jackſon. Never in my Life, my Lord.

Ld Preſident. Will you take your Oath?

Mr. Jackſon. I dare not, my Lord.

Ld Preſident. What is your Reaſon?

Mr. Jackſon. I have told you, my Lord, and I will tell you it again, I am a Man of a troubled Spirit; and I dare not do any thing that ſhould cauſe a Hell in my Conſcience to my Dying-day.

Ld Preſident. Do you look to die?

Mr. Jackſon. Yes, my Lord.

Ld Preſident. And do you expect to live again?

Mr. Jackſon. I truſt in Jeſus Chriſt I ſhall live again.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, I deſire your Clerk may be commanded to give him his Oath, and he required to take it.

[The Clerk tenders him the Oath.]

Ld Preſident. Will you take this Oath, or not?

Mr. Jackſon. No, my Lord.

Ld Preſident. Then I think you are Men that were ſpoken of before, Jeſuits and Prieſts: They ſay you are none; but you are their Brethren.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, theſe go beyond Jeſuits: The Jeſuits will ſwear with a Reſervation, and theſe will not ſwear at all. This Man muſt be proceeded accordingly with; for if this be allowed, I conceive there will be no Juſtice in England. And in reſpect of the Quality of his Perſon, Function, and Gravity, by ſo much is it a more pernicious Example, and it aggravates the Thing every way.

Ld Preſident. Let it be known here, that it may be diſperſed abroad; and I think there are ſome of moſt Counties of England. And this Air is gone forth; this very Plot is ſecretly ſpread with ſome chief Miniſters throughout all England.

Attorn. Gen. This Right they have done to many of them, that I believe it will make a more ſevere Inquiſition into theſe Perſons, than otherwiſe there would be: It is not Blood that is look'd after, but Confeſſion and Contrition. I am glad that thoſe that are not Clergy-Men do come in, and the Clergy will not confeſs at all.

[The

[The Court conſults a while.]

Ld Preſident. Maſter Jackſon, for your refuſing to ſwear, the Court fineth you five hundred Pounds, and Impriſonment during the Pleaſure of the Court.

[The Keeper of the Fleet is called upon, and commanded to take him in Cuſtody.]

Mr. Love. My Lord, I have ſome Motions humbly to make to this Court. The firſt is to intreat your Lordſhip, and the reſt of the Members of this Court, that if I have let fall any Expreſſions thro Inconſiderateneſs, or for want of Skill in the Law, that have been an Offence either to your Lordſhip, or to any, I beſeech you, if I have ſpoken any derogating Expreſſions, or made any unſeaſonable Motions, that you would impute it to my Ignorance.

Ld Preſident. None of them ſhall hurt you.

Mr. Love. Then I intreat this Favour, That I may have Counſel aſſigned me, and Sollicitors here in Court, and in my Chamber at the Tower, and a Copy of my Charge, and convenient Time, as the nature of the Buſineſs requires, my Charge being long, and I have not read a Word of it, nor the Depoſitions; that I may have, I ſay, Counſel aſſigned me, and convenient Time to bring in my Anſwer. And I am confident, thro the good Hand of God upon me, I ſhall clear my ſelf of all the Treaſons charged upon me, and of all their Aggravations, through Strains of Wit and Quillets of Law by Inſtruments of State: I am confident I ſhall clear my Innocency, that I ſhall not ſtand a Traytor before you.

Ld Preſident. They being Inſtruments of State, are Inſtruments of God, appointed by the State. For your Time, you have all this Afternoon. Are you not ready?

Mr. Love. I was yeſterday nine Hours lock'd up in that cloſe Room and in this Place; and I could not read one Word laſt Night, not out of Trouble of Mind, but through Wearineſs, being kept ſo many Hours in the Court.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, he hath had a Fortnight's Notice of his Tryal to prepare for it. My Lord, we have been two Days; and by the Courſe of Proceedings, if the Gentleman had had his Tryal by a Jury, both muſt have been diſpatched in one Day. We are appointed to go on to hear his Defence now, or elſe on Monday.

Mr. Love. I deſire a convenient Time to bring in my Witneſſes, to make it appear how the Witneſſes againſt me contradict themſelves. I have not yet read the Depoſitions of one Man, and I cannot read the Depoſitions by Monday; and to-morrow is a Day that ſome Time of it ſhould be ſpent in other Imployments.

Ld Preſident. To do Juſtice, you muſt run out of the Church; and though you were at your Prayers, you muſt forſake Praying and Sabbaths to do Juſtice. Sir, this is of a higher nature than all your Preaching and Praying.

[The Court conſults a while together.]

Ld Preſident. The Court all agree to give you till Wedneſday Eight a-clock in the Morning.

Mr. Love. I deſire that I may have Counſel here, and in my Chamber.

Ld Preſident. You have ſhewed nothing theſe two Days that raiſes any Doubt in Matter of Law.

Mr. Love. There are ſome Things in my Charge that I doubt this Court cannot take Cognizance of; ſomething in thoſe Acts, and ſomething in reſpect of the Time. It is Matter of Law, whether the Act ſpeak of ſending or receiving Letters or Meſſages. And here are eight Witneſſes come in, and never a Man proves that I received Letter, or ſent Letter, or lent any Money. And this I conceive is Matter of Law, whether the Acts reach being preſent only where other Men lay down Money.

Ld Preſident. You have had Counſel.

Mr. Love. My Lord, I have had none.

Attorn. Gen. For Counſel, you are to ſend him none, my Lord: He hath his Liberty; he hath Recourſe for all the People in England to come to him.

Mr. Love. Counſel have refuſed to come to me; I have their Letters about me.

[Here he reads the Letters of ſome Counſellors, which they ſent to him to the Tower, declaring they could not come to him, unleſs they were aſſigned by the Court.]

Attorn. Gen. All that we can ſay to you, is, that Counſel may come to you, if they will.

[Maſter Love is commanded away; and the Court adjourns till Wedneſday.]

The third Day's Proceedings, July the 25*th*, 1651.

THE Court is ſet; and Mr. Love is commanded to the Bar.

Attorn. Gen. Mr. Love, this is the Day the Court hath given you (according to your Deſire) to make your Defence; and they are ready to hear it.

Ld Preſident. And I hope thoſe Directions that have been given, have been obſerved, that any Perſons of what Quality ſoever, either Lawyers or others, that came to you, have had in a fair way Acceſs unto you; and that you have been debarred nothing that the Court gave Order for. If there have been any Impediments, we will do our beſt to have them taken away.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, I have nothing more at preſent againſt him: You have heard that whereof he ſtands accuſed, and the Evidence produced to prove it. And, my Lord, I hope they be ſufficient to convince the Gentleman that there is Proof againſt him for theſe Facts and treaſonable Deſigns, whereof he ſtands accuſed. This Day is appointed for his Defence, if he thinks fit to make it. But if God hath otherwiſe wrought upon his Heart, and that he himſelf is convinced that the Charge againſt him is proved to be true; to me it will be the beſt way of his Preſervation. But what way ſoever he thinks fit to take, I ſhall be ready to go along with him in it: And ſo, my Lord, I expect what he ſhall ſay.

Mr. Love. My Lord, I ſhall not trouble your Lordſhip, and the Court, to bring in at preſent any Witneſſes to teſtify any thing that might invalidate that Teſtimony that ſome have brought in againſt me; I love not to protract Time: But I ſhould betray my own Innocency, ſhould I by my Silence lie under all that Charge and Obloquy which is caſt upon me. And therefore I deem it my Duty, wherein I can, and as far as I am able, to expreſs my ſelf before your Lordſhip and the Court.

Court. And therefore I humbly crave leave of your Lordſhip, and this Court, that I may make my Defence for my Life before you.

Although I am denied Counſel to plead for me in this Court, which is ſo juſt and neceſſary a Means for the Preſervation of my Life, yet my Comfort is that of the Pſalmiſt, My Defence is of God, which ſaveth the Upright in Heart, and pleadeth the Cauſe of his Servant againſt him that puffeth at him.

My Lord, you have granted me that Favour which the Romans did to Paul, that he might anſwer for himſelf, concerning the Crimes laid againſt him.

In making my Defence, I ſhall humbly crave leave to proceed in this Method: To ſpeak ſomething, Firſt, concerning the Charge: Secondly, concerning the Witneſſes, and their Teſtimony: Thirdly, ſomething concerning my ſelf: And then, Laſtly, ſome Things humbly to propoſe to your Lordſhip and the Court concerning my Charge. Mr. Attorney-General hath exhibited a Charge againſt me, conſiſting of two Parts; of High Treaſon, and of other High Crimes and Offences. As touching the firſt, comparing the Acts which the State hath made with the Actions which my ſelf have done, I know not any perſonal Act of mine (proved againſt me) that renders me guilty, as to Treaſon, by any publick Act of your Lordſhips. And therefore I pleaded the general Iſſue, Not guilty, as to that.

As to the ſecond, my Counſel having a general Licence to come to me, and ſince having been with me, they have acquainted me that Preſence with, or Silence at what my Accuſers have done, this renders me culpable by your Acts; and therefore, as to that, I ſhall humbly commit my ſelf to your Juſtice and Mercy.

Concerning, Sir, the Charge laid againſt me, I can ſafely and truly ſay I am charged with many Things which I ought not, being pretended to be done before the Act was publiſhed which conſtitutes this Court. I am charged likewiſe therein with many Things that I knew not, and with other Things that I did not; and therefore dare not in Conſcience lie under the Obloquy of the whole Charge. I do therefore in general declare and proteſt againſt what is mentioned in the Charge, touching the raiſing of Inſurrections, Seditions, and Rebellions. I may ſay in that regard as Jeremy did, I deſire not that woful Day, God he knows.

To the other Particulars, to wit, the Confederation with Jermin, Piercy, and others, in foreign Parts, to raiſe Forces, I anſwer, I diſlike the very Mention of their Names, or any Concurrence with them in any Practice of ſuch a nature, who are Perſons whoſe Principles are ſo contrarient to Religion and Liberty.

As touching the other Particulars, to wit, a Correſpondence with the Son of the late King, the Queen, Jermin, and Piercy, and others mentioned in the Charge; I do declare before you, That I never received Letter from, nor ſent Letter to any of them; nor had I any Correſpondence with them.

There are other Things in the Charge, to which all the Depoſitions of the Witneſſes do not in the leaſt come up: And ſhould I by my Silence render my ſelf obnoxious to the whole, you might judge me to be guilty of that which indeed I am not guilty of.

I obſerve in reading the Charge, that there are many Things in it which the Witneſſes do not in the leaſt ſpeak unto: For, firſt, none of them ſwear that ever I writ Letter to the King, or to the Queen his Mother, or to Jermin, Piercy, or any other Perſon named in the Charge, or to any Perſon of the Scotiſh Nation, ſince the Troubles began.

Again, none of the Witneſſes ſwear that ever I either deſired, or perſuaded, or directed any Perſon to write any Letter to any Perſons whoſe Names are mentioned in the Charge, or to any Perſon in or of the Scotiſh Nation: Nor do any of them ſwear that ever any Letter was written in my Houſe; but that only Letters ſuppoſed to be come from or ſent to the Scots were read there; which I do not deny. Again, none of them ſwear that ever I did ſo much as read a Letter in my Houſe, or other where, that was pretended to come from the Scots, or pretended to be ſent into Scotland. Further, none ſwear that ever I gave my expreſs and particular Aſſent to the ſending away of any Letter. And none ſwear that ever I collected one Penny of Money either for the King or the Scots, or any Perſon in Scotland. That which is affirmed by one Teſtimony, to wit, by Alford, that I moved for Money, I ſhall anſwer when I come to it. Again, none of the Witneſſes prove that ever I invited any Perſon, or foreign Forces, to invade the Nations of England and Ireland; which yet is laid expreſly to my charge in the Charge read againſt me. None likewiſe prove that ever I plotted, contrived, or endeavoured to raiſe Forces, Tumults, or Inſurrections within this Nation againſt the preſent Government. None ſwear that I was a Correſpondent. Indeed, Adams in his Teſtimony had theſe Words, (which both the Notary and my ſelf took) That he took me to be a Correſpondent. But when I had your Lordſhip's and the Court's Leave to put this Queſtion to him, Whether upon Oath he would affirm I was one? his Anſwer was, That he could not poſitively ſay I was ſo; but he ſaid, He did conceive I was a Correſpondent; but did not ſay I was ſo. So that, Sir, as to theſe Particulars, there are none of the eight Witneſſes (neither the ſeven that have been ſworn, nor yet Maſter Jaquel, whom I do not take to be under an Oath) that do charge any of theſe Particulars upon me.

I have a Word alſo to ſpeak concerning the Witneſſes, who are my Accuſers; and I might ſay there is an Incompetency in them, as to their Number. There are many Particulars ſworn againſt me, to which but one Witneſs hath ſworn to one Fact; and this I ſhall humbly offer to your Lordſhip's and the Court's Conſideration. I might alledge alſo an Incompetency as to their Quality: They are not only Perſons accuſed of Treaſon, and ſo are not to be believed, but they have made an open Confeſſion of that which is Treaſon by your Act, and ſo are not legales Teſtes. They have done that by an open Confeſſion, which, as I am informed, is equivalent to a Conviction: They have confeſs'd ſending of Letters, receiving of Letters, and lending of Money; but they have proved none of theſe Things againſt me. Now they having both given it under their Hands, and alſo publickly declared that they have done theſe Things, I cannot judge them competent Witneſſes againſt me: But this I muſt leave to the Court's Conſideration.

Sir, concerning the Incompetency of their Number, to that wherein two Witneſſes do concur, I am concluded; and wherein they have teſtified any Thing true, I would not deny it for all the World; and wherein they agree in their Teſtimony in a Truth, therein I will be candid, and ingenuous to acknowledge it.

My

My Lord, tho the Charge be long, and my Time but ſhort, and the Depoſitions many Sheets of Paper, (and truly I could hardly read them over till late laſt night) yet through the good Hand of God upon me, I ſhall labour to make as plain and clear a Defence as God ſhall enable me.

Sir, in reading over the Charge, I obſerve, that thoſe things which ſeem moſt criminal againſt me, are ſworn to but by ſingle Teſtimony; and I will mention, with your Lordſhip's leave, a few Particulars.

Firſt, Touching the Letters ſaid to be from Titus, the Effect of it being, as was ſaid, to deſire ſome to come over to Calais, that he might give them information touching Affairs at Jerſey; none but Far ſwears that this Letter was read in my Houſe. The other Witneſſes, ſome ſay, it was read in one place, and ſome in another: Alford, I remember, he ſays he heard it from William Drake; and Adams ſays, it was read in William Drake's Houſe: but none but Far ſwears, it was read in my Houſe. There is likewiſe none but Far ſwears, that Major Alford was deſired in my Houſe to go to Calais to Titus; neither Jaquel, nor Potter, nor Alford, nor Adams, nor any of the reſt lay this to my charge: it is only Far that lays this to my charge, and he doth it moſt untruly, which I will make out unto you by an undeniable Demonſtration.

He ſays, that at a Meeting at my Houſe the Company did deſire Major Alford to go to Calais. Now if your Lordſhip obſerves Alford's Teſtimony, he tells you upon Oath, that he was never in my Houſe till after he came from Calais, nor ever ſpake with me in my life till after he came from Calais, therefore could not be deſired in my Houſe to go to Calais. So that, Sir, I will not lay it upon the Badneſs of Far's Conſcience, but upon the Badneſs of his Memory. I do not think he is ſuch an Atheiſt, to ſwear falſly deliberately; but being ask'd ſo many Queſtions as he was, for he was ask'd fourſcore and eighteen Queſtions by Mr. Attorney, and ſome of the Court, he might eaſily ſay he knew not what.

And I ſaw the Man was confounded, and it was hinted to him what to ſay, by the help of the Papers, and Examinations taken from him in private, and ſhewed to him in publick: ſo that, Sir, I ſaw the Man under a Temptation. I was loth to mention this then, tho I knew his Teſtimony herein to be falſe, becauſe I would not anticipate my laſt Anſwer.

A third Particular charged upon me by one Witneſs only, is a Copy of a Letter (not the Original, none ſwears that) that Alford received from Titus; and he told him, it was a Copy of a Letter from the King. Now Far he ſwears that the Subſtance of the Letter was to deſire Commiſſioners to be ſent over to Breda, at the Treaty there: now Alford, who pretended to receive this Letter from Titus, being ask'd the Queſtion, he ſwears that there was no ſuch thing in the Letter, that he knew of. Now truly, if any did know the Contents of that Copy of a Letter, it muſt be Alford, who brought it over: I beſeech your Lordſhip therefore to conſider it, and tho the Charge againſt me be very high, and my Condition very low, and the Oppoſition againſt me very great; yet I hope I am in the hands of merciful and juſt Men, and that wherein you ſee but ſingle Teſtimonies, that therein you would be very tender in proceeding to a Sentence againſt me upon thoſe Teſtimonies.

Again, in the next place, I obſerve a ſingle Teſtimony only in another Buſineſs, and that is Major Alford. None but he, of all the Witneſſes, did ſwear that it was agreed upon among us, that is, at my Houſe, That a Commiſſion and Inſtructions ſhould be ſent over to the Lord Willoughby of Parham, Maſſey, Titus, and Alderman Bunce; none, I ſay, but Alford ſwore this. Adams indeed ſwore, that there was a Motion that this ſhould be; and Huntington ſwore this, that Mr. Love ſhould ſay, Come, come, let it go; (to which I ſhall anſwer, when I come to it.) But Far ſaid expreſly, three times in Court, being upon Oath alſo, That all the Company were againſt ſending away the Commiſſion. And Alford he only ſwears, That the Commiſſion was agreed upon.

I hope your Lordſhip and the Court will judge which of theſe to believe; and for Alford's affirming that it was agreed upon among us, I am ſure, if he had any Conſcience, he could not ſay that I agreed to it. I will not deny (now Witneſſes have proved it) but that I was preſent. But I did expreſs myſelf againſt the Commiſſion and Inſtructions, as being an Act of high Preſumption, for private Perſons to ſend Commiſſions and Inſtructions; and as being an Act of notorious Falſhood, that it ſhould run in the name of the Presbyterian Party, when none did know any thing of it, that I know of, but only thoſe that were then in the Room. And I beſeech your Lordſhip and the Court to conſider, that this is not only a ſingle Teſtimony, but that it is ſaid to be done in the Year 1649. a great while ago, my Lord. And ſo the Buſineſs of Titus, if it had been true, was done ſome time before that: ſo that, Sir, it being done before the Act of the 26th of March 1650, which conſtitutes this Court, herein I hope it will not be deemed criminal, if I had agreed to and approved of the Commiſſion, which I never did. Another Particular, to which I obſerve there is but a ſingle Teſtimony, which is Alford alſo; he ſwore, that at a Meeting at my Houſe, I moved for Contribution of Money to Titus; none ſwore this, but only he. Adams ſwore, I took Pen and Ink in my Hand, but he knows not what I writ. Others ſwore, That I was ſometimes preſent at the Meeting; but none but Alford ſwore, that I moved at a Meeting for Contribution of Money. Now, Sir, as to that it is but a ſingle Teſtimony; and if it were true, I do not deem it comes under the Act, becauſe the Act (of which I was ignorant till the day I heard it here in Court) of the 2d of Auguſt 1650. that Act doth adjudge this to be Treaſon, to wit, The ſending, or cauſing to be ſent, Money, Horſes, or Arms, into Scotland. Now, Sir, if it had been true, which this Witneſs depoſeth, That I at a Meeting did move for Money, yet he proves not againſt me, that ever I received or ſent away a Penny; and if I had moved it, that had neither been a ſending away of Money into Scotland, nor a cauſing of Money to be ſent away: and ſo brings me not, as to Treaſon, under your Act.

Another thing, unto which only a particular Witneſs ſwore, to wit, Far, is, That I moved him particularly to contribute Money. He chargeth not this at a Meeting, as Alford doth; for he ſays, he came in late, but ſaith that it was a perſonal Motion to him alone: And he doth not ſay, that I moved him for Money for Maſſey and Titus, but that I only asked him this Queſtion, Captain Far, what will you do? And if your Lordſhip conſider it, and that your Notaries have taken right, you ſhall find that to be his Anſwer, which I ſhall anſwer when I come to it. And thereupon he con-feſſes, he brought five Pounds to my Houſe, but he doth not tell you that I received it; and God is my witneſs, I never ſaw it, nor received it, nor did I give any directions about it. But as Far was going out of the Court, he named Captain Maſſey, the Perſon which he thought received the Money; for which he was rebuked by ſome that were by him, that ſo the greater Odium might lie upon me: as if becauſe the Money being brought to my Houſe, I muſt needs therefore receive it. His Name, as I am informed, that rebuked him for declaring who received it, is Captain Biſhop: ſo that they would inſinuate into your Breaſts, who are my Judges, (who I hope will be conſcientious) That it was I that received the Money, when the Witneſs meant honeſtly, that another received it. But if I had received it, or moved for it, yet he is but a ſingle Teſtimony to that Particular. Again, in reading the Depoſitions, I take notice that there is only a ſingle Teſtimony to thoſe words; (upon the reading, reading I cannot ſay, for I never read it; upon the hearing ſome Papers read, ſuppoſed to be a Commiſſion) that Huntington ſwore, that I ſhould ſay, Come, come, let it go. Thoſe were his words; but the other who were there preſent, two or three of them being ask'd, whether they heard me ſpeak ſuch words, they all of them denied that they heard any ſuch words. Now truly this Huntington is a Man whoſe Face I never ſaw before that day, nor ſince, till I ſaw him here in Court: and if I had known that a Buſineſs of any dangerous nature had been come to my Houſe, which I did not, (for I knew no more of it, than any here preſent, before Drake took the Papers out of his Pocket, which Huntington confeſſes were written in Characters, and read by Drake) I ſhould have been accounted a very indiſcreet Man, to ſpeak any ſuch words in the preſence of a Man whoſe Face I never ſaw before. And for thoſe words that I ſhould ſay, Come, come, let it go; I hope your Lordſhip and the Court will be ſatisfied, that I never ſpake any ſuch words, as to the Commiſſion and Inſtructions; for then I ſhould have contradicted my ſelf in one Breath: for at the ſame time I had ſpoke againſt it.

Again, I obſerve in the Depoſitions, none but Adams affirms that there was a Letter, which, ſays he, was declared to be directed to the General Aſſembly of Scotland. He doth not ſwear it was directed to the General Aſſembly, but that it was declared to be ſo, and ſo ſwears by Hear-ſay. None but he, I ſay, affirms upon Oath, That at my Houſe there was a Letter read, which was declared to be directed to the General Aſſembly. And he ſays further, He thought this Letter was penn'd by Maſter Love or Dr. Drake: But I beſeech your Lordſhip and the Court to conſider by what reaſon he did conceive this; and I hope your Lordſhip will diſtinguiſh between a poſitive Aſſertion, and a conjectural Suppoſition. For being ask'd, why he conceived ſo? I conceive ſo, ſays he, becauſe of the Language of it: as if he that never ſaw any Letter of mine, to know that poor and low Stile I write in, ſhould conceive that either I, or that other Gentleman named, ſhould pen that Letter, merely becauſe of the Language of it, it being, (he ſaid) in order to promote the Ends of the Covenant. I hope the Court will judge of the Inſufficiency of this Evidence; and were it never ſo clear, yet as to that Particular, it is but one Teſtimony.

Again, none but Adams ſware concerning a large Letter, that, for my part, I never knew of, till the day he affirmed it here in Court. A large Letter, he ſays, in the nature of a Declaration, penn'd, as he thought, by Maſter Love or Dr. Drake, wherein it ſhould be ſaid, That they could not ſend Money till the Scots did appear more conſiderable, and grew nearer to Action: Yet he confeſſes he had no ground to ſay Maſter Love penn'd it. And indeed, he had not. But, Sir, as for this Letter, though I durſt not for a World deny any thing which I know to be true; yet God is my Record, to my knowledge, I never ſo much as heard any mention of it. And as for theſe words he ſpeaks of to be in the Letter, I know nothing at all of them; nor did I ever hear them, as I know of, till I heard him affirm them here in Court.

But if it had been ſo, yet he is but a ſingle Teſtimony, and I beſeech your Lordſhip to conſider, that he ſays it was to this effect, or this was the Subſtance of it: Now I hope ſo many grave Judges and Lawyers that ſit upon my Life, and ſo many conſcientious Men, will be tender of a Man's Blood, when a Man ſhall come in with Evidence, and ſhall ſhew neither my Hand, nor the Letter, nor the Original, neither Copy, nor Tranſcript, nor any thing but the vain Rovings of a Man's Memory in things ſpoken or done ſo long ago; and that a Man ſhall come in againſt a Man's Life, and ſhall only ſay, that this was the Sum or Subſtance of it, or it was to this effect. And I being a Divine, I ſhall not ſpeak as to Matter of Law, that this is inſufficient Teſtimony, but as a Scholar, and one that ſtudies the Scriptures, I ſhall obſerve one memorable Inſtance that pleads my Juſtification in this Particular, and they are the words of Chriſt; Chriſt ſaid, Deſtroy ye this Temple, and in three Days I will raiſe it up, John 2. 19. Now the Scripture in Mark ſays, There aroſe certain, and bare falſe witneſs againſt Chriſt, ſaying, We heard him ſay, I will deſtroy this Temple, &c. Mark 24. 57, 58.

I beſeech your Lordſhip to conſider, that in this Teſtimony of the falſe Witneſſes againſt Chriſt, there is only the Variation of a Word, and the Addition of a Letter; there is the Addition of a Letter I, and the Alteration of the word ye for will, (there's all) for Chriſt did not ſay I will deſtroy, but, deſtroy ye; and yet the Scripture takes notice of it, that this Addition of a Letter, and Alteration of a Word, brought his Accuſers under a falſe Teſtimony, though they ſpake according to their Intention; for they did verily believe he ſpake of the Temple: for they ſaid, Forty Years was it in building. So that I beſeech you be tender in Matters of Blood. I know you who are skilful in the Law do know, that the Proof of Treaſon muſt be as clear as the Sun, Probationes oportent eſſe luce clariores. Now when a Man ſhall come againſt a Man's Life, and cannot ſhew any Letter that ever he wrote, or that ever he did receive, but ſhall only ſwear it was to this effect, or to this purpoſe, or I believe this was the Subſtance of it; I hope you are ſo wiſe and conſcientious, that you will paſs no Judgment upon this conjectural Evidence.

Another Particular, to which only one Witneſs teſtifies, and that is Adams; he ſwears that I ſhould ſay, That if the Presbyterians were in Arms, by the Bleſſing of God, Malignants might be prevented from getting the day. Truly, I do not know what Crime is in theſe words, but as they may be wreſted. But, Sir, I do remember that this Adams hath often come to my Houſe; he ſaid ſeven or eight times, he might have ſaid ſeven and twenty times; for he hath come ſometimes once or twice a Week to my Houſe, to tempt me (as I now perceive) ceive) and hath offered me Money; and would ask me whether I knew any thing for a publick Uſe that might require Money? And though I never ſuſpected him, yet ſo free am I from maintaining Correſpondency, or from having Intelligence, or contributing of Money to maintain a War, that I never received one Penny of him in my Life, though I have been moved to it by him: But I remember, of late eſpecially, about a quarter of a Year before I was in Priſon, he would come once or twice a Week to my Houſe, and he pretended that he was wrought upon by me, and that I had turned him from his malignant Principles; for he was very violent for Hamilton's Invaſion of England, which I was, and to this day am againſt; and I did labour to poſſeſs him what a miſchievous Deſign that was: and ſo he pretended to be turned to my Principles, and upon this got ſome room in my Affections. But theſe words were not above a fortnight before I was committed to Priſon: and I remember the Occaſion of them was this; I was bewailing the great Alienation and Difference that there was between the Presbyterian and Independent Party (though I do not love Names of Diſtinction) and indeed thus I ſaid, That if the godly Party, that were now diſunited and disjoined, both of the Diſſenting and Presbyterian Way, were in Arms, there were no Hopes that ever the Malignants ſhould get the Day. And God is my Record, I ſpake nothing to him but to this purpoſe. And thus, through the good Hand of God upon me, I have ſpoken to what I obſerve in reading the Depoſitions, wherein I find but ſingle Teſtimonies againſt me.

I ſhall now crave leave (which is the main of my Work) to run over the Depoſitions as briefly as I can; for I ſhall not trouble you with large Speeches: but being the Depoſitions were large, and the Witneſſes many, your Lordſhip and the Court (I hope) will bear with me with the more Patience, if I ſpeak more largely in it. It is my Duty to ſpeak for my ſelf, and 'tis for my Life.

The firſt Witneſs that appeared in Court againſt me, was Henry Potter. As to his Teſtimony, there are many Particulars which he was ask'd about me, to which he ſpake but conjecturally; as he thought, and as he believed, and as he conceived. And when Papers by Mr. Attorney-General of his Examination were tendred to him, he anſwered, That then he had a Latitude to ſpeak more than he durſt affirm upon Oath. And upon this I ſhall humbly crave leave that I may make this Motion to you, That you would not, in paſſing Judgment upon me, hearken to any private Examinations, which are extrajudicial, to be brought in Court againſt me; for moſt of the Witneſſes had their private Examinations ſhewed them in Court, and were read to them, and they did not ſpeak in their Relations of what they knew, but what they conceived; and when they could not tell what to ſay, then their Examinations were produced to direct them: and I hope your Lordſhip and the Court will take notice of this. And herein I cannot but acknowledge the Juſtice of this Court in this Particular, That you would not receive private Examinations till they came face to face, that I might anſwer to the Crimes laid againſt me.

But as to his Teſtimony, I ſhall not run over things that touch me not, I muſt not flatter my ſelf to paſs over things that concern me: For I know it will be look'd upon with more prying Eyes than mine are. There are only two things in his Teſtimony that concerns me: He ſpeaks not of any Meetings at my Houſe that he knows of; he ſpeaks not of any Money that ever I lent him or gave him though there was a narrow and exact Examination of him in thoſe Particulars. But two things concern me in his Depoſition; the one is, That he received a Letter with a great L. upon it, from one Colonel Bamfield, which was a Narrative of the Affairs of Scotland; which Letter, with two more incloſed, from my Lord of Argyle, Lowdon and Lothian, he ſaid, he brought them to Mr. Love's: and herein I might take notice, that he forgot himſelf a little, for he might have ſaid, that he brought them firſt to Mr. Jaquel's; for Jaquel did affirm in Court, that Potter brought the Letters to him, and ſpake to him to come to me. The Subſtance of the Letters from the Earl of Argyle and the reſt, he ſays, were to move for ten thouſand Pounds; and (as I remember) Jaquel ſays, for five thouſand Pounds: But Potter himſelf acquits me in this matter; for he doth not ſwear the Letter was to me, nor could he ſwear it juſtly; nay, he ſwears he did not think it was to me. And as for this Bamfield, he is a Man whoſe Face I never ſaw to this day: and he ſwears, (and indeed he had been injurious if he had not told you thus) that when he came into Mr. Love's Houſe, he ſaid, Mr. Love, I have News to ſhew you. And unleſs things be aggravated againſt me, by the Inſinuations of Men, and by rigid Inferences and Collections, this will be the worſt charged upon me, That there were ſeveral Meetings at my Houſe, and ſeveral Letters read there, which I do not deny. But, Sir, he confeſſes, that he ſaid, [Mr. Love, I have News to ſhew you;] and that he opened ſome of the Letters, and that ſome were not opened when he brought them: But neither he nor Jaquel ſwears, that I opened them; and he tells you, That he carried away the Letters with him. And he ſwears further, That both my ſelf, and all that were there preſent, did manifeſt an utter Diſlike and Deteſtation of thoſe Letters. But herein I know what will be laid to my Charge; it will be ſaid, Why did not Mr. Love reveal them? Truly, to this I do ingenuouſly ſay, That I did conceive by reading of the Act that conſtitutes this Court, That thoſe only were bound to reveal, that did receive them; and not that I was bound to reveal that which another Man received. But herein I am better informed by my Counſel, and they tell me, That Preſence with, or Silence at what others do, makes it a criminal Fact in me, if the Matter of the Letter be criminal and treaſonable by your Acts; and therefore in this, that I did not diſcover them, I ſhall humbly beg your Favour.

The next thing in Potter's Teſtimony that toucheth me, is, he ſwears that he heard of a Propoſition for raiſing of 400 l. for Titus and Maſſey; but he varies from the others: Alford ſaid, 2 or 300 l. and Far ſaid, 250 or 300 l. and Potter ſaith, 400 l. But he ſaith he was not preſent when the Propoſition was made, and therefore he cannot ſpeak as to that. But yet ſaith he, I brought ten Pounds to Mr. Love's Houſe, and there left it; (five or ſix Perſons more being in the Room.) Mr. Attorney-General was pleaſed to ask him, Whether he did not give me a twitch by the Hand or Cloke when he brought it? Potter, I remember, denies that he did ſo; and I do not remember that ever he did it, nor do I remember that ever he laid a Penny of Money down in my Houſe: And I tell it you in the Preſence of God, I never ſaw it, nor received it to this very day. But, Sir, if he had given me a twitch, which is intended as an Aggravation againſt me, I hope a Judicatory will not proceed upon ſo ſilent a thing as that is: Though Solomon ſays, There is a Teaching with the Fingers, Prov. 6. 13. yet that is ſo ſilent a thing, that a Court of Judicatory cannot take notice of it, unleſs it be manifeſt and apparent by ſome Act. And therefore ſeeing he doth not affirm that I ſaw the Money laid down, or that I received the Money, or directed or ordered him to come to my Houſe with any Money, I hope you will not lay that to my Charge. And thus I have done as to that Particular.

There is only one thing more in order to the Letters he was examined about. He was ask'd what Anſwer was returned to thoſe Letters that he received from Bamfield, and the Earl of Argyle and the reſt, that he ſhewed Mr. Love? To that he gave this Account, That a Letter was left at his Shop, which he thought, he ſaid, came from Mr. Love or Doctor Drake. Now, Sir, for my part, I declare in the Preſence of God, That I never in all my Life, either wrote or ſent, or left a Letter at his Shop: And although I am not to plead another Man's Cauſe, yet I believe that godly Miniſter he mentions, will clear himſelf alſo; but I muſt only ſpeak to my own Defence. For my part, I never in my Life ſent a Letter to his Shop, written to thoſe Perſons: and he only ſwears, That he thought the Letter left in his Shop came from me or Doctor Drake: But how could he know from whom it came, or what was the Matter of it? And if it had come from either of us, which he did not affirm, yet he doth not ſay he opened the Letter, and ſo could not tell the Contents of it, that it was an Anſwer to the ſuppoſed Letters he ſhewed me. I have only one thing to obſerve in his whole Teſtimony, and that is, That he confeſſes, until he had a ſight of other Mens Examinations in private, to wit, of Alford's and Adams's, the things did not come to his Remembrance, or Words to that effect he hath in his Depoſitions; and that there were ſome things to which he could not ſpeak exactly, till he firſt ſaw ſome Informations; and that Mr. Attorney-General did ſhew him ſome Informations, and that did bring things to his Remembrance; and that before Capt. Fiſher and Mr. Attorney did prompt him, and remember him, he had forgot. So that, Sir, I beſeech you conſider, whether this be a clear and good Teſtimony in Law, That when a Man hath forgot a thing done ſo long ago, he ſhall through the Examinations of others have his Memory rubb'd up, and then ſhall come here in a publick Court to teſtify this againſt a Man's Life.

The next Witneſs is Major Alford, he gives you a large Relation about ſending Titus to Jerſey, and of 100 l. given him for his Journey, and of Letters to the Queen, and Jermin and Piercy. My Lord, I am as ignorant of all theſe things as the Child unborn, and did never know that Titus was gone or ſent to Jerſey, by any Perſon, till a long time after I heard he was there, and till I heard of his Name in the Diurnals, that he was an Agent for ſome Preſbyterians; till then, God is my Record, I knew nothing of that: and I need not ſpeak to this, but becauſe this was part of my Charge, and brought into the Court, many may imagine, as if I were guilty upon the whole matter. But that which concerns me, is this; he affirms that the Commiſſion and Inſtructions were agreed upon at my Houſe, to ſend to ſome Perſons; to wit, my Lord Willoughby of Parham, Maſſey, Titus, and Alderman Bunce, to treat at Breda; and this to be in the behalf of the Presbyterian Party.

Now, Sir, I ſhall humbly crave leave to offer, wherein this Teſtimony is not only diſagreeing with the Teſtimony of others of the Witneſſes, but even to his own Teſtimony alſo. For here he ſays, it was agreed upon at Maſter Love's Houſe; and in three Leaves after, he ſays, it is true, there was a Commiſſion and Inſtructions read at Mr. Love's Houſe; but whether they were agreed upon there or no, ſaith he, I know not. I do not ſay he hath a bad Conſcience, but ſure I am, he hath a bad Memory. He diſagrees with the Witneſſes alſo; for Far did expreſly affirm upon Oath, That all the Company was againſt ſending them away; and therefore for Alford to ſay it was agreed upon among us, in that I am ſure he doth not ſpeak truly. Another thing which Alford lays to my Charge, is about a Letter, which after Dunbar-Fight ſhould come from Maſſey, wherein he ſhould write for Money, and for Arms, by the way of Holland; and he ſwears this Letter was read in my Houſe, and ſays, That upon the reading of it, I did move for the Contribution of Money to be raiſed for the Supply of Titus. Now before I anſwer to that, though I am not in a Condition to retort, yet I ſhall humbly crave leave, without offence to Mr. Attorney-General, to intreat the Court to take notice of this one thing: Maſter Attorney-General, when the Witneſs had ſpake theſe Words, did pray your Lordſhip and the Court to obſerve, that Maſſey wrote for Arms, and Mr. Love moved for Money; as if he would inſinuate to the Court, That he writing for Arms, and I moving for Money, that my moving for Money was to buy Arms. Now Alford upon Oath did declare, That every Man there was againſt Arms, and he only ſaid, That the Motion for Money, was to ſupply the perſonal Neceſſities of Maſſey and Titus, who were in want. So that I intreat you to conſider it, that that Inſinuation of Mr. Attorney-General might not be aggravated againſt me, and that a bad Inference might not be drawn from it; as if he writing for Arms, and I moving for Money, that that Money ſhould be to buy Arms; which is contrary to Major Alford's Oath. Again, another Inſinuation of Mr. Attorney-General is this; He prayed your Lordſhip and the Court to conſider, That I moved for 300 l. now this is contrary to Alford's Oath; for Alford hath theſe words, Mr. Love did move for the Contribution of Money, but there was no Sum ſpoken of. Now when he ſhall affirm that there was only a Motion for Money, but no Sum ſpoken of, ſhall this be laid to my Charge, as if I moved for 300 l.? Therefore I intreat you, that thoſe Inſinuations and Aggravations of Mr. Attorney-General may not be laid upon me; and that ye would take no notice of any private Examinations, nor yet of any Aggravations of thoſe who are Inſtruments of State, but upon the plain Depoſition of the Witneſſes, and according to their Teſtimony and your Conſciences I muſt ſtand or fall. Alford ſaid further, That after he came from Titus, he gave an Account of a Narrative, and of a Copy of a Letter from the King of Scots: what he might bring, I know not; and if he did, I never deſired him, either to go to Calais, or to come to my Houſe: For I never ſpake with him, as I remember, till after he came from Calais; nor till the time, he ſays, the Letter and Narrative was read in my Houſe. Now, Sir, he only ſays it was a Copy of a Letter (not the Original) That Titus (ſaith he) did ſhew me a Copy of a Letter, at leaſtwiſe, which he ſaid was from the King to the Presbyterian Party. So that this which is the Foundation of the reſt of the Teſtimony, is only this, That the Copy of the Letter was read at my Houſe, and that it was a Copy of the King's Letter. This he affirms only upon Hear-ſay; for he ſays, Titus told him ſo: But who can ſwear, either that Titus had the original Letter, or that this was a true Copy? Nay, might it not be a fictitious thing, either of Titus or of this Man, as may well be ſuſpected? So that they that receive Letters, if that be Treaſon, and thoſe that write Letters, and ſend Money, if they be Traytors; yet they have proved none of theſe againſt me, and yet I only am arraigned, and they in hope of Favour.

Again, I deſire the Court to take notice, though Captain Far ſays there was this Clauſe in the Copy of the Letter from the King, to ſend Commiſſioners to Breda; (and yet he overthrew his Oath afterwards; for he ſays, It is ſo long ago, that I cannot remember it: but I ſhall ſpeak to that when I come to it) yet Alford, that brought this Letter, affirms, That he did not know it was to deſire Commiſſioners to be ſent; and if it had been ſo, I ſhould never have done it, and never did it. At that time I was in my Study, I do not deny it; but when Drake read the Commiſſion, I did declare my Diſlike of it, and Deteſtation againſt it; and ſo did (as Far affirmed) either moſt or all the Company: And if any ſuch thing were ſent, God is my Record, I did neither know of the writing of it, (other than in Characters) nor of the contriving of it, nor yet of the ſending it away, till I heard Alford confeſs in the Court, that he carried this Commiſſion to Graveſend to one Maſon, a Man whoſe Name I never heard of before I was in Trouble. And if I had written and conſented to it, yet it was in the Year 1649. as Major Huntington ſwore, and therefore was before the time that your Act could take hold of me, if I had concurred to it, which I never did. Again, he inſiſteth upon it, That I moved for a Contribution. Now herein I beſeech your Lordſhip, that I may offer theſe two things.

Firſt, This is but the ſingle Teſtimony of one Man, and by the Law of God, and of the Land, a Man muſt not die, but under the Teſtimony of Two or Three Witneſſes: in the Old Teſtament, Deut. 9. and 15. One Witneſs ſhall not riſe up againſt a Man for any Iniquity, or for any Sin in any Sin that he ſinneth. At the Mouth of Two Witneſſes, or at the Mouth of Three Witneſſes, ſhall the matter be eſtabliſhed. And leſt this might be thought to be a Judicial Law pertaining only to the Jewiſh State, it is therefore quoted four times in the New Teſtament; by Chriſt, in Matth. 18. by Paul, in 2 Cor. 13. and in two other places, as noting it to be a Law of Moral Equity, That no Man's Life ſhould be taken away, but by expreſs and clear Teſtimony of Two ſufficient Witneſſes. Now in this that may ſeem moſt to pinch upon me, that I ſhould move for Money, there is but one Witneſs; and it is, as I am informed, contrary to the Laws of the Land, and the Statute of the 1ſt of Edward the Sixth, which provideth, That no Man ſhall be indicted, arraigned, and convicted for Treaſon, but by two lawful and ſufficient Witneſſes: and therefore I beſeech your Lordſhip and the Court, that you would be tender in thoſe things, wherein you find but one Witneſs ſpeaking.

The other thing that I ſhall ſay to this Point, about moving for Money, is, That I humbly conceive the Act doth forbid relieving Perſons in Arms; but now no Perſon can be relieved by a bare Motion: it is not the Motion, but the having the Money moved for, before the Perſon in Arms can be ſaid to be relieved; and if it were true, yet it is not proved, That thoſe Perſons were then in Arms. The other Act of the ſecond of Auguſt, I conceive, gives me relief, if I had moved for Money; for it judges thoſe only to be guilty of Treaſon, that ſhall either ſend, or cauſe to be ſent, Money, Horſe, Arms and Ammunition into Scotland. Now, Sir, if I had in a Meeting moved for Money, yet he tells you not for how much I moved for; for ought he knows it might be but for Six-pence, for he cannot ſwear to it: and I hope, when the Sum is not ſpoken of, you will be very tender. Yet this comes not under your Act, either to be a ſending of Money into Scotland, or a cauſing of it to be ſent, which is not in the leaſt faſtned upon me. When I ask'd him (though he ſwore I moved for Money) whether I contributed any Money my ſelf? to that he anſwered, He could not ſay I did, nor could any of the eight Witneſſes that came againſt me. And thus I have done as to his Teſtimony.

The third Witneſs is Major Huntington; and he affirms, That in the Year 1649. one ask'd him to go to my Houſe, and told him there were ſome there at Prayer, and that he might there hear ſome News; and that he ſpake upon hear-ſay: But then he ſpake upon Oath, And when I came there, Prayer was done. Now for a Man to be ſo poſitive in the firſt Entrance of his Teſtimony, as to ſay Prayer was done, when he could not know that there was any Prayer there at all; (for when he came, it ſeems there was no Prayer; and how then could he know there was any Prayer there at that time?) this at the very firſt Entrance of his Evidence, I ſuppoſe might be a juſt Ground to ſuſpect his whole Teſtimony. But as for the Man, I knew him not, I never ſaw him, as I ſaid, before that time, nor ſince, till I ſaw him here in Court. This Man affirms, That William Drake read in Characters, that which he called a Commiſſion, and ſaid, That he had a Command from the King to ſend this Commiſſion away; which, God is my Record, I never heard, nor ever knew of it: and Alford that brought over the Letter, in which Far ſwore thoſe words were, he himſelf denies it. But that which concerns me in Huntington's Teſtimony, is this, he affirms, That when the Commiſſion was read by Drake, I ſhould ſay, Come, come, let it go. Now, Sir, I ask'd him this Queſtion, Let it go, what doth that refer to? Says Huntington, let the Papers go. Now truly I am not ſo bad a Grammarian as to ſpeak of Papers, let it go, and not to ſay, let them go. And if I had ſpoke of Papers, as he ſays I did, I muſt either be guilty of Non-ſenſe, or elſe he of Falſhood; I believe he of both. But as for thoſe words, Come, come, let it go; he doth not affirm that I ſaid, Come, let it go away, but let it go; and that may be a word of diſlike: And if I did ſay ſo, yet it was not of the Commiſſion, God is my Record; for he came not till Nine of the clock at Night, as himſelf ſays: and before he came, I had declared my ſelf againſt ſending away the Commiſſion and Inſtructions, as being an Act of too high a nature for private Men, and of notorious Falſhood, to ſay it was in the Name of the Presbyterian Party, when it was not. And the other Men that were here in Court upon Oath, and that were then preſent, as Adams and Alford, did confeſs upon Examination, That they heard no ſuch words from me.

The next Teſtimony is Maſter Adams; and he relates a Story of a Correſpondency between William Drake and one Maſon; and being ask'd, Was Maſter Love privy to this Correſpondency? he did ſo far clear me, that he could not ſay it, nor was I privy to it. Being ask'd again, Was Maſter Love privy to theſe Lettors of ſending moderate Propoſitions ſitions to the King? That he likewiſe clears me in, he cannot ſay it: And I can ſay, that I am ſo far from Moderation in their Senſe, that Moderation in their Senſe I deem downright Malignity; which I was, and ſtill am utterly againſt. He was asked likewiſe, Did Maſter Love know of collecting a hundred Pounds for Titus? To that he anſwered, That he durſt not upon Oath ſay that Mr. Love was privy to this Collection; and he doth not ſay, that it was agreed in my Houſe to ſend away the Commiſſion, but ſays, it was moved in my Houſe: for he ſays, I cannot ſay it was agreed upon, for there was no Vote paſs'd. Theſe were his Words; and he contradicts Alford and Far in three Places of his Teſtimony. He overthrows Alford's Depoſition. He affirms that the Copy of the Letter from the King was to ſhew what great Affection he bare to the Miniſtry of England; and promiſed great Favour when he was in a Condition to do it; and deſired them to ſtand ſtedfaſt in the Way they were in. And he ſaith he dare not ſwear that this Letter was read in my Houſe; but he thinks it was. Now, as to this Letter likewiſe, I deſire the ſame Favour from you, that when the Letter doth not appear, neither the Original, nor the individual Copy, that you would be tender of paſſing any Judgment upon me upon the vain Rovings of a Man's Memory; and of a Man's Memory too, that is engaged to proſecute my Life to ſave his own, as moſt of the Witneſſes are that came in againſt me are. He ſaith there was a Motion made in my Houſe, that a Commiſſion and Inſtructions ſhould be drawn up, to ſend to my Lord Willoughby of Parham, and the reſt in Holland; but he ſays, But by whom I cannot ſay: and ſays he, There was no Debate, as I remember, to mend the Inſtructions; though the Attorney-General did lay it upon me, as if I had corrected and amended them, when I did neither read them, no, nor ſo much as touch them in my Life. The Subſtance of the Commiſſion, he tells you, was to authorize the Lord Willoughby of Parham, Maſſey, Graves, and others, to aſſiſt their Brethren of the Scotiſh Nation in their Treaty. Now to this there is a manifeſt Contradiction in another Man's Teſtimony: For Captain Far ſwears that the Commiſſion he ſpeaks of was not to treat, but only, as private Perſons, to adviſe that the King might agree with the Scots upon the Intereſt of Religion, and the Terms of the Covenant; that he might not be drawn away by the high-flown Cavaliers and Malignants. So that Far overthrows this Teſtimony of Adams. Adams ſays it was to treat; and Far ſays it was not to treat, but to adviſe. But be it the one, or be it the other, I deteſt both; I had no hand in, and gave no Aſſent unto it, but manifeſted my Diſſent to the whole. He being likewiſe asked (for I am ſtill upon Adams's Teſtimony) whether at a Meeting it was not propounded at my Houſe to write to the Queen, and to Jermin and Piercy, to mediate with the King to agree with the Scots: To this he anſwered, No. And truly he might very well anſwer ſo; for I am ſure I did never in all my Life hear of a Motion ſo much as of a Letter to be writ to any of theſe three Perſons, to the Queen, Piercy, or Jermin; and ſhould have loathed and abhorred the very Thought of it; and ſhould think that Cauſe the worſe, wherein theſe Perſons were engaged. Being asked whether there was not a Letter from Piercy, that writ for Money to be ſent to the King; and whether the Anſwer given was, That they ſhould ſtay till the King and Scots were agreed, and then to ſend Money; Adams in this did me this Right: He confeſſed he ſaw ſuch a Letter writ; but (ſays he) I only ſaw it in the Hands of one Maſon: a Man who, for my part, I never knew or heard of till I was in Trouble. And being asked whether this Letter from Piercy was read in Maſter Love's Houſe, he ſaid, Certainly no. Being again asked whether about Auguſt there was not a Letter written from Maſſey, wherein he ſaid he had Back-friends in Scotland, and complained that he was not promoted there; and whether that Letter was communicated at Mr. Love's Houſe: In this alſo he did me right; for he anſwered, No certainly, that Letter was not, to the beſt of my Remembrance, read there: I heard of ſuch a Letter, but ſaw it not. Then being asked whether one Sterks was not a Scotch Agent; and whether he did not uſe to come to my Houſe: To which he gives this Anſwer, We took him to be a Scotch Agent, and he met ſometimes at Maſter Love's Houſe. Now, Sir, as to that, he ſuppoſeth that he was an Agent, but doth not ſwear that he was ſo, much leſs that I knew him to be ſo. Nay, I can ſwear, upon the beſt Information I have had both from his own Mouth, and the Mouths of others, that he was no Agent; for he lived in England fourteen Years, and had not been in Scotland in fourteen Years.

And I heard himſelf ſay ſo when he went away upon the Act: And I asked him, Are you imployed by the Church or State of Scotland? And he told me, No, he was not. It is in your Breaſts whether you will believe me, or no. And likewiſe Mr. Blare, when he was here in London, did affirm to me that he was a poor honeſt Man; and that he was no way imployed as an Inſtrument of State. I know nothing of the Man's Agency: Be he Agent, or not, I never ſent Letter or Meſſage by him, nor received any from him, in all my Life. But I ſee it is laid heavy upon me in my Charge, that I contributed Money to him; but no Man in his Depoſitions did prove that I ever gave him a Penny. Adams being asked whether Maſter Love did not write down the Sums of Money that was to be contributed to Maſſey; in this he doth me right alſo, for he ſaith, Maſter Love had a Paper in his Hand, but I did not ſee what he wrote: and therefore to that I need not anſwer. Being further ask'd, Did not Maſter Love put the firſt Letter of their Names before the Sums which others wrote; he anſwered, He could not ſay ſo. Being ask'd further, Was there not a Letter penn'd by Maſter Love and Doctor Drake? this Anſwer he gives, There was a Letter, but (ſays he) I cannot deliver it upon my Oath that it was penned by them; but I thought it was ſo. He could not tell to whom this Letter was directed, but ſaid, It was declared to be directed to the General Aſſembly of Scotland. Now, as I obſerved in the Beginning, this is only the ſingle Teſtimony of one Man. And, indeed, it was the firſt Queſtion (as I remember) that was asked me, that was of moment, when I was examined by the Committee, whether I did not pen this Letter. I did declare to them, in the Preſence of God, That I neither penn'd that, nor any other, to any Perſon of the Scotiſh Nation ſince the Wars began: And this I declare, in the Preſence of the ſame God, ſtill to be a Truth. Being ask'd further, Was Maſter Love preſent at ſome time of this Meeting? he anſwer'd I was: And the Reaſon why he thought that we might pen it, was becauſe of the Language of it. Mr. Attorney-General upon this (I remember) uſes this Expreſſion, My Lord, this is very high; after we were ingaged in Blood, that a Letter ſhould be ſent. But to this I ſay, there is only a ſingle Teſtimony that ſuch a Letter was writ; and whether it was ſent or no, he doth not prove: nor doth he prove that I writ it: And I declare to you that I never writ it. As touching this Letter, which Mr. Attorney-General is pleaſed to inſiſt upon ſo much, Adams being aſked whether it was agreed upon that this Letter ſhould be ſent, he gave this Anſwer, It was after the ſame manner that other Things were agreed upon; but there was no Vote paſs'd: And therefore he cannot prove my particular and expreſs Aſſent to the ſending of the Letter, or any other Letter whatſoever. And here to take off the Jealouſy of a Coreſpondency, which in the cloſe, thro the Grace of God, I ſhall clear to you; but to take it off now a little, before I come to it: If there had been a Correſpondency maintained, would it have been imaginable that from the time of the Fight at Dunbar, which I think is ten Months ſince, to this time, that there ſhould be no Letter that any Man can ſay, nor that I did certainly know of, that either was written, or conveyed, or debated upon to be written, from that time to this very day, to any of the Scotiſh Nation? And yet all this tends to aggravate Matters againſt me, and all the Burden is laid upon my weak Shoulders. Other Men that have heavy Loads have laid them upon my Back, to lighten them from off themſelves. Touching this Letter, he ſaith, This was the Subſtance of it, or it was to this effect, or purpoſe. And again, I inſiſt upon it to beſeech your Lordſhip and the Court, to take heed what you do. It concerns you more than me: It concerns my Life only; but it concerns your Honours, and Lives, and Souls, and all, that upon an uncertain Evidence you do not ſpill a Man's Blood. The Man never read the Letter, only he heard it read; and then he brings into that and other Letters, This is the Sum of it, or it was to this effect. And though this Man hath done me Injury in ſome Particulars, yet in others he hath done me Right: For being asked, Did Maſter Love write Letters, or receive any, or mend thoſe Inſtructions? he only ſwears he ſaw the Letters; but cannot ſay I did read them. Being asked whether I did give my Conſent to the ſending away of that Letter after Dunbar-Fight, which is ſo much inſiſted upon, and ſo greatly aggravated, he did thus far right me; he ſaid, I will not ſwear he did give his Conſent. Being asked whether I was a Correſpondent, he ſaid he took me to be a Correſpondent: And upon theſe Words I had leave to ask him this Queſtion, Whether he knew I was a Correſpondent? To this he ſaid, That Letters were heard by me; but, ſaid he, I cannot ſwear that he was a Correſpondent: I did conceive Maſter Love to be a Correſpondent; but I did not ſay ſo: And I dare not ſwear that he was a Correſpondent. So that herein likewiſe there is nothing but his humbly Conceivings, and his Suppoſitions; according to which I hope you will not paſs any Cenſure upon me. And thus I have done with Adams's Teſtimony.

The fifth Teſtimony is that of Jaquel, which I do here again in Court except againſt as no legal Witneſs; for he did declare he could not in Conſcience take an Oath againſt me. He did well nigh half an Hour declare he could not ſwear, but that he would make a Narrative or Relation of what was true. I did entreat your Lordſhips leave to put it to him whether he was under an Oath, or no; and he ſaid twice, at leaſt, I am as good as under an Oath. If any Perſon, good or bad, come under an Oath, I muſt ſtand or fall by his Teſtimony; and, according to God's Ordinance, an Oath is to decide all Controverſies: But the Man declared he was not under an Oath, and went out of the Court, and was fined five hundred Pound: And when afterwards he was called into the Court again, he did only put his Hand upon his Buttons on his Breaſt. So that this was not any taking of an Oath; but fearing his Fine, he did it, though with much ſeeming Regret of Conſcience; and I am informed this Day that he denies that he was under an Oath. And if ſo, then I have nothing to ſay to his Teſtimony; and ſo ſhall not ſpeak to it, but only as to a bare Relation and naked Information. There is nothing that doth concern me in his Teſtimony, but only a Concurrence with Potter. Potter and he coming to my Houſe with ſome Letters, (as he ſaith) one from Bamfield, another from Argyle, Lowdon, and Lothian, and Belcarras, and another from one Maſter Bailey, if I remember right. Now, Sir, as to theſe Letters, I do not deny but that they brought them to my Houſe; nay, I do acknowledge thoſe two Men did bring thoſe Letters to my Houſe, at leaſtwiſe which they ſaid were ſuch: But whether they were the Originals or Copies, I know not; for I never read nor kept the Letters, but they carried away the Letters with them. And Captain Potter ſaid, Maſter Love, I have News to ſhew you; at that very time when Mr. Jaquel and he came to ſhew them at my Houſe. This Witneſs, I cannot call him ſo, but this Informer ſaith, that being asked what was done upon the hearing of thoſe Letters, he ſaid Potter read the Letters; but that there was no Agreement upon it, but an utter Diſlike in all that heard them about the Contents of them. And he hath theſe Words further, It was, ſays he, a Trouble, I am confident, to them that heard and read the Matter of thoſe Letters. But being asked, Did Maſter Love agree to the giving of forty Pound to Bamfield and his Man? To that Queſtion he anſwers thus: He ſaid there was no Agreement; but it was thought convenient by all. Upon this I craved leave of your Lordſhip to ask him this Queſtion, How he knew my Thoughts, that I thought it convenient? To which he gave this Anſwer; I cannot ſay any thing, that Maſter Love did ſay it was convenient. So that therein, though he might preſume upon a Man's Thoughts to know them, yet he muſt only judge my Thoughts by my Words, as the Tongue and Heart agrees; for he is not a God: But he doth not ſay that I ſaid it was convenient. Nor did either of them prove that ever I gave a Penny either to Bamfield or his Man.

The laſt Witneſs that came in againſt me, is Captain Far. And, indeed, I do not know what to make of his Teſtimony: I will not call it a Prompting, that will be thought too bad a Word; but certainly it was ſuch a Teſtimony that I never heard produced in any Court in my Life: For Maſter Attorney-General, and ſome others here, did ask him ninety eight Queſtions. So that the Man ſpake nothing deliberately, but ſpake by reading out of his private Examinations, which is extrajudicial to be brought in Court, where the Witneſſes are to ſpeak viva voce. There was, I ſay, ſo many Queſtions (beſides thoſe I had leave to ask him) propounded to him, during the Time he was upon his Oath. And the Man was of a dull Spirit, and ſlow of Speech; and I did perceive him to be ſo poſſeſs'd with Fear, that he knew not what he ſaid: For he hath manifeſt Contradictions in his Teſtimony, which I believe all the Court will ſee, and therein concur with me, when they come to hear them. The firſt Word I heard him ſay in Court was this, To deſire the Benefit of his Papers. It ſeems he did ſuſpect the Badneſs of his Memory, that he muſt have his Papers to help him, (and Papers written by another) before he would be depoſed in Court againſt me for my Life.

Papers

Being asked whether upon the ending of the Treaty of Jerſey there was not a Letter came from Titus, to deſire ſomebody to come to Calais; and whether that Letter was read at any Houſe; and whether at my Houſe Alford was deſired to go; he affirms he was, (which none elſe did) and which is a moſt notorious Falſhood. I have no Rancour in my Heart againſt him; the Lord knows I have prayed for all thoſe that perſecute me; and my Heart cleaves to them in Love and Pity. I do not tax the Badneſs of his Conſcience, I think he dares not be ſo vile; but I do tax his Memory in Things done ſo long ago. And afterwards he ſays he could not remember ought, (tho he did pretend to remember) becauſe they were done ſo long ago; yet before he did affirm them. Now to demonſtrate this, that he ſays in this Clauſe, to be falſe, that Alford was deſired in my Houſe to go, Alford himſelf ſays he was never at my Houſe till he came from Calais, which is certainly true: And therefore Alford could not at my Houſe be deſired to go to Calais. When there was an Account given of Alford's Return from Calais, then I know he was there, though I never ſpake with him before that time, as I remember; nor was he ever within my Doors till after his Return. But ſays Far, I cannot ſay Maſter Love was preſent while Alford's Return was there read; for ſometimes he was abſent.

Then further, being asked what was the Subſtance of that Copy of the Letter from the King that Alford brought from Titus, he anſwered, That the Sum of it was this, that the King of Scots did declare he would give Satisfaction to the Scots; and in order thereunto, he deſired Commiſſioners to be ſent over to Breda. Theſe are the Words of his Teſtimony. Now, Sir, this is but the ſingle Teſtimony of one Man; and it is contrary to the Teſtimony of that very Man that brought over this Letter: And if any Man knew the Subſtance of the Copy of the Letter pretended to be from the King, it muſt be Alford, that brought it over: Certainly none could know it better than he. And therefore for this Man to be ſo ſtrangely beſides himſelf, and to forget himſelf ſo, as to ſay this is the Sum of the Letter, when he that brought it ſaith the contrary, and did not know that this was the Sum of it, this may ſeem ſtrange; and I hope you will judge of the Weakneſs of this Teſtimony. Being asked whether he did not conceive this to be the Copy of the King's Letter, he did me right in that; for he ſaid he could not tell whether it was the Copy, but that Alford told him he brought over a Copy of the King's Letter. And Mr. Attorney-General was pleaſed to aggravate this of Captain Far againſt me: Says he, The King ſent over for Commiſſioners to treat; and accordingly at Mr. Love's Houſe it was agreed upon that Commiſſioners ſhould be ſent, and there were Perſons named. To this I ſay, That, God is my Record, I never in all my Life heard (as I remember) of any Letter from the King to that end, that Commiſſioners ſhould be ſent over. And Far doth me right herein; for in anſwer to that Queſtion, Was your Commiſſioners agreed upon? he three times anſwers negatively. I do not perceive that he remembers himſelf ſo well in all his Teſtimony, as in that Particular. Being asked whether the Commiſſion was agreed upon, he ſaid it was not agreed upon by the Company. And herein he did me more right than any Man; for he gave my Reaſon, For (ſays he) the Reaſon given was, Becauſe private Perſons could not give a Commiſſion. And though he hath done me more wrong than any Man, yet herein he hath done me more right than any Man. Being further asked, Was it not debated to ſend a Commiſſion over? Drake, he ſaid, read a Paper in the nature of a Commiſſion; but it was not agreed upon by the Company, becauſe private Perſons could do no ſuch thing. And a third time he ſays, The Commiſſion and Inſtructions were read in a Company at Mr. Love's Houſe; (that he affirms, and that I do not deny) but not agreed upon. And further he ſaid, He did conceive, to the beſt of his Remembrance, it was in the Name of the Presbyterian Party of England: But (ſays he) I cannot poſitively ſay it was ſo; for I did but only hear it read. Then your Lordſhip asked him this Queſtion, Did you ſay that the Commiſſion was not agreed upon, but that the Inſtructions were? To this Captain Far ſaid, That William Drake undertook to draw up the Commiſſion and Inſtructions; but yet, ſays he, I cannot ſay that they were either drawn up, or ſent. Again, he ſays further, (and herein he doth me more right than Adams or Alford doth) Adams, he ſays it was not agreed upon; yet he ſaith thus, There was a Commiſſion read for to treat; and ſo ſays Alford: But this Man ſays directly, That this ſuppoſed a Commiſſion was not to treat in the behalf of the Preſbyterian Party. And it had been a Folly for private Men to aſſume ſuch a vain Title to themſelves. So that he ſays directly, upon your Lordſhip's Queſtion to him, that it was not to treat, but to adviſe the Scotch Commiſſioners, and the Miniſters eſpecially, to agree with the King upon the Intereſt of Religion, and Terms of the Covenant. But being asked, Was it not in the behalf of the Presbyterian Party? he anſwered, No. Being further asked, Was there not an Agreement at Mr. Love's Houſe for a Letter to be ſent to the Queen? Herein alſo this Man doth me right; he ſaid, No, my Lord. And yet he contradicts himſelf likewiſe; for being asked in the next Queſtion what was the Subſtance of that Letter to the Queen, he anſwered, The Subſtance of the Letter to the Queen was, that ſhe ſhould perſuade the King to give Satisfaction to the Scots in their juſt Demands. Now, either he muſt hear of this Letter ſomewhere elſe, or elſe frame a Fiction to himſelf, that this was the Matter of the Letter, when there was no ſuch Letter in rerum natura. The next Thing he charges me with, is, That I ſhould ſay it was agreed that Money ſhould be raiſed for Maſſey and Titus; and he names the Sum, he thinks 250, or 300 l. and that I thereupon ſhould particularly move him with this Queſtion, Captain Far, what will you do? Now I beſeech your Lordſhip and the Court to conſider that he doth not ſwear that I ſaid we were agreed, but it was agreed; and that might be the Act of other Men, and not mine. And in another place he ſaid they agreed; but he doth not ſay that I ſaid we agreed, to include my ſelf: But to that, That I ſhould move him, and ſay, Captain Far, what will you do? Truly this is but a general Queſtion. And he himſelf did me thus far right: When I had leave from the Court to propound this Queſtion to him, Captain Far, did I move you, or ſay to you, What Money will you give for Maſſey or Titus? he anſwered, He did conceive it was for that Uſe. So that he proves not againſt me, that I moved for Money for Maſſey or Titus; but only that I ſhould ſay, Captain Far, what will you do? And if you obſerve the Words of the Teſtimony, they are theſe exactly. He tells you that he brought five Pounds; for there is all that ever I am charged with. I am not charged with lending a Penny; but only that fifteen Pounds was brought to my Houſe; ten Pounds by Potter, and five Pounds by this Man. And he affirms that he left this five Pounds at my Houſe. And herein I perceive a Contradiction in the Man; and therefore it is hard to determine when he ſpeaks true, or when he ſpeaks falſe. Theſe are his very Words; Mr. Love (ſays he) ask'd me what I would do; and I did lay down five Pounds upon Mr. Love's Table, when ſeveral Perſons were in the Room. And being asked, Did Mr. Love receive this Money? he ſaid he could not tell; but was loth to tell who he thought received it. But in his laſt Word, ſave one, that he ſpake in Court, (which made much for my Advantage) he ſaid he thought I did not receive it; and God is my Record, I did not: But he ſaid another Man did, and named Captain Maſſey. But the Contradiction I obſerve is this: He tells you he laid down five Pounds, when ſeveral Perſons were in the Room; and in the next Queſtion but one being asked, Was Mr. Love in the Room? Yes, my Lord, ſays he; but I cannot ſay any body elſe was there. So that therein the Man evidently contradicts himſelf. And it appears he was under a very great Fear, and even confounded by the many Queſtions propounded to him. I asked him further, Did I bid you lay it down? Says he, I cannot ſay that you bid me lay down the Money. Being asked, Was this way of laying down of Money to prevent Diſcovery? he ſaid he did it under that Notion. But being asked by me, Did I bid you lay it down under that Notion? he anſwered, He would not ſay I did. So that I neither directly nor indirectly did bid him bring Money to my Houſe, or lay it down when it was brought there: But other Perſons were in the Room; and he conceives what Perſon took it away. Therefore I beſeech you make a candid and fair Interpretation of what I have ſaid or done.

Being asked about the Copy of the King's Letter, that Alford ſays he brought over from Titus, whether I was in the Room whilſt it was read, he ſaid, I cannot ſay that he was there when it was read; but he was there during ſome part of the Communication. But ſays he, I cannot ſay he was there at the reading of the Letter; nor can I ſay he was preſent whilſt the Narrative was read. He obſerved I was often called away, and was abſent; and ſays he, I cannot ſay there was any ſuch thing done by Mr. Love. And I asked him this Queſtion, Did I ſend, or agree to ſend Major Alford to Calais? He anſwers, He thinks I did not. And herein he falſifieth his former Teſtimony; for he ſaid Major Alford was deſired in my Houſe to go to Calais; and yet Alford ſwore he never was in my Houſe till after he came from thence. But herein he doth me right too, (though with Contradiction to himſelf:) He ſaid it was agreed at my Houſe that Alford ſhould go; and yet now he ſays he thinks I did not agree to the ſending of Alford.

Being asked further, whether I did give Conſent to the ſending away the Commiſſion, he anſwered, I cannot ſay Mr. Love was there when it was ſent away. And truly I may ſay, who brought it away, or who drew it up, and what was done in it, I cannot tell. There might be a thouſand Treaſons in it, for ought I know; for I did neither own the reading of it, nor the ſending of it, but did utterly proteſt againſt both. Being again asked whether I agreed to the ſending of it away, he anſwered, It was agreed upon by all, that we could not ſend the Commiſſion away. When I asked him, Did I ſay to you, Captain Far, Will you contribute five Pounds for Maſſey and Titus? he gave this Anſwer, (ſays he) You asked me what I would do; ſo that I conceived it was for Maſſey and Titus. And he affirms he laid this five Pounds down in my Houſe; but did not ſay that I received it. And in the Preſence of God I ſpeak it, I never ſaw it, nor received it in all my Life.

And thus with much Acknowledgement, and bleſſing God, and thanking your Lordſhip and the Court, you have given me leave to take a brief Survey through the Depoſitions of the Witneſſes, tho they have been very large, and the Charge againſt me very high.

Now having ſpoken to the Depoſitions, (before I ſhall crave leave to ſpeak ſomething concerning my ſelf, and make humble Propoſals to this Court) I ſhall add but one Word, and it is this: I was loth, before I ſaw Witneſſes Face to Face, to confeſs any thing; I deem'd it againſt Nature for any to confeſs againſt himſelf, unleſs he could be ſure his Confeſſion ſhould not prejudice him. And I might have been guilty of my own Blood, if I had confeſſed; for then, did the Matter confeſs'd amount to Treaſon by your Law, my Life would be at your Mercy, and you might hang me upon mine own Confeſſion. And upon that ground I went reſolv'd to the Committee; and thro the Grace of God I reſolved not there to confeſs a Word nor Tittle, till I heard what Proof was brought in againſt me. And now I do ingenuouſly acknowledge that there were ſeveral Meetings at my Houſe; that theſe Perſons met there; and that this Commiſſion was read there, but I did utterly diſlike it, and diſſent from it. And that I was preſent at the reading of Letters, either at the beginning, or end, or ſome part of them, I do acknowledge: And this I ſay, that I was ignorant of the Danger that now I ſee I am in. The Act of the 2d of Auguſt, 1650. doth make it Treaſon to hold any Correſpondency, or to ſend Letters, tho but in a way of Commerce, into Scotland, let the Matter of them be what it will be. Now herein my Counſel acquaints me with my Danger, That I being ſometimes preſent when Letters were read in my Houſe, am guilty of a Concealment; and as to that, I do humbly lay my ſelf at your Feet and Mercy. But as to Treaſon, I do not know any perſonal Act of mine proved againſt me, that brings me under any Act of yours. And thus having briefly ſpoken concerning the Charge in general, and concerning my Accuſers, and having briefly ſurveyed their Teſtimony, I ſhall humbly crave leave to ſpeak ſomething concerning my ſelf, and I ſhall be very brief in it.

Concerning my ſelf, it is needful I ſhould ſpeak a Word: I would not ſtand under Miſrepreſentations, to ſeem to be what I am not. I am preſented unto ſome as if I were a Malignant, an Apoſtate from my firſt Principles, a Mover of Sedition, and what not, but what I am? Wherefore I am conſtrained to ſpeak a Word in my own Vindication, and I ſhall make the Apoſtle's Apology, I am become a Fool in glorying; but ye have compelled me. I count it never lawful for a Man's own Mouth to praiſe him, till another Man's Mouth accuſes him; and then he may without Vanity be his own Vindicator. What I ſhall ſay of my ſelf, the Lord knows it is not voluntarily, out of an affected Oſtentation, but by Compulſion, for a neceſſary and clear Manifeſtation of my Principles and Practices, now ſuſpected. As touching Malignity, I hate both Name and Thing: And, as Cardinal Farneſus ſaid of himſelf profanely, That if he knew any Part of him infected with Lutheraniſm, he would cut it off, and caſt it into the Fire; that I can ſay truly, That if I knew any Part of me infected with Malignity, I would cut it off with the Pruning-hook of Mortification, and by an ingenuous Retraction before you all this Day. God is my Witneſs, I never drove a Malignant Deſign, I never carried on a Malignant Intereſt: I deteſt both. I ſtill retain my old Covenanting Principles, from which, through the Grace of God, I will never depart for any Terror or Perſuaſion whatſoever. When I look upon all the Vows, and Covenants, and Declarations, and Proteſtations of both Houſes of Parliament, I do find a Suitableneſs between my Judgment and them, and am not conſcious to my ſelf of any thing that I have done in oppoſition or contradiction thereunto: And therefore I may ſay as Jeremy did, when he was accuſed, in the like Caſe, of making Defection to a contrary Party, Jer. 37. 13, 14. Irijah ſaid to Jeremiah, Thou falleſt away to the Chaldeans. Then ſaid Jeremiah, It is falſe, I fall not away to the Chaldeans. So, if it be charged upon me that I am fallen from my firſt Principles, or that I am fallen to Malignity, I ſay to any that ſhall ſo accuſe me, it is falſe, I fall not away to Malignity; I do retain as great a Keenneſs, and ſhall whilſt I live, and as ſtrong an Oppoſition againſt a Malignant Intereſt, whether in Scotland, or in England, or in any part of the World, againſt the Nation where I live, and have to this day, as ever I did in former Times. I am no Incendiary or evil Inſtrument, to divide the Nations one from another: God knows the Grief of my Heart hath been for the Diviſions, and the Deſire of my Soul hath been for the Union of both the Nations. And if I had as many Lives as I have Hairs on my Head, or as much Blood in my Veins as there is Water in the Sea, I could count it all well ſpent to quench the Burning that our Sins have kindled between the two Nations. I have all along engaged my Eſtate and Life in the Parliament's Quarrel againſt the Forces raiſed by the King: My appearing in their Cauſe was not from any Aim at Profit, but out of a Perſuaſion of Conſcience and Senſe of Duty. I may ſpeak it as Paul doth it of himſelf, I was in Labours more than they all. I ſpeak it without Vanity; I was, according to my obſcure Station and mean Condition, in doing and giving in the Parliament's Quarrel, more than many. Many gave out of their Abundance; but I out of my Want: And as Chriſt ſpake to the Widow who gave two Mites, That ſhe gave more than they all; for ſhe gave all that ſhe had, even all her Living: So did I; though I gave my Mite, yet I gave my All. And I did not only deem it my Duty to preach for the Lawfulneſs of a Defenſive War, but (unleſs my Books and wearing Apparel) I contributed all that I had in the World: And that was no ſmall Sum, conſidering the Meanneſs of my Condition. And I have at this day a great Sum due to me from the State, which is ſtill kept from me, and now my Life endeavoured to be taken from me. And yet for all this, I repent not of what I have done; tho I could from my Soul wiſh that the Ends of that juſt War had been better accompliſhed: Then ſhould we have been happy, and united among our ſelves, and honoured among the Nations round about us. I am ſo far (I ſay) from repenting of what I have done, both by doing, and contributing, and ſuffering in the Parliament's Quarrel, that were it to do again upon the ſame unqueſtionable Authority, for the ſame declared Ends, and againſt the ſame Malignant Perſons, I ſhould manifeſt as much Readineſs of Mind to engage according to my Meaſure, as ever I did.

And thus I have declared my ſelf touching my Principles in theſe Particulars: I ſhall now crave leave to expreſs my ſelf a little touching my Sufferings; and then to make but a few humble Propoſals, and ſo caſt my Life into God's Hands and yours. Touching my Sufferings, I may ſay that my whole Life hath been a Time of Affliction, either of Body or Mind: God ſees my Heart to be a tough and knotty Piece, that it needs ſo many Blows to break it. I may ſay with the Pſalmiſt, I have been afflicted from my Youth up, and from my Youth up I have met with Oppoſition: From the Prelates, being perſecuted by them merely for Conſcience ſake. It is near twenty Years ſince I was cited to the Biſhops Courts: I have been often troubled for hearing of Sermons, and diſcharging other Exerciſes of Religion, which were an Offence in thoſe Days. When I was a Scholar in Oxon, and Maſter of Arts, (I do not ſpeak it out of vain Oſtentation, but merely to repreſent unto you, that what I was I am, and what I am I was) I was the firſt Scholar I know of, or ever heard of in Oxon, who did publickly refuſe in the Congregation-Houſe to ſubſcribe unto thoſe Impoſitions or Canons impoſed by the Archbiſhop, touching the Prelates and Common-Prayer; and for which, though they would not deny me my Degree, yet I was expelled the Congregation-Houſe, never to ſit as a Member among them. When I came firſt to London, which is about twelve Years ſince, I was oppoſed by the Biſhop of London; and though I was called as a Lecturer to Ann Alderſgate, yet it was near three Years before I could faſten upon any Lecture. After this, about the Year 1640, or 1641, I was impriſoned in Newcaſtle, merely for expreſſing my ſelf againſt the Errors of the Service-Book, and was removed from Priſon there, by a Habeas Corpus, to this Place; and in this Court of King's-Bench I was acquitted. After this, about the beginning of the Wars between the late King and the Parliament, I was the firſt Miniſter that I know of in England, who was accuſed for preaching of Treaſon and Rebellion, merely for maintaining in a Sermon, in Kent, at Tenderden, the Lawfulneſs of a defenſive War, at the firſt Breaking-out and Irruption of our Troubles; but was then publickly acquitted in a Court there, and recovered Coſts and Damages of my Accuſer. After this I had a little Breathing-Time, whilſt the two Houſes of Parliament were in Power; only I was once complained againſt by the King's Commiſſioners at Uxbridge, for preaching a Sermon there. I did not know that I ſhould preach there till the Pſalm was ſung; and did only preach a Sermon which I had preached the Day before at Windſor-Caſtle. I was, I ſay, complained of by the King's Commiſſioners to the Houſe, for that Sermon; but within three Weeks I was acquitted and diſcharged by Order of the Houſe of Commons. That Sermon is much ſpoken of, becauſe it is ſo little ſeen, it is ſo obſcure a Piece; and many imagine as if the Keenneſs of my Affection was blunted from what it was in that Sermon. But I declare unto you, that I come up to this day to every Tittle of that Sermon. I hear it is lately printed; and if it be printed according to the firſt Copy, I will own every Line of it, as that to which my Heart and Judgment concurs to this very day. After all this, ſince the late Change of Government, I have been three times in Trouble: I was once committed to Cuſtody by, and twice cited before the Committee of Plunder'd Miniſters;

but there was no ſufficient Proof againſt me, and ſo I was diſcharged.

But now laſt of all, this great and laſt Tryal and Trouble is come upon me. I have been kept ſeveral Weeks in cloſe Priſon, and now I am arraigned for my Life; herein is my great Comfort, even that which was the Apoſtle's, 2 Cor. 1. 10. God that hath delivered me, he doth deliver me, in whom I truſt that he will yet deliver me: And that that ſhall be made good to me, Job 5. 19. He ſhall deliver thee in ſix Troubles, yea in ſeven there ſhall no Evil touch thee. As Cato, he was accuſed thirty two times by the unkind State whom he faithfully ſerved, and yet after thirty two times Accuſation, his Innocency and Uprightneſs brought him off. Why ſhould not I be confident in my God, who have had a Life-time of Experience of his Care and Love towards me? It is not the Danger of my Life troubles me; I am a ſickly Man, and I know a Diſeaſe will e'er long kill me, whatever you do with me: but this grieves me more, That I ſhould ſuffer from their hands, for whom I have done and ſuffered ſo much in my obſcure Station, and according to my weak meaſure. Had it been an Enemy had dealt thus by me, and made ſuch an eager Proſecution of me, and ſuch high Aggravations of that which in the Simplicity of my Heart I have done, it had not been ſo much; and as I told the Committee when I was examined by them, (who charged me with Jeſuiſm and Non-Ingenuity, becauſe I would not confeſs againſt myſelf and others) that tho I honoured them as private Gentlemen, and ſhould acquaint them with what myſelf had done, when it ſhould not be a Snare to me; but when they ſhall apprehend me by a Warrant for Treaſon, and examine me in order to a Tryal for my Life, in no Judicature in the world will I confeſs a word, till I firſt hear what will come in againſt me. Now, as I told them then, I never wrote Letter, nor received Letter, nor ſent or lent Money to any Perſon of the Scotiſh Nation. Now that I ſhould meet with this hard meaſure, to have the moſt rigid and ſevere Interpretation put upon all my Actions, to be look'd upon with ſo jealous (I might ſay with a worſer) Eye, that have in my meaſure ventured my All in the ſame Quarrel that you were engaged in, and lifted up my hands in the ſame Covenant, that have took ſweet Counſel together, and walk'd in Fellowſhip one with another: that from theſe I ſhould have ſuch hard meaſure, this, this troubles me greatly. Had I been ſo dealt withal at the Junto at Oxon, I ſhould not have been ſo troubled at it; but to be dealt ſo with at Weſtminſter, this is that at which I ſtand amazed: yet bleſſed be God, I am not afraid; my Conſcience doth not tell me of any perſonal Act of mine proved againſt me, that brings me under any of your Laws as to Treaſon.

And thus having expreſs'd myſelf, concerning my Charge, and the Witneſſes, and myſelf; I ſhall now in the cloſe of all ſay, (whatever tortured Collections or Inferences are drawn from my Practices, and however Lawyers may aggravate thoſe things that in part have been proved againſt me) yet I do declare in the preſence of God, that whatever I have done, in the Simplicity and Integrity of my Heart I have done it; and did deem it to be conſonant and agreeable both to my Conſcience, and to the Proteſtations and Covenant I have taken: and I have done nothing out of Animoſity, or from a Spirit of Revenge. And thus I have done concerning myſelf.

I have only a few humble Propoſals to make to your Lordſhip and the Court, and then I ſhall leave all to God's determination and yours. To you that are my Judges, I humbly crave this of you, and I do it upon your Lordſhips words the firſt day of my appearance here. When you were pleaſed to deny me Counſel, you ſaid you would be Counſel for me; and I beſeech you be ſo, for you are Judges both of Matter of Law and Matter of Fact. I may make uſe of that Paſſage, Prov. 31. 8. Solomon ſays there, That Rulers muſt open their mouths for the Dumb, in the Cauſe of all ſuch as are appointed for Deſtruction. Truly, my Lord, I am as a dumb Man before you; dumb in Matters of Law, I cannot plead one word for myſelf: I beſeech you be as Solomon's Rulers were, and open your mouths for him that is appointed to deſtruction; you who are my Judges, be my Advocates, my Life lies in your hands. And then I beſeech you let me make this humble Motion to you, That you would not count any thing that I have done to be out of Animoſity or Stoutneſs of Spirit: Truly, nothing but Conſcience could carry me through all my Sufferings; I could not leave ſuch dear Relations that God hath given me, and ſuch a loving People, and comfortable Livelihood, as any Miniſter hath within the Walls of London: nothing but Conviction of Conſcience can carry me another way; and till Conſcience be fully ſatisfied, I cannot ſtir one ſtep.

The next thing I beg, is, to beſeech your Lordſhip and the Court to put a candid and fair Interpretation upon all that I have done, or that by Witneſs you have heard; that it was no Malignant Deſign, tho I do not own the Management of any Deſign: I never writ Letter, nor ſent Letter to any of the Scotiſh Nation; yet thus far I own the thing, that it was agreeable to my Judgment and Conſcience. For I thought the Intereſt of God and Religion, and the Good of the Nation, would be more advanced if the King went into Scotland upon Covenant-Terms, than if he ſhould fall into the hands of the Iriſh Rebels, or offer this Nation to the Turk or Spaniard, or any other to come in and make a Prey of it. I did judge it would be a Foundation laid of great Troubles and Blood, if he were not received by that Nation. And tho I did not, and do not in the leaſt own either the Commiſſion or Inſtructions, or the Way of Management of that Buſineſs; yet I confeſs the Agreement between the King and Scots I deſired, and deemed it my Duty upon this ground, one Clauſe of the Covenant being, to ſeek the Union and Good of both Nations; and thoſe who endeavour the contrary, are declared by the Covenant to be Incendiaries, Malignants, and evil Inſtruments, who not only divide the Kingdoms one from another, but divide the King from his People. Now they declaring him to be their King, according to my apprehenſion I thought it agreeable to my Covenant, to pray and deſire, as a private Man, and no more, for an Agreement between the King and them, upon thoſe Terms conſiſtent with the Safety of Religion, and the Terms of the Covenant.

And thus I have opened my Heart to you: The favourable Interpretation I humbly beg of you, is this; That things might not be taken in the worſt ſenſe: Non eſt reus, niſi Mens ſit rea; he is not guilty, unleſs the Mind be guilty: I heard your Lordſhip ſay ſo at Guild-Hall, as I remember.

The Lord knows, in the Uprightneſs of my Heart I have done what I have done. It is a Maxim in the Law, (I have read it in Divinity-Books) Ampliandi ſunt Favores, & in Pœnis benignior Interpretatio facienda: Favours are to be amplified and enlarged by Magiſtrates; but in Puniſhments, the moſt benign and favourable Interpretations muſt be made. Now of my Actions the harſheſt Interpretations are made: I have a Charge laid againſt me, which I deem (and as my Counſel tells me) to be rather a Flouriſh in Law, than Reality of Matter.

I ſtood amazed when I heard the Charge againſt me, I thought it had rather been againſt ſome other Man than againſt me. As if I ſhould ſend to the Queen, Piercy, and Jermin! herein I did rather venture my Life upon a Tryal, than to lie under all that Obloquy which that Charge did lay upon me. Therefore I again beſeech you, put a fair and candid Interpretation upon what is proved againſt me.

I remember a Phraſe, Summum Jus eſt ſumma Injuria; To be over-juſt, is to be injurious. Be not over-righteous, may refer to Courts of Judicatory. Herein I acknowledge, that my not revealing what my Accuſers have done, this layeth me under the Fault of a Concealment, for which I lay myſelf at your feet.

The next humble Requeſt I have to make, is this, To intreat your Lordſhip and the Court, that you would not hearken to any politick Suggeſtions that may be laid before you: I know under what diſadvantage I lie, that am the firſt Miniſter in England try'd for Treaſon, in a buſineſs of this nature, and what a prejudice this is to me, to make an example upon.

The firſt Suggeſtion that I humbly intreat you would not hearken to, is, That it will not be for the Honour and Intereſt of the State, if I be not condemned. Truly, it is for the Honour of the State for you to do Juſtice: if you have found, that I ever writ Letter, or ſent or received Letter, or lent Money; if in theſe regards you have found me within your Acts, ſpare me not: but if I have been only preſent at the reading of Letters, and have been ſilent at what others have done; therein I lay myſelf at your mercy, to ſhew me favour. It was a Suggeſtion to Pilate, If thou ſpareſt that Man, thou art no Friend to Cæſar; and ſo if you do not condemn me, you are no Friends to thoſe who commiſſionate you: but be Friends to yourſelves and Families, and take heed that you bring not guiltleſs Blood upon you.

And here (and ſo I ſhall have done) in the Cloſe of all, I do acknowledge, that in many Particulars, as touching not revealing (I ſay not as to perſonal Actings, nor do any prove it againſt me) I do fall within your Acts, as to the Cenſure of a Concealment; and herein I humbly beg your Mercy. And however I may be judged to be a Man of a turbulent and unquiet Spirit, yet thoſe that know me in my Relations, will not ſay ſo of me; and my People, over whom God hath called me (I think) will ſay, I am a Man who deſireth to live quietly in the Land. But however my Spirit and Principles are queſtioned, yet I reſolve by the Grace of God to lead for the future a quiet and peaceable Life, in all Godlineſs and Honeſty.

I have but one word more to cloſe all I have to ſay for myſelf, (for I have made no Plea in Law; in thoſe matters I am as a dumb Man, and cannot open my mouth) and 'tis this: The Charge and Depoſitions lie before you, and I will but lay this before you alſo, That if ſo be my Fact ſhould deſerve Death, which I believe it doth not, and I hope you cannot find me under your own Acts as to Treaſon; yet if you do cenſure me rather upon a political Intereſt, than from the Merit of the Fact, the Scripture accounts not that Juſtice, but Murder. Jehu put to death Ahab's Sons, and that by the Command of God; but he did it upon a political Intereſt, to eſtabliſh himſelf in his new-gotten Government: and when God reckons for this, he ſays, I will avenge the Blood of Jezreel upon the Houſe of Jehu. To do any thing upon a political Intereſt, tho the Fact may deſerve Death, the Scripture counts this Murder, not Juſtice.

And I beſeech you, let me ſuggeſt one thing to you, tho I am a Worm, and no Man, and deſerve not to be regarded amongſt the Children of Men; yet what I have done and ſuffered, let it be a little thought on by you: And let me urge that of Abiathar the Prieſt, he did an Act that was not juſtifiable, and ſaith Solomon, Thou art worthy of Death; but I will not at this time put thee to death, becauſe thou bearеſt the Ark of the Lord God before David my Father, and becauſe thou haſt been afflicted in all wherein my Father was afflicted. I leave it to your own Conſciences to make Application. Many things elſe might be ſuggeſted againſt me, and all to exaſperate and exulcerate your Minds againſt me, to make you with leſs regret of Conſcience to paſs a doleful Sentence upon me; which I hope you cannot, and for the fear of the Lord you dare not: but if you ſhould, (and ſo I have done) I will ſay to you as Jeremiah did to the Rulers of Iſrael; As for me, behold I am in your hands, do with me as ſeemeth good and meet unto you: but know ye for certain, that if ye put me to death, ye ſhall ſurely bring innocent Blood upon yourſelves. But I will ſay as the Apoſtle did, I hope better things of you, tho I thus ſpeak.

And thus I commit myſelf, and my All, unto God, and to your Judgments and Conſciences.

Mr. Attorney-General's preſent Reply to Mr. Love's Defence.

Attorn. Gen. MY Lord, you have heard him ſay much, and it had been much better for him if he had ſaid leſs. My Lord, when Men go out of the way of their own Calling, they very often err; and truly I may attribute much of Mr. Love's Confidence to his Ignorance; my Lord, to his Ignorance of the Law: and when Men meddle beyond their own bounds, they do tranſgreſs. Mr. Love hath made you a continued Speech; my Lord, I do find the old Proverb commonly true, In multitude of Words there wanteth not Evil. And ſhould I ſay nothing againſt Mr. Love, my Lord, he hath ſaid enough againſt himſelf, in that that he hath now repeated even to his own Condemnation, in that which he acknowledgeth, my Lord, (I cannot ſay ingenuouſly, tho himſelf hath ſaid ſo) to be rather a Miſpriſion of Treaſon and a Concealment. My Lord, Acts of Concealment are not ſo long continued, they have not ſo long continuance: And, my Lord, you very well know (for the Satisfaction of the Gentleman at preſent, and ſome elſe that hear me) that he that hears a Treaſon, (for I do go now a little in his own way) he that hears a Treaſon, muſt not look back before he go to the Magiſtrate and reveal it, and if he be at the Plough, he muſt leave his Plough; if this Gentleman were in his Pulpit, he muſt leave his preaching: he that knows a Treaſon, muſt go preſently and reveal it; there muſt be no Repetition of Treaſon, my Lord: Mr. Love, my Lord, will be miſtaken in that. But truly, my my Lord, I was very ſorry, conſidering the Condition Mr. Love now ſtands in, to hear thoſe Expreſſions from him that he hath made to you in relation to the paſt and preſent Authority: my Lord, I am not willing to repeat them, Mr. Love muſt hear of it another time. Truly, My Lord, here is little of Ingenuity (all Men will believe) in this Gentleman, that hath now laid it for a Principle to himſelf, and all that ſhall hear him (and I think it not to be ſo chriſtian, ſo ingenuous) not to confeſs any thing any time; but that is Ingenuity, that what is proved, that he will confeſs; and that is a high piece of Ingenuity, that thoſe things that are proved, he will ingenuouſly acknowledge: I, my Lord, I do not take that to be Ingenuity neither in my Law, nor I believe in his Divinity will it be. My Lord, there hath been a great deal of Care and Pains taken by Mr. Love to take in pieces the Evidence; I ſhall not undertake now to join them together, but in convenient time I ſhall, I doubt not, for the Satisfaction of the Court and their Judgments, who I muſt ſay, have been threatned by the Gentleman; and, my Lord, I hope for the Conviction of himſelf. My Lord, he knows there are ſhrewd pieces againſt him that he hath acknowledged; but he would take them off one by one, but when they are put together, they will not be ſingle Evidence, nor ſingle Teſtimony, nor ſingle Facts, but a continued Reiteration and Repetition of Treaſon, a continued and Series of Time. My Lord, you are pleaſed to obſerve, that he himſelf doth appear from 1648 to 1651. ſo that in 1648, 1649, 1650, and 1651. in all theſe Years, my Lord, there hath been this conſtant Repetition and tranſacting of Treaſon.

My Lord, I learn from him, and 'tis very true—— It is not good dallying with holy Things, nor is it with States and Commonwealths, it is very bad dallying with them; thoſe that flutter there, will burn their Wings at laſt: and it is not Quirks of Wit, nor Strains of Senſe or Non-ſenſe, will, my Lord, clear theſe things; it will not do it, my Lord. My Lord, he hath deſired you will not hearken to private Examinations; my Lord, I have ſaid ſo too, and there hath more been offered to you; but that which hath been publick, and viva voce, all have been ſo. But ſurely, my Lord, I could wiſh this Gentleman, and all others of his Profeſſion, would meddle in their own Sphere, and not to walk out of that, to come and teach Courts what they ſhould do, to teach the Magiſtrate what is his Duty. My Lord, I do hardly think it belongs to them ever in the Pulpit to do thoſe things: but to tell us we muſt not examine before-hand, and ask Queſtions in private; my Lord, we cannot then be prepared for Felons and Treaſons. And, my Lord, I ſay this Confidence is much from his Ignorance; for theſe things are very familiar, and muſt be continued to be done: ſo that theſe things are not well broached by him, and I do think he will ſay at laſt, he underſtands not himſelf; and thoſe, I hope, that hear, my Lord, will ſay, I do not uſe it: For, my Lord, I muſt ſay, it muſt be otherwiſe in all well-governed Commonwealths. My Lord, he hath not denied, but acknowledged Meetings at his Houſe more than once, twice or thrice: and truly, I did expect from this Gentleman that he would not have continued thoſe fearful Imprecations of calling God to witneſs, that he did never write Letter, nor ſend Letter, nor lend Money. I had thought he would not have gone upon theſe Equivocations: Did he never move other Men to write? Did he never move others to lend Money? It is not to ſay, this and this I hav not done; but I had thought he would have cleared himſelf totally of any Guilt that way, either in relation to receiving, or hearing Letters read; or lending or receiving Money, or moving for Money. My Lord, to put it upon a particular Caſe, this will not blind the Eyes of Juſtice, but you will be able to ſee it. He is pleaſed to ſay, my Lord, he will not lay it to the badneſs of the Witneſſes Conſciences, but to the badneſs of their Memories. My Lord, I hope in the Concluſion their Memories will appear to be right, and ſome body's Conſcience elſe to be bad. And, my Lord, for to hear this ſaid by this Gentleman that is a Miniſter of the Goſpel, that it is a Crime for theſe Men to acknowledge their Offences, this is ſtrange: I had thought the firſt Step to Repentance had been Confeſſion; and that it had been no Offence for any Man living that hath committed a Fault, or that thought he had committed a Fault, to acknowledge it. In my Law and Divinity I thought it ſo, and I have not learned otherwiſe; and ſhall this Gentleman take Exceptions, becauſe theſe Gentlemen who have thought they have done amiſs, have acknowledged their Errors, and have craved Mercy? My Lord, I muſt ſay thus, if any deſerve Mercy, it is thoſe that do acknowledge their Offences, and crave Mercy, and are ſorry for them; and not thoſe that are obſtinate, and bid defiance to Juſtice: prove what you can, I will confeſs nothing; that is not ſo conſcientious or chriſtian a Way. And for the Witneſſes, I do wonder that Mr. Love, of any Man, ſhould find fault with them; I cannot ſay they have taken ſweet Counſel together, but I ſhrewdly ſuſpect they have taken very bad Counſel together: theſe Gentlemen are of his own Choice, and of his own Companions, and thoſe that were converſant with him; and if you pleaſe to obſerve, at every word, Will. Drake; methinks that is a word of Familiarity. But, my Lord, for theſe, they were his Companions, and whether I might ſay more, his Houſhold-Friends or Gueſts, but ſure they were in his Houſe very often, and were private with him, and in his Chamber and Study; and to cover all theſe Actions, and theſe treaſonable Practices, and Letters and Deſigns, here they muſt come to hear News, and this muſt cover it all: They come for nothing but News, and our Contributions muſt be for charitable Uſes; but you muſt not ask why or wherefore we lend Money, but it is for charitable Uſes: neither God nor Man will be blinded in theſe things; and if theſe Fig-leaves be ſewn together, it will neither cover Nakedneſs nor Treaſon. My Lord, Mr. Love hath ſaid, (and in that given Judgment againſt himſelf) that either to treat or adviſe with the King of Scots in Scotland, he deteſts them both. My Lord, if he be guilty of both, then, I hope, he doth deteſt and renounce himſelf, and then I think he hath laid your Judgment ſomewhat, his own having paſt firſt, yours will eaſily follow. My Lord, he confeſſes, That for this Act of the 2d of Auguſt 1650, he was ignorant of it, and of the Danger of it. My Lord, he very well knows that Ignorance is no Excuſe; the Act is a publick Act, and hath been long printed, now ten Months ſince, himſelf ſaith: And yet methinks I cannot reconcile that, (that he that goes to make others differ) that he knew not of this Act, and yet Sterks, the Scotch Agent, was baniſh'd upon this Act, and there was a Contribution for him for his going away: The ſame Act that doth the one, doth the other. My Lord, he hath been pleaſed to cite a Saying of Cardinal Farneſus, neſus, That if he knew any part of him infected with Lutheraniſm, he would cut it off, and throw it into the Fire: And ſo can he ſpeak truly of himſelf; he would do, if he knew any thing of Malignancy by himſelf. My Lord, the Queſtion between him and us, is, What is Malignancy? I doubt we differ in that; I doubt his Senſe of Malignancy: I am ſure by ſome words I ſhrewdly gueſs at, that I count that Malignity, and I hope all this Court, and all that hear me count that Malignity, that I doubt his Judgment leads him not to it, ſo I doubt we differ upon that.

My Lord, he hath ſaid, he was never an Incendiary, or evil Inſtrument; I wiſh there were not Cauſe for you to think otherwiſe: but ſurely the Gentleman hath made large Imprecations, and hath ſpoken much for himſelf; but I believe he knows there is ſo much Juſtice here, that he expects not to be believed in what he ſays. If it were enough to accuſe, who ſhould be innocent? And if it were enough to deny, who ſhould be guilty? He doth not expect to be believed for his word certainly; for now he knows he ſtands in another Capacity, and as things are alledged and proved on both ſides, ſo he is to be believed, and no otherwiſe. My Lord, he hath been pleaſed to reflect upon my ſelf in many Particulars; yea, and the Court knows in what a Capacity I ſtand here, as a Servant to the State to do my Duty faithfully, and I muſt do it: and yet I muſt ſay, it doth not become me to prompt Witneſſes; that word, my Lord, was not well ſpoken. He is pleaſed to ſay in the Commendation of himſelf, that he hath a Place in London where he hath a very good Congregation, and a very good Competency of Maintenance; and I heartily wiſh he had thought ſo really, and had kept himſelf ſingly to that. I do not think he will ſay, that in the Duty of his Place, as a Miniſter of the Word, to preach, to inſtruct, to exhort, rebuke, reprove his People, or any under his Charge, that ever the State did interpoſe or meddle with him, neither the Parliament nor the Commonwealth: Then for God's Love, my Lord, why ſhould this Man interpoſe or meddle with the State? Had you not enough to do in your own Calling? Had you not Charge enough lying upon you, but muſt you be going abroad, and put your Sickle into another Man's Harveſt? I will ſay, the State did never trouble the Gentleman in his Duty; he did go on with as much Peace and Quietneſs as himſelf could deſire, we interrupted not him; let him reflect upon himſelf, and whether others have dealt ſo kindly with him: when had he that Liberty that now he hath had? You may be pleaſed to obſerve, himſelf ſays, twelve Years ago he could not in three Years in London get an Admiſſion to be a Lecturer; and when he ſpoke in the Congregation-houſe at Oxford, he was expulſed there; he hath had no ſuch meaſure here. Doth Kindneſs provoke him to theſe things? Thoſe that ſin againſt Kindneſs, are the higheſt Tranſgreſſors. What Provocation hath this Gentleman had in his Miniſtry, that he could not follow that, and have let the Parliament and State alone? Doth he not receive Breath here to live, and his Livelihood to ſuſtain himſelf and his Relations? Why ſhould you interpoſe to diſquiet your ſelf and the Commonwealth, when they did not provoke you? And let all judge whether this ſhould not convince you; and let me ſay thus much, That you have dealt fooliſhly, and have gone beyond your Bounds, and have not kept within your Limits in what you have done in theſe things that you have acknowledged.

My Lord, I ſpeak this, that thoſe may hear now that may not hear the other; for that which Mr. Love hath ſaid, we muſt have ſome time to recollect, and to ſpeak in the Vindication of the Proceedings of the State againſt this Gentleman, which, though I think it needs not much, in reſpect of the Court that hath heard him ſay ſo much, and confeſs ſo much as he hath done; yet for the Lenity of the State, that hath moved them to take care of their own Preſervation: And I would not do it, but that he hath ſtood upon all Terms of Defiance with Juſtice and Majeſty; and you have heard from a Fellow-Miniſter what he did the laſt day, and the Principles he urgeth this day, which, let me repeat again: there will be no living in Society, if theſe things be let alone. My Lord, it is much inſinuated by him, that his Blood will be upon you and the Court; I would he had thought upon Blood before theſe things had been ſo tranſacted by himſelf: I am afraid (between God and his own Conſcience be it, and thoſe that have had Correſpondency with him) that much of this Blood that hath been ſpilt in Scotland, hath been made by their Means: You hear him ſay, That what was deſired by them (and in order to what it was) was, That the King of Scots might join with the Scotiſh Nation, and not go to Ireland, that was his Conſcience. I do not know, his Conſcience led him to meddle with thoſe things, to meddle with State-Affairs. But, my Lord, if it be ſo, and this hath been brought on by them, that one hath encouraged the King to join with the Scots, and the other hath encouraged the Scots to join with the King, by hopes of Parties here, which he himſelf acknowledgeth now, was undertook in the Name of a Presbyterian Party; though I think, and do believe it, for very many honeſt Presbyterians, that they would ſpit in his Face, if he ſhould ſay it of them: But I ſay theſe doings hath occaſioned the ſhedding of much Blood, and a great deal of Variance between the two Nations, and the Lord knows when it will end. But, my Lord, as he concluded for himſelf, you will be pleaſed, my Lord, to give me leave (though not in that way of Conjuration as he hath done) to ſay for the State, I ſhall not prevent your Judgments; but it is better that one Man, than a State, ſhould periſh. And if this Man be guilty of the Treaſons proved againſt him, I believe himſelf will judge, he had better periſh and ſuffer death, than the State ſhould periſh. All theſe Actings of his have been Underminings of the State clean through, carried on very cloſely and covertly in Diſguiſes, and not diſcovered: but he that dances in a Net, will be catch'd trapping at laſt. My Lord, before you give your Judgment, you will conſider that Juſtice to the Commonwealth——

So, My Lord, I have added what my bad Memory (I hope not bad Conſcience) hath repeated to me, as might give ſome Anſwer to what he hath ſaid: But ſince he hath been pleaſed to take ſuch pains to run through all and every one of the Evidence ſo exactly, and hath had three Days given him for it; my Lord, I ſhall ask but one for my ſelf, and for thoſe that are the Counſel of the Commonwealth. My Lord, this is all I ſhall ſay at preſent to you, and ſhall ſay no more till next Meeting.

[Judge Keeble, the Lord Preſident, ſpeaks after the Attorney-General: the very beginning of his Speech was not heard, he beginning very ſoftly.]

Ld Pre-

Ld President. But again in this Point, for the Presbyterian Government, if it be rectified, doubtless it tends to the Peace of this Nation, and all Places, but not with a Scotch Limitation, I deny that; nor limited by a Scotch Covenant.

The next thing is this; becauſe you often fall upon Diſtinctions of the Law, and that you are ignorant of the Law, the more to blame you that profeſs the Learning of the Law of God; for there is no Law in England, but is as really and truly the Law of God as any Scripture-Phraſe that is by conſequence from the very Texts of Scripture: for there are very many Conſequences reaſoned out of the Texts of Scripture; ſo is the Law of England the very Conſequence of the very Decalogue it ſelf: and whatſoever is not conſonant to Scripture in the Law of England, is not the Law of England, the very Books and Learning of the Law: whatſoever is not conſonant to the Law of God in Scripture, or to right Reaſon, which is maintained by Scripture; whatſoever is in England, be it Acts of Parliament, Cuſtoms, or any Judicial Acts of the Court, it is not the Law of England, but the Error of the Party which did pronounce it; and you or any Man elſe at Bar may ſo plead it. And therefore to profeſs you are knowing in the Laws of God, and yet to be ignorant of the Laws of England, when yet the Laws of England be ſo purely the Laws of God, as no Law in the World more practical at this day; for you to be ignorant of them, is not to your Commendation, nor to any of your Profeſſion.

Then, Sir, for your going on in theſe ways: The Court with Patience hath heard you, I think, two Hours, or thereabouts, and you have done nothing but anticipated the Court: What! do you think they have not Underſtandings, and Judgments, and Conſciences? They would have done it, they would have examined theſe Witneſſes preciſely, and would have compared them, but you have taken up all this time by way of Anticipation; and in a Rhetoricay Way to do it! let me tell you, that Orators among the Heathens have been the greateſt Incendiaries; and thoſe Orators in Chriſtendom that do not ſet their Judgments upon right ends, they are the moſt unworthy Men in Chriſtendom: for there are no Hereſies, Murders, traitorous or treaſonable Practices and Attemptings, and all the higheſt Wickedneſſes that ever were committed in Chriſtendom whatſoever, or in this Nation in particular, but they have had ſome of that Profeſſion that have called themſelves Miniſters of Jeſus Chriſt, as the Jeſuits of Joſus, and the Prieſts of thoſe; and all theſe Things and high Actings have ſtill had ſome Tincture of your Coat in them. Therefore it is not your Office can excuſe you; your Office is ſacred, as other Chriſtian Offices are, and you are no more Divines by your Office; but you are to remember, and you muſt know, that Chriſtian Juſtice that you teach in the Pulpit, to act it in the Court, is of a higher nature than Preaching is: And therefore in this, that you ſhould advance your Profeſſion beyond the Judicatories of this Land, know, that Judgment and Juſtice is the higheſt Religion in the World, both in Chriſtendom and out of it. And this, Sir, we would have you know, That Lawyers Doctrine tends to this, and I hope hereafter you will be more obedient, and better vers'd to know theſe Grounds of the Laws of England, by which now you are called here. I ſhall ſay no more, but take advice with the Court about you.

[The Court adjourns, and Mr. Love is commanded away.]

The Fourth Day's Proceeding, June 27. 1651.

Mr. Hill, the firſt Counſel for the Commonwealth.

Mr. Hill. MY Lord, the Priſoner at the Bar, Mr. Love, ſtands impeach'd before your Lordſhip of High Treaſon, which Impeachment hath been read before your Lordſhip and the Court. My Lord, by that he ſtands charged with High Treaſon, with ſeveral Offences of High Treaſon; That he in the Years 1648, 1649, 1650, and 1651. with William Drake, Henry Jermin, Henry Piercy, John Gibbons, Edward Maſſey, Sylas Titus, and others his Accomplices, did traitorouſly, wickedly and maliciouſly confederate, plot and endeavour to ſtir up a new and bloody War in this Nation, and to ſubvert the Government now eſtabliſhed, without a King and Houſe of Lords.

My Lord, That in the ſame Years, ſince the Death of the late King, he did, with other his Accomplices, endeavour to promote Charles Stewart to be King of England, contrary to an Act of Parliament before that time made in this Nation.

My Lord, That in the ſame Years he and his Accomplices did traitorouſly and maliciouſly aid and aſſiſt the Nation of Scotland, to the end that they might invade this Commonwealth; and hath adhered to the Forces raiſed by the Enemies of this Commonwealth.

My Lord, That in the ſame time, between the Month of March and the firſt of June, this preſent Month, he hath traitorouſly and maliciouſly held and maintained Correſpondency and Intelligence by Letters, Meſſages, Inſtructions and otherwiſe, with the Enemies of this Commonwealth, and to the Prejudice of this Nation; and in particular with Charles Stewart and the late Queen his Mother, and with Jermin and Piercy, and other Perſons of Counſel abiding with Charles Stewart.

My Lord, That he hath likewiſe held Correſpondency and Intelligence with the Scotiſh Nation, prejudicial to this Commonwealth, and to the end they might invade and bring a bloody War upon this Nation.

My Lord, Theſe Treaſons and traitorous and wicked Practices of the Priſoner at Bar, were and are to the apparent Hazard of the publick Peace of this Commonwealth, and Free-State, and the Parliament and People of England; and in Contempt and Violation of the Laws of the Land, and contrary to ſeveral Acts of Parliament in ſuch Caſes made and provided.

My Lord, There hath been ſeveral Witneſſes and Proofs of theſe particular Charges againſt the Priſoner: And, my Lord, I do conceive that there hath been ſuch Proof made, that in your Lordſhip's Judgment he will appear to be guilty of all theſe particular Actings. But, my Lord, I will not enter upon the Proof, only make a ſummary Relation of the Beginning and Continuance of this Plot and Deſign.

My Lord, this Plot did begin very ſuddenly after it pleaſed God to take away the chief Enemy of this Nation. The King died in January, 1648. and this Plot began in February, the very next Month following: and in the ſame Month, my Lord, the Scots Nation did proclaim Charles Stewart King of Scotland; and they did not ſtop there, but proclaimed him likewiſe King of England; and then, my Lord, this Plot began here. For in the Month of February, the next Month after the King died, the Meeting was at the Swan at Dowgate, where were ſeveral of the Correſpondents at that time; as Drake, Huntington, Titus, and others: and the end of that Meeting was to contrive a Way that they might agree the King and the Scotiſh Nation; that was the end of their Meeting at that time.

My Lord, within a few Days after that, they met again, all theſe ſeveral Perſons, at the White-Hart in Breadſtreet, and to the ſame purpoſe; and at length it was reſolved to make their Addreſſes to the Queen, and to Piercy and Jermin, (firſt it was the King himſelf) for a Compliance between the King and the Scots: Letters were ſent accordingly, and ſeveral Meetings, and ſeveral Returns of Meſſages were had of them. My Lord, at length it was reſolved, That they ſhould ſend Meſſengers to the King at Jerſey, and agreed upon one Titus; and they raiſed Money and gave it to Titus to undertake the Journey. My Lord, Titus accordingly went in the Month of May, 1649. and returned in Auguſt following. After he had done his Negotiation there, he returned to Calais: but being afraid this wicked Plot was diſcovered, by reaſon of Letters that were intercepted, he durſt not come into England; but ſent Letters to deſire ſome Correſpondents might be ſent to Calais. My Lord, all this time I do not find that the Proof diſcovers the Priſoner at the Bar to be any Actor, or preſent at any Meeting hitherto: But when theſe Letters came from Titus, then the Letters were brought to Mr. Love's Houſe; which is the firſt time I find him by Proof to be preſent. The Letters were read in his Houſe, and in his Study, as ſome of the Witneſſes ſay that were there preſent; and it was then agreed, my Lord, That Alford ſhould go to Calais to Titus. My Lord, accordingly he went, and there Titus did communicate unto him the Affairs that paſs'd at Jerſey. Within four or five Days after, Alford returns again, and where ſhould the Meeting be but at Mr. Love's Houſe again, where Mr. Love and divers of the Accomplices were in his Houſe: a Letter from the King was read, the Diary, the Narrative from Titus likewiſe was read there; and there was the Conſultation what ſhould be done, and what further Courſe they ſhould take to join the King and the Scots together. My Lord, afterward they did agree that there ſhould be ſome ſent to treat with the King at Breda; the Inſtructions were drawn in Mr. Love's Houſe, (I think one Witneſs ſays ſo) and Mr. Love preſent; Money was raiſed, and Mr. Love himſelf did ſpeak to one of the Witneſſes to raiſe Money, which was Far: Far accordingly did bring in five Pounds, and laid it down upon Mr. Love's Table, Mr. Love being preſent then in the Room.

My Lord, I ſhall not trouble you with the Relation of more Particulars; but, my Lord, I conceive that Mr. Love doth upon theſe Proofs ſtand guilty of endeavouring to promote the King to be King of England: For, my Lord, what ſhould be the end of uniting the King and the Scots together, after that the Scots had proclaimed Charles Stewart King of England, but that they might come in a warlike manner to invade this Nation, and ſet up his Authority as King among us?

My Lord, I conceive (I ſhall ſubmit to your Lordſhip's Judgment) that he is guilty of Intelligence from a profeſs'd Enemy. The Intelligence is, my Lord, That divers Letters were ſent, and theſe Letters were read in his preſence, as himſelf doth confeſs he was at the reading of divers Letters, and did not conſent to them; and thereupon makes it as it were but Miſpriſion of Treaſon. My Lord, I conceive that this is apparently Treaſon: For if Letters were ſent to one Perſon, and did occaſionally come into another Man's hand, and he conceal them, being not ſent to him, there peradventure it is but Miſpriſion of Treaſon. But when there are ſent to theſe particular Perſons Letters from the King and Scots, and divers Perſons in Hoſtility againſt the Commonwealth of England, and received by the Confederates in Maſter Love's Houſe, and there were read and debated, though they did not agree to ſome Particulars, yet they are Actors: They are—— in the very Intelligence it ſelf; and did likewiſe return ſeveral Letters.

My Lord, this Intelligence was with the Scotiſh Nation; which truly, my Lord, I do conceive hardly an Engliſhman, that had the Blood of an Engliſhman running in his Veins, would join in Confederacy with that Nation, of all the Nations of the World, againſt this Commonwealth; a Nation that hath been known (and I am ſure the Priſoner at the Bar is well read in the Hiſtories and Stories of this Nation) to have been a conſtant Enemy to this Nation in all Ages through the Memory of all Hiſtories; and, my Lord, of late, not three Years ſince, came and invaded this Nation with a puiſſant Army, which it pleaſed God to deliver us from: and this the Priſoner could not be ignorant of, that we had lately a Fight with them at Dunbar; that Hoſtility could not be unknown unto the Priſoner at the Bar neither. And yet for all that, to confederate with a Nation that were ſuch conſtant Enemies to us; my Lord, I could not conceive it had been in the Heart of an Engliſhman, much leſs in a Miniſter and Preacher of the Goſpel among us.

My Lord, there are ſome particular Charges upon him, more than upon any of the reſt: after Drake fled away, being doubtful that his ſecret traitorous Plot would be diſcovered, Mr. Love ſupplied his room; all the Meetings, and Confederacies, and Letters, and Agitations in this Buſineſs, were conſtantly at Mr. Love's Houſe, himſelf being preſent. And, my Lord, Money, as I ſaid before, by Mr. Love himſelf deſired to be raiſed, for the furthering of this Deſign; and ſeveral Sums of Money were raiſed. I ſhall trouble your Lordſhip with no further Relation, but leave it to the Proof that was made before your Lordſhip and the Court.

Sir Thomas Witherington, the ſecond Counſel for the Commonwealth.

Sir Tho. Witherington. My Lord, Mr. Love's Defence which he made for himſelf, as he did it for his Life, ſo he took a great deal of pains in it, and was very accurate in the Defence he made, eſpecially in the Witneſſes. My Lord, I ſhall not take upon me (for it is not my Charge at this time) to reply unto the whole Defence that Mr. Love made.

My Lord, that I ſhall ſay, ſhall be in two Particulars, for Mr. Love divided that which he ſaid into four Parts: the firſt concerning the Charge; the ſecond concerning the Witneſſes and Teſtimony; the third concerning himſelf; and the fourth concerning ſome Propoſals to the Court.

My Lord, I ſhall only meddle with that which is concerning the Witneſſes; and ſecondly, to ſome part of that he ſaid concerning himſelf: I ſhall only reply as to theſe two, and the reſt I ſhall leave to Mr. Attorney-General, that better knows what is for the Advantage of the Commonwealth.

My Lord, I ſhall begin concerning the Witneſſes, to clear them, (for now we are in our Reply for the Commonwealth.) Mr. Love, who did profeſs a very great deal of Ignorance in the Laws of the Land, yet he did inſinuate ſomething that implied ſome Knowledge of them, in that, my Lord, he took ſome Exceptions to the Witneſſes. My Lord, I take it, that theſe Exceptions were:

1. That the Witneſſes were not probi Teſtes & legales. And,

2. That they were Participes criminis: And that indeed is included in the other.

My Lord, Firſt, I ſhall ſpeak to this, That the Witneſſes produced againſt him are legales Teſtes: They are competent Witneſſes, and ſufficient Witneſſes, without Exception againſt them. I ſhall firſt ſpeak to that they are Teſtes legales: For Mr. Love did object, That they themſelves confeſſed themſelves to be guilty of the ſame Crimes; and ſo their Confeſſion is upon the Matter a Conviction; and ſo they are convicted of the Crimes in which they are Witneſſes againſt him; and ſo are not competent Witneſſes.

My Lord, I ſhall clear this: Under favour, I take it they are very clear and good Witneſſes, notwithſtanding the Exceptions. And, my Lord, this I take to be a very plain Caſe; the Caſe which is in our Common Law: The Caſe is —— which proves it fully; for if a Man be accuſed of High Treaſon, indicted of High Treaſon, and will confeſs the Indictment, and become an Approver, yet he may be a Witneſs againſt all thoſe Parties guilty of the ſame Treaſons with himſelf; he is Particeps Criminis with them, and they with him: And yet this Man thus becoming an Approver, will at Common Law be a Witneſs, and a legal and good Witneſs againſt them.

My Lord, I ſhall a little open that, becauſe it clears the Caſe. My Lord, an Approver can only approve, it is true; that is, when a Man is indicted of High-Treaſon, and other his Accomplices with him, and he upon the Indictment ſays it is true, and then deſires he may have ſomething aſſigned to him, and then he accuſes ſuch and ſuch Perſons of the ſame Crimes: In this Caſe this Man, after he hath confeſs'd the Indictment, and takes his corporal Oath to reveal all Treaſons he knows in the Indictment, (for he can accuſe no further) after this done, he ſhall be a Witneſs; he is a Witneſs againſt thoſe with whom he is Particeps criminis: Nay, my Lord, it is of Merit and Juſtice that he ſhall have this Reward, he ſhall be pardoned his Life. Now, that I prove to you, becauſe that ſhews the Reaſon, that even the Man, after Indictment and Confeſſion, yet being an Approver, ſhall be an Accuſer of his Brethren, thoſe that were Participes criminis with him, and a good Witneſs. And the Reaſon of that goes to this Caſe in hand: For although theſe Men had a hand in the ſame Plot and Deſign with him, and have confeſſed, and did confeſs it upon Evidence, that they were there preſent, and did many Things, yet I take it they are clear, competent, and good Witneſſes, and that is no Objection againſt them, that they are Participes criminis. My Lord, if the Law were otherwiſe, it were impoſſible to prove many Offences; for many Offences cannot be proved, but by ſome Men that had a hand in them. In an ordinary Caſe, an Action of Treſpaſs and falſe Impriſonment, if three Men are guilty of it, it is an uſual Thing in Courts of Juſtice to admit one of them a Witneſs. True, they are not Parties in the Action, and ſo may be Witneſſes: For theſe Things may be ſo ſecretly done otherwiſe, that their Treaſons could never be revealed to recover againſt the Priſoner.

There is a Caſe, I think, in all our Knowledge: It is the Caſe of the Earl of Caſtlehaven. He was accuſed of a very grievous Fact: The Witneſſes which came againſt him, were one or two Footmen, that were Participes criminis in the very ſame Fact; and theſe Men, by the Opinion of the Judges, were competent Witneſſes. My Lord, he was arraigned, indicted, and convicted, and ſuffered Death: Nay, it is very true, that one of theſe Perſons was afterwards hanged for the ſame Offence. So that I think, under favour, as to that, I take it that they are clear and good Witneſſes, notwithſtanding that Objection.

The next Objection is, That they were not probi Teſtes. Truly for that, my Lord, I muſt appeal to your Judgment in it, whether theſe Men be not probi Teſtes, & honeſtes too: For in caſe of an Approver, as I mentioned before, that Man that accuſes his Brethren upon the ſame Treaſon, it is ſaid, that of Merit and Juſtice the King ought to grant him his Pardon; for they that diſcover the Traytors againſt the Commonwealth, theſe certainly are probi Teſtes, and good Commonwealths-Men. And ſo I take it, that this is no Objection againſt them in that, but as before they were legales Teſtes, ſo they are probi Teſtes. My Lord, I mention theſe Things, to ſhew that the Witneſſes for the Commonwealth are good and competent in this Caſe.

The next Objection touching theſe Witneſſes, is, That though they be admitted for good Witneſſes, yet there is not to any one Fact two Witneſſes: There is not any one of the moſt criminal Parts of the Charge proved by two Witneſſes. And ſo as before they were incompetent in regard of the Quality and Participancy of their Crimes, ſo now he would make them incompetent for want of Number.

My Lord, I ſhall firſt agree to the Ground of this Objection: For truly, my Lord, I take it, that it is by the common and antient Law of England, that in Caſes of Treaſon there muſt be two Witneſſes; and it is by a Law more antient than that, that is, by the Law of God. But, my Lord, it is true, the Law of this Land is explained by ſeveral Statutes, the Statute of the firſt Year of Edward the Sixth, and the fifth Year, and the ſecond Year of Philip and Mary. My Lord, I take it, upon all theſe Statutes; the one Statute ſays, To accuſe another, there muſt be two Witneſſes: I take it, the Accuſer and Witneſs are all one; that is, the ſame that in one Statute is called a Witneſs, in another is called an Accuſer. But there muſt be two: That is the Objection. But then give me leave to conſider this Caſe, and to conſider how theſe two Witneſſes ſhall be. My Lord, I ſay, under favour, that in a Caſe that conſiſts of a complicated Fact, that is, the Reiteration of many Actions, my Lord, I conceive none of theſe Laws are to be intended, that for every of the particular Facts there ſhould be two Witneſſes: That cannot be the Intention of any of theſe Laws, that in every particular Fact, that is to ſay, whether Mr. Love was preſent at the reading of the Letters; if you have one Witneſs to that, another for the writing of them, another to the ſending of them; though theſe three Witneſſes ſpeak to ſeveral Parts of the Buſineſs, yet they are a concurrent Teſtimony, for all agree to the Fact. I well remember, my Lord, a Caſe in the Star-Chamber, againſt B. of Leiceſterſhire: I think there was an Information againſt him for Bribery, and extorting of Fees. The Matter came in the Concluſion, that one Man proved a Bribe, and another Man proved a Bribe: One proved a Bribe of forty Pounds, and another a Bribe of forty Pounds; but there were ſeveral Witneſſes to ſeveral Bribes. The Queſtion now was, Whether he took Bribes, or no? And theſe tending to the ſame general Charge, it was the Opinion of all the Judges that he did extort and take Bribes. The one Witneſs ſpake to one Bribe, and another to another; and in that Caſe, as two Witneſſes, made good a Charge againſt an Offender: Yet in that Caſe it was taken, that where Witneſſes, though they ſpeak not in every Particular, yet all tending to the ſame general Charge of Bribery, theſe were taken for plural Witneſſes, and that was a good Conviction. That was the Opinion of the Judges then. I mention this Caſe only for an Inſtance to expreſs my ſelf in this: For Mr. Love cannot expect, that to every particular Thing laid to his Charge two Witneſſes ſhould be produced. But, my Lord, when one Witneſs proves this Thing he hath done, this Letter hath he written, and another that another Thing he hath done, which all tend to the Treaſon; now theſe are more Witneſſes, and two or three Witneſſes of the ſame Thing, tho not to the ſame individual Thing, it is —— So that upon the Matter they are concurrent Witneſſes in this complicated Fact, though not concurrent in this or that Circumſtance; for that is impoſſible almoſt in any Action to be done.

But then Mr. Love did further inlarge this Objection, which was out of a Saying he had, That in caſe of Treaſon, Probationes oportent eſſe luce clariores, The Proof muſt be as clear as the Sun. Truly, my Lord, it is very hard that Works of Darkneſs ſhould need ſo much Light for Diſcovery, and that ſo clear a Proof ſhould be neceſſary when the Things are done in Darkneſs and Secrecy. My Lord, I think, under favour, though in this Particular we have our Witneſs, as I take it, to ſpeak very plainly and clearly; for it is their own Faults if they do not, for they were preſent at the Meetings, at the Conſultations and Debates: But yet I do obſerve, that in this Caſe Things were carried on in a very ſecret manner. For I do obſerve, firſt, at theſe Meetings, all of them were done under a Diſguiſe, every Thing acted in this Buſineſs. I obſerve it upon Evidence, firſt, That the very Meetings themſelves, they go under the Title of Prayer and Faſting; for ſo Huntington told you, He was ſpoke to go to Prayer at Mr. Love's Houſe. The Contributions made for raiſing of Money, for ſending of Meſſages and Diſpatches, was under the Diſguiſe of Charitable Uſes. So that here was Darkneſs all along. And then for the Letters, there was no Names ſubſcribed to them: All were done without Names, only the Letter L. was upon one. And the Place, truly I muſt ſay, that was obſcure too: For what Man would have thought that the Place of Meeting ſhould have been at Mr. Love's Houſe? A Man that hath been ſo much for, and ſhewed ſo great an Affection to the Parliament, as he ſaid himſelf in Subſtance. A Man would ſooner have thought to have found this Treaſon in any Cellar in London, than in Mr. Love's Houſe. For the Inſtructions, for the Directions and Diſpatches, ſome were ſent in Table-Books, written in Sack in a Table-Book: But, my Lord, I am afraid, in the Concluſion, the Letters will be written in Blood. But, my Lord, this I do obſerve, that through theſe Difficulties, though we paſt through our Evidence, yet your Lordſhip heard how plain the Proof was in moſt Particulars.

My Lord, I ſhall ſay no more as to theſe Witneſſes, becauſe the other part of anſwering the Witneſſes belongs to the Attorney-General; for Maſter Love went over all the particular Witneſſes.

My Lord, I ſhall only ſay one Thing, and that is this, concerning Mr. Love himſelf; and it is only concerning this Point. My Lord, Mr. Love himſelf did ſay, He would be ingenuous ſo far as he took himſelf to be guilty. But, my Lord, I know your Lordſhip and the Court obſerves that that Ingenuity did follow the Proof that was for the Commonweath. My Lord, he confeſſes he was preſent at them; he was ſilent after all theſe Meetings and Debates: I mean the Meetings after they began at his own Houſe; for I ſpeak not of them that were at Dowgate, for there is no Proof that he was there. My Lord, this he confeſſes; and this he ſays is Miſpriſion of Treaſon. Truly, my Lord, I muſt be bold to differ from him in that Particular: I take it that that he confeſſes is High Treaſon. I ſhall ſpeak a little to Miſpriſion of Treaſon, and ſo conclude.

My Lord, Miſpriſion of Treaſon is when a Man hath notice of a Thing that is Treaſon, and he conceals it. Now, my Lord, under favour, the Concealment muſt not be long; it muſt not ſleep long with him. My Lord, I remember an Axiom an Author hath in our Law, and that is Bracton: He hath a Diſcourſe of Miſpriſion of Treaſon; he hath it in Latin —— Says he, He that knows a Treaſon, he muſt not ſtay in one Place a Day and a Night, but he muſt go on; he muſt go toward the Magiſtrate. Nay, (ſays he) though he have moſt urgent Buſineſs, yet he muſt ſet it aſide, and go on, and muſt not ſtay in any Place till he hath revealed it. Nay, (he ſays further) he ought not to look back till he hath given Information to the Magiſtrate. The Man that doth not after this manner forthwith reveal it, this only is Miſpriſion of Treaſon. But conſidering this Caſe of Mr. Love's now confeſſing the Fact, he takes it to be Miſpriſion of Treaſon; but I take it to be Treaſon it ſelf. My Lord, I ſhall obſerve what Mr. Love did: He was at theſe Meetings; theſe Meetings were continued for divers Days and Months. My Lord, was there any Diſcovery made by Mr. Love? Was there any Revelation of his to any Magiſtrate? Did he tell it to any Man? Nay, did he confeſs it upon his Examination, when examined? Nay, did he not deny it when he came to the Bar before your Lordſhip? Can this be ſaid to be Miſpriſion of Treaſon, that a Man ſhould hold ſo long in Treaſon, and not reveal it? My Lord, as every Treaſon includes a Miſpriſion of Treaſon in it; ſo I conclude that Miſpriſion of Treaſon may grow up to Treaſon it ſelf. Now when a Man ſhall ſo long ſleep upon it, and be violent in it, and not reveal it, I take this Miſpriſion of Treaſon grows up into Treaſon it ſelf.

My Lord, I ſhall ſay no more of that, but I ſhall conclude; becauſe the other part lies upon Mr. Attorney-General, who is better able to do it. Only one Thing I ſhall take notice of to your Lordſhip, and I am troubled at it; and that is, That as he ſaith, that he that hath been ſo much for the Parliament, with whom he hath gone along, and took ſweet Counſel together, and hath been active for, and paſſive with, thro all the Paſſages of the late Wars; that he ſhould ſuffer from them, this, he ſays, ſtuck very much upon him. But, my Lord, for him that hath been ſo much for the Parliament, liament, ſo familiar with their Proceedings, that hath been ſo active for them, and hath ſuffered ſo much for them; my Lord, for him to kick the Heel againſt the Parliament; for him, after all this, now even in the Infancy of this Commonwealth, that this Child ſhould be deſtroyed, and by one with whom we have took ſweet Counſel together: And by one, I may ſay this, that tho he had no hand in making this Commonwealth, yet I dare ſay he had in the Preparations to it; for himſelf all along hath gone with the Parliament: So that, my Lord, I take this to be an Objection againſt him. But, my Lord, I ſhall ſay no more in it, but refer the other part to Mr. Attorney-General.

Mr. Attorney-General, the third Counſel for the Commonwealth.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, I am ſorry Mr. Love hath given the occaſion of this Meeting, and of my ſpeaking at preſent; I could much rather have wiſhed to have been ſilent: But now I am drawn hither, I am forced to it. Mr. Love, my Lord, in the Beginning of his Tryal did deſire God ſo to aſſiſt him, that he might go through it with Gravity, Meekneſs, and Wiſdom, as became a Miniſter of the Goſpel. I wiſh that God had heard his Prayers, that he had ſo gone through it. What he hath done, the Court hath obſerved.

My Lord, in that part I have to do, I do heartily deſire I might do it with Faithfulneſs to you, and the Duty of the Place I ought to diſcharge, and to the Court.

My Lord, the Work that this Day lies upon me, is to reply ſomewhat to what was ſaid by Mr. Love in his own Defence, and to make a faithful Repetition to the Court, and to do the Witneſſes and the Priſoner right; to repeat that, and that only, that hath been ſaid; and in that, that I may do no wrong to miſlead the Court, and offer nothing to the Prejudice of the Witneſſes, nor to the Priſoner. And truly, my Lord, I ſhall not (in his own Words) have any tortured Collections, nor any Inferences, nor Strains of Wit: He hath ſhewed his Oratory in his Defence; my Lord, I ſhall ſhew the Simplicity of Law in the Reply.

My Lord, the Charge hath been repeated to you; and for that inſiſted upon by Mr. Love for the Witneſſes and Teſtimony, you have had Anſwer: I ſhall not trouble you; there hath been Pains taken in it. My Lord, I think all Men were ſatisfied that it was clear enough; yet to make it more clear, Mr. Love, my Lord, inſiſted upon one Thing more, and that is upon point of Time, and the point of the Juriſdiction of the Court, which (by your favour) I ſhall firſt begin with.

He ſtands charged, he ſays, for Crimes done in 1648, 1649, 1650, and 1651. And thoſe Crimes, he ſays, were before this Court was, or had a Being; and ſo had not Power to take Cognizance of them.

That, my Lord, I ſhall endeavour to clear to you, and I think in much Clearneſs; clearer than the Light, as he will have his Evidence. He ſtands charged (I ſay) poſitively, my Lord, with no Crime before a Law was emitted, that did give an Inhibition, and was publiſhed and known. He ſtands charged with no Crime before the Law was publiſhed, that did declare what the Crime was, and gave notice to beware.

My Lord, that that was firſt, was the Law that was made the Thirtieth of January, 1648, that doth declare, (and upon that Law I ſhall fetch the Foundation and Riſe of this Treaſon) That whoever ſhall proclaim, declare, publiſh, or any way promote Charles Stuart, or any other Perſon, to be King or chief Magiſtrate of England or Ireland, without Conſent in Parliament, ſhall be adjudged a Traytor, and ſhall ſuffer Pains of Death as a Traytor. Here was this Law publiſhed, and notice given what every Man ſhould truſt to, and, I may ſay, my Lord, Obedience expected. Againſt this Law hath Mr. Love tranſgreſſed, and, under favour, in a very high meaſure; ſo that, my Lord, I charge him upon this Law, and ſince this Law was made; and to this Law there is no Limitation of Time for Men to be queſtioned for it: And for this Law, it is in expreſs Terms given in Commiſſion to this Court to take Cognizance of it: So that, I think, this is a little clear to him.

My Lord, the next is a Law publiſhed in July, 1649, that is entitled, An Act declaring what Offences ſhall be Treaſon: That, I think, he is not ignorant of, though he pretended to be ignorant of another. My Lord, that Law likewiſe, though it was before this Court was erected, yet this Court hath, by expreſs Words of the Commiſſion, Power to take Cognizance of it. And this Court, in theſe Things, is not like other Judicatories, that when Offences are committed, the State takes care to appoint Courts and Judges to judge thoſe Offences. Let it be no Offence to Mr. Love, if this Court were erected eſpecially to try him. But the Law was not made eſpecially to puniſh him; for the Law was made before, and the Offence committed before: and ſo, I think, in all England the Offences are committed before the Judges go their Circuits, and have their Commiſſions.

My Lord, the next is the Law that conſtitutes this Court, and ſays in what Particulars this Court hath Power to take notice of Offences, beſides thoſe mentioned before, and the laſt concerning the Scots: That was but lately, which Mr. Love ſays he was ignorant of; but he was not ignorant to do ſomewhat againſt it. My Lord, theſe are for the Laws that Mr. Love is impeach'd upon.

The next thing that I have to do, is, (and in that I humbly beg your Favour, that as I am now to do Juſtice, if I may ſo ſay, to the Court, and to be faithful to my Truſt and the Duty impoſed upon me) to repeat the Evidence right unto you; and in that, as the Gentleman, the Priſoner at the Bar, hath had that Favour from you to have a Notary by him, to take all that was ſaid of all Parties; ſo, my Lord, by your Favour, we have had ſome here to help our Memories: With whom I have conferred; and by the Help of their Notes and our Memories, my Lord, we think we have faithfully tranſcribed that which was ſaid by the Witneſſes. And, my Lord, I humbly crave Favour, as not now being a private Examination, to be read, but a publick Teſtimony in the Preſence of Mr. Love himſelf and the Court: I hope it is not private now, but I may uſe Notes to do him right, and may read thoſe Things that they teſtified upon their Oath here.

In the firſt place, my Lord, I ſhall, according to my beſt Judgment, do him no wrong. For the firſt, I ſhall acknowledge it was but a Hear-ſay; and that from Drake, of Letters ſent from Scotland to the Presbyterian Party in England, to let them know what had been done of proclaiming the King there, and that care ſhould be taken for their Intereſt. This I do acknowledge was but a Hear-ſay; but that which followed not long after that time, my Lord, was poſitive; and there (my Lord) I ſhall begin the Riſe of this. And thus, as hath been obſerved by my Fellows, that are Counſel here, though there was not acting, nor Preſence, nor knowing, yet (my Lord) under a ſecond, it will appear he was conſenting and approving, and ſo guilty of the firſt Fact. My Lord, There was a Meeting at Dowgate: I ſuppoſe you remember it full well; it hath been ſeveral times repeated to you by ſeveral Perſons. And Titus, the Party now beyond the Seas, and Drake, and other Traytors fled, were prime Sticklers for this, and moved others to come in, and to be there preſent, and hear what was the Deſign. As I did crave your Lordſhip's Favour, ſo I ſhall, that I may not (as he ſays) truſt to a fickle nor roving Memory, that I may be faithful, to read to you that I have taken, and what was ſaid by them. I ſuppoſe Mr. Love hath by him one that can controul me, if I do not right.

I begin with this Meeting at Dowgate, and continued at the White-Hart in Bread-ſtreet: Alford gave you this Evidence, That one Morning he was wiſhed by Drake to go to the Swan at Dowgate: When he came there, there was one Titus who gave relation of the good Diſpoſition of the Prince, and how inclinable he was to take the Covenant, and to caſt off the Cavaliering Party, and thoſe about him, if there were opportunity found, how to make him know there was a conſiderable Party in England that would ſtick cloſe to the Ends of the Covenant; and upon that, we that were there did think we were bound in Duty, in relation to the Covenant, to preſs the Prince to take it, and to proſecute the Ends of it. And for that Titus ſaid, if we would appoint another Meeting, he would draw up ſomething in way of Application of the Presbyterian Party to that purpoſe.

We afterwards met at the Bear in Breadſtreet, and there he drew forth ſomething he had framed to that purpoſe, and read it, and it was agreed to be ſent over to the Prince; the Subſtance of it was to preſs the Prince to apply himſelf to take the Covenant, and to proſecute the Ends of it, and to caſt off all the Cavaliers and that Party about him, which had brought ſo much miſchief to his Father, and would do likewiſe to him: And this (I believe) was ſent over, for Titus undertook to ſend it over. We asked him how the Prince could be made to believe that this coming from ſo inconſiderable a Party as we were, ſhould come under the Notion of the Presbyterian Party of England? He ſaid he would undertake it by means of my Lord Piercy. And, my Lord, I think you do remember there was one Maſon, Servant of Piercy, that was ſent over hither, ſo teſtified by ſome, to reconcile the Royal and Presbyterian Party. This Maſon, my Lord, was Piercy's Servant, ſo teſtified here by divers. My Lord, here is now the Foundation: Drake is he that moves Alford; and Titus I may ſuppoſe the Mover of Drake; and both of them fled as Traytors.

My Lord, if they were Traytors, and this is Treaſon; then whoever had a hand in carrying on this Deſign, himſelf is a Traytor, and his Action is Treaſon. My Lord, this is the Teſtimony of Alford.

My Lord, there is another Witneſs, and that is Lieut. Col. Bains, who I think was preſent only at this Meeting, and had enough of it, and did leave it; and yet was preſent at this, and gave in Evidence of what was there propoſed. I think he was preſent at no other Meeting, he was ſatisfied this was too much; his Teſtimony, as I take it, was this, for I ſhall read it, that I may do no wrong to no Party: Bains ſaid, It was alſo propoſed by Titus, that ſomething ſhould be done, in order to reſtoring the Presbyterian Intereſt, by Application to the Prince, and to aſſure him that he had a conſiderable Party in England, which look'd upon it as a Duty, and lying upon all of them by the Covenant. And that it was neceſſary ſomewhat ſhould be done by ſome Parliament-Men, Miniſters and Citizens, that were leading active Men, that he might have an Aſſurance that ſomewhat would be done for him; and ſomewhat to the Queen, Jermin, and Piercy, whom he ſaid were their Friends. This, my Lord, was that which Titus ſaid at this Meeting; and teſtified by Bains.

My Lord, there is another, Colonel Barton, who was produced as an Evidence. My Lord, I think that he ſpoke not much more than to this, and gave off here. My Lord, his Teſtimony was this; for I do conceive. under favour, we have taken the very preciſe Words ſpoken by them: and, my Lord, ſo as ſpoken and taken, ſo written, and ſo, my Lord, read to you. Barton, my Lord, ſaid, That Drake would have him to be a Meſſenger; and to that purpoſe there were ſeveral Meetings at the Swan and White-Hart. This was what Barton teſtified.

My Lord, then there was Major Huntington, which was at this Meeting, and one more at Mr. Love's Houſe, which he full well remembers. My Lord, Huntington ſays this, That about March 1648, (in January was the Law publiſhed) Alford told him that Titus was in Town, and that he was newly come from beyond the Seas from their Friends, Maſſey, Bunce, Graves, and others; and that Titus was to meet the next day at Dowgate, where he fell into high Praiſes of the Prince, and told them that tho he was taking unhandſome Courſes, yet they had great hopes his Inclinations were otherwiſe. Titus ſaid further, he feared his inclining to the Iriſh, unleſs ſomething ſhould be gotten from his Friends here to divert him; that you remember was Mr. Love's Charity too, as you will hear anon. Titus purpoſed to get Letters from Perſons of Honour, to perſuade him to a good Opinion of the Scots, to take the Covenant, and to join with them.

Afterward they met at the White-Hart in Bread-ſtreet, where Titus declared that he ſhould gain theſe Letters, and hoped to ſet ſomething a-foot to the ſame effect; and there ſaid, they were confident they could ſee no way under Heaven for him elſe, but by taking the Covenant, and engaging the Scots againſt England: to which purpoſe he drew forth a Paper, purporting that they were bound in Honeſty, Conſcience, and Loyalty, to maintain and help him to his juſt Rights, if he would go along and join with the Covenanting Party in England and Scotland.

My Lord, this is that now that hath paſt in proof by Evidence concerning this firſt Meeting at the Swan at Dowgate, which I do humbly conceive was the Riſe and Foundation of what follows afterward. And this, my Lord, if true, I ſuppoſe no Man will ſay, but that was Treaſon that was tranſacted there. I do not ſay, my Lord, that Mr. Love was preſent at it, nor as yet, can I ſay, knowing of it; but what follows after, my Lord, will bring him in danger.

My Lord, here, you have heard, was this Meeting, and what was propounded to be done here, and how active Titus was, and that he was to go (you have heard by the Teſtimony) to Piercy; and it is not doubted by any but he did go thither; it is not doubted by any but he was ſent, and did go thither. To that purpoſe I ſhall now read you two Witneſſes more, which I have cauſed to be tranſcribed too, in the words as ſpoken by them, as I do conceive, that is, Adams and Far: That there was Money agreed upon, to ſend Titus to Piercy; that there was Money collected, and that they themſelves did contribute. Adams he expreſſeth it thus: That upon a Meeting, the Place and Time I remember not, where I think were preſent Drake, Titus, Alford, and myſelf, and I cannot tell how many more; it was agreed that Titus ſhould go to Piercy: the End of his going was to promote an Agreement between the King and the Scots, according to the Covenant; (and, my Lord, you ſhall hear in due time what that Covenant is, that Mr. Love hath ſaid in his late Defence.) In order to his going, we did agree to furniſh him with Money for the preſent, and made ſome kind of Promiſe to keep him while he was out: about an hundred Pounds was furniſh'd; for my part, I paid twenty Pounds of it. This is Adams.

The next is Far. He ſays, He did underſtand by Drake, that Titus, who was here requeſted as one to be preſent at the Treaty at Jerſey, which Titus did undertake to go thither: he undertook to go himſelf. That after he was gone, Drake deſired Far to let him have Ten Pounds, ſaying, Titus was in want, and upon this I lent him Ten Pounds: the Letter was read at Mr. Love's Houſe when he came from Calais. So, my Lord, here is now under favour his Proof before you of this Meeting at Dowgate, at the Swan there, finiſh'd in Breadſtreet, carried over unto Jerſey, Titus the Meſſenger furniſh'd with Money by a Party from hence in this Errand, as we told you. My Lord, all this while I do not hear of Mr. Love; if he were, my Lord, he was like the Mole under ground; but however, my Lord, Mr. Love hath carried himſelf (as ſome have ſaid) like a Rat among Joint-Stools, a Man can ſee him, but cannot hit him. But, my Lord, I doubt he will appear to be too buſy in what follows, and that he had a hand in it at firſt.

My Lord, the next to go on with is this, in time; That when Titus finiſh'd his Work at Jerſey, he was then to give an account to his Maſters that employed him, and upon his Return he was to do it faithfully, as he thought. But being informed, that the State had vigilant Eyes, and they diſcovered him what he had been doing there, and he having notice from ſome of his ſtedfaſt Friends here of it, he thought it was not ſafe for him to come in perſon, ſo that his guilty Conſcience kept him off. But then he did deſire that he might give an account by the hand of ſome others, by their Memories; and for that purpoſe wrote a Letter, to whom I cannot tell, I think to Drake: the Letter was written, and under favour, my Lord, this Letter from Titus was read in Mr. Love's Houſe, to have one ſent to him; and there it was propounded for ſome to be ſent, Adams was propounded, for him to go; Far propounded for him to go: but not them, but Alford was agreed to go, and did accept of it; but not that he was there, my Lord. My Lord, for this I ſhall crave the ſame Favour from you, to read Adams and Far, as to that Particular. This is Major Adams; It was moved in Mr. Love's Houſe, Mr. Love being there preſent, that I ſhould go to Calais to meet Titus; but Alford going thither, did at his Return give an account of the State of things at Mr. Love's Houſe. My Lord, that I read him for, is for that part, that it was moved in Mr. Love's Chamber, Mr. Love being then preſent: That I ſhould go to Calais to meet Titus; it was moved that Adams ſhould go: my Lord, this I read to ſhow Mr. Love was privy to this before the Meſſenger was ſent. My Lord, the next is Captain Ralph Far: I was in Mr. Love's Houſe in his Study, wherein (in Mr. Love's Study) a Letter was read from Titus, deſiring one might be ſent to him to Calais; and thereupon it was moved that I ſhould go, but afterwards it was agreed that Alford ſhould go, who went accordingly. That is now as to that particular, that before any Man was ſent unto Calais, it was made known in Mr. Love's Houſe, and ſome propounded for to go, and at laſt another did go; this, my Lord, I offer to you, as that which will not be controverted by Mr. Love, for I have read you two Witneſſes to it. The next, my Lord, is, in which (I think) we do not differ; but that when Alford had been at Calais, and had taken the account that Titus gave him, the Copy of the Letter which he ſaid was from the King to the Preſbyterian Party here, the Narrative of all the Tranſactions and Proceedings to Jerſey: that upon his Return, I think we do not differ, nor is it denied; I am ſure Mr. Love acknowledged it in his laſt Defence, becauſe proved by four, therefore confeſſed, my Lord, that this Narrative, the Copy of this Letter was read in his Houſe; and for that I have the Teſtimony of Adams, Alford, Jaquel, and Far; which, if it be your Pleaſure, I ſhall humbly read unto you.

The firſt is Major John Alford; Having received at Calais a Narrative in writing of Titus's Tranſactions in Jerſey, I brought the ſame to Drake, to whom it was directed. Now it appears to whom the Direction was. And he brought it to Mr. Love's Houſe, where it was read; afterwards there was a Commiſſion ſo called. But, my Lord, if you pleaſe, that is for this in the firſt place, That this Narrative brought from Titus by Alford, was read at Mr. Love's Houſe.

The next is Adams; But Alford going to Calais, did at his Return give an Account of the State of things at Mr. Love's Houſe, which Account was the Narrative from Titus, and the Copy of the Letter ſaid to be the King's Letter: The Contents whereof I remember was as followeth, The King expreſſed a great deal of Affection to the Miniſtry in general in England, and promiſed them great Favours when he was in a condition, and deſired them to continue ſtedfaſt in the way they were in; which Letter was read and publiſh'd in Mr. Love's Study, and Mr. Love was there ſome times of the reading. At the ſame time a Motion was made, of giving thanks to Titus for his well managing Affairs there, and at the ſame time the Commiſſion and Inſtructions were. So that here is another Teſtimony, that this was done at Mr. Love's Houſe; the Narrative, ſays this Gentleman, and the Copy of the King's Letter.

My Lord, the next I ſhall read unto you, is Mr. John Jaquel: After Alford's coming home, I was at Mr. Love's Houſe, where was Potter, Drake, and Alford; and Mr. Love was there ſome times, though divers times ſomebody came to ſpeak with him, and called him, and he went to ſpeak with them. A Narrative from Titus was there read by Alford or Drake, wherein was declared the King's Inclination to make peace with the Scots, but his wicked Council hindred him. I think it was a Narrative of what had paſs'd between the King and Titus at Jerſey. This is that that Jaquel ſays.

The next, my Lord, is Far. Alford being returned, he gave an Account of his Imployment at Mr. Love's Houſe; a Copy of a Letter was there read, from the King to the Presbyterian Party in England; the Subſtance was to ſend Commiſſioners to the Treaty at Breda. The Narrative brought from Titus, Titus, was communicated at Mr. Love's Houſe, where were preſent ten or twelve Perſons. So, my Lord, you have heard theſe four Witneſſes, what they have ſaid concerning this: Now you ſhall give me leave to make Application of this to the former, I ſhall crave your favour to go thorough this: There follows more at Mr. Love's Houſe, this is not ended yet. My Lord, after this, there was ſomewhat propounded to be done upon this Narrative and a Letter from the King; ſomewhat was propounded at this Meeting: My Lord, then there was (as I know the Court remembers) Speech of a Commiſſion that was ſomewhat controverted. There was Speech of a Commiſſion, and a Commiſſion read; Mr. Love ingenuouſly acknowledgeth, and it was proved, and he declared his diſſenting from it, and that he was againſt it, becauſe as private Perſons they had no Power to do any ſuch thing. But, my Lord, that there was a Commiſſion read there, brought by Drake, (I do not ſay that this proves that Mr. Love corrected it;) that there were Inſtructions and Letters read for to be ſent over, I think, is not denied: But, my Lord, for that, if you pleaſe, I ſhall read you the Witneſs. The firſt is Alford: Afterwards there was a Commiſſion, ſo called, agreed among us, ſent over to the Lord Willoughby of Parham, Maſſey, Graves and Titus, at Breda, to adviſe with the Scots Commiſſioners there, in behalf of the Presbyterian Party in England. This Commiſſion was read in Mr. Love's Study, and at the ſame time Inſtructions for the Commiſſioners to walk by, were agreed on to be ſent; which Commiſſion and Inſtructions were the Subſtance of the Petition formerly ſent, to preſs the King to take the Covenant, and to proſecute the Ends of it. This Petition was (I conceive) what was formerly agreed upon at Dowgate; which Commiſſion and Inſtructions one Maſon, the Lord Piercy's Man, carried over. This is Alford's Teſtimony as to this. And being ask'd by Mr. Love, Did not I diſſent from ſending the Commiſſion and Inſtructions? he ſays this, It was agreed in the general, that the Commiſſion and Inſtructions ſhould be ſent, Mr. Love being then preſent: All preſent are Principals, my Lord.

My Lord, in the next place is Major Huntington's Teſtimony; and the firſt is this, That at Mr. Love's Houſe in the beginning of March, 1649. I found Drake and others, and there was read a Paper in the nature of a Commiſſion, commiſſionating my Lord Willoughby of Parham, Graves, Titus, Maſſey and Bunce, to treat in the behalf of the well-affected Party of England, and to join with the Scots Commiſſioners, according to ſuch Inſtructions as ſhould be therein incloſed. And this Queſtion being ask'd, What Power have we to give or ſend ſuch a Commiſſion? Drake anſwered, We have the King's Command for it, and the Authority of ſome ſecluded Parliament-Men; for I look upon them beyond the Power that is now ſitting. Whereupon Mr. Love replied, Come, come, let it go. You have heard Huntington's Teſtimony, and Mr. Love's Paraphraſe upon thoſe words.

The next is Adams: At the ſame time a Commiſſion and Inſtructions were ſpoken of at Mr. Love's Houſe to be drawn up and ſent: As I remember Mr. Gibbons brought the rough Draught. I am very confident that Maſter Love was there ſome part of this time, and it was in his Study where this was generally conſented unto. The Inſtructions were there agreed alſo, and read by Drake, as I remember. Sterks, the Scotiſh Agent, met with us ſometimes at Maſter Love's Houſe. This is what was teſtified by Adams. There is another to this, and that is Captain Far. William Drake read there a Paper, of the nature of a Commiſſion, which was not agreed to by the Company, becauſe private Perſons had no Authority to give Commiſſion. The Commiſſion was in the Name of the Presbyterian Party. A Letter and Inſtructions was then agreed upon; the Commiſſioners were to be the Lord Willoughby of Parham, Bunce, Maſſey and Titus, who were to move in the behalf of the Presbyterians. Papers then were read, to have been ſent to the Queen, to perſuade the King to give Satisfaction to the Scots: but they were not aſſented to.

My Lord, I have done with this that concerns this Meeting; and now I ſhall apply that which I intended, and ſpoke of before. The Deſign you heard, that, my Lord, was at the Swan at Dowgate, was treaſonable enough in conſcience, high enough; a Party employed to agitate! And though we do not find Mr. Love to have been knowing or privy to it at firſt, yet, my Lord, if there be a Treaſon hatch'd and deſign'd, a Party ſent in it, and any ſubſequent Act of any other Party that ſhall come into this, and approve of it, and join in it in what way ſoever, this Man, my Lord, is guilty of the firſt Tranſaction of Treaſon. So that though Maſter Love did ſo walk under ground, that we cannot bring him in to be knowing at firſt, yet I bring him approving at laſt: And, my Lord, tho here be his firſt appearing, it is enough and too timely. And, my Lord, Titus departing, and an Account given of all, and for ought appears, not to be proved by me, nor by any for the Commonwealth, whether Maſter Love did approve or not, or how far he went in it. But he was preſent, and at the Debates and Diſcourſings about it, and Actings in it. My Lord, this is far from Miſpriſion of Treaſon; for Miſpriſion of Treaſon is a bare ſilent Act that carries nothing of Diſcourſe nor Debate with it; it is a ſimple Act of Omiſſion. But when Treaſons are hatch'd, and are deſign'd, and others ſhall come and treat, and debate, and diſcourſe upon carrying them on; my Lord, by the ſubſequent Act he hath approved of all that paſs'd before, and made himſelf Party to it. Here is an Account given by Titus of what had paſs'd there; this is brought into Maſter Love's Houſe, there are Debates concerning a Commiſſion; whether they took the King for the Authority, or the King wrote of it, it doth not much move me. A Copy of a Letter from the King was read there, let them take it among themſelves as they pleaſe. Here was a Commiſſion debated, and Maſter Love acknowledgeth he debated againſt it. My Lord, under favour, if he had declared an utter Diſlike, and (as he himſelf ſays) a Deteſtation and Abomination againſt it; but he goes on, though not in that Particular, yet in another, and he is guilty of all. In Treaſon there are no Acceſſaries, all preſent are Principals.

The Crime of Treaſon is beyond the crying Blood of Murder; one is but private, the other is publick: ſo as, my Lord, though Mr. Love acknowledgeth, that he ſo far owned the Narrative from Titus, and the Proceedings there, the reading of it, but did diſſent from the Commiſſion, and did ſpeak againſt it, and at preſent I ſhall take it ſo too; yet for the Inſtructions ſent, and for the Commiſſion named, you have had four Witneſſes named to you. My Lord, Diſſent will not ſerve his turn, and yet to that there is not a Pretence of a Diſſent from the Inſtructions, and what was ſent, and that is a Conſent and Concurrence, and that is an Approbation of all precedent Actions, and makes himſelf a Party in it, and that is by one Witneſs: And, my Lord, you have heard by Maſter Serjeant Witherington, therington, that to every Circumſtance there needs not two Witneſſes, but to the Deſign there muſt be two: And Adams himſelf ſays, it was propounded to have given Titus Money, as you ſhall hear by and by; and Far tells you, That there was going on ſo far in it, that a Paper was read for Letters to be ſent to the Queen, to move her to perſuade the King, but that was not aſſented to; but it was moved among them.

My Lord, the next thing I ſhall take, as near as I can, was when this was done, and this Tranſaction paſs'd over, and the Inſtructions ſent, that were agreed upon for Commiſſioners at Breda, then begins the Troubles in Ireland. You have heard of a Paper-book ſent, written in Sack, and returned a Year after; that comes next. There was ſent over from Col. Bamfield (Mr. Love ſays he knew not the Face of the Man) but he lik'd his Imployment it ſeems, that would be privy to ſuch Proceedings from a Man he knew not. There came a Servant over, I take it from Bamfield, and that was about Chriſtmas laſt, that is the time expreſs'd after Dunbar-Fight. My Lord, this was brought, the Letter was delivered to Potter, and their Superſcription was ſingly with the Letter L. which I may ſay, may be better applied to Maſter Love, than to any other, all Circumſtances conſidered; yet I ſhall not conclude from it, but though he ſays he had no Letters directed to him, I ſhall ſay as truly, that they were directed to him, as much as to any Man elſe, and a little more; for Maſter Love was very unfortunate that theſe Letters ſhould be brought to him, read in his Houſe, the Tranſactions there, and Mr. Love to have no hand in it, this is hardly to be believed.

My Lord, in the next place are theſe Letters that came from Bamfield; if it pleaſe you, for that I ſhall read Potter. I received Letters out of Scotland from Bamfield, with the Letter L. upon it, wherein was a large Narrative of the Affairs of Scotland, from Dunbar-Fight, to the time of the Date of them, which (I think) was about Chriſtmas. I carried thoſe Letters to Maſter Love's, where was one or two more with us, Jaquel, and, I think, Dr. Drake; we three, I am ſure of it. There were Letters from a nameleſs Perſon, whom we ſuppoſed to be Maſter Bailey; and a Letter from my Lords of Argyle, Lothian and Lowdon. Theſe Letters wrote for ten thouſand Pounds for buying of Arms, and hiring of Shipping; and for five thouſand Men to be landed in England. Theſe Letters were diſlik'd and diſſented from; and it was agreed to give a negative Anſwer: And we thought fit (for our own Safety) to raiſe ſome Money for the Meſſenger and Bamfield: The Sum agreed on was forty Pounds, to which I contributed ten Pounds. I carried the Letter to Mr. Love's to take Advice upon it. Mr. Love, and I, and Jaquel, read thoſe Letters that were opened, and thoſe that were not opened we did open and read, and diſcourſe on them; and upon Advice reſolved to do nothing in it: Neither did they reveal it. And then being demanded, Whether at Mr. Love's Houſe there was not a Diſcourſe for raiſing 4 or 500 l.? he anſwered, There was. Being demanded, Whether Letters were not returned to Bamfield, with the Money ſent him? He anſwered, A Letter was left at my Shop, and I apprehended it came from Maſter Love, or Mr. Drake. And Jaquel being demanded, Whether Mr. Love and Mr. Drake were not appointed to draw up the Letter? He anſwered, Yes, they were. And that is Potter's Teſtimony.

The next mention is, That Jaquel was preſent there, he is ſure of it, Maſter Love himſelf and Jaquel. This is Jaquel's Teſtimony: At a Meeting at Mr. Love's Houſe, Maſter Love being preſent, it was thought fit that forty Pounds ſhould be raiſed for Bamfield. A Letter was read from Bamfield at Maſter Love's Houſe, Mr. Love being preſent: Mr. Love declared, he never ſaw, or knew Bamfield. The Letter was for five thouſand Pounds to hire Shipping. And another Letter from my Lords of Argyle, Lothian and others, at the ſame Time and Place were read, to induce the Confederates to give Credit to Bamfield. Potter moved, that ten Pounds might be given to the Meſſenger that brought the Letter, and thirty Pounds to Bamfield; which was conſidered of, and nothing ſaid againſt it: There was no Agreement, but it was thought convenient by all then preſent. Upon this, Mr. Love ask'd Mr. Jaquel a Queſtion, and he ſaid, I cannot ſay that Mr. Love ſaid, it was convenient; but it was not diſſented from, or ſpoken againſt by any.

My Lord, I ſuppoſe this is a faithful Relation of what the Witneſſes ſaid. My Lord, you have heard of this, and the time when it was, that Bamfield's Servant was ſent, and Letters brought from Scotland, giving an Account of Proceedings there: Letters from Argyle, Lothian, Lowdon and Belcarris, to give Credit to what Bamfield ſhould relate: Money provided, though not the Sum, nor the Means thoſe Letters did hint to them; perchance their Purſes could not reach that; but ſo far as they could go, they would: they would reward him that brought it, and him that ſent it; and thereupon 40 l. was provided, ten Pounds for the Meſſenger, and thirty Pounds for Bamfield. In this Repetition I think I have not wronged Mr. Love.

The next is the Letter that came from Maſſey and Titus, who were then in Scotland; and in what Condition, I think every Man knows, in what Condition they are there: though by the way I ſhould be ſorry to repeat that which Mr. Love did ſay the firſt Day, That it did not appear to him, that the Scots were in Arms againſt the Parliament of England, but in Arms for their own Preſervation; and therefore did deſire Counſel. Here was one of his Reaſons why he deſired Counſel to be informed, to adviſe him whether they were in Arms for their own Preſervation, or in Oppoſition to the Parliament of England. This was that Mr. Love was pleaſed to ſay the firſt Day. My Lord, this of Maſſey and Titus gives them an Account likewiſe of the Affairs in Scotland after Dunbar-Fight too. If you pleaſe, my Lord, I will read you three Witneſſes to that, and that neither doth Mr. Love deny, but that theſe Letters were read at his Houſe.

This is Major John Alford's. After Dunbar-Fight we met at Mr. Love's Houſe in his lower Room, where a Letter from Maſſey was read, which gave an Account of the Fight there; wherein he alſo wrote for Arms, mentioning his own and Titus's Neceſſities. Thereupon a Propoſition was made for raiſing of Monies for the ſupplying of their Neceſſities; and five hundred Pounds being propounded, it was brought down to two or three hundred Pounds to be raiſed among our ſelves. Mr. Love did then move for Contribution-Money to that purpoſe; and I thereupon promiſed ten Pounds, which my Man paid. This, my Lord, is the Teſtimony which Alford gives, as to this concerning Maſſey.

The next is Adams. When the Money was propounded to be raiſed for Maſſey and Titus, certainly Mr. Love was then preſent; [and this after the Fight at Dunbar] and the Money was agreed to be raiſed by thoſe that were privy to the Correſpondency. Mr. Love had then a Paper in his Hand, and did write ſomething, I ſaw not what he did write; and ſo every Man that was there there did write what he would lend; I conceive Mr. Love summed up every Man's Sum. Massey's Letter was for Arms, and the Money propounded was for Titus and Massey; for Titus, because he was sent by us; and Mr. Love was there. This, my Lord, is Adams's Testimony; and though he did not know what Mr. Love writ, yet he knew what Mr. Love moved.

My Lord, here is another, and that is Captain Far, which I shall make bold to read to the Court likewise, concerning the same Action. After Dunbar-Fight I came somewhat late to a Meeting at Mr. Love's House, where Mr. Love told me a Letter was come from Massey, to assist the King with Money and Arms; but it was not agreed that any Money or Arms could be sent. And I understood from Mr. Love, they could not do it. Mr. Love then likewise told me, they agreed to raise a Sum of Money for Titus, Massey and Graves, and to be sent to relieve them in their Necessity: which Sum, whether it was 250 l. or 300 l. I cannot positively say; but Mr. Love moved me to contribute. I told him I would give him five Pounds, which I brought wrap'd up in a Paper, and laid it down on Mr. Love's Table, Mr. Love and several others being in the Room; it was so done, that there might be no Discovery. And Mr. Love asking him some Questions upon this, Whether it was done so by Mr. Love, or no? he did not know that; but it was done so by himself, that there might be no Discovery. My Lord, Mr. Love did not disagree: Far being cross-examined by Mr. Love, did not say, that Mr. Love did disagree to the sending the Money to Massey and Titus. So I have done with that Particular likewise, the receiving Letters from Massey, and of the Account from Scotland, and the Fight there.

That which Adams saith, Mr. Love having replied unto it, concerning a Letter writ to the General Assembly and Kirk of Scotland; and in that, my Lord, he is pretty positive. Adams's Testimony is; There was a Letter written to the General Assembly and Kirk of Scotland, at Mr. Love's House, Mr. Love was sometimes present at this Meeting: which Letter was taken to be penn'd by Mr. Love and Mr. Drake; and I thought it to be so, because of the Language of it: and that after Drake escaped, all the Meetings I know of, were at his House; [and so, my Lord, say some others.] Being examined, he says, I saw Letters which were read in Mr. Love's House, Mr. Love was present and privy to the debating of them, and did not declare any Dissent.

My Lord, I have now done with these Particulars; you have seen Mr. Love at the End, though you found him not at the Beginning: it is not good to come at the ending of the Quarrel. But, my Lord, under favour, by the Laws and Rules of Justice, if any ill thing be contrived and plotted, and afterwards any other Person shall come into the Contrivance of it, and carry it on; my Lord, I think I shall not need to say much in it, but he is culpable and guilty of the whole, from the first to the last. And that Mr. Love should be but a mere Spectator, a mere concealed Person, it is very hard to be believed by any that are rational Men: for after that once Titus had done his Errand at Jersey, and gives his Account here, my Lord, That his Transactions, and the subsequent Imployment, all that we know of, are all transacted, and carried on in Mr. Love's House, in Mr. Love's Study, in Mr. Love's Presence: It was not one or two, or three times, which had been enough, and very well had it been for Mr. Love, if he had done as Baines did, or as Barton did; they, when they heard (though they were too much for them, my Lord, to conceal, as they have done, yet did confess it when required) they left off when they heard of it, they would go no further in it, they knew the Danger of it. Mr. Love, my Lord, as you will hear anon, by what himself hath proposed, what Judgment and Conscience led him to carry on this; it was a Conscience of his own covenanting Interest and Principles for the Scots and Religion, that led him on to carry on this Design.

My Lord, I have done with this, that is, the Evidence against him; for Application to it, you have heard the several Laws read before the Charge opened: that Man is guilty of High Treason, and is a Traytor by the Laws of the Land now, that doth any way promote, declare, or publish Charles Stuart to be King of England. My Lord, you have heard the Evidence, what Titus hath plotted, what Drake hath carried on, what Mr. Love hath approved of, and how far he hath consented and joined in the Design. My Lord, I shall say it again, if Titus and Drake be Traytors, as their own guilty Consciences have made themselves judge themselves so: he that flies, confesseth the Fact; my Lord, they are fled. My Lord, if they be Traytors, Mr. Love must be the same with them; for Mr. Love was carrying on, and hath agreed, and concurred, and approved of carrying on the Design that Titus and Drake have acted: Consenters and Agents are to have the same Punishments; in Treason there are no Accessaries. My Lord, the next Point is this; the next Act is that of the 17th of January, 1649. Having given you the Evidence, you will give me leave now shortly to repeat the Law. The first is, for promoting Charles Stuart, &c. That if any Person shall maliciously and advisedly plot, contrive and endeavour to stir up, or raise Forces against this present Parliament, and for the Subversion of the same, and shall declare it by any open Deed, &c.

My Lord, Mr. Love is pleased to express himself, That none can accuse him, nor none have sworn against him, that he hath raised any Seditions, any Insurrection, any Rebellions; my Lord, I cannot say it fully, whether he be guilty of that, or no: but this I will say (the Judgment I shall leave to the Court upon the Evidence heard) if Mr. Love be guilty of any thing moving or tending towards the raising of Forces, Seditions or Rebellions; though the thing be not done, yet, my Lord, it is Treason; those Practices, those Purposes are Treason by the Law, though they never come to Act. We shall not look, I hope, to see a Rebellion raised before we shall say it is Treason, and endeavour against it; but for that, how far he is guilty upon the Evidence of being instrumental of the War in Scotland, and to have endeavoured to have a Party got in England, my Lord, I shall leave it to your Judgment, upon the Evidence you have heard.

My Lord, there is likewise another in the same Law: If any Person procure, invite, agree, aid or assist any Foreigner or Stranger to invade England or Ireland, or adhere to any Forces raised by the Enemies of the Parliament, or Commonwealth, or Keepers of the Liberties of England; this is High Treason. For this you have heard the Evidence what Mr. Love hath done towards this; still upon the same foot of Account it is Treason, though but proposed and intended, though not acted. Then there is another Clause upon the Law that Mr. Love hath insisted upon, of constituting this Court. But for those former I have said, and you shall give me leave to repeat it again, That these Laws offended against, though in time before this this Court was conſtituted, yet this Court hath, in expreſs Words, Commiſſion and Authority given them by the Parliament, to take cognizance of all Facts and Offences done after that Law, though done before your Commiſſion; and that, my Lord, is not to be doubted, to be a very good and legal Authority. And yet for this the Law that conſtitutes this Court, of the 26th of March, 1650. That no Perſon after the 29th of March 1650, ſhall give or hold any Intelligence by Letters, Meſſages, or otherwiſe, with Charles Stuart, James Stuart, or the late Queen their Mother, or the Council abiding with any of them, prejudicial to the Commonwealth; or with any that ſhall be in Arms againſt the Parliament of England, or ſhall bring or ſend into England, Ireland, or any Dominions of this Commonwealth, Letters, Meſſages or Inſtructions, tending to raiſe Inſurrections, or a new War within this Nation, and ſhall not forthwith reveal the ſame to the Speaker of the Parliament, or to the Council of State, or two Members thereof, or to two Juſtices of Peace, ſhall be guilty of, &c. That is a Clauſe in the Law that conſtitutes this Court. And no Perſon ſhall voluntarily relieve any Perſon in Arms, or that ſhall be in Arms againſt the Parliament, with any Money, Victuals or Ammunition, on pain of Death, or other corporal Puniſhment. And whoſoever ſhall voluntarily take up Arms againſt the Parliament, and ſhall encourage others to do ſo, ſhall die without Mercy.

Theſe, my Lord, are Clauſes contained in the Act that conſtitutes this Court; and I read the Law before the Charge: and now, my Lord, I have repeated the Evidence faithfully, now let it be conſidered how far the Evidence goes with them. There are three Acts of Parliament, I ſuppoſe Mr. Love knew not of the next; for he ſays, he knew not of that of the 2d of Auguſt; but it was publiſhed ſolemnly at the Exchange, and at Weſtminſter-Hall: but Ignorance cannot excuſe him, that no Man will pretend. This, my Lord, is in relation to Scotland; it was made in Auguſt. The Battel at Dunbar, I cannot well tell whether it was in September or October; in September this Correſpondency from Bamfield, Argyle, Lowdon and Lothian, Belcarris, Maſſey and the reſt, were all ſince Dunbar-Fight; that is clear, they were ſince that time: The Words of the Law are theſe; 'Whoever, after 'the 5th of Auguſt, ſhall uſe, hold or maintain any 'Correſpondency or Intelligence with any of the 'Scots Nation reſiding in Scotland, without Licence 'from the Parliament, or with any other Perſon 'or Perſons of the Scotiſh or any other Nation, whom 'they know to adhere to the Scotiſh Nation a'gainſt the Parliament; or ſhall abet, aſſiſt, coun'tenance or incourage the Scotiſh Nation, or any 'other Perſon adhering to them in their War a'gainſt the Parliament and Commonwealth of Eng'land, or ſhall ſend, or cauſe to be ſent and con'veyed any Money, Horſe, Arms, Ammunition, 'or any other Furniture of Plate, Goods, Mer'chandize, or any Supply whatſoever, to the Scots, 'or to any Port or Place thereof, or in their Power, 'or in Confederacy againſt this Nation, theſe Facts 'are High Treaſon by this Law.' And the High Court of Juſtice is to take cognizance of the Contents by expreſs Proviſion of that Law.

My Lord, I ſhall not need to repeat the Evidence again; but upon theſe, my Lord, I muſt leave him to your Juſtice and Judgment to do what in your Conſciences you think is juſt upon theſe Laws, and what Mr. Love hath done in Tranſgreſſion againſt them.

My Lord, Mr. Love was pleaſed, at the Beginning of his Tryal, to make ſome deep Proteſtations; I think he did move all honeſt Men that heard him: and truly I did think, and did hope that they were not made with any relation to Equivocation, or mental Reſervation, but to a poſitive Denial of any Facts of Treaſon, or looking that way; that it had been made in that Senſe, that he had been clearly not guilty of any thing. But, my Lord, having looked upon them, and cauſed them to be tranſcribed to me, I do find that they are ſomewhat cautious, and perchance they may be true, my Lord, in the Senſe ſpoken by Mr. Love; but whether true in the Senſe they ſhould have been ſpoken by a Chriſtian in a publick Aſſembly, that I ſhall not judge. His firſt Proteſtation was, in the preſence of God and this Aſſembly, 'That I never wrote 'any Letter to the King, or to the Church, nor to 'the Queen, or Church and State of Scotland in ge'neral, or to any particular Perſon of the Scotch 'Nation, ſince the War began to this very 'day.'

My Lord, this may be true, but whether any Letter hath been ſent from the King, or from the Scotiſh Nation, or others, or by Maſſey, or the reſt, that ſhall be believed as the Evidence is.

Mr. Love. It is in my ſecond Proteſtation.

Attorn. Gen. 'Again (ſaith he) I do likewiſe de'clare in the preſence of the ſame God, I never re'ceived Letter written to me from the King, or 'from the Queen his Mother, or from the Church 'or State of Scotland in general, or any particular 'Perſon of the Scotiſh Nation ſince the War began. 'I proteſt and declare likewiſe in the preſence of 'the ſame God, I never collected, gave or lent Pen'ny of Money either to ſend into Scotland, or any 'foreign Parts, either to the King of Scots, or to 'the Queen his Mother, or to the Church or State 'of Scotland in general, or to any particular Per'ſon of the Scotiſh Nation, ſince the Wars began.' But that Mr. Love did not move others to contribute, we have not a word of that. Truly, I did think it when he ſpoke it: But it ſeems theſe Aſſeverations were ſtudied to evade, and that he would ſpeak true, but not the whole Truth. I have given them but a touch; theſe may be true, my Lord, but, under favour, there is ſomething elſe that is as true, and goes almoſt as near as this.

My Lord, Mr. Love the laſt day had your Patience and Juſtice to make a large Defence, and he was very large in it; and though he did beat us down, that are the Counſel for the Publick, that we ſhould not uſe Oratory nor Flouriſhes, nor Querks of Law, nor Niceties, in which I ſhall be guided by him, and ſhall not do it; yet he is pleaſed fully to make uſe of all Inſinuations to the Court to trip up every Witneſs upon Niceties, upon Not-expreſſion, upon Non-ſenſe, and ſuch, my Lord, which I ſhall not follow him in: for I ſhall deal as Truth ought to deal, in pure Nakedneſs and Simplicity, and not to uſe any Oratory, but to ſet the Matter of Fact before you, and leave it unto the Court, who are the Judges between the Commonwealth and himſelf for Life and Death. But, my Lord, you ſhall give me leave to touch upon ſome few things in the late Defence of his; it was divided into four Parts

The firſt, the Charge; the ſecond, the Witneſſes and Teſtimony, both in one. The Witneſſes for the Perſons, the Teſtimony for the Fact. The third, concerning himſelf; the fourth, ſome Propoſals to the Court; which truly, my Lord, might better have been termed rather Threatnings than Propoſals.

My Lord, for the Charge, you have heard it hath been gone through, and the Evidence concerning it. Concerning the Witneſſes, my Lord, I have read unto you (for I do take it upon my Conſcience) what I knew, and nothing but what was true: I have not varied, that I know of, a Syllable; and I think I ought not to do it; the Duty of my Place requires it not from me.

My Lord, concerning himſelf, he is pleaſed to ſay ſomething, and much of his Merit: But, my Lord, it is a Grief to this Court, to my ſelf, and all that are Well-wiſhers to the Publick, that any Man that hath been a Friend to the Parliament, that hath gone along with them, acted for them, ſuffered for them, done as he hath done, that this Man ſhould be called to publick Juſtice: I hope, my Lord, all that hear me bear witneſs, that I think, my Lord, we are all ſenſible of it.

But, my Lord, look upon who hath been the Cauſe of it; let that be look'd into, and every Man will be ſatisfied in his own Judgment and Conſcience, whether Mr. Love were provok'd, or no, or whether he hath not provoked the State to bring him to be thus exemplary in Juſtice. Mr. Love ſays, my Lord, (I ſhall deſire to make uſe of the Paper) I confeſs it is not ſo much the Danger of my Life; I am a fickly Man, and I know a Diſeaſe will e'er long kill me, whatſoever you do with me: But this grieves me more, That I ſhould ſuffer from your Hands, for whom I have done and ſuffered ſo much in my obſcure Station, and according to my weak Meaſure. Had I been ſo dealt with at Oxford, at the Junćto there! But to be ſo dealt withal in Weſtminſter-Hall, this troubles me. And, my Lord, it doth trouble me to deal ſo with him. My Lord, whether may we or himſelf take up this Complaint? Had the State been thus uſed by a Cavalier, by a profeſs'd open Enemy, it had not been ſo much Trouble to us; you would have come to Juſtice upon a little more Deſire than now: But that Mr. Love, a Miniſter, a Miniſter of the Goſpel, a Man that hath preached for us, prayed for us, acted with us, gone along with us; that he ſhould go to undermine us, that he ſhould be joined, or in Confederacy with others to undermine the State, where he did live peaceably and quietly, where none interrupted him: He had a free Liberty, as much as a King in this Commonwealth: Truly, that Mr. Love ſhould do this, it is (I think) an Aggravation, and not an Aggravation upon the Court or State, that they ſhould proſecute where a Man is proſecuting them. What he hath done, my Lord, you have heard; what his Offences have been, and who gave the Cauſe: That a Miniſter ſhould do this; one that had a Calling otherwhere, and better to imploy himſelf, than to meddle with States and ſecular Affairs: And theſe Things to be done in Mr. Love's Houſe, and in his Study, where he ſhould have been ſtudying better Things. My Lord, next he ſays, I could not leave ſuch Relations as I have, nor ſuch a loving People and competent Living, as any Miniſter hath within London, only Conſcience carried me another way; and till Conſcience be ſatisfied, I cannot ſtir one jot. My Lord, this his Conſcience, I do not know what it hath to do in Government, or what Mr. Love's Conſcience had to do in theſe Affairs: He had a Calling of his own to uſe; and ſhould I go out of my Calling, and meddle with other Men, I humbly conceive I were a Buſy-body. Mr. Love had a Calling enough for any one Man to imploy himſelf in; and, methinks, when he ſays he had ſuch a relation to a loving People, a Competency of Livelihood, that he ſhould not apply himſelf to return to them, but to wander abroad: And when we once wander, it is hard coming in again, till perchance we are fetch'd in again with the Whip. But, my Lord, Mr. Love had other Relations, of Wife and Children, which he might have look'd upon alſo, and taken care of them.

In the laſt place, he is pleaſed to ſay, (and that I believe hath carried on his Deſign) The Covenant-Intereſt. You have heard what Titus did, what Drake did, and what the reſt did; that all this, it was upon the Covenant; and the Covenant is urged, I am ſure, to Things the Parliament hath forbid. Mr. Love is pleaſed to declare himſelf ſtill to retain his old Principles, from which (by the Grace of God) he will not be taken off by any Terror. My Lord, you will hear by and by what the Covenant he ſuppoſes leads him to: And, my Lord, I ſhall take it aſunder, and bring it next, if you pleaſe, that is, the Covenant-Intereſt. Says Mr. Love, Though I own not the way of managing any Papers, I neither writ them, nor ſent them, yet thus far I own the Thing; I confeſs it was agreeable to my Judgment and Conſcience, and I thought the Intereſt of Godlineſs would be more promoted if the King went into Scotland upon Covenant-Terms; it would be more for the Good of the Nation.

Mr. Love. No, Sir, thoſe are not my Words: I ſaid, Than to fall in with the Iriſh Rebels, or to offer this Kingdom to the Spaniard. I thought a greater Foundation of Trouble would be laid, if this Reception were not laid by that Nation. And the Covenant hath a Clauſe in it, That we are to ſeek the Good and Union of both Nations; and they are judged to be Incendiaries and Malignants that not only divide the King from his People, but the Kingdoms one from another.

Now they declaring him to be their King, according to my Apprehenſion, I thought it agreeable to my Covenant to pray and deſire, as a private Man, and no more, that there might be an Agreement upon thoſe Terms, conſiſting with Religion, and the Terms of the Covenant.

Attorn. Gen. But had you gone on as a private Man, Mr. Love, we had not ſtir'd you now. My Lord, this is plain of it ſelf, what Intereſt this Covenant-Intereſt is, Till the King and the People in the two Nations, &c. Truly, my Lord, Mr. Love is pleaſed to expreſs himſelf ſomewhat obliquely againſt the preſent Government: He ſaith, my Lord, When I look upon all the Vows, Covenants, Declarations, Proteſtations, of both Houſes of Parliament, I find a Suitableneſs between my Judgment and them, and am not conſcious to my ſelf of any thing I have done in Oppoſition or Contradiction thereunto; I repent not of whatſoever I have done; though I could wiſh the Ends of that juſt War had been better accompliſhed: Then ſhould we have been happy, and united among our ſelves, and honoured among the Nations round about us. I am ſo far from repenting of what I have done, both by doing, and contributing, and ſuffering in the Parliament's Quarrel, that were it to be done again upon the ſame unqueſtionable Authority, for the ſame declared Ends, and againſt the ſame malignant Perſons, I ſhould manifeſt as much Readineſs of Mind to engage, according to my meaſure.

After this, where he had mentioned his Troubles at Oxford, when a Scholar there; and at London, when he came to a Lecture here; at Newcaſtle, when when he ſpake for the Parliament there; and in Kent, when he ſpake againſt the King there; when theſe were over, after this he had a little Breathing, whilſt the two Houſes of Parliament were in power. This Gentleman was troubled in the Time of the King, in the Time of the Biſhops, in the Time of theſe Wars, for being for the Parliament: But I appeal to his own Conſcience and Judgment, whether ever he was troubled or diſturbed by this Parliament, or by this Government of the Commonwealth; whether he had not as free and as full Liberty to preach the Goſpel, to inſtruct others, and to ſave Souls, as his Heart could wiſh; and I deſire to know whether ever the Parliament did interpoſe with him, till he did interpoſe with us. He went out of his Way, my Lord: He was quiet and ſafe, in as much Security as any of us; and, my Lord, even thoſe that were the Watchmen for the Safety of this Commonwealth, did watch and take as much Care even for his Preſervation, as for any one of ours: And thus he hath requited them. My Lord, I will repeat it: I appeal to his own Conſcience, and to any of his Friends here, whether ever, till his Judgment and Conſcience did interpoſe in State-Affairs, to diſpoſe of Kingdoms and Commonwealths, whether ever he were in the leaſt interrupted.

My Lord, he ſays himſelf, when he came to be a Lecturer in London, the Biſhop would not admit of him in three Years; yet, my Lord, he is admitted here three Years, and none hath interrupted him. And your ſelf ſay, you have a competent Livelihood, and a People very loving to you; and you might have ſo continued, if you would.

My Lord, his Propoſals to the Court, I do ſay, were hardly fair Propoſals; for they had a little of Threatning in them: For (ſays he) if you cenſure rather upon a political Intereſt, than of the Merit of the Fact, the Scripture counts it not Juſtice, but Murder. Truly, my Lord, I think Juſtice is a political Intereſt, the Preſervation of the general: But ſurely I do not think the Perſon will come in Judgment before you, but the Merit of his Fact; and as yet I may ſay, I ſuppoſe the Treaſons he hath committed, if thoſe find him guilty, if the Court finds him guilty of thoſe Facts laid to his Charge, and if you are ſatisfied in your Judgments that they are proved, my Lord, it is Juſtice, not Murder; and it is Juſtice that which political Intereſt requires of you, that Juſtice be done upon the Priſoner. And he is pleaſed to ſay in his laſt Defence, That he denied the Commiſſion to be ſent, and entitling the Preſbyterian Party to it: and he hath acknowledged it had been very high Preſumption if they ſhould have done it, and a notorious Falſhood. And in that I join with him; and whether he hath not done ſo, my Lord, that I ſhall leave to you. That the Presbyterian Name was made uſe of, you have had many concurrent Evidences; and Mr. Love was preſent when theſe Things were mentioned: And if it be a Fault, which himſelf hath acknowledged, it is Right done to the Presbyterian Party, who, I am ſure, will not own him in it.

My Lord, but a Word more: This laſt Day he was pleaſed to mention his Sermon; which made me a little to enquire after it: It was preached at Uxbridge, (my Lord, I had the Honour to be at the Treaty) which hath been ſo much ſpoken of; and truly I wonder this Gentleman did not remember what he ſaid then. If you pleaſe, my Lord, I ſhall put you in mind of ſome Paſſages: I have the Sermon here.

[Mr. Attorney-General reads out of the Book, which he ſaid was Mr. Love's Sermon.]

I have ever thought that too much Mercy towards Malignants hath made more Delinquents than ever Juſtice hath done. Mercy ſhould not weigh down Juſtice; (My Lord, theſe are good Inſtructions.) In God they are both equal; why ſhould it not be ſo in Man? Pity to the Bad, hath proved Cruelty to the Good: The ſparing of Offenders hath made many worſe; few or none better. (And, my Lord, we know it.) To them that have ſhewed no Mercy, let Judgment be ſhewed without Mercy: Much Guilt contracted, much innocent Blood ſpilt; which either muſt be avenged on us, or by us. My Lord, that is one of his Clauſes; and here is another: 2. The Lord heals a Land by cutting off thoſe diſtempered Members that indanger the Health of a Land. (Here is good Doctrine, my Lord.) It was the Lord troubled Achan, and cut him off, becauſe he troubled Iſrael. Oh, that in this our State-Phyſicians would reſemble God, to cut off thoſe from the Land who have diſtempered it; (I ſuppoſe he meant, or ſhall do.) That, my Lord, was his Opinion then. And thoſe who lie under the Guilt of much innocent Blood are not meet Perſons to be at peace with, till all the Guilt of Blood be expiated either by the Sword of the Law, or the Law of the Sword; and a Peace can never be ſafe nor juſt till then. What Mr. Love hath endeavoured ſince, my Lord, I ſhall ſay nothing. And I have but one Word more, and it is this; My Lord, he ſays it is not likely to have a Peace with ſuch Men as theſe, the Malignant Party, while they continue thus. We can as ſoon make Fire and Water agree, yea, I had almoſt ſaid, Heaven and Hell, as their Spirits and ours; for either they muſt grow better, or we worſe, before we can agree. My Lord, I think there is little hope of their growing better; and, my Lord, we have not grown worſe.

My Lord, I ſhall trouble you no further: I ſhall uſe nothing of Aggravation; but as Juſtice is blinded, to let the Evidence appear to you in pure Nakedneſs.

My Lord, you have heard the Evidence (as I humbly conceive) in the ſame Language, in the ſame Habit, in the ſame Words, as ſpoken by the Witneſſes: And, my Lord, having heard thoſe, and the Laws, and the Charge againſt him, upon the whole I ſhall humbly leave him to ſtand or fall by your Juſtice and Judgment.

Mr. Love. My Lord, I humbly crave leave to ſpeak but one Word: Mr. Attorney-General hath replied to my Defence, as to the Matter of Fact. Concerning his Reply I ſhall not inſiſt upon it; yet I ſhall humbly crave leave to inſiſt upon two Particulars. ——

Attorn. Gen. If I have given any new Evidence, Mr. Love ought to be heard: But, my Lord, I have declined it. And for thoſe Paſſages in his Sermon, I do not urge one Word of Evidence againſt him; and for the reſt, they are his own Words, which he hath ſaid the laſt Day: And I have brought nothing new before you. And if the Sermon preached at Uxbridge ſhould be an Occaſion, I ſhall caſt it aſide.

Mr. Love. I humbly conceive there are new Suggeſtions expreſſed in Court by thoſe worthy Gentlemen, whoſe Names I know not, nor their Employments neither. But as to thoſe I ſhall humbly crave leave in a Word or two; and then, as to the whole Matter of the Depoſitions, I ſhall humbly offer ſome Matter of Law, ariſing upon the whole Matter given in. ——

Attorn. Gen. I ſhall crave leave too, my Lord, and leave it to you: For any Suggeſtions, they are but Suggeſtions, as Mr. Love ſays himſelf; and that is nothing for the Evidence. Mr. Love, my Lord, had the laſt Day, and I ſhould have this. Had he ſaid he had any thing to ſay, or if he had had any thing more, he might have ſaid it; I did wait if he would have ſaid any thing: But, my Lord, when the whole was clos'd, and no new Evidence. I did not anſwer all the Suggeſtions of Mr. Love the laſt Day: His Evidence and Depoſitions will conclude the Court, that it is not Suggeſtions and Inſinuations; the Court are above theſe. When the Evidence is clos'd for the Commonwealth, let it be concluded there: If they offer any new Evidence, Mr. Love may have Liberty to anſwer.

Mr. Love. Though I dare not tax Mr. Attorney-General for diſcharging his Duty in his Place; yet for the Preſervation of my own Life, I muſt not be wanting to my ſelf, if your Lordſhip and the Court will give leave; and that is humbly to beſeech your Lordſhip to take notice that Mr. Attorney-General, in the Relation of the Matter of Fact in the Depoſitions, is pleaſed to raiſe the Correſpondency (as he is pleaſed to call it) as high as Jerſey; and ſo makes me to be Particeps criminis, that I ſhould be judged by you upon the whole Matter. Now Alford upon Oath did declare, That Drake and Titus held Correſpondency; and that the Miniſters knew nothing of it.

Attorn. Gen. I do not ſay you did.

Mr. Love. Therefore I beſeech you I may not be judged upon that Matter: And then I beſeech your Lordſhip to obſerve that Mr. Attorney-General is pleaſed to ſay he would not inſiſt upon Inferences, nor Strains of Wit; but truly I have diſcerned both.

Ld Preſident. You totally err from the Way you ought to walk in, and take upon you to judge others. The Court will conſider whether he hath offered any thing, or not: We have Notaries, and ſo have you. You ſpent the laſt Day only in making Comments and Collections; yet that you might have ſome Liberty of Diſcourſe, we ſat here patiently two Hours, and did hear that which we ought not, nor you ought to have ſpoken. And now you are entring the ſame way of Inferences and Collections, as though we did not ſit here to take notice of what was done, but we muſt receive the laſt Word from you and your Comment. If you had new Matter the laſt Time, you might have been heard: We expected you would have brought new Witneſſes; but they were in the ſame Crime with your ſelf; and you would rather betray your ſelf than them, and God and the Truth than them. But we will be as careful of any Comments as you your ſelf can be. And I think that we have ſo much Piety and Charity, that we ſit here with as good Affections of Juſtice and Piety, as are in your own Breaſt. This Book was not given as Evidence againſt you; and all that is in your Comments, we ſhall underſtand it.

Mr. Love. My Lord, I have only one Motion: I have ſome Matters in Law to offer to your Lordſhip, to conſider by way of Exception to the Charge, and alſo to the Depoſitions of the Witneſſes. I have a Paper that I humbly deſire might be read in Court as Matter in Law, ariſing from the Charge, and from the Depoſitions of the Witneſſes.

Attorn. Gen. Why did you not this before?

Mr. Love. I am ignorant of the Cuſtoms of the Court.

Ld Preſident. I believe you have wronged your own Breaſt in many Things you have ſaid; and you have ſaid you have been ignorant in many Things that you have known very well: It is not good to dally. You will be ignorant at one time, and at another time more knowing than others.

Mr. Love. I beſeech your Lordſhip, it is a new Suggeſtion of the Attorney-General, That Concealment of Treaſon for a Tract of Time is Treaſon.

Ld Preſident. There is no new Words of Suggeſtion: If Mr. Attorney hath not ſpoken it, nor read it according to the Truth, we will examine it.

Mr. Love. He hath done it with diſadvantage to me.

Ld Preſident. If he have, he ſhall not do it with diſadvantage to us; for we will be as indifferent as your own Breaſt: Therefore be not you a Commentator of that. We underſtand ſo well as God enlightens; for whether he hath done it with advantage or diſadvantage, that is our part to conſider.

Mr. Love. I deſire to have Counſel upon this Matter of Law ariſing from the Evidence, That Concealment of Treaſon, by your Acts, ſuppoſe it be for Continuance or Tract of Time, yet by the Law it is not Treaſon. And my Counſel informs me, That the Act of the 26th of March, that conſtitutes this Court, gave you Power to inquire into Treaſon, but could not take Cognizance of Miſpriſion of Treaſon till there was a ſubſequent Act. Therefore I deſire this Favour, That ſeeing it is ſo much ſuggeſted in Court, and ſeeing the Witneſſes none can prove a perſonal Act of mine, to bring me under your Law, as to Treaſon, I deſire my Counſel to clear this, That Concealment of Treaſon, though for never ſo long a Tract of Time, is not Treaſon by the Law of the Land.

Attorn. Gen. I will out Mr. Love of that Scruple: He is not charged for Miſpriſion of Treaſon, tho I could have done it; but that I inſiſt upon, is flat Treaſon. It is true, Sir Thomas Witherington was pleaſed to expreſs it in the way of Argument, That Concealment of Treaſon long, comes to be Treaſon: But here are Acts, and I inſiſt upon the Evidence; and the Court will judge, for they have heard the Evidence.

Mr. Love. I beſeech your Lordſhip that the Paper might be read, the Exceptions that I have againſt the Indictment, and the Matters of Law ariſing from the Evidence.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, truly I profeſs, I hope I am not in my Nature cruel, that I ſhould do Injury to Mr. Love: But, my Lord, I cannot favour him, to do Injury to the Law of the Nation. My Lord, he hath one by him that hath taken every Word of the Charge.

Mr. Love. I did plead upon your Lordſhip's Promiſe that I ſhould have a fair and indifferent Hearing; and if Matter of Law did ariſe from Matter of Fact, which could not, you ſaid, be known till the Witneſſes were depoſed, I had your Lordſhip's Promiſe, and I think the Court's, that I ſhould have Counſel to plead to Matter of Law.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, I think here is no Legiſlative Power in this Court to change Laws. My Lord, I appeal to all here, whether the Evidence we gave were not cloſed upon Saturday, and all the Depoſitions; whether Mr. Love did not take Care and Pains to make his own Defence, as to Matter of Fact, and ſpent ſo many Hours on Wedneſday laſt. My Lord, he had all before that; if he had Matter of Law, it was more proper to move then:

But

But when he hath gone ſo far, and we have cloſed all, do but conſider the Conſequence, that when this is done, and all the Evidences heard, then to come with Matter of Law.

Ld Preſident. Mr. Love, that you have ſaid hitherto, is nothing but of the ſame Nature of that you ſaid the laſt Day; and the Court will take it into Conſideration, and judge of it: But if you have any thing in your Paper that is ſo included upon the Evidence; for I tell you the Evidence was ended the laſt Day, and your Reply; and if you had any thing, you ſhould have offered it the laſt Day. Here hath been nothing new offered concerning you, but as it is uſual for the Counſel for the State to ſtate the Matter of Fact to the Court; for they have the laſt Word: But you had fully ended before; and ſhall we go out of the Way for you, more than for a whole Generation which the Law runs unto? I do not know how to do it: You had this Paper in your Pocket; you might have pulled it out; and you have had Time in a nearer degree to it: Yet the Court is willing, if you can out of your Paper, by Adviſe of Counſel, ſhortly read what you read upon for Matter of Law, they will hear it, if ſuch Exceptions as are not of your own, but by the Advice of Counſel.

[Mr. Love gives in his Exceptions.]

Exceptions taken by Chriſtopher Love, Clerk, to the Charge of High Treaſon, and other High Crimes and Offences, exhibited to the High Court of Juſtice againſt him by Edmond Prideaux Eſq; Attorney-General for the Commonwealth of England.

[Theſe Exceptions are not here printed, for that they come in more properly afterward; being again in Subſtance given into the Court, and ſigned by Mr. Love's Counſel, and the Subſtance of them then debated in Court by Mr. Hale, a Counſel for Mr. Love.]

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, you have now ſome Fruits of the Notary. By the Law of England, he that is impeached of High Treaſon, is not to have the Copy of the Indictment: It is ſaid the Court are Judges for the Priſoner, and Counſel for him. To you all Things be ſubſtantially charged. That there is a ſubſtantial Charge, the Evidence makes out. But this Precedent being admitted, and the former of Lilburne's cited, I ſhall have little Encouragement to go on with any Charge of Indictments.

Ld Preſident. Though it be more than the Law permits, yet the Court will take Conſideration of it.

Attorn. Gen. He did read his Papers: I think it is more than ever was heard of in any Court in the World. But to take his Papers in by your Clerk; I hope this is no Replication to the Charge: I hope he anſwers not that way; then we ſhall diſpute that way again. If he gives Papers, I may; and, as Ambaſſadors, treat by Papers.

Ld Preſident. Mr. Love, we have gone out of our Way for you: And whatever hath been ſuggeſted by the Counſel this Day is nothing, unleſs they had offered new Matter; and they have offered none; and therefore it is againſt any Law that was ever yet practiſed in England. You were concluded before, though haply the neglecting of it might have been a Prejudice to you: Yet you have offered a Paper, which the Court will take as a Paper to conſider of.

[The Court adjourns into the Painted Chamber: And upon their Return, the Lord Preſident ſpeaks.]

Ld Preſident. Mr. Love, our long Abſence upon this account may ſeem to you and others, that we have had ſomething of great difficulty among us, which we have conſidered of. That which hath been upon your Papers laſt offered, in which you have ſet down the Parts of the Charge, and the Statutes, and your Exceptions; theſe we have conſidered of. But to theſe, though you do affirm it here to us, that it is by Advice of your Counſel, yet it is not under your Counſel's Hand, nor your own, which in order it ſhould be. We have conſidered of them; and our examining of them hath taken up a great deal of this Time we have been abſent. We find that there may haply be ſome Miſtakes in your Notes: Therefore it is reſolved, though there ſeem not much Difficulty to us, yet you ſhall have Counſel, thus doing, That they ſhall ſet it down under their Hands, what Matter of Law they will argue to, and bring it under their Hands upon Tueſday next at Eight a-clock to this Place, or to the Painted Chamber.

Mr. Love. Shall the Counſel have only bare Liberty, or will the Court aſſign them me?

Ld Preſident. If you deſire it, and name them, they ſhall be aſſigned you.

Mr. Love. I deſire Mr. Maynard, Mr. Hale, Mr. Waller, and Mr. Archer.

[The Clerk was called upon to read the Order.]

Clerk. 'Friday, the 27th of June, 1651. Ordered by the High Court of Juſtice, That if the Priſoner's Counſel ſhall under their Hands aſſign any Matters of Law, fit to be argued and preſented to this Court, on Tueſday next at Eight a-clock in the Morning, this Court will take the ſame into further Conſideration.'

Mr. Love. I would know whether they are aſſigned to plead here in Court, or to bring a Paper under their Hands.

Ld Preſident. If they will, under their Hands, ſet down what they will ſtand to for Law, it ſhall be conſidered, and they ſhall plead.

Mr. Love. I humbly thank your Lordſhip's Favour, and the Favour of the Court.

[Mr. Love is commanded away. The Court adjourns.]

The Fifth Day's Proceedings, July the 1ſt, 1651.

THESE Exceptions following ſigned by Mr. Love's Counſel, were delivered this Morning by Mr. Love's Sollicitor into the Court, ſitting in the Painted Chamber.

Exceptions

Exceptions to the Charge of High Treaſon, and other High Crimes and Offences, exhibited to the High Court of Juſtice, by Edmond Prideaux Eſq; Attorney-General for the Commonwealth of England, againſt Chriſtopher Love Clerk; and Matter of Law, humbly preſented to the ſaid High Court, according to the Direction of an Order hereunto annexed.

[For this Order, ſee the foregoing Page.]

Firſt, THE Charge is, 'That Chriſtopher Love, 'as a falſe Traytor and Enemy to the 'Commonwealth of England, and out of a traitorous and wicked Deſign to ſtir up a new and 'bloody War, and to raiſe Inſurrections, Sedition, and Rebellion within this Nation, in ſeveral 'Days and Times, that is to ſay, in the Years of 'our Lord God 1648, 1649, 1650, 1651, at London, and in divers other Places within this Commonwealth of England, and elſewhere, together 'with William Drake, and divers other Perſons, 'did traitorouſly combine, confederate, and complot together, to ſtir and raiſe Forces againſt 'the preſent Government of this Nation, ſince 'the ſame hath been ſettled in a Commonwealth 'and Free State, without a King and Houſe of 'Lords, and for the Subverſion and Alteration of 'the ſame.'

The Act of the 17th of July, 1649, is, That if any Perſon ſhall maliciouſly or adviſedly plot, contrive, or endeavour to raiſe Forces againſt the preſent Government, or for the Subverſion or Alteration of the ſame, and ſhall declare the ſame by open Deed, that every ſuch Offence ſhall be Treaſon.

Exception 1. The Words Maliciouſly or Adviſedly are left out of the Charge.

2. That the Words of the Act are omitted, which are, Plot, Contrive, or Endeavour.

3. It is not Treaſon within the Act to plot, contrive, or endeavour to ſtir up or raiſe Forces againſt the preſent Government, or for the Subverſion or Alteration of the ſame, unleſs the ſame be declared by ſome open Deed. But the Charge is, 'That 'Chriſtopher Love did combine, confederate, and 'complot, to ſtir and raiſe up Forces againſt the 'preſent Government, &c.' And it is not charg'd that he the ſaid Chriſtopher Love did declare the ſame by any open Deed.

Secondly, Whereas the ſaid Chriſtopher Love is by the ſaid Articles charged, 'That for the Sub'verſion and Alteration of the ſame, and to car'ry on the ſaid traitorous Deſign, that he did trai'torouſly and maliciouſly declare, publiſh, and pro'mote the eldeſt Son of the late King to be King 'of England, (meaning this Commonwealth) with'out the Conſent of the People in Parliament firſt 'had, and ſignified by Authority or Ordinance to 'that purpoſe.'

The Act of the 30th of January, 1648, is, That no Perſon do preſume to proclaim, publiſh, or any way promote Charles Stuart, Son of the late King Charles, commonly called the Prince of Wales, or any other Perſon, to be King or Chief Magiſtrate of England, by colour of Inheritance, Succeſſion, Election, or any other Claim whatſoever.

Exception. It is not expreſly charged that the ſame was done after the ſaid Act made; neither doth the Charge purſue the Words or Intent of the Act.

Thirdly, The Charge is, 'That to accompliſh 'the ſaid traitorous and wicked Deſign, the ſaid 'Chriſtopher Love, on ſeveral Days and Times in the 'Years aforeſaid, at London, &c. together with 'William Drake, and other Perſons, did traitorouſ'ly and maliciouſly invite, aid, and aſſiſt the Scots, 'being Strangers, to invade this Commonwealth 'of England, and hath adhered to the Forces of 'the Enemies, raiſed againſt the Parliament.'

The Act of the 17th of July, 1649, is, That if any Perſon ſhall procure, invite, aid, or aſſiſt any Foreigners or Strangers, to invade England or Ireland, or ſhall adhere to any Forces raiſed by the Enemies of the Parliament or Commonwealth, or Keepers of the Liberties of England, every ſuch Offence ſhall be taken to be Treaſon.

Exception 1. That it is not alledged in his Charge who in particular were the Strangers that were invited to invade England.

2. That it is not alledged that at the Times of the Invitement, Aid, and Aſſiſtance, laid in the Charge, the Scots were Strangers.

3. That it is not alledged particularly in the Charge, to the Forces of what Enemies, raiſed againſt the Parliament, Chriſtopher Love did adhere.

4. It chargeth the Priſoner for a treaſonable Aſſiſtance in ſome Years that were before the ſaid Act of the 17th of July, 1649, was made.

5. To advance the ſaid traitorous and wicked Deſign, is uncertain to what Deſign it ſhall have reference, ſeveral Charges of Treaſon being before expreſſed,

Fourthly, The Charge is, 'That Chriſtopher Love, 'divers Days and Times between the 29th of 'March, 1650, and the 1ſt Day of June, 1651, at 'London, &c. did traitorouſly and maliciouſly give, 'hold, uſe, and maintain Correſpondency and In'telligence by Letters, Meſſages, Inſtructions, or 'otherwiſe, prejudicial to this Commonwealth, 'with Charles Stuart, Son of the late King, with 'the late Queen his Mother, and with Henry Jermin, Henry Piercy, and divers other Perſons, be'ing of Counſel, and abiding with Charles Stuart.'

By the Act of the 26th March, 1650, the Matters charged herein are only prohibited, but are not made Treaſon.

Exception 1. That this Charge is miſlaid, being charged to be done traitorouſly.

2. The Charge is uncertain, being alledged in the Disjunctive (or otherwiſe) and ſhews not in what other manner.

Fifthly, The Charge is, 'That Chriſtopher Love, 'within the Times and at the Places aforeſaid, 'did traitorouſly and maliciouſly uſe, hold and 'maintain Correſpondency and Intelligence with 'divers Perſons of the Scotiſh Nation; that is to 'ſay, with the Earl of Argyle, and others of the 'Scotiſh Nation, and with divers other Perſons of 'other Nations, whom Chriſtopher Love well knew 'to adhere to the ſaid Scotiſh Nation in the War 'againſt the Parliament.'

The Act of the 2d of Auguſt 1650, is, That all and every Perſon that ſhall uſe, hold or maintain any Correſpondency or Intelligence with any Perſon ſon or Perſons of the Scotiſh Nation, reſiding in Scotland, without the Licence of the Parliament, the Council of State, or the Lord General; or with any Perſon or Perſons of the Scotiſh, or any other Nation, whom they ſhall know to adhere to the Scotiſh Nation in this War againſt the Parliament.

Except. 1. That it is not laid, that the Perſons of the Scotiſh Nation mentioned in the Charge were reſiding in Scotland, nor expreſly alledged that they did adhere.

2. That it is not aver'd, that ſuch Correſpondency was holden without the Licence of Parliament, Council of State, or the Lord General, nor in what War the Correſpondence or Intelligence was held.

3. It is not laid, with what particular Perſons of any other Nation adhering to the Scotiſh Nation, Correſpondency or Intelligence was holden, nor of what Nations.

4. This Correſpondency and Intelligence is not laid to be after the fifth of Auguſt 1650, mentioned in the ſaid Act of the 2d of Auguſt 1650, but refers to a time preceding that Act.

Sixthly, The Charge is, 'That Chriſtopher Love, 'within the Times and at the Places before-mentioned, did traitorouſly and maliciouſly abet, 'aſſiſt, countenance and encourage both the Scotiſh 'Nation, and divers other Perſons adhering to 'them in this War againſt the Parliament. And 'did ſend and convey, or cauſe to be ſent and 'conveyed, Moneys, Arms, Ammunition, and 'other Supplies to Scotland and other places, and 'to the ſaid Titus, &c. in Confederacy againſt 'this Nation, without Licence of the Parliament 'of England, or Council of State, or General of 'the Army.'

The Act of the 2d of Auguſt 1650, is, That no Perſon that ſhall abet, aſſiſt, countenance or encourage the Scotiſh Nation, or any other Perſon or Perſons adhering to them in their War againſt the Parliament and Commonwealth of England; or ſhall go, or ſend, or cauſe to be ſent, &c. any Money, Horſe, Arms, Ammunition, or other Supplies into Scotland, &c. or to any Perſon under their Power, or in Confederacy with them againſt this Nation, without the Licence of the Parliament of England, Council of State appointed by their Authority, and of the Captain-General of the Parliament's Forces as aforeſaid.

Except. 1. That there are no particular Perſons named, who were abetted, aſſiſted, countenanced, or encouraged, neither of the Scotiſh Nation, nor of any other Perſons adhering to them.

2. In the Charge, the ſending of Money, &c. is laid to be done without the Licence of the Parliament of England, or of the Council of State, or General of the Army.

The words of the Act are, 'Without the Li-'cence of the Parliament of England, or Council 'of State appointed by their Authority, or of the 'Captain-General of the Parliament's Forces.'

3. The Time to which this refers, is between the 29th of March 1650, and the 1ſt of June 1651; and ſo it takes in the time between the 29th of March 1650, and the 2d of Auguſt 1650. which is before the making of the Act.

Seventhly, The Charge is, 'That the ſaid Chriſ-'topher Love, at the Times and Places before men-'tioned, did traitorouſly and voluntarily relieve 'the ſaid Sylas Titus, and one Sterks a Scotchman, 'which then were, and yet are, under the power 'of the Scotiſh Nation, and in Arms againſt the 'Parliament of England, with Moneys, Arms, and 'Ammunition.'

By the Act of the 26th of March 1650, the Matters charged herein are only prohibited, but not made Treaſon.

Except. 1. That this Charge is miſlaid, being charged to be done traitorouſly.

2. It is laid to be at the Times before mentioned, whereas there are ſeveral Times before mentioned; ſo as it is uncertain to which of thoſe Times this Charge relates.

3. And of theſe Times, ſundry of them are laid to be in ſeveral Years before the making of the Act upon which this Charge is grounded.

Allegations by Chriſtopher Love, touching the Matters and Proof upon the Charge.

THO I do not conceive any ſufficient Proof is made of the Charges againſt me, yet I ſhall be ready to make it appear upon Proof:

That one of the principal Witneſſes hath depoſed againſt me upon Promiſe of Reward, and upon Menace of Puniſhment.

That one hath received extraordinary Rewards for his depoſing.

That divers of the Witneſſes againſt me have been by their own Confeſſion detected of contributing of Supplies and Aſſiſtance, ſending and receiving Letters, contrary to the late Acts.

That no two lawful Witneſſes produced prove any one Treaſonable Fact.

That no Witneſs doth depoſe farther than Concealment, or Miſpriſion of Treaſon at the moſt.

Chriſtopher Love.

AS this Caſe is ſtated, we conceive theſe Queſtions may ariſe:

1. Whether in this Caſe theſe be lawful and ſufficient Witneſſes, as by Law is required?

2. Whether here be two lawful Witneſſes?

3. Whether any Concealment of Treaſon be Treaſon within the late Acts?

We have not ſeen any Authentical Copies of the Charge or Evidence; but upon the Copies we have ſeen, we humbly conceive fit to tender theſe Matters and Exceptions to the Conſideration of this High Court. And we ſhall be ready to ſpeak to them, or any of them, or to any other Matters ariſing upon the Caſe, as we ſhall receive further Directions.

Matthew Hale.
John Archer.
Thomas Waller.

After the Court had received the precedent Exceptions, and were ſat in Weſtminſter-Hall, Mr. Love was commanded to the Bar.

When Mr. Love appeared at the Bar, he deſired the Court that his Counſel might be heard to theſe Exceptions. And when Mr. Archer and Mr. Waller, who were of his Counſel, appeared in Court, the Court demanded of them, whether they were of Mr. Love's Counſel? they anſwered, they did underſtand they were aſſigned to be of his Counſel by the Court. Then the Attorney-General demanded of them, whether or no they had ſubſcribed the Engagement? they anſwered, they had not done it; and ſpake further to this purpoſe, That they were by the Court aſſigned to be be of Mr. Love's Counſel, and were ſent for into the Court, and in obedience thereunto they had appeared, and were ready to ſpeak, if they might be heard. It was demanded of them by the Court, whether or no they would ſubſcribe the Engagement? they anſwered, That they deſired time to conſider of it: and ſo withdrew.

After they had withdrawn, Mr. Love moved the Court that Mr. Hale, another of his Counſel, might be ſent for.

[Upon the coming in of Mr. Hale, the Lord Preſident ſaid;]

Ld Preſident. You come as Counſel for Mr. Love; the Gentlemen that were here, are brought into an Incapacity of doing him ſervice that way; we ask'd them whether they have engaged: we doubt not you, but tell you the reaſon why we did it.

Mr. Hale. My Lord, I have done it.

Ld Preſident. Therefore you are aſſigned.

Mr. Hale. I had very late notice of this Buſineſs, it was Saturday Night late before I had notice of it, and the next day was not a day to think of thoſe things. Yeſterday was Monday, and the moſt part of that day I ſpent in looking over thoſe things that had been, I think, preſented to your Lordſhip and the Court; we did not know what Command your Lordſhip would put upon us, whether you would admit us to ſpeak, and to what you would admit us to ſpeak, and when you would admit us to ſpeak. It is impoſſible, (my Lord) I muſt deal plainly, I profeſs it is impoſſible for me, in a Buſineſs of this great conſequence, to undertake to ſpeak any thing for the preſent, till ſuch time as I know your Lordſhip's Directions; and this was that we acquainted this Gentleman with, as ſoon as ever I ſaw him, and the firſt time that ever I ſaw him, which was but this day.

Attorn. Gen. I think that Mr. Hale hath put ſomewhat under his Hand.

Mr. Hale. We have done ſo.

Attorn. Gen. Nay, you muſt ſtand ſingle, the other two are ſet aſide, it muſt be you only; I ſuppoſe Mr. Hale knows what he is to ſpeak to.

Mr. Hale. Truly we know what we are to ſpeak to; but to ſpeak upon ſuch a Buſineſs on ſuch a ſudden, when we did not know what Directions the Court would give, that I could not undertake, and I think Mr. Attorney-General will not preſs it upon us, it were a hard caſe if he ſhould.

Attorn. Gen. Mr. Hale knows as well as any Man what is to be done in theſe Caſes, none better than himſelf; the Court uſeth not to aſſign Counſel to pick Flaws, but thoſe that are juſt Exceptions: and the Court is doubtful too, how they will allow Counſel to debate them, and ſtand to the Judgment of the Court. I ſuppoſe he comes to ſpeak to that that the Party hath alledged.

Mr. Hale. It is true, we do ſo: but Mr. Attorney-General knows likewiſe, that when Matters of Law are aſſigned, that there is ſome reaſonable time, we expect not long, but ſome reaſonable time is aſſigned alſo for the Parties to prepare themſelves; for truly otherwiſe I ſhould not do that Duty I owe to the Court and my Client, if I ſhould ſpeak ex improviſo, in ſuch a manner as I have done: for the firſt time I ſaw any thing of it, was on Saturday Night, between Eight and Nine of the clock.

Ld Preſident. Tho that was the firſt ſight of this Paper, as it is now ſet down, it was not the firſt notice you had to be of his Counſel, but himſelf hath declared it here long ago, that the former Paper was by your Advice.

Mr. Hale. No, my Lord, if he did ſo, I will plead Not Guilty.

Ld Preſident. I will not ſay your Name, but when he gave us in his Paper, before this, the laſt day, you ſaid it was the Advice of your Counſel.

Mr. Love. Not Mr. Hale.

Ld Preſident. Then haply we ſhall eaſe you a a great deal: that that is under your Hand, is very ſhort, and we ſhall eaſe you of ſome of that too; and you know that upon all Aſſignments in the Upper Bench and Common Law, when they firſt open it, they ſhow ſome Cauſes upon which they will argue it; and when you have had time already, now ſhew ſomething that may be worthy of it, and we will conſider of it.

Attorn. Gen. Before he ſpeak, my Lord, I deſire that he will give it under his Hand poſitively, not Queries, but poſitive, that this in his Judgment he thinks fit to be Matter of Law, and to be argued.

Mr. Hale. My Lord, we think that theſe things are ſuch.

Ld Preſident. Then you muſt upon the firſt ſight open it ſo far, that it may be your Judgment.

Attorn. Gen. But not ſuffer it to be debated unleſs you think it doubtful.

Mr. Hale. We are here aſſigned Counſel for him, and if your Lordſhip will pleaſe to give us that time that may be convenient for us to do our Duty for him; if not, we ſhall do but your Lordſhip wrong, and our Client wrong if we ſhould ſpeak.

Ld Preſident. You may have ſome convenient time, but you muſt open it now, that we may judge what time is proportionable; if you will not open it, that this is the Point you will argue upon, we can ſay nothing.

Mr. Hale. Then the reading of that which we have exhibited to the Court, will be as much as poſſibly I ſhall be able to do at this time, for we have had no Copy of the Charge.

Ld Preſident. Nor muſt have.

Mr. Hale. And we have taken a Copy at random, according as it hath been offered to us by thoſe that have taken Notes, and we have preſented upon thoſe Notes, and we have applied ourſelves to Mr. Attorney for a Copy of the Charge, and he conceived that it was not fit for him to do it without Direction of the Court; but for a Copy of the Charge when Exceptions are taken, it is uſual to have it granted: and for us to ſpeak and ſpend your Lordſhip's time upon Matters that are contained in a Charge, whereof for my own part I never heard, and which is uſual upon Exceptions offered to be granted, it would be very——

Ld Preſident. It is an excellent thing to ſpeak to Men of Underſtanding: Did you ever know an Indictment in this nature, a Copy of it delivered upon the Priſoner's Prayer?

Mr. Hale. Yes, I have known it very often.

Ld Preſident. He ſhall, as his Memory ſerves him, ſpeak to the Subſtance; but to have a Copy of the Charge, I take it, you have not known.

Mr. Hale. Thus far I have known it, I have been commanded to be of Counſel with Perſons that have been impeached of Treaſon by the Parliament; I know that the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, when he was impeached of Treaſon, had a Copy of his Charge, that I know he had: I know this is the uſual Courſe, that if a Perſon takes Exceptions to a Matter contained in an Indictment, tho it is true, he ſhall not have the Copy of the whole Indictment, yet he ſhall have a Copy of ſo much whereupon his Exception grows; that hath been done, and will not be denied: but for the other matter, I know that in the Archbiſhop of Canterbury's Caſe there was a Copy of the whole Charge granted, and the like was done in the Caſe of the Lord Strafford.

Attorn. Gen. I ſhall give that Anſwer a little more than I did: Parliamentary Proceedings are no Rule for other Courts to walk by; beſides, my Lord, you ſit here upon a known publiſhed Law, and the Offence charged is againſt thoſe Laws. I believe Mr. Hale well remembers, that both my Lord of Strafford's Caſe, and the Archbiſhop of Canterbury's Caſe, were both of them for many ſeveral Facts ſeveral times a long time committed; which ſeveral Facts being judged by Parliament, were judged to be Treaſon not againſt any ſettled poſitive Law: And for Strafford's Caſe, you know how the Judgment at laſt was given by Act of Parliament, King, Lords and Commons. And for the Archbiſhop of Canterbury's Caſe, you know what the ſeveral Complaints againſt him were, many of them not Treaſon, but ſo many of them together, that in Parliament they thought fit to judge him guilty of Treaſon; but thoſe Privileges are not to be paralel'd, he knows very well it was not againſt ſuch and ſuch, and ſuch a Law, to make thoſe Offences Treaſon. Having given thus much Favour, I may ſay, to the Priſoner, that he may by Memory exhibit his Exceptions, he hath done it, if you judge that thoſe Exceptions are worth the debating, be worthy of it, you may (as Mr. Hale ſaith) give directions for ſo much to be given him, otherwiſe (for my part) I did never give it unto any; but thoſe that have been in my place before, did never give it but by immediate Warrant from the King, or the Parliament now, but for ſo much as the Court thinks fit, for ſo much as concerns the Exceptions.

Sir Tho. Witherington. For that that Mr. Hale objects to the Indictment, it ſtands with a great deal of Juſtice; for if a Priſoner lays hold of part of an Indictment, and ſay there is a Miſtake in it, there is reaſon it ſhould be ſo, becauſe the Court muſt judge it whether it be ſo or not, therefore there is neceſſity of it that there ſhould be a Copy of ſo much; but I think he never knew that all the Indictment was, but that part, and that is of neceſſity for the Court, that they may ſee whether the Exceptions accord with the Indictment, or no: if there be any Exception to an Indictment, if that Exception remains not as a Doubt or Queſtion, there ſhall be no Copy of ſo much of the Indictment given. If he ſhall raiſe a Doubt that there is any Doubt in Law, or any Queſtion and Variance between the Acts and the Charge, if he ſhall raiſe any ſuch Doubt, then I think according to the old Law he may have that part of the Charge; but we deſire he may raiſe ſome Doubt to the Court.

Mr. Hale. My Lord, we have raiſed the Doubts, and we are ready to deliver in thoſe that we conceive to be Exceptions to the Charge; if we be over-ruled in them, we have no more to ſay: but if your Lordſhip, upon the view of theſe things we have offered, think them worthy to be ſpoken to before your Lordſhip, then ſurely that is agreeable with that very Rule which the Council of the State is pleaſed to ſtate; that is, that in caſe we alledge that which the Court ſhall think fit for us to debate before them, that then we may have that whereby it may appear whether we debate upon that which is, or is not.

Attorn. Gen. Mr. Hale ſaith he hath given them in, but I have ſeen none of them, my Lord.

Ld Preſident. Whether their Memory be perfect or imperfect, that we ſhall help you withal; and then I will tell you what you were beſt do, for Time goes away: we will, before you take it, take the ſeveral Statutes and the Charge, and your Exceptions, and compare them all together before you, and you ſhall except to every one as you go.

Attorn. Gen. I deſire the Exceptions may ſtand as they are.

Ld Preſident. Ay, but he ſhall ſee whether there be any material Variance between the Notary and the Charge.

Attorn. Gen. That Notary was upon favour too, Mr. Love will acknowledge it.

Mr. Love. I do with all Thankfulneſs acknowledge it, my Lord.

Attorn. Gen. I deſire it may be no Precedent for After-Times.

The Clerk. If you pleaſe, read your Exceptions.

Mr. Hale. My Lord, we begin with the firſt, and theſe are the Exceptions: We take it, that Charge is grounded upon the Act of the 17th of July 1649, and we take ſome Exceptions to that firſt part of the Charge; that is, concerning what Offences ſhall be adjudged Treaſon.

Ld Preſident. Read your Exceptions, and then you ſhall hear the Charge.

Mr. Hale. Our Exceptions are theſe; firſt, That whereas the Words of the Act are, 'That if any 'Perſon ſhall maliciouſly and adviſedly plot, con-'trive, or endeavour to ſtir up, or raiſe Forces 'againſt the preſent Government, or for the Sub-'verſion or Alteration of it;' that the words maliciouſly or adviſedly are left out of the Charge, which we conceive are material Words.

Attorn. Gen. Read.

Mr. Barnard the Clerk. That he the ſaid Chriſtopher Love, as a falſe Traytor and Enemy to this Commonwealth and Free State of England, and out of a traitorous and wicked Deſign to ſtir up a new and bloody War, and to raiſe Inſurrections, Seditions, and Rebellions within this Nation, did ſeveral Days and Times in the ſeveral Years of our Lord 1648, 1649, 1650, 1651, at London, and in divers other Places within this Commonwealth of England, and elſewhere; together with William Drake late of London Mercer, Henry Jermin late of London Eſquire, Henry Piercy late of London Eſquire, Richard Graves late of London Eſquire, Edward Maſſey late of London Eſquire, John Gibbon late of London Gentleman, &c. and other their Complices yet unknown, did traitorouſly and maliciouſly combine and confederate themſelves together, and plot, contrive, and endeavour.

Attorn. Gen. What ſay you, Mr. Hale?

Mr. Hale. Now we find what the Inconvenience is, of coming to put in our Exceptions, when we have not a clear Copy of the Charge; and that was the cauſe why we did ſubjoin this, that in caſe any Miſtake ariſe by miſtake of the Copies, that we may amend: it is true, we find maliciouſly is in.

Attorn. Gen. Traitorouſly will be enough.

Mr. Hale. I think not, that is over; for if it be maliciouſly alledged, that is over. Then the next thing we except to, is, he traitorouſly combined, confederated, and complotted together: it is true, there is Plot in it, but there wants the words contrive and endeavour, but that is not the principal matter we ſtand upon.

The Clerk. They are in.

Mr. Hale. Then that is anſwered too. The next Exception that we take to the Charge, is, That the Act upon which this part of the Charge is grounded, ſays, that he muſt manifeſt it by an Overt-Act, by an open Deed: now we ſay, there is (as we conceive) nothing charged upon him in purſuance of this Act, that is, there is no overt or open Deed laid in the Charge; for the words of the Act are ſo, That if any Man ſhall maliciouſly plot, contrive, and endeavour to ſtir up, or raiſe Forces againſt the preſent Government, and ſhall declare the ſame by open Deed, that then every ſuch Offence ſhall be Treaſon.

Attorn. Gen. If Mr. Hale hath read the Copy of the Charge as it was taken, I think he finds divers of them in the Charge of open Acts.

Mr. Hale. The Buſineſs is not, whether there be open Deeds, but whether they are applied to this Act, or be Subſtantive Charges of themſelves.

Attorn. Gen. I would ask him, whether that open Act muſt be in the Indictment, or in the Evidence?

Mr. Hale. In the Indictment: it muſt be expreſly laid in the Indictment, or elſe it is no good Indictment.

Attorn. Gen. But for that, that we may not diſpute upon thoſe things, my Lord, there are the ſeveral Charges againſt the ſeveral Acts; there are ſeveral open Acts that are laid in the Indictment, and (I think) if he look upon it, he will find that they are laid to every one of them, and relate and refer to every one of them.

Sir Tho. Witherington. There is writing of Letters, contributing of Money, and receiving of Meſſages.

Mr. Hale. That will appear by the ſubſequent parts of the Charge.

Ld Preſident. The ſubſequent parts of the Charge will make that appear, for if he did lend Money, &c. if they be really there, we ſhall hear it by and by.

Mr. Hale. I take it, that the Law is very plain, that the Act muſt be mentioned in the Indictment.

Attorn. Gen. But we will not debate that when we are expreſs in the thing, we are not ſo tyed to Form, as to pin them to every word of it.

The Clerk. And further to carry on and accompliſh the ſaid wicked Practice and Deſign, he the ſaid Chriſtopher Love, divers Days and Times between the 29th of March 1650, and the 1ſt of June in the Year of our Lord 1651, at London and other Places as aforeſaid, did traitorouſly and maliciouſly give, hold, uſe and maintain Correſpondency and Intelligence by Letters, Meſſages, Inſtructions, and otherwiſe.

Ld Preſident. Theſe are open Acts.

Mr. Hale. Then favour us in this: we take it that between this, and the firſt Charge, there comes a particular Charge, that relates to Charles Stuart, that is intervenient between the firſt Charge and this that is now read, or elſe we are miſinformed by the Priſoner; and if there be ſo, then we think our Exceptions will take place.

Sir Tho. Witherington. It is all contained in one Indictment, and then that that explains the Overt-Act follows afterwards, as a diſtinct thing in the Indictment; and ſo it was in my Lord Cobham's Caſe in that Indictment, and in my Lord of Eſſex's Caſe.

Ld Preſident. He may make Overtures.

Mr. Hale. We confeſs it; but we ſuppoſe it very certain, that both as this Act is penn'd, and as the Act of ——— is penn'd, which are much at one as to the manner of penning them, there is of neceſſity an Overt-Act to be laid, to make good that general Charge: that, we conceive, will be plain; and that is admitted and agreed by the Lord Coke in his Collections of the Pleas of the Crown, fol. 12, 13. where he ſaith, 'The Indictment of the 'Earl of Somerſet, in the time of Edward VI. and 'all other of the like form, were againſt Law:' Becauſe he ſaid, that he did not follow the Words of the Act, and that he did it per apertum factum, and ſhews not what that open Deed was; that was not a good Indictment, for the Fact muſt be ſet forth in the Indictment; that muſt be done. Then the queſtion is, whether this be ſo done here or no? We conceive by this Charge it is not ſo done here, upon this ground; we ſay, there follows after this a particular Charge concerning his Promotion of Charles Stuart; and then ſubſequent to that, there follows this that the Court hath now read. We ſay, that in this caſe here is not a Charge of an Overt-Act, neither by the one nor by the other; there is not a Charge by the former, becauſe that is a diſtinct Treaſon made diſtinctly treaſonable by another Act: and therefore that which is made a diſtinct Charge of Treaſon by another Act, ſhall not be an Overt-Act within the former; that is one thing we ſay. And another thing we ſay is this, That in this caſe, the ſecond, that is that which the Court hath been pleaſed to direct to be read to us concerning his holding Correſpondence, that ſhall not be an Overt-Act relating to the firſt Charge; for it is an uncertain Relation: for there be two Deſigns mentioned before, the one is a Deſign contained in the firſt Charge, the other a Deſign contained in the ſecond Charge, for the promoting of Charles Stuart; and we ſay, the third ſhall not be coupled up to the former, becauſe it is a diſtinct Charge of Treaſon in itſelf, and becauſe it is uncertain to which it relates: for it refers not more to the firſt Charge than to the ſecond concerning the promoting of Charles Stuart, that is called the Prince of Wales.

Ld Preſident. For this, I take it for the preſent, that the Charge is founded upon four Statutes; if he lay the Offence againſt the firſt, ſecond, third, and fourth, and he ſhall come and conclude it without relation to any Particular of theſe Treaſons, he did thus and thus by Letters and Correſpondencies, that will relate to them every one, tho it come but in the concluſion; and tho the Statutes be various, yet the Indictment is but one, and he may put in this of the Overtures in one place ſufficiently, to be a ſufficient Overture to every one: and therefore tho to one of them there ſhould be no Overture in it at all, but valet ut valere poteſt, it will hang upon ſo much, as it will bear an Overt-Act, and then you will not deny but that thoſe Words are Overtures.

Mr. Hale. It is true, they are ſo; but yet ſtill we conceive this third, which we call the third Charge, that is concerning holding Correſpondence, the third or fourth, I cannot tell which it is, but it is one of them; we ſay, that that is not an Overt-Act applied to the firſt Charge. When we come to the Subſtance of that Charge as it ſtands by itſelf, then our Exceptions will riſe upon it, as it ſtands ſingly by itſelf; but we conceive that ſhall not be a ſupplemental Charge to make good that firſt Charge, that is concerning endeavouring to ſubvert the State as it ſtands eſtabliſhed, it ſhall not be uſed as an Overt-Act to make good the firſt Charge. When we come to that particular Charge, that is concerning the maintaining of Correſpondence, whether it be a good Subſtantive Charge of itſelf, then we ſhall offer our Exceptions to to that; but in the mean while we are but upon Debate of the firſt, whether the firſt containeth ſuch a Charge, as by the Act of the 17th of July 1649. is required.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, we are heard before you concerning it; Mr. Hale will find, that after all theſe Laws are repeated, and after all his Offences againſt thoſe Laws are repeated, it is concluded that all are againſt the ſeveral Acts of Parliament in ſuch Caſes made and provided. If Mr. Hale will ſingle them, the Impeachment doth not, but relates to all of them; and, I think, that in this way of Impeachment, we are not tied to thoſe very nice and ſtrict formal Rules upon Indictments: but if Subſtance doth appear, it doth appear to you, my Lord, that in Subſtance the Acts are purſued, and that upon the whole Impeachments there are, even this that is required, the Expreſſion of an open Deed, an Overt-Act; thoſe are laid, and it will be acknowledged by Mr. Hale, that they are in themſelves ſufficient, being thus expreſs'd and concluded, that thoſe ſeveral Practices and Deſigns, and Treaſons, are againſt the Form of the ſeveral Statutes in that Caſe made and provided, not in relation to the 17th of July, nor the 2d of Auguſt, but to all of them. And I believe that all of theſe Facts, all of this Treaſon, all of this Deſign, whether with the Scotch Nation, or Members of the Scotch Nation, or thoſe adhering to the Scotch Nation, had all but one Foundation, the Subverſion of this preſent Government, that was the Foundation and Treaſon of the whole, that was it that was intended: for to bring one in, and not to caſt out the other, would have done no good; but upon the whole, that was the Treaſon. And upon all theſe Circumſtances and open Deeds and Deſigns, the Sum, tho it be a Treaſon to hold Correſpondence, though it be a Treaſon to promote Charles Stuart, though it be a Treaſon to do other things; yet the Treaſon is in this, the Scots Nation to come in with intent to ſubvert the Government, Charles Stuart to be made King to ſubvert the Government. So that the grand Work at heart, at root, was the Subverſion of the preſent Government; and as for that, I wiſh heartily, for Mr. Love's ſake, there were not ſo many open Deeds expreſt by him.

Sir Tho. Witherington. Mr. Hale ſpeaks of the Charge; the words are theſe: And further, to carry on and accompliſh the ſaid traitorous and wicked Practice and Deſign, he the ſaid Chriſtopher Love (now this I take to be the Overt-Act) divers Days and Times between the 29th of March 1650. and the 1ſt of June 1651. at London and divers other Places, as aforeſaid, did traitorouſly and maliciouſly uſe and hold Correſpondence and Intelligence by Letters (thoſe are open Acts) Meſſages, Inſtructions, and otherwiſe, to the Prejudice of the Commonwealth: and theſe are laid within the Time, and not a diſtinct Charge, as Mr. Hale would infer; but they do directly ſet forth an Overt-Act done by Mr. Love.

Mr. Hale. Is it your Lordſhip's Pleaſure I ſhould reply any thing, becauſe I come utterly unprovided for it, I muſt profeſs?

Attorn. Gen. We may give him this, and one or two more.

Ld Preſident. Go on Maſter Hale, if you have that that is material for another Reply, do; but take this, Maſter Hale, I take it very ſtrong both in Grammar and Logick too, as well as in Law, that when all the whole Charge is radically and fundamentally but one Treaſon, though there be many Branches of it, the Charge hath knit them all together, and made but one Act of ſo many complicated Treaſons as are here; and when he comes to the latter end, if ſome of them were de facto, not by an Overt-Deed publiſhed, yet if he come and prove, that it was ſo done by the Proofs, that there was Correſpondence, and theſe things de facto done, and that Charge de facto done, you cannot break it there, to ſay that this Fact did not reach to all: for if there be any one, it is ſufficient; but here it is to all, even to that one that you ſpeak of.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, I ſhall read a word to Mr. Hale; All which Treaſons, and traitorous and wicked Practices and Deſigns of him, the ſaid Chriſtopher Love, were, and are to the apparent Hazard of the publick Peace of this Commonwealth and Free-State, Parliament and People of England, [Mr. Hale findeth not theſe in any Indictment] and to the manifeſt Breach, Contempt and Violation of the Laws of this Land, and contrary to the Form of divers Statutes and Acts of Parliament in ſuch caſe made and provided; in general, my Lord.

Mr. Hale. We conceive, under favour, and we think that it cannot be denied, that ſuch a Concluſion will not ſerve the turn.

Attorn. Gen. No, not in an Indictment.

Mr. Hale. If there be a ſubſtantial part of the Charge omitted, that ought to be alledged in Fact, it is not the Concluſion, that contrary to the Form of the Statutes in this Caſe made and provided, will help it. My Lord, (I come unprovided) the Caſe of my Lord Dyer, that known Caſe upon an Indictment for Recuſancy, or for a wilful or knowing harbouring of a Jeſuit or Prieſt: Saith my Lord Dyer, It is not enough to ſay, he did harbour him contrary to the Form of the Statute, but he muſt ſay, he did it knowingly: he muſt alledge and purſue the ſubſtantial words of the Act of Parliament. And ſo again, an Indictment for abſenting from Church; it is not enough to ſay, He did it contrary to the Form of the Statute; but that he did it obſtinately. Therefore that general Concluſion, that this was to the Hazard of the Commonwealth; (it is true, it is an ill thing for any Man to do ſuch a thing that is to the Hazard of the Commonwealth) but thoſe words ſerve not the Statute neither: and then to ſay at the Concluſion, contrary to the Form of divers Statutes, that will not help it, under favour, in caſe of an Indictment. Then Mr. Attorney makes a Difference between the Caſe of an Indictment and this Charge. I conceive that in this Caſe there is no Difference; the Matter is the ſame, the one concerns the Life of a Perſon, and ſo doth the other: the Offence is the ſame; the one is a Charge of High Treaſon, and ſo is the other. It is true, thoſe Formalities that concern the Manner of the Tryal, thoſe (it is true) are laid by, becauſe here is no Jury to come before your Lordſhip; but your Lordſhip tryeth upon the hearing of the Teſtimony, and according to things alledged and proved. But for other Matters that eſpecially are ſubſtantially required by the Act of Parliament, we conceive that thoſe ſhall be ſupplied no more by an Intendment in caſe of a Charge before your Lordſhip, than in caſe of an Indictment for Treaſon. To this I ſhall ſay no more, but leave a word or two to your Lordſhip's Judgment. For the other thing (we are ſtill but upon the firſt Charge, the firſt Article) it hath firſt of all been inſiſted upon, That an Overt-Act is not neceſſary to be alledged, becauſe ſupplied by the Words of the Concluſion, contrary to the Form of the Statute. To that I have anſwered, I conceive, it is not, nor can it be ſupplied, becauſe it is a ſubſtantial thing in the very Words and Bowels of the Act, and cannot be ſupplied by a general Concluſion. Then it hath been ſaid by Sir Thomas Wither-

Witherington the State's Serjeant, That in this caſe thoſe ſubſequent Matters and Charges ſhall be an Overt-Act within the Statute; that is that which he hath read to you; it is in the fourth Article (as I take it) That Chriſtopher Love divers times between the 29th of March 1650. and the 1ſt of June 1651. did traitorouſly and maliciouſly hold and uſe Correſpondence and Intelligence by Letters and Meſſages. But that cannot be; I may ſay it, that is not a ſufficient Manifeſtation of an Overt-Act, becauſe there do precede it theſe particular Charges of Treaſon within particular Acts of Parliament. Why then, if ſo be (to maintain his Deſign, for the carrying on of his Deſign aforeſaid) this ſhould be ſaid to relate to the firſt Deſign, why not to the ſecond Deſign of promoting Charles Stuart to be King? And why not to the third Deſign? So that where there are three ſeveral Deſigns before, all made Treaſon by the Acts of Parliament, that cannot be an Overt-Act to make good the firſt part of the Charge, with Submiſſion to your Lordſhip's Judgment. And then another thing we ſay, That this Charge which Sir Thomas would carry up to the firſt Charge, and make it as an Inforcing and Overt-Act within the firſt Charge, that cannot be, for this other Reaſon; becauſe it is charged as a traitorous diſtinct Act in him. Now we have this Learning delivered by Sir Edward Coke in his Comment upon this, in the 25th Year of Edward the Third; that is, where there are ſeveral Acts made Treaſon, the one is an Act for levying of War: Now there the Caſe was Treaſon againſt the Perſon of the King, Queen, Prince, &c. that one part ſhall not be an Overt-Act in caſe of an Indictment, ſhall not be conſtrued as an Overt-Act for the making good of another part; becauſe where all are made equally traitorous, and all are charged as equally traitorous, we think, with Submiſſion, thoſe parts ſhall not be made an Overt-Act to another Treaſon. So when here is a Treaſon made by the Act of the 17th of July, and another by a ſubſequent Act, that which is charged as a Treaſon in the ſubſequent Act, ſhall not be ſaid to be an Overt-Act for the making good of the former, if the former be not a Treaſon, able to maintain and ſupport it ſelf, this ſubſequent Act ſhall not ſerve as a Bolſter to uphold it, and to ſupply that which is laid as a diſtinct Treaſon of it ſelf. Now theſe are the three things we inſiſt on: Firſt, That an Overt-Act is neceſſary to be laid. Secondly, That it is not ſupplied by the general Concluſion, nor can it be. Next of all, That this Act that is here laid to be done traitorouſly, to hold Correſpondence and Intelligence, it refers no more to the firſt Deſign, than to the ſecond or to the third Deſign, which are charged as three diſtinct Treaſons; and this is charged as a diſtinct and poſitive Treaſon of it ſelf, and therefore ſhall not be carried over as a Supplement to another.

Attorn. Gen. We granting that an Overt-Act is neceſſary to be expreſs'd; grant it ſhould be ſo, but no more but in Evidence: and then granting in the next place, That the general Concluſion will not be ſufficient to maintain it, when it is requiſite an open Deed ſhould be expreſs'd. Then for the third, I cannot be of his Judgment in this way of Impeachments; but as we ſee one Perſon may commit four or five Treaſons, and one Act may be an Offence againſt four or five Acts of Parliament; and this is the Truth: for where the ſeveral Acts are repeated, that (my Lord) are thoſe Laws againſt which this Treaſon, and this treaſonable Practice and Deſign is laid to be; then follows the ſeveral Enumerations of thoſe Practices, Deſigns and open Acts of his, now applied by us: but Mr. Hale would take them and apply them to one ſingly. But I obſerve to your Lordſhip, that thoſe open Acts of his, are Offences by an open Act againſt the ſeveral Acts of Parliament; but it ſerves his turn for his Client to apply them ſo: but I hope you will not apply them ſo; but when they come between the Offences, and the Overt-Acts follow it, and the Concluſion upon the whole, that all thoſe traitorous and wicked Practices and Deſigns are againſt the ſeveral Acts of Parliament: And if there be an open Act ſo expreſs'd in the Impeachment, that in Law is an open Act, ſuppoſe it ſhould be required to be expreſs'd, if there be an open Act, then I hope you will be ſatisfied, when it has been well proved, if it be expreſs'd in the Indictment an open Act, that I hope will ſatisfy your Judgments and Conſciences; eſpecially when open Acts ſhall appear to you to be an Offence againſt the Acts of Parliament. I ſhall leave this to your Judgment, and trouble you no further; and you will find in its place whether it be requiſite or not.

Ld Preſident. That that Mr. Hale ſaid, if it were a thing of abſolute Neceſſity in an Indictment, then the Concluſion will not help; if the thing were of abſolute Neceſſity there charged, and not charged contra formam Statuti, will not do it: but if I underſtand it right, it is fully laid in this Charge, that he did by open and Overt-Acts do the thing; it is laid ſo: the words of open Act are not, but the Value, that is, that he did by Writing, by Words, by Meſſages, by Money; and theſe are really Overt-Acts, though he did not call theſe Overt-Acts; theſe are laid fully in the Charge: and then, if they be laid fully in the Charge, and we ſatisfied in the full Proof of that Charge, that we have heard Overt-Acts to maintain it, then I think this cannot come within any of thoſe Caſes, that when an eſſential thing is left out of an Indictment, there the Concluſion will not help: this I conceive ſo far. Then the next, what Method or Order this can be, by ſetting down the Statutes, and then withal theſe Overt-Acts of Letters, of Meſſages, of Money, will reach to every one of the Qualities, that theſe Treaſons are manifeſted by this Act; but if it were a Treaſon of ſuch a nature, that none of theſe could reach to the Manifeſtation of it, then you ſay well: but when theſe words reach to the Manifeſtation of every Charge laid in the Charge, then it is effectual and real, and the Concluſion is ſufficient.

Attorn. Gen. Before he goes to the next, I ſhall crave your Direction in it; for I profeſs, my Lord, to you, that I, in drawing the Impeachments, take not my ſelf to be ſo ſtrictly tied to the Forms of Indictments in Letters and Syllables; and the Forms I have taken and do take, are thoſe that have paſs'd heretofore, and I follow them; and till I receive your Direction to the contrary, I take not my ſelf bound but to expreſs the Subſtance of that which is laid to his Charge, by which he may know his Offence, and give an Anſwer: But to Forms and Quiddities, and Niceties, I conceive I was not bound to that.

Mr. Hale. I preſs not Forms, nor Quiddities, nor Niceties in this Buſineſs. The next is concerning the Charge of promoting the Prince of Wales.

Attorn. Gen. No, there is no ſuch thing in it; your Copy is amiſs again; read it.

Mr. Hale. Our Exception is this, (we have been but upon the firſt all this while, I take it ſo) the next is, That he did traitorouſly publiſh the Son of the late King of England, to be King of England (meaning this Commonwealth) without the Conſent of the People in Parliament firſt had or ſignified by Ordinance to that purpoſe. I think we ſhall not not trouble your Lordſhip much with that; for if that be as our Copy is, it is true, it is not well laid: but if it be never ſo well laid, I conceive, as I am informed, there is nothing of that endeavoured to be proved.

Att. Gen. That we leave to the Court, Mr. Hale.

Mr. Hale. Then the next is, That to accompliſh the ſaid traitorous and wicked Deſign, Chriſtopher Love did at ſeveral Days in the Years aforeſaid, traitorouſly and wickedly adviſe the Scots. Our Exception to that is this: There is a treaſonable Aſſiſtance charged, in ſome of the Years that were before the making of the Act that did prohibit it.

Attorn. Gen. And afterwards too, Mr. Hale.

Mr. Hale. It lays it in ſome of the Years before the making of the Act, and that is ſufficient to invalidate this Charge.

The Clerk. And further, to carry on and accompliſh the ſaid traitorous and wicked Practice and Deſign, he the ſaid Chriſtopher Love ſeveral Days and Times in the reſpective Years aforeſaid, at London and divers other Places within this Commonwealth of England, and elſewhere, as aforeſaid, together with the ſaid William Drake, Henry Jermin, and other their Complices aforeſaid, did traitorouſly and maliciouſly invite, aid and aſſiſt the Scots, being Foreigners and Strangers, to invade this Commonwealth of England, and hath adhered to the Forces raiſed by the Enemies of the Parliament and Commonwealth aforeſaid, and Keepers of the Liberties of England as aforeſaid.

At. Gen. You will find this in a Statute before this.

Mr. Hale. Not before the 17th of July 1649. and then your Charge is repugnant; you charge us for an Offence which is precedent to the Statute.

Attorn. Gen. For that, you go and take them and pick them; but we lay them all together: there were Treaſons he committed in 1648. and that which I pitch upon ſtill is this (that Mr. Hale thought was waved) That this Man did not promote the Intereſt of Charles Stuart late King, or that he had not endeavoured a Subverſion of this Government; I lay that againſt this Act made in 1648. Then by conſequence to maintain that, he did it to promote his Intereſt, and to ſubvert the Government; and there was a Law in 1648. that did inhibit that: there is a Law inhibits the calling in of Strangers; and it follows by that, that he who calls in Strangers, may promote the Intereſt of Charles Stuart too: and that Foundation is to this purpoſe, that he did promote him to have been King of England: and you know what he expreſs'd to you, what Tenderneſs of Conſcience he had to take care that he might not go elſewhere.

Mr. Hale. If it be ſo, then we muſt deſire that part of the Charge may be read.

Attorn. Gen. I have not charged them, nor until I receive Command, ſhall I vary from what I have received formerly, that I ſhall charge this to be againſt this, and that againſt that; but I have laid down the Acts of Parliament that have made things Treaſon, and the Offences ſeverally, and upon the whole conclude, that theſe are Treaſons againſt ſeveral Acts of Parliament ſeverally; if one or all together ſerve turn, I hold it well enough. If you put me to every one of them particularly, I muſt have more time, and better Clerks to draw the Indictments.

Mr. Hale. Still the ſame Objection meeteth (with Submiſſion to the Court and Mr. Attorney, the ſame Objection meets) with them; we ſay then, he will make this a kind of an additional Charge to the firſt or to the ſecond, or to both; but we know not to which.

Attorn. Gen. Yes.

Mr. Hale. But we ſay, That that is not ſufficient, upon theſe Reaſons, becauſe it is a Charge of Treaſon in it ſelf, and therefore ſhall not be made an additional and ſupplemental Charge to make out another. And then we ſay, that this is uncertainly charged, whether you will make it ſupplemental to the firſt Charge of Treaſon, that is, the endeavouring of the Subverſion of the Commonwealth; or to the ſecond Charge of Treaſon, which is a diſtinct Charge of Treaſon, of the Promotion of the Intereſt of Charles Stuart.

Attorn. Gen. I cannot divide them.

Ld Preſident. Are not theſe as perfect as before? Doth not the Subverſion of this Commonwealth promote the Intereſt of Charles Stuart? And doth not the Promotion of Charles Stuart ſubvert the Intereſt of this Commonwealth? If he hath laid it, that he did both of theſe by aſſuming it, by a double or multiplied Act; and all theſe multiplied Acts are but one Subverſion: if I ſubvert it by one, or by twenty Acts, both of them are the ſame in nature; for the Subverſion of the one, is the bringing in of the other; and the bringing in of the one is the Subverſion of the other; and ſo they are Relatives fully one to the other, and there cannot be more expreſs'd in the Charge than this. And notwithſtanding all theſe Acts, though that Act hath made the Treaſon, cannot it be by another Act? You may proſecute by virtue of this ſubſequent Act, any thing that was underſtood to be general Treaſon by the Law of the Land.

Mr. Hale. My Lord, this is that we inſiſt upon. It is true, we do conceive, though the Promotion of the Intereſt of Charles Stuart is not conſiſtent with the Preſervation of the Intrreſt of the Commonwealth, yet every Deſtruction of the Intereſt of the Commonwealth is not therefore a Promotion of the Intereſt of Charles Stuart; for then there could be no Treaſon againſt the Commonwealth, but it muſt be a Promotion of the other's Intereſt. Now there may be a Treaſon againſt the Commonwealth, without the Promotion of the other's Intereſt. I urge it to this purpoſe, to make it appear, that they are ſeveral Charges bottomed upon ſeveral Acts; and therefore the reference here made to promote the Deſign aforeſaid, is uncertain to which it ſhall relate: it may fall out the Party may be guilty upon the firſt Article; it may fall out he is not guilty upon the ſecond Article, and then it is uncertain to which Article it relates that he is guilty of, or not guilty of: and here may be the Conſequence of it, then you will make a Treaſon, which to this third Clauſe is a Subſtantive, and contained in it ſelf, to be an Overt-Act to another Charge of Treaſon, and that you cannot do; you cannot make a Treaſon which is ſo charged, to be an Overt-Act, or Expoſition, or a Declaration of that which is contained in the former, like that Caſe I inſtanced in before, of the 25th of Edward the Third, That no Man ſhall go about to deſtroy the Perſon of the King, nor to raiſe War againſt his People: ſo that we uſe it not in any other reference, but only to explain and bring the Reaſon of that antient Law to this Law. In that Caſe a Man cannot charge the Overt-Act of going about to deſtroy his Perſon, which is a diſtinct Treaſon of it ſelf, to be an Overt-Act to the Charge of levying War, which is another diſtinct Treaſon. And if he alledge, ſuch a one did go about to deſtroy the Prince, or the Conſort of the King, or the King, and to make the levying of War to be an Overt-Act to it, this he cannot do; becauſe though it is true, it might be an Overt-Act to it, yet notwithſtanding it being made a diſtinct tinct Treaſon, it cannot be an Overt-Act to another Treaſon: And ſo here, this very aſſiſting and inviting of Forces is made a diſtinct Treaſon. And ſo if you take it ſubſtantively, it is inſufficiently laid: And if relatively, you may not do ſo, becauſe it is a Treaſon of it ſelf, and ſhall not be brought in relation to another Treaſon laid before it.

Attorn. Gen. For that, I hope Mr. Hale will leave me to that Liberty I have; that is, That if one Act be an Offence againſt ſeveral Acts, I may aggravate it ſo, as to make him know it is ſo. And I take it for an Aggravation of his Offence, when he hath offended againſt ſo many ſeveral Laws, which he hath done; and that I may have Liberty to ſay ſo, though perhaps that Subverſion of this Government is not in every reſpect a promoting of the Intereſt of Charles Stuart: But the Subverſion of this Government, as it is here laid in this Indictment, is a Promotion of the Intereſt of Charles Stuart. And ſo it is here. And I have done now with that.

Ld Preſident. Then, Mr. Hale, I will add a Word, becauſe that you did put the Caſe of a Man deſtroying the Perſon of a King, and levying of War. If it be laid; thoſe very Acts, if they be laid as a continued, or a Medium, or an Enterprize, that he had taken up a War to deſtroy the Perſon of the King; thoſe Words in one Senſe, if it had been laid ſolitarily by it ſelf, and deſtroying the King in another; but if he ſhewed that by levying of War, he endeavoured it, then the Denomination is from the End in that place: And though they be two Treaſons ſubſtantively, yet when they are laid as one continued Act, they are but one. And ſo it is in this Caſe: All theſe, though there are ſeveral Statutes, and ſeveral Treaſons, theſe multiplied Acts make up but one compleat in the Concluſion. If there want one of theſe, if there be ſufficient in the other, it is Treaſon enough, and too much too, (I would it were not ſo:) If they be laid in Subordination, as all theſe are, every one of them further to promote this, and to promote that, ſo they are laid in Promotion of it to every one: And then they are contiguous, and depend one upon another, and are ſubſtantive; and ſo ſubſtantial, as that they may be Relatives one to another. And ſo are theſe.

Attorn. Gen. The next, Mr. Hale.

Mr. Hale. The next is the fourth Charge; and that is concerning holding Correſpondence by Letters and Meſſages with Charles Stuart, and the late Queen his Mother: We ſay that this Part of the Charge is ill laid alſo. It is laid in nature of a Felony by the Act, and laid to be done traitorouſly in the Charge; and that a ſubſtantial (not a mere Formality, but a ſubſtantial) Miſtake: For if ſo be a Woman be indicted of Petty Treaſon, becauſe it is Proditoria, yet in truth it amounts but to Felony. Now, in Caſe where ſhe is an Acceſſary to a Felony, the Indictment is naught. If a Man be accuſed that he did traitorouſly ſuch an Action, which in it ſelf amounts but to a Felony, that Charge is nought. And ſo it is here; it is miſlaid: For by the Act of the 29th of March, 1650. the Matters therein charged are not made Treaſon, at moſt but capital, but we think it only prohibited, and then we ſay it is an uncertain Charge. And ſo it is, under favour: For though the Act ſaith no Man ſhall hold Correſpondence by Letters, Meſſages, or otherwiſe; yet when we come to inform upon it, or to indict upon it, it is not enough to ſay he held Correſpondence by Letters, Meſſages, or otherwiſe: but, if you will ground your Deed upon that Act, you muſt ſhew what that otherwiſe is. And that is the Exception to that Part of the Charge.

The Clerk. And further, to carry on the ſaid traitorous and wicked Practice and Deſign, he the ſaid Chriſtopher Love divers Days and Times, between the 29th of March, 1650. and the 1ſt of June, 1651. at London and other Places, as aforeſaid, did traitorouſly and maliciouſly give, hold, uſe, and maintain Correſpondence and Intelligence by Letters, Meſſages, Inſtructions, and otherwiſe.

Mr. Hale. Or otherwiſe was our Notes; then that is out of doors: But our Exception is, That it is alledged to be done traitorouſly.

Ld Preſident. And the Statute ſaith it ſhall be Treaſon.

Mr. Hale. No, it ſaith not ſo: The Act lays it only in nature of a Felony, and in the Charge it is laid to be done traitorouſly; and ſo the Charge is miſlaid.

Attorn. Gen. I confeſs it is expreſt ſo in the 29th of March, 1650. and it is not ſaid what the Offence is; but I conceive, in the firſt place, that by the Law of England he that holds Correſpondence with a Traytor, will go very near it, my Lord. And then I humbly conceive that ſtill, he going upon the firſt Act, it is laid to be with Charles Stuart, and the Queen and Counſel with him, (I think) it is a promoting of his Intereſt: He to hold a Correſpondence with him whom the Parliament hath ſaid, You ſhall in no caſe promote his Intereſt.

Mr. Hale. I muſt be bold ſtill a little, to crave Mr. Attorney's Favour, to reply upon him in this kind of way; for I have not had Time.

Attorn. Gen. You have had more Time than I; for I heard not of it till now.

Mr. Hale. We ſay the Charge is not good, becauſe it is made Felony only by the Act, and laid in the Charge to be done traitorouſly; and then we ſay that Charge is uncertain to what Deſign it relates: If it relates to the Buſineſs concerning the promoting of Charles Stuart's Intereſt, if it be ſo, we conceive it is not proved: For the Proof I mention not; but that is not inſiſted upon, that Maſter Love did promote the Intereſt of Charles Stuart, contrary to the Act of Parliament; that (I think) is not inſiſted upon.

Attorn. Gen. O, yes.

Mr. Hale. I conceive no.

Attorn. Gen. I conceive very much otherwiſe, Mr. Hale.

Mr. Hale. I deſire that Charge once more may be read, concerning the promoting the Intereſt of Charles Stuart.

The Clerk. And the better to carry on and accompliſh the ſaid traitorous and wicked Practice and Deſign, he the ſaid Chriſtopher Love, with the ſaid William Drake, &c. (ſince the Death of Charles Stuart, late King of England, who, for his notorious Treaſons, and other Tyrannies and Murders by him committed in the late unnatural and cruel Wars, was by Authority, derived from the Parliament, juſtly condemned to Death, and executed) ſeveral Days and Times, in the reſpective Years aforeſaid, at London aforeſaid, and ſundry other Places within this Commonwealth, and ſince this Nation was ſettled in the Way of a Commonwealth, or a Free State, as aforeſaid, did traitorouſly declare, publiſh, and promote Charles Stuart, eldeſt Son to the late King, to be King of England.

Mr. Hale. We are informed that there is nothing of any particular Act of his concerning that: But we have nothing to do with the Fact. But we conceive that no ſubſequent Thing, by way of Con-

Conſtruction or Interpretation, ſhall make a publiſhing and promoting in ſuch a manner as this is, it muſt be ſuch a Thing as expreſly publiſheth and promotes him to be the chief Magiſtrate of England, according to the Words of the Act, and not by way of Dilation: We ſay this is not a Thing to be applied to ſerve the Turn, upon this Reaſon; we ſay that the holding of Correſpondence and Intelligence with Charles Stuart, eldeſt Son to the late King, cannot be coupled to the Promotion of the Intereſt of Charles Stuart, to be King of England, ſeeing that is but by way of Interpretation to bring it within the firſt part of the Act.

Attorn. Gen. For that, I ſhall crave your Direction.

Ld Preſident. It is not interpretative, but poſitive.

Attorn. Gen. But I ſhall crave your Pleaſure; Whether I ſhall in my Impeachments afterwards put in all my Evidence? What is charged, and Evidence proves, that you will judge upon, I hope.

Mr. Hale. Then the next part of the Charge, and that is the fifth, That he did hold Correſpondence with divers Perſons of the Scots Nation. Our Exception to that is plain: We conceive that part of it is not well laid neither; it is not laid in purſuance of the Act of Parliament, as our Notes are. This is that we ſay, That it is not expreſly alledged, that they were Perſons reſiding in Scotland, our Notes are.

Attorn. Gen. Like enough ſo, Sir.

The Clerk. And further, to carry on and accompliſh the ſaid traitorous and wicked Deſign, he the ſaid Chriſtopher Love, ſeveral Days and Times in the reſpective Years aforeſaid, at London aforeſaid, and divers other Places within this Commonwealth of England, and elſewhere, as aforeſaid, did traitorouſly and maliciouſly hold and maintain Correſpondence and Intelligence with divers Perſons of the Scots Nation, viz. with the Earl of Argyle, Lowdon, Lothian, Bailey, Belcarras, and divers other Perſons of the Scots and other Nations, whom he well knew to adhere to the Scots Nation in this War againſt the Parliament and Commonwealth of England.

Mr. Hale. This we conceive is not a good Charge; for the Words of the Act of the 2d of Auguſt, 1650, upon which this is grounded, are, That no Man ſhall hold Correſpondence with the Scots Nation reſiding in Scotland.

Attorn. Gen. You were beſt read further, Mr. Hale.

[Then Mr. Hale read part of that Act, beginning at theſe Words, [Be it enacted, ordained, and declared by this preſent Parliament,] and ending with theſe Words, [Without the Allowance, Licence, &c.]

Mr. Hale. It is true, there is no Reſiding; for that yet comes not home, we conceive, to part of the Charge. There are two Parts of the Charge; the one, That he did maintain Correſpondence with divers of the Scotiſh Nation; and with divers other Perſons of divers other Nations, whom he well knew to adhere to the Scots Nation in this War againſt the Parliament. As to the firſt, that is out of doors: Then here is no full Charge of holding any Correſpondence with any of Scotch Nation; for that part of the Charge reſts upon this, that it muſt be with holding of Correſpondence with any ſuch Perſons as are reſiding in Scotland, and with any other Perſon reſiding there. Then as to the other part ——

Ld Preſident. It is a continued Speech; Not with the Scots, nor any other.

Mr. Hale. Then here is another Thing in it; That it is not averred that ſuch a Correſpondence and Intelligence was held without the Licence of Parliament.

Attorn. Gen. You are miſtaken in that; your Notes are not true.

The Clerk. And he the ſaid Chriſtopher Love, within the Times, and at the Places before mentioned, did traitorouſly aſſiſt, encourage, without the ſpecial Licence of the Council of State, or Parliament, or Captain-General of the Parliament Forces.

Mr. Hale. We ſay then, theſe are two diſtinct Charges, and grounded upon two diſtinct Parts of an Act. But there is this more in it, which we conceive is not to be anſwered, with Submiſſion; under favour, it is ſaid he did it within the Times aforeſaid: The Times that are aforeſaid are between the 29th of March 1650, and June 1651. Now this Act, whereby this is made traitorous or treaſonable, takes not place till the 5th of Auguſt 1650: So that it might be done within the Times aforeſaid, that is, between the 29th of March 1650, and June 1651, and yet not contrary to the Act of the 2d of Auguſt, which was 1650.

Sir Tho. Wither. We lay it within all the Times aforeſaid: And I ſuppoſe the Matter of the Evidence hath told you the Times, which now we are not to diſpute.

Mr. Hale. Whatſoever is done between the 29th of March 1650, and the 2d of Auguſt 1650, is not done contrary to the Act of the 2d of Auguſt 1650, upon which Act this Charge is grounded: There is a Time between them, and between the Time of exhibiting of theſe Articles. Whatſoever is ſaid to be done between the 29th of March 1650, and the exhibiting the Articles, is not ſaid to be done after the 2d of Auguſt 1650: For if it be done between the 29th of March and the 2d of Auguſt, it is done within the Time aforeſaid, that is, between the 29th of March 1650, and June 1651; and yet not done contrary to the Act of the 2d of Auguſt, becauſe done before the Act came forth.

Attorn. Gen. Though Mr. Hale will not conſent to it, we will ſtrike out the 29th of March; and then he will not deny but that is good enough, with that ſtricken out, before the firſt of June 1651. Whether it be not good enough, and no Time laid before it?

Mr. Hale. No indeed, it is not good enough.

Attorn. Gen. Why not? It is after the Offence committed.

Mr. Hale. Becauſe it may as well be before the Act, as after the Act.

Attorn. Gen. If we lay it after the Offence committed, I ſuppoſe it is well enough; and the wiſeſt will think ſo. Lay it to be the 1ſt of June 1651: Suppoſe it were in September before, it is good enough.

Mr. Hale. If you lay it upon the 1ſt of June, it is a Year; before it is not good enough.

Attorn. Gen. That that Mr. Hale inſiſts upon, he may ſay it is before the 1ſt of June 1651, ſo long ſince; but in a juſt and reaſonable Intendment, when we inſiſt upon that Law that makes it Treaſon to hold it after ſuch a time, and we ſay that before the firſt of June 1651, he did commit Treaſon in holding Correſpondence, and ſending Proviſions of War before that Law, though it were before the ſecond of Auguſt 1650, that were not againſt that Law.

Mr. Hale. Still we ſay, That contrary to the Form of the Statute, or contrary to the Form of the Law, which is but the Concluſion, ſhall not ſupply that which is material to be alledged. Now when here is an Act laid to be done, certainly it is material to alledge that it is done in ſuch a Time as may appear to be after the Time of the Prohibition of it to be done. The Prohibition runs to the 2d of Auguſt 1650, That no Man after the 5th of Auguſt ſhall do ſuch an Act: Then it muſt be laid to be an Act done after the 5th of that Auguſt. But it is not laid ſo here; but laid ſo as may be intended to be done before the 5th of Auguſt: For here is a Time laid between the 29th of March 1650, and the Time of the exhibiting the Articles, which is in June 1651, and that he did this within the Time aforeſaid. Now he that ſaith he did it the 30th of March, ſaith he did it within the Time aforeſaid; and yet ſaith not that is within the Act.

is

Sir Tho. Wither. We have given an Anſwer to that: We have laid it within and without the Time. That is within the Time, the Witneſs doth prove it; and Mr. Hale ſpeaks not to what we have proved, and cannot ſpeak to it.

Mr. Hale. The Proof ſhall never ſupply the Inſufficiency of the Charge: For we may as entirely offer you an Exception to this Matter after you have heard the Proof, as before you have heard it; for it ſtands no was upon the Charge ſingly; ſo that it ſhall not be ſupplied out of Matter that appears in the Proof, but it muſt be conſidered whether the Charge can ſupply it ſelf, or not: for that that is alledgable againſt the Charge before the Proof made, is alledgable as well afterwards. If it were not good before the Proof, the Proof ſhall not be ſupplemental to it: For upon that Reaſon, if an Indictment did want Time or Certainty, then after the Party were heard upon his Defence, it might be ſaid, when this Exception was taken to the Indictment, all this might appear upon the Evidence. But that will not ſupply the Defect of the Indictment.

Attorn. Gen. I am ſure we have laid it late enough, the firſt of June 1651, before that Time; and Mr. Hale's Exception is ſtill upon that way of Proceedings upon Indictments: He muſt have that poſitive and ſtrict Certainty in it in each Particular. I muſt give it that Anſwer ſtill, that if you do in theſe Caſes put me to it, to expreſs every particular Circumſtance of every particular Fact, and every particular Time, and that it muſt conduce in the Concluſion of it, I muſt make you Impeachments that will not be fit for you to read, nor hear: But, under favour, if that it contains in it in this way of Charge that convenient Certainty, that Convenieney that may put the Priſoner to the Knowledge of it, and to prove it. For this relates not ſingly: For if I ſhould go that way Mr. Hale hath laboured to draw me, that is, to take every one of theſe ſeverally, and that I muſt make a diſtinct Charge upon one, and upon the other, and a diſtinct Evidence upon one, and upon the other; I conceive theſe run quite through all the Laws, every one of them. Had I confined this now between the 5th of Auguſt 1650, and June 1651, then what had become of all the Laws before that Time? Therefore to make them relative to all, I have expreſs'd ſuch a Time as may relate to all: For had I confined it ſingly upon this or that Act, whereas I humbly conceive that theſe Acts, and theſe Offences of Mr. Love, are relative to more than one Act of Parliament, and go to ſeveral Acts: And therefore I cannot confine my ſelf to one Act, and ſay it was done at ſuch a Time, and there limit it, and let it die. But my Endeavour hath been, and upon this Particular we debated it, when we did draw it; we put it ſo that the ſeveral Acts may have the ſeveral Effects, and Mr. Love's Treaſons look upon every one of them, and they upon every one of his Treaſons; and as his Offences run through, and againſt all the Acts, ſo muſt our laying it upon him run, and the Evidence alſo. And though we took care to lay it back far enough, that was, to the 1ſt of June 1651, and ſo laid it high enough to the other, that it might reach the reſt. And in this way we are not tied ſo to expreſs it in every Particular, as other Indictments run.

Mr. Hall, Attorney of the Dutchy. He would charge it upon the Times between the 29th of March, and the 1ſt of June, that be not the Times that we have expreſt in this; for it is that within the Times aforeſaid we have poſitively laid, that it was in the Year 1651: For we have laid before, that in the Year 1648, 1649, 1650, 1651; then in the Times aforeſaid we have poſitively laid that this Fact was done in the Year 1651, which of neceſſity muſt be ſince that Act concerning the Scots was made: And that I conceive is an expreſs poſitive Time mentioned in the Charge, and gives a full Anſwer to that Objection; for it is not within ſuch a Time, but in the Year 1651.

Mr. Hale. That Charge is within the Times aforeſaid, which is laſt mentioned, between March 1650, and 1651.

Mr. Hall. That we ſhall ſubmit to the Court, whether in the ſame Times aforeſaid ſhall not relate to all the Times before mentioned, as well as the particular Times he hath picked out; for we mention that in the Year 1651 theſe Things were done.

Attorn. Gen. For that I have given you, that that is the general Anſwer, if I be put to it: Whereas Mr. Love had tranſgreſſed againſt thoſe ſeveral Acts of Parliament, we have put it ſo, that we conceive his Offences run through them all; and ſo we have laid them: And (I hope) we are not upon thoſe Niceties, that we muſt expreſs the direct Days and Times, as Indictments run: But here is enough to make him know his Offences.

Ld Preſident. I conceive it is much better as it is too, and more obvious to every Underſtanding, and their Interpretation, than as you would have it, a great deal: For the Neceſſities of the Day, it is not material, that you will agree; nor the Week, if they lay a Time ſo many Months before, or after, if the Proof come and fall within the compaſs of the Charge. As the Proof is laid, ſo is the Fact; The Proof determines whether it were within the Times without the Law, or within the Times aforeſaid; for it is not within that Time, and every of them, but within the Times generally laid, all thoſe Acts were done. And thoſe muſt be laid in particular which was at one Time, and one at another, which were two Years a brewing, and are by the Proofs laid in general; that is beſt to ſay one Fact was done at one Time, and another at another Time, and at ſuch a Time, and not at ſuch a Time. It can be no Man's Judgment to be ſo laid in an Indictment or Charge; but they muſt be laid thus in general, and the Evidence muſt make it particular, that it was within the Times that are laid; as when there are no Times, as from March to June and Auguſt; and after, if they be both laid, if the Fact be within ſuch a Time that is within the Law, all the other is out of doors.

Mr. Hale. My Lord, thus, if it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I think, with Submiſſion to your Lordſhip's Judgment, that in ſuch a Caſe it is not in the Proof to make good a Charge: If the Charge do not contain a ſufficient Certainty, it is not in the

Proof

Proof to make it good. My Lord, I inſiſt now upon the Neceſſity of a Day to be preciſely laid. I know (though it is true, it hath been otherwiſe held in ſome Caſes) yet in a Caſe of this nature, the Day is now material; for now we are upon an Act of Parliament. As now, if ſo be the Statute of the 29th of Elizabeth enacts that every Man that ſhall knowingly entertain a Jeſuit, that that Man ſhall be a Traytor, ſhall ſtand guilty of Treaſon; if ſo be a Man would ſay in an Indictment, that ſuch a Man between the 28th of November in the 28th Year of the Queen, and the 28th of December in the 29th Year of the Queen, did entertain ſuch a Jeſuit, this Indictment would be naught, not upon the Uncertainty of the Day, but becauſe it takes in a Time which is not prohibited by the Statute. The Indictment may be true, that he did receive a Jeſuit within that Time, and yet that he did not receive him contrary to the Form of the Statute; and to ſay in the Concluſion contrary to the Form of the Statute, will not help it. For that is our Objection, that it is not done contrary to the Form of the Statute, becauſe it takes in ſuch a Time, as that it might be done before the Statute came forth. We ſay, that when there is a Time laid between the 29th of March 1650, and June 1651, and that within that Time he did do thus and thus, there is the Fault; it doth over-reach the Time of the Prohibition of the Statute, for any thing appears to the Court: The Court may find the Indictment or Information true, that he did it within this Time, that is, between the 29th of March 1650, and June 1651. and yet for all that the Party not in fault to be impeached, becauſe he might do it contrary to the Act; for he might do it between the 29th of March 1650, and June 1651, and yet do it before the Act came forth, which was in Auguſt 1650.

Mr. Hall. My Lord, I conceive Mr. Hale hath not anſwered that I alledged: But now, if there were no other Times mentioned in all the Charge, but only between the 29th of March and June 1651, then it were ſomewhat; but when the Times are expreſs'd before, though that it was in the Year 1651, and then we ſay in the Times before ſaid, I conceive that in the Times aforeſaid ſhall relate expreſly to that Time in the Year 1651, and then it muſt be within the Act.

Mr. Hale. That cannot be; that will make the Charge worſe.

Ld Preſident. That I conceive you are upon, is this, The very Letter of the Charge: For you ſay, At this Time that is laid he could not be a Traytor, and you join it with a Time in which he might be a Traytor. This (you ſay) they lay in the Indictment, That he did in ſuch a Time of March, and afterward; and at that Time there was no Law to prohibit it, and ſo that could not be a Crime againſt him; and this, you ſay, no Proof will help it: I take it, Mr. Hale, this is the Subſtance. But if this be thus laid, and the Proof doth come in, this is very eſſential in my Judgment, when upon the Matter, if this be, as you ſee it appears upon the face of the Thing, that the Proof muſt go to that Time within the Law; and therefore that will not vitiate at all ſuch an Indictment, if it were ſo as you ſay. But I take it, that this being complicated with more Laws, as I ſaid before, though he were not guilty upon this, yet in the Concluſion he is found guilty of that which is as to other Offences.

Attorn. Gen. I ſhall ſay but this: We all know that a Time is expreſs'd but for Formality; and that Time that is expreſs'd, is not material, ſo it be laid far back enough. But if I lay it in June, and prove it in June Twelve-months, it is time enough for this, as your Lordſhip was ſaying. That which I do ſay is, That I cannot confine this very Act that is ſuppoſed to be, and yet not laid to be againſt that Act of the 2d of Auguſt 1650, from this Clauſe, in expreſs Terms, not ſingly. But that which I humbly inſiſt upon is this, That never a one of theſe Offences ſingly tranſgreſs one ſingle Law, but is an Offence againſt ſeveral Laws. I conceive I had done my ſelf and the Commonwealth wrong, had I limited it to any one; for his complying with the Scots, and joining with them, and contributing with them, and receiving Intelligence, it is more than againſt that ſingle Act. It is Promotion of his Intereſt, and Subverſion of the Government, and againſt every one of the Laws. And therefore, I conceive, I had not done right to the Place I am entruſted with, if I ſhould have laid it ſingly. But he is indicted, That as a falſe Traytor he hath done theſe Things: that is the Preamble. And then we inſtanced the Particulars, and give a Time; which Time he will acknowledge is not poſitively neceſſary to be true, that that Time muſt be the Day the Fact was committed; but if it be before, it is enough. But he infers, becauſe this ſeems to be an Offence within the Statute of the 2d of Auguſt 1650, and is laid between the 29th of March 1650, and the 1ſt of June 1651, and ſo whether this can relate to that Act: And by Evidence you know it is afterwards. But this being an Offence againſt ſeveral Laws, I cannot charge it to be againſt one Law: But the Art is now, as Mr. Love began, to take it aſunder and ſingly, and then it is nothing: And Mr. Hale takes it ſingly. It is not againſt this, nor againſt this; but it is againſt every one of them; and not againſt this ſingly, but againſt the reſt of them.

Sir Tho. Wither. My Lord, it cannot be contrary to the Form of the Statute, unleſs it be done after the Time, ſo that the Concluſion ſhews it was laid within the Time. But for the Caſe, as Mr. Hale inſtanced in: He puts a Caſe of one Act of Parliament; we are now upon Offences againſt ſeveral Acts of Parliament. In that Caſe, of retaining a Jeſuit, he is a Traytor by the Act of the 29th of Elizabeth; ſo that if he lays it between the 28th of the Queen, and the 29th, if the Jury find that he did retain him knowingly on the 10th of May, 29, then it will not be denied but that it is an Offence againſt the Statute.

Mr. Hale. But ſtill we ſay the Indictment is naught in that Caſe, becauſe it takes in a Time which was before the Act came forth; ſo that the Party might do it within the Time expreſt in the Indictment, and yet not do it contrary to the Act: And this is our Caſe.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, you have heard us for that.

Mr. Hale. The laſt Thing is concerning Contribution to Sylas Titus, and Sterks a Scotchman. And to that we have the ſame Exception; That that is not made Treaſon by any Act of Parliament: And therefore it is miſlaid to be done traitorouſly; for the Statute of the 26th of March 1650, only prohibits it, and ſo makes it penal, but not Treaſon. But then we ſay again, it is laid very uncertainly too, that is, at the Times before mentioned. If Mr. Attorney of the Dutchy's Conſtructions ſhould ſtand, that is, that the Times before mentioned refer to the Time paſt, then he may refer to a Time before the Act. But we conceive the Thing it ſelf is not Treaſon by the Act, but only prohibited; and we conceive, under favour, ſtill, that by way of Reduction to any of the former Charges, this ſhall not be made as an Inſtance or an Overt-Act, by way of Reduction to any of the former Charges, becauſe it is charg'd particularly to be traitorouſly done, becauſe there are ſeveral Charges of Treaſon before: And that which Mr. Attorney was pleaſed to obſerve upon another occaſion, That in this Caſe the Charge is againſt ſeveral Acts of Parliament, it is true; but tho it be againſt ſeveral Acts of Parliament, yet it muſt bind and pinch upon one: For we ſay one Treaſon is not to be made an Inſtance to another, and ſo to be made acceſſary, and depending, and accidental to another. And then we ſay in this caſe, that this being not a Treaſon in itſelf, and being as uncertain to which of the former Treaſons it is apply'd, it cannot be well laid, nor well apply'd, that is, to the laſt, that he did voluntarily relieve Silas Titus, it is not made Treaſon.

Attorn. Gen. It is againſt the Act of the 2d of Auguſt 1650, in expreſs words: read the Impeachment.

The Clerk. And further to carry on and accompliſh the ſaid traiterous and wicked Practice and Deſign, he the ſaid Chriſtopher Love, within the Times and at the Places laſt aforeſaid, did traitorouſly and voluntarily relieve the ſaid Silas Titus, Edward Maſſey, Col. Bamfield, one Maſon late of London Gentleman, and one Sterks late of London Gentleman, who then were, and yet are under the power of the Scotch Nation in Arms againſt the Parliament and Commonwealth of England, with Moneys and Ammunition. Which Treaſons and traitorous and wicked Practices and Deſigns of him the ſaid Chriſtopher Love, were and are to the apparent Hazard of the publick Peace of the Commonwealth and Free-State, Parliament and People of England, and to the manifold Breach, Contempt, and Violation of the Laws of this Land, and contrary to the Form of divers Statutes and Acts of Parliament in ſuch caſe made and provided.

Mr. Hale. Then we ſay, it is uncertainly alledged, and uncertainly laid; but we take it, it is not within the Words of the Act, we deſire that Act may be read.

The Clerk. That ſhall from and after the 5th of Auguſt 1650, uſe, hold, and maintain any Correſpondence, &c.

Mr. Hale. Then this is not within this Act, becauſe that this is concerning ſending to Perſons that are in Scotland; I obſerve not that it is charged that they were in Scotland.

Attorn. Gen. Or ſhall abet, aſſiſt, countenance or encourage the Scotch Nation, or any other Perſon or Perſons adhering to them in their War againſt the Commonwealth. What think you of relieving, is not that abetting and encouraging?

Mr. Hale. It ſhould be laid ſo then, I deſire that part of the Charge may be read again.

The Clerk. And further to carry on, &c.

Mr. Hale. My Lord, we think this is not fully charged according to the Act.

Attorn. Gen. I will read you another, of the 26th of March 1650.

Mr. Hale. That makes it not Treaſon.

Attorn. Gen. It comes very near it, but I inſiſt upon it, it is under the other, relieving them with Money, buying of Arms.

Mr. Hale. Still the ſame Exception lies upon it, within the Times aforeſaid, which certainly cannot be acknowledged.

Attorn. Gen. We acknowledge the ſame Exception; and the ſame Anſwer lies to it, that of the 26th of March 1650, it is, he ſhall ſuffer Death: and upon this it is Treaſon upon both together, we cannot divide them, but muſt expreſs them ſo.

Mr. Hale. Under favour, the one makes it Felony, and the other a Treaſon.

Attorn. Gen. But it is a deadly one.

Ld Preſident. If a Statute Law makes a thing Felony that was not Felony, or recites a thing that is Felony, and ſaith it ſhall be puniſhed with Death, being a Petty Larceny, therein you ſay well; but if the Statute recites that that is Treaſon in itſelf actually, and ſaith that they that do theſe things ſhall ſuffer Death, according to the nature of that Offence that is formerly recited, and limits it ſo in the Recital, if the Recital be Treaſon in the beginning, and then ſay, that that Traytor ſhall ſuffer Death without mercy.

Mr. Hale. We have ſhewed our Reaſons in the Caſe, my Lord, it is as much as we can ſay upon this ſudden concerning this Charge; there are ſome other things that are mentioned here by Mr. Love, as how far forth there be ſufficient Witneſſes, admitting the Charge were good; how far forth the Witneſſes are ſufficient in themſelves; and then whether here be two concurring Witneſſes to any one Act, and whether any thing be more proved than Miſpriſion of Treaſon, and Concealment of Treaſon: theſe are things Mr. Love takes upon him in fact to ſay. And now for thoſe, when the Caſe is made, we ſhall be ready to ſpeak to theſe things; for truly it is ſudden and new to me, for theſe matters came not to my knowledge till this Morning after Eight a-clock; that is, concerning the laſt Paper he offers to your Lordſhip, and that is, Exception to Witneſſes, Proof, and Matter of the Proof, whether the bare Concealment (for thus it is ſtated unto us, the Concealment) of any thing that is Treaſon, whether that be Treaſon or no in the Party that conceals it; theſe are things that if we were prepared for, we ſhould ſpeak to. Firſt, we conceive by the Statute of primo & quinto Elizabethæ, there is a neceſſity in this Proceeding before your Lordſhip, to have two lawful and ſufficient Witneſſes. Next of all, we think, that if theſe Witneſſes be ſuch as he hath ſtated them to be; which whether they be or no, we know not, for we are utterly unacquainted with the Evidence, yet we ſhould think they are no ſufficient Witneſſes: and then admitting they were ſufficient Witneſſes, yet if ſo be one Witneſs ſpeaks to one Fact, another to another, we conceive theſe are not ſufficient Witneſſes within the Statute, not ſufficient to convict him. And then, if that which they have witneſſed be nothing that amounts to Treaſon, haply committed by others, that makes him not guilty within the Acts. If we had time to underſtand, and digeſt, and conſider, what were the Matters that are alledged, we ſhould be able to ſay ſomewhat to it. My Lord, that which we have ſaid, we have ſaid of a ſudden; and ſo it appears, becauſe we had not that clear Underſtanding of the Charge, as otherwiſe we might have had, and ſo have ſaved much of your time.

Attorn. Gen. For that that hath been ſaid ſuddenly by Mr. Hale, I ſhall ſuddenly give it this Anſwer: He hath had more time than I, he hath ſaid from Mr. Love, and not from himſelf: he ſaith when the Caſe is made; I think it will appear then, that theſe Exceptions have been made to the Court, that the Witneſſes have not been competent neither in Quality nor Number, they have been ſpoken

ſpoken to. For the Witneſſes, the Exception to the Quality becauſe they were of the ſame Gang, they had a hand in the ſame Treaſon, that was the Exception; I think that will not be allowed to be a legal Exception, they are Perſons that (as Mr. Love pretended) had a hand with him in this Fact, and therefore they ſhould not be competent Witneſſes; that I ſhall appeal to Mr. Hale's Judgment, before Conviction, and upon a Proceeding, whether they may not diſcover (and after Conviction) if they be Approvers. For the next, for two Witneſſes; when the Caſe is made, you will find one, two, three, four, five, ſix, and to moſt of them two, three, and four, for ſo I may make bold to ſay, for ſo I read them to you the laſt day. And then for the laſt Exception, that was for the Concealment of Treaſon, it is far from it, for I know not what a Concealment Mr. Love may intend; I am ſure Mr. Hale will not think that a Concealment, to run on one, two, or three Years, and run on, and ſend Letters; that when he acts along with them, and hath the Meetings at his Houſe continually, moves them to receive Money, and contribute; I think he was the higheſt Actor amongſt them, for the Meetings were continually at his Houſe, the Advices were there reſolved upon Debates, there he gave his Advice one way, and they another way: I think he will not think this is but Miſpriſion of Treaſon; and we never did charge it, nor intend it ſo, but went a little higher.

Mr. Hale. If that be declared to be inſiſted upon, that the non-revealing of Treaſon, though it be a Month or two, or a Year or two, can be no Treaſon, then we have done with that Queſtion; for then it will reſt ſingly upon the Fact before your Lordſhip, whether there be any thing more proved than ſuch a Concealment, then it is true we are diſcharged of that Queſtion. But then concerning the Proof, if Maſter Attorney will pleaſe to admit, that the Proofs are ſuch as Maſter Love hath ſtated in this Paper——

Attorn. Gen. That I ſhall not do before-hand, but to debate upon the Proof, I ſhall crave your Lordſhip's Directions; I have gone over them already, and it hath been trouble enough to me; if it be your Lordſhip's pleaſure I muſt go over the Proof again, I ſhall ſubmit to you, but not to him.

Ld Preſident. Mr. Hale, there is no Witneſſes that have been heard, but they have been of the ſaid Confederacy, that was one Exception Mr. Love made; it was debated at the producing, and over-ruled, and I believe your Judgment will go well with us, that it was no Exception. Another was, That they have been promiſed Rewards; that was likewiſe moved and over-ruled, the Court was of opinion that they may do it; that if there be a Treaſon, and there be many Correſpondents in it, and one out of remorſe, as ſome of theſe did ſay, that when they had been there they did not like their ways, but went from them, and came to them no more; if this Man, or any other Man afterwards ſhall come and reveal this, it is in the power of the State either to reward him with Moneys, and to promiſe him Life too, if he ſhall faithfully do it. And this, we ſay, is a ſtronger Caſe than the Caſe of an Approver, which afterwards when they became Approvers, they muſt confeſs the Fact, and ſay they are guilty of the Fact plainly and openly, and yet then they are good Witneſſes to diſcover this, as it was plotted in Hell, for this was no other, tho they had a Vizard upon them, which was no otherwiſe: I ſay, if any one will diſcover ſuch; nay, haply it was offered to Maſter Love himſelf, if he would have done it; I believe there was ſome Overtures made to him. But this is Law too, by the Law of this Land, which is the Law of God; for we have no Law practiſed in this Land, but is the Law of God, and ſo did the Lawyers maintain it before the King, in Henry the Eighth's time, the Pope's Legates, and chief Archbiſhops and Biſhops of England; and did then prove it to them, that there was no Law practiſed in England but the Law of God, which our Miniſters are loth to touch, and buſy themſelves to ſtudy, but ſtudy the Ceremonial Laws of the Jews, which are Mortuæ Mortiferæ, which are not to be practiſed by any other Nation, till they be eſtabliſhed by a Law: and that which is the Law of God in this Land, that hath ſo much preſerved it, theſe they are wilfully ignorant of, and ſay, it is civil; but I ſay, it is Chriſtian Law. And therefore never diſtinguiſh in a Chriſtian Nation, that the Laws are Moral and Eccleſiaſtical, with that feigned Diſtinction; but all the Laws of this Nation are Chriſtian, and ſtand with Evangelical Truth, as well as with natural Reaſon, and they are founded upon it: and therefore, Maſter Hale, we are here now to go on by theſe Laws, which are the Laws of God, and we muſt walk in them, as we would walk to Heaven. And for that you ſpeak of now, Mr. Attorney hath anſwered all the Exceptions every one; and I think for that Matter of Fact, every one of them particularly. Mr. Love did take his Exceptions too, and they were over-ruled. Now to come whether theſe are lawful Witneſſes over again, when it is in Matter of Fact, and over-ruled by the Judgment of the Court, Maſter Hale will not think that is regular. And then, whether there be two to one Point or not, that is another of your Exceptions; that, I take it, (Maſter Hale) is not Matter of Law, but for the Judges to conſider of it: that which ſhould be Matter of Law, is this, whether that ſingle Proofs, ſome to one, and ſome to another, joined all together do iſſue out all this Treaſon. We want not Precedents for that, for this is a heterogeneal Treaſon; every Particular that theſe Statutes make a Treaſon, they are all of them complicated, he hath gone through them all in his Act, and we muſt paſs through them all in our Judgments: tho every one is particular Treaſon, had it been ſingularly laid by itſelf; yet now being laid as one concatenated Treaſon, they all of them make but one. For the next, for that of Miſpriſion, he is not charged here with Miſpriſion at all, but direct Treaſons; and if it be but Miſpriſion, we ſhall not for Miſpriſion judge him a Traytor upon this Charge. But then, what is in his Judgment Miſpriſion? If this be nothing but a Concealment, I think that the Court upon the Evidence will judge that it is more than a bare Concealment; and whether Mr. Hale will think, if I be a Promoter and Concealer from one to another, and have ſo many continued Meetings, whether two or three Years together acting with them, and concealing them, for it is not a bare Concealment, but a complicated Act: for if it were but a bare Notion of it, we ſhould have much ado to prove it; but (I think) the Court is ſatisfied, it is more than Notion.

Matters of another kind of nature than all the reſt he inſiſted upon, for the reſt are mere Matters of Law, upon the Formality and Inſufficiency of the Charge: theſe Queſtions of the Witneſſes are Queſtions that are mix'd, for they depend upon the Matters in Fact, and cannot be otherwiſe ſtated. Now Mr. Love, tho he had no Counſel appeared before, yet he had in his Defence all theſe Objections too; as of the Incompetency of them, becauſe they were Participes criminis, and for that I think (under favour of your Lordſhip's Judgment) he had a full and clear Anſwer to it: in caſe of an Approver, he is Particeps criminis, and accuſeth Men that are Participes criminis, yet that Man, even ex merito juſtitiæ, he ſhall be pardoned, ſaith our Law: and therefore that Objection that is made againſt the Witneſſes, that they are promiſed Rewards and Pardon, that is no Objection, for in that caſe the Approver ſhall have his Pardon ex merito juſtitiæ. Then for the other Point, that is, whether by two Witneſſes in ſuch a Plot or no, to prove a Treaſonable Act, that is, conſiſting merely upon the Matter of Fact; that I ſhall not take upon me to repeat, you have heard it: but this I ſaid then, and this I humbly offer now, that if there be two Witneſſes, tho they concur not in the ſame individual Act, yet if they concur in two Acts, concurring to the ſame Treaſon, they prove the ſame Treaſon; if one prove the ſending of Letters, and another the ſending of Money, I take it theſe are two Witneſſes, tho they ſpeak of two diſtinct Acts: but in our Proof we have gone on to two Witneſſes, three or four in moſt points. But then for the Miſpriſion of Treaſon, we did apprehend that that which Mr. Love himſelf hath confeſſed, is Treaſon itſelf; but Mr. Love is pleaſed to make his own Collection upon his own Confeſſion: For I confeſs my Preſence and Silence after theſe Meetings and Conſultations, but this I take to be Miſpriſion of Treaſon. To this I replied, we took it to be Treaſon itſelf; for our Books ſay, a Man muſt not ſleep, nor look back, but go preſently to a Magiſtrate to reveal it: but when a Man will not only ſleep upon it, but keep it back, and act in it, this is more than Miſpriſion. But our Charge is for a Treaſon itſelf, and truly Treaſon comprehends a Miſpriſion of Treaſon in it; but this Point I think neither will come in queſtion now: for we ſay and charge, that it is a Treaſon itſelf, not Miſpriſion; and that Collection Mr. Love makes, it is his own, but the Judgment is yours, whether it be a Treaſon or not.

Mr. Hale. If it be your Lordſhip's Pleaſure, we are ready to ſay what we can in the ſhortneſs of time; but if it be not your Lordſhip's Pleaſure, we ſhall not ſay it.

Attorn. Gen. If your Lordſhip pleaſe to declare what he ſhould ſpeak to.

Mr. Hale. Theſe Points, I ſhall only mention them, I cannot argue them now. This is that I conceive; firſt of all, according as the Caſe is ſtated, that is, Whether a Perſon menaced, that he ſhall loſe his Life if he diſcover not a particular Perſon, and that he ſhall have his Life if he do diſcover him, whether ſuch a Perſon be a competent Witneſs or no?

Attorn. Gen. Hear a word; I appeal then to you, whether any ſuch Perſon were produced before you.

Mr. Hale. Firſt, we only go upon what Suppoſition Mr. Love makes.

Mr. Love. I humbly crave leave to that effect, to prove that particular.

Attorn. Gen. No, not now, Sir.

Mr. Hale. We conceive ſuch a Perſon is not a competent Witneſs: then that is out of the Caſe, it ſhould ſeem, Sir. Truly, then the Caſe that is put concerning an Approver, comes not to the queſtion, under favour; for tho it is true, an Approver at Common Law might be an Accuſer, yet we are not now upon a Proceeding at the Common Law, when we talk of Witneſſes now, but we are upon a Proceeding how far forth warranted for the Witneſſes, by the Statute of the firſt and fifth of Edward 6. So that what is ſaid concerning an Approver, comes not to this Queſtion; he that may be a competent Witneſs at Common Law, he is not a competent Witneſs upon thoſe Statutes, for the words of the Statute are expreſly, That he ſhall be a lawful and a ſufficient Witneſs. And if ſo be that ſuch a Caſe were now, it is not to ſample this Caſe that is before you with the Caſe of an Approver, which is a bare Accuſation at Common Law, and where the Jury likewiſe are to have other Evidence: for either the Defendant may wage his Battel, or put himſelf upon his Country; and then it is at the pleaſure of the Jury, whether they will believe the Approver or no. But by the Act of the firſt and fifth of Edward 6. it is expreſly ſaid, There ſhall be two ſufficient Witneſſes in caſe of Treaſon: ſo that that hath made an Alteration of what was in the Common Law before; one Witneſs was enough before, now two Witneſſes are requiſite: and we conceive, the words lawful and ſufficient conclude ſuch Perſons. If there be not any ſuch, we are not to ſay we know, or know not: but if ſo be any Perſon is drawn to make ſuch a Teſtimony for the Preſervation of his Life, and ſhall make ſuch an Expreſſion, we think, that tho it is true he is a Perſon that is attainted, yet he is a Perſon that is thus drawn, and we think he is not ſuch a Witneſs as is intended, eſpecially in ſuch a Caſe as this is, where the Tryal of the Fact is before your Lordſhip, which is both Jury and Judge to try the Fact, and determine the Law; and therefore perhaps here will be a more rigorous Expectation who ſhould be, and who ſhould not be a ſufficient Witneſs, than in caſe it were a bare Tryal by Jury: there may be thoſe Exceptions alledged againſt a Witneſs when the Tryal is as now it is, that may not be when a Tryal is by a Jury; and therefore if ſo be that a Party be thus drawn to teſtify for the Preſervation of his Life, we think that this is not ſuch a lawful and ſufficient Witneſs as is required in ſuch a Caſe. Next of all, it is ſaid in the Paper, That they have detected themſelves, being Parties of as deep a Guilt as the Perſon that is accuſed. I will not diſpute that at this time; for it is not the Caſe, whether a Perſon that is a Plotter and Confederate with one that commits Treaſon, may be a Witneſs; but when a Perſon is detected by lawful Authority, before the Charge exhibited, whether ſuch a Perſon who is ſo detected, whoſe Life is in the hands of the State, be one of theſe competent Witneſſes, we muſt leave it to your Judgment in that: but we think he is not a competent Witneſs; for there is not a bare Accuſation of a Perſon, but (as the Caſe is ſtated to us) by a Perſon that ſhould be examined, and confeſs himſelf guilty of thoſe things whereof Mr. Love is impeached, and that before the Charge is exhibited. My Lord, the next Matter is concerning the Plurality of Witneſſes, the number of them; we think, under favour, with ſubmiſſion, that in this caſe ſuppoſe the Charge had been ſingly upon one Act of Treaſon, we conceive, that in

in that caſe there is a neceſſity of two Perſons to prove that Charge: If the Charge be upon ſeveral Acts of Treaſon, be the Charge ſo; yet if you will bring them within any one of the Acts, you muſt have two Witneſſes to bring them within that Act. For ſuppoſe a Man were indicted of Treaſon heretofore for levying of War, and another Treaſon for adhering to the Enemies, and another Treaſon for counterfeiting of the Coin, or thoſe kind of things; theſe are ſeveral Treaſons, tho they are all put into one Information, and haply may be put, in caſe of neceſſity, into one Indictment, as here are ſeveral Acts put into one Charge. But now a Proof of Treaſon within one of the Acts by one Witneſs, and a Proof of a Treaſon within another of the Acts by another Witneſs, will not be eſteemed and accounted a Proof by two Witneſſes; for it muſt be a Proof, not that he is within the Charge, but within that part of the Charge upon which he is to be arraigned: and here is not a proving each diſtinct part of the Charge by two Witneſſes, as the Statute requires. And then to come nearer, ſuppoſe the Charge were but upon one Act, as that he held Correſpondence with the Scots, and did invite them, &c. I conceive that in this caſe, under favour, that that particular Act with which you will charge him to be a Traytor within any one Law, muſt be proved by two Witneſſes. The Star-Chamber Courſe, I know what it was, that in caſe there were one general Charge, and then it did deſcend to ſeveral Particulars; one Witneſs would ſerve for one, and another to another, and a third to a third, and theſe ſhould make up two Witneſſes to convict the Party: but we are not now in a Proceeding of Star-Chamber, that is laid by, it was not altogether ſo regular in all things; and then we are not in a thing barely criminal, but in a Caſe of Life; and not in the Caſe of Life ordinarily, but in a Caſe wherein a Party is accuſed of Treaſon, wherein the Statute doth provide that there ſhall be two Witneſſes (as I conceive) to ſwear to the ſame thing, by which you would bring him within it; otherwiſe they ſtand as ſingle Witneſſes, every one apart. I have heard of a Caſe (I have not had ſo much time as to look into it) concerning Mr. Rolph, indicted at Wincheſter; I will not ſo much as repeat over the Caſe upon my Credit to the Court; but I take it, it was thus: He was indicted for ſomewhat about the Perſon of the King; one Witneſs depoſed about the preſenting of a Piſtol, or that he ſaid he would; another about poiſoning, or that he ſaid he would: theſe two things did conclude in one and the ſame Act; and tho they concluded in one and the ſame as Evidences, complicated Evidences to make good one Charge, and either of them had been ſufficient, if proved by two; yet as I am informed (this is the Inconvenience, upon the ſudden we cannot offer it upon the confidence of our own Knowledge, which a little time would make us wholly decline the mentioning of it, or affirm it upon our Credit; but this I am informed) was not held a Caſe proved by two Witneſſes: and if that be ſo, then I conceive theſe Steps; the firſt will be agreed, that the Proof of ſeveral Charges by ſeveral Witneſſes, againſt ſeveral Acts, will not make a Proof by two Witneſſes; it muſt be a Proof by two Witneſſes againſt one Act. Therefore the Proof of any thing againſt the Act of the 17th of July 1649, and another Proof of a thing done againſt the Act of the 30th of January 1648, and another for a thing done againſt the Act of the 2d of Auguſt 1650; here the Offences are ſeveral, the Treaſons ſeveral, and the Witneſſes to either ſtand ſingly by themſelves. How the Caſe of the Fact is upon the Proof, I cannot tell; that is, whether this falls out to be the Caſe. But again, if the Charge were ſingle, as now upon the Act of the 30th of January 1648, for proclaiming of the King, or promoting the Prince of Wales's Intereſt to be King of England; we think, with ſubmiſſion, (which we ſhall leave to your Judgment) that in that caſe there is a neceſſity of two Witneſſes to ſpeak to one thing; and not one to ſupply one part, and another to ſupply another: That ſhall be as much as I ſhall ſay concerning that; and I could wiſh that we had had ſo much time as to look into it, to inquire what the Truth of that Caſe was which was try'd at Wincheſter, as I take it. Now for the other Matter, that is, Whether Miſpriſion of Treaſon, Concealment of Treaſon, be Treaſon; if that be not inſiſted upon.

Attorn. Gen. No, no.

Mr. Hale. Under favour, the Law is, That Concealment of Treaſon is not Treaſon; but if that be not inſiſted upon, then the Queſtion of the Fact is, Whether there be any more than a Proof of a Concealment, or of a Miſpriſion of Treaſon? which if ſo be it be not, I can ſay no more.

Attorn. Gen. Truly, my Lord, I did intend to ſpeak to that of Mr. Love's Caſe, and as of his making, but not now of his making, but as he hath made it formerly; ſurely, it is a great deal of Patience and Favour you have afforded him, that for Matter of Fact and Law you have heard it all over again. As for that firſt, of the Competency of the Teſtimony, I ſhall remember his own Diviſion; Firſt, of the Charge; Secondly, of the Witneſſes and the Teſtimony; the Third, concerning himſelf; and the Fourth, his humble Propoſals to the Court. One part of his Defence was concerning the Witneſſes and Teſtimony, that he made a long Defence to; and if it be not good Evidence, that Parties that are of the ſame Robberies may not accuſe their Fellow-Thieves, I think ſome muſt be unhanged that have been hanged: but that I ſhall not ſpeak to, for I think not that Mr. Hale's Judgment leads him to it; but if they were threatned, and ſhould be made afraid of their Lives, that were ſomewhat; but that is not the Caſe here. The next is for two Witneſſes: I might ſay, that by the Common Law of England one Witneſs was enough before the Law of quinto Edwardi ſexti was made; for elſe it was not needful to be made. And Mr. Hale knows again, that as to Tryal, thoſe Laws are repealed. But not to trouble you with theſe things, or to ſay wherein they muſt concur, I did crave the Favour of you to read the Witneſſes as they depoſed, and I did tell you when it was by Hear-ſay, and when upon Knowledge, and when by two, three, and four, to ſeveral Acts of Mr. Love's own acting, two, three, four Witneſſes, I think they are number enough to accuſe, and detect a Perſon of as high Quality. And for the laſt, for Miſpriſion of Treaſon, Mr. Love hath ſaid that which never came into my Thoughts, that ſuch Actings done by Mr. Love could be judged Miſpriſion; he that acted with them, conſulted, and debated, and plotted, gave his Judgment one way, moved to raiſe Money, received Intelligence, all brought to his Houſe, and tranſacted there: I would appeal to Mr. Hale's Judgment, whether this could be Miſpriſion of Treaſon, when a Party acts in it, hath the Meetings at his own Houſe, and hath there

Debates

Debates of Commiſſions, and Inſtructions, and Letters; I think this goes as far beyond Miſpriſion, as Treaſon is beyond Miſpriſion. But ſeeing theſe are new Caſes before you, you have ſpent enough of your time, I ſhall not ſpend more to argue the Caſes that are not.

Mr. Love. I humbly crave leave, that ſeeing my Counſel ſome of them are rejected by the Court, as not fit to plead before you; and ſeeing another of them, Mr. Maynard, the Neceſſity of his Affairs is ſuch, he could not be here this day to plead here; and ſeeing this worthy Gentleman came here unprepared, whoſe Face I never ſaw till this Morning; therefore I humbly pray there may be more Time and Counſel aſſigned me, with your Favour and Leave, that they may fully debate the Argument before you, thoſe Matters of the Law which are under his Hand, and the Hands of the two worthy Gentlemen rejected by you to plead here, that others may be added to Mr. Hale to plead the Matters of Law before you, and that I may have a Copy of the Charge.

Attorn. Gen. I hope we have had Delays enough, it is with the Court, now we have done.

Mr. Love. And, Sir, there are Witneſſes here preſent that will prove that which Mr. Attorney-General thought none could prove, to wit, not only general Threats, if they would not confeſs in the general, but Promiſes of Favour, and Threatning of Death if they would not teſtify againſt me in particular: and I have manifold Exceptions touching the Incompetency not only of Number, but Quality. One Witneſs ſaid, he could not in Conſcience, and did not ſwear till he was threatned, nay, fined by you, and drawn out of the Court: Another Witneſs had Money laid to him by Cobbet, which was given his Wife, which did ſeem to conceal the Bribery the more; but he confeſſed himſelf, that the Money was laid down in his Houſe, and given him to make uſe of, and to be the Price of my Blood (Sir) to teſtify againſt me. I have Witneſſes to produce, Major Adams ſaid, he ſhould be hanged, if he did not teſtify againſt me; for he had given Information, and been in hire for many Months together. Major Cobbet, and three other Meſſengers have come to him, and offered him Preferment, for four Months together, if he would reveal what he calls a Deſign againſt the Commonwealth; and he hath not revealed this, till he had theſe Promiſes of Preferment, and did not declare againſt me till he was threatned by Death if he did not do it: therefore I beſeech you hear what Witneſſes I can bring in, to invalidate the Teſtimonies of theſe Men.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, it ſeems I muſt be for all. Now Mr. Love begins with the Court, that you threatned them, and puniſhed them: I appeal to all here, whether a Witneſs brought into a Court in Matter of Property, and refuſe to take his Oath, whether that Court be not bound in juſtice to puniſh him; and yet if he ſhall ſee his Error, and ſubmit himſelf to do that which to Juſtice belongs, then (I think) it is Juſtice and Mercy in you to remit him of both: and that it is the Caſe of this Gentleman; in Conſcience he could not ſwear againſt him, a Conſcience well wrought upon; he could not in Conſcience ſwear againſt him: for him it was done in the Court, and by the Court, and (I think) undeniably juſtified.

Mr. Love. He is not under an Oath to this day, he hath declared it himſelf.

Attorn. Gen. This is to ſatisfy other Men, but it is not ſo regular and orderly to be done: but my Lord and the Court are pleaſed to give you a fair Hearing and Proceedings, that no Exceptions may be taken to it. There was another that was as good as his Word, that he could not find in his Conſcience to ſwear againſt Mr. Love, and that was a Miniſter; that Conſcience deſerved to be rectified more than five hundred Pound comes to, and perpetual Impriſonment: that Man that cannot find in his Conſcience to judge him that was a godly Perſon (as he thought) and againſt him he muſt not give witneſs, not for Treaſon, not to ſave a Commonwealth; and he hath had your Sentence, and moſt juſtly: I think all that was, was too little, my Lord. Then for the reſt, this is a Diſcourſe to ſatisfy People, the Spectators here; for ſurely theſe are Extravagancies, and total Irregularities; he hath had his time to except, and heard to except, and ſaid all that he hath ſaid now: and ſo there is nothing more to be done, but now for us to reſt in your Judgments what you will do further.

Mr. Love. I beſeech you, I acquainted your Lordſhip and the Court, that ſome of the Witneſſes were not well, others I could not get them here preſent, but did make offer to bring Witneſſes to prove againſt Major Adams, that he hath confeſſed himſelf he was threatned with Death if he did not inform againſt me; and he ſaid theſe words, He could not tell whether he ſhould in Conſcience think rather better to be hanged, than to come in againſt me; and he could ſwear only Generals, and could not ſwear that ever I did write or receive Letters. And Mr. Jaquel himſelf, ſince he was ſent away from the Court, hath ſaid he was not under an Oath.

Attorn. Gen. What Courſe ſhall we hold? If you will not be regular, let the Court be regular: had you not time for to do it then? Did he not demand Indemnity for them? And rather than he would produce others to hurt themſelves, he would rather die himſelf firſt.

Mr. Love. But theſe are not under a Crime; I beſeech you, the Court would be tender in Matters of Blood.

Attorn. Gen. Be tender of Juſtice.

Ld Preſident. I would you had been ſo too.

Mr. Love. This Man declares himſelf he is not under an Oath to this day, he did but put his Hand upon his Buttons.

Ld Preſident. Thoſe were your very words, and very uncivil and indiſcreet; you have not ſpoke at any time yet, but you have hurt yourſelf more than any body elſe hath, and yet your Language is ſo liberal, that no Man ſhall eſcape the Laſh of your Tongue.

Mr. Love, I fear no Man, my Lord.

Attorn. Gen. That is a bold word.

Ld Preſident. You have as ill Comments as any Man that wears a Cap; your Guiltineſs appears in this you ſay; we have heard all this that you require before: thoſe very words that you ſay of this Man now particularly, go to them firſt, that he was ſaying, he was not under an Oath: It was ſaid ſo again and again, and again at that time we brought him, and before he was examined, holding up his Hand, we asked him it, and he ſaid, he did; and put it to him again and again, Are you under an Oath? till at laſt he did conclude and teſtify he was under an Oath. I teſtify this before all the Company here, this is noiſed abroad again by many People, the Care we had of that very Man you ſpeak of; you asked him three or four times times then, and at the laſt, upon the Concluſion, he confeſſed himſelf he was under an Oath: he did not do as you do, you will ſay things are Truth, but you will not ſpeak thoſe Truths before God in a teſtimonial way; though ſome of your Witneſſes that proved it, ſaid it was true in the preſence of God, what they gave under their hands: Theſe Men that do thus, are no better than Jeſuits in Reality, though not in Name. You made a Confeſſion of Miſpriſion of Treaſon you ſaid, but you have confeſſed Treaſon. I will tell you who did the like in the very words almoſt that you did, and that was Father Garnet, when he came to ſee the Evidence produced ſo full againſt him by thoſe that were Participes Criminis, as you are, himſelf confeſſed when he came to the laſt. Had I thought (ſaid he) that the State had had ſuch clear Proof againſt me, I would have ingenuouſly confeſſed it, and not trifled with them as I have done. So you ſaid, you did not think it would have been proved ſo far as Miſpriſion: but when it was proved ſufficiently in your Apprehenſion, and convicted, and your Counſel had informed you it could not be leſs than Miſpriſion, then you would ingenuouſly confeſs; ſo did Garnet. The other Witneſs that was threatned, it was teſtified by a worthy Captain; I ſpeak it again, was not it debated as much as the Wit of Man could? Did you not object that then, that you do now? And did not the Court then ſatisfy you, or at leaſt ſatisfy themſelves that it was not ſo? For I tell you, in that very thing wherein you ſay he was threatned, it was told you, That the Captain that was here then, depoſed what he had done, and how he had done it, and at what time it was delivered; for you were diſcovered long before that, and your Examinations taken long before that. Upon this, now when your Treaſon was diſcovered and declared by ſeveral Witneſſes, and that ſuch a one was in Confederacy; and I think the State might ſafely promiſe him Life, and Reward too; for there is more in the Plot yet, than is yet found out, and that ſome are like to hear of within this fortnight, that were here, which is a dangerous thing: but this you did declare, and the Court was ſatisfied, that all that was promiſed as a Reward, was for diſcovering of a Plot againſt the State; and that was lawful by the Laws of God and Man. And now you bring Witneſs; you were at firſt demanded, whether you would bring them or no? and you asked Indemnity for them; and the next time you denied, you would bring none; and now you asked, What you have to offer to the Court? and after all this time, what come you to do now? To prove that that was acted here in the Court: you ſay, we threatned them; true, that we did threaten ſome; and I think we went thus far, that if he would not, we would ſet five hundred Pounds Fine upon his Head; but he would none of that, but came in again, and delivered his Knowledge. But you had another of your own Robe too that came in, and he would not teſtify, and why? His Conſcience was tender; his Science was perfect enough to ſpeak againſt you, for he was Confederate with you, and hath confeſſed enough of it; but his Conſcience was tender. No Man can tell here whoſe Conſcience is crazy and tender: Conſcience is a thing betwixt God and Man only; and they that lay nothing upon their Conſciences to prove their Integrity, they had as good ſay nothing before a Judge: For though we have a Law of Conſcience in England, yet that Law is judged by Rules: and therefore he, whoever he be that pretends Conſcience, there are ſo many Conſciences, as there are Men; and no Men have Power to judge of it but God. But, Sir, for that cauſe that he would not for his tender Conſcience, we did ſet a Fine of 500 l. upon him, and ſentenced him to the Fleet till he paid it. We call not this terrifying, neither doth the Law; nor any Reward, Favour or Affection, for the Diſcovery of a Traytor, is no illegal Act: this we told you before, but you muſt have it again and again, and again; ſo that you may delay, no time ſhall be omitted by you.

Mr. Love. I have but a few words more: your Lordſhip was pleaſed to ſay, that you could juſtify promiſing Rewards to thoſe that would diſcover, and threatning Puniſhments to thoſe that would not; but you ſaid, if I could prove promiſing of Rewards or Threatnings to them that would not teſtify againſt me, they ſhould be heard: now I produce not Witneſſes in general, that they were promiſed Favour, or threatned if they would or would not; but I offer to produce Witneſſes that can witneſs againſt ſome of the particular Witneſſes that ſaid, They ſhould be hang'd, if they did not witneſs againſt me: and this, as your Lordſhip promiſed, I humbly crave.

Attorn. Gen. Truly, he will not want Suggeſtions, he hath had his time to prove it; and one Favour I ſhall beg of the Court, that this your Patience to Mr. Love, your juſt Favour toward him, may be no Precedent hereafter; but for this, when we cloſed the Evidence Saturday was ſevennight for the Commonwealth, he had till Wedneſday following to make his Defence. For his Witneſſes he offered them, you offered to receive them; he ſaid, he would have none, now he comes to offer: we produce you no new Witneſs, nor offered nothing ſince Saturday was ſevennight; if we come to Witneſſes again, we ſhall come to an aſperſing one another; we ſhall make it a pretty endleſs Work; we have done our parts, and followed the Rules of Juſtice; and Mr. Love hath had his full Liberty to juſtify, to ſay what he could, and prove what he could for himſelf; if he neglect his own time, to his own Peril be it; the Court, I hope, will not be guilty of it, to alter the ways of Juſtice.

Mr. Love. I could not compel Witneſſes, there was no Subpœna's; but they muſt come when they offer themſelves.

Ld Preſident. You were asked, and you would produce none.

Mr. Love. They were not in a Capacity to come, my Lord.

Attorn. Gen. There is nothing reſting more to be done, but now all being done (if you pleaſe, my Lord, all being done) for the Iſſue of the Fact, all his Exceptions to the Impeachments, which are Matters of Law, we are now humbly craving your Judgment upon this Impeachment between the Keepers of the Liberty of England, and Maſter Love the Priſoner at the Bar. I now humbly demand your Judgment.

Mr. Love. I humbly pray, that ſince I never ſaw the Face of this worthy Gentleman till this Morning, and ſo could have no particular Advice from him, that there might be longer time allowed to this Gentleman, and an Addition of three Gentlemen more, and a Copy of the Charge.

Attorn. Gen. You have had more than ordinary Priſoners have had before, I will aſſure you, Mr. Love.

Ld Preſident. Mr. Hale, you have heard a little opened of our Paſſages and Proceedings which you did not before, but every Man elſe hath lift up his Voice; you have gone over a great deal of the Fact: now now for Matter of Law, for that of Miſpriſion, that will reſt, I think, in the Judgment of the Court; there is no Miſpriſion laid, but Treaſon: and I think the Court will find Treaſon upon the Proofs that are before them; they will not need to have any Argument of Miſpriſion, if the Court think there is ſufficient Treaſon laid, then that Argument, we need not deſire more time for that; and if it be Miſpriſion, that the Court ſhall judge it ſo, then upon the Matter there is no Charge againſt him for us to proceed upon; ſo that by that Charge, I cannot ſee what you can ground your Argument upon.

Mr. Hale. The Charge is not only for Treaſon, but for Treaſon and other high Crimes and Miſdemeanours.

Attorn. Gen. But not Miſpriſion.

Mr. Hale. Though the Word be not in, we think it will reach it.

Ld Preſident. It will not indeed.

Attorn. Gen. We inſiſt upon it for the Commonwealth, for the Charge is as it is laid.

Ld Preſident. For the two next, ſo I told Mr. Love before, and he ſpent two Hours at the leaſt in recapitulating the Evidence of the State, not any thing of his own, for he gave no Witneſſes; but he did go over the whole Evidence of the State from Point to Point, and made, I think, himſelf (as he ſaid) the Exceptions that were made againſt them: theſe he went over, though we might have ſhut him up at the firſt. For him to ſum up that which was the Duty of the Court, when he had no Evidence, to ſum up the Evidence of the State, which we might not have let him: but this he did; and it is our part to examine the Evidences, and the Nature of them, and what the Nature of the Thing is, and how many Witneſſes are to every Point; whether there be two Witneſſes to a Point or no, cannot fall under Diſpute of Law, it is Matter of Fact.

Mr. Hale. It is true, we are here only to do that Duty which your Lordſhip injoins us to, my Lord. It is true, for us to diſpute whether this Evidence proveth ſuch a thing or no; haply it may not belong to us to do that. But thus far, if your Lordſhip think fit, this may haply be allowable (with Submiſſion to the Court) that is, Whether, if the Proofs be admitted, this Man poſitively proves thus, the other Man proves poſitively thus; whether that theſe two Proofs do make a Proof of one Act? Haply (if your Lordſhip ſhall think ſo fit) there may be ſomewhat of Law in that; that is, whether it make a double Teſtimony within the Statute of Primo and Quinto. For (with Submiſſion to your Lordſhip) the Statute of Primo and Quinto is not repealed as to point of Teſtimony; it is repealed as to the Place from whence the Tryal is to come, but not in point of Witneſſes; therein it may come in, queſtionleſs, if your Lordſhip ſhall think fit. But truly, I have not ſeen one word of the Evidence from the Beginning to the End: and if ſo be that any Matter ſhould riſe, that the Court ſhould think fit) as well as proper for me to offer in the Defence of this Gentleman, I muſt profeſs I cannot, unleſs I had ſeen the things; for I have not ſeen one word.

Ld Preſident. For ſeeing the Evidence further than Memory, you, nor no Man elſe ought to know, tho we have given leave to write; and therefore tho we have given leave to take notice of them, yet that is more than ever any Court did, or we need to have done, but only to truſt to their own Memories. But in that you ſpeak of now, for you to have Day to argue, when you are not able to ſay, nor we neither, that there is any ſuch thing; did you ever hear ſuch a thing, to pray Day to argue, that you do not know poſitively it is ſo?

Attorn. Gen. We have ſpent a great deal of time, and all that can be ſaid, will be to run a round; what is to be done, is your own Conſultation among your ſelves.

Ld Preſident. Withdraw your Priſoner.

Mr. Love. I beſeech you, allow me time for Counſel.

The Court adjourns.

The Sixth Day's Proceedings, July the 5*th,* 1651.

THERE was but little ſaid this day beſides the Sentence. When Mr. Love appeared at the Bar, the Attorney-General ſpake to the Court to this purpoſe; That there had been much time ſpent, and Mr. Love had had a fair Tryal, and therefore he deſired the Court to proceed to Sentence. Upon which the Lord Preſident ſpake to Mr. Love to this effect; That he had heard what the Attorney-General deſired in the behalf of the Commonwealth; and therefore demanded of Mr. Love what he had to ſay why Sentence ſhould not be paſs'd upon him? Mr. Love anſwered, That he had ſomewhat to ſay, and deſired longer time, and more Counſel to argue thoſe Matters of Law contained in that Paper that he had formerly given into the Court: But the Court would not yield to him in it. Then Mr. Love would have ſpoken further, but the Lord Preſident told him, he would ſpeak ad Populum. Mr. Love anſwered, No, he would ſpeak ad Magiſtratum. But the Court preſently overruled him in it, and would not ſuffer him to ſpeak. Then the Lord Preſident told Mr. Love, That he had gone out of his Place and Calling in what he had done. Then ſpeaking ſomething about an Elder, That an Elder was one that was ſo, either in reſpect of his Age, or in reſpect of his Office, with ſome other things about Presbytery; and when he had done, he commanded the Clerk to read the Sentence, which was in this manner: the Clerk read over the whole Charge, beginning thus; Whereas Chriſtopher Love the Priſoner at the Bar, ſtands charged (on the behalf of the Keepers of the Liberties of England, &c.) of High Treaſon, and other High Crimes and Offences, &c. [and ſo he read on as it is in the Charge; and ending thus] For all which Treaſons, and traitorous and wicked Practices of him the ſaid Chriſtopher Love, this Court doth adjudge him to ſuffer the Pains of Death, by having his Head ſevered from his Body.

Mr. Love. My Lord, I would ſpeak a word.

Ld Preſident. You cannot be heard now, Mr. Love.

Mr. Love. But a word, my Lord, and 'tis this, in the words of the Apoſtle; I have received the Sentence of Death in my ſelf, that I ſhould not truſt in my ſelf, but in God, which raiſeth the Dead. And, my Lord, though you have condemned me, yet this I can ſay, that neither God, nor my own Conſcience doth condemn me.

Mr. Love withdraws, and the Lieutenant of the Tower takes him into cuſtody.

The

The Tryal of Mr. JOHN GIBBONS, in Weſtminſter-Hall, before the High Court of Juſtice; beginning July 18. 1651.

POTTER and Gibbons were both brought to the Bar together.

Potter's Charge was firſt read, unto which he pleaded Guilty, and made a large Narrative of all his Crimes againſt the State: very much was he examined againſt Maſter Gibbons, but no hurt at all he did him. After they had done with him, the Charge of Maſter Gibbons was read, which when he heard, he ſpake in this manner.

Gibbons. My Lord, this Charge is very new to me; I have been a Priſoner under cloſe Impriſonment for many Weeks together, and never knew before this time what it was, in particular, that was laid to my Charge: And now I do hear my particular Accuſation, it is ſo ſtrange to me, that I do not know what to ſay to it at the firſt hearing; therefore I humbly beſeech your Lordſhip, that I may hear it read again.

Attorney-General. My Lord, Maſter Gibbons heard Potter's Charge read, which was very like to his own; ſo he hath heard it twice already: however, my Lord, he may hear it read again; for he may hear it thrice.

Keble. Come let him read it again, he is a young Man, let him have what Favour he may have: mark it well, now you hear it again.

After reading, Maſter Gibbons ſpake in this manner:

Gibbons. My Lord, I am brought hither by an Order of this Court, which Order mentions a Charge of Treaſon exhibited againſt me; I ſhould betray the Liberty I am born unto, if I ſhould not deſire a Tryal, according to the Fundamental Laws of this Nation, which is by a Jury of my Neighbourhood: the Benefits and Advantages are exceeding great, therefore I do earneſtly crave to have them.

Keble. The State hath thought of another way of Tryal, which you muſt have, and ſubmit to; this is beſt for your Advantage, and more honourable than any other you can have; therefore you muſt plead Guilty or Not Guilty.

Gibbons. My Lord, I ſhall never be ſo prodigal of my Blood, as to throw away my Life, by refuſing a Tryal before you, though I am not ſatisfied in this new way of Tryal; yet I ſhall not refuſe to plead, in Confidence of my own Innocency, and in hope of your Tenderneſs in Matters of Blood. But before I plead, and anſwer to my Charge, I have this humble Motion to make.

Here he ſpake very much on the firſt Day of his Tryal, moving very much for Counſel; but after he had uſed many Arguments to perſuade the Court to incline to it, and could not have it, he deſired the Court to be the Counſel for him, and take care of his Life, and not ſuffer him by his own Ignorance, to weave a Web for his own Ruin and Deſtruction. After much ſaid of this nature, he pleaded Not Guilty: the which being entred in the Book, they proceeded to the Tryal.

Attorn. Gen. The Attorney-General began with a long Speech, how Maſter Gibbons had plotted and contrived theſe Treaſons; named the Meetings and the Places, where he ſaid it began preſently after the late King's Death, under the pretence of getting the King to Scotland; but the Truth was, they intended to ſettle him upon this Commonwealth. And further, That he the ſaid John Gibbons, as a falſe Traytor, and out of a malicious and wicked Purpoſe and Deſign to raiſe Inſurrections in this Nation, did ſeveral Days and Times in the Years 1648, 49, 50, and 51. and at divers other Times and Places within this Commonwealth, together with Chriſtopher Love, Piercy, Jermin, Maſſey, &c. and other their Complices, being falſe Traytors to this Commonwealth, traitorouſly, malicioufly complot, contrive and endeavour to raiſe Forces againſt this Commonwealth, ſettled in way of a Free State, without King or Houſe of Lords; and for the Subverſion of the ſame, did raiſe and collect divers great Sums of Money, and did hold Intelligence by Letters, Meſſages and Inſtructions, with Charles Stuart, Son of the late King, and with the Queen his Mother, and divers other Perſons, being falſe Traytors to this Commonwealth.

And further, he the ſaid John Gibbons, together with Chriſtopher Love, William Drake, Piercy, Jermin, &c. and other their Complices, ſince the Death of the late King, ſeveral Days and Times in the Years aforeſaid, within this Commonwealth of England, and elſewhere, did traitorouſly and malicioufly declare, publiſh and promote Charles Stuart, Son of the late King, commonly called the Prince of Wales, to be King of England, meaning, of this Commonwealth.

And further, to carry on the ſaid Deſign, he the ſaid John Gibbons ſeveral Days and Times in the reſpective Years aforeſaid, together with Chriſtopher Love, William Drake, Piercy, &c. did endeavour to procure the Scots to invade this Commonwealth of England.

And further, That he the ſaid John Gibbons on the 6th of April 1650. and on divers other Days and Times between the 29th Day of March 1650. and the firſt Day of June 1651. at London, and elſewhere, did give, uſe, and hold Correſpondence with the ſaid Charles Stuart, Son of the late King, and the Queen his Mother, Jermin, Piercy, &c.

And further, to accompliſh the ſaid Deſigns, he the ſaid John Gibbons, on the 6th Day of April 1651. at the Places afore-mentioned, did hold, and give Correſpondence and Intelligence with divers Perſons of the Scotiſh Nation, as Argyle, Lowdon, Lothian, &c. Enemies to this Commonwealth, and adhering to the King in the War againſt them.

now for Matter of Law, for that of Miſpriſion, that will reſt, I think, in the Judgment of the Court; there is no Miſpriſion laid, but Treaſon: and I think the Court will find Treaſon upon the Proofs that are before them; they will not need to have any Argument of Miſpriſion, if the Court think there is ſufficient Treaſon laid, then that Argument, we need not deſire more time for that; and if it be Miſpriſion, that the Court ſhall judge it ſo, then upon the Matter there is no Charge againſt him for us to proceed upon; ſo that by that Charge, I cannot ſee what you can ground your Argument upon.

Mr. Hale. The Charge is not only for Treaſon, but for Treaſon and other high Crimes and Miſdemeanours.

Attorn. Gen. But not Miſpriſion.

Mr. Hale. Though the Word be not in, we think it will reach it.

Ld Preſident. It will not indeed.

Attorn. Gen. We inſiſt upon it for the Commonwealth, for the Charge is as it is laid.

Ld Preſident. For the two next, ſo I told Mr. Love before, and he ſpent two Hours at the leaſt in recapitulating the Evidence of the State, not any thing of his own, for he gave no Witneſſes; but he did go over the whole Evidence of the State from Point to Point, and made, I think, himſelf (as he ſaid) the Exceptions that were made againſt them: theſe he went over, though we might have ſhut him up at the firſt. For him to ſum up that which was the Duty of the Court, when he had no Evidence, to ſum up the Evidence of the State, which we might not have let him: but this he did; and it is our part to examine the Evidences, and the Nature of them, and what the Nature of the Thing is, and how many Witneſſes are to every Point; whether there be two Witneſſes to a Point or no, cannot fall under Diſpute of Law, it is Matter of Fact.

Mr. Hale. It is true, we are here only to do that Duty which your Lordſhip injoins us to, my Lord. It is true, for us to diſpute whether this Evidence proveth ſuch a thing or no; haply it may not belong to us to do that. But thus far, if your Lordſhip think fit, this may haply be allowable (with Submiſſion to the Court) that is, Whether, if the Proofs be admitted, this Man poſitively proves thus, the other Man proves poſitively thus; whether that theſe two Proofs do make a Proof of one Act? Haply (if your Lordſhip ſhall think ſo fit) there may be ſomewhat of Law in that; that is, whether it make a double Teſtimony within the Statute of Primo and Quinto. For (with Submiſſion to your Lordſhip) the Statute of Primo and Quinto is not repealed as to point of Teſtimony; it is repealed as to the Place from whence the Tryal is to come, but not in point of Witneſſes; therein it may come in, queſtionleſs, if your Lordſhip ſhall think fit. But truly, I have not ſeen one word of the Evidence from the Beginning to the End: and if ſo be that any Matter ſhould riſe, that the Court ſhould think fit) as well as proper for me to offer in the Defence of this Gentleman, I muſt profeſs I cannot, unleſs I had ſeen the things; for I have not ſeen one word.

Ld Preſident. For ſeeing the Evidence further than Memory, you, nor no Man elſe ought to know, tho we have given leave to write; and therefore tho we have given leave to take notice of them, yet that is more than ever any Court did, or we need to have done, but only to truſt to their own Memories. All which wicked Practices and Deſigns of him the ſaid John Gibbons were againſt this Commonwealth, Parliament, and People; and in manifeſt Contempt of the Laws of this Nation and Acts of Parliament, in ſuch Caſes made and provided.

[After he had ended, the Witneſſes were called: The firſt was Major Adams; the ſecond Colonel Barton; the third was Captain Hatſell; the fourth Colonel Baines; the fifth Major Alford; the ſixth Captain Far; the ſeventh was Maſter Jaquel; the eighth was Major Huntington; the ninth Maſter Harvey; the tenth was Major Corbet. Adams being firſt examined, his Teſtimony was to this effect.]

Adams's Teſtimony.

That the Correſpondency of John Gibbons with the reſt aboveſaid, was to endeavour an Agreement between the King and the Scots. The firſt Meeting was at the Swan in Fiſh-Street, where Maſter Gibbons was. At that Place there was only a Conſideration how to carry on the Correſpondency. There was alſo a Petition to be ſent to the King, (as I was informed;) and the Meeting in this Place was in reference to that alſo. There was Letters written to Scotland, and ſome received thence; which Mr. Gibbons was privy to.

After Maſter Drake went away, we met at Maſter Love's Houſe, where Maſter Gibbons met alſo. There were Letters read; and I think Maſter Gibbons did hear them, and did confer about them. The Letters ſent to Jermin, Piercy, &c. at one time or other Maſter Gibbons was preſent, and heard them read. This was before Titus's going away.

Then after there were Letters ſent from the King, which were read at Maſter Love's Houſe; where Maſter Gibbons was preſent, and heard them read. Maſter Gibbons brought likewiſe a rough Draught of the Inſtructions that were to go to Holland.

Alſo there was a Letter read at Mr. Love's from Alderman Bunce, where Maſter Gibbons was preſent. Alſo a Letter after Dunbar-Fight from Scotland, relating how Affairs ſtood there, (and that Letter, as I remember, was for Arms and Money) was read at Maſter Love's Houſe; where Maſter Gibbons was preſent at the reading of it.

Maſter Gibbons was a conſtant Man at all Meettings.

A Letter was ſent from Maſſey, read at Maſter Love's, for Arms and Money: Maſter Gibbons was preſent. And three or four hundred Pounds agreed to be ſent.

A Letter was written to the Eſtates of Scotland, to procure Maſſey and the Engliſh to be in eſteem.

Maſter Gibbons ſometimes acquainted me where we were to meet.

Lieutenant-Colonel Baines's Teſtimony.

A little while after the Death of the late King, there was a Meeting at the Swan at Dowgate, where ſeveral Perſons were: But whether Mr. Gibbons was there, I know not. But Captain Titus was there, and gave a large Commendation of the young Prince; and moved that a Petition might be drawn up, and ſent to the Prince from the Preſbyterian Party here. There was a Debate upon it; and this Deſign was looked upon as the only viſible Way to preſerve the Presbyterian Party, and to bring the Prince to the Crown.

A while after the Death of the late King I was going into Cannon-Street, and at Dowgate I met with William Drake, who deſired me to meet him at the Swan at Dowgate. When I came there, I found Captain Titus, Lieutenant-Colonel Baines, and divers other Perſons: I believe Mr. Gibbons was not there. I came in while they were in diſcourſe, and I could not well hear them. But at their riſing, I asked Mr. Drake what was the occaſion of their Meetting; and he told me that Captain Titus had given a good Report of the Prince, and did deſire that ſome Addreſſes might be made to him, that thereby he might be taken off from his Cavaliering Counſellors.

After a while William Drake came to me for 10 l. which he ſaid was to furniſh a Friend of his which did want 100 l. He deſired I would not deny him; and becauſe he was a good Cuſtomer to my Houſe, I did lend it him. And after I heard it was for Captain Titus. As for the Priſoner, I think he was not at the Swan at Dowgate; for I did not know him till afterwards.

Major Alford's Teſtimony.

At the Meeting at the Swan at Dowgate, where divers were, Captain Titus made a large Narration of the Prince's Deportment, declaring how inclinable he was to caſt off his Cavaliering Adherents, if he were but aſſured there was a People in England that ſtuck to their Covenant; he was weary of his other Counſels, and was ready to apply himſelf to the Ends of the Covenant.

A Petition was brought to the Bear in Bread-Street, where it was read, and debated among us, and agreed to be drawn up; and Captain Titus and Drake were ſent away with it.

I do not remember that Maſter Gibbons was at either of theſe Meetings.

There was Money raiſed for Titus: Drake had 10 l. of me; he had it in private. Captain Titus had 30 l. for his Journey. He went over twice, I think; and if ſo, the ſecond time Maſter Gibbons was there. The ſecond time I ſaw Maſter Gibbons, he brought me to his Chamber; and the third time he and I went with ſome Papers to Graveſend, agreed on at Maſter Love's. Theſe Papers were either a Commiſſion, or Inſtructions, or both together in one. But this was the Subſtance, That the Lord Willoughby, and others, ſhould go to the Treaty at Breda, and to preſs the King concerning this Agreement with Scotland.

Maſter Gibbons was at Maſter Love's Houſe when the Commiſſion and Inſtructions were agreed upon. He and I went to Graveſend; and (I think) he carried the Papers. But of this I am ſure, That he knew the end of our going. We tarried there all Night; and delivered the Papers to Mr. Maſon.

I did go to Calais when I came back; but I do not know whether the Papers that I brought over (being read at Maſter Love's Houſe) were read all at one time, or not: If they were, then Maſter Gibbons was there.

I was preſent when the Letters came, after Dunbar-Fight, at Mr. Love's. The Letters came from Colonel Maſſey: They gave an Account of the Fight there, and of the State of Affairs; and withal, withal, writ for Money and Arms, to be ſent by way of Holland. I cannot ſay Mr. Gibbons was preſent. There was Money agreed upon there to be raiſed for Maſſey and Titus. Mr. Gibbons was many times at the Swan at Dowgate; he was conſtant at the Club. But after Mr. Drake fled, we did take in other Men into the Club: Mr. Gibbons was as little abſent as any Man.

Mr. Gibbons did put me upon it, to ſhew Friendſhip to Mr. Maſon; and he gave me this Reaſon, That ſo Mr. Maſon might repreſent our good Affections to the King: And Mr. Gibbons did deſire me to defray the Charges of that Night's Expences at Graveſend; where Mr. Maſon was telling me, That if I were not allowed it by our Friends, he would do it.

Maſter Harvey's Teſtimony.

I came to the Knowledge of this Deſign at ſeveral Meetings and Places. Mr. Gibbons told me of 2000 l. which was to be ſent into Scotland; and that Maſſey was to land Forces in the Weſt: And concerning my Lord General's Soldiers, that many of them were run away: And concerning the Trained Bands of the North, he ſaid they waited but for one Blow to be given in Scotland. He told me alſo of a Town that was to be delivered.

Major Huntington's Teſtimony.

The firſt that made me acquainted with this Deſign was Mr. Gibbons; who told me, That if I would come to Mr. Love's Houſe, I ſhould hear the News. I went to Mr. Love's: And when I came there, that which I heard was a Paper ſent from Maſſey, Graves, and Titus, brought by Drake, and read by him. Mr. Gibbons was there then: There was many more there in Mr. Love's Cloſet; but I cannot ſay well who they were.

[The Teſtimonies of the reſt of the Witneſſes could not be well heard; neither can they be had, the Books being ſo cloſe kept.]

[After all was ended, Mr. Keble deſired Maſter Gibbons to ſpeak for himſelf.]

Gibbons. My Lord, I have now ſtood here near five Hours, and am both ſpent in my Body and Spirit; and that I am as unable in Body to ſpeak for my ſelf, as I am diſabled to make my Defence without the Court grant me Time, a Copy of my Charge, the Depoſitions of the Witneſſes, and aſſign me Counſel. And therefore, before I plead or anſwer to my Charge, I have this humble Motion to make, (I being a Man altogether ignorant and unacquainted with the Laws) That this Court would be pleaſed, as I ſaid before, to aſſign me Counſel to adviſe me in my Chamber, and to plead for me in the Court; and that your Lordſhip and this Court would be pleaſed to give me a Copy of my Charge, and to aſſign me a Soliicitor, to ſollicit my Buſineſs for me.

Keble. Mr. Gibbons, you muſt proceed to make ſome general Defence for the preſent.

Gibbons. My Lord, I hope you will do as God uſe to do, allow ſome grains of Allowance, that a Man that hath nothing but Weakneſs and Ignorance may help himſelf.

Upon this Motion the Court adjourn'd, and Mr. Gibbons was taken away by the Keeper of Newgate; and thereafter came a Warrant to bring him to the Bar the Wedneſday following. The Reply that Mr. Attorney made to Mr. Gibbons's Appeal we cannot have.

In the mean time there were ſeveral Friends that went to mediate and ſpeak for him to the Judge, who did lay out his Simplicity and Innocency, labouring what they could for the ſaving of his Life. The Judge anſwered, That he was not ſo ſimple as he was ſet out by them; and that he doubted not but he was a Servant to greater Perſons, who had imployed him: But if he would be ingenuous, and diſcover the Parties that were in that Deſign, he would labour to ſave his Life, and do him good; but if he would not confeſs, he could not help him. Yet ſtill they intereeded for him, until at laſt the Judge told one of them, That verily he was perſuaded that he was innocent: But nevertheleſs, if he did not reveal all thoſe whom he knew to have any Knowledge of the Buſineſs beſides himſelf, nothing could be expected but Death. He was extremely deſirous to have a Diſcovery of ſome Perſons of Quality: But Mr. Gibbons conſtantly affirmed he knew of none; neither would he accuſe any; for he had rather die than be a means to ſcandal or hazard any good Man. This he conſtantly affirmed with an undaunted Reſolution to the laſt.

Wedneſday, the ſecond Day's Tryal, July 23.

MAſter Gibbons being brought before the Court, my Lord Keble ſpake as followeth:

Keble. Maſter Gibbons, the Court out of abundance of Favour to you, have given you time from Friday till now, whereby you may be able to make your Defence: Therefore it is now expected you ſhould proceed, and plead what you have to ſay.

Gibbons. My Lord, the laſt time I was before this honourable Court, after I had deſired a Jury, and was denied it, I did in Confidence of my own Innocency, and your Tenderneſs in Matters of Blood, ſubmit to a Tryal, tho I was no way ſatisfied in this new Way of Tryal: But before I could plead, I made this humble Motion, perceiving the Charge againſt me for High Treaſon, was againſt ſeveral Statutes, Laws, and Acts of Parliament, which I never ſaw, heard, or read them in my Life.

My Life and Eſtate thus being drawn into queſtion, my Lord, it did very much concern me to be well adviſed, there being many Things in the Statutes which made for my Advantage, both in my Plea and Defence: Therefore I did humbly beſeech your Lordſhip and this High Court that I might have Counſel in Law aſſigned me, both to adviſe me in my Chamber, and plead for me in this Court, that ſo I might be able to take all thoſe lawful Advantages which the Statutes and Acts of Parliament afford me; which I was not able to do my ſelf, being ignorant of the Laws. This being denied, and I ſeeing I could no way obtain Counſel to preſerve my Life, as I did ſee the State had got great Counſel againſt me, to proſecute me for my Life; I did humbly beſeech your Lordſhip, and this High Court, that you would be ſo far of Counſel for me, a poor Priſoner ſtanding at the Bar, drawn in queſtion before the Juſtice for my Life, that you would not let the learned Counſel of this Commonwealth take any advantage againſt me, thro my Ignorance or want of Skill in the Laws; but that if the Statutes and Acts of Parliament, and Laws of the Land, did afford me any Advantage, which I might over-ſlip through my Ignorance, that your Lordſhip and the Court, out of your Bowels of Compaſſion to a poor Priſoner, would ſtand for me, that I might not have any Wrong done, nor Law denied me, which by right was due unto me. Upon theſe Conſiderations, my Lord, I did plead Not guilty. I do humbly thank your Lordſhip and the Court for the Time you have given me; but as unable to anſwer or ſpeak for my ſelf now, as I was the laſt time I took my leave of this Court, being wholly unfurniſhed, and altogether diſinabled to make my Defence: For when I came back to my Priſon at Newgate, with an Expectation of meeting both the Copy of my Charge, and the Depoſition of the Witneſſes, I found all was taken away from my Notary, whom I brought on purpoſe to this Place to help me therein. Seeing my ſelf thus totally deprived and cut off from all Helps and Hopes of making my Defence, I could not tell whither to go or ſend, but to your Lordſhip, whom I thought, upon my humble Petition, might have granted both a Copy of my Charge, and the Depoſitions of the Witneſſes: But ſeeing that could not be granted, I am left without all Poſſibilities of pleading, or making any Defence. Therefore I do now again, with all Humility, addreſs my ſelf to your Lordſhip and this honourable Court, and do moſt earneſtly deſire a Copy of the Charge, alſo the Depoſitions of Witneſſes, and Counſel aſſigned me to come to my Chamber, to adviſe me there; alſo Counſel to plead for me before this Court, and a Sollitor aſſigned me, to follow my Buſineſs. And if God ſhall not incline your Hearts to ſhew this Mercy, I do not look upon my ſelf as able to make my Defence, as to ſtand before a Company of armed Men.

Keble. The Court will be very tender of your Blood; and they muſt and will be as tender to preſerve the Blood of the Commonwealth, in execution of Juſtice upon Traytors, that ſeek to deſtroy them. You have had a great deal of Favour, and Time given you; therefore now you muſt make your Defence.

Gibbons. My Lord, if ever Priſoner that came before this Court had reaſon to cry and call for poſſible Helps and Advantages that may be allowed them, much more have I cauſe to do the ſame; verily believing never until now there was ever any brought before Juſtice ſo unable to help or anſwer for himſelf, as I am. Therefore I humbly beſeech your Lordſhip, and this High Court; and I do withal earneſtly deſire Counſel, a Copy of my Charge, the Depoſitions of the Witneſſes, without which I am never able to plead, or make any Defence for my Life: And the rather am I invited to crave and deſire the ſame, for that I have both heard and ſeen Precedents before mine Eyes of this nature. Major Rolfe, that was accuſed for High Treaſon, had Counſel aſſigned him; by whoſe Aſſiſtance he ſaved his Life. Sir John Gell, before this Court of Juſtice, had his Brother, Maſter Gell, to ſpeak for him. And ſince, Mr. Love had Counſel to plead for him in this very Place.

Keble. Mr. Gibbons, you will not be denied Counſel, or any thing elſe, that may help you, if there be found Matter of Law. Go on, and make your Defence; and make it appear to the Court that there is Matter of Law, and you ſhall not be denied Counſel, and whatever elſe may do you good.

Gibbons. My Lord, had I the ſeveral Advantages that others have had, to offer ſuch Matters of Law, I ſhould be as ready as any elſe to do it: But being deprived of all theſe Helps by the Officers of the Court, who took away the Book from my Notary, after he had written the Charge; therefore, my Lord, without a Copy of the Charge, and the Depoſitions of the Witneſſes, it will be in vain for me to trouble this honourable Court, when I never had ſight of the Charge, nor Depoſitions of the Witneſſes; the want of which have ſo diſinabled me, (ſeeing I could not have Help of Counſel to adviſe me) that I cannot tell what in the world to ſay my ſelf.

Keble. Mr. Gibbons, you muſt proceed to plead, or elſe you will incenſe the Court more than you are aware of: For you to ſtand out thus, and plead for that which cannot be granted, will do you no good; therefore I adviſe you no longer to ſtand out, but make your Defence.

Gibbons. My Lord, if I ſhould begin to proceed, and make my Defence, being (as I ſaid already) totally ignorant in all the Laws, and utterly unable both in Memory and Parts to take all juſt and clear Objections againſt the Advantages of the Charge and Evidences; if I ſhould make my Defence when all Means are thus taken away, I ſhould certainly throw away my own Life, and become guilty of ſhedding my own Blood: Therefore I had rather, a hundred times, leave my ſelf to the Mercy and Juſtice of the Court, who, I hope, are very ſenſible how much the Life of a Man is worth; and withal, conſider the hard Meaſure I had in taking away the Books of thoſe that wrote for me, that ſo I could never have ſight of the Charge, nor Depoſitions of the Witneſſes, which all others have had, nor no Counſel to adviſe me. Thus being left naked and deſtitute of all Helps, I had rather ſubmit to the Mercy of the Court, than ever plead to ſave my Life. My Lord, I am perſuaded I ſtand to be judged by a Court, where I ſee the Faces of thoſe that truly fear God; and that they will ſeriouſly weigh and conſider that the Blood of any for whom Chriſt hath died, is exceeding precious in the ſight of God, who will not take any Advantage againſt any for their Ignorance; and that you alſo do remember that all your Judgments will be judged over again at the Tribunal of Chriſt, who will both be a Counſel and Advocate for me, a Priſoner now ſtanding at the Bar. Thus hoping that you will reckon the Life and Blood of the meaneſt Perſon, for whom Chriſt hath died, as much worth as the Life of the greateſt, I will rather ſubmit to your Mercy than plead, if I cannot have what I do deſire. But being very unwilling to have any hand to deſtroy my ſelf, and ſo become guilty of my own Death, therefore though for want of Help I be not able to make my Defence, yet I ſhall make an Appeal to the Court; which is all I can do. And therefore deſire you ſeriouſly to weigh and conſider how far ſhort the Evidences come, and how full of Contrarieties and Contradictions. By the Law there ought to be two lawful and ſufficient Witneſſes to make a Man guilty of Treaſon: Theſe Witneſſes muſt agree punctually in their Teſtimony, and the Treaſon they prove muſt be againſt the expreſs Words of the Act. Alſo the Law will not ſuffer thoſe that are guilty and convict of the ſame Crime by their own Confeſſions, whereof they accuſe me, to give Evidence againſt me: Theſe Witneſſes therefore cannot be lawful and ſufficient againſt me, they having confeſſed thus much againſt themſelves, and ſo do either witneſs againſt me out of fear of Death, or promiſe of Reward. This I am certainly inform'd will be proved againſt Major Adams, and was declared in the Face of the Court at Mr. Love's Tryal, concerning the Teſtimony of Major jor Adams, which is the moſt material Witneſs againſt me. I hope your Lordſhip and the Court will look upon it, as not only he hath been offered, received, and taken Money to diſcover the Deſign, and witneſs againſt me; but alſo in regard to whatſoever he ſwears, as that I ſhould bring in the rough Draught of Inſtructions to Mr. Love's: And as to my Preſence at the Swan at ſeveral Meetings, was both contradicted, and poſitively ſworn againſt by ſeveral other of the Witneſſes. None but he doth ſay that I was preſent at the reading of any Letters of the Fight at Dunbar: Nor none but Adams ſaith I was preſent at Mr. Love's Houſe, when any Moneys was debated: Nor none but Adams ſaith I was a conſtant Man at Meetings; that ever I invited any to a Meeting. I hope your Lordſhip and the Court will conſider, that though there are ten Witneſſes produced againſt me, beſides ſeveral Queſtions asked Captain Potter at the Bar concerning me, yet many of them neither ſaid nor ſwore any thing that touched me at all; and of thoſe that do reach me in their Teſtimony, not any two did agree in proving the ſame Fact. As concerning the particular Teſtimony of Mr. Harvey, unto which no one Witneſs but himſelf either ſaid or ſwore the leaſt Tittle of it to be true; being ſtruck with Wonder, and amazed to hear theſe Things given in againſt me, which my Heart never thought, nor my Tongue never ſpake; I do both before your Lordſhip and this High Court, and Preſence of all the People, lay it before the righteous God to plead my Cauſe, and judge between me, a Priſoner at the Bar, and Mr. Harvey, that falſly accuſed me. I did further deſire, that this Appeal might be ſet upon record, and meet me before the Tribunal-Seat of Chriſt, and that both your Lordſhip, and them that ſit in this honourable Court, might follow this my Appeal to the Judgment-Seat, and there witneſs it before the Preſence of the Lord againſt me when I am pleading for Mercy, if ever I ſpake or heard of theſe Things which he hath accuſed me of. My Lord, I ſhall go further, and did offer unto the Court, That if in all England they could find a Man that would ſay any of theſe Things Mr. Harvey accuſed me of, then I ſaid more particularly, if any whom I had moſt frequently convers'd withal, or any of thoſe that kept me Company, would ſay they ever heard me ſay any of theſe Words, the next time I came before this honourable Court, I would come and plead guilty. And I do now ſay, if it pleaſe your Lordſhip and the Court to give me Time, I ſhall be able to produce Witneſſes, I ſhall make it appear Mr. Harvey is as unfit to be a Witneſs in any Court of Record, as he was unfit to be a Juſtice of Peace in Eſſex, where he was indicted for many and notorious Offences. If I might have Time, I ſhould produce Witneſſes that Mr. Harvey was the original Reporter of ſome of thoſe Things he accuſed me of. And concerning Major Corbet's Teſtimony, I know little in it, but that I ſhall call God to witneſs I knew not Maſon. I did then in the Face of the Court declare how much he had wronged me; for that I had acquainted the Committee who examined me, that I both knew Maſon, and told them the Place, and how I came to know him. Beſides, there is a Copy of my Examination abroad that doth confirm the ſame, That Corbet came to me more like a Murderer than a Chriſtian; and becauſe I did call God to witneſs againſt theſe Untruths he charged me withal, he did in effect judge my Soul to the Devil, and my Body to the Gallows, and ſo he left me. For which unchriſtian Carriage of his, I both complained to Mr. Price, Clerk to the Warden in the Fleet, my Keeper, and ſome others. My Lord, I am charged with being a Sollicitor, and repreſented as a Man that had nothing elſe to do but follow ſuch Buſineſſes as here I am accuſed of; which is a Life ſo unlike an Engliſhman, and ſo ill-becoming a Chriſtian, that I have all the Days of my Life walked a contrary Courſe: If it were neceſſary, Multitudes of Witneſſes will teſtify the ſame for me. I was entertained by my Maſter to wait upon him in his Chamber: After he was gone to the Houſe, I had conſtant occaſions to go into the City, either to lay out, pay, or receive Money. So much Experience had I gained, as I entred upon a Merchant's Trade, dealt with many and ſeveral merchantable Commodities; having a Wife and Children then living, that was the Trade I reſolved to follow. My Wife dying, I went over to France ſome little Time after with my Maſter, and carried many merchantable Commodities with me, where I found Liberty to encreaſe my Experience. My Maſter returning to England, where he ſtaid not a Year, but went back again into France, I was left behind to wait upon my Lady. My Imployment in my Lady's Service is ſufficiently known to be ſuch as daily led me to go into the City. The 19th of July 1650, my Lady went from the City; there was a Neceſſity one Man ſhe muſt leave behind in London, which fell to my Portion. And my Buſineſs called me daily into the City; ſometimes to go to Counſel, ſometimes to ſhew Bills of Exchange, ſometimes to pay Moneys, ſometimes to lay out Money, and buy ſeveral Things which both my Maſter and Lady did daily ſend for to me: There was ſome Letters that came conſtantly every Week from my Lady, ſome out of France, to one Mr. Charboner's, whoſe Houſe was in Tower-Street. I miſſing theſe Letters often on the Monday, went on the Tueſday for them, which was the Day we met at the Club, which was the main reaſon of my being ſo conſtantly there. Where I met for no other end than to ſee the Faces of my Friends, and to diſcourſe of the News of the Town. Moſt of whatever I heard there diſcourſed on, I found in the printed Books: Nothing do I know was ever ſaid or done there prejudicial to the State. But ſince it is looked upon as a Crime, I would I had never come there. Concerning my Maſter, were it neceſſary, I would here make a Declaration that he never left me to do any Buſineſs but to wait upon his Lady, and to provide, buy, and ſend thoſe Things into France that were neceſſary for him. For Letters, I never received any from him, but ſuch as might have looked all the World in the Face: Neither, think I, I need ſay much to clear this, for that the State have ſeen moſt of thoſe Letters that my Maſter ſent before they ever came to my Hands. My Lords, this is all I can ſay, being unwilling to trouble the Court any longer; but muſt declare how much I am amazed to be indicted by ſo high a Charge of Treaſon, as I dare ſay never looked any ſuch Man as I am, in my Condition, in the Face till now; and do fully perſuade my ſelf that your Lordſhip will rather pity my Ignorance and ſad Condition, than look upon me as a Man either fit for Plots, or any ſuch Matter I am charged with. I do proteſt, that if I would make a Declaration of every Act I have done, of every Word I have ſaid, of every Line I have written, I never knew it came up to the Border of Treaſon, whatever is laid to my Charge. And whereas Major Adams charges me of being at ſeveral Meetings preſently after the late King's Death, I did not ſee them in nine Months after the the Death of the King: And after, I came acquainted with Alford, and all that he lays to my charge, is going down to Graveſend, but he did not ſay whether he or I carried the Commiſſions or Letters he ſpeaks of. It is hard for me to remember what the Diſcourſe was a year and half ſince, but I dare ſay he doth moſt falſly charge me that I ſhould bid him ſhew Kindneſs to Maſon, that ſo he might repreſent the Presbyterian Party conſiderable to the King; and that I ſhould bid him diſburſe ſome Money, and pay all the Charges, and if it was not paid him by the Company again, I would; this, to the beſt of my remembrance, is all falſe. Capt. Far (who is another of the Witneſſes, who went along with me, and Alford) did declare it in the face of the Court, that he knew no ſuch thing, and that Major Alford was the Man that invited him to Graveſend; and ſo I do proteſt he did me, or elſe I had never gone.

For Letters, I do not remember that ever I touched any; nor did Major Alford in the leaſt ſwear poſitively I did; only he ſaith, either he or I did deliver them. Alford doth not ſwear that ever I wrote, that ever I ſaw them open, or ever heard them read. All this, my Lord, was done above a Year and a half ago; and I hope if there ſhall be any thing found done amiſs in that Journey, the Acts will clear me; for that it is ſaid, If a Man be not indicted within a Year, he is not to be arraigned or queſtioned. All that Major Huntington ſays, is, He ſaw me at Maſter Love's when the Inſtructions were read, but whether I heard them, he could not ſwear; but he ſaw me go out of one Room into another: And ſince he ſays, I met him in the ſtreet, and asked him if he would not go to Mr. Love's to hear News; and when we came there, after Prayer half an hour, Will. Drake pulled a Letter out of his pocket, neither ſwore he what it was, nor that I heard it read. My Lord, upon the whole, I do ſay, among all the ten Witneſſes, there is not one that doth ſay or ſwear that ever I wrote Letter, ſent Letter, or received Letter; that ever I collected Money, paid Money, or received Money; or that ever I diſcourſed any thing prejudicial to the State; not any one Witneſs doth lay any one thing to my charge done for more than this Year and half, beſides Major Adams: and all that ever he ſwears, is, being preſent at Letters read; he neither ſays I heard them, or ever diſcourſed any thing concerning them. So, my Lord, except it be one ſingle Witneſs, there is nothing laid to my charge done this Year and a half: ſo, my Lord, the utmoſt that the whole Proof againſt me doth amount unto, is but hearing of Letters read at the ſecond hand; and all this but in the utmoſt were but Miſpriſion of Treaſon if fully proved; but being but one ſingle Witneſs to ſwear this, I cannot imagine it will ever hurt me. For Potter, Jaquel, Far, or Alford, (who knew as much by me as Adams) did not ſay any ſuch thing; and all that Adams did ſay, is but hearing of Letters, he doth not ſay that ever I ſent Means to the King: tho I never did this, yet I have weakned myſelf, and opened my Purſe to help the State. About the time the King and Scots were agreed, I furniſhed my Brother with a conſiderable Sum of Money, and ſent him into Ireland to do the State Service, where he gained a Command under my Lord, and did very good Service for the State. My Lord, had I ever ſuch a mind to the War in Scotland, I could have ſent my Brother thither, and not into Ireland. Thus, my Lord, I have gone as far as I can, in making my Appeal to the Court; being utterly unable to make any Defence, I do hope there will be no advantage taken by my Ignorance, but you will be pleaſed to take my Condition into your conſideration, and yet grant me both Time and Counſel, and give me a Copy of my Charge, and the Depoſitions of the Witneſſes; which is no more Favour than was allowed to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and Deputy of Ireland. I crave leave of your Lordſhip, and the Court, that I may not ſuffer for want of Experience, nor that my Ignorance may be made uſe of to work my Ruin and Deſtruction. From my Youth I have ſtudied the Scripture, but never have ſtudied the Laws in my Life; and therefore all that I have to help myſelf with, is from the Scripture, where I find that Ignorance hath conſtantly the Plea at the Bar of Heaven, and ſo I am certain ſhould have at the Bars of all the Courts of Juſtice. Abimelech that committed a very great Sin in taking another Man's Wife from him, he pleaded his Integrity, and God did ſpare him, becauſe he knew it not. God hath always been wonderful tender of the Life of a Man, and that in the time of the moſt ſtricteſt Laws; ſo much care did he take to preſerve the Life of Man, that he provided Cities of Refuge to fly unto, if any killed a Man by accident, or unawares. Murder is a great crying Sin, yet were it done unawares, God made a City of Refuge to fly unto, that the Man might be ſafe, and out of danger of the Revenger. My Lord, whatſoever I have done amiſs, I do profeſs it is out of Ignorance; I never knew I broke any of the Acts of Parliament, nor that I offended the Laws of England: and therefore I hope my Ignorance ſhall have the Plea at your Bar, as I am ſure it ſhall have at the Bar of God. I have often heard that the Law of England is the Law of Mercy, and that there is no Law in the world looks with more Tenderneſs and Compaſſion upon a Man's Life; therefore I ſay as David concerning the Sword of Goliah, There is none like that, give it me. The ſame I do ſay this day, no Law is like to our Engliſh Laws, therefore let me enjoy them: I know the Benefits and Advantages thereby is wonderful great. I do verily believe I am before a Court that are fully perſuaded that the ſtrict-beholding Eye of God looks upon them, and beholds all your Intentions, and the Thoughts of your Heart towards me, and ſees whether you do deny me any Help or Advantage that may ſave my Life. Therefore I earneſtly beſeech your Lordſhip, and this Honourable Court, to look upon the Laws of England, and ſee whether there be not ſome Helps, ſome City of Refuge to fly unto, where I may be out of danger of all that I am here charged with. My Lord, this is the firſt time that ever I was brought upon a Stage, the firſt time that ever my Name was heard of, or I known to be an Offender againſt the State: And whatſoever ſhall now be found in me amiſs, I deſire there may be a favourable Conſtruction made of it, and not to be ſtrained beyond what my Intention was, who have always abhorred from my very Soul all Deſigns that have tended to Blood. I have always ſtood firm to the Cauſe of Liberty and Religion, and all the Intereſts thereof: theſe are the Principles I firſt took up, theſe are the Principles I have always held; from which Principles I never yet departed. I have always had a bleeding Heart when the Church hath been in a ſuffering Condition; I have never been of a bitter Spirit, but have always carried a moſt Tender and Chriſtian Reſpect towards thoſe that were of an unblamable blamable Life and Converſation: And where I thought there was Truth of Grace, however contrary to me in Judgment, yet I have loved them, and embraced them as Chriſtians. I have always lived peaceably, never no Diſturber of the Church or State, either by writing, or printing Books, or any thing elſe. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, it is my deſire you ſhould do as God did, when the Cry of Sodom came up before him; I will go down, ſaith he, and ſee whether they have done altogether according to the Cry which is come up to me; if not, I will know: The Lord, that knows all things, knew before what Sodom had done; but after the manner of Men he came down, to teach all Courts of what they ſhould do before they proceed to Judgment. My Lord, here hath been a great Charge againſt me, a great Cry come up unto your Ears; I deſire you to do as God did, that is, to know whether it be according to the Cry, that you would ſeriouſly weigh all that the Witneſſes have ſaid, gather all the Circumſtances together, and ſee the utmoſt that it doth amount unto; and then I am ſure you will ſee the Evidences to come ſo infinite ſhort of what the Charge and Cry hath been againſt me, that you will find Arguments to incline to Mercy: and if I might not be quitted, yet at leaſt you will let me have thoſe Helps and Advantages that the Laws afford me, and God hath commanded you to give me; that you will not keep any thing from me, that I, according to Juſtice, have demanded, and for the want of which ſee me deſtroyed before your faces. Therefore I do once more with all earneſtneſs deſire you will not deny me a Copy of my Charge, alſo the Depoſitions of the Witneſſes, and aſſign me Counſel to come to my Chamber, and plead for me at the Bar, without which you take from me all theſe Helps that ſhould enable me to make my Defence; without which it is impoſſible for me to go any further, and muſt declare that I want all the material things that ſhould help me to ſave my Life, when I ſee before my eyes all poſſible Advantages to undo me. My Lord, I am able to ſay no more; if thus my juſt Requeſt ſhall be denied, I have gone as far as I can without them, both to clear my Innocency, and vindicate myſelf from that which is laid to my charge; and am moſt confident, if you would let me have what you cannot juſtly deny me, a Copy of my Charge, and the Depoſitions of the Witneſſes, I ſhould ſtand as clear in the eyes of the Law, in the eyes of your Lordſhip, and all this Court, as I am clear in the eyes of God, and my own Conſcience, from what is unjuſtly charged upon me. And thus much I have done, and am able to do no more; therefore if you do deny me, I ſhall be abundantly ſatisfied, howſoever it ſhall pleaſe God to ſuffer you to deal with me. Concerning the Witneſſes, I have little further to ſay, but deſire that the Lord would forgive them, as I do freely; I would not change Conditions with them, tho I were ſure to die in Fire flaming, or in the Mouth of Lions, even in the worſt Condition that could be imagined. I both pity and deſire to mourn for them, who have ſo deſperately wounded their own Souls and Conſciences to deſtroy my Life. And the Lord grant, that not one Drop of my Blood which they have endeavoured to ſhed, may not ſtand betwixt them and Mercy, when they are upon their dying Beds a crying for it. And this is the worſt hurt I wiſh them for all the wrong they have done me. Now the Lord of Heaven direct your Lordſhip, and this honourable Court, that you may not ſuffer the Witneſſes Teſtimonies to be ſtrained, for me to loſe my Life upon Circumſtances, or what is ſuppoſed to be, or in Conſcience thought, but according to clear Proof and Evidence. Do that which may give you Comfort upon a dying Bed, and no more than you dare look God in the face withal, and anſwer to me his poor Servant, who am innocent, at the Bar of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, where I ſhall have free liberty to ſpeak, and you muſt and ſhall hear me. The Lord of Heaven direct you, that you do no more than what the Law will allow; and that what you do, may be according to the Mind of God, and moſt for his Glory, and the Good of me a helpleſs Priſoner at the Bar. And ſo let it go which way it will, I ſhall ſubmit with abundance of Content and Satisfaction, and with a quiet Spirit ſay, The Will of the Lord be done.

Thus having ended his Speech, the Court adjourned until Friday next; and ſo Mr. Gibbons was carry'd back by his Keeper, and ordered to be brought before them again on Friday after.

Friday, about Twelve a-clock, Mr. Gibbons was brought to the Bar.

Keeble. COME, Mr. Gibbons, what have you to ſay?

Gibbons. My Lord, I have not much to ſay, being totally diſ-enabled, and cut off from thoſe Means that might help me to ſave my Life; which the laſt time I was here, I fully declared, and as earneſtly deſired both a Copy of my Charge, and the Depoſitions of the Witneſſes, and Counſel aſſigned me: this I pleaded for, until your Lordſhip told me the Court would be incenſed if I did not proceed to my Defence. Which made me dare to go no further, but rather chuſe to ſubmit to the Mercy of the Court, and make an Appeal to their Juſtice; where I deſired that you would ſeriouſly weigh and conſider how wonderful ſhort the whole Evidences come; there was not any two agreeing: Adams, the material Witneſs, moſt what he ſaid, was diſproved by the other ſeveral Witneſſes that came after. I hope the Court is very ſenſible how little is laid to my charge by Major Adams, after ſo great an Inquiſition, as he daily ſet upon me, inviting of me to his Houſe in the City, to his Houſe in the Country, going from one Shop to another, where he thought I did come; to Aldermanbury Church, and all other places where he did hope to find me: after all this ſifting, and trying, what was it he got out? nothing but the hearing of Letters read, which none but himſelf ſwears. My Lord, all that I have to ſay, is, to deſire both your Lordſhip, and this Court, to conſider with what great Aggravation the Attorney-General did multiply, and aggravate againſt me beyond all that ever the Witneſſes ſaid, leaving out all what might ſerve for my advantage. My Lord, how the Attorney-General could bring Major Alford and Major Adams together, and ſo make them double Witneſſes againſt me, that is not poſſible for me or any Man elſe to underſtand. Firſt, what Adams ſays, is concerning of my bringing in of the rough Draught of Inſtructions, which I wholly deny, and ſo do all the Witneſſes that came after him, to the beſt of my remembrance: and ſome of them ſwear poſitively that Drake brought it in; none but himſelf ſays that I brought it in. To teſtify unto this, Major Alford ſays nothing: but but all that he ſays, is, That I went down to Graveſend with him, and did not ſay or ſwear that I either carried the Inſtructions, or delivered them, or that ever I heard them read: all that he can ſay, is, that I went with them, but whether he or I delivered them, that he cannot tell. He ſpeaks of ſome Diſcourſe concerning ſhewing of Kindneſs to Maſon; it being a Year and half ago, I am not able to charge myſelf with what I ſaid then, but dare ſay he hath falſly accuſed me. What Major Alford ſays more, is only that I ſhould bring them to Maſon's Chamber in the Strand, delivered not, nor ſays that we had any Diſcourſe at all, but took our leaves, and came away preſently. Another time, ſaid Alford, I brought Maſon to Titus to Mr. Whitarr's a Bookſeller's, and that Maſon and Titus went up to the Chamber, where they had private Diſcourſe together: he did not ſay, that I went up to the Chamber, or heard, or knew any thing what their Diſcourſe was. Now, my Lord, I hope by this time both your Lordſhip and the Court are ſatisfied what ſlender Teſtimony there is againſt me. Firſt, my Lord, I was never heard of, till I came to Graveſend with Major Alford; only ſomething that Major Adams ſaith of me, meeting at the Swan, which all the other Witneſſes do acquit and clear me from. Now, my Lord, to what Major Alford ſaith, is nothing but giving a Viſit to Titus and Maſon, which, I hope, will never be thought any Crime; for that neither of them both were declared Enemies to the State, and therefore certainly it could be no hurt for me to ſee them. And beſides, whatever Major Alford charges me withal, is a Year and half ſince, therefore am acquitted by your own Acts. So that it cannot enter into my Thoughts, by what Act of Parliament or Law you can paſs any Sentence againſt me: for all that ever is laid to my charge done within this Year, is nothing but hearing of Letters read: which not any one but Major Adams ſays, and he neither ſaith what theſe Letters were, and that ever I diſcourſed, or ſaid any thing concerning them. Thus, my Lord, you ſee there is but one ſingle Witneſs throughout. My Lord, I waited upon a Gentleman that led me to two or three Meetings, by which means I gained a nearer Acquaintance, which now proves part of my Unhappineſs, ſeeing it is become a Crime to meet Friends at the Club, and other places, and hear Letters, and other News read, which is all that I am charged with. My Lord, I hope I am before a Court that doth conſider, that all thoſe Days Works will be judged over again; therefore I cannot imagine that any Court of Juſtice in the world will proceed to Sentence upon ſo ſlender a Teſtimony that lies before you, but that you will rather allow me thoſe Helps that may enable me to end the Difference that is betwixt the State and me: that is, to let me have a Copy of my Charge, the Depoſition of the Witneſſes, and Counſel aſſigned me; without which, it is as impoſſible to defend myſelf, as for a little Child to encounter an armed Man with a drawn Sword in his hand. My Lord, I have no more to ſay, but ſhall ſubmit to God whatſoever comes; and as I ſaid before, ſo I ſay again, I do freely forgive the Witneſſes, but do deſire that the Court will not proceed upon ſo ſlight and ſlender Teſtimonies, which never can, nor will hold water in the ſight of God, or Law.

Keeble. Mr. Gibbons, moſt of what you have ſaid now, you ſaid before, only you made ſome little addition. The Court hath debated your Buſineſs and Life, with as much care as if you were the greateſt Nobleman in England; and upon the Debate, they are perſuaded in their Conſciences that you deſerve to be ſentenced.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, Mr. Gibbons pleads for his Life, and I for Juſtice in the behalf of the Commonwealth, therefore I deſire you will proceed to Sentence according to the Judgment of the Court.

Whereupon Sentence was read. After that, all the whole Charge was read, and Mr. Gibbons ſentenced as a falſe Traytor, to return to that place from whence he came, ſo to ſuffer Death, by having his Head ſever'd from his Body.

After Sentence, Keeble ſpake in this manner:

Mr. Gibbons, you have nothing to do, but to prepare yourſelf for God; you have a great Acquaintance among the Miniſters, you ſhould do very well to ſend for them, and reveal what you know, and ſo do the State what good you can before you die. Have you any thing more to ſay?

But Mr. Gibbons ſaid not one word more, but took his leave of the Court, humbly bowing to them; and after that, he bowed to the Attorney-General, and took his leave of him, and ſo came down the ſtairs with abundance of Cheerfulneſs, ſpeaking to his Friends, and ſhaking them by the hands. And in this manner he went along the Hall, until he took Coach to go to Priſon.

Capt.

Capt. JOHN STREATER's Caſe on the Habeas Corpus, at the Bar of the Upper Bench in Weſtminſter-Hall, Novemb. 1653. 5 Car. II.

The Habeas Corpus was read.

BY the Keepers of the Liberty of England by Authority of Parliament. To the Keeper of the Priſon of the Gate-Houſe in the Liberty of Weſtminſter, in the County of Middleſex, or to his Deputy, Theſe, Greeting. We command you that the Body of John Streater, in the Priſon under your Cuſtody detained, as it is ſaid, together with the Day and Cauſe of his taking and detaining, by whatſoever Name the ſaid John is called therein, you have before us in the Upper Bench at Weſtminſter, Wedneſday next after the Morrow of St. Martin; to undergo and receive thoſe things which our ſaid Court of Upper Bench ſhall then and there order concerning him in this part. And this you muſt not omit at your peril. And have you then this Writ. Witneſs Henry Rolle at Weſtminſter, the 12th of Novemb. in the Year of our Lord 1653.

By the Court. Ex. Broughton.

Capt. Streater. My Lord, I deſire that this Writ with the Return may be filed.

Judge. What ſay you, Mr. Prideaux?

Prid. Nothing.

Judge. Let it be filed. Have you any Counſel?

Capt. Streater. Yes, my Lord.

Judge. What do you ſay to it?

Capt. Streater. I deſire to have a Copy of the Return, and that I may be bailed.

Judge. It cannot be: you are committed by the Parliament, and you muſt ſhew cauſe firſt.

Capt. Streater. I am ready: I deſire to ſpeak to it now, both I and my Counſel.

Mr. Twiſden. I was a Counſel for the firſt part of the Return, but not for this.

Judge. What ſay you?

Mr. Freeman. I deſire he may have a Copy of the Return.

Judge. Do ſo, and let him be here again on Friday next: let it be ſo.

Capt. Streater. I deſire, my Lord, I may not be put to the trouble to ſue for a new Habeas Corpus.

[And then Mr. Streater not being permitted to ſpeak any more, he was taken away by the Marſhal of the Court of the Upper Bench, and carried to the Priſon of the Upper Bench in Southwark.]

Colonel Barkſted then appeared upon Lieut. Col. Lilburne's Habeas Corpus, and gave this following Reaſon for his not bringing the Body of Lieut. Col. Lilburne.

'According to my Orders, my Lord, and the 'Return of the Habeas Corpus, I brought the Body 'of Lieut. Col. John Lilburne on Monday to the 'Court; at which time I was ordered to attend 'the Court again with him here as this Day. But 'this Morning I received an Order from the 'Council of State to the contrary: And here it 'is, my Lord.'

Clerk. Wedneſday, Novemb. 23.

Whereas the Body of Mr. John Lilburne, by an Order of Parliament, was committed to the Tower for the Peace of the Nation; and whereas there was an Order to the bringing of him forth thence to the Upper Bench this day: It is ordered by the Council of State, that they do not bring him, but that he there abide the Pleaſure of the Houſe.

Mr. Lilb. Counſ. My Lord, on Monday it was agreed that they ſhould bring him again on Wedneſday; and I have no Inſtruction from my Client, for I have no Acceſs to him, nor he to me.

Judge. Well, pray adviſe with your Client.

Mr. Lilb. Counſ. My Lord, I deſire to have an Alias Habeas Corpus.

Baxt. I have only learned, my Lord, to obey Orders, and I ſhall obey them.

Judge. You do well. The Council of State have a Reaſon for what they do in this Buſineſs.

Mr. Lilb. Counſ. My Lord, when muſt we attend the Court?

Judge. On Saturday.

The Return to the Habeas Corpus for Capt. Streater being filed, the Cauſe of Impriſonment ſhewn in the Return was grounded upon two Warrants: firſt from the Council of State.

THESE are to will and require you to take the Body of Streater, and him you ſhall ſafely keep Priſoner in your Priſon of the Gate-Houſe; he being committed for publiſhing of ſeditious Pamphlets againſt the State: Of which you are not to fail. And for ſo doing, this ſhall be your ſufficient Warrant. Given at the Council of State ſitting at White-Hall, the 12th Day of September, 1653.

To the Keeper of the Gate-Houſe.

S. Moyer.
R. Tichburn Preſid.
R. Lawrence.
John Hewſon.

The ſecond Warrant was ſigned by the Speaker, by Order of Parliament.

BY virtue of an Order of Parliament, bearing date this preſent 21ſt Day of November, Theſe are to will and require you to receive and take into your cuſtody the Body of John Streater, and him to keep and retain in safe custody, until he shall be delivered by Order of Parliament. Whereof you are not to fail, as you will answer the contrary at your peril. Given under my Hand this 21st of November, 1653.

To the Keeper of the Gate-House, Westminster. Francis Rous Speaker.

Upon the reading thereof in Court, this Rule following was ordered to be entered.

Wednesday next after eight Days of St. Martin, 1653. The Gate-House, Westminster.

THE Defendant was this day brought into this Court, by virtue of a Writ of Habeas Corpus, to undergo, &c. under the Custody of the Keeper of the Prison of the Gate-House. And it is ordered by the Court, that the Habeas Corpus and the Return thereof be filed, and that the said Streater have Copies of the said Writ and Return, and that the said Streater be committed to the Custody of the Marshal of this Court, and that he have the Body of the said Streater in Court upon Friday next, upon the Motion of Mr. Freeman.

By the Court.

The second Appearance of Captain Streater, on Friday the 23d of November 1653, by virtue of an Habeas Corpus, and the Rule aforesaid of the Court of Upper Bench of the 21st present.

CAptain Streater being at the Bar, the Clerk read the Return, which was only the Keeper's Answer to the Habeas Corpus, which requireth him to shew cause why the Prisoner is detained in Prison. He in the Return citeth the Warrant, Order, or Mittimus for Commitment, and certifieth that is the Cause contained in them, and none other.

The Return being read, the Judge asked Captain Streater what he had to say to the Return, and who was his Counsel.

Capt. Streater. Mr. Norbery, Mr. Freeman, and Mr. Twisden, are Counsel with me.

Judge. What say you?

Mr. Twisden. I was a Counsel for the first part, but not for the second, for publishing scandalous Pamphlets. If there be no more in it, he may be bailed.

Judge. No, there is no more in it. What say you, Mr. Freeman?

Mr. Freeman. My Lord, as to the second part of the Return, it is in these words: These are to will and require you to take into your Custody the Body of John Streater, and him safely keep, till he shall be delivered by Order of Parliament. My Lord, every Return ought to have these two things in it; the Cause, and how long he shall be a Prisoner: and so you have it in Magna Charta, p. 54. My Lord, all Acts of Parliament against the Laws of the Land, are in themselves void. The Law is above the Parliament.

Judge. Good Sir, do not stand to repeat these things before us.

Mr. Freeman. My Lord, I do know it; they may pass their Acts according to Law, but not against Law. The Lord Dyer hath it so in his Reports.

Judge. When we are in examination of a Prisoner, will you come and overthrow the Acts of Parliament?

Mr. Freeman. My Lord, I refer it to your Lordship's Judgment, whether this Gentleman ought to be kept in Prison without cause shewn.

Judge. What say you, Mr. Norbery?

Mr. Norbery. My Lord, we must look to see if the Return be true: if it be not, we have an Action of the Case against them that made it false. And tho we will not say that is false, yet here is no Offence recited at all. And, my Lord, all the Acts are the Acts of this present Parliament; and we look on them to be, or ought to be, for the Liberty of the People.

Judge. What have you to say to the second part of the Return?

As to the first part of the Return, Mr. Prideaux said he should say nothing unto it; therefore the Judges advise Captain Streater to speak to the second part of the Return.

[Now for that the Argument that Captain Streater had prepared to shew the Insufficiency of the first part of the Return, may be of great use, and fit for publick View, it is thought fit to be inserted here; and after it, his Argument upon the second part of the Return, the which he delivered with an audible Voice at the Bar: With the Attorney-General's Plea thereto, and the Judges Judgment thereupon.]

Captain Streater's Argument to the first Part of the Return.

MY Lord, I being brought to this Bar by virtue of a Habeas Corpus, which requireth (by virtue of the Law, which is the Supreme Authority of England, and only Authority of Parliaments, and all Courts of Judicature) the Cause ought to be shewn why I am detained a Prisoner upon the Return. The first Part mentioneth a Cause, tho not a lawful Cause: the second Part sheweth no Cause.

My Lord, the Intent in Law of an Habeas Corpus, is to relieve Prisoners, notwithstanding special Commands for Imprisonment; as appeareth by the Act of Parliament the 17th of the late King, intitled, An Act for the abolishing the Star-Chamber, and regulating the Council-Table: which ordaineth, that notwithstanding special Commands for Imprisonment, the Party so imprisoned shall by an Habeas Corpus be brought before the Judges of one Bench or other. And if the Cause of his Commitment be legal, he shall be remanded to the Prison from whence he came; if no Cause (that is to say, a lawful Cause) appear, then the Prisoner is to be set at liberty; if it be doubtful, then the Prisoner is to be bailed.

My Lord, with these agree the learned Arguments of Sir Edward Coke, Sir Edward Littleton, and Mr. Selden; together with the Resolves of the Commons in Parliament (1628) thereupon.

And the second Part of Institutes, fol. 52. The Warrant or Mittimus ought to contain a lawful Cause.

The Writ of Habeas Corpus is the Water of Life, to revive from the Death of Imprisonment.

Sir Edward Coke in his third general Reason why a Habeas Corpus is to remove the Body, notwithstanding of special Commands, saith, That Imprisonment is accounted in Law a Civil Death, where a Man is deprived of Society, of Wife, House, Country, Friends; and liveth with wicked and wretched Men.

The

The Writ of Habeas Corpus, and the Benefit thereof by Law, (which is the undeniable Right of every Englishman) is called The High Point, the only Point. Nay, the Commons of Parliament of the 4th of the late King, in the Conference with the Lords, say that they had redeemed the Body of Liberty, by clearing this Point: that is to say, That in case one be committed by virtue of special Command, he shall have the Benefit of the Writ of Habeas Corpus to bring his Body, with the Cause, before the Judges of either Bench; where if it be found a lawful Cause, he shall be remanded; if no Cause, delivered; if it be doubtful, then to be bailed.

My Lord, I shall make it evidently appear, when I come to make my Exceptions, that there is no lawful Cause shewn in the Return to the Habeas Corpus why I should be a Prisoner.

With your Lordship's Favour, I shall speak one Word or two of the Law of England; I shall make use of it anon. It may not improperly be said, it is written by the Finger of God: it is not unlike (in that where indeed the Perfection of it lieth) unto the Laws of the Eternal Law-giver; which is, it is as well binding to the Law-giver, as to those that are to give obedience unto it.

Anno 42 Edw. 3. chap. 3. No Man shall be proceeded against, but according to the old Law of the Land: There shall be nothing done to the contrary, if it be, it shall be void.

If this serve not my turn, I am sure there be enough that speak the Language I would have them, that say, Be it so and so enacted, and not otherwise.

First, I observe here they command Law.

Secondly, That they command, that none shall command otherwise but by Law.

God himself bindeth himself by his Laws: he is as well bound, as he bindeth those several Beings he gives Laws unto, let them be Eternal, Moral or Natural. If he maketh a Promise, he performeth it: he must not, he doth not but perform it. If he create a World, and willeth it to continue, he must support it in its Beauty and Strength, and by his Providence support the several Beings in it.

My Lord, Law is Supreme; none ought to command contrary to Law. It is not, that he or they are superiour that command, that therefore they should be obeyed; no, it ought to be diligently enquired by the Inferiors, whether Superiors command Law, or not; if not, they are not to be obeyed. For that this is not a Rule amongst Men, is the Reason so much of Absoluteness and Tyranny is so much on foot in the World.

Camerarius mentioneth a Story of Henry II. of France, his committing to Prison an Italian Lackey, and shewing no Cause of his Commitment. The Judges visiting the Prisoner, commanded that he should be delivered. The King again committed him, and commanded that he should be executed. The Judges notwithstanding the second time opened the Prison-Doors for him, for that the Law warranted them for so doing.

Henry III. of England, commanded Ralph Nevil (Lord Keeper or Lord Chancellor) to deliver the Great Seal. He refused it, because it was to be disposed of by the Common-Council, or Parliament of the Kingdom. This is attested by Matthew Paris, and Matthew of Westminster.

Thomas late Lord Strafford's Plea, That what he did, was in Obedience to his Superiour, the King his Master, could not protect him from condign Punishment, for that he had transgressed the Law.

Plutarch saith, the Spartans were happy in their King Agesilaus, who had such a reverend Esteem of Law, that he gave obedience to a small Scroll of Parchment, which was the Summons of his Country for his Appearance.

That which will make us happy, must be our Laws; not Men, Councils, or Courts. Aristotle saith, That it is better to govern by good Laws than good Men.

My Lord, our Laws are good; they are (as to the intent) the only preserving Laws in the World: they are the Strong-holds, the Bulwarks to the weakest.

Edw. 6. fol. 36. The Law is called, The Inheritance of every Subject. It is the Inheritance of Inheritances; and without which Inheritance, we have no Inheritance: we should be but as Tenants at Will, to be turned out of Life, Liberty and Estate, at pleasure.

My Lord, withal, the Law signifieth nothing at all, if there be not a way to obtain the Benefit thereof; the which should be as certain and unalterable as the Law it self. And therefore I think that the Statute of 42 Edw. 3. chap. 3. is meant a Proceeding by Record, when it saith, That no Man shall be proceeded against, taken or imprisoned, but according to the old Law of the Land. The same Opinion may pass of the 29th chap. of Magna Charta, which is but an Exposition of the good old Law of the Land.

Mr. Selden, in his Argument at the Conference of the Lords and Commons, 1628. saith, The Law is of no Benefit, if that the way be not open to obtain the Benefit of the Law.

In all which, Proceedings by Discretion are justly reproved; for they are of evil Consequence, as witness Empson and Dudley in Henry the Seventh's Days, by whom the Subjects were grieved, my Author saith.

My Lord, just Proceedings are as necessary as just Judgments.

It is Justice that saveth and defendeth a Nation, that maketh it happy, fruitful and prosperous.

The Frontiers of a Nation may be guarded with Men at Arms, but it will not be preserved thereby; it must be Justice in the midst of it: If there be but a Man that executeth Justice and true Judgment, he shall save the City.

There may be good Reasons given for it. Injustice discontents a People; and usually the Foundations of Changes are laid upon the Discontent of the People.

My Lord, I speak not this as reflecting on this Court, or out of fear of Injustice at this Time or Place; no, but only as laying a sure Foundation for my Exceptions.

If the Law be Supreme, and not to be varied from in the least Tittle, then it is a sufficient Sanctuary. Unless this be granted, all my Exceptions will profit me nothing.

I ought not to be remanded, because it cannot but appear I have been proceeded against not according to the Law of the Land, which is my Right; and if my Right, every Man's Right; and if not my Right, it is no Man's Right.

42 Edw. 3. chap. 3. None shall be proceeded against, but by Presentment, or things of Record, according to the old Law of the Land.

It is not the Law of our Kings, but the Consent of our Forefathers: These are our Privileges and the preſent Power hath declared they will be tender of them.

The Writ is by Authority of Parliament.

This Privilege of an Habeas Corpus putteth the Difference between the Villain and the Freeman.

My Lord, I ſhall now make my Exceptions to the Return.

Firſt, The Return is too general, and ſheweth not lawful Cauſe why I ſhould be impriſoned.

I doubt not but to make it appear; and if ſo, I ought to be ſet at liberty without Bail.

The Act of the 17th of the late King provideth, That if no Cauſe be ſhewn (that is to be underſtood, a lawful Cauſe) then the Priſoner ſhall be diſcharged.

A Priſoner is not diſcharged, if he be bailed, for that he is a Priſoner to his Bail; and if bailed, then it is to be ſuppoſed a Cauſe, though ſuch upon which he may be bailed.

The Cauſe of Impriſonment ſhewn in the firſt part of the Return, is for a Seditious Pamphlet againſt the State: It doth not name wherein it is ſeditious; it doth not name what Books or Pamphlets.

2 Part Inſtit. fol. 591. on the Statute of 1 Edw. 2. Sir Edward Coke ſaith, That the Mittimus or Warrant muſt contain the Cauſe, though not ſo certainly as the Indictment ought; yet with ſo much convenient Certainty, as that it may appear judicially what the Offence is; as for ſtealing a Horſe, or the like. And this is according to Reaſon, which is the Mother of Law; which hath had good Authority at this Bar, and now hath, and I hope ſhall have.

As by Variety of Natures, and Forms, and Names, ſeveral Beaſts are diſtinguiſhed; ſo Variety of Titles do diſtinguiſh Books or Pamphlets. And for that there is or hath been as many ſeveral ſorts of Books or Pamphlets diſtinguiſhable by their Title or Name, and Matter or Subject wherein they are ſeditious, as there are ſeveral ſorts of Beaſts diſtinguiſhable either by their Nature, Name or Form: therefore if it be needful, if a Man ſteal a Horſe, that the Warrant or Mittimus ſhall ſay, the Impriſonment is for ſtealing a Horſe, and not for ſtealing of a Cow, the ſame will hold good for a Cow, Ox, or any other Creature or Thing.

If ſo, it had been as needful for the Return to expreſs what Pamphlets or Books, either by Title or Name, Matter or Subject; for that there are, or have been as many ſeveral ſorts of ſeditious Pamphlets (ſo accounted) within theſe few Years, of ſeveral Titles, as there are ſeveral ſorts of Beaſts in the World. And therefore ſeeing the Return doth not ſhew for which of them I am impriſoned, it muſt be preſumed there is not Cauſe for my Impriſonment. Generals are nothing in Law.

Again, my Lord: Sir Edward Coke, 4 Part Inſtit. fol. 39. chap. 1. High Court of Parliament, there in theſe words, ſaith, That by order of Law a Man cannot be attainted of High Treaſon, unleſs the Offence be in Law High Treaſon. He ought not to be attainted by general Words of High Treaſon by Authority of Parliament, (as ſometime hath been) but the High Treaſon ought to be ſpecially expreſs'd.

This is ſo plain, it need not be preſſed further.

Likewiſe the Reſolution of the Commons in Parliament, the 4th of the late King, reſolveth, That notwithſtanding ſpecial Commands for Impriſonment, if there be not lawful Cauſe of Impriſonment ſhewed upon the Return of a Habeas Corpus, that then the Priſoner ſhall be acquitted.

I have plainly made it appear, that there is no lawful Cauſe; yet notwithſtanding I ſhall back it with Reaſons that ſhall carry ſufficient Authority with them, to prove my Aſſertion, That there is not lawful Cauſe; and to prove that my Impriſonment hath not been according to the Law of the Land, as is provided in the Act of the 17th of the late King, 42 Edw. 3. cap. 3. 25 Edw. 3. chap. 4. and Magna Charta, chap. 29. All which command but the Law, or are rather but Expoſitions of the Law.

And ſeeing the Parliament hath left this Court open for any to be relieved, I pray to be relieved.

My Lord, I ought to be proceeded againſt by due Courſe of Law.

The Act of the 20th of September 1640. provideth, if it be for treaſonable and ſeditious Pamphlets, the Party ſhall ſuffer ſuch Penalties as are by the Law of the Land provided. By which it appeareth, that they intended no otherwiſe a Man ſhould be proceeded againſt in this caſe, but by due Courſe of Law; which is to be by Preſentment before Juſtice, or Thing of Record; as 42 Edw. 3. chap. 3. at which time it is uſual that the Accuſers and the Accuſed are face to face, and there they the Accuſers do aver, that that is the Man that hath ſo and ſo offended; elſe how ſhall it be known that this or that is the Man meant by the Accuſers?

Beſides, my Lord, Anno 10 Eliz. chap. 6. it is provided, That two Witneſſes be as well at the Indictment as the Arraignment.

Indictment is an Accuſation againſt a Man; and it is upon Accuſation the Mittimus is made for Commitment. It is fit a Man at his Commitment do know his Accuſation and Accuſer; if he do not, he cannot make his Defence. It is not fit he ſhould be deprived of any Advantage of that kind.

Feſtus (Acts 25. 27.) ſaith, It ſeemeth not reaſonable that he ſhould ſend Paul to Auguſtus Cæſar, without ſhewing Cauſe of his Impriſonment. There was Cauſe, but not a lawful Cauſe; for he ſaith, He might have been acquitted, if he had not appealed to Cæſar.

If it ſhould be objected, That a Privy-Council may, for ſeveral ſecret Reaſons of State (if they pleaſe) commit Men, and ſhew no Cauſe, or at leaſt, not ſo particular as the Law requireth; Sir Edward Coke, 2 Part Inſt. fol. 199. ſufficiently anſwereth that, and ſaith, That the Law admitteth not of Matters of Pleaſure.

My Lord, that good Maxim, That the Safety of the People is the ſupreme Law, hath been miſ-interpreted by ſome that would have it thus; That if any by their Endeavours do threaten Diſturbance to a Government, and that they conceive it ſafe to take away thoſe Diſturbers Lives, or their Liberties, in order to prevent thoſe Miſchiefs they apprehend they may be inſtrumental in: if they cannot do it by Law, then they may repair to extraordinary Courſes.

Mr. Sadler, in his Book, intitled, The Rights of the Kingdom, and Cuſtoms of our Anceſtors, reporteth, That the old Saxons had a Maxim, That high or extraordinary Juſtice is Injuſtice.

My Lord, and Injuſtice doth a Nation or State more Miſchief and Hurt than all its private and open Enemies can do.

Now having proved that there is no lawful Cauſe ſhewn in the Return why I am detained a Priſoner, I ſhall preſent your Lordſhip with my ſecond Exception, ception, which is, That there is not alledged the Time nor Place where the Crime was committed, that is the pretended Cauſe of my Commitment.

My Lord, I ſhall not inſiſt upon Matter of Fact to any other end, than to ſhew the Inſufficiency of the Return.

And that the Law intendeth that Cauſe, nay, lawful Cauſe ſhould be ſhewn of Commitment, in the Warrant or Mittimus, upon his firſt committing, the Cauſe of Commitment, may the better prepare his Defence; the which the Law intendeth not to deprive a Perſon of: the which he ſhould be deprived of by ſuch Returns.

I ſhall ſhew your Lordſhip wherein firſt it may be alledged, that I did commit a Crime at London ſuch a time, when I was at York.

Mirrour, Chap. 3. Sect. 23. One that is appealed of Maim, may plead that he was ſick at that time.

My Lord, many times ſuch Circumſtances are the Standards to meaſure the Truth or Falſhood of an Accuſation.

I ſhall firſt offer ſomething to prove, that the Place where the Cauſe of Commitment was committed, ought to have been ſhewn in the Return.

Page 621. Fitz-Herbert, Natura Brevium, of a Writ of Mainpriſe, it is in the Beginning of the Writ thus; The King, to the Sheriffs, &c. of the part of A. taken and detained in our Goal at G. for certain Larceny of a Horſe at S.

Now, my Lord, here is the Place alledged.

Sir Edward Coke, 2 Part Inſtit. fol. 317. ſaith, That Appeals ought to contain, 1ſt, The Fact: 2dly, The Year: 3dly, The Day: 4thly, The Hour of the Day: 5*thly, The Place where the Fact was done.*

Here are many Certainties, but the Certainty of Time and Place are not to be omitted; they are two Eſſentials.

So that if Time and Place be not ſhewn, when and where the Crime was done, that is alledged to be the Cauſe of Impriſonment, it may be concluded that there is no Cauſe, if it was done at no Time, nor no Place.

Another Reaſon why the Time when the Crime was committed, that is the Cauſe of Commitment, ought to be ſhewn in the Return, is this: If it were granted that it was ſo, that I did publiſh ſeditious Pamphlets or Books; it may be done ſeven Years ſince, for ought that appeareth in the Return.

That the Time when the Fact was done, ought to be ſhewn, appeareth evidently by the Proviſion that is made in the Act of the 20th of Septemb. 1649. intitled, An Act for preventing of ſcandalous and ſeditious Books and Pamphlets. Provided always, and be it enacted, That no Perſon or Perſons ſhall be moleſted and impeached for any of the Offences mentioned in this Act, unleſs he or they be thereof accuſed within ſix Months after his or their Offence ſo committed or done.

Then 13 Eliz. chap. 1. it is provided, That none ſhall be ſued, troubled or moleſted for any of the Offences contained in that Act, unleſs they were accuſed thereof within ſix Months, if the Party or Parties were not out of the Realm.

Now for ought there appeareth in the Return, the pretended Cauſe of Impriſonment was committed ſeven Years ſince; and it may be as legally preſumed to be ſix or ſeven Years ſince, as four Months ſince. And if ſo, then I am clear by virtue of thoſe Acts I mentioned: they concern ſeditious and treaſonable Books or Pamphlets. In a doubtful Cauſe, it is better to acquit the Guilty, than to condemn the Innocent.

My third Exception is, That the Concluſion of the Return ought to be according to Law, and have theſe Words; To be delivered by due Courſe of Law.

By which is to be underſtood ſpeedily, at the next Goal-delivery. It is not by the Return ſaid by what I ſhall be delivered, nor when, whether ever or never delivered; it ſeemeth to intend a perpetual Impriſonment, the which is utterly againſt the Law of the Land.

2 Part Inſtit. fol. 315. chap. 9. on the Stat. Glouceſt. Expedition ought to be uſed, to prevent long Impriſonment. Impriſonment ſhould be but till the next coming of the Juſtice. And (ſaith he) it is the Mercifulneſs of the Law of England, that it willeth that none be ruined by long Impriſonment.

And therefore the afore-mentioned Writ of Mainpriſe (cited in Fitz-Herbert's Natura Brevium) ſeemeth to take up a Complaint, That the People are not only grieved with wrong Impriſonment, but more eſpecially with long Impriſonment, in theſe Words; And him by ſuch Mainpriſe from the Goal aforeſaid haſt delayed to deliver, to the no ſmall Loſs and Grievance of him the ſaid R. and manifeſt Peril of his Life.

Brook's 9 Report in Powler's Caſe, and in the end of the Writ, hath theſe Words; That the Subject be not detained ſo long in Priſon as till the Juſtice ſhall come in Eyre.

By all which it appeareth, that the Law relieveth againſt long or perpetual Impriſonment, as alſo againſt Impriſonment without lawful Cauſe, notwithſtanding that it be by ſpecial Command.

My Lord, my Life nor Liberty cannot be taken away, but by Law; nor given unto me, but by Law. It is a good Maxim, If we keep the Law, the Law will keep us.

It would be ſad if a Man ſhould be neceſſitated to plead his Cauſe by the making of Friends, when the Law ſhall not be ſufficient to plead in his defence, and when Life and Liberty ſhall be diſpoſed of at pleaſure.

It is provided againſt in 2 Edw. 3. chap. 2. of Charters of Pardon; where is is ordained and enacted, That ſuch Charters ſhall not be granted, but only where the King may do it by his Oath; that is to ſay, where a Man ſlayeth another in his own Defence, or by Misfortune: This the Law warranteth to be done.

Now having proved, that there is no lawful Cauſe ſhewn in the Return why I ſhould be a Priſoner, together with the Inſufficiency of the Return; if ſo, it is my Privilege by Law to be diſcharged and acquitted.

And the preſent Power hath declared to be tender of our Rights and Privileges: We have no Rights, Privileges or Properties, but what we are inſtated in by the Law: if ſo, then it is my Right not to be deprived of what the Law doth allow me. Your Lordſhip is a Judge of the Law.

Captain John Streater's Argument to the ſecond Part of the Return.

My Lord,

AS to the ſecond Part of the Return, that mentioneth an Order of Parliament, I make this Exception, That it doth not mention any Cauſe at all of my Impriſonment. And ſeeing it doth not ſhew cauſe, it is of leſs Strength than the former Part of the Return, wherein is Cauſe ſhewn, though not a lawful Cauſe.

And

And therefore there may be no more, but only the bare reading of it to shew the Insufficiency of that part of the Return.

But here, if it should be objected, That it is grounded upon an Order of Parliament, and that the Parliament are not bound to shew a cause:

Truly, I am of Opinion that the Parliament would not own any one that should so argue, it being so perfectly repugnant to their Honour, it being condemned in Parliament within our Memory, as unjust, illegal, unreasonable and perfectly contrary to Law; and Law is the only Scepter of Senates, Parliaments, Councils, Empires, Kings, Princes, Governours and Magistrates.

The late Parliament in their Declaration upon declaring England a Free-State, (March 17. 1648.) say, That their only Authority is by the Law.

Again, they say that they are sensible of the Excellency and the Equality of the Law of England: Also, That they should uphold the true approved Rules of the Law of England; and that the good old Laws and Courts of Justice, and the Custom of England, are the Badges of our Freedom, Rights and Privileges.

And this Parliament hath declared, That they will be tender of our Rights and Privileges; the which we enjoy by our Laws.

29 Chap. Magna Charta; None shall be taken or imprisoned, but by a legal Proceeding, according to the old Law of the Land.

The words, None shall be taken, imply, That none shall take or imprison any contrary to Law.

And it cannot be denied, but the Law intendeth the Protection of innocent Persons in Freedom: And there being no Cause shewn in the Return, let the Command come from whence it will, the Law will warrant a Discharge.

If it be by an Order of Parliament, if the Order shew not Cause of Imprisonment, not a Cause only, but a lawful Cause.

Parliaments ever made Laws, but the Judges of the Law judged by those Laws.

Who will question but that the Warrant of a Justice of Peace, shewing lawful Cause of Imprisonment, is of greater Force in Law, than an Order of Parliament shewing no Cause of Imprisonment?

But, my Lord, the Parliament is here; it is their Authority that I apply my self unto; there is nothing can be done here but by their Authority; that is to say, the Law.

And therefore the Law, and several Acts of Parliament, as that of the 17th of the late King, and divers others, say, That I shall be discharged.

Shall an Order of Parliament over-rule Laws, Statutes, Customs, Usages and Reason?

No, my Lord, doubtless the Parliament's Intention in ordering that I shall not be delivered but by Order of Parliament, is, That I should be delivered by Order of Law, as I here expect now, and do not question in the least.

Order of Law may be reckoned as the comelieſt of all the Parliament's Orders.

Surely none will alledge, that the Parliament intendeth to stop the Proceedings of Law that may relieve me; or that this Order of Parliament is superiour to Authority of Parliament that is judicially in this Court.

My Lord, the Inferior must give way to the Superior. The same Reason that the Commons in Parliament, of the 4th of the late King, judged of the Invalidity of the Record in James Demestris and Cæsar's Case; for that it was not argued or debated it was not of weight to be a sufficient Record: The same Reason, I say, may be given for an Order of Parliament not to be in force against an Act of Parliament.

An Order of Parliament hath but the same Proportion with an Act of Parliament, that a verbal Command hath with a Command by Record; for that there are not the Debates, Deliberations, and three Times of reading of an Order of Parliament, as is at the establishing an Act of Parliament.

My Lord, besides, any rational Man will think that the Wisdom and Prudence of the Parliament is such, that they will not lay up such a Portion for their Successors and Children, as a Record that shall be a Law or Precedent to After-Ages, that shall be in effect, That J. S. was remanded to Prison by the virtue of an Order of Parliament, when no Cause is shewn in the one part of the Return, nor lawful Cause in the other.

When the supreme Authority of Parliament, the Law, and Acts of Parliament that contain Law, say expressly, That if no Cause (or lawful Cause) be shewn in the Return for Imprisonment, that then the Prisoner shall be set at liberty.

And Anno 20 Edw. 3. cap. 1. That if Commands come to the contrary, the Judges shall not cease to do even Law and Right.

Besides, Sir Edward Coke, in the 4*th Part* of his Institutes, cap. 10. High Court of Parliament, intimateth that an Act of Parliament is not pleadable in a Court of Record, but by Record, or under the Seal. And Mr. Sadler, in his Book, entitled, The Rights of the Kingdom, and Customs of our Ancestors, saith as much. Then much less an Order of Parliament, that is not recorded upon the Parliament-Rolls it self.

My Lord, it is not to be imagined, neither do I think, that the Parliament expected that their Order (the inferior part of their Power) shall take place of the superior part of their Power, the Law, and Acts of Parliament that command Law, which is judicially here, as I said before.

My Lord, all Acts of Parliament, that are unrepealed, are their own: They are not theirs, when they disown them by repealing. Until then they are with not otherwise in force, and are Law.

My Lord, a Parliament, as they command Law, may be called the Wisdom and Reason of the Nation.

Anno 4 Hen. 7. cap. 12. the Law is called the Policy of the Nation. Indeed it is so: Justice is the best Policy, as I said before.

None can demonstrate what Justice is, without the Law be as the golden Mete-Wand, that Sir Edward Coke cautions Parliaments to leave all Causes to be measured by, 4 Part, Instit. fol. 41.

Upon the Question of Henry VIII. to the Judges, Whether a Man might be attainted of High Treason in Parliament, and not to call him to his Answer? The Judges Answer was, That an inferior Court could not in Law or Justice do so: And their Opinion was, That the higher the Court is, the more just they ought to be.

It is not to be supposed that a Parliament will act contrary to their Wisdom and Policy, which is the Law; or that they would have their inferior Power take place of their superior Power.

Neither will the Parliament plead against me with their Power, no surely, but by Law, legally; else they would have nailed up my Prison-Doors with armed Men, and never have suffered me to come to this Bar. And if that they had not intended that I should have been acquitted, they doubt-doubtless would have shewn Cause. I know there can be no lawful Cause of Imprisonment shewn against me.

My Lord, Job's Friends, they tell Job that because he was guilty, in their Opinion, in the sight of God of Sin, Job 22. 4. Will he (meaning God) reprove thee for fear of thee? Will he enter with thee into Judgment? As much as to say, That God would cut him off from amongst Men because he was sinful, and God powerful. But saith Job, (Chap. 23. 3.) O that I knew where I might find him, that I might come to his Seat! I would order my Cause before him, and fill my Mouth with Arguments. I would know the Words which he would answer me, and understand what he would say unto me. WILL HE PLEAD AGAINST ME WITH HIS GREAT POWER? NO; but he would put Strength in me. There the Righteous might dispute with him, &c. And Chap. 38. ver. 32. God saith, Gird up thy Loins like a Man; for I will demand of thee, &c. And here God declareth his Power and Wisdom visibly in the Creation of Creatures great in Magnitude, as the Leviathan; sweet in Influence, as the Pleiades; Swiftness and Courage of the Horse in the Day of Battel; and so of the whole Creation. That this great and glorious Eternal God, that gave a Being to all Beings by one only Conception of his Mind; he willed them to be, and they were: This God, you shall find, pleaded with Job by and by, in Chap. 42. ver. 4. Hear, I beseech thee, and I will speak; I will demand of thee, and declare thou unto me.

My Lord, will the Parliament plead against me with their Power, that is to say, what they may do? Surely they will not; but rather strengthen me, by affording me the Benefit of the Law at this Time and Place; which is the utmost of what I do expect, and the which they ought to do. By the which I shall arrive at my Liberty, which is my Right by Law, in regard there appeareth no Cause in the one part of the Return, nor lawful Cause in the other.

My Lord, I have seen the Copy of an Order of Parliament, bearing Date the 21st of November present, that saith, That John Streater be and do stand committed to the Prison of the Gatehouse, Westminster, in order to a Tryal; and that Mr. Speaker do issue a Warrant accordingly.

Without doubt this is the Tryal intended by the Parliament, here at this Place, to try whether there be cause of Imprisonment, or not.

The Innocent need no other Tryal.

The Cause that is already shewn in the first part of the Return, is to be supposed true, and all the Cause that was to be shewn, and none other; for that the second part mentioneth no Cause at all. And if there had been lawful Cause shewn, it is not to be denied but it had been of force.

By all which appeareth, that they intended me the Benefit of the Law; which speaketh this Language, That the Innocent shall be acquitted.

My Lord, an Order of Parliament is but as the first Thoughts of a Man, by which he intendeth this or that.

An Act of Parliament, and the Law, is like the second, third, and fourth Thoughts of a Man, wherein he altereth his first Resolutions, formed by his first Thoughts, unto more safe and better Resolutions.

And it is not contradictory to himself at all, nor never a whit below him.

My Lord, here are the Parliament's second, third, and fourth Thoughts judicially in this Court: It is Law digested by Councils, Debates, Time and Practice, into Safety and Conveniency. The which is for their Honour to act by: The Benefit thereof I pray.

My Lord, the Return saith I shall not be delivered but by Order of Parliament. The Order of Parliament saith not such a Word, but to be committed in order to a Tryal; at which I am.

My Lord, the Return saith I shall be committed Prisoner to the Gatehouse by Order of Parliament.

The Authority of Parliament, the Law judicially in this Court, hath committed me Prisoner to the Marshal of this Court; shall this be called a Contradiction to the Order of Parliament? No, surely it will not stand so in the Opinion of this Court.

Neither can it be called a Contradiction to the Order of Parliament, if I should be discharged of my Imprisonment; because the Authority of Parliament, the Law, saith, If there be no Cause of Imprisonment, I shall be discharged.

The Law intendeth but three Things only to defend, in which all else is comprehended: They are Life, Liberty, and Estate.

Liberty is the chief: Not a Liberty to do what one lists, either in obeying, or in commanding; but a just preserving Liberty, that shall be for the Good of Society.

It was this that our Forefathers and we have contended for by Arms: And being victorious, will the Parliament deprive us of the Benefit of the Law, which is the Ornament of our Triumph?

No, my Lord, they have declared to the contrary that they will not.

Something of the like nature may be concluded from the Answer of the Council of State to my Keeper: The Keeper of the Gatehouse, when he desired of them to know their Pleasure, whether he should allow the Writ of Habeas Corpus, or not, in regard I was a Prisoner by their Command; their Answer was, They would leave it unto him. As much as to say, They intended not to deprive me of the Benefit of the Law.

My Lord Chief Justice Hyde is not on this Bench, who once was, and to his shame did deliver in effect this Judgment, That for several Reasons of State, the King may do or act contrary to Law.

My Lord, I have power to kill this Gentleman next me, but not by Law.

It did better become Mr. Attorney-General Heath, in his pleading for a corrupt Interest (in the Cause of Sir John Heningham, and others) at this Bar, to alledge, That the King may act above and contrary to the Law; than Mr. Attorney-General Prideaux, that is to plead in the behalf of a State, that some suppose are laying a Foundation of the Kingdom of Christ. If he should, it would be the grandest Inconsistency that possibly could be, to what they have declared, namely, Tenderness of our just Rights and Privileges.

The which Declaration hath invited a national Expectation thereof: The which should be a sufficient Law to them to do nothing that might deprive any Individual, though the most inferior and inconsiderable Part or Person of the Whole; because they were comprehended in the Whole, unto which these Promises were made.

My Lord, upon the Agreement of sharing the Roman Empire made between Octavius Antonius and Pompeius Sextus, it fell out that they agreed to feast aboard of Pompeius's Admiral-Galley, lying at an Anchor off the Head of Mount Misena: And when they were all aboard, and merry, Menas the Pirate came and whispered Pompeius in the Ear;

Come,

Come, ſaith he, ſhall I cut Cable, weigh Anchor, and ſet Sail, and not only make thee Lord of Sicily and Sardinia, but of the whole Empire alſo? No, ſaith noble Pompeius, I have not learned to break Faith, although it were to the gaining of an Empire. When he had invited them to a Banquet, they ſhould not be deprived of what they expected by Impriſonment, or Loſs of their Shares of the Empire: Such Advice, and ſuch Practices, do better become Pirates and Thieves, than Perſons of Virtue and Honour; the which was in his power to have done.

My Lord, ſeeing, as I ſay, that the Parliament did at the firſt declare that they would be tender of our Rights and Privileges; and ſeeing it is our Privilege to have the Benefit of the Law; and ſeeing the Law ſaith, That if there be no Cauſe, there ſhall be no Impriſonment; and in regard there is no Cauſe ſhewn, why I ſhould be a Priſoner: I do aver that the Parliament cannot have greater Diſhonour put upon them, than for any one to alledge that they intended Impriſonment to me, if there ſhould no Cauſe in Law appear.

My Lord, if there be any Thing elſe alledged to be againſt me than what appeareth upon the Return and the Record, the Law requireth you not to take notice of it.

And ſeeing there is no Cauſe, there ought to be no Impriſonment: If it ſhould, it would be Injuſtice.

Juſtice is one of the Attributes of God, that by his Diſpenſations he would have adminiſter'd to Men.

The Adminiſtration of Injuſtice is a perfect Fighting againſt God.

I believe the Parliament would not be found Fighters againſt God.

My Lord, the Philoſopher ſaith, Where juſt Law ruleth, there God may be ſaid to rule.

If you judge juſtly, you have no Cauſe to fear.

I expect it, as you will anſwer the contrary at the dreadful Day of Judgment.

Judge. What have you to ſay, Mr. Attorney-General?

Prideaux. That which I have to ſay is not to argue, but to acquaint the Court he is committed by an Order of Parliament, which is not to give an account to the Court. It is their Pleaſure to commit him till he be cleared by an Order of the ſame Power. And I hope, my Lord, you will not diſpute it: For I know it is freſh in your Memory, where Orders of the like nature have been made by the Parliament. He is to remain Priſoner by the Authority that put him there.

Judge. Yea, as in the Caſe of Lilburne, Chetwin, and others, which after made their Addreſs to the Parliament; which if this Gentleman do, I make no queſtion but they will do according to Law and Juſtice by him, and no otherwiſe, ſince he is committed by them; and they only know the Cauſe of his Commitment.

Sir Thomas Witherington, Serjeant at Law for the Commonwealth.

There has been two Counſels have ſpoke ſomething in behalf of the Gentleman at the Bar: one of them pleaded this, That there was an Order of Parliament, but not an Act of Parliament. My Lord, an Order hath force as well as an Act. As for Mr. Norbery, he ſaid, Part of the Return was true, and Part was not true. If it be not true, he has an Action of the Caſe againſt the Keeper. Again, whereas he ſays, That all Acts of Parliament were made for the Liberty of the People: truly ſo they are; but not to give leave to Licentiouſneſs.

Judge. Mr. Streater, one muſt be above another, and the Inferior muſt ſubmit to the Superior; and in all Juſtice, an inferior Court cannot controul what the Parliament does. If the Parliament ſhould do one thing, and we do the contrary here, things would run round. We muſt ſubmit to the Legiſlative Power: for if we ſhould free you, and they commit you again; why, here would be no end: and there muſt be an end in all things.

Where you ſay, we are not to impriſon you without Cauſe ſhewn: It is true, we are not: but if there be any that do diſturb the Peace of the Nation, we are to ſettle things in Peace and Quietneſs; for the Cauſe of the Law is to quiet the Nation.

The ſecond thing that hath been objected againſt the Return, was by Mr. Freeman: He ſays, The Parliament hath not Power to alter the Laws. Why, they have the Legiſlative Power, and may alter and order in ſuch ſort as they pleaſe; they may daily. If they find any thing that is fit to be reformed, they may alter and reform them, and make Laws new. It is ſtrange a Counſellor ſhould ſay this.

Another Objection was, That there was no Cauſe expreſs'd. It's true, here there is not. We are Judges of the Law, and we may call inferior Courts to an account why they do impriſon this or that Man againſt the known Laws of the Land; and they muſt ſhew cauſe to any Man. In this Caſe, if the Cauſe ſhould come before us, we cannot examine it, whether it be true or unjuſt; they have the Legiſlative Power.

Now whereas you ſay, It is but an Order of Parliament, and has not been three times read in the Houſe: How can you tell but that it has been three times read? Indeed they uſed to read it thrice when the King and Houſe of Lords and Commons ſat; and ſo it may be now, for ought we know. But if it were but once read, we cannot call it into queſtion, but muſt conceive it was on juſt grounds: and it may be they thought it not fitting to expreſs a Caſe in Matter of State; for if they ſhould expreſs the Cauſe, and we not able to judge of it, there would be nothing done in it. Therefore, Gentlemen, we can do no more in it, and yet I hope we ſhall do according to Juſtice, that the People may not be oppreſs'd. If it had been a Cauſe we could have meddled in, ſomething might have been done; but now we ſee no Cauſe it ſhould be repealed.

Juſtice Garmond. God made Man, and gave him a Law to live by; and the Laws of England are grounded on the Laws of God: and in the Laws of England every Man is concerned. And now the Parliament of England is grounded on the whole Body of the Nation. Now if one Power were not above another, things would go in a Circle to and fro, and have no end: Now this will bring them to an end, ſince the whole Law of the Nation is grounded on the Parliaments Laws.

Judge Nichols. I am of the ſame Opinion, every thing muſt be done in Order: And God is the God of Order; and therefore every thing ought to be done in Order, and not in Confuſion. Now what the Parliament does, we cannot diſpute or judge of: Their Laws are to bind all People; and we are to believe they had Cauſe for what they did. And for that you ſay an Order ſhould be read three Times; when I was a Parliament-Man, divers Acts paſt with one time reading. In the next place, you did diſtinguiſh between an Order and an Act of Parliament. Why, their Power is a Law, and we cannot diſpute any ſuch thing. And whereas you affirm it was once pleaded here, That the King was above the Law, and might do what he pleaſed againſt the Law; that it was ſo here, I do not remember: but the Parliament does not ſo.

Prid. I humbly pray he may be remanded to the Gate-Houſe again.

Judge Nichols. There is a Primum Mobile, or things would come into confuſion. The Parliament has the greateſt Power.

Capt. Streater. I deſire I might be bailed; I ſhall be Priſoner nevertheleſs: the Law accounteth one a Priſoner, tho he be bailed; and if not bailed, I may be a Priſoner a hundred Years.

Prid. My Lord, pray let him be ſent to the Gate-Houſe.

Capt. Streater. I deſire then I may be a Priſoner to this Court. I am a wounded Man, and have done Service for my Country, and deſerve not to be ſhut up in a cloſe Hole. Beſides, I have been a Priſoner three days contrary to the Order of Parliament, by Order of Law, to the Marſhal of this Court; when the Order of Parliament ſaith, I ſhall be a Priſoner to the Gate-Houſe: and if the Law can warrant the Court for the doing of the one, doubtleſs it will for the doing of the other. I am ſure it is my Right by Law.

Judge. No, no; no ſuch matter.

Prid. My Lord, I heard this Man ſay he has been wounded, and that he was for the Parliament; but I am informed he was caſhiered. He cited the Order of Parliament, and that they did not publiſh the Cauſe wherefore: but I will ſpeak it publickly, it is in order to his Tryal.

Capt. Streater. My Lord, he ſpeaks falſly; I laid down my Commiſſion myſelf.

Judge. We are to judge honourably of the Supreme Power.

Capt. Streater. You ſaid but now, my Lord, you could judge of nothing but what was before you upon Record.

Judge. Let him be ſent again to the Gate-Houſe; he was committed there. And, Gentleman, you ſhould do well to apply yourſelf to the Parliament in the mean time: for while we are poſſeſt otherwiſe, it muſt be our Office that you muſt be ſent back according to the Order of Parliament.

Capt. Streater. I never petitioned in my life; I ſhall not now begin.

Prid. When the Cauſe is done, you may leave him as you found him.

Judge. You had your Habeas Corpus.

Capt. Streater. I could wiſh I had the benefit of it, as is my Right by Law. I deſire that notice may be taken, that the ſame Judgment and the ſame Plea were adjudged illegal, arbitrary, and perfectly repugnant to Law, the juſt Rights and Liberty of the People, in Parliament, the 4th of the late King, 1628. as in the Caſe of Sir John Heningham, Sir Humphrey Hampden, and others, at this Bar.

Judge. The King was Plaintiff againſt them, and he was but a Feoffee in Truſt: the Parliament is Plaintiff againſt you, and they are a Legiſlative Power.

The Priſoner was carried back to the Gate-Houſe.

The Proceedings upon the Habeas Corpus in Hilary-Term.

IN the Vacation between Michaelmas and Hilary-Term, the Parliament diſſolving, Mr. Streater reſolved to apply himſelf again to the Law; he conceiving that the Order of Parliament was void, inaſmuch as the Parliament was diſſolved. And accordingly, on Monday 23 January 1653, being the firſt ſitting of the Judges in Hilary-Term, he had Mr. Dormer of Counſel, who moved the Court for an Habeas Corpus. It was granted, and made returnable on Thurſday the 26th next following. At which time, the Keeper ſent the Body of Mr. Streater, with a Return of the Habeas Corpus not ſigned: which being in Court, was refuſed to be received

Mr. Streater. My Lord, I am here brought to this Bar, by virtue of an Habeas Corpus: I deſire that the Writ with the Return may be read.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Let it be read.

Mr. Broughton. My Lord, the Return is not ſigned.

Ld Ch. Juſt. If the Return be not ſigned, we cannot take notice of it.

Mr. Streater. My Lord, I deſire that another Day may be appointed by Rule of the Court.

Ld Ch. Juſt. We cannot do ſo; we cannot take notice of you, whether you are the Perſon or not, if the Return be not under your Keeper's Hand.

Mr. Streater. My Lord, I deſire I may have an Alias Habeas Corpus.

Ld Ch. Juſt. We cannot deny you that.

[The Alias Habeas Corpus was made returnable on Thurſday the 31ſt of January 1653.]

Mr. Streater. My Lord, I deſire that I may by Rule of Court have aſſigned of Counſel (with me) Mr. Twiſden, Mr. Freeman, Mr. Wilde, Mr. Norbery, and Mr. Dormer.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Let them be aſſigned.

Thurſday the 31ſt of January 1653, Mr. Streater was again brought before the Court of Upper Bench, by virtue of his Habeas Corpus.

Mr. Streater. My Lord, I am brought hither by virtue of an Alias Habeas Corpus. I deſire that the Writ, with the Return, may be read.

The Clerk reads the Return.

OLiver, Lord Protector of the Commonwealth of England, Scotland, and Ireland, &c. To the Keeper of the Priſon of the Gate-Houſe, Weſtminſter, in the County of Middleſex, or his Deputys there, Greeting. We command you, as formerly we have commanded you, that the Body of John Streater Gent. in Priſon under your cuſtody detained, together with the Day and Cauſe of his taking and detaining, by whatſoever Name the ſaid John is called therein, you have before us at the Upper Bench in Weſtminſter, upon Monday next after the fifteen Days of St. Hilary next to come; to undergo and receive thoſe things which our Court of Upper Bench aforeſaid of him ſhall conſider of in this behalf. And this you muſt not omit in any wiſe, and upon peril that will follow thereupon. Witneſs Henry Rolle, at Weſtminſter, the 26th Day of January 1653.

And the Return of this Writ appears in a certain Schedule hereunto annexed, and the Answer of Aquila Wykes, Keeper of the Gate-House Prison in Westminster.

TO his Highness the Lord Protector of the Commonwealth of England, Scotland, and Ireland, and the Dominions thereof, in the Upper Bench at Westminster, at the Day and Place in the Writ to this Schedule annexed named; do certify, that before the coming of the said Writ to me directed, that is to say, the 12th Day of September 1653, John Streater in the Writ named was committed to my custody, and there detained by virtue of a Warrant from the later Council of State, the Tenour of which Warrant followeth in these words.

'THESE are to will and require you to receive into your custody the Body of John Streater, and him you shall safely keep Prisoner in the Prison of the Gate-House, he being committed for publishing seditious Pamphlets against the State. Of which you are not to fail: and for so doing, this shall be your sufficient Warrant. Given at the Council of State at Whitehall, this 12th Day of September 1653.'

Rob. Tichburn Presid.
H. Lawrence.
Sa. Moyer.
J. Hewson.
Ch. Howard.

To the Keeper of the Gate-house.

And the said John Streater is also detained by virtue of a Warrant under the Hand of the Speaker of the Parliament; the Tenour of which Warrant follows in these words.

'BY virtue of an Order of Parliament, bearing date this present 21st Day of November, These are to will and require you to receive and take into your custody the Body of John Streater, and him to keep and retain in safe custody, until he shall be delivered by Order of Parliament. Whereof you are not to fail, as you will answer the contrary at your peril. Given under my Hand this 21st Day of November 1653.'

Francis Rous Speaker.

And the said John Streater is also detained by Rule of the Upper-Bench Court; the Tenour of which Rule follows in these words.

'THE Keepers, &c. against John Streater. Friday in fifteen Days of St. Martin 1653. The Defendant was this day brought in Court by virtue of a Rule of this Court, under the custody of the Marshal of this Court: And it is ordered, That the said Marshal do deliver the Body of the said Streater to the Keeper of the Prison of the Gate-House in Westminster, to remain under his custody according to the Order of Parliament, upon the Motion of Mr. Attorney-General.'

By the Court.

And these are the Causes of the detaining the said John Streater, whose Body before the Protector aforesaid I have ready accordingly, at the Day and Place in the said Writ contained, as I am within commanded.

Aquila Wykes, Keeper of the Gate-House.

Ld Ch. Just. Mr. Attorney, what say you to it? The Prisoner hath been here many times.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, I heard not of it.

Mr. Streater. My Lord, I sent him notice the same day the Writ was granted.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, he sent me a Man that said he lived in Fleet-street, I do not know where.

Ld Ch. Just. How cometh it that you did not send him other notice?

Mr. Streater. My Lord, I beseech your Lordship that I may not be intercepted by such Pretences, and that I may not suffer any delay for want of such Formalities. My Lord, Mr. Attorney-General hath appeared often enough in this Case; he cannot with Credit pretend he is unprovided to speak to it.

Ld Ch. Just. Let the Prisoner be here again on Friday.

[Mr. Streater was again sent back to the Gate-House, and was, on Friday the 3d of February 1653, brought by Rule upon the Alias Habeas Corpus.]

Mr. Twisden. My Lord, I desire that the Prisoner may be bailed.

Mr. Wylde. I desire that the Writ and Return may be filed.

Ld Ch. Just. Mr. Atkin, what have you to say why it may not be filed?

Mr. Atkin. Nothing, my Lord.

Ld Ch. Just. Let it be filed, and let the Prisoner be here again on Thursday next.

Mr. Streater. My Lord, I desire that I may have assigned of Counsel with me, Mr. Latch and Mr. Windham.

Ld Ch. Just. Let it be so.

[The Prisoner was carried by the Marshal of the Upper Bench unto the Upper-Bench Prison Southwark; and on Tuesday the 7th of February 1653, was again brought into Court, under the custody of the Marshal of the Court.]

Mr. Twisden. I desire that the Prisoner may be bailed. He is committed by two Orders; the one from the Council of State, the other from the Speaker of Parliament, by virtue of an Order of Parliament. The Order of Parliament is out of doors, the Parliament being dissolved.

Mr. Attorney-General began thus:

My Lord, this Gentleman the Prisoner stands committed by Order of Parliament: And whereas in his behalf the Counsel assigned for him have alledged, That the Order of Parliament is void, by reason (as they say) the Parliament is dissolved:

My Lord, Parliaments cannot be dissolved; the Parliament are the same Power is in being now.

And Parliaments were to be once a Year, as by the Statute of the 4th of Edward 3. at which time he may be relieved. In the North Parts, the Assizes can be held but once a Year.

But grant that the Meaning of the Parliament was to deliver him themselves, and not that they meant the Parliament to be on the 3d of September 1654; yet for that they ordered that he should not be delivered but by Order of Parliament, I conceive he can be delivered no otherwise than by an Order of Parliament, nor by any other but a Parliament.

Possibly when that the Parliament consisted of King, Lords, and Commons, an Order of one or two Houses, without a threefold Consent, had not been binding: but now the Power that was in in the Lords and King, are joined in the Commons, and therefore is of greater force.

And it is not material whether they shew Cause or not; there may be good Cause: And it cannot be presumed that the Parliament would commit a Man, and have no Cause at all for so doing.

But without question, a Parliament may commit Men, and shew no Cause.

But suppose his Commitment be in order to a Tryal in Parliament, will this Court take upon them to judge in the Cause? Or can they by Habeas Corpus bring the Body of the Prisoner and the Cause before them, out of Parliament?

The Lord of Strafford was tryed in Parliament: I believe this Court would not in such a Case remove the Tryal before them, nor indeed can they. Upon the Return it appeareth, he is committed by Order of Parliament, and to be delivered by Order of Parliament: if they had intended he should have been delivered otherwise, they would have either said nothing, or have ordered he should be delivered according to Law.

When Kings die, it is true, that Commissions do cease; but when Parliaments do dissolve, their Acts do not cease. Besides, a Parliament is the Supreme Court, and they do constitute other Courts; and therefore it is not for other Courts to question the Proceedings of a Parliament.

It will not be expected of me to shew that the Parliament had sufficient Matter or Cause of Imprisonment.

To this the Judges answered, No, no: if he had any thing more to speak to the Order of Parliament, that was it that was to be spoken unto.

Mr. Attorney. My Lord, this Gentleman might make his Application for his Liberty to the present Authority elsewhere; and I doubt not but it would be granted him: for now Parliamentary Authority is in one Person.

My Lord, I doubt not but the Court will be cautious in meddling in this Case, but will rather remand him to Prison: First, for that it may be that the Proceedings against him are not yet ripe; it may be yet under examination. Secondly, for that this is the first Precedent of the like nature, and it being of so great and high Concernment.

Mr. Twisden. My Lord, a Parliament may determine, and Parliaments do determine; and when they do, their Orders also determine with them. It is true, that Acts of Parliament do continue; but this is but an Order of Parliament, and not an Act of Parliament.

My Lord, we must come hither to be relieved; this is the Place, this is the Court appointed for Relief in this Case: we expect it, and, my Lord, desire that the Prisoner may be bailed.

Besides, my Lord, this is not an Order of Parliament upon Return, but a Warrant of the Speaker.

Mr. Windham, of Counsel with the Prisoner.

My Lord, it is true, we find Writs of Error returnable in Parliament, as in Flowerdew's Case, and in Basset's Case of Error given in this Court of King's-Bench against Basset, in a Judgment for the King: Rot. Parl. 25 R. 2. num. 24. This is after Tryal of Law, and not before.

As to the Case of the Lord Strafford, we know not but that by Law he ought to have been appeach'd here.

As to the Order, it is determined by Law.

Mr. Wylde, of Counsel with the Prisoner.

My Lord, the Order cannot be a Bar but that the Prisoner may be bailed.

Besides, the Order is void, for that the Parliament discontinueth; and it is ordained, That he or they that shall say the Parliament continueth, shall be guilty of an high Offence.

An Act or Order of Parliament is not a Judgment of Parliament.

We are here coram Protectore.

Capt. Streater. My Lord, I should not at all undertake at this time, having so many learned Counsel assigned, who attend my Cause, and who have sufficiently urged enough Law to warrant the Court for my Discharge, but that the Attorney-General hath both last Term and this Term endeavoured to asperse me, to discourage the Court, so as to delay or deny me Justice: As the last Term, by suggesting to the Court that I was a dangerous Person, and stood accused in Parliament for high Misdemeanours; and said that they were such, and so dangerous, that they for many secret Reasons of State thought it convenient not to discover them. And this Term, by saying, the last Day of hearing, that I was a stubborn refractory Person, and would not make my Application to the present Authority, where he assured me that I might have my Liberty for asking for it; and that my Endeavours were to strike at the very Power of Parliament.

My Lord, as to what great and high Matters or Things that were by him suggested to this Court to be in Parliament, certainly it would have appeared upon the Return: they have not been intercepted, as to Time, in the making of their Return to the Habeas Corpus; they have also had time to make several Returns; and lastly, to amend the Returns by Rule of Court. Without question, my Lord, if they had had other Cause, they would have made it appear. However, your Lordship can take no notice of any thing but what appeareth upon Record.

My Lord, as to the other that Mr. Attorney urgeth, That I am a stubborn Person, and refuse to make my Application to the present Authority; I deny it: my Actions give another Testimony of me, in this applying myself to the present Authority in this manner, and at this place, by Law; this is the proper and only superiour Court for Relief, in case of false or long Imprisonment: it ever was in this Court settled by Law, the Supreme Authority of this Nation, and the only Authority of those that will take upon them Supreme Power. The Lord Protector hath sworn to govern this Nation according to its Laws, Statutes, and Customs: and here I make my Application to the present Authority judicially in this Court. The Writ of Habeas Corpus is in the name of the Lord Protector: by which it appeareth, that those Suggestions are false, and that I own the present Authority in its proper Channel, and own its true Basis, by applying myself to the present Authority here in this Court.

My Lord, I should have insisted upon the whole Matter now before you; but I see that there hath been enough urged by my Counsel, to shew the Invalidity of the Order of Parliament, the only Business where all sticketh.

My Lord, I shall not spend time to answer Mr. Attorney-General, for that the Substance of his Argument is but of little weight, and not worthy of any Answer.

Here followeth the Argument that Mr. Streater had prepared to have inſiſted upon in this place: but for that he perceived the Opinion of the Court was, that the Order of Parliament was not in force now, he omitted to urge it further. But for general Satisfaction, it is here preſented the Reader word for word, according to his Copy.

I AM brought here by virtue of an Habeas Corpus, which doth require that Cauſe be ſhewn why I am detained a Priſoner; not who committed me to Priſon.

Upon the Return, there is in the firſt part a Cauſe, but not a lawful Cauſe: in the ſecond part of the Return, no Cauſe at all.

My Lord, the Intent in Law of a Habeas Corpus is to relieve Priſoners, notwithſtanding of ſpecial Commands for Impriſonment: as appeareth by the Act of Parliament of the 17th of the late King, intitled, An Act for the aboliſhing of the Star-Chamber, and for regulating the Council-Table; which ordaineth, 'That notwithſtanding of ſpecial Commands for 'Impriſonment, the Party ſo impriſoned ſhall by 'an Habeas Corpus be brought before the Judges of 'one Bench or other: and if the Cauſe of his 'Commitment be legal, he ſhall be remanded; if 'no Cauſe, (that is to ſay, a lawful Cauſe) he 'ſhall be ſet at liberty: and if it be doubtful, 'then the Priſoner ſhall be bailed.'

This Act reciteth ſeveral Acts, as that of 17 R. 2. chap. 31. 42 Edw. 3. chap. 3. 28 Edw. 3. chap. 9. Magna Charta, chap. 29. and the Petition of Right. Theſe Acts declare, that this is the Intent and Meaning of the aforementioned.

My Lord, with theſe agree the learned Arguments of Sir Edward Coke, Sir Edward Littleton, and Mr. Selden; together with the Reſolution of the Commons in Parliament 1628 thereupon, in theſe words.

Die Jovis, 3 Aprilis, 4 Caroli Regis.

'Reſolved upon the Queſtion, That no Free-'man ought to be detained or kept in Priſon, or 'otherwiſe reſtrained, by the Command of the 'King, or the Privy-Council, or any other, un-'leſs ſome Cauſe of the Commitment, Detainer, 'or Reſtraint, be expreſſed, for which by Law he 'ought to be committed, detained, or reſtrained.

'That the Writ of Habeas Corpus may not be 'denied, but ought to be granted to every Man 'that is committed or detained in Priſon, or other-'wiſe reſtrained, tho it be by a Command of the 'King, the Privy-Council, or any other, he pray-'ing the ſame.

'That if a Freeman be committed or detained 'in Priſon, or otherwiſe reſtrained, by the Com-'mand of the King, the Privy-Council, or any 'other, no Cauſe of ſuch Commitment, Detainer, 'or Reſtraint, being expreſs'd, for which by Law 'he ought to be committed, detained, or re-'ſtrained, and the ſame be returned upon an Ha-'beas Corpus granted for the ſaid Party; then he 'ought to be delivered or bailed.'

2 Part Inſtit. fol. 52. The Warrant or Mittimus ought to contain lawful Cauſe.

Sir Edward Coke in his firſt general Reaſon why a Habeas Corpus is to remove the Body notwith-ſtanding of ſpecial Commands, ſaith, 'That Im-'priſonment in Law is counted a Civil Death, 'when Men are taken from their Houſe, Wife, 'Children, Country, Friends, and familiar Acquain-'tance, to live with wicked and wretched Men.'

Mirrour, Chap. 2. Sect. 9. ſaith of Priſoners and Priſons thus: 'A Goal is nothing elſe but a com-'mon Priſon: and as a Leper, or a Man who hath 'a diſeaſed Body, is not to be ſuffered to dwell or 'remain amongſt Men who are ſound, &c. there-'fore mortal Offenders ought to be ſeparated from 'the Society of People, to the end the Innocent be 'not infected with their Offences.'

Now, my Lord, if it be ſo, it was of abſolute neceſſity for the Law to provide againſt long Im-priſonment as well as wrong Impriſonment, not-withſtanding any ſpecial Commands.

The Writ of Habeas Corpus, and the Benefit by Law, is the undeniable Right of every Engliſhman; it is called the high Point, the only Point. Nay, the Commons in Parliament, of the 4th of the late King, in their Conference with the Lords, ſay, That they had recovered the Body of Liberty, by clear-ing of this Point. In this is the only difference between Slaves and Freemen, Villains and Free-men.

My Lord, the Law of England doth ſettle a Freedom in the People of England, in their Life, Liberty, and Eſtate: it doth relieve againſt any thing that ſhall by any be done to their detriment, either in one or other.

Mirrour, Chap. 2. Sect. 18. of Appeals of Impri-ſonment thus: Darling here appealeth Weloc, for that whereas the ſaid Darling, &c. the ſaid Weloc came and arreſted the ſaid Darling, brought him to ſuch a place on ſuch a day, and put him into the Stocks or in Irons, or in other Pain or Incloſure: Such a day, this Felony he did feloniouſly.

My Lord, here we ſee the Law ever did allow of a Remedy to be had againſt falſe Impriſonment.

Here is no Cauſe of Impriſonment at all ſhewn, in either one part of the Return or other; there-fore I ought to be ſet at liberty without Bail, as is expreſly proved in the Act of the 17th of the late King, in theſe words: 'If there appear no Cauſe 'of Impriſonment upon the Return, then the Pri-'ſoner ſhall be ſet at liberty, and not bailed.'

My Lord, he that is bailed, is ſtill a Priſoner; for he is a Priſoner unto his Bail. If bailed, it is to be preſumed a Cauſe, tho ſuch upon which he may be bailed.

The following Clauſes of this Act explain the Meaning to be ſo, in theſe words; 'If the Cauſe 'be doubtful, then the Priſoner ſhall be bailed.'

My Lord, if it ſhould be objected, That the greateſt and only Cauſe of my Impriſonment is an Order of Parliament, or a Warrant grounded upon an Order of Parliament, that ſaith I ſhall not be delivered but by Order of Parliament: I have ſeen a Copy of the Order of Parliament, wherein there is not any ſuch word mentioned; but it only ſaith this, That Mr. Speaker do iſſue forth a Warrant (according to the Order) for my Impriſonment, &c.

But for that your Lordſhip is not to take notice of any thing but what appeareth before you upon Record, I ſhall make no uſe of that; I ſhall not need.

Firſt, for that the Order itſelf is out of doors, the Parliament being diſſolved.

Sir Edward Coke, 4 Part Inſtit. fol. 23. Chap. High Court of Parliament, ſaith, That an Ordinance of Par-liament bindeth not in Succeſſion: then much leſs an Order of Parliament.

Beſides, if Orders of Parliament were binding in Succeſſion, there would be no need of Acts of Parliament.

And

And more especially such Orders are not binding, that there is no Reason or Law in them, but are opposite to Reason and Law.

Nay, but an Act of Parliament could not make such a Return to be good or allowable, as this, that shall mention no Cause for which a Prisoner is committed: it is against Reason a Man should be committed for nothing; and if there appear no Cause upon the Return, this Court is to presume there is no Cause, and therefore ought to deliver the Prisoner, and cannot but look upon such Returns as unreasonable, and against Law.

The Doctor and Student, pag. 4. Chap. 2. saith, That such Statutes, Ordinances and Prescriptions, as are not according to Reason, or are against Reason, they are not Statutes, Ordinances, or Prescriptions, but are things void in Law.

Again, my Lord, a Parliament cannot over-rule just Proceedings in or by this Court, that are according to Law and Justice: but a Parliament may over-rule Proceedings in this Court that have Error, or are not according to Law and Justice.

My Lord, we understand Parliaments to be Legislative Powers, and therefore not to be the Executive: it is not for Law-makers to be Justices of the Peace; a Sheriff cannot be a Justice where he is Sheriff. There is a Maxim, That Law-makers must suppose all Men to be evil, and therefore they make Laws against such Offences in all Persons: But Judges of the Law must suppose all Men good, until Conviction.

If so, my Lord, a Parliament are not competent Judges who and who not shall be Prisoners. But here are the Judges, before whom I am; here is the Place where I am, that a Cause of that nature should be determined.

My Lord, I dare confidently aver, That if ever it had entred into the Consideration of our former preceding Parliaments, that a succeeding Parliament would ever do such a thing as commit a Man for no Cause at all, they would have provided against it by an Act of Parliament, in Testimony of their abhorring of so great an Absurdity as it is.

Anno 1 H. 4. Chap. 14. It is provided, That Appeals are not in any wise to be pursued in Parliament. No Man can imagine it to be lawful in any inferior Power to a Parliament.

If so, it cannot be lawful in a superior Power.

Upon the Question to the Judges by Henry VIII. 'Whether a Man that was forth-coming, might be 'attainted of High-Treason by Parliament?' Their Answer was, 'That an inferior Court could not 'do so;' they thought a Parliament would not: Their Opinion was, 'That the higher a Court is, 'the more just they ought to be, to give example 'to inferior Courts.'

4 Part Inst. fol. 37. Chap. High Court of Parliament: If it be necessary for inferior Powers to shew cause of Commitment, it is as absolutely necessary that a superior Court should.

From whence it may be concluded, That were the Parliament in being, yet I might by Law be relieved by this Court.

1. For that the Law doth warrant my Discharge, in case no Cause of Imprisonment appear in the Return; as by the 17th of the late King, who had then the Executive Power in his Hands, as supreme Magistrate: And the same Reason why that it should be limited and bounded when it was distinct from the Legislative and Judicial, may be given, why it should be limited when they are all joined in one; which is, That it may not extend to grieve any contrary to Reason and Law.

2. That none ought to be taken or arrested, but by such against whom a Remedy may be had in case of false Imprisonment.

It was Sir John Markham's Opinion, That the King could not arrest, because a Remedy could not be had against him in case of false Imprisonment. Much less a Remedy be had against a Parliament that may possibly arrest or commit Men upon false Suggestions.

Again, my Lord, if it had been an Act of Parliament that had provided I should be a Prisoner in general words, and had provided I should not have had the Benefit of an Habeas Corpus, I conceive I might have been relieved by an Habeas Corpus. This I suppose, if in case an Act could be made against Law and Reason, as such an Act as should deprive me of a common Benefit that is due unto all, and to every Individual, throughout the whole Nation.

Parliaments ever made it their Work (as in duty they ought) to keep parallel to Law and Reason: they ever did make Laws ageeable to both. But the Judges of the Law, in open Courts of Judicature, did judge by those Laws: Nay, Parliaments ever did advise with the Judges of the Law. The Judges of the Law were as the Watchmen or Sentinels to the just Liberty of the People; and our Laws the Bulwarks of Defence.

Mr. Waller, in a Speech in Parliament at a Conference of both Houses, the 6th of July 1641. saith, That out of Parliaments all our Courts of Justice are governed and directed by the Judges of the Law; and in Parliaments, the Lords and Commons were assisted by them: otherwise (saith he) it might be stiled Parliamentum indoctorum.

And further he saith, That Judges that delay Justice, or give false Judgment, or Opinions that are contrary to Law, that they are no other than Conspirators against the Commonwealth.

My Lord, Mr. Attorney-General hath not omitted to possess this Court with strange Apprehensions of the Dangerousness of me, both in what he urged in this Court the last Term, of Dangerousness, and this Term, of Stubbornness: so that as much as in him lay, by his false Suggestions, to prevent me of my Right by Law; as in his words to your Lordship, desiring that I might be remanded till my Stomach came down.

My Lord, you sit here to raise the Spirits, Minds, and Stomachs of Men, by doing of them Right by Law, to encourage them to Improvements and Industry, by defending them in Life, Liberty and Estate, as the Law requireth and intendeth.

My Lord, Articles were exhibited against Sir Robert Berkley, one of the Justices of the Kings-Bench, and others. The Substance of the first Article against Sir Robert Berkley, was, That he did traitorously and wickedly endeavour to subvert the Fundamental Laws and Established Government of England, by traitorous Words, Opinions and Judgments.

The tenth Article: That the said Sir Robert Berkley being one of the Justices of the Court of Kings-Bench, and duly sworn as aforesaid, in Trinity-Term 1637, deferred to discharge or bail Alexander Jennings, Prisoner in the Fleet, brought by an Habeas Corpus to the Bar of the said Court; the Return of his Commitment being, That he was committed by two several Warrants of the Lords of the Council, dated the 5th of November 1636. the first being only read in Court, expressing no Cause; the other, for not paying Messengers Fees: he was remanded in Michaelmas-Term. After, the said Jennings being brought by another Habeas Corpus before him, and the same Return, yet the said Sir Robert Berkley refused to discharge him, &c.

My

My Lord, I hope this Court, nay, I doubt not but that you will eye the future, and judge according to Law and Reason, not by Discretion.

My Lord, such Advice followed, as Mr. Attorney gave, is the ordinary Cause of Changes in States and Commonwealths.

1. Injustice brings the Judgments of God upon a Nation.

2. Injustice discontents a People, and Discontents are the ordinary Foundations that Changes are laid upon.

It was but the other day the Lord Protector took an Oath to govern according to the Laws, Statutes and Customs of this Nation: and now his Attorney-General would have Matters ruled by Discretion in this Court, contrary to Law and Reason, to pull Mens Stomachs down.

My Lord, I make my Application to the present Authority in its proper Channel, where of right I ought to be relieved here in this Case of mine by an Habeas Corpus.

My Lord, I do aver, that my Life, Liberty, or Estate, cannot be taken away, or given unto me, but where the Law doth it.

My Lord, God himself ruleth by Law, Eternal, Moral and Natural; and they have Certainty in them; and he ruleth not otherwise, or contrary to them. And can it be imagined, that there is a Mortal living, that will think it a Diminution to his Honour, if Men chuse the Law for their Sanctuary, rather than their changeable Affections, and mutable Will and Pleasure?

There is a Maxim, 'That the Law delighteth 'in Certainty, and it doth abandon Incertainty, as 'the Mother of all Debate and Confusion, than 'which there is nothing more odious in Law.'

My Lord, another Reason why I make my Application to the present Authority this way rather than any other, is, that the Record in this Case will be of singular Use and Benefit, not only to the present, but to future Ages; the which I do in duty, in regard a Man ought to prefer the Good of his Country before a private Good.

The contrary will tend to the subverting of our English Liberties. Our Forefathers left us a Law, by which we might demand Justice, and not be necessitated to make use of Friends to beg Justice.

Mirrour, Chap. 3. Sect. 6. Of Exceptions to the Power of a Judge, thus it is; Sir, I demand the Hearing and Sight of your Commission, by which you claim Jurisdiction over me.

Anno 13 Edw. 1. Chap. 3. When any is impleaded before any Justices, and doth alledge an Exception, praying that the Justices will allow it; which if they will not allow, &c. he shall require the Justices to put to their Seal, &c.

My Lord, this Law of England is a Law of Freedom, and a Law for Freemen, and not for Slaves: it is a Law that settleth a Right in its Subjects.

Now, my Lord, having presented your Lordship with what the Law accounteth of Imprisonment, as in the Writ of Mainprise:

Whereas thou A. hast delayed to deliver B. to the no small Grievance of him the said B. and manifest Peril of his Life.

And, pag. 162. Fitz-Herbert's Natura Brevium; of the Writ de Homine replegiando. The King. Whereas A. hath complained to us, &c. We command you that he be replevy'd, &c. that we may hear no more a Clamour for want of Justice.

Seeing the Law relieveth as well against long Imprisonment as wrong Imprisonment; and seeing that there is no lawful Cause of Imprisonment shown in the first part of the Return, nor Cause at all in the second; although it be grounded upon an Order of Parliament, it is void in a two-fold Consideration. First, For that the Parliament is dissolved. Secondly, For that it is against Law and Reason: And also considering that this Court is the highest Court of Judicature that can relieve in this Case; and it being contrary to Reason, that a Legislative Power should be an Executive Power, for they will be Parties to judge by their own Law, they will vindicate their own Commands, and will take upon themselves to give their Sense, possibly different from the Letter of their own Commands.

And therefore it is safer for the Judges of the Law to judge by the Letter of the Law, and not otherwise.

Mr. Robert Brook, Serjeant at Law, in his reading upon the 16th Chapter of Magna Charta, saith, If a Man hath Judgment to be hanged, and if the Sheriff do behead him, it is Murder.

The Letter of the Law is duly to be observed, and not to be varied from, for any Pretences of Matters of State whatsoever.

All which considered, I pray to be discharged, as the Law hath provided: Your Lordship is Judge of the Law.

Mr. Attorney. My Lord, for ought we know, this is a Judgment in Parliament.

If it be not, yet it hath the same Stamp that an Act hath; that is to say, Parliamentary Authority.

If this Order be not good, the Prisoner hath an Action of false Imprisonment against the Jaylor. If the Order die by the Dissolution of the Parliament, the Jaylor ought to have set the Prison-doors open unto the Prisoner at the time of the Dissolution of the Parliament.

Mr. Twisden. My Lord, they have not returned an Order of Parliament, but a Warrant from the Speaker of Parliament.

Chief Justice Rolle. Mr. Attorney, what if the Parliament by Order do appoint a Committee, the Parliament dissolved; doth the Committee continue by virtue of that Order, or not?

Mr. Attorney. I think the Persons are dissolved: But although it be said, by Order of Parliament, I think that is not much material whether the word Act, Order or Ordinance be used. My Lord, it is by Parliament.

Lord Chief Justice Rolle. By your favour, Mr. Attorney, it is the word Order, Act or Ordinance, we must take notice of. How shall we know how to judge, but by the Word or Letter to direct us?

Judge Aske. Mr. Attorney, if an Order of Parliament shall be in force after the Dissolution of a Parliament, and there be an Order made for the Commitment of one or more, as in the Case now under Consideration; I pray which way shall the Subjects be relieved, if not this way, in case we should live to see a Parliament but once in one Age, as in the latter end of the Reign of King James, and as in the Reign of the late King?

Lord Chief Justice Rolle. This Court is the proper Court to relieve in this Case; this Court is a standing Court, and the Law doth adjourn it from time to time; but a Parliament is a new Court, they appear, and are always summoned by new Writs.

Mr. Attorney. The Prisoner knoweth he might have his Liberty for asking for.

Ld Ch. Just. Rolle. A Man is not bound to do that. Well, let the Prisoner be remanded until Saturday; and then we shall deliver our Opinions: It is a weighty Business. And, Gentleman, in the mean time you may make your Application otherways for your Liberty.

Mr. Streater. My Lord, the Law hath provided no other way; and I am bound to take notice of the way the Law hath appointed.

Our Forefathers knew no other way.

My Lord, I desire that I may have the Liberty to go to my Counsel with my Keeper: Both the last Term, and this, I have not at all advised with my Counsel.

Ld Ch. Just. Rolle. That will not be denied you.

Mr. Wylde. My Lord, it was moved this Term, and it was denied, being opposed by the other side; but it was before the Writ was filed. And I suppose that the Court may grant that Liberty to the Prisoner under the Custody of their own Marshal.

Saturday, February 11.

THE Prisoner was brought again to the Bar, under the Custody of the Marshal of the Court.

Ld Ch. Just. Rolle. Sir, have you your Counsel here?

Mr. Streater. Yea, my Lord.

Ld Ch. Just. Rolle. Where are they?

Mr. Windham. I am of Counsel for the Prisoner.

Mr. Streater. My Lord, here is also Mr. Wylde, Mr. Freeman, Mr. Norbery.

Ld Ch. Just. Rolle. Deputy-Marshal, go into the Chancery, and acquaint Mr. Attorney-General that we are going to deliver our Opinions in Streater's Case: And if he please to be present, he may; or if he hath any thing more to urge.

Mr. Pain, Deputy-Marshall. My Lord, I have been with Mr. Attorney-General; and he saith he will be here immediately.

[After a little space of Time, Mr. Attorney cometh into the Court.]

Ld Ch. Just. Rolle. Mr. Attorney, here is Mr. Streater again by Rule of Court. He hath been a long time in Prison; and I see here is nothing come against him that is material.

Mr. Serjeant Twisden, of Counsel for the Prisoner. My Lord, we desire that he may be bailed.

Ld Ch. Just. Rolle. What, have you any thing more to say, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Attorney. My Lord, I thought I should have heard of him; but I did not. The Court must do Justice: He is committed by Order of Parliament.

My Lord, if you will undo an Order of Parliament, he is to be delivered: But I hope the Court will not.

Mr. Windham. The Order of Parliament is undone by the Parliament's being dissolved.

Mr. Attorney. Commissions of Sewers are granted by Parliament, and they do continue after the Parliament is dissolved. Goal-Delivery is but once a Year in the North-Parts: And I suppose the next Parliament will be sitting before he hath been a Year in Prison; at which time he may be tried, or delivered: And although this be called an Order of Parliament, yet it was acted by Parliament.

Ld Ch. Just. Rolle. But all that the Parliament acteth, are not Acts of Parliament.

The first part of the Return is too general: It mentioneth not what Books, nor whose Books, or where they were, or when published.

The second part of the Return is grounded upon an Order of Parliament: We are to take notice when a Parliament sitteth, and also when it is dissolved; or when it endeth or determineth. Discontinuance is a Determination.

A Writ of Error many times is made returnable in the next Parliament; but that lieth after Tryal at Law. The Word Order is a proper Phrase to that which is not an Act.

An Order of Parliament is not binding in Succession: How shall the next Parliament take notice of a former Parliament's Order?

Committees that are appointed by Order of Parliament do cease upon the dissolving of the Parliament. I have been of the Parliament: I ever found Parliaments of the same Opinion.

We must look to the first Imprisonment, and no farther: If you had returned other Cause, we should have taken notice of it.

We do not reverse the Order of Parliament; that is reversed by the Parliament's being dissolved: And it being dissolved, there is no visible way how the Prisoner shall be relieved, though there may be a probable way.

Judge Ask. I am of the same Opinion; and that it could not be, that the Order of Parliament, by saying he should not be delivered but by Order of Parliament, but that they meant by the same Parliament, and not by a successive Parliament. If it should be taken to be by Order of the next Parliament, where shall be the Liberty of the Subjects? Or how shall they be relieved in long Interval of Parliament? As in the Reign of King James, and the Reign of King Charles, we had not Parliaments in many Years together; and although it be so, that the Parliament, by the Statute of the 4th of Edw. 3. should be once a Year, or oftner, if need be. Besides, here is no Succession of Parliament, but a Dissolution. Another Parliament, must be another Session; and therefore an Order cannot be in force until another Session. If they had made an Act of Parliament, or passed a Judgment of Parliament, it had been another Case.

Upon the Consideration of the whole Matter, the Judges Opinion was, That the Prisoner ought to be discharged, and this Rule enter'd.

Saturday next after eight Days of the Purification, 1653.

The Lord Protector against John Streater Gent.

THE Defendant was brought into Court by the Marshal, upon Habeas Corpus; and by the Court discharged of his Imprisonment, by the Motion of Mr. Serjeant Twisden.

By the Court.

Ld Ch. Just. Rolle. Sir, you will do well to carry your self conformably to the present Power, and walk inoffensively.

Mr. Streater. My Lord, I ever have been, and, I hope, shall be, a Subject to Government, so as the Law requireth me to be: It is not my Duty to be otherwise subject.

POSTSCRIPT.

IF you obſerve the Tenor of my Writ of Habeas Corpus, as it is obſerved by Mr. Streater in his laſt Argument, that the Writ doth only require that Cauſe be ſhewn why the Party is impriſoned, not who did commit the Party to Priſon: If any Cauſe lawful was returned, then the Party is to continue ſtill in Priſon; but without Cauſe no Commitment, from what Power ſoever, can or ought, in Law or Reaſon, to be binding. That it is the Cauſe only for which a Priſoner is committed, that cutteth the Priſoner off from the Benefit of a Habeas Corpus, and not the Will, Pleaſure, or Power of thoſe in Power. Here take Sir Edward Coke's Nine General Reaſons, why a Habeas Corpus is to relieve againſt illegal or long Impriſonment.

The Firſt General Reaſon.

The Firſt General Reaſon is drawn à re ipſa, from Impriſonment, ex viſceribus cauſæ, be it thoſe or other Impriſonments, which are divided into three Parts.

1. No Man can be impriſoned at the Will and Pleaſure of any, but he that is bound, and a Villain; for that Impriſonment at Will is Tailes luy haut & baſe, are propria quarto modo to Villains.

2. But if Freemen of England might be impriſoned at the Will and Pleaſure of the King, or any other's Command, then were they in worſe Caſe than Bondmen and Villains: For the Lord of a Villain cannot command another to impriſon his Villain without Cauſe, as of Diſobedience, or refuſing to ſerve; as it is agreed in our Books.

3. Impriſonment is accounted in Law a Civil Death; Perdit Domum, Familiam, Vicinos, Patriam; his Houſe, his Family, his Wife, his Children, his Neighbours, his Country, and to live among wretched wicked Men.

If a Man be threaten'd to be killed, he may avoid a Feoffment of Lands, Gifts of Goods, &c. So it is, if he be threaten'd to be impriſoned, he ſhall do the like; for that is a Civil Death.

The Second General Reaſon.

The Second General Reaſon is, A minore ad majus; pœna corporalis eſt majus qualibet pecuniaria: but the King himſelf cannot impoſe a Fine upon any Man.

But it muſt be done judically by his Judges, per Juſticiar' in Cur', non per Regem in Camera. And ſo it hath been reſolved by all the Judges of England.

The Third General Reaſon.

The Third General Reaſon is drawn from the Number and Diverſity of Remedies, which the Law giveth againſt Impriſonment, viz. Brevia de homine replegiando, de Odio & Atia, de Habeas Corpus, & Brev' de Manucaptione.

The former of theſe are antiquated; but the Writ de Odio & Atia is revived, for that was given by the Statute of Magna Charta, cap. 26. And therefore though it were repealed by the Statute of 28 Edw. 3. cap. 9. yet it is revived by the Statute of 43 Edw. 3. cap. 1. by which it is provided, That all Statutes made againſt Magna Charta are void. Now the Law would never have given ſo many Remedies, if the Freemen of England might have been impriſoned at Free-will and Pleaſure.

The Fourth General Reaſon.

The Fourth General Reaſon is drawn from the Extent and Univerſality of the pretended Power to impriſon; for it ſhould not extend only to the Commons of the Realm, and their Poſterity, but to the Nobility, and the Realm, and their Succeſſors; to all Perſons, of what Condition, or Sex, or Age ſoever; to all Judges, Officers, &c. whoſe Attendance are neceſſary, without Exception of any Perſon.

The Fifth General Reaſon.

The Fifth General Reaſon is drawn from the Indefiniteneſs of Time: The pretended Power being limited to no Time, it may be perpetual during Life.

The Sixth General Reaſon.

The Sixth General Reaſon is drawn a Dedecore, from the Loſs and Diſhonour of the Engliſh Nation, in two Reſpects: 1. For their Valour and Power, ſo famous through the whole World. 2. For their Induſtry: For who will endeavour to imploy himſelf in any Profeſſion, either of War, Liberal Science, or Merchandize, if he be but Tenant at Will of his Liberty? And no Tenant at Will will ſupport or improve any Thing, becauſe he hath no certain Eſtate. And thus it ſhould be both Dedecus & Damnum to the Engliſh Nation: And it ſhould be no Honour to the King, to be a King of Slaves.

The Seventh General Reaſon.

The Seventh General Reaſon is drawn ab Utili & Inutili: For that appeareth by the Statute of 36 Edw. 3. that the Execution of the Statute of Magna Charta, 5 Edw. 3. 25 Edw. 3. and 28 Edw. 3. are adjudged in Parliament to be for the common Profit of the King, and of his People: And therefore the pretended Power being againſt the Profit of the King, and of his People, can be no part of his Prerogative.

The Eighth General Reaſon.

The Eighth General Reaſon is drawn a Tuto: For it is ſafe for the King to expreſs the Cauſe of the Commitment, and dangerous for him to omit it. For if any be committed without expreſſing the Cauſe, though he eſcape, albeit the Truth be it were for Treaſon or Felony; but if the Cauſe be expreſſed to be for Suſpicion of Treaſon or Felony, then if he eſcape, albeit the Truth be it were Treaſon or Felony, yet the Eſcape is neither Felony nor Treaſon: But if the Cauſe be expreſſed to be for Suſpicion of Treaſon or Felony, then if he eſcape, albeit he be innocent, it is Treaſon or Felony.

The

The Laſt General Reaſon.

The Laſt General Reaſon is drawn from Authorities. 16 H. 6. Means de Fait, 182. by the whole Court: The King in his Preſence cannot command one to be arreſted, but an Action of falſe Impriſonment lies againſt him that arreſteth. 22 H. 7. 4. Newton. 1 H. 7. 4. The Opinion of Markham, Chief Juſtice to Edward the Fourth; and the Reaſon, becauſe the Party hath no Remedy.

Forteſcue, cap. 8. Proprio ore nullus regum uſus eſt, &c. to commit any Man.

4 El. Plo. Com. 236. The common Law hath ſo admeaſured the King's Prerogative, as he cannot prejudice any Man in his Inheritance: And the greateſt Inheritance a Man hath, is the Liberty of his Perſon; all other are acceſſary to it.

The Proceedings of the Commiſſioners of Berks, for ejecting Scandalous and Inſufficient Miniſters, againſt JOHN PORDAGE of Bradfield, in the ſame County. Written by the ſaid John Pordage, Anno 1654.

I Was firſt warned by this ſubſequent Summons, to appear before the Commiſſioners.

Monday, the 18th of September 1654.

Berks, ſſ. By the Commiſſioners appointed by an Ordinance of his Highneſs the Lord Protector and his Council, for the ejecting of Scandalous Miniſters.

WHereas ſeveral ſcandalous Articles have been exhibited againſt Dr. John Pordage of Bradfield, in the ſaid County of Berks; which ſaid Articles lying now before the ſaid Commiſſioners, it is thereupon ordered by the ſaid Commiſſioners, that the ſaid Dr. Pordage do make his perſonal Appearance before the ſaid Commiſſioners, on Thurſday the 5th Day of October next, at the Bear in Speenhamland, by Newbury, at Nine of the clock in the Morning, to anſwer the ſaid Articles exhibited againſt him: Whereof he is not to fail. Given under our Hands and Seals in Reading, the Day and Year aboveſaid.

Chr. Whichcot.	William Strowde.
Sam. Wightwick.	William Natkine.
Ri. Fincher.	Will. Cooke.

Accordingly at the Time prefixed I appeared, about Nine of the clock in the Morning, in the Place above expreſſed; where I waited till betwixt Three and Four of the clock before I was called in. Then came the Door-Keeper to tell me that the Commiſſioners called for me.

I preſently obeyed, and followed their Servant, with two Friends that accompanied me. Then the Door-Keeper commanded my two Friends to go forth of the Room. I told him they were to be there. He replied, That he was ordered by the Commiſſioners to let none in but my ſelf; and therefore they ſhould be put out: And ſo began in an uncivil manner, by Violence, to thruſt them forth. Whereupon I applied my ſelf to the Commiſſioners, telling them theſe two were my Friends; and that I brought them as Eye-witneſſes of the Proceedings; and that it was no reaſon that I ſhould be alone. To which it was anſwered, They muſt depart, it being reſolved upon by them to have none but my ſelf there preſent. Then the Door-Keeper began with violence to pull them forth, crying out, Do you not hear the Senſe of the Commiſſioners? I turning towards them again, ſaid, I deſire none preſent but theſe my two Friends. It was replied, it ſhould not be ſo. Upon this I was neceſſitated to ask them, againſt my Will, what they were, whether a publick Court of Juſtice, yea or no? For if they were, I demanded the Liberty of a Subject, that their Doors might be opened, for all to come in that would; that ſo their Proceedings might be open. Moreover, I ſhewed how this was the Cuſtom of all Committees above, and of all ſuch Courts of Judicature. Whereupon the Doors were opened, and the People came in; Mr. Wightwick openly averring that I ſhould fare the worſe for it. Thus was I neceſſitated to contend for this juſt and reaſonable Privilege; for which my Cauſe was unjuſtly threaten'd.

The Commiſſioners then ſitting were theſe, with one or two more; Mr. Fettiplace Chairman, Mr. Samuel Wightwick, Mr. Samuel Dunch, Major Fincher, Major Allin, Mr. Cox, Mr. Strowde, Mr. Angell Bell. The Miniſters were theſe, with ſome other, Mr. Hewes, Mr. Tickle.

But to proceed: As I ſtood ſilent before them, Mr. Dunch turned to me, and with much ſeeming Bitterneſs and Paſſion ſpake thus; Dare you deny Chriſt to be God? And again, How dare you deny the Godhead of Chriſt? To whom I replied, I came to know my Charge which was exhibited againſt me; and that I hoped he had not judged my Cauſe before it was heard.

Hereupon the Chairman commanded Langly the Clerk to read theſe following Articles in open Court.

Articles againſt Dr. Pordage of Bradfield.

1. THAT the Fiery Deity of Chriſt mingles and mixes it ſelf with our Fleſh.

2. That the Imputative Righteouſneſs of Chriſt is a Sapleſs Righteouſneſs.

3. That the Diſcoveries of the Sinfulneſs of Sin, the Terrors of the Law, the Death of Chriſt, the Free-Grace of God, are fleſhly and flaſhy Diſcoveries.

4. That the Liberty and Freedom ſpoken of, purchaſed by the Blood of Chriſt, and applied by the clinging and cleaving of the Soul to, is not a Liberty or Freedom from the Guilt of Sin, the Curſe of the Law, the Wrath of God; but the Fiery Deity of Chriſt in the Centre of our Souls.

5. That by Male and Female, Gen. 1. we are to underſtand by Male the Deity, by the Female the Humanity; and that theſe two became one Fleſh. Theſe Things were delivered without any Limitation whatſoever.

6. That Gifts and Graces of the Spirit are but Fleſh.

7. That Chriſt is a Type, and but a Type.

8. That Chriſt is not God.

9. That Chriſt is not Jehovah.

Tickle witneſſeth.

After theſe Articles were read, the Chairman demanded my Anſwer. To whom I replied, That I had been acquitted from all theſe, four Years ſince, by the Committee of Plundered Miniſters, and that after a full Hearing and Debate; therefore I deſired that (according to Law) they would paſs by theſe old ones. But if they had any that were new, I told them I was ready and willing to receive and anſwer them. I further replied, I hoped they would give me the Liberty of a Felon, who, after Tryal and Acquitment, cannot be queſtioned for the ſame thing again. To which Mr. Dunch replied, with much ſeeming Fierceneſs, You are worſe than a Felon, for ought I know. Which Language coming from a Judge to the Defendant before Tryal, let all ſober Perſons judge of, who are acquainted with the Rules of Civility, Morality, or Chriſtianity.

Here Mr. Hewes the Miniſter interpoſed, affirming, That a Felon might be acquitted at one Aſſizes, and hang for the ſame Thing at the next: Of which he gave an Inſtance in a Story not worth the relating. To which I replied only this, That it could not be for the ſame he was acquitted of before. But I ſeeing that he had gone ultra crepidam, beyond his Office, and beyond Reaſon, ſaid no more to him; though he was very bitter and pragmatical, ſpeaking oft as Judge, although he was but an Aſſiſtant, and that only in reference to Ignorance and Inſufficiency.

But afterward, applying my ſelf to the Chairman, I further urged, That theſe Articles were not within the Cognizance of the Commiſſioners, in that I had been diſcharged from them, by thoſe who had full Power and Authority to do it.

After this, all were commanded to withdraw; and about an Hour after I was called in again, and asked for my Diſcharge. I anſwered, I came now only to know my Charge; and that I had not my Diſcharge there, but would bring it when they would appoint me.

Then they declared, That notwithſtanding my Diſcharge in another Court, yet it was the Judgment of the Commiſſioners, that they had Power to take Cognizance of the Articles exhibited: Whence they made this Order, viz.

Berks, ſſ. By the Commiſſioners for ejecting of Scandalous Miniſters, &c. October 5. 1654. at the Bear in Speenhamland.

DR. John Pordage, Rector of Bradfield, in this County, hath in Obedience to our Warrant, dated the 18th of September laſt, to him directed, this Day attended, and pleadeth that he hath been already diſcharged from the Articles that are exhibited to us againſt him, by the Parliament and the late Committee of this County, and therefore not again to be queſtioned or proceeded againſt for the ſame by theſe Commiſſioners. But the ſaid Doctor hath produced no ſuch Diſcharge.

Reſolved, upon the Queſtion, That by virtue of the Ordinance of his Highneſs the Lord Protector and his Council, for ejecting of ſcandalous, ignorant, and inſufficient Miniſters and School-Maſters, the ſaid Commiſſioners have power to queſtion the ſaid Doctor upon the ſaid Articles; and that notwithſtanding his Plea, as aforeſaid, of a former Diſcharge.

And it is thereupon ordered, That the ſaid Doctor do give his poſitive Anſwer to the ſaid Articles unto us on this Day-fortnight, being the 19th inſtant, at this Place: Whereof he is not to fail.

Now this was the Subſtance of the Things which were tranſacted the firſt Day of my Appearance; which I have here preſented in Truth and Righteouſneſs to the impartial Reader.

My ſecond Appearance before them was the 19th of October, at the ſame Place.

The Commiſſioners then ſitting were theſe; Mr. Wightwick Chairman, Mr. Dunch, Mr. Evelyn, Mr. Bell, Mr. Mills. The Miniſters, Mr. Woodbridge, Mr. Fowler, Mr. Hewes, with ſome others.

The firſt Thing they demanded, was my Anſwer to the Articles exhibited againſt me. But I deſired them to receive my Diſcharge, which I hoped would be inſtead of a full and ſatisfactory Anſwer. So I produced it; and it was received by them, and delivered to the Clerk; who, after it was read, took a Copy of it, and then returned it to me again.

The Tenor of it was as followeth:

At the Committee for Plundered Miniſters, March 27. 1651.

UPON hearing the Cauſe, in preſence of Parties and Counſel on both ſides, concerning Dr. Pordage, Miniſter of Bradfield, in the County of Berks; and upon reading the Papers and Examinations depending againſt him before this Committee, and full hearing what could be ſaid by both Parties; this Committee hath taken the ſaid Cauſe into ſerious Conſideration and Debate: And do thereupon order that the ſaid Cauſe be diſmiſſed. And the ſame is hereby diſmiſſed.

Gilb. Millington.

Afterward they asked me how they ſhould know that this was a true Copy. I returned anſwer, I received received it from their Clerk there present, who knew it to be true: And besides, I had a Friend by, who being with me when I received it, could attest the Truth of it by Oath. Then they waved my Discharge, and called for my particular Answer to the Articles; alledging, That notwithstanding the Discharge, the Commissioners had judged the Articles under their Cognizance. So that after I had pressed my Discharge with as much Earnestness, as in Modesty I could, they still hastily calling for my further Answer, I was necessitated to give in this which followeth:

My Answer to the Articles exhibited against me, consists in these Particulars.

Partic. 1. I Humbly conceive that none of the Articles exhibited against me are comprehended in the Act, entitled, An Act against several Atheistical, Blasphemous, and Execrable Opinions, derogatory to the Honour of God, and destructive to human Society; without the Sense and Meaning of the Words expressed in the Act be stretched and wrested beyond the literal Scope and Drift of the Act. And this is not my Judgment only, but the Judgment of some pious and judicious Lawyers of this Land. Which Thing, in all Humility, I leave to your serious Considerations.

Partic. 2. I humbly conceive that the forementioned Act cannot take into Cognizance those Articles exhibited against me; because they are acknowledged by the Accusers to have been uttered a Year before this Act had a Birth in the World. Now can any Guilt be legally imputed from any Law, before the original Being of it? This seemeth contrary to Reason. Now those Articles were charged upon me Aug. 16. 1649, and this Act made and published Aug. 9. 1650.

Moreover, these Articles are not punishable by that Act; because, according to the Conclusion of the said Act, no Person is to be impeached, molested, troubled, or punished, for any Offence mentioned in that Act, unless he be for the same Offence accused, presented, indicted, or convicted within six Months after such Offence committed. Now it is six Years since some, and four since any of these Expressions were pretended to be uttered by me.

Partic. 3. I humbly conceive that the forementioned Act cannot take into Cognizance the Articles exhibited against me; because upon Examination of Witnesses on both sides, I was cleared by the Vote of the honourable Committee of Berks, who had full Power, by an Act of Parliament, to put out, and to put in Ministers in this County.

Partic. 4. I humbly conceive that the forementioned Act cannot take into Cognizance the Articles exhibited against me; because, after Examination of Witnesses, and after a full Hearing, I have been dismissed and acquitted from all Guilt and Offence charged upon me from them by the honourable Committee of Plundered Ministers, who had full Power to put out, and to keep and put in Ministers. Now the judicious Lawyer saith, That these Articles having had their original Dependance before two Committees of Parliament, who had an absolute Power, by Act and Ordinance of Parliament, to put out and put in Ministers, and they having cleared and acquitted me from the pretended Guilt of such Articles, it is not according to the Liberty of the Subject, or Tenor of the Law, that it should be within the Cognizance of this Act, or of this Committee; it being against that fundamental Maxim of Magna Charta, Nemo bis punietur pro uno delicto.

Moreover, it seemeth contrary to the sixth Article in the Instrument of Government, published by his Highness the Lord Protector's special Command; in which it is expressed, That the Laws shall not be altered, suspended, abrogated, or repealed, but by Consent of Parliament, save as it is expressed in the thirtieth Article. Therefore my former legal Discharge, according to the former Acts and Ordinances of Parliament, is still in force, and holds good, not being abrogated by the Government, or by any thing expressed or included in the said thirtieth Article of Parliament.

I shall now proceed to answer each Article in particular.

Art. 1. That Christ is not God: That Christ is not Jehovah.

1 Part. Answ. I do acknowledge that such Expressions were uttered by me: But I hope the bare Expressions of such Negations doth not make me come within the Guilt of the Act; for it must be known what Words preceded such Expressions, and what followed. To say in Preaching, There is no God, doth not make the Preacher guilty of Atheism, if the Words going before be but annexed, The Fool hath said in his Heart, there is no God. So do but annex the subsequent Words to the former Expressions, That Christ is not God, viz. the Father; That Christ is not Jehovah; Jehovah taken strictly for the Person of the Father, the first Person of the glorious Trinity: I say, add but these Words, and there is nothing blasphemous or culpable in such Expressions.

2 Part. Answ. Though I do acknowledge that such Expressions fell from me, yet I never avowedly uttered or maintained such Propositions; for they were only uttered by way of Dispute, and that upon this occasion: Mr. Daniel Blagrave, then being Chairman of the Committee, demanded of Mr. Tickle what Blasphemy was. He answered, Evil-speaking against God the Father. I replied, A lame Definition of Blasphemy. Had Mr. Tickle said Evil-speaking against God, which is a Word implying the Trinity in Unity, then there had been no occasion given of Contest; for the ground of these Expressions arose from the Weakness of his Definition of Blasphemy, in that he said Blasphemy was Evil-speaking against God the Father. To which I replied, His Definition of Blasphemy doth not reach that of which he accused me; for that which he chargeth me with, is not Blasphemy against God the Father, but against Christ, God the Son. And I have uttered no Evil-speakings against God the Son, but seemingly to my Accuser, in saying, That his Imputative Righteousness would prove a Sapless Righteousness to all those that had not the Fiery Deity of Christ in the Centre of their Souls, burning up their Lusts and Corruptions. Mr. Tickle then replied to the Committee, Pray take notice that the Doctor denieth that Christ is God, which I prove out of John 1. 1. To which I replied, Christ was not God the Father, but God the Son. Christ is Jehovah, and so called the Lord our Righteousness, said Mr. Tickle. To which I replied, Christ is not Jehovah, if you take Jehovah for the Person of the Father. And this is the Truth, as the whole Committee of Berks then present can testify; by whose Vote I was then cleared of all these unworthy Aspersions, and dismissed, and ſince, upon Proof of Witneſſes, acquitted and diſmiſſed; and that after a full Hearing by the Committee of Plundered Miniſters.

3 Part. Anſ. I do humbly conceive, that altho the former Act did expreſly adjudge and condemn Evil-ſpeakings, or Blaſphemy againſt Chriſt, yet my delivering ſuch Expreſſions in an extempory Diſpute, viz. That Chriſt was not God, or Jehovah, did not make me obnoxious to the Guilt and Penalty of that Act; becauſe p. 980, & 981. they only are condemned as guilty, who ſhall avowedly profeſs, maintain, or publiſh in word or writing, ſuch or ſuch execrable Opinions: which I never did. Nay, I profeſs avowedly the contrary, and do declare in the Sincerity of my Heart, that the Thought never entred into my Heart, to deny the Godhead or Deity of Chriſt; but I have avowedly in Words maintained, and publiſhed by Preaching, That Chriſt is God, out of that Text, John 1. 12. The Word was made Fleſh, &c. From whence I did maintain and publiſh, That Chriſt was God, coequal, coeternal, and coeſſential with the Father, contrary to all thoſe blaſphemous and execrable Opinions, that deny Chriſt to be God. So that now I hope the mere uttering of ſuch Expreſſions, by way of diſpute before a judicious and underſtanding Committee, doth not make me a Tranſgreſſor, according to the true Senſe and Meaning of this Act.

Artic. 2. That the imputative Righteouſneſs of Chriſt is a ſapleſs Righteouſneſs.

Anſ. I thus deliver the Truth: As I was paraphraſing on that Portion of Scripture mentioned in Dan. 9. 24. of everlaſting Righteouſneſs, I did ſay words to this effect; That the imputative Righteouſneſs of another, was a ſapleſs Righteouſneſs to all thoſe that had no Right or Intereſt in it. I ſhall deſire a little to explain myſelf on this Propoſition, that the imputative Righteouſneſs of Chriſt in this ſenſe will prove a ſapleſs Righteouſneſs: For he that hath not the Spirit of Chriſt dwelling in his Heart by Faith, notwithſtanding all this Application of Chriſt and his Merits, yet to him it is but a ſapleſs Righteouſneſs: ſo ſaith the Scripture, He that hath not the Spirit of Chriſt, is none of his, notwithſtanding his Application of the imputative Righteouſneſs of Chriſt to himſelf: But here I do not deny the imputative Righteouſneſs of Chriſt, nor his active and paſſive Obedience to be the material Cauſe of his Juſtification; yea, I own and acknowledge Chriſt's Righteouſneſs to be the Soul's Righteouſneſs in point of Juſtification, when it is apply'd upon a true ground, according to the true Senſe of the Spirit in the Scriptures.

Artic. 3. That they ſhould look to the fiery Nature of Chriſt's Deity in the Centre of their Souls, burning up the Droſs and Chaff of their Luſts and Corruptions.

Anſ. For the Explanation of this Article, we muſt conſider theſe are Scripture-Metaphors, and Chriſt is often clothed with a Garment of Fire, according to that of Paul, Heb. 12. 29. Our God is a conſuming Fire; and in another place, Chriſt ſhall come in flaming Fire. None, or few underſtand theſe Scriptures, or the like, of elemental material Fire; but either of the Fire of his divine Love to burn up our Luſts and Corruptions, or the Fire of his divine Juſtice or Wrath in deſtroying Sin and Sinners.

Artic. 4. That the fiery Deity of Chriſt mingles and mixeth itſelf with our Fleſh.

Anſ. I was then ſpeaking of the myſtical Union betwixt Chriſt and his Church: And in the Illuſtration of this Union, I apply'd that Expreſſion out of the 5th of the Canticles, He mingleth his Wine and his Milk together: ſo in this Union, Chriſt's divine Nature mingleth itſelf with our Humanity, his Spirit with our Fleſh. This Expreſſion Mr. Tickle was pleaſed to charge with Blaſphemy; asking me what I meant by Fleſh. I anſwered in Conference, By Fleſh I underſtand not the ſinful and fleſhly part of the Soul, that luſteth againſt the Spirit; for with this there can be no Union. 2. By Fleſh I mean not the outward elementary Fleſh of the Body; but by Fleſh I underſtand our pure Humanity, the pure regenerated part of the Soul, the converted part of our Spirit: And thus the Spirit of Chriſt and regenerated Part are really in Union one with the other, according to the Apoſtle's Phraſe, We are made Partakers of the Divine Nature. And againſt this Anſwer he had nothing to reply.

Artic. 5. That Chriſt was a Type, and but a Type.

This was in Conference: He asked me whether Chriſt was a Type or no. I anſwered, Chriſt was a Type, ſo expreſſed 1 Tim. 2. 21. How was Chriſt a Type, reply'd Mr. Pendarvis? I anſwered, His Life and Converſation was a Type, that is, a Pattern and Example for us Chriſtians, to ſquare our Lives and Converſations by. Who denies this, ſaid he? Why, I affirm no more, ſaid I, than that Chriſt is a Type. Is he but a Type, reply'd Mr. Pendarvis? I anſwered, Why lie you thus on the catch? I ſay Chriſt is a Type; but I will not affirm Chriſt is but a Type. And this they both confeſs in their Anſwers.

Artic. 6. That the Gifts and Graces of the Spirit are but Fleſh.

I confeſs I ſaid the common Gifts and Graces of the Spirit were but Fleſh; but this I opened after this manner, That they were but fleſhly, weak, and carnal in point of Juſtification, in point of Truſt and Confidence in regard of Salvation and Life eternal; and no otherwiſe, as their own Witneſſes on Examination confeſſed before the honourable Committee of Berks.

To conclude: As for theſe Articles, eſpecially all the latter, I look not upon them as under the Cognizance of the Act; yet for your Satisfaction I have tranſcribed my former Anſwers, and do here preſent them again to your Conſideration, by which you may clearly ſee my Innocency in reference to the horrid Opinions for which I am accuſed.

John Pordage.

This being read by the Clerk, we were all commanded to withdraw. About an hour or two after, I was called in again; and they told me, if I would, I ſhould have an Order to fetch in my Witneſſes to prove what they could on my behalf, in reference to that Charge. I reply'd, That I hoped my Diſcharge and Anſwer were ſufficient, and that they would not put me to the trouble and charge of traverſing this Buſineſs (viva voce) by my Witneſſes again; in that (beſides my Diſcharge) I had brought all their Depoſitions delivered by Oath to the Committee of Plundered Miniſters; which I deſired might be then read before them, becauſe the Witneſſes could but ſay, viva voce, what was there wrote down.

Hereupon I delivered them to be read; and ſo being handed to the Clerk, the Commiſſioners asked me how they ſhould know them to be true. I reply'd, The Clerk delivered them as a true Copy, and I would affirm on my Oath, that they had not been altered ſince I had them. But notwithſtanding withſtanding this, they rejected them, alledging that they would not take notice of any written Depoſitions taken out of another Court; but that I muſt again bring in the former Witneſſes, to teſtify what they could by Word of Mouth: ſo that all the Reaſons and Arguments I could uſe, could not prevail with them to free me from the Charge and Trouble of bringing in my Witneſſes again; for which the Clerk was then commanded to draw me up an Order.

Berks. By the Commiſſioners for ejecting of Scandalous Miniſters, Octob. 19. 1654. At the Bear in Speenhamland.

DR. Pordage of Bradfield hath this day again attended, and hath exhibited an Anſwer in writing to the Articles exhibited againſt him. Ordered, That the ſaid Doctor do attend again before us on this day fortnight at this place; at which time he is to give Anſwer to the additional Articles now exhibited againſt him, and to produce his Witneſſes, if he have any, for Proof of his Defence; and Summons are to iſſue out for that purpoſe, if he deſire the ſame.

Then they told me they had a new Charge of Articles againſt me; which were theſe that follow, then openly read by the Clerk.

Articles againſt Dr. Pordage, Parſon of Bradfield, to prove his Ignorance and Inſufficiency for the Miniſtry.

1. IMprimis, One Miſtreſs Lewyn being with child, and near the time of Travail, ſent for Dr. Pordage's Mother to be her Midwife; but he would not ſuffer her to go, ſaying, they would not be guilty of ſuch a beaſt-like Life, meaning Miſtreſs Lewyn's being with child by her Husband.

2. The ſaid Dr. Pordage coming to the Houſe of Miſtreſs Lewyn, in his Diſcourſe with Mrs. Lewyn, blamed her for having Children by her Husband, and argued with her the Unlawfulneſs of having Children by her Husband.

3. In his Diſcourſes to Mrs. Lewyn concerning the ſame Subject, endeavoured to maintain the Unlawfulneſs of their having Children, and ſaid that Adam was made Male and Female in himſelf, and had he not fallen, he had brought forth Children himſelf; and ſeemed to maintain and prove the ſame by Scripture, and otherwiſe.

4. In his Diſcourſes with Mrs. Lewyn, which was about the time that one Everard was with him in his Houſe at Bradfield, who was generally reputed to be a Conjurer, he asked Mr. Lewyn whether he would not be afraid if he ſhould ſee his own Picture, or Shape; intimating that he himſelf had uſed to ſee his.

5. The ſaid Dr. Pordage hath had for ſome Weeks together in his Houſe the ſaid Everard, and one Tawny, who ſtiled himſelf King of the Jews, who had been queſtioned (as it is generally reported) for holding dangerous and unſound Opinions; as, That there is no Hell, and the like.

A True Copy, Joſeph Cook.
Mat. Langley Regiſt.

After theſe were read, I deſired the Court in the firſt place to finiſh the firſt Paper of Articles; urging, that if they were ſufficient, they might ſave both them and me much trouble. But this they denied, tho I much urged it: Whereupon they commanded this ſubſequent Order to be drawn up, viz.

Berks, ſſ. By the Committee for ejecting of Scandalous, Ignorant, and Inſufficient Miniſters and School-Maſters in this County, Octob. 19. 1654.

ORdered, That Mr. John Tickle, Mr. John Fendarvis, Mr. Francis Pordage, John Hoggs, Gifford Luinton, Richard Luinton, Mary Pocock, and Roger Stevens, do make their perſonal Appearance before the ſaid Commiſſioners on Thurſday the ſecond Day of November next, by Eight of the clock in the Morning, at the Bear in Speenhamland by Newbury, to teſtify their Knowledge of all ſuch Matters as ſhall be propounded unto them concerning Dr. John Pordage of Bradfield in this County; whereof they are not to fail. Given under our Hands and Seals, the Day and Year above-mention'd.

Ar. Evelyn. Angell. Bell.
Ed. Mills.

But this I muſt ſpeak on the behalf of Mr. Wightwick and Mr. Evelyn, that by their Preſence things were tranſacted that day with much more ſeeming Modeſty and Calmneſs than at other times; the Miniſters then containing themſelves within the limits of due Silence, which gave me ſome hopes that the latter part of my Tryal might be tranſacted in ſome Moderation, Equity, and Civility. But theſe two ſitting no more after that day, there broke forth much Confuſion, Raſhneſs, and Incivility in their Carriage; ſome Miniſters (who were bitter Enemies againſt me) acting the part of Commiſſioners, and ſeeming to have great Influence upon all their Proceedings, being ſuffered to break forth into uncivil Scoffs, and Railings againſt me in the open Court, as it will afterward appear.

But thus much for my ſecond Day's Appearance, here repreſented according to the Line of Truth and Equity.

On the ſecond of November I appeared before them again at the ſame place, according to their laſt Order, at which time Major Fincher was Chairman; beſides whom, there were preſent, Mr. Dunch, Mr. Stroud, Mr. Cook, Mr. Bell, with two or three more Commiſſioners: the Miniſters were Mr. Fowler, Mr. Woodbridge, Mr. Hughes, Mr. Tickle, &c.

The firſt thing they demanded of me, was to give in my Anſwer to the ſecond Charge of Articles exhibited the laſt Day againſt me. I reply'd, that my Anſwer was ready; but I deſired that they would keep to their own Order, and firſt hear my Witneſſes, and ſo finiſh my firſt Charge, that we might not run into confuſion. But they would not hearken to this rational Requeſt, importuning me for my Anſwer, reſolving to hear nothing till I had given it in: ſo being neceſſitated to yield to their Command, I gave in this ſubſequent Anſwer.

My

My Anſwer to the ſecond Articles exhibited againſt me, is as followeth.

IN the firſt place, I ſhall take liberty to reply to the Title of the Articles; which is, to prove my Ignorance and Inſufficiency for the Miniſtry, by the Articles produced.

1 Part. Anſ. I do here humbly deſire, that Ignorance and Inſufficiency for the Miniſtry may be preſerved as diſtinct Heads from Scandal and Hereſy, according as it is intended by the Authors of the Ordinance: for certainly it is againſt the Judgment of the Lord Protector, and the Intendment of his Council, who made the Ordinance, to confound that which may be called Scandal, or Hereſy, and Inſufficiency together. We ſee it is uſual this day among us, for knowing and learned Miniſters to differ in their Judgments, both in Doctrine, Worſhip, and Things indifferent; who yet thereupon are not accounted ignorant and inſufficient for the Miniſtry. So that altho theſe Articles could be proved true, they are to be referred either to Scandal or Hereſy, and not to Ignorance and Inſufficiency.

2 Part. Anſ. If Ignorance and Inſufficiency for the Miniſtry be taken for the want of an inward ſpecial Gift, as it is qualified with human Arts and Sciences, attained by much Pains and Induſtry, in relation to Academical Learning: Or if Ignorance and Inſufficiency for the Miniſtry are taken for the want of inward Abilities, qualified with ſpiritual Gifts, as with thoſe of Prayer, Utterance and Preaching: Or if Ignorance and Inſufficiency be taken for the want of a ſaving Principle of Grace, manifeſting itſelf in Convictions of Sin, Legal Terrors, or Evangelical Illuminations into the Free Grace and Love of the Father, or into the meritorious Death of Chriſt for the Redemption of loſt Sinners: Or if it be taken for thoſe Effects flowing from ſuch a ſaving Principle of Life, as that of ſaving Faith, true Repentance, Pardon of Sin, Peace of Conſcience, a holy Life in all univerſal Obedience to the holy Will and righteous Commands of God: Then I humbly conceive, that mere Ignorance and Inſufficiency, without the Pretenſions of Hereſy and Scandal, will be found a Bed too ſhort, and a Covering too narrow for my Ejection out of the Work of the Miniſtry, according to the true Intent of the Ordinance.

3 Part. Anſ. Hence my humble Deſire to you for time to come, is, that you would not make your Ephah of Ignorance and Inſufficiency ſo ſmall, that Hereſy and Scandal may not ſtand diſtinct in it; and that you would not make your Shekel of Ignorance and Inſufficiency ſo great, as to ſwallow up Hereſy and Scandal into the boundleſs and endleſs Extent of it: For what is this but to falſify the Ballances of Juſtice and Equity by a deceitful Weight, in not preſerving Inſufficiency as a diſtinct Head from Scandal and Hereſy; which in time may prove very prejudicial to that Liberty of Conſcience, which of late years hath been, and is ſtill preſerved and aſſerted by the Rulers of this Nation?

In the ſecond place, to the Articles themſelves I thus reply.

Anſ. 1. As to the four firſt, I know not how or what poſitively and directly to anſwer to them, till I ſee them firſt proved by Oath, and that by ſuch Perſons who are without juſt Exceptions; and then I ſhall be capable of returning a more full and compleat Anſwer.

Anſ. 2. Neither do I ſee, that ſeemingly to maintain and argue, by way of diſpute only, the Unlawfulneſs of Mrs. Lewyn's having Children by her Husband, for the ſifting forth of Truth from Error, could it be proved that I did ſo, could argue or evince my Ignorance and Inſufficiency for the Miniſtry: For this, tho it were evinced to be my Crime, cannot in Juſtice and Equity be referred to that Head of Inſufficiency, but to Scandal; except Ignorance and Inſufficiency be reſolved into the boundleſs Liberty of the Wills of the Judges, that what they deem ignorant and inſufficient, muſt be ignorant and inſufficient, whether Ignorance and Inſufficiency be real in ſuch a Subject or not.

As to the fifth Article, which concerns my giving Entertainment in my Houſe to one Everard, reputed a Conjurer, and to one Tawny, reported to hold unſound Opinions, I thus anſwer:

As to the firſt part of it, I confeſs that one Everard, about four Years ſince, was received into my Houſe at Bradfield, for the ſpace of almoſt three Weeks, and no longer; and that after this manner: He came in Harveſt-time with a new Pair of Harveſt-Gloves on his hands, to ſhew his Willingneſs and Readineſs to work; and asking to ſpeak with me, told me, That if I pleaſed to employ him in Harveſt-Work, he came to offer his Service. Hereupon I entertained him as a Workman. And thus you ſee both the Manner of his Coming, and the Cauſe of his Entertainment.

Whereas it is ſaid he was generally reputed a Conjurer:

Anſ. 1. I anſwer, I never heard any the leaſt Intimation from any, that he was ever ſuſpected to be a Conjurer, till after his departure from my Family: if he was a Conjurer before he came, it was more than I knew, or had heard of; but after his departure, I confeſs there aroſe a general Report up and down the Country, that he was a Conjurer. But from that time to this, I have never ſeen him, nor known what is become of him.

Anſ. 2. After his abſence, I do further affirm, That I was ſtrongly inclined to believe, according to the general Rumour, that he was a Conjurer. Hereupon I was in a great ſtrait in my own Spirit, whether I ſhould proſecute him not; my Zeal for God's Glory, and my Obedience to the Command of God, that ſaith, Suffer not a Witch to live, giving me ſome Impulſions to do it. But after ſerious Debate and Conſideration within myſelf, I reſolved this Caſe or Scruple of Conſcience thus; That my own Perſuaſions and Jealouſies, tho they had ſome ground of Probability, yet not being certain, afforded me not a ſufficient ground of proſecuting him as a Conjurer, or of ſwearing poſitively he was ſuch. Now I leave it to your ſerious Conſiderations, whether this Tenderneſs of Conſcience keeping me from proſecuting of him, or ſwearing againſt him, for fear of that heinous Sin of Perjury, makes me either ignorant or inſufficient for the Miniſtry.

As to the ſecond part of the fifth Article, which concerns my Entertainment of one Tawny, reputed (as it is there expreſſed) to be one that holds unſound Opinions:

Anſ. I anſwer, It is well known, as I invite none, none, ſo I turn away none that come to viſit me, tho their Principles in Matter of Doctrine, Worſhip, and Diſcipline, be different from mine. I will here ſhew you briefly my Grounds and Ends: My Grounds are theſe; I look upon it as my Duty, according to the Goſpel of Chriſt, to entertain all Strangers that be in want and neceſſity, profeſſing the Name of Chriſt. If Enemies hunger, we are to feed them; if they are naked, we muſt clothe them; and as for Strangers, we are to lodge and entertain them, Heb. 13. 2. And as in the Practice of this I break no Law of God, ſo no Law of Man. And you may remember, that in the 37th Article of Government it is expreſſed, That all ſuch as profeſs Faith in God by Jeſus Chriſt, tho differing in Judgment from the Doctrine, Worſhip, or Diſcipline publickly profeſſed, ſo as they abuſe not this Liberty to the Civil Injury of others, nor to the actual Diſturbance of the publick Peace, ſhall be protected; and then ſurely their hungry Bellies may be fed, their Backs clothed, their Wants ſupply'd, and their Perſons lodged and entertained.

And further, my Ends are theſe, which are Pure and Evangelical, That I may prove all things, and hold faſt that which is good: that I may try the Spirits, for many falſe Spirits are gone forth into the World. Now how are they to be proved and try'd? Not by carnal Weapons, as by Penalties, Mulcts, Impriſonments, and other external Puniſhments; but by convincing of them with ſound Doctrine, Chriſtian Diſcourſe, ſpiritual Arguments, and by the Example of a good Converſation. And thus God's Glory, and the Good of others are my only Ends, in giving Entertainment to all Strangers that come in Civility to viſit me.

Now the Cauſe of many Strangers coming to me as Gueſts from all Quarters of this Land, ariſeth from theſe lying printed Pamphlets, which have hardly a word of Truth in them; theſe draw all ſeeking inquiring Minds to viſit me, for divers Ends beſt known to themſelves: Let it but be proved that ever I gave Entertainment to any common Swearer, or to any open Drunkard, Sabbath-breaker, or to any known profane Perſon, and I ſhall judge myſelf obnoxious to your Cenſure; but all that I give free Entertainment to, appear clothed under ſome Shew of Godlineſs or other; but if they have not the Power, it will be their own Miſery.

In a word, the Strength of this Article doth but amount to thus much, That as Chriſt was ſuppoſed to be a Friend of Publicans and Sinners, ſo am I ſuppoſed to be a Friend to all People that profeſs Religion, and walk orderly, be their Opinion in Matter of Doctrine or Diſcipline never ſo much differing from mine own, or from thoſe commonly received: yet this doth not argue my Ignorance or Inſufficiency for the Miniſtry; but if in it any thing be culpable, it is to be referred to the Head of Scandal. But here being no Law of Prohibition, I cannot ſee any Tranſgreſſion in it, either againſt the Law of God or Man.

To conclude, I cannot give a more direct Anſwer to theſe Articles, being Matter of Fact, till I ſee them proved, and each Article referred to its proper place, either of Scandal or Hereſy, or Ignorance and Inſufficiency.

John Pordage.

This being read, we proceeded to the Proof of the firſt Charge of Articles atteſted by Mr. Tickle, one of the Aſſiſtants, whom I deſired to ſee ſworn in the open Court; alledging that I was altogether ignorant whether he had ſworn or not; but the Clerk affirmed that he had done it already: but after much diſpute, it was granted that I ſhould hear him ſworn in the open Court. Then I craved liberty to croſs-examine him openly, and began to put my Interrogatories to him; but this juſt Privilege they peremptorily denied me, tho I uſed many Reaſons and Arguments to ſhew the Equity and Reaſonableneſs of it. Then they commanded me to write down my Interrogatories, which ſhould be propoſed and anſwered in private, without my preſence, according to their fixed Reſolution. Then all being commanded to withdraw, I wrote down my Interrogatories; and when I gave them in, I deſired they might be asked in the open Court: but it was deny'd. Then I requeſted that I myſelf might be preſent at the Croſs-Examination, tho all the reſt withdrew; urging, that altho I had given in my Interrogatories, yet there might be many neceſſary Circumſtances and Queſtions emergent in the Examination, which I could not then give in in writing, nor make uſe of without I was preſent, which yet might ſerve very much to clear the Truth: but notwithſtanding this, and more which was then ſaid, I could not prevail, but was commanded to withdraw.

After this I was called in again, and as I thought to receive Mr. Tickle's Anſwers to my Interrogatories; which tho I preſſed it with much earneſtneſs, was deny'd, they reſolving, as it ſeemed to me by their Anſwer, to keep them private till Publication: which appeared to me very partial dealing, in regard I could not know how the Queſtions were anſwered, againſt the time of making my Defence by negative Witneſſes.

But afterward importuning the Court to examine my Witneſſes according to their own Order, I was interrupted by their commanding of the Clerk to read a third Charge of Articles exhibited againſt me by Mr. Fowler, an Aſſiſtant Miniſter to the Commiſſioners; whoſe Zeal moving ſwifter than the Clerk's ſlow reading of the Articles, cauſed him to take them out of his hands, and to read them himſelf, with much Courage and Reſolution. The Articles were theſe that follow.

Further Additional Articles exhibited againſt Dr. Pordage, by Mr. Fowler, Miniſter of St. Mary's in Reading.

1. THAT the Righteouſneſs of Jeſus Chriſt was a poor, vain, ſapleſs Righteouſneſs.

2. That Jeſus Chriſt was not perfect, alledging that Text to confirm it, becauſe he cry'd out, My God, my God, why, &c.

3. That the Blood of Chriſt was not meritorious of any Man's Salvation.

4. That it was a poor thing to live upon the Blood of Chriſt; and fetching it over again, in a contemptuous kind of ſpeaking, Piſh, ſaid he, thou art a Babe, thou knoweſt nothing; to live upon the Blood of Chriſt, is a poor thing.

5. That one ſpeaking to him of the glorious Perſons in Trinity, he reply'd, Perſons in Trinity! Piſh, there is no ſuch thing. And again, There is no ſuch thing as Perſons in Trinity.

6. That it was a Weakneſs to be troubled for Sin.

7. That he might ſay any thing to the Men of the World.

8. That he aſſerted he knew nothing to the contrary, but that a Man might company with more than one Woman; being taxed with keeping ing carnal Company with a Woman in London.

9. That he hath very frequent and familiar Converſe with Angels.

10. That a great Dragon came into his Chamber with a Tail of eight Yards long, four great Teeth, and did ſpit Fire at him: and that he contended with the Dragon.

11. That his own Angel came and ſtood by him while he was expoſtulating with the Dragon; and the Angel came in his own Shape and Faſhion, the ſame Clothes, Bands and Cuffs, the ſame Bandſtrings, and that his Angel ſtood by him and upheld him.

12. That Mrs. Pordage and Mrs. Flavel had their Angels ſtanding by them alſo, Mrs. Pordage ſinging ſweetly, and keeping time upon her Breaſt; and that his Children ſaw the Spirits coming into the Houſe, and ſaid, Look there, Father: And that the Spirits did often come into the Chamber, and drew the Curtains when they were in Bed.

13. That the ſaid Mr. Pordage confeſſed, that a ſtrong Enchantment was upon him, and that the Devil did appear to him in the Shape of Everard, and in the Shape of a fiery Dragon; and the whole Roof of the Houſe was full of Spirits.

14. That Mrs. Margaret Pendar acquainted with this Doctrine of Spirits, and pretended to be converted by Viſions of Angels, doth think that ſhe was bewitched by them of Bradfield.

Her Confeſſion.

SHE was taken ill upon Wedneſday in the Afternoon, in July 1653. About Nine of the clock the ſame Night, there appeared the Viſion of a Man ſtanding at her Bed's-feet: on Thurſday the next day he had a Book in his Hand, and ſtood by her all that Day, and ſaid nothing. On Friday it ſpake audibly unto her, ſaying, Why art thou ſo diſcomforted? I anſwered, A wounded Conſcience who can bear? He replied, He that hath wounded thee, will make thee whole. I ſpake much of my own Unworthineſs; he anſwered, There was Worth in Chriſt, and he had paid a Ranſom for me. Then he told me, that that Book in his Hand, was the Book of the Lamb, and that my Name was written in it. I ſaw the Book, a broad Book with a Parchment-Cover; and I ſaw Writing in it, and then was I lifted up with a great deal of Joy. About Four of the clock the ſame Friday, the dark Angel came and ſtood by the other Viſion, with a Knife in his Hand, and ſaid, Thou haſt had a great deal of Joy; and offering her the Knife, bid her diſpatch her ſelf, and ſhe ſhould enter into that eternal Reſt her Soul ſo much thirſted after. Upon this ſhe trembled, the Bed ſhook, and my Miſtreſs held me.

The ſame Friday I had Viſions preſented upon the Wall; I ſaw the World, and the Reſurrection of the Dead, and the Son of Man appearing in the Clouds of Heaven.

She ſaw clearly the Viſion of a Friend of hers in London, in her Chamber at Southcot; her Friend was much inclined this way: ſhe much wondred at it, and told Mrs. Pordage of it; who anſwered, Alas! ſo do we ſee abundance of thoſe we never knew before, when once they come into our way.

On Saturday Dr. Pordage came to her, being ſent for, and prayed in a very ſtrange Language, ſhe did not underſtand well what he ſaid; ſhe heard him ſay, Lord; but nothing of Jeſus Chriſt, but the Abyſs and bottomleſs Eternity.

She heard a great Noiſe of Drums and Trumpets. She asked the Doctor what the rattling of Drums and Trumpets meant? He anſwered, It was an Alarm to the ſpiritual War.

One of the Nights ſhe ſaw the Viſion of young Mr. Daniel Blagrave, which came to her Bed-ſide; ſhe took him by the Hand, and it felt cold. She asked the Doctor what it meant? He anſwered, The Coldneſs of the Hand did ſignify his beginning to be cold to Vanity.

She asked Dr. Pordage what the Viſions meant? He anſwered, They durſt not reveal one another's Viſions; he did not queſtion but God would diſcover himſelf, and reveal wonderful things to me.

She was from Wedneſday Noon till Monday Noon, and did not eat one piece of Bread, but ſometimes a little Water and Sugar; and ſhe ſaith ſhe was not ſick at all, after the firſt two Hours: and when ſhe was about to eat, ſhe heard a Voice come to her; We are not to live upon Bread, but upon every Word of God: And upon that Voice ſhe did not eat.

She ſaith, that ſhe hath oftentimes ſeen at London Flaſhes of Light in her Chamber, and at laſt heard a Voice which put her into a very great Fear and Sweat, ſaying, Thou haſt married a Lump of Clay; but thou muſt return to thy firſt Husband, who is thy Saviour, and thou muſt go to Joppa.

And upon this ſhe was convinced that theſe Viſions were of the Devil, becauſe the Voice was clean contrary to the Scriptures. She ſaith, that ſhe hath heard it reported at Southcot, That e'er long Dr. Pordage ſhould have Power from him to beſtow ſaving Graces on whom he pleaſed: as alſo, that Marriage was the way of Beaſts.

Francis Knight of Wallingford ſaith,

That diſcourſing with ſome of Blewbery, that uſe to go to Dr. Pordage's, they ſpake very much againſt the Lawfulneſs of Marriage; he wondred at it, and ask'd them whence they now came? They anſwered, We came juſt now from the Doctor's from Bradfield.

16. Doctor Pordage's Chamber at Bradfield hath ſometimes been almoſt filled with Spirits.

17. That Doctor Pordage preached, That Water-Baptiſm was not the Ordinance of Jeſus Chriſt.

18. That about Michaelmas, in the Year 1653. he was commanded by his Angel, or from Heaven, to give off preaching, and take no more Tythes; but ſince he conceives he hath had a Diſpenſation.

19. That in July laſt, 1654. he was to be taken up into Heaven; and it is ſaid by ſome, he hath been there, and diſmiſſed again about his Buſineſs.

20. That in the midſt of theſe Viſions he is ſcandalouſly covetous.

21. That he curſed the People of Bradfield in his Pulpit, and their Poſterity for ever in this World, and in the World to come.

22. That he preached at Bradfield, and afterward did labour to defend it pertinaciouſly, That the little Horn in Dan. 7. v. 8. was Chriſt; and being told, that the little Horn made War with the Saints, yet he perſiſted to ſay it was Chriſt; and endeavoured to make his Hearers believe that he was falſly charged.

23. That he ſaith Goodwife Pocock ſingeth the higheſt Hymns very ſweetly; that ſhe knoweth not a word when ſhe begins, but is taken with a burning about her Heart; and when she hath done, she cannot repeat a word of it, if it were to gain the World.

 ing

24. That Goodwife Pocock lately came to Colonel Evelyn and told him, she had a Word to him from God, viz. Have nothing to do with that just Man.

25. And that on or about the tenth of this Month Dr. Pordage sent to invite Mr. Snelling, and his Wife and Children, to come to the Doctor that Day; and the same Day Mr. Snelling and his Wife did go to the Doctor's House; and when he came, Mr. Snelling desired to know wherefore he sent for him? Dr. Pordage told him, to go with him and meet his Bridegroom. And then Mr. Snelling told the Doctor he knew not what he meant, and so departed. And the next Morning Mr. Francis Pordage met with Mr. Snelling, and told him he had lost his Part in Heaven, being he did not wait upon the Doctor at that time.

26. That Dr. Pordage sent his Man Bolt, in a very rude and uncivil manner to fetch Mrs. Forster to his House; that she being frighted at the Message, and enquiring to what end she was sent for, the said Bolt answered, She should there see the Heavens opened, and the Colours flying in the Air, and hear the Drums beat, and the Trumpets sound.

27. That Mr. Forster going to the Doctor's House, he told him at his first coming in, that he should see such things, as if he were Emperor of a thousand Worlds, he would give them all to see it. After asking him for his Wife, and he answering, She was not well, and could not come, the Doctor called to them to send forth a winged Messenger to fetch her, for she must come.

28. That two days after, one Goodwife Pocock coming from thence to Mr. Forster's House, and they enquiring of her, what was the cause of those Behaviours in the Doctor's Family? She answered, They had a foul Spirit sent amongst them, and the Doctor had fought many Hours with the black Power, and had overcome it; for which she should ever think him a bright Man: That all his Family had been strangely acted, the Power taking them, some in their Legs, and others in their Arms, and that then they spake very glorious things.

29. That Mrs. Flavel was in a Trance, and when she came out of it, spake many precious things which she had seen in that Trance; what was the Philosopher's Stone, that so many Learned Men had sought after, which she knew to be the Divinity in the Humanity: and many other things to the same effect.

Further Articles preferred against Dr. John Pordage, Minister of Bradfield-Parish, by some of the Inhabitants of the same Parish.

1. THAT Dr. Pordage, about eight Years past, did carry Mrs. Flavel behind him on horseback on the Road to London, and about Hounslow did enquire for a private House, and was directed to one Goodman Loader's a Smith, who lives in Hessen-Parish, half a Mile out of the Road, between Hounslow and Brentford; and when he came, asked if his Friend behind, being sick, might have Entertainment? 'Twas answered, Yes. Then the Doctor left her there, but never owned she was with Child, till she was in travail.

2. Mrs. Flavel in a short time fell in travail, and then desired no Company might be called in; yet the Woman of the House, Goodman Loader's Wife, called in three or four.

And Mrs. Flavel was then brought to bed of a Daughter, having then no Husband that the World knew of, Mr. Flavel being dead.

3. That Dr. Pordage came to that House, and christned that Child, and named it Hannah; and the Doctor came often to visit her there, and always alone by himself.

4. That the Child being put to nurse in the same Parish, the Doctor moved Mrs. Flavel to Kensington, and paid the Smith for her being at his House: That a little while after the Nurse went to Kensington to enquire for Mrs. Flavel to pay her some Money; but she was removed: and the Nurse saying, she left a Child with her, the Company smiled, and said, They thought she was such a Woman.

After this, the Nurse's Husband wrote a Letter to the Doctor to Bradfield, that he was twenty Weeks Pay behind, and could not forbear; whereupon he was paid: and shortly after sent for the Child away from the Nurse's.

5. That a little while after, this Mrs. Flavel came again to the Doctor's Family; and a little Child called Hannah, it was also brought thither; and Mrs. Flavel took the care of it ever since. And Mrs. Flavel being by Neighbours asked whose Child it was? said, a dear Friend of hers: but none could ever hear in the House whose Child it was. And some telling Mrs. Flavel, that the Child was so like her, that they should take it to be hers, had she not said the contrary; she answered as before, 'Twas a dear Friend of hers, but never named whose.

6. That this Child, who was called Hannah, this last Summer they changed her Name, and called her Ruth; they have also changed all their Names: The Doctor is called Father Abraham, his Wife is also called Deborah, and old Goodwife Pocock is called Rahab, and so the rest.

7. That Goodman Loader's Son being a Soldier, saw Mrs. Flavel in Bradfield Street, and spake to her, but she took no notice of it. Afterward Mrs. Flavel coming to his Father's House, his Mother in Discourse asked, Whether she lived at Bradfield? Mrs. Flavel answered, She knew no such Place. I will call my Son in, who saw you there. Mrs. Flavel said, People be given to lying, and would not have him called; and presently called for her Horse, and went away, though before she had resolved to stay all night: and never since was there, except since the Doctor hath been questioned.

31. That Dr. Pordage is extreme covetous, and hath exacted five Shillings at a time to marry one Man, or else told him he would not marry him. The Man told him, He could not justly demand so much: The Doctor answered, Without five Shillings he would not marry them; and took five Shillings.

32. That his Preaching doth not tend to Edification.

33. That he is a very ignorant and insufficient Man for the Work of the Ministry.

September 9. 1650.

34. I came into Bradfield Parsonage in the Evening, and there I heard a very mournful Cry, as if it had been one in extreme Pains; but what it was I know not; for it continued all the time I was at the Door, which was well near a quarter of an Hour; and so it continued when I went away. And then the 10th Day in the Morning I came unto Mr. Francis Pordage at the Parſonage of Stanford-Dingley; and he enquired of me what I did think of the Noiſe that I heard? I told him I could not tell. Then he related to me, that the Lord was about a great Work in this Kingdom, and to this Nation; and the Cauſe of this Cry was one in travail: and the Pain was ſo extreme, that had I ſtaid there a little longer, I might have heard it as far as the Town; but now ſhe was delivered of a Man-child, and the Travail was at an end, and that he and others were Eye-Witneſſes to it.

The Teſtimony of Richard Seward.

35. That in Dr. Pordage's Houſe in Bradfield, lately the New Jeruſalem hath been ſeen to come down from Heaven, all of precious Stones; and in the New Jeruſalem was a Globe, which Globe was Eternity; and in that Eternity were all the Saints.

36. That at the Doctor's Houſe the Face of God hath been ſeen; not as Moſes ſaw him, but the very Face, as one Man may ſee another's.

37. That one being in the ſaid Doctor's Houſe in a Trance, the ſaid Doctor's Daughter being by her, ſaid, That ſhe ſaw two Angels all in white, with Crowns over her Head.

The Examination of Goodman Seward, concerning Mr Pordage.

THis Deponent ſaith, That Mr. Pordage did affirm Marriage to be a very wicked thing, contrary to the Word of God. Goodman Seward telling the aforeſaid Mr. Pordage, that a Friend of his had buried his Wife, and intended to marry again; Mr. Pordage replied, That it was a very wicked Act, and wondered at it. The Deponent replied, That he took Marriage to be an Ordinance of God. Then demanding if his Wife ſhould have died, what he ſhould have done? He replied, Would you be ſo wicked as to marry? This the above-mentioned Deponent will aver with his Oath.

A true Copy, examined by Matth. Langley Regiſt.

After he had done, it ſeemed not enough to him to have read ſuch a horrid, ſcandalous, confuſed Charge to the People againſt me; but he proceeded to ſpeak to them, deſiring them to take notice what a ſtrange Perſon I was, repreſenting me to be guilty of Blaſphemy, Deviliſm, and of Looſeneſs in my Converſation; promiſing to prove that Charge of Articles, or to be counted a Slanderer. After which prevaricating Speech, he ſuddenly departed.

After I further urged the Commiſſioners to hear the Teſtimony of my Witneſſes, in reference to the firſt Charge of Articles, that ſo it might be diſpatched, that ſo I might be freed from the Trouble of anſwering ſo many together, which would unavoidably bring Confuſion and Diſorder to mine and their Proceedings. I further ſhewed, that according to their Appointment, my Witneſſes were preſent and ready, deſiring them to conſider that I had been at Trouble and Charges in bringing them; and that I muſt unavoidably be at more, if they would not then hear them: Notwithſtanding this, they denied to hear them at that time, calling for two Witneſſes which they had ſummoned to atteſt my ſecond Charge of Articles. Here I deſired, that as my Charges had been openly read to the People, ſo the Examination of the Witneſſes might be open, that ſo the People might as well hear the Proof, as the Accuſation: but this could not be granted. Then I requeſted that I might be preſent; this was alſo denied: So two Witneſſes were privately examined to the ſecond Charge, whoſe Examination concluded that Day's Tranſactions, in reference to me; and I received an Order to appear before them again the 22d of November at the Bear in Reading.

Berks. By the Commiſſioners for Ejecting of Scandalous Miniſters, November 2. 1654. at the Bear in Speenhamland.

ORdered, that Dr. Pordage of Bradfield (now preſent) do appear again before us on Monday the 22d Inſtant at the Bear in Reading, and that he then give in his Anſwer to the further additional Articles now exhibited againſt him. And it is further ordered, That the ſaid Doctor do then produce his Witneſſes, and bring in his Interrogatories in Writing, upon which he will examine the Witneſſes in his Defence, or croſs-examine them, produced for Proof of the ſeveral Charges againſt him.

On the Day prefixed I appeared at the appointed Place; the Commiſſioners then ſitting, being Mr. Dunch, Chairman; Major Fincher, Mr. Trapham, Mr. Stroud, Mr. Cook, Mr. Nutkins. The Miniſters, Mr. Fowler, Mr. Lee, Mr. Woodbridge, Mr. Tickle, Mr. Hewes, with two more.

Juſt as they were going to Dinner, I was called in, and asked for my Anſwer to the laſt Charge of Articles: I told them it was ready, but I ſhould be very long in delivering it; but if they thought fit, I would give it in before Dinner. At this, one Mr. Trapham a Chirurgeon and Commiſſioner, began to be very rough, preſſing me to give in my Anſwer, and to leave it with them. I replied, That it was in my power whether I would give it in in Writing only, or by Word of Mouth, and that I reſolved of the laſt. So I was commanded to withdraw.

After Dinner, being called in again, I read this Anſwer following, and then delivered it to them in Writing.

My Anſwer to the third Charge of Articles, I preſent in this Form following:

I Shall firſt preſent ſomething by way of general Preface, and ſo deſcend to Particulars.

In the firſt place then, I look upon the firſt Articles charged upon me by young Mr. Tickle, to be as the caſting of my innocent Perſon, with Daniel, into the Lion's Den: But thoſe Articles, as the Mouths of the Lions, I conceive, were ſtopped, ſo that they could not hurt me, becauſe the Authority and juſt Proceedings of two former Committees, authorized by Acts and Ordinances of Parliament, with ſome other legal Privileges, had ſufficiently muzzled the Mouths of thoſe Lioniſh Articles.

And as for the ſecond, ſubſcribed by an unknown Name, I believe there hath not been, nor cannot be any thing proved, which may render me obnoxious to any legal Guilt.

As for my third Charge brought forth by Mr. Fowler, who is both my Accuſer and my Judge; I look look upon it, as the Design of the Evil One, to cast me, with the three Children, into the hot fiery Furnace of unparallelled Wrath and Envy: for I know it will one Day appear, that these Articles were raked together from a Spirit of Bitterness and Spleen, which seem to me as the Furnace heated seven times hotter by the Fire of Wrath, to burn up and consume my Name, Liberty, Estate and Posterity.

But be it known unto you, O you Judges and Commissioners! I am not sollicitous what the Event may be; I know the God whom I serve in the Integrity of my Heart, who is Jehovah, the true and only God, is able to deliver me from this hot fiery Furnace, and to punish those who cast me in: But however God as yet may order and dispose of me, in reference to the Execution of my Enemies Intents, I believe my strict and holy Conversation, with my holding forth what God in the Riches of his Grace hath bestowed upon me, will clearly demonstrate that I am no such Person, as the false and unworthy Aspersions of these Articles represent me to be.

As to the particular Articles (which are raked together in much Confusion, without reducing of them to their particular Heads, of Scandal or Insufficiency, many of them being incapable justly to be referred to either) I thus begin my Answers.

Art. 1. THAT the Righteousness of Christ was a poor, vain, sapless Righteousness.

1 Part. Answ. This Article was in my former Charge, and I was cleared of it by two Committees, who had Power legally to acquit me, even as they did.

2 Part. Answ. I do cordially acknowledge, That Christ's Righteousness is not a poor and sapless Righteousness, but very precious, being the material Cause, and spotless Robe of a Christian's Justification; and that every Saint ought to be found in this Righteousness of Christ in point of Justification, and not in his own Self-righteousness.

3 Part. Ans. I deny that ever I spake such Words, without some Limitation; which Limitation, if annexed, would free me from any Guilt resulting from such Expressions: and though any one should swear I spake those Words, yet that could not render me justly guilty, it not being declared what preceded, or what followed in the Series of my Discourse. And I have many Witnesses sufficiently known, and pious, who being constant Hearers of me, have testified by Oath, and will upon occasion again, that the Scope of my Ministry drives not against the due Application of Christ's Righteousness to the Souls of Believers, but against the mis-applying it to those who have not the Spirit of Christ living in their Hearts, purifying their Consciences, and subduing their Lusts.

Art. 2. That Jesus Christ was not perfect; alledging that Scripture to confirm it, My God, my God, why hast thou, &c.

1 Part. Ans. I do nakedly, without any Veils, profess that I ever did, and still do look upon Christ as a most perfect Copy and Pattern to square our Lives and Conversations by; yea, and to be a perfect Mediator, in reference to that Work he undertook for the Redemption of the World, being free from the least Tincture either of original or actual Sin: and truly the Thought of any such thing never lodged in my Heart.

2 Part. Ans. But suppose I uttered such Expressions as these, yet the manner of it will sufficiently free me from that Guilt my Accuser may hope, and believe I am obnoxious to by it: I confess I uttered these or the like Words, yet it was only by way of relating what I heard in a Sermon of Mr. Erbery's in Somerset-House, who at that time endeavoured to enumerate Christ's (supposed) Imperfections, whereof he made his crying out upon the Cross, in those Expressions, one. Now I leave it to your Considerations, whether my relating to some that were wise and knowing, what I heard from another, with much Grief to my Soul, makes me any way culpable or guilty.

Art. 3. That the Blood of Christ was not meritorious of any Man's Salvation.

Ans. I call Heaven and Earth to witness, that such Thoughts never entred into my Soul; nor did such Words ever come out of my Mouth: For my Judgment ever hath been, and still is, that the Blood of Christ is satisfying, reconciling, cleansing Blood; that it is interceding, redeeming, meriting Blood, in relation to all those who through Faith and Patience come to inherit eternal Life.

Art. 4. That it was a poor thing to live upon the Blood of Christ; and fetching it over again in a contemptuous kind of speaking, Pish, said he, thou art a Babe, thou knowest nothing; to live upon the Blood of Christ, is a poor thing.

1 Part. Ans. I acknowledge that about four Years since such Expressions were uttered by me to one Mrs. Grip; but without any such Intent as may be supposed by my Accusers, and not with that circumstantial Aggravation of repeating it in a contemptuous manner, which is but a Supposition of my Adversary, and cannot be attested by an Oath, without this Witness pretends infallibly to know my Thoughts and Purposes.

2 Part. Ans. Again, this being spoken to a particular Person, on a particular Occasion, might be true, if the Circumstances of the Discourse were accordingly added; though as here presented it seems very monstrous.

3 Part. Ans. Therefore to make things clear, I shall here insert some particular Circumstances, which may present this Article, though in a new, yet true face. I coming to Mrs. Grip's House, she took me into a private Room to have some Conference with me alone, where she brake forth into a violent Passion of Tears, weeping and wringing her Hands, and pouring forth bitter Complaints and Invectives against Mr. Fowler, as that he was a graceless Man, a Lyar, a Slanderer, not worthy to come up into a Pulpit, or to have the Name of a Minister of Christ, with other such bitter Expressions. The Cause of which was, as she then told me, Mr. Fowler's reporting about, That she then lived in Adultery. And after her Passion was somewhat allayed, she brake forth into these or such like Expressions of high Assurance; Christ hath loved me, and died for me, and justified me by his Blood, from all Guilt of Sin; I am an elect Person, a justified Person, and what is this Fowler to charge Sin upon me? These and other Expressions fell from her to this purpose: from some of which, I feared she was drenched with Antinomianism, and told her more than once, it was a poor thing to live upon the Blood of Christ, and to look so much upon that, except she had the Nature of Christ, and the Spirit of Christ; asking her, where was the Meekness of Christ, and the Patience of Christ, to suffer as an innocent Lamb quietly? But still she crying out, she lived on the Blood of Christ; I told her, it was a poor Thing to be thus exalted with Notions of the Blood of Chriſt, without mentioning Sanctification, and thoſe holy Graces which flow from Chriſt's Nature dwelling in the Soul. Now by theſe Expreſſions of mine, my Scope was to make Mrs. Grip ſee the Neceſſity of Sanctification, and of a pure and holy Life, and not to make void the bleſſed Effect of the Blood of Chriſt, applied according to the Mind of God and the true Meaning of the Scripture. And now having related the Circumſtances as near as I can remember, I believe a ſober and knowing Chriſtian will not judge me either ſcandalous or ignorant for theſe Expreſſions.

Art. 5. That one ſpeaking to me of the glorious Perſons of the Trinity, I replied, Piſh, there is no ſuch Thing as Perſons in Trinity.

1 Part. Anſw. I do here profeſs and avow from the Sincerity of my Heart, that I believe the Trinity of Perſons as an Article of my Faith, viz. That there are three Perſons diſtinct from each other; the Perſon of the Father, the Perſon of the Son, the Perſon of the Holy Ghoſt, yet not ſo as to prejudice the Unity in Eſſence; and I ſo believe the Unity, as not to confound the Trinity of Perſons.

2 Part. Anſw. I never uttered ſuch Expreſſions in that way, as to give any juſt ground of Suſpicion of my denying the Trinity. But I remember, about four Years ſince, being before the Committee of Berks, Mr. Fowler, or Mr. Gilbert, I remember not which, deſired the Committee to give them liberty to aſk me two or three Queſtions: Amongſt the reſt, they asked me whether there were three Perſons in the Deity. I anſwered them, I believed the Trinity as it is recorded in 1 John 5. 7. There are three that bear record in Heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghoſt. Thus you ſee I believe the Trinity. But do you believe the Trinity of Perſons, ſaid they? I replied, I find not the Term Perſons in the Text; but to put you out of doubt, I do not ſtumble at the word Perſon. And this afterward I told to the above mentioned Mrs. Grip, in a private Conference, ſome Years ſince; to whom I affirmed, that I found no ſuch Expreſſions as Perſons in Trinity in the Scripture; and that the word Perſon being a School-Term, was very difficult to be apprehended by common Capacities. But I never ſpake thus to prejudice the true Notion of the Perſons in the ſacred Trinity, which I do cordially believe; but only to ſhew that ordinary Chriſtians ſhould not be too curious in prying into that deep Myſtery of the three Perſons in the Trinity, but rather content themſelves with what the Scripture plainly affirms of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, as diſtinct, yet one. But to conclude this Anſwer, pray conſider what hard Meaſure it is, thus to pick a broken Sentence out of a long Diſcourſe, and ſo to accuſe one without relating the Circumſtances which might ſerve to clear what otherwiſe may ſeem very ſtrange to prejudiced Perſons.

Art. 6. That it was a Weakneſs to be troubled for Sin.

Anſw. I do not remember that any ſuch Expreſſion as this ever dropped from my Mouth, either publickly or privately; and I am perſuaded that no one dare aſſert it with an Oath: Which if they did, would not make much to the purpoſe; for with a charitable Qualification it might thus be made forth, That 'tis a Weakneſs for one to be troubled for Sin, who hath the Aſſurance of God's Love, his Sin pardoned, his Perſon juſtified, ſanctified, and his Will converted from, and crucified to Sin: For ſuch a one ſhould be triumphing in the Power of Faith and Love, enjoying ſweet heavenly Communion with God, and ſaying, O Death, where is thy Sting? And there is no Condemnation to them that are in Chriſt Jeſus, who walk not after the Fleſh, but after the Spirit. Whereas Trouble for Sin thus pardoned and mortified, may be an Engine of Satan to make a Soul queſtion God's Love, and to bring it out of a bleſſed ſpiritual Enjoyment of God, into a ſlaviſh Fear and Diſturbance.

Art. 7. That he might ſay any thing to the Men of the World.

1 Part. Anſw. I anſwer, To the beſt of my Remembrance, I never uttered any ſuch unchriſtian Maxim, much leſs ever held it as my Judgment; and I confidently believe there is no one on the Earth that dare witneſs it with an Oath.

2 Part. Anſw. I know very well that Mr. Fowler hath been, if not the Author, yet the Reporter of my holding this monſtrous Tenet; for he hath confidently averred, and often inſinuated into ſome of the Gentry of this County, and into his own Proſelytes, that I am a Familiſt, and that it is my Principle to ſay or unſay any thing that may make to my own Advantage. Which God knows is a ſad Scandal, and a monſtrous Untruth; and clearly appears, to thoſe who know the Integrity of my Principles and Converſation, to be a Blur caſt upon me from the Contrivance of ſubtile Machiavellian Policy, to prejudice all I ſay or anſwer to thoſe horrid Things objected againſt me: For if this be once ſettled in thoſe who are my Judges, it is vain for me to anſwer, deny, or avow any thing. But the Lord forgive my Adverſary for this his unchriſtian Dealing, and grant he may repent of it before he comes to give up his laſt Account before the great Tribunal of Chriſt.

Art. 8. That I aſſerted I knew nothing to the contrary, but that a Man might company with more than one Woman; being taxed for keeping carnal Company with a Woman in London.

Anſw. I never kept ſcandalous Company with any Woman in London; neither was I ever taxed for any ſuch Thing, except once by Miſtreſs Grip, who I believe is the Witneſs againſt me; and that upon this Occaſion:

At the time I had my former Conference with her, the Heat of her Paſſion being over, ſhe told me that I was alſo taxed for keeping of carnal Company with a Woman in London. I replied, I am a Man born to all kind of Sufferings; and told her, that ſhe ſaw and knew the manner of my Converſation; asking her whether ſhe believed it. And ſhe anſwered, No truly. And then I ſolemnly proteſted the contrary. And this is all the Taxing I ever had from any one. At which time I was earneſt with Mrs. Grip to diſcover to me from whom ſhe heard it: But ſhe put me off, telling me ſhe did not believe it, and that ſhe would tell me ſome other time. But from that long Diſcourſe I had with her, fearing, as I ſaid before, ſhe was deeply tinctured with the Principles of Antinomianiſm, and not knowing whether ſhe might not be tainted with ſome Notions of Rantiſm, which at that time were every where frequently diſcours'd of, I took this occaſion to try her; telling her (as near as I remember) that there were ſome that affirm'd they knew nothing to the contrary, but that a Man might company with more than one Woman. But, to ſpeak the Truth, ſhe let it fall, without ſeeming to approve of any ſuch thing. And this I ſolemnly avow to be the Truth, as near as I can remember. And I believe Mrs. Grip dare not ſwear that I maintained any ſuch thing as my Judgment, or produced one Scripture or Argument to defend it.

I profeſs to the whole World, in the Preſence of that Eye that ſeeth through all Hearts, that all ſuch looſe Principles, which turn the Grace of God into Wantonneſs, and that run oppoſite to the Laws of Morality, Civility, Modeſty, and Sobriety, or that any ways indulge Wantonneſs and Laſciviouſneſs, are as inconſiſtent with my Principles, as Heaven and Hell, Light and Darkneſs, are oppoſite one to another; which will one day clearly appear to the World, whatever I am now thought of.

Art. 9. That he hath frequent and familiar Converſe with Angels.

Anſw. As this Article is preſented in general Terms, without expreſſing whether the Communion be viſible or inviſible, I do not ſee how it can touch me, tho my Enemies were my Judges; becauſe every true Chriſtian hath frequent Communion or Converſe with Angels, as you may ſee ſolidly and clearly proved from Scripture by the Lord Lawrence, one very learned and pious, now Preſident of the Lord Protector's Council, in his Book, entitled, Our Communion and War with Angels.

Art. 10, 11, 12, 13. Concerning the Viſion of a Dragon, and the Apparition of Spirits.

Anſw. 1. I may deny theſe four Articles as they are taken together, and expreſſed in thoſe Terms, and in that Manner, in which they are ſet down in my Accuſation; for I believe none dare ſwear the Meaſures and Teeth of the Dragon with the Appearance of my own Angel, &c. without the Crime of Perjury.

Anſw. 2. I will not confeſs any Apparitions in particular till they beproved, leſt I ſhould ſeem to accuſe my ſelf; they being brought in as a Crime againſt me, and as Inſtruments to condemn me.

Yet in general I acknowledge, that ſome four Years ſince there were many ſtrange and wonderful Apparitions ſeen in my Houſe. But what can theſe in Juſtice amount to, though atteſted by Oath, and confeſſed particularly by my ſelf, when brought before thoſe who profeſs themſelves Chriſtians, and acquainted with the Hiſtory of the Holy Scriptures? Pray was not Job a pious, ſincere, and eminent Righteous Man? Yet how was he ſcared with Dreams, and terrified through Viſions? Chap. 7. ver. 14. Did not Zechariah the Prophet (Rev. 3.) ſee Satan ſtanding at the Right-hand of Joſhua to reſiſt him? Did not John (ver. 12.) in a Viſion behold a great red Dragon, that made War againſt Michael and the Holy Angels? And was not Chriſt himſelf tempted of the Devil by Voice and Viſions? Matt. 4. 6, 8. Now the Servant is not greater than the Lord, John 15. 20. and therefore not exempted from the like Attempts of the Devil. I beſeech you conſider whether this Earth be not the Place where the Devil walks up and down, ſeeking whom he may devour? How then can Bradfield, or any other Place, be exempted from his appearing, when God permits? And may not all this be for the manifeſting of his Glory, Goodneſs, and Power? And who can tell whoſe Family may be next expoſed, by God's Permiſſion, to be tried and proved by the Repreſentations of Satan? And I deſire you ſeriouſly to conſider how any ſuch Apparitions, raiſed by the Devil, and permitted by God for his own Glory, argue me either ſcandalous, ignorant, or inſufficient? Surely it rather argues that he hath bleſt me with a ſtrong Faith, in that he permitted ſuch great Tryals, and made me inſtrumental to overcome them by Prayer and Faſting. If it can be proved that I ever ſo much as looked toward the unlawful Art of Black Magick, or that any evil Spirits were raiſed up by any Compact of mine, explicite or implicite, or that thoſe evil Apparitions were ſubdued and overcome by any other Means than by God's Bleſſing upon our Faſting and Prayers; I ſhall judge my ſelf worthy of Puniſhment. But otherwiſe it is hard Meaſure to be proſecuted and prejudiced for the Malice of the Devil towards me, inflicting what I was paſſive in, and could not help; eſpecially by thoſe who profeſs the Chriſtian Religion, and know that the God of Heaven rules over all, permitting and diſpoſing of whatever comes to paſs.

Art. 14. That Mrs. Margaret Pendar doth think ſhe was bewitched by them of Bradfield.

1 Part. Anſw. Here is a long and tedious Relation, in which Truth and Untruths are mixed together: The whole Structure of which Relation, ſo far as it concerns me, depends on this weak Baſis and Foundation, That ſhe thinks ſhe was bewitched by them of Bradfield. But what a ſad thing is this, for my Accuſer to impeach me for that which might endanger, if true, my Eſtate and Life, upon the Thoughts of a diſcompoſed Maid? Becauſe ſhe thinks I ſent thoſe Viſions, therefore I muſt be thus arraigned. But, for my part, I do not believe ſhe dare ſay ſo, much leſs ſwear it, having no ground at all for it.

2 Part. Anſw. I ſhall briefly relate ſome Circumſtances which concern this Buſineſs, and may ſerve ſomething to clear it up. Before theſe Viſions of hers, I had never ſeen her, as I know of, nor exchanged ſo much as a Word with her. In the time of her Viſions, Mr. Daniel Blagrave, whoſe Servant then ſhe was, came for me himſelf, to fetch me to his Houſe, to viſit her. To which Motion I yielded, being ſuitable to the Law of Chriſtian Charity. And when I came, I had no Conference with her but in the Preſence of Maſter and Miſtreſs Blagrave, with others that were then preſent. And from this Viſit there aroſe a Rumour that I was a Conjurer, and a Sorcerer: Which Report was ſpread abroad by two that carry the Name of Miniſters of Chriſt, Mr. Fowler and Mr. Ford. The laſt of which ſo exceeded the Bounds of Charity and Chriſtian Moderation, as in his Sermon, at the Aſſizes, to call me a horrid Blaſphemer, aſſerting that the Devil was as viſibly familiar in my Family as my own Servants; and ſo excited the Magiſtrates to perſecute me.

3 Part. Anſw. As for thoſe Untruths which are mixed in the Relation, I ſhall not trouble my ſelf to anſwer them; for I know when they come to be ſworn to, and to be croſs-examined, they will appear to be but the fulfilling of that wicked Maxim, Calumniare audaciter aliquid hærebit; Calumniate and aſperſe boldly, ſomething will ſtick. Which being a Piece of Jeſuitical Policy, hath been practiſed by my Accuſer in this confuſed Rhapſody of Articles.

Articles of one Francis Knight of Wallingford.

Art. 1. THAT ſome of Blewbery, who ſpake againſt Marriage, ſaid they came then from my Houſe.

Anſw. I hope I have enough to do to anſwer for my ſelf; what need the Aſſertions of others be alledged as Articles againſt me? They ſpake againſt Marriage, having lately been at my Houſe, therefore I must be guilty of it: Surely this Consequence is neither according to natural, artificial, nor divine Reason.

Art. 2. That my Chamber hath been filled with Spirits.

Answ. I hope none will be so unadvised as to swear to this Article, being Spirits are immaterial, and cannot take up Place, or fill a Room.

Art. 3. That I preached that Water-Baptism was not an Ordinance of Jesus Christ.

Answ. It was never so preached by me. All that I then affirmed was this; That Water-Baptism could not be proved to be the Ordinance of Christ, by way of Eminency so called, from that Text of Scripture, Matt. 28. 19. Go teach all Nations, baptizing them in the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost: For that Baptism may very well be understood of the Baptism of the Spirit, which by the Disciples was instrumentally administer'd to all Converts. Yet I denied not Water-Baptism to be a Gospel-Ordinance, instituted by John, as the chief Instrument under God, from whom he received his Commission. And that this was the Sum of what I then preached, I can prove by Oath.

Art. 4. That about 1653. I was commanded by my Angel, or from Heaven, to give off Preaching, and to take no more Tithes; but that since I have had a Dispensation.

Answ. I believe no one, that hath the Fear of God before his Eyes, dare attest this Article by Oath, which is here stated. This is Answer enough to such a Thing, which is merely brought in as an Odium by my Accuser, the more to prejudice me.

Art. 5. That in July 1654. I was taken up into Heaven, &c.

Answ. If Paul were now upon the Earth, he were in danger to be accused by my Accuser, for his Rapture into Heaven or Paradise. But this concerning me will prove but some idle Dream, created by somebody's Fancy to make People wonder at me.

Art. 6. That I cursed the People of Bradfield in my Pulpit, and their Posterity for ever, &c.

Answ. This Article was one of those heard and examined four Years since by the Committee of Plundered Ministers, from which I was acquitted by them; these Witnesses, viz. Richard Luinton, John Hambleton, Mary Pocock, Richard Holmes, with four more, attesting by Oath that I did not curse the People of Bradfield, so as is expressed in the Article. The Testimony of these Witnesses was this: That they being present September 29. the Doctor expressed himself thus; Bradfield is a Place partly made famous, partly infamous, by reason of the false and lying Reports that are abroad: But I say, Cursed be the Tongue and the Mouth that shall say, That what is done by the Power of God, is done by the Power of the Devil. What one Parishioner is here cursed by me, except any one's Conscience accuseth him of the Guilt of that forementioned Blasphemy?

Art. 7. Concerning the little Horn mentioned Dan. 7. to be Christ.

This Article was four Years since exhibited against me, from which I was discharged by the Committee; Richard Higs, John Higs, and Richard Luinton, attesting on Oath that I paraphrasing on the Seventh of Daniel, and speaking on the little Horn, said, That some Interpreters would have the little Horn in the Letter to be meant of Antiochus Epiphanes, a bloody and persecuting Tyrant; others think the little Horn to be the Turk, who is a great Persecuter of Christians: But in the Mystery, in regard of its Power, we will apply it to the Power of Christ in a Christian, who is often in Scripture resembled to the Horn of David, and to the Horn of Salvation; and that upon three Considerations:

Consid. 1. In regard that Christ's Power in the Soul doth appear to be a little Horn, a small despised Instrument to Sense and Reason; for Flesh and Blood look on it as a poor Instrument, in regard of bringing down the Strength of Sin in us.

Consid. 2. In regard of Sin and Satan, who laughs the Power of Christ in the Soul to scorn, yet before him his accursed Kingdom must fall.

Consid. 3. In regard its Birth and Beginning in the Soul is at the first a very little Grain of Mustard-seed, yet in due time it will destroy the Kingdom of Sin, and set up the Kingdom of Holiness in us.

Having thus drawn away the Veil from this Article, I hope it appears with a more tolerable and innocent Face.

Art. 8. Concerning Goodwife Pocock's singing Hymns and Spiritual Songs.

Answ. She acknowledgeth it as her Gift bestowed by God, being according to the Gifts of Christians in the primitive Time. But this doth not directly concern me.

Art. 9. Concerning the same Person's coming to Colonel Evelyn's, and saying she had a Word from God, viz. Have nothing to do with that just Man.

Answ. She owneth these Words, and looks upon me as a just Man, and a true Christian; and believeth that Colonel Evelyn will one Day know she gave good Counsel upon good grounds.

Art. 10. Concerning Mr. Snelling and his Wife coming to my House, &c.

Answ. This Article hath as little of Truth as Sense or Force to prejudice me; and I believe none will be found to swear it: However, I think it not worthy of a larger Answer.

Art. 11, 12. Concerning the sending of my Man Bolt in an uncivil manner for Mr. Forster, with his speaking of strange Things there to be seen, and of my telling Mr. Forster he should see very wonderful Things, &c.

1 Part. Answ. These Articles were heard, and I acquitted four Years since by the Committee of Plundered Ministers; and are of so little Consequence, that they might well have been omitted, but that my Accuser thinks he hath never enough against me.

2 Part. Answ. I believe Mr. Forster dares not swear to these Particulars, some of which are very untrue.

3 Part. Answ. The forementioned Robert Bolt asserted on Oath that I sent him not with any Message, but that it was his Mistress that sent him to desire Mr. Forster and his Wife to come to my House.

Art. 13. Concerning Goodwife Pocock's coming to Mr. Forster's, and saying, The Doctor had fought with, and overcome an evil Spirit; and that the Family had been strangely acted, the Power taking some of them in one part, some in another; and that they spake glorious Things.

1 Part. Answ. This was another of the Articles heard, discussed, and I acquitted by the forementioned Committee, because nothing material could be made of it.

2 Part. Answ. The said Mary Pocock attested on Oath she saw no Apparitions in my House, being cross-examined concerning that Particular. And though she did say God gave extraordinary Power to sustain both our Spirits and Bodies in an extraordinary Tryal, what Hurt was there in that?

Why

Why ſhould it be brought as an Article againſt me?

Art. 14. That Mrs. Flavel was in a Trance, and in it ſaw the Philoſopher's Stone, which ſhe knew to be the Divinity in the Humanity.

Anſ. Not to ſpeak any thing concerning the myſtical Writings of the deep Hermetick Philoſophers, or what the Judgment of ſome of them is concerning this Secret, I myſelf being not here accuſed to have ſeen it, or to have affirmed it was the Divinity in the Humanity; all that I ſhall anſwer is this, I wonder that this is brought in as an Article againſt me, to prove me Scandalous, Ignorant, or Inſufficient; it not directly proving any thing againſt me, being affirmed of another, and being one of thoſe Articles I was diſcharged of by the Committee for Plundered Miniſters.

Art. 15. Touching Sawood's Depoſitions of the Birth of a Child, and one being in Travail.

Anſ. 1. This was one of the Articles of which I was acquitted by the fore-mentioned Committee.

Anſ. 2. Mrs. Elizabeth Pordage and Mary Pocock aſſerted on Oath, That there was no Woman in Travail, nor any Child born, nor any other Cry heard, but of thoſe at Prayer; which was alſo witneſſed on Oath by Mr. Francis Pordage.

Art. 16. That in my Houſe the New Jeruſalem hath been ſeen to come down from Heaven, and that in it was a Globe, in which Globe was Eternity, and in that Eternity all the Saints.

Anſ. As to the Subſtance of this Article; If God have favoured any with ſuch a Viſion, ſurely they would be no more aſhamed to own it, when called to it, than John was, when to write Rev. 21. 1. That he ſaw the Holy City, New Jeruſalem, come down from God out of Heaven; where he alſo deſcribes it by all the moſt precious Stones in the Creation. But in reference to my Family, I believe none dare atteſt they heard this ſpoken by any of them, which I believe will prove but ſome groundleſs Imagination.

Art. 17. That in my Houſe God hath been ſeen face to face, &c.

Anſ. As this Article is ſtated, I ſhall give no other Anſwer but this, That I ſhall wait to ſee who dare ſwear to it, or what Proof can be brought of it.

Now I am come to the Articles exhibited againſt me by ſome of Bradfield Pariſh.

And as to thoſe which concern Mrs. Flavel, I ſhall anſwer,

1. Somewhat in general touching their Import and Nature.
2. By way of Negation.
3. By way of Acknowledgment or Affirmation.

Anſ. Gen. This Charge of Articles hath no legal Reference of Charge at all to me, but is merely ſcandalous, importing but a Libel, nothing of Fact really criminous being laid to my charge; which will more clearly appear, when the erroneous Circumſtances of it are detected: by which alſo the Subtilty and Envy of my Adverſaries will be diſcovered, who poſitively alledge nothing againſt me that may bear any Action of Damage at the Common Law, by which they might ſuffer for their injurious Dealing; yet by plauſible prevaricating Circumſtances, would ſeem to make me highly criminous and guilty.

Now I ſhall anſwer negatively to many erroneous prejudicing Circumſtances, which are by deſign heaped together, to put a plauſible Face upon an envious Libel or illegal Charge.

1 Circ. It's ſaid it was ſome eight Years ſince I brought one Mrs. Flavel to Goodman Loader's, &c.

Anſ. neg. Which is an Error, tho one of the ſmalleſt, brought in to prejudice the more, for it was ſome nine Years ſince.

2 Circ. It's further ſaid, this was carrying her to London.

Anſ. neg. Which I deny; for it was coming from London, where ſhe had for ſome time been.

3 Circ. That I asked whether my Friend behind me, being ſick, might have Entertainment, &c.

Anſ. neg. This I alſo deny; ſhe was not then ſick, neither did I uſe any ſuch Expreſſions.

4 Circ. That I never mentioned ſhe was with child.

Anſ. neg. Tho I did not, it not concerning me to do it, yet ſhe herſelf did not deny it.

5 Circ. That in a ſhort time ſhe fell in Travail.

Anſ. neg. A ſhort time may ſeem to imply ſome few Days, or Weeks, being brought in as an aggravating Circumſtance; whereas it was ſome four or five Months after.

6 Circ. That ſhe had no Husband then, as the World knew of.

Anſ. neg. She owned then to the People where ſhe was, and doth ſtill, that ſhe had had a ſecond Husband, which ſome in the World knew of very well, whoſe Teſtimonies ſhe can and will produce when ſhe hath ſufficient occaſion offered by a legal Call thereto: who is alſo able and ready to give a ſufficient account, when occaſion ſerves, of her not openly aſſuming her ſecond Husband's Name, her Eſtate then ſtanding as it did; which having concealed for that time ſhe was in Law, ſhe thought good ever ſince to be called by her firſt Husband's Name. But this ſubtile Dealing of her Adverſaries by libelling Scandals, without poſitively aſſerting ſhe was not married, makes her incapable of recovering any Damage of thoſe who now enviouſly, yet indirectly aſperſe her: which the Commiſſioners ought to take notice of, who ſhould not receive ſuch Libels, which tend to the blaſting of one's Credit and good Name, which all ſober Chriſtians ought (for the Goſpel ſake) to value; and yet abſolutely prove nothing of ſuch criminous Fact, which they deſign ſeemingly to prove, nor yet give ſufficient ground of calling them to an account for ſuch evil malicious Scandals. But this not directly concerning me, I ſhall omit much which might be ſpoken of it.

7 Circ. That I came often to viſit her.

Anſ. neg. This is not true; it was rather ſeldom, being but three times in three quarters of a Year, and that in Term-time, upon urgent Occaſions at Law.

8 Circ. That I removed her to Kenſington.

Anſ. neg. This is falſe, for I knew not when ſhe removed thither.

9 Circ. That I paid the Smith for her being at his Houſe.

Anſ. neg. This is another Untruth; I never paid him a Penny, neither did I ever agree with him for her being there.

10 Circ. That the Nurſe's Husband wrote a Letter to me at Bradfield, for Money for the Child's nurſing.

Anſ. neg. This is a mere Lye; for no ſuch Letter was wrote, neither did I ever agree to pay for the nurſing of it, as the Nurſe and her Husband can witneſs.

11 Circ.

11 Circ. That ſhortly after he ſent for the Child away.

Anſ. neg. This I alſo deny, it containing two Untruths in it: For firſt, the Child was not ſhortly after ſent for away, neither did I ſend for it at all, for it was fetch'd away by the Mother herſelf.

12 Circ. That a little while after, the ſaid Little-one was brought into my Family.

Anſ. neg. This is alſo falſe.

13 Circ. As to the ſeventh Article of this libelling Charge, in which many Circumſtances are produced to ſcandal the Gentlewoman, as tho ſhe had told a great Untruth; it deſerves no other Anſwer but this, That it is compacted of many Lyes, nothing being there true that really tends to prejudice her, as I believe will appear by the Event.

Thus in this ſhort Relation, wherein there is ſome Truth, pray take notice how many Untruths and mere Lyes are mixed with it, to put a beautiful Face upon an envious and unchriſtian Deſign: And is not this to bear falſe witneſs againſt one's Neighbour? May not any one's Innocency and Integrity be in this manner undeſervedly clouded, aſperſed, and wounded? Which I leave to the ſerious Conſideration of the Judges.

As to my affirmative Anſwer, what I acknowledge is this:

Anſ. Affirm. ABout nine Years ſince I brought behind me from London the fore-mentioned Mrs. Flavel, who had been of antient and near Acquaintance with me and my Family, to one Goodman Loader's a Smith in Heſſen, where ſome four or five months after ſhe was brought to bed of a Daughter, which ſhe owned to the People where ſhe then was, to be by a ſecond Husband, even as ſhe ſtill acknowledgeth. And further, that I viſited her three times in the ſpace of three quarters of a Year, at Term-time, being then engaged in a Law-Suit that concerned her; that one of thoſe times I chriſtned her Child, and called it Hannah: That afterward her Occaſions not requiring ſo much Privacy, ſhe came to live with her antient Acquaintance at my Houſe, where alſo for ſome Years her Daughter hath been with her.

Now to take away any thing that may ſeem to reflect upon me in this my Acknowledgment, pray conſider theſe ſubſequent Particulars.

1. THAT I and Mrs. Pordage being of very near and long Acquaintance with her, it was but a Friend's Courteſy, for me upon her deſire to carry her to this Houſe behind me.

2. That ſhe had ſufficient ground to retire into ſome ſuch place in the Country: firſt, in that the City-Air was offenſive to her Health: ſecondly, in that by the Counſel of able Lawyers ſhe was adviſed to retire into ſome private place, ſhe being then in Law-Engagements, and continually ſubject to Arreſts, by the Entanglement of her firſt Huſband's Eſtate; her Brother-in-Law, who was her Adverſary, then threatning to ſieze on her if ſhe were above-ground.

3. In reference to my Engagement in her Law-Buſineſs, I think it material briefly to relate the Ground and Occaſion of it. In the time of her Widowhood, her Brother-in-Law began a Suit with her in the Common Law, which fearing he ſhould there be overthrown, he removed to the Chancery: now ſhe being very unfit and incapable to manage this herſelf, ſhe earneſtly deſired me, as an antient and truſty Friend, to undertake it. Upon this I went to Judge Rolle and Mr. Chute with her, who looking into her Evidences, and into the Will of her late deceaſed Husband, found that for want of one Clauſe in it ſhe was liable to many Suits and Arreſts, and to great Entanglements, and that her Intereſt could not be eſtabliſhed, but by much difficulty; and at length this was the Reſult of the Counſel, That ſhe muſt let all her Eſtate, which was under Mortgage, be forfeited into the hand of ſome faithful Friend, and ſo ſell it away. Hence I through much Importunity laid down ſome hundred Pounds, reſcued the Mortgage, and ſo became intereſted in a Suit at Chancery, which laſted three Years.

Now from this may further appear ſufficient ground why I brought her to that private Houſe: ſecondly, why I came to her in the time of her Retirement, I then receiving Money from her to follow her Suit: thirdly, why I came alone, it being then her Intereſt to be concealed, being ſubject to Arreſts.

I ſhall now proceed to add ſome few Circumſtances more, which may ſerve to clear me before all ſober Perſons.

1. AT my coming, I told the People my Name, and that I dwelt at Reading, and that I was Miniſter of St. Lawrence Church, knowing the Gentlewoman to be ſober and pious. Now had I been as my Enemies enviouſly pretend, I might have concealed my Name, Quality, and Place of Reſidence.

2. We diſcovered to them that the Gentlewoman had an Eſtate in the Bulwark at London, and Rents there to receive, which they might enquire after (as they did) for their Security: Now this was not the way to cover a Work of Darkneſs.

3. She ſometimes went to London to the Lawyers, whilſt ſhe was there, ſome belonging to that Family accompanying her; who found, that as ſhe had related, ſhe was in great Troubles at Law, and were convinced that ſhe returned on that account.

Now in reference to moſt of theſe Particulars, in which I have contradicted and deny'd the alledged Circumſtances, and further vindicated myſelf, they are exactly agreeing with what I have in writing confeſſed and acknowledged by Loader himſelf, from whom this Charge is pretended to be received, and by the Nurſe of the Child, ſubſcribed by them both before Witneſſes; which Acknowledgment I ſhall produce when I ſee occaſion.

And by this I hope it may appear to moderate, ſober, and judicious Men, that this libelling Charge, drawn up ſo falſly, enviouſly, and yet ſo ſubtilly, calling from the dead a Buſineſs paſt ſome nine or ten Years ſince; (which tho it were criminous, as it is not, were invalid legally to prejudice, by the Act of Oblivion, or general Pardon, as all other things pretended to be ſpoken or acted by me before 1651, according to the Judgment of judicious Men, which I leave to the Commiſſioners to conſider of) I ſay, that this is but the Effect of the evil and wicked Policy of my Accuſer, brought forth to prejudice and overcloud that pure and innocent Principle, which I profeſs and faithfully live to; and the better to cover that evil Deſign they have againſt my Perſon and Livelihood.

And now I appeal unto you the Commiſſioners, and to all that are pious and ſober-minded, whether my Enemies do not deal very unreaſonably, enviouſly, enviously, and unbeseeming Christians, from this Business, so long since past, in which nothing criminous is positively objected against me, to draw such horrid Conclusions, as commonly to report that I now live in base Lust and Wantonness, notwithstanding my commending of, and owning the Virgin-Life; I say, whether this be not exceeding hard Measure, and ungodly Dealing, let all judge. But I see the Design of the Devil in it, which my Enemies may be ignorant of, which is to overcloud and darken by monstrous Lyes and Scandals, which are the Smoke of the bottomless Pit, that Life of Purity, Chastity, Mortification, Self-denial, and heavenly Enjoyment, which God hath favoured me to live in, and so to affright all from my Acquaintance, which otherwise might very much prejudice and overthrow his Kingdom. For the old Serpent knows very well, as also my near Friends and Acquaintance, that for these four Years, even since the time of my great Tryals, by the extraordinary Temptations and Representations of the Devil, that I have been abstracted more than ordinary from all outward things, giving myself up wholly to Prayer, Watchfulness, Mortification, and constant Self-denial, in dying to all earthly Pleasures, even to things permitted and accounted lawful; as finding many things which ordinarily are embraced, to be great Hindrances of the Soul's Progress to God, and great Burdens to a Spirit which hath tasted much of that Tree of Life which groweth in the midst of the Paradise of God, and great Clogs to a Soul that sees through the Veil of the sensitive Nature into the spiritual Glory of Eternity. But what I have enjoyed and experimented in this time of my extraordinary Mortification and Self-denial, in the Death of the Animal Man, and rising of Christ's Image in me, is not seasonable now to declare; yet for the Glory of my God, and the undeceiving of those who strangely mistake me, this much in all humility I must say, That did my Accuser and my Enemies know what I have enjoyed in this Way of the Cross, of the secret hidden Treasures of Eternity, and of the Out-goings of divine Goodness; were they but acquainted with these Discoveries of celestial Glory, Instillations of the heavenly Dew, and secret Touches of the Holy Ghost; did they but know those bright Irradiations of Eternal Light, those strong Motions of Divine Life, and pleasant Streams of Eternal Love, together with those deep Sufferings in bearing Christ's Cross, which I and many in my Family have in this time experienced; they durst not thus condemn me, and judge me as an Evil-doer, and one that lives in the Lusts of the Flesh. But my God hath taught me to bless whilst they curse, to pray for them whilst they design to ruin me, and to love them whilst they hate me; and to say with Christ, Father forgive them, for they know not what they do.

This I thought fit in all humility to annex to that libelling Charge concerning Mrs. Flavel, from which I have undeservedly suffered so much, by the Malice of the Devil. And now I shall proceed to answer the remaining Articles, one of which is intermixed with the former seven that concern Mrs. Flavel; which is this.

Artic. That we have changed our Names.

Answ. 'Tis well known that we own and subscribe our Names in our Civil Converse with the World, as this and my former Answers testify; I shall therefore wait to see, whether any one dare swear to this Article: And tho we did in our own private Family call one another by Scripture-Names, yet I conceive it did not concern the Civil Magistrate to take cognizance of such a thing, it being not practised to make any Disturbance or Confusion in the State.

Artic. 8. That I am extremely covetous, taking five Shillings at a time to marry one.

Answ. I wonder my Accuser should let this Article pass, whose Consequence is so much against Reason, as to argue me extremely covetous for one such poor inconsiderable Act done six or seven Years since: and I appeal to the Inhabitants of Reading, and Mr. Fowler's own Conscience, whether he hath not taken ten Shillings oftner than five for marrying.

Artic. 9. That my Preaching doth not tend to Edification.

Answ. I can bring those that are knowing, spiritual, and sober Christians, who will assert that my Preaching doth tend to Edification, and to the building up of Souls in the true Knowledge and Love of Christ; and I believe these my Accusers will be found to be like those of Chorazin and Bethsaida, of whom Christ said, That if the mighty Works which were done amongst them had been done in Sodom and Gomorrah, they had repented long since in Dust and Ashes. And was Christ's Ministry ineffectual, because they did not believe, but remained in the Hardness and Impenitency of their Hearts? Neither doth it follow that my Preaching doth not tend to Edification, because those that bring this Article, through their Unbelief, are not edified by it: for there are many, that come from places round about, that are edified, strengthned, and refreshed by it; and there are many that have been enlightned, convicted, and converted by it, who still receive quickning Growth and Comfort under it, confessing that God is in it of a truth, as finding it instrumentally effectual to the pulling down of the Kingdom of Sin and Satan, and to the erecting the Kingdom of Christ in their Hearts; for which I bless God, and praise his Grace, by which it is what it is.

Artic. 10. That I am very ignorant and insufficient for the Work of the Ministry.

Answ. I believe those that exhibit this Article against me, upon tryal will be found very ignorant and insufficient to judge of it; and as to those that are to be my Judges, I hope they will not make their own Wills the Rule of Ignorance and Insufficiency, but proceed according to the Canons of pure Reason, or supernatural Revelation, in giving Judgment concerning this Particular: the Event of which I leave to God.

Now to conclude: Tho in reference to this, and the two last Charges of Articles, I stand free from any Guilt in the sight of God, and I hope, by my Answers to them, in the sight of all judicious and sober Men: yet to leave any inexcusable, that may design, whether by Law or without Law, absolutely to condemn me; I crave the Benefit and Privilege of the Act of general Pardon, in reference to all those things that are pretended to be spoken or acted by me before the Year 1651, as most of these are, that seem to be of any moment and consequence.

John Pordage.

After this was read, not knowing but that the Commissioners retained their former Resolution of examining their Witnesses in private, I pressed them to an open Examination, for the Satisfaction of all Parties, and for the more full Discovery of the Truth; alledging, that I hoped they would not deal worse with me than the Jews did with Christ, and the Ethnick Romans with Paul, who suffered them to hear their Accusers face to face. So after some dispute it was granted, and agreed upon.

But before I proceed to give you an account of the Depositions taken pro and con, I must inform you, that the 22d of November was the time of my fourth Appearance, which continued three days; all which three days were wholly spent in taking the Depositions of my Accusers Witnesses, to make good the first and last Charge: And when they had ended their Examinations on the 24th, being Friday, late at Night, they called upon me to produce my Witnesses, if I had any. I answered them, I had Witnesses, but they were not then present, neither had I received any Summons for their Appearance; whereupon I desired a Summons to call in my Witheses, which they after much Debate, and many Outcries against me for not having them ready, granted; together with an Order, by which I was to appear at the Bear in Speenhamland at Newbury the 30th of that Month, which was just a Week after, to make proof of my Defence by Witnesses. I seeing they had prescribed so short a time for making my Defence, alledged that it was impossible for me to be ready with my Witnesses so soon, and desired a fortnight's time; which, tho I urged it with many Reasons, could not be granted me.

But I was afterward prevented by a vehement Cold, in reference to my appearing at Newbury on the Day prescribed: whereupon I sent three Friends to attest my Inability to appear on that Day before them; who likewise presented the Commissioners with a Letter from me, in which I gave them an account of my great Distemper. Whereupon, the Truth of my extraordinary Weakness being attested by those I sent, this Order with a new Summons was granted by the Commissioners.

Berks. By the Commissioners for ejecting of Scandalous Ministers, Novemb. 30. 1654.

WHEREAS Dr. Pordage was required this day to appear before us in the Cause depending concerning him; and it is now attested that the said Doctor is sick, and cannot without further danger of his Health this day appear: It is therefore ordered, that he shall have further day given till the seventh of December next, at the Bear in Reading; which Day is to be peremptory unto him.

According to which Order, I appeared at Reading the seventh of December, with my Witnesses; where two Days were spent in Examination, (now this was my fifth and last time of Appearance) the Transactions of which cannot distinctly be set down by themselves, in regard of my joining the Depositions then taken, with those of the adverse Party, according to this subsequent Method.

Now then I shall proceed to the Merits of the Cause, secundum Allegata & Probata.

Here then I must present you with the Depositions of the Witnesses, and first with those that concern the first Charge of Articles; in reference to which, Mr. Tickle gave Evidence by Oath against me, first at Newbury the fifth of October, and again at Reading the 22d of November, being the Day in which my Answer was read.

Now to the first Article;

John Tickle Minister of Abingdon, sworn at Newbury the fifth of October, deposed, That I delivered in the Pulpit, That the fiery Deity of Christ mingleth and mixeth itself with our Flesh.

On farther Examination upon Oath at Reading, Novemb. 2. Mr. Tickle affirmed, That he charged Blasphemy on the former Expression, and that I repeated my Sense to be thus, viz. That I did not mean with our Corruption, but with our Flesh; holding my Hand over the Pulpit.

The said Mr. Tickle being cross-examined touching this Article, upon this Interrogatory, viz. Whether he did swear positively to this Article, as thus delivered by me in the very same Terms, and Order, without any addition or diminution; or only so, according to his best Remembrance; thus reply'd, That the Sum and Substance of that Article was clearly and fully delivered by me, and as far as he could remember, in these words, or words to that purpose.

The same Person being sworn again, and further examined at the Bear in Reading, Novemb. 22. after some Expostulation with me, in which he grew somewhat passionate, further said, That after I had held up my Hand, as he had formerly deposed, I said I did not mean our Flesh, but with the Soul of Christ; and that this was delivered without any the least Limitation as to the Sense of it.

'Now these last Depositions were taken by the 'Court from Mr. Tickle occasionally, (after he had 'answered the cross Interrogatories by writing) 'when Mr. Tickle was sometimes raised into seeming Passion against me, from accidental Discourses that fell in upon Examination.'

But I shall here discover my own Meaning, and bring in the intended Evidence of my Witnesses in reference to this Article. My Meaning then (notwithstanding Mr. Tickle's rash Allegations) was this; By Flesh I meant the pure regenerated part of the Soul, with which the Spirit of Christ is united, according to that of the Apostle, Eph. 5. 30. For we are Members of his Body, of his Flesh, &c.

'My Evidence was this, there were present 'three Witnesses, viz. Mr. Francis Pordage Minister, Mrs. Mary Pocock, and one Robert Bolt, who 'offered to attest upon Oath, That they being present at the Committee of Plundered Ministers, 'about March 27. 1651. heard me upon the Interpretation of this Article, That the fiery Deity of 'Christ mingles itself with our Flesh, explain myself 'thus; That by Flesh I understand not the sinful 'and fleshly part of the Soul, that lusteth against 'the Spirit, for in this there can be no Union, for 'these are contrary; neither by Flesh did I understand the outward elementish Flesh of the Body, 'but by Flesh I understood the pure regenerated 'part of the Soul.

'But this Testimony they rejected, and would 'not receive it as Evidence, denying to examine 'the Witnesses, in regard they were not present 'at Ilsley, where Mr. Tickle alledged this was spoken. But I believe the judicious Reader will find 'this Testimony to be more pertinent to the clearing of the Truth, in reference to my Sense in 'the former Proposition, than what Mr. Tickle hath 'uncertainly, according to his best Remembrance, 'asserted.'

To the second Article;

Mr. Tickle saith, That I delivered, That the Imputative Righteousness of Christ is a sapless Righteousness.

And

And being further examined by Interrogatories, he answered to the first of them, That this was fully and roundly delivered in my Sermon at Ilsley.

But to the second Interrogatory, which was this, Whether it was with a Limitation, or without? he thus answers, That he doth not remember any Addition therein, unless it were in opposition to the Righteousness, which (as he said) I called sapless.

Being further examined Nov. 22. the same Deponent said, That I did not deliver any such Limitation, as I made in my Answer thereunto, and that there was no such word as except spoken, nor any thing like it.

Roger Stevens, sworn to the same Article, deposed, That I delivered in a Sermon at Ilsley, That the Righteousness of Christ was a sapless Righteousness.

And that he doth not remember any thing to the contrary, but that the same was an intire Sentence, and only so. And that to his apprehension the Drift of my Sermon was to take away the Strength and Efficacy of the Righteousness of Christ.

And this Deponent further said, That in the aforesaid Sermon at Ilsley I delivered these words, That you are not to look to this, (meaning, as the Deponent apprehended, Christ's Righteousness) but to the fiery Deity burning in the Center of our Souls, consuming and destroying Sin there. Which said words did not immediately follow the words that I used, when I said the Righteousness of Christ was sapless; but the same were further off in my Sermon, to his best Remembrance.

Now I shall present the Depositions of my own Witnesses touching the second Article.

Mrs. Mary Pocock, being sworn and examined Decemb. 7. was asked by me whether she heard me deliver the second Article at the Sermon at Ilsley, viz. That the imputative Righteousness of Christ was sapless; she reply'd, she was then present at the Sermon, and did hear these words delivered. Then being further asked, Whether delivered with a Limitation, or without a Limitation? she answered, that it was with a Limitation. Then she was further asked, What that Limitation was? she re-answered, That it was with this Limitation, Except the fiery Deity of Christ be in the Center of our Souls, burning up our Lusts and Corruptions. And being further asked, Whether these last words were spoken, together with the other words, to make up one Sentence? she said, Yes, in these express words, viz. That the Righteousness of Christ was sapless, except the fiery Deity of Christ be in the Center of our Souls, burning up our Lusts and Corruptions.

After this I brought three Witnesses more to be sworn touching this Article.

'Their Evidence was this, which every one in 'particular intended to give in, in writing, after 'this manner, viz. I do confess I was present be- 'fore the Committee of Plundered Ministers, the '27th of March 1651; where I did hear the Doc- 'tor, upon his Examination touching that Article, 'That the imputative Righteousness of Christ is a sap- 'less Righteousness, deliver himself to this purpose; 'That to him that hath not the Spirit of Christ 'indwelling in his Heart by Faith, notwithstand- 'ing all his Application of Christ and his Merits, 'it is but a sapless Righteousness: so saith the 'Scripture, He that hath not the Spirit of Christ, is 'none of his.

'But this Testimony and Evidence the Com- 'missioners rejected, and would not suffer the Wit- 'nesses to depose it upon Oath.

'In the next place, I certified the Commissio- 'ners, that I had present divers knowing Chris- 'tians that were constant Hearers of me, who 'were ready to depose on Oath what the Scope of 'my Ministry was, and what they had frequently 'heard me hold forth in it, touching Christ's im- 'putative Righteousness.'

But the Commissioners rejected this Testimony also, and would not hear the Evidence of these intended Witnesses; saying, that it was not to the purpose, but merely dilatory. To which I reply'd, That altho the Proofs were weak and altogether impertinent, yet being Judges, they ought to hear them, and afterward to judge of their Force or Invalidity: and I further told them, That this Proceeding of theirs, in thus preventing and rejecting the Testimony of my Witnesses, in not suffering them to depose what they could, did much strengthen my Belief of the common Report spread abroad the Country, That they had resolved before-hand to condemn and eject me, whether by right or wrong. At this Mr. Trapham's Choler seemed much to be stirred, that the Court, of which he was one, should thus be charged; saying with much passion, That this should be looked upon as a Contempt and an Affront against the Court.

But the Commissioners peremptorily resolving not to take the Evidence of the forementioned Witnesses, because it contradicted not Mr. Tickle's Testimony, quoad idem tempus, in reference to the same particular time; I was forced to tell them, that I must be subject to the Determinations of the Court: but I hoped they would be more ingenuous and christian-like, than condemn me for a Word or Expression, tho proved ever so clearly, if the Drift and Tenour of my Ministry were otherwise.

But I shall here insert, and so leave it to the Judgment of the Reader, what eight substantial Witnesses, who almost constantly hear me, would willingly have deposed upon Oath, touching this Article, viz. That the Scope of my Ministry is not to take away the due Application of Christ's Righteousness, but the misapplying of it in reference to those who have no Interest in it.

After this, I further pressing the Commissioners to hear those Witnesses which were to attest this, they seemed somewhat to change their Resolution, and to admit one or two of them to be examined. So I mentioned Mrs. Mary Pocock, a very pious and experienced Christian, and so known to be in the place where she lives. Against whom it was objected, that she was one of my own Tribe. Then I mentioned another discreet prudent Christian, by name Richard Higgs, who is known to be one of a very good Conversation. Against whom Mr. Fowler having somewhat to object for his supposed Judgment, was willing to have him called to Examination.

So this Richard Higgs being sworn, deposed, That he had been a Hearer of me at certain times for five or six Years last past, and that during that time, for ought the Deponent knew, the Scope of my Ministry hath not been against the right and due Application of Christ's Righteousness, but against the Misapplication thereof, for ought he knew or ever understood. And being asked, Whether he had been a constant Hearer of me? he said, he had heard me very often, but that he was usually at his own Parish in the Morning, and that sometimes he was absent, but had often heard me.

And being further asked, What he had usually heard me preach concerning the imputative Righteousneſs of Chriſt, he ſaid, He could not charge his own Memory, but had a Note to which he would reflect, for recollecting his Memory; and thereupon produced a Note, which he confeſſed was given him from the Doctor.

[Here, upon this, were many Outcries againſt me, from the Accuſer, and others of the Miniſters and Commiſſioners, as though I had committed ſome heinous Act in ſuborning a Witneſs to ſwear what I pleaſed: whereas there was no ſuch thing; for this Man and two more, meeting at my Houſe, compared their Note-books together, out of which this was taken, which was in that Paper, which he after mature Deliberation, and Reflection upon it, could with a good Conſcience ſwear to; as looking upon it more ſafe, than to ſwear upon ſudden Memory.]

But I ſhall now proceed to the further Examination of this Witneſs, as it was taken by the Clerk, but very partially, as you ſhall ſee preſently.

This Richard Higgs being asked, what he meant, or what the Doctor meant by the Righteouſneſs of Chriſt? he ſaith he cannot depoſe: but the Doctor interpoſing, ſaid, Chriſt's Righteouſneſs was his active and paſſive Obedience. And thereupon the Deponent being asked, What was Chriſt's active Obedience? preſently denied his words again.

To this he refuſed to ſubſcribe.

'The Clerk hath left out ſomething touching Richard Higgs's Anſwer to that Queſtion about Chriſt's active Obedience; which Anſwer being caught up by the Clerk, before he had liberty to expreſs his Meaning, he might very well deny, though the Clerk had wrote it down, it being not according to his Meaning and Purpoſe; and ſo not fit to be ſubſcribed.'

After this, Mr. Fowler, the Accuſer, openly atteſted againſt this Deponent, That he denied the Bible to be the Word of God; and ſaid, that the ſame was but old Declaratives, which the ſaid Deponent denies.

'Here the Clerk's Partiality is again apparent, who left out a weighty Diſtinction which the Deponent made, concerning the Word of God, in anſwer to Mr. Fowler's Accuſation, which was this; That he never denied the Scripture or Bible to be the written Word, but had ſaid, it was not the Eſſential Word: And this very Diſtinction the Deponent had formerly given to the Miniſter of the Pariſh, who being preſent, confeſſed it before the Court, acknowledging that he walked like an honeſt and ſober Chriſtian in his Converſation.

'But to proceed: Although this Deponent's written Evidence would not be received, yet I ſhall here preſent it as it was to be given in, and atteſted by ſeven more Witneſſes beſides himſelf. The Form of it was this; I confeſs I have heard the Doctor preach at Bradfield about the Year 49. out of Dan. 9. 24. thus: Queſt. What is meant here by this Righteouſneſs? Anſ. By this Righteouſneſs is meant Chriſt's Righteouſneſs, John 23. 6. The Lord our Righteouſneſs. And Paul deſireth not to be found in his own Righteouſneſs, but in the Righteouſneſs of Chriſt, Phil. 3. 9. Chriſt's Righteouſneſs is the Soul's Wedding-Robe; Iſa. 6. 10. He hath covered me with the Robe of Righteouſneſs. As to the nature of Chriſt's Righteouſneſs, it is a pure, ſpotleſs, perfect and compleat Righteouſneſs, Eph. 5. 27. That he might preſent to himſelf a glorious Church, in this Righteouſneſs of his, not having Spot or Wrinkle.

'This which follows was alſo intended to be given in, and was to be atteſted by three Witneſſes: I confeſs, I heard the Doctor preach in Bradfield Church, out of Luke 1. 68. That the free Grace of God the Father is the firſt Cauſe of the Soul's Juſtification.

'Queſt. What is the matter out of which a Sinner cometh to be juſtified in the ſight of God? Anſ. It is Righteouſneſs. As a Man cannot live without a Life, ſo a Chriſtian cannot be juſt without Righteouſneſs; and this Righteouſneſs is called Chriſt's Righteouſneſs; no other Righteouſneſs, but the Righteouſneſs of Chriſt, can juſtify the Soul. Therefore he is ſtiled, Jer. 23. 6. The Lord our Righteouſneſs. 1 Cor. 1. 30. Chriſt is made unto us Wiſdom and Righteouſneſs; that is, for our Juſtification. This Righteouſneſs of Chriſt, in its own nature, is an everlaſting Righteouſneſs, Dan. 9. 24. 2 Cor. 5. That we might be made the Righteouſneſs of God, in being cloathed upon with Chriſt's Righteouſneſs. Phil. 3. 9. We are not to be found in our own ſelf Phariſaical Righteouſneſs, but in Chriſt's Righteouſneſs, which is the Righteouſneſs of Juſtification. And the formal Cauſe of a Sinner's Juſtification, is their Union and Communion with this Righteouſneſs of Chriſt, through Faith and believing on it; Rom. 10. 6. The Righteouſneſs of Faith ſpeaketh on this wiſe, &c. that is, the Righteouſneſs of Chriſt apprehended by Faith.

'This was alſo intended to have been given into the Court in Writing, being tranſcribed out of three or four Note-Books compared together, and afterward ſeriouſly conſidered and weighed; to which the Witneſſes could ſwear with good Conſciences, notwithſtanding all thoſe Outcries were againſt this Evidence by ſome of the Miniſters and Commiſſioners, as though I had preſcribed what they ſhould ſwear; and that we were all combined to commit a heinous Sin, and bring the Guilt of Perjury upon our ſelves: whereas we all ſtood in Innocency as to this thing, having no other End in it, but the ſtable Aſſurance of the Truth of what was to be atteſted by ſerious Reflections upon it, after the comparing of divers Note-books together, which ſerved to help and ſtrengthen the Memory of the Witneſſes; together with the avoiding of the Clerk's Prevarications in Writing, by partially taking the Depoſitions, in which we oft found him defective.

'But to conclude this Article, I have produced theſe Teſtimonies to ſhew my Judgment touching Chriſt's Righteouſneſs, which (with the poſitive Depoſition of Mrs. Mary Pocock, That I ſpake that of the imputative Righteouſneſs of Chriſt with a Limitation) may in Juſtice out-weigh the Depoſitions of the other two Witneſſes againſt me, being neither of them are poſitive, and ſo not effectual in Law or Reaſon.'

Now I ſhall paſs to the third Article;

To which Mr. Tickle being ſworn, ſaith, That I delivered, that the Diſcoveries of the Sinfulneſs of Sin, the Terrors of the Law, the Death of Chriſt, the free Frace of God, are fleſhly and flaſhy Diſcoveries.

Afterward being croſs-examined by me to this Interrogatory, Whether this Article was delivered in the ſame expreſs Words, and in the ſame Order? he anſwered thus:

That the very Sum and Subſtance of this Article was delivered fully and roundly by me, and in the expreſs expreſs words for the Subſtance of them, and to the beſt of his Remembrance.

'Now I not remembring that ever I ſaid that 'theſe were but fleſhly and flaſhy Diſcoveries, 'and knowing that it was but his ſingle Teſtimo- 'ny, and not poſitively ſworn to, and ſo no legal 'Evidence to condemn; and beſides, that it was 'not comprehended in the Act of blaſphemous O- 'pinions, to which the Ordinance refers: I paſ- 'ſed it by formerly without any Anſwer. But now 'to ſatisfy knowing Chriſtians concerning my Judg- 'ment in this Particular, I ſhall here preſent this 'Anſwer; That I then held forth, and do ſtill 'own it, That the Diſcoveries of the Sinfulneſs of 'Sin, the Terrors of the Law, the free Grace of 'God, the Death of Chriſt, were but preparato- 'ry Works under the Father's Diſpenſation, to the 'higher and more powerful Workings of God un- 'der the Diſpenſation of the Son, in changing 'and transforming the Heart into his Image; and 'ſo but weak in compariſon of the more full and 'clear Manifeſtations and Operations of God up- 'on the Soul, in bringing it up into divine Union 'and Fruition.'

To the fourth Article;

Mr. Tickle ſaith, that I delivered, That the Li- berty and Freedom ſpoken of, purchaſed by the Blood of Chriſt, is not a Liberty and Freedom from the Guilt of Sin, the Curſe of the Law, the Wrath of God, but the fiery Deity of Chriſt in the Center of our Souls.

Mr. Tickle being further examined on this Article by me, to this Interrogatory, viz. Whether this was delivered firſt in the ſame expreſs Words? Se- condly, and in the ſame Order? Anſwers, Firſt, The very Sum and Subſtance of this Ar- ticle was delivered fully and roundly by the Doctor. Secondly, That it was delivered in the expreſs words, for the Subſtance of them.

To a third Interrogatory propoſed by me, viz. Whether this Article was thus expreſſed by me, without any Addition or Diminution of his own? He thus anſwers; To the beſt of his Remembrance, without any Limitation, Addition or Diminution of his own.

'But here, courteous Reader, you muſt give me 'leave to ſhew you Mr. Tickle's Uncertainty and 'Diſagreement with himſelf in delivering this Ar- 'ticle, which cannot but make it invalid in the 'Eyes of thoſe that are judicious.

'In his atteſting of this Article three ſeveral 'times, he never agreed with himſelf, but either 'diminiſhed or added. The firſt time he ſware to 'this Article, he had this Clauſe (And applied by 'the clinging and cleaving of the Soul to Chriſt) 'as you may ſee in the firſt Paper of Articles, 'which, being ſworn again Octob. 5. he left out: 'and neither of theſe agreed with his own Depoſi- 'tion given under his own Hand ſome four Years 'ſince, to the Committee of plundered Miniſters, 'when it was more freſh in his Memory, and yet 'not delivered ſo fully and poſitively as now; which 'you may ſee by his own words (taken out of 'his former Depoſitions) which were theſe.

'Another Preparation was the inſtating of the 'Soul into a glorious Liberty and Freedom, in 'theſe Expreſſions: Which Liberty and Freedom 'is not that Liberty and Freedom from the Guilt 'of Sin, the Curſe of the Law, the Wrath of God, 'brought about (or in an Expreſſion of the ſame Sig- 'nification) by the Death and Blood of another; 'and applied (or a word like it) by the clinging 'and cleaving of the Soul to Chriſt.

'Now you may take notice, that in the two for- 'mer, this Clauſe was added, viz. But the fiery 'Deity of Chriſt in the Center of the Soul; which 'here is not mentioned. Moreover the Order is 'changed, and ſome doubtful Expreſſions are in- 'ſerted; which ſhewed his Uncertainty four Years 'ſince. All which compared with that Anſwer of 'his, given by Oath at my late Tryal, That this 'Article was delivered in the ſame expreſs words, 'for the Subſtance of them, cannot but ſhew that 'he hath almoſt, if not altogether, incurred the 'Sin of Perjury. Now all this being well weigh- 'ed, cannot but demonſtrate that this Teſtimony 'is of no force at all.

'And although I formerly gave no Anſwer to this 'Article, becauſe it was not ſworn to poſitively, 'but with Reſerves and Alterations, and that by 'one Witneſs only, and came not under the Act of 'ſcandalous Opinions; yet I ſhall now ſpeak ſome- 'thing to it, and ſhew you the Deponent's Miſ- 'take, which was in leaving out this word (only) 'which inſerted, makes it appear with a more in- 'nocent Face.

'But now I ſhall further anſwer, That I deli- 'vered this Sentence thus, which I ſtill own, viz. 'That the ſecond preparatory Work that Chriſt 'did in the Soul of a true Saint, for the manifeſt- 'ing of his Glory in it, was the inſtating of the 'Soul into a glorious Liberty and Freedom, which 'doth not only conſiſt in the Liberty and Freedom 'from the Guilt of Sin, the Curſe of the Law, the 'Wrath of God; but alſo in the enjoying of the 'Spirit of Chriſt in the Center of the Soul, there 'purifying our Natures, mortifying our Luſts, and 'reſtoring us into the Image of God. And ſo this, 'truly repreſented, is a glorious Truth; though as 'Mr. Tickle by Miſtake delivered it, it ſeemed mon- 'ſtrous.'

To the fifth Article;

Mr. Tickle ſaith, that I did deliver, That by Male and Female, Gen. 1. we are to underſtand by Male, the Deity; and by Female, the Humanity; and that theſe two became one Fleſh. Theſe things were delivered without any Limitation whatſo- ever.

Mr. Tickle being further examined on this Article, viz. Whether I ſpake this as my own avowed Judgment, or as the Judgment of ſome other Per- ſon? anſwers thus: That I delivered thoſe Expreſ- ſions of the Article with Approbation; and that therefore he had cauſe to believe it was my Judg- ment; and, as far as he remembers, it was deliver- ed as my Judgment.

'Here the Reader may obſerve, that Mr. Tickle 'doth not anſwer directly and nakedly as a Chriſ- 'tian ſhould, but ſubtilly and indirectly, like a 'Sophiſter; for he anſwers, That I delivered this 'with Approbation: but whether this Approba- 'tion was from my ſelf, or from ſome other (I 'might then cite) he doth not expreſs, paſſing it 'over in ſilence. Afterward he ſaith, he hath 'Cauſe to believe it was my Judgment; which is 'a mere Prevarication, but no Anſwer to the Queſ- 'tion; which was not, Whether he believed it to 'be my Judgment, but whether I delivered it as 'my Judgment, or as the Judgment of another? 'To which in the laſt Clauſe he anſwers ſome- 'what, viz. That I delivered it as my own, as far 'as he remembers. But though this be ſomewhat to

'to the Queſtion, yet not much to the Purpoſe, it 'being no legal Proof or Evidence; for his Memo-'ry might fail him.

'Now the Reaſon of this Interrogatory was, 'in that Mr. Tickle, ſome four Years ſince, when 'this was better in his Memory than now it can be, 'gave in this that followeth, under his own hand, 'to the Committee of Plundered Miniſters, viz. 'That Gen. 1. by Male, we are to underſtand, ſaith 'Mr. Pordage, the Deity; by the Female, the Hu-'manity. This he gave from a Rabbi, with that 'Approbation.

'Now how conſiſtent this is with his late An-'ſwer to my Interrogatories, let all judge; eſpe-'cially with that part of it in which he affirms, 'that as far as he remembers, I delivered it as my 'own Judgment.

'But now to anſwer ſomething poſitively to this, 'which may give Satisfaction to judicious and 'knowing Chriſtians, I acknowledge that in the 'Sermon before-mentioned, I delivered for Sub-'ſtance, this which follows, viz.

'That another preparatory Work that Chriſt did 'in the Soul of a true Chriſtian, for the manifeſting 'of his own Glory in it, was the bringing up the 'Spirit of the Soul into a glorious, myſtical, yet 'real Union with himſelf: And after I had pro-'ved the Truth and Subſtantiality of this Union 'betwixt Chriſt and a Chriſtian, from ſeveral Texts 'of Scripture, which directly evinced it; I came 'by way of Illuſtration to ſpeak of that Scripture, 'Gen. 1. out of which I ſaid, That by Male and 'Female, according to the Judgment of a learned 'Rabbi, the Deity and pure Humanity might be 'ſhadowed forth, which by Union become one; 'the Male repreſenting the Deity, the Female 'the pure Humanity, or regenerated part of the 'Soul, which by Union, is made Partaker of the 'Divine Nature.

'By this you may ſee, that if Mr. Tickle had been 'but a charitable and knowing Chriſtian, he need-'ed not have troubled himſelf and me about this 'Article.'

To the ſixth Article;

Mr. Tickle ſaith, That he heard me deliver in Diſ-courſe with Mr. Pendarvis, That the Gifts and Graces of the Spirit were but Fleſh.

Being further examined, he ſaid, That to this ſixth Article there was no Limitation whatſoever in the delivering of it.

'Here the Reader muſt know that Mr. Pendarvis 'was ſummoned by me to witneſs to the Truth in 'this particular, but he came not; alledging that 'he could ſay no more than what he had al-'ready depoſed. Whereupon I deſired the Com-'miſſioners (after Information that I had ſummon-'ed him) to hear his former Depoſition read; but 'they peremptorily denied it. By which I clearly 'ſaw that they had more mind to take all Occa-'ſion of Advantage againſt me, than to be fully in-'formed of the Truth of things.

'But Mr. Pendarvis's Depoſition given in before 'the Committee of Plundered Miniſters, was this, 'viz. That the Doctor, in Conference, did ſay, 'That the Gifts and Graces of the Spirit, were but 'Fleſh; and I oppoſed him: but then the Doctor 'replied, by way of Explanation, that he under-'ſtood them only to be Fleſh; that is, weak in point 'of Reſt and Truſt on them for eternal Life and 'Salvation: and in this I agreed with him.

'Correſpondent to this, was my Anſwer to, and 'Explanation of this Article before the Commit-'tee of Plundered Miniſters, which three Witneſ-'ſes were ready to depoſe on Oath before the pre-'ſent Commiſſioners, who refuſed to hear their 'Teſtimony.'

To the ſeventh Article;

Mr. Tickle ſaith, That he heard me deliver in Diſcourſe, That Chriſt is a Type, and but a Type.

Being further examined, he ſaith, That I endea-voured to prove that Chriſt was but a Type, out of Peter, where he is called τυπος.

Further, Roger Stephens being ſworn to this Ar-ticle, depoſeth, That the Doctor, in Diſpute with Mr. Pendarvis, delivered, That Chriſt was but a Type, and went to prove it by that Scripture, 1 Pet. 2. He is our Example. To which Mr. Pendar-vis replied, That is not meant by way of Righte-ouſneſs to Juſtification, but by way of Example, as to Reproaches. To which the Doctor anſwered, You underſtand it one way, and I another; or words to that effect.

Now to ballance theſe Depoſitions, the Reader muſt take notice,

'1. That my true Senſe of this Article may be 'ſeen in my Anſwer to this firſt Charge, in which 'I have truly ſhewed in what Senſe I owned Chriſt 'to be a Type, viz. as he is a Pattern and Ex-'ample for us to imitate and follow.

'2. That this Diſcourſe being with Mr. Pendar-'vis, it is requiſite I ſhould here inſert his Depo-'ſition taken by the Juſtices of Peace of that Coun-'ty, and afterward preſented to the Committee 'of Plundered Miniſters; which was as follows:

'This Examinant (which which was Mr. Pen-'darvis) further ſaith, That the ſaid Doctor Por-'dage, in a Conference had with him at the ſame 'time, after his Sermon at Ilſley, ſaid, That Chriſt 'was a Type, and but a Type: but this Expreſ-'ſion was immediately waved by him, but he con-'ſtantly affirmed that Chriſt was a Type.

'But becauſe Mr. Pendarvis could not be there 'to witneſs viva voce, the Commiſſioners would 'not admit this Evidence.'

But Mrs. Mary Pocock being ſworn and examined on this Article, ſaith, That ſhe heard the Doctor maintain in that Diſcourſe with Mr. Pendarvis, That Chriſt was a Type; and proved it out of Pe-ter (He was an Example) and that ſhe heard the Doctor ſay, He would not ſtand to the word But.

And further,

John Pordage, Son to the Doctor, aged between 19 and 20 Years, and examined December the 7th; this Deponent ſaith, That in Diſpute between the Doctor and Mr. Pendarvis, about five or ſix Years ſince, about Chriſt's being a Type, the Doctor ſaid, That Chriſt was but a Type. To which Mr. Pendarvis asked, Do you ſay but a Type? Whereupon the Doctor anſwered, He did not ſtand to the Expreſſion, but a Type; it was but the ſlip of his Tongue: but he maintained that Chriſt was a Type.

'You ſee here are three Witneſſes that atteſt I 'never owned or ſtood to that of Chriſt's being but 'a Type.'

Correſpondent to which Teſtimony, I gave in my Anſwer before the Committee of Plundered Mi-niſters, niſters, which I offered to prove by three Witneſſes then preſent, who heard me, who were ready to atteſt this which follows, viz.

'That they being preſent (about the 27th of 'March 1651.) before the Committee of Plunder-'ed Miniſters, heard me touching this Article, 'That Chriſt was a Type, and but a Type, deliver 'my ſelf thus; That I had owned Chriſt to be 'a Type, that is, a Pattern and Example for us 'Chriſtians to ſquare our Lives and Converſations 'by; but that I had not owned him to be but a 'Type, or a Type only: But the Commiſſioners 'would by no means hear this Evidence.

'After this I earneſtly preſſed them to hear what 'my Witneſſes could further ſay, touching what I 'had publickly delivered in my Miniſtry about this 'Subject; telling them, that ſuch Evidence was in 'Juſtice more to be reſpected, than a Miſtake in 'ſudden ſpeaking, preſently retracted: but they 'denied all ſuch Evidence, and would not hear; 'which clearly ſhewed their Partiality, and that 'they little regarded what my avowed Judgment 'was.

'Notwithſtanding, I ſhall here inſert what ſome 'were ready to witneſs, in reference to this Ar-'ticle, who had been conſtant Hearers of me; 'whoſe Teſtimony was this: We confeſs we have 'heard the Doctor preach out of Luke 1. 68. Firſt, 'This by way of Doctrine, viz. That God's free 'Grace is the firſt and chief Cauſe of our Re-'demption. Then he proceeded thus: That the 'inward Man was redeemed in, for, and through 'Chriſt, Rom. 3. 24. through the Redemption that 'is in Jeſus Chriſt. How through Chriſt? Anſw. 'Through Chriſt's Death and Paſſion; Iſa. 53. 5. 'He was wounded for our Tranſgreſſions, he was broken 'for our Iniquities. 1 Pet. 2. 24. Who bare our Sins in 'his own Body on the Croſs. Rom. 4. 25. Who was de-'livered for our Offences to the Death of the Croſs. '1 Cor. 5. 7. Chriſt our Paſſover is ſacrificed for us.

'Now this clearly ſhews, that Chriſt is more 'than a Type, and that he is a compleat Redeemer.' So much for this Article.

To the eighth and ninth Article;

Mr. Tickle ſaith, That he heard me deliver before the Committee of this County, ſitting at Reading, That Chriſt was not God; and that he was not Jehovah.

Being further examined to this Article, my Interrogatories to him were theſe:

1. Whether theſe Words were not expreſſed in a hot Diſpute before the Committee? To this Mr. Tickle replied, That I endeavoured in Diſpute with great ſeriouſneſs, before the Committee, to maintain, That Chriſt was not God, that Chriſt was not Jehovah.

My ſecond Queſtion was this, Whether, in the ſame Diſpute, this Article was not limited and explained by me?

'But this Queſtion was wholly waved and paſ-'ſed over in ſilence; but whether voluntarily by 'Mr. Tickle, or by the Clerk's Deceit, the Inter-'rogatories being given in in Writing, I do not 'know; but this I am ſure, it was much to the 'prejudicing of my Cauſe to let ſuch a weighty 'Queſtion paſs without an Anſwer.'

3. Whether this Article was held forth by me as my avowed Judgment?

Anſ. To this he thus anſwers: The Doctor did maintain and defend this Article as his avowed Judgment.

'Here Mr. Tickle is very peremptory in a raſh 'Anſwer, though that Interrogatory before could 'be ſlided over in ſilence; the Anſwer to which, 'if Mr. Tickle had not eaſily incurred Perjury, 'would have much cleared the Truth, in regard I 'meant, and explained my ſelf, of God the Father, 'as you ſhall ſee afterward.'

This Deponent, Mr. Tickle, further depoſeth to the eighth and ninth Article, That there was no ſuch Expreſſion, of the Father, uſed in the Definition of Blaſphemy, as is mentioned in the Doctor's Anſwer; but ſaith that the Definition was, That Blaſphemy was an Evil-ſpeaking againſt God, derogating from his Glory, either in his Name, Nature, Word or Works. Mr. Tickle further affirms, That my immediate Words thereupon were, Hark! he anſwereth, Blaſphemy is an Evil-ſpeaking againſt God; and in his Paper chargeth me with Blaſphemy againſt Chriſt, as if Chriſt were God: And hereupon we began a hot Diſpute about the Godhead of Chriſt.

'The Reader muſt here know, That upon Mr. 'Tickle's defining Blaſphemy to be an Evil-ſpeak-'ing againſt God the Father, as I then really ap-'prehended, I immediately cried out, Hark! he 'defineth Blaſphemy to be an Evil-ſpeaking againſt 'God the Father, and in his Paper chargeth me 'with Blaſphemy againſt Chriſt, who is God the 'Son. Whereupon began a Diſpute; in reference 'to which Mr. Tickle further depoſeth,'

That he asked the Doctor if Chriſt were God: who did deny it, and put the Deponent upon Proof of the ſame. Whereupon he cited that Scripture, In the Beginning was the Word, &c. To which the Doctor replied, He is called God, but he is not Jehovah. To which the Deponent replied, He is Jehovah; which the Doctor likewiſe put him upon Proof of. To which he anſwered that Scripture, His Name ſhall be called Jehovah, our Righteouſneſs: And, as he remembers, the Doctor did diſallow of that Proof, as being out of the Old Teſtament; to which he cited that Scripture, He that was, is, and is to come, as of the ſame purpoſe with Jehovah.

'Tis well that Mr. Tickle adds, According to 'his beſt Remembrance, which ſaves him from 'Perjury: For I eſteem the Old Teſtament to be 'Scripture as well as the New; neither did I diſ-'allow of that Proof as being taken thence, as he 'would inſinuate: But I ſaid that Jehovah in the 'Old Teſtament moſt commonly ſignified the Per-'ſon of the Father.'

But now we ſhall paſs to the next Witneſs.

Thomas Trapham, one of the Commiſſioners, ſworn and examined, depoſeth;

That, to his Remembrance, the word Father was not in Mr. Tickle's Definition of Blaſphemy; and that the Doctor did then deny Chriſt to be God; which the Deponent did acquaint Mr. Blagrave with. To which Mr. Blagrave ſaid, If he ſay Chriſt is not God, we muſt take further Courſe with him. To which the Doctor replied, Chriſt is not Jehovah: and that when Mr. Tickle had confuted him in that Argument, (I muſt now tell the whole Truth) the Doctor replied, He was not God the Father.

'Note, This was rather a Confutation of Mr. 'Tickle's own Apprehenſions concerning me, than 'of my Meaning in what I then ſpake: And if he 'ſwears truly that the Term Father was not in his 'Definition, then as he miſtook me, I miſtook 'him; upon which Miſtakes his needleſs Proofs 'were grounded.'

But

But now to the next.

Mr. Roger Stephens, of Reading, ſworn and examined November 22. depoſeth, That the Doctor did confeſs in the Deponent's hearing, in a Sermon, That Chriſt was not Jehovah.

'Note, Before I proceed any further, I cannot 'but deſire all ſober Chriſtians to take notice 'what a bitter and envious Spirit this Deponent is 'of; which will appear by what follows.'

After his before-expreſſed Depoſitions, I put theſe Interrogatories to him:

1. Where did you hear me preach this? To this he replied, In a Sermon at St. Lawrence's Church.

2. I asked him before whom? He anſwered, Before the Committee of Berks.

3. I demanded of him how I explained my ſelf, when in the Sermon I affirmed openly, That Chriſt was not Jehovah? He replied, He did indeed explain himſelf thus, That he had ſaid that Chriſt was not Jehovah, in oppoſition to the Father.

'Note, Here the Reader muſt know that this 'Sermon was delivered at Reading by the Appointment of the Committee, (before which we had the 'Diſpute about the Godhead of Chriſt) in which 'Sermon I openly cleared my ſelf from that diſmal Aſperſion of denying the Godhead of Chriſt; 'which ſo ſatisfied the Committee, that upon this 'they judged me innocent in that particular, and 'by Vote cleared me. And now conſidering the 'Scope of my Sermon at that time, together with 'the Deponent's Depoſition, viz. That he heard 'me in a Sermon confeſs that Chriſt was not Jehovah, without adding any more to ſhew how I 'ſaid it, till I croſs-examined him: I ſay, weighing theſe well together, the judicious Reader cannot but ſee this Deponent's Envy and Partiality, 'and Unfitneſs to take Oath, or be much regarded after Oath; who ſwearing to ſpeak all the 'Truth, dares yet take one Sentence out of a 'whole Diſcourſe, without adding any further Explanation of it, to make the Commiſſioners believe that I accuſed my ſelf of Blaſphemy at that 'time, when my whole Scope was to vindicate my 'ſelf from the undeſerved Imputation of it.

Now I ſhall preſent you with the Depoſitions and Evidence given in on my behalf, touching the Eighth and Ninth Articles, viz. That Chriſt is not God; and, That Chriſt is not Jehovah.

BUT in the firſt place I refer you to my Anſwer to theſe Articles; in which you may ſee the Occaſion of the Diſcourſe before the Committee, touching the Godhead of Chriſt; and that I never owned any ſuch monſtrous Poſitions, as, That Chriſt is not God.

In the ſecond place I come to the Witneſſes: The firſt of which was Mr. Francis Pordage, Brother to me.

Now this Deponent being asked whether the Words, That Chriſt was not God, and that Chriſt was not Jehovah, before the Committee at Reading, were not delivered in a hot Diſpute; he ſaith they were.

And being further asked whether in the ſame Diſpute theſe Words, That Chriſt was not God, were not limited by me; he ſaith, The Doctor did expreſs it with this Limitation, That Chriſt was not the Father.

Now follow the Croſs-Examinations of the Accuſer, and ſome other of the Miniſters.

MR. Pordage being asked by them the ground of this Diſpute, he thus anſwered, That the Diſpute aroſe upon a Definition of Blaſphemy which Mr. Tickle gave to Mr. Blagrave, That it was againſt God. To which the Doctor replied, He ſaith it is againſt God, and yet chargeth me for ſpeaking againſt Chriſt.

'Note, Here are ſome Things prevaricated by 'the Clerk, the Miniſters at that time being very 'hot in examining this Deponent.

'I muſt here therefore a little correct it by the 'Line of Truth.'

Mr. Pordage indeed ſaid that the Diſpute aroſe upon a Definition of Blaſphemy, which Mr. Tickle gave to Mr. Blagrave: But then a Miniſter asking him whether the Definition was not thus expreſſed, That Blaſphemy was an Evil-ſpeaking againſt God? he replied, He could not tell whether it was expreſſed againſt God, or againſt God the Father. But now I ſhall proceed as the Clerk took them.

Mr. Pordage being further asked by me, whether in that Diſpute I did deny that I held Chriſt not to be God? he ſaith the Doctor did declare to Mr. Blagrave, That Chriſt was God.

Hereupon he was asked by the Commiſſioners and Miniſters, whether there was not ſo much diſtance of time at the leaſt between the Doctor's Denial of Chriſt to be God, and his correcting of it afterwards, as required Proof of Mr. Tickle, to prove him to be God and Jehovah? the Deponent doth acknowledge the ſame.

And the Deponent being asked whether he did hear Mr. Tickle ſpeak any Word of God the Father in that Diſpute? he ſaith, He doth not remember that Mr. Tickle uſed any ſuch Expreſſion.

This Deponent being asked by me, whether frequently in that Diſpute, when I ſpake of denying Chriſt to be God, I did not ſpeak it always in relation to God the Father? he thus anſwered, The Doctor did then ſpeak it in relation to God the Father; but he cannot ſay frequently or always.

Moreover the former Deponent being asked by me, How I did explain my ſelf in St. Lawrence Church concerning the Divinity of Chriſt, when I was commanded by the Committee at Reading to explain my ſelf in a Sermon there? he ſaith, In that Sermon the Doctor did clear himſelf concerning the Trinity of Perſons, and that Chriſt was God; and did aſſert the ſame as his avowed Judgment.

After this, being asked by the Commiſſioners whether the Doctor did not make his Limitation, if any, after he was confuted by Mr. Tickle concerning the Deity of Chriſt? the Deponent anſwereth to this, That it was after Mr. Tickle had cited many Scriptures to prove the Deity of Chriſt.

But laſt of all, being asked by me, whether he underſtood me at that time to be confuted or miſtaken? he ſaith, Miſtaken.

Francis Pordage.

The next Witneſs is Mary Pocock, ſworn again, and further examined.

WHO being asked by me whether this Expreſſion, That Chriſt was not God and Jehovah, was not ſpoken in a Diſpute before the Committee at Reading? ſhe ſaith, She was before the Committee of Berks, where ſhe heard the Doctor in a Diſpute with Mr. Tickle concerning Chriſt; in which Diſpute ſhe heard the Doctor ſay, Chriſt was not the Father: But ſhe did not hear him deny that he was God the Son, neither then, nor at any other time, but owning him to be perfect God, and perfect Man.

And being further asked, whether ſhe did not hear the Doctor expreſs that Chriſt was not God with with a Limitation, and with what Limitation? ſhe anſwered, Yes; and that the ſame was thus, He was not God the Father.

And being further asked by the Doctor, Whether ſhe did not hear him deny in that Diſpute, That he held Chriſt not to be God? ſhe ſaith, ſhe did apprehend him ſo, viz. That he did deny he held Chriſt not to be God; and ſo far as ſhe was ſatisfied with it.

And being asked by the Commiſſioners, Whether ſhe did not hear the Doctor in that Diſpute, deny Chriſt to be God? ſhe anſwereth, ſhe heard him deny Chriſt to be God the Father.

And being further asked, Whether the Words of God the Father were not ſpoken by the Doctor, after Mr. Blagrave did tell him, If he held ſuch Opinions, they muſt proceed againſt him? To this ſhe ſaith, Mr. Blagrave put ſome Queſtions to him, what it was, ſhe cannot remember.

And being further asked, Whether the Doctor did not bring in the Expreſſion of God the Father, after many Scriptures cited by Mr. Tickle to prove Chriſt to be God? To this ſhe ſaith, ſome Scriptures Mr. Tickle did bring; but ſhe is not able to ſay it was before the Doctor did expreſs God the Father.

Mary Pocock.

After this, I deſired the Commiſſioners, that if they were not yet ſatisfied, they would hear my Witneſſes which I had there ready to be ſworn; that I had formerly cleared my ſelf of holding Chriſt not to be God and Jehovah; and that I had held forth the contrary as my avowed Judgment, viz. That Chriſt was God and Jehovah, in a Sermon before the Committee of Berks at Lawrence-Church in Reading; and how afterward I was cleared by their Vote from theſe Articles now in Debate, and particularly from this of holding Chriſt not to be God. But they would not ſuffer me to produce the Evidence of theſe Witneſſes, replying, They had nothing to do what other Committees before had done; they would proceed according to the Proofs of the preſent Witneſſes.

But nevertheleſs I ſhall here preſent to the judicious Reader the Evidence which they through prejudice rejected.

Which was this that follows.

'I confeſs I heard the Doctor deliver himſelf in 'a Sermon at Reading in Lawrence-Church, where 'the Committee of Berks was preſent, out of Ezek. 'cap. 9. ver. 4, 5, 6, 7. after this manner, That Je'hovah, taken latè, largely, including the Trinity 'of Perſons, ſo they are all Jehovah: But take Je'hovah ſtrictè, only for the Perſon of the Father, 'and then Chriſt is not Jehovah. And hereupon 'he further ſaid, What Dealings have I had from 'my Fellow-Miniſters, but as Jacob had from Eſau, 'Obad. ver. 10, 12. who ſpake proudly againſt his 'Brother Jacob in the Day of his Diſtreſs. And there 'he avowedly delared, That the Thought of deny'ing the Deity or Godhead of Chriſt never enter'd 'into his Soul.

Moreover,

'Theſe following Witneſſes were preſent to at'teſt on Oath their former Depoſitions, taken be'fore the Committee of Plundered Miniſters, which 'were theſe.

'This Deponent (Mr. Francis Pordage) further 'ſaith on Oath, That he was preſent before the Ho'nourable Committee of Berks, when the Doctor 'was cleared by the Vote of the whole Committee, 'touching the Buſineſs at Ilſley, and concerning 'thoſe Articles, That Chriſt is not God and Je'hovah.

'This Deponent (John Hambleton) ſaith on his 'Oath, That he was preſent before the Honoura'ble Committee of Berks when the Doctor was 'cleared by the Vote of the whole Committee, 'concerning Ilſley Buſineſs, and theſe Articles of 'Chriſt's not being God and Jehovah.

'And this Deponent further ſaith on Oath, That 'he was at Reading before the Committee of Berks, 'where the Doctor was cleared of the Buſineſs at 'Ilſley, and from the falſe Aſperſions laid to him, 'as if he denied Chriſt to be God or Jehovah, 'and that by the Vote of the whole Committee.

'But the Commiſſioners not receiving theſe Teſ'timonies, I earneſtly deſired them they would 'hear the Evidence of ſome Witneſſes there pre'ſent, touching the Tenor of my Miniſtry ſince 'that Diſpute concerning Chriſt's being God, 'which I looked upon more conſiderable than one 'Expreſſion uttered in a Diſpute upon a Miſtake, '(if Mr. Tickle ſwears the Truth.) But they de'nied this reaſonable Requeſt, ſaying, They were 'in haſte; and that theſe Teſtimonies were but 'dilatory and impertinent. Which notwithſtand'ing I ſhall here preſent, to be weighed by the 'judicious Reader.

'Theſe four Witneſſes (Mr. Francis Pordage, Ri'chard Higgs, Mr. Samuel Pordage, John Higgs) were 'ready to atteſt this which follows upon their 'Oaths, which was writ down in ſome of their 'Note-Books.

'We confeſs we heard the Doctor preach out of 'Matt. 1. 23. in the Year 1652. concerning Chriſt's 'Birth; at which time he ſpeaking of ſix Won'ders, deliver'd the four laſt after this manner:

'The third Wonder in Chriſt's Birth was this, 'That he was born a perfect Man, a true natural 'Man, Luke 1. 42. where Chriſt is called by Eli'zabeth the Fruit of the Virgin Mary's Womb; 'Gal. 4. 4. made of a Woman; Gal. 1. 1. not on'ly in and through a Woman, but out of the Sub'ſtance and Nature of the Virgin. Fourth Won'der, That Chriſt was born perfect God, Joh. 1. 14. 'The Word was made Fleſh: Who is meant by this 'Word? The Eternal Word, the Word Chriſt, 'Heb. 1. 2. Fifth Wonder, Behold two diſtinct 'Natures born in him, viz. The Deity and Hu'manity, the Godhead and the Manhood, Rom. 1. '3, 4. According to the Fleſh, he is of the Seed of 'David; and according to his divine Nature, he 'is the Son of God. Theſe two Natures remain 'diſtinct in Chriſt's Perſon; Joh. 8. 58. Before Abra'ham was, I am. According to his divine Nature, 'he was before Abraham; and according to his 'human, after. Sixth Wonder, Behold two Na'tures hypoſtatically united in one Perſon! Theſe 'two Natures do not make two Perſons, two 'Chriſts, but both theſe Natures hypoſtatically 'united together, make up but one Perſon, Mat. 1. '23. Emanuel, God with us.

'The Nature of this Union was after this man'ner explained:

'It was an inconvertible Union, an indiviſible 'Union, an inconfuſed Union, an inſeparable U'nion, a ſubſtantial and real Union, yet a myſtical 'Union.

'We alſo heard the Doctor in Bradfield Church, 'at another time, about 1653. deliver himſelf '(out of John 1. 14. concerning the Word's being 'made Fleſh) thus, viz. That this Word was 'Chriſt, the Eternal Word, that is co-eternal, co'eſſential, and co-equal with the Father, Prov. 8.

'22, 23, 24, 25. I was set up from everlasting, &c. 'John 10. 30. I and my Father are one.

'Besides, we can with a good Conscience testify, that in his publick Ministry, out of divers 'Texts of Scripture, we have heard him clearly 'hold forth Christ to be God.'

So much for these Articles, as to the Testimony of Witnesses.

'And now we must inform the Readers, that I 'have hitherto in truth, without Partiality toward 'myself, or Passion and Prevarication toward my 'Adversaries, presented the Depositions and Evi-'dence on both sides, touching the first Charge: 'I would therefore request, that these following 'Particulars, drawn together by way of Recapi-'tulation, may be seriously weighed and consi-'dered.

'Part. 1. That to most of these nine Articles 'they have but one Witness, without any concur-'rent Testimony, which is not sufficient Proof, 'according to the Ordinance they are to act by; 'in which it is expressed, that at least there must 'be one Witness with concurrent Evidence.

'Part. 2. That whersoever the Accuser hath 'two, I have also two to ballance them.

'Part. 3. That altho many of the Articles are 'in gross sworn to positively, yet in the Cross-'Examinations you will find such Limitations as 'these, According to our best Remembrance, and 'according to our Apprehensions, in the same ex-'press words for the Substance of them, &c. 'which cannot therefore amount to legal Evidence, 'being invalid in point of Law; because, as the 'judicious Lawyer saith, if the Deponents swear 'not positively and syllabically, they may by 'changing, adding to, or taking from the express 'words, usurp the place of Judges, and so prevent 'their Work and Duty, which is to judge whether 'such express Terms are criminous or not; which 'they cannot do after the Terms be altered, and 'made criminous already by the Witnesses misre-'presenting them.

'Part. 4. That my Witnesses, in reference to 'the most substantial Questions, are positive in 'their Answers.'

Now I come to the second Charge of Articles in reference to the Proof, being exhibited against me by one Joseph Cook, an unknown Person.

Art. 1. ONE Mrs. Lewyn being with child, and near the time of Travail, sent for Dr. Pordage's Mother to be her Midwife; but he would not suffer her to go, saying they would not be guilty of such a beast-like Life, meaning Mrs. Lewyn's being with child by her Husband.

Depos. Mr. John Lewyn of Hamsted-Norris sworn and examined the second of November, at the Bear in Speenhamland, before the Commissioners, to this Article saith, he cannot depose.

Ann Lewyn, Wife of John Lewyn, Minister of Hamsted-Norris, sworn and examined to the second Paper of Articles exhibited against Dr. Pordage, saith to the first Article she cannot depose.

Art. 2. The said Dr. Pordage coming to the House of Mr. Lewyn, in his Discourse with Mrs. Lewyn blamed her for having Children by her Husband, and argued with her the Unlawfulness of having Children by her Husband.

Depos. To this Article Mr. Lewyn saith he cannot depose.

To this second Article Mrs. Lewyn saith, That the Doctor told her, when she had two Children, a Boy and a Girl, she had enough, one for her Husband, another for herself: To which the Deponent answered, As it shall please God. Then the Doctor reply'd, Pish, it is as yourselves will. But she saith the Doctor did never persuade her to live from her Husband.

Art. 3. In his Discourse to Mr. Lewyn concerning the same Subject, he endeavoured to maintain the Unlawfulness of their having Children; and said, that Adam was Male and Female in himself, and had he not fallen, he had brought forth Children himself; and to maintain and prove the same by Scripture and otherwise.

Depos. To this third Article Mr. Lewyn saith, That about three Years since the Doctor and this Deponent had some Discourse at the Deponent's House, about some Principles of Religion: the Doctor did urge that place in Genesis, That he made them Male and Female, but whether he meant Adam singly, or what mental Reservation he had, the Deponent knoweth not. And further to this Article he cannot depose.

To this third Article Mrs. Lewyn saith, She heard the Doctor and her Husband in discourse to the purpose of the said Article; but what the words were, she cannot depose.

Art. 4. In his Discourse with Mr. Lewyn, which was about the time that one Everard was with him in his House at Bradfield, who was generally reputed a Conjurer, he asked Mr. Lewyn whether he would not be afraid, if he should see his own Picture or Shape, intimating that he himself had used to see his.

Depos. To this fourth Article Mr. Lewyn saith, That about the time mentioned in the Article, the Deponent met the Doctor in London; in Discourse with him the Doctor asked him, If it would not be terrible to see Apparitions? but did intimate nothing, that he used to see any himself.

To this Mrs. Lewyn saith she cannot depose.

Art. 5. The said Dr. Pordage hath had for some Weeks together in his House the said Everard and one Tawny, who stiled himself King of the Jews, who had been questioned, as it is generally reported, for holding dangerous and unsound Opinions, as that there is no Hell, &c. the like.

Depos. To this Mr. Lewyn deposeth nothing, and Mrs. Lewyn saith she cannot depose.

'Now all that I shall say to this Charge, and 'the Proofs of it, consists in these three subsequent 'Particulars.

'Part. 1. What Paul saith, Acts 24. 13. Neither 'can they prove the things whereof they now accuse me, 'I may say here; for many things are laid to my 'charge, but nothing proved by this unknown Ac-'cuser. But it is an Act of subtile Policy, to 'charge boldly, tho they prove little of it, which 'hath been practised against me in this Tryal, as 'every one may see.

'Part. 2. For the further Satisfaction of the Rea-'der in reference to this Charge, let him look back 'upon my former Answer, given unto it before the 'Witnesses were examined.

'Part. 3. I look upon myself in some measure 'obliged here to give a short account of my Judg-'ment concerning Marriage; the holding forth of 'which, may have occasion'd my Enemies to have 'framed some of the precedent Articles against 'me. I must therefore acknowledge, That I pre-'fer Virginity before Matrimony, the single State 'before the conjunct; and that Persons, tho in a 'married State, [1 Cor. 7. 38.] may by consent ab-'stain from the Enjoyments of that State, and so 'be in it as tho they were not in it, living as sin-

'gle

'gle, tho in an united Form. This now is my 'Judgment and deliberate Practice, being accor-'ding to that of Christ, Mat. 19. 12. He that is able 'to receive it, let him receive it: where he speaks of 'the Law of Abstinence, and Christian Eunu-'chism, which these words immediately going be-'fore shew, viz. There be Eunuchs, that have made 'themselves Eunuchs for the Kingdom of Heaven's sake. 'Here is the Practice, and the End of it, which 'ought to be the Growth and Increase of God's 'Kingdom in the Heart; to which the Morti-'fication of the Affections, and the Abstraction 'of the Soul from the corrupt sensitive Nature, does 'make way. And certainly it were well, if Chris-'tians, in this corrupt declining Age of the World, 'did more eye and imitate the Pattern of Christ's 'Life, who as he was born of a Virgin, so lived 'in Virginity, and the single devoted Life; leav-'ing an Example to all that are able [Mat. 29. 12.] 'to tread in his steps, and follow him. And fur-'ther, it is fit for all that are either single or mar-'ried to consider, that all private Bonds, Laws, 'and Engagements, ought to strike sail to our 'highest Laws and Engagements to God; and 'that whensoever they cross one another, the 'highest and supreme Law, by which we are ob-'liged to live to God in Purity and Integrity, 'must have the precedency. Now my holding 'forth and declaring this my Judgment, together 'with my own Practice, hath given occasion to 'many (who are as the Generation before the 'Flood, eating and drinking, marrying and giv-'ing in Marriage, and taking complacency in the 'Delights of the Flesh) to speak evil of me, as 'one that breaks Bonds between Relations, tho no 'such thing can (in truth) be proved against me: 'for it is not my design to make Proselytes to my 'Judgment, being willing to leave all to the Rule 'of Light in their own Consciences. Tho I have 'said, and cannot but say, that it were well if 'Christians would more labour after, and pray for 'the Gift of Continency, and not involve them-'selves in the Entanglements of the World, till 'they had used all Means of Mortification pre-'scribed in the Holy Scripture, to subdue their 'Natures: and it were happy if the present Ge-'neration could clearly distinguish betwixt those 'Marriages that are Idolatrous, Adulterous, and 'Bestial, and those that are Holy, Pure, Divine, 'being made in the Lord, according to his Will, 'and so lawful and honourable. But alas! most 'People now are as those in the days of Noah, 'who being insensible of God's intended Judg-'ment by the Deluge, solaced themselves in the 'Pleasures and Delights of the Earth, till the 'Flood came and destroy'd them. Hence there is 'much need of some at this time, to call People 'to Self-denial and Imitation of Christ's Life, to 'live up to the highest and purest Rules of Chris-'tianity, in the Mortification of their Flesh, and 'in the compleat devoting of themselves to a con-'stant Attendance upon the Lord, as waiting for 'his coming in Spirit, to destroy the Man of Sin, 'and overthrow Babylon with all its Idols. So 'much for the third and last Particular, which 'shall conclude the things of this Charge.'

Now I am come to the Depositions of my third and last Charge, some of which were taken Nov. 22. being the fourth time of my Appearance; the other Decemb. 7, & 8. being the fifth and last time of my appearing before the Court.

But before I present the particular Depositions, I must here inform the Reader of two things, which relate to the last time of my Appearance, and to this last Charge; one of which shews the Cruelty, the other the Injustness of the Commissioners. The first then is this: The seventh of December having been taken up in the Examination of my Witnesses to the first Charge, which continued till it was late in the Night, the Commissioners called for more Lights, that they might proceed to the Examination of Witnesses in reference to the third Charge. Whereupon I reply'd it was late, and I had many Witnesses to examine upon the last Charge. At this Mr. Fowler the Accuser rose up, and urged the Proceeding to the last Charge; saying, it would quickly be dispatched. Then the Commissioners cry'd out, Fetch us more Candles, we will make an end of it this night. To which I reply'd, Gentlemen, I have here stood very long before you, and having not dined, (through the Urgency of my Business) I am not well, being very faint, and much spent and wearied; I desire you would therefore stay till the next Morning. But they peremptorily denied this just Request, and resolved to proceed. But they permitting me to withdraw for a little space, through Emptiness and Weariness I fell very sick, and was forced to go into my Bed: at which the Commissioners were very much troubled, seeming to consult whether they should proceed to Judgment. The second thing is this; On the morrow the Commissioners requiring me, against many Objections which I made, to give in my Interrogatories by writing; afterward judged most of them dilatory and impertinent to the Business, and so not fit to be examined. To which I objected, whatever my Proofs were, they ought in justice to hear them, by examining the Witnesses to my Interrogatories, and afterwards to judge of them, whether valid or invalid. But nothing I could speak prevailed with them, to obstruct their rejecting most of my Testimonies.

But now as to the particular Depositions, relating to the third Charge, exhibited by Mr. Fowler, I shall here present them to be weighed in the Scales of Justice by the Reader.

Art. 2. THAT Jesus Christ was not perfect; alledging that Text to confirm it, He cry'd out, My God, my God, why, &c.

Mr. Christopher Fowler sworn and examined (at Reading, Novemb. 23.) to this Article, saith, That about five Weeks or a Month since, he acquainted Mr. Daniel Blagrave the younger, that the Commissioners did intend to summon him to testify what he knew of Dr. Pordage in relation to Jesus Christ; and the Deponent asked him, if he heard the Doctor say, That Christ was not perfect? To which he answered, Yes.

Now as to my Defence against this Testimony, not repeating the Illegality and Invalidity of it, I have these things to say.

1. THAT the Clerk hath left out some Cross-Interrogatories, which were proposed by me to the Accuser, in reference to this his Deposition. As first, Whether he asked Mr. Blagrave, whether I spake it from myself, as my Judgment, or related it as delivered by and heard from another? Which Question the Accuser waved. And secondly, If he did ask it, what was reply'd to it by Mr. Blagrave? Which likewise was waved by him, without any positive Answer. Whereupon I said to the Commissioners, I hope you will not take this Deposition as Evidence against me, without summoning Mr. Blagrave himself, who only can resolve the Truth of these Particulars.

2. In the second place, I shall refer you to my Answer to this Article; in which you may see, that I only related what I had heard another speak at a publick Meeting in London, the thing itself being much against my Judgment.

'3. In the third place, I must tell you that I had 'three Witnesses ready to depose on Oath, That 'after my coming from London they heard me re'late this, as spoken by Mr. Erbery in a publick 'Sermon at Somerset-House; which Testimony was 'according to my Answer to this Article, tho ac'counted impertinent by the Commissioners, and 'so rejected, without examining the Witnesses.

'4. Farther to clear my Innocency in this parti'cular, I desired them to hear what my Witnesses 'could say, as to the Tenour of my Ministry, 'touching Christ's being a perfect Redeemer: But 'this was also rejected as impertinent. But whether 'this subsequent Testimony, intended to have been 'given in, was not as weighty as the Accusers 'Deposition or Hearsay, let the Reader judge.

"We have heard the Doctor preach in Bradfield-"Church (about 1652, out of Coloss. 1. 14. In whom "we have Redemption, &c.) after this manner. "These words he divided into three Particulars; "1. Into the Redeemer, in whom. 2. The Re"deemed, We. 3. The Act itself, Redemption. "As to the first Particular, he thus enlarged him"self; Who can this Redeeming Person be, but "Christ? Acts 4. 12. Neither is there Salvation in "any other, for there is no other Name given under "Heaven, whereby we must be saved. 1 Cor. 3. 7. "For other Foundation can no Man lay, than that is "laid, which is Jesus Christ. As to the second "Particular, The Persons redeemed, he said they "were the whole mystical Body of Christ. Third"ly, As to the third Particular, the Act itself, "Redemption, he said it imply'd a Deliverance "from a State of Bondage into a State of Liber"ty; which he opened at large in every Particu"lar, setting forth the Riches of this Redemption "to us by Christ.

"And we heard him further preach in Bradfield-"Church, about 1654, from these words out of "1 Tim. 1. 15. That Jesus Christ came into the "World to save Sinners, viz. That Jesus Christ "was a perfect Saviour, in reference both to his "Prophetical, Priestly, and Kingly Office, every "one of which Heads he opened at large."

'Now let the Reader but impartially weigh the 'Accusers illegal Deposition, with the Particu'lars here recited on my behalf, and judge whe'ther the Commissioners have not broken their 'own Law, the Law of Nature, and the Law 'of Scripture, in taking this Deposition of my 'Accusers into their Sentence of Ejectment, in 'which they expresly condemn me for holding, 'That Christ was not perfect.'

Art. 3. That the Blood of Christ was not meritorious of any Man's Salvation.

To this Mr. Christopher Fowler, sworn and examined, deposeth, That about three Weeks or a Month since he asked Mr. Daniel Blagrave the younger, whether he did not hear the Doctor say, That the Blood of Christ was not meritorious of any Man's Salvation? he answered, He heard him to that purpose.

To ballance this Deposition, let the Reader consider,

1. That the Accuser is here Deponent, which is against Law.

2. That the Deposition is but a Story or Hearsay, and no legal Testimony.

'3. That the Deponent was not able to answer 'to any of my Interrogatories, so as to declare 'where, before whom, or on what occasion this 'was spoken; only protested as he was a Minister 'of the Gospel, that Mr. Blagrave told him so.

'4. That I am not guilty of holding any such 'thing, as my Answer to this Article shews.

'5. That seeing I had no other way of clearing 'my Innocency, but by shewing my Judgment, 'and producing Proofs of the Tenour of my Mi'nistry touching this particular; I desired them 'to examine some Witnesses, that were there rea'dy to attest this which follows.

"We heard the Doctor in Bradfield-Church (a-"bout 1652, out of Coloss. 1. 4. viz. In whom we "have Redemption through his Blood) deliver himself "thus: That the fourth particular in this Text, "was the Means of this Redemption, expressed "in the last words, Through his Blood, to be un"derstood per modum meriti, through his merito"rious Blood. 1 Cor. 6. 20. Ye are bought with a "Price, that is, the Price of Blood. 1 Pet. 1. 18, 19. "Forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with "corruptible things, as with Silver and Gold, from "your vain Conversations, but with the precious Blood "of Christ. Acts 20. 28. Which he hath purchased "with his own Blood.

"We also heard the Doctor in Bradfield-Church, "(about 1654, out of these words, Isa. 25. 6. In "this Mountain will the Lord of Hosts make a Feast "of fat things, &c.) speak thus; That one Dish "amongst the Dainties of this Feast, was the "Blood of Christ, which he opened, to be clean"sing purging Blood: 1 Joh. 1. 7. Having cleansed us "from all our Sins through his Blood. And reconciling "Blood, Coloss. 1. 20. Reconciled through his Blood. "And pardoning Blood, Coloss. 1. 14. Through his "Blood, even the Forgiveness of our Sin.

"And we have oft heard him in his Ministry "thus set forth the Efficacy of the Blood of "Christ."

'But you must know that this Testimony would 'not be received, for they judged it invalid, tho 'they received the Accusers Hearsay as Evidence 'against me. Now whether this Dealing was 'not more suitable to corrupted Ethnicks, than 'to such Professors of Religion, let knowing Per'sons judge.'

Art. 4. Pish! It is a poor thing to live upon the Blood of Christ.

Depos. Susannah Grip, Wife of John Grip of Reading, Joyner, sworn, deposeth, This Deponent told Dr. Pordage, That it was a high thing to live upon the Blood of Christ. To which he replied; To live upon the Blood of Christ, that is a poor thing: and repeated the same again, and said, Thou art a Babe, thou knowest nothing; to live upon the Blood of Christ, that is a poor thing. Whereupon the Deponent's Heart fell almost dead with Fear at his Words. And being asked by the Doctor, whether the same were delivered in the same very words? she answered, Yes, in the very same words. Being asked where? she replied, In the Kitchin: Being further asked when? she saith, Four Years since, to the best of her Remembrance; but who was then present, she doth not remember.

And

And being asked by the Doctor, upon what Occasion the same was spoken? she saith, The Doctor was speaking something in a rambling manner, which she did not understand; but she said, she thought would speak something to him, that he should understand and rejoice with her for it: and that was the Occasion of the Discourse; and that the Doctor's words were without any Explanation. This Deponent being ready to faint, said, What then, Doctor? He answered, I know not what the matter is, that I must speak to you; I do not use to discover my self: but he told her something of the Man that died at Jerusalem, which she did not remember, being then so amazed.

The Doctor's Answer to the eighth Article being read unto her, she saith, that all the Circumstances mentioned in the said Answer, are all of them false and untrue.

Now as to this Deposition, what is further to be added, to give the Reader more Light to judge of both the Article and Deposition, is this:

NOT to speak any thing of the Levity and Rashness of this Woman, which is well known to the Inhabitants of Reading, and may make her Testimony the less to be valued; she in her rash Denial of the Circumstances of my Answer, confidently spake a known Untruth upon her Oath, and so made herself guilty of open Perjury.

Whereupon, when I came to make my Defence, to invalidate her Testimony, I presented four Witnesses, who were ready upon Oath to prove her perjured.

The first of these was one Mr. Richard Stockwell, esteemed by all moderate Persons that know him, to be a sober and pious Christian. Although he was excepted against by Mr. Fowler the Accuser, as an Erberist, as this subsequent Deposition sheweth.

Mr. Fowler being sworn, as to his knowledge of Mr. Stockwell, deposeth, That he conceives the said Stockwell is an Erberist; because that when the Deponent (being charged to be a Slanderer of him) did offer to make a publick Recantation, and to confess himself to be a Slanderer, in case the said Mr. Stockwell would deny the Doctrine and Opinion of Mr. Erbery, which he refused.

Notwithstanding which, the Commissioners would examine him, if the Doctor would ask him any material Question; but do not think fit to examine him to their due or undue taking of Mr. Grip's Examination, which the Doctor insisteth on.

Now let the Reader judge whether the Question was not material, which this Witness would have answered to by Oath, viz. Whether Mrs. Grip did not aver on Oath in open Court, That she never railed against Mr. Fowler? To this one Mr. Tench was ready also to be sworn in the Affirmative: there were also many others which heard it. And further, I had two more substantial Witnesses, who offered to swear they had heard Mrs. Grip rail against Mr. Fowler in publick Meetings before many Witnesses. Mrs. Eleanor Burleigh was willing to depose, That she heard Mrs. Grip say, That Mr. Fowler was a Son of Belial, &c. and one Mrs. Kent would have attested, that she heard her rail against Mr. Fowler in the same and the like Speeches, with much more. Now because the Clerk had not taken that Expression of hers, That she never railed against him, therefore the Commissioners made it their Pretence, of not examining the Witnesses to it, as a thing impertinent; though by the Attestation of that, with the Testimony of the other two Witnesses, she had been proved directly perjured. But Mr. Fowler the Accuser, being a great Friend of the Woman's, and seeing she was in danger to be proved perjured, and so an insufficient Witness in all her Testimonies, prevailed with the Court against the importunate, rational and legal Pleas of my Counsel, to reject these fore-mentioned Witnesses. The Unjustness, palpable Partiality and Illegality of which Action I leave to be weighed in the Ballance of Equity by the impartial Reader, who in Justice may esteem this Woman as really perjured, as though the Witnesses had proved it, and value her Testimony accordingly. And truly, some of the godly Party at Reading hearing with what Impudency and Rashness she affirmed on Oath she never railed against Mr. Fowler, confessed they could not but wonder at her, being it was so commonly known.

But, to conclude, let the Reader take notice, First, That this Article may be either true or false, according to the applying of it to particular Persons. Secondly, That though it were taken in the worst Sense, yet it were not within the Act of Scandal. Thirdly, That there was only one Witness to it, to whose Testimony what Credit is to be given, let the foregoing Particulars declare. Fourthly, That I had Witnesses ready to depose, That in the Tenour of my Ministry, I had often held forth Christ's Blood to be of a cleansing, redeeming and justifying Nature. Fifthly, That in my Answer to it, I have given the true Ground and Occasion of it.

Art. 5. Pish! there was no such thing as Persons in Trinity.

Depos. The former Susannah Grip saith, That the Doctor came into her Kitchin at another time, as she thinks, from the Committee, and said, That whereas Ministers spake of Persons in Trinity, there is no such thing; There are three that bear record in Heaven: but there is no such thing as Persons in Trinity—— Note, In that Scripture, 1 John 5. 7. would be added; and that in reference to the Terms, as it is in the Margin.

Now my Interrogatories to her upon this Article, were these: 1st, When I spake these Words? She saith, When I came from the Committee, which was two or three Years since, or thereabouts. 2dly, Before whom? She answereth, Whether her Maid, or any body else, or who was present, she doth not remember. 3dly, Being further asked, Whether this Expression was delivered without any further Limitation or Explanation? She replies, Without any, as she remembers

Now what I have more to add, to clear the Truth in reference to this Deposition, is this.

First, I refer the Reader to my Answer to this Article, in which you may see that I made a Relation to this Woman of what had passed before the Committee, where some Questions were proposed to me concerning the holy Trinity. Secondly, I had a Witness present to testify on Oath, That what I said before the Committee, was only this, That there was no such word as Persons in Trinity in that Text, 1 John 5. 7. a Relation of which I made to this Woman, who as it seems, mistaking my Meaning, comes now four Years after to accuse me; though at the very time she seemed to assent to what I spake, and made no Exception against it; nor so much as asked me to explain my self for her

Satis-

Satisfaction, though she had a very convenient Opportunity. Thirdly, She is but a single Witness, and her Testimony not positive, she adding, As she remembers. 'Fourthly, I desired the Commissioners 'to hear what my avowed Judgment was, from 'the Testimony of some Witnesses who were ready 'to depose what I had held forth in my publick 'Ministry, touching the Persons in the holy Trinity. But the Commissioners refused to examine 'the Witnesses, whose Evidence was this:

'We heard the Doctor in Bradfield Church (about 1653. from these words, John 1.14. The Word was made Flesh) deliver himself thus: For the understanding of the Person that was made Flesh, you must consider the unutterable Mystery of the holy Trinity; the Unity distinguishing it self into three Persons, the Father, Son and Holy Ghost: Mat. 28. 14. Baptizing them in the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. 1 John 5. 7. There are three that bear record in Heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost. Now which of these three Persons are made Flesh? 'Tis not the first Person, the Father, nor the third Person, the Holy Ghost; but it is to be understood of the Son, the second Person in the Trinity.

'We have also heard him out of these Texts, Ezek. 9. 4, 5, 6. Psalm 110. 1. Matth. 28. 19. 1 John 5. 7. deliver in Bradfield Church, the Distinctions of the Persons in the Trinity; as that the Father is not Son, nor the Son the Holy Ghost, and the Holy Ghost neither the Father nor the Son, but each distinct.'

So much for this Article.

Art. 6. That it was a Weakness to be troubled for Sin.

Depos. Mr. Benjamin Woodbridge, Minister of Newbury, sworn and examined, deposeth, That Mr. William Twiss of Dorchester told the Deponent, That Dr. Pordage maintained it to him, or spake in his Company, That he was no Christian that could not commit the greatest Sin, and not be troubled for the same; or Words to that effect, to his best Remembrance.

To this I replied before the Court:

I knew not the said Mr. Twiss, and to my knowledge I never saw his Face. Being then ingaged in the business of examining my Witnesses, I said not much to the Vindication of my self, as to this horrid Imputation; the Testimony being but a mere Hear-say, and the Deponent rendering it more invalid by these Expressions, viz. or Words to that effect, and, to his best Remembrance.

But I desire the Reader here to take notice of the Weakness or Envy of Mr. Woodbridge, that he should thus with a Hear-say only, which he himself did not exactly remember, thus endeavour to asperse me, and render me odious, when he saw there were so many horrid things laid to my charge before: but I believe he will one day be touched in his Conscience for dealing thus with me; for the Lord knows I am innocent as to the acting or holding of what he saith.

'I therefore (for the Satisfaction of the Reader) 'solemnly protest in the presence of Almighty God, 'that I never held any such Opinion; for it is diametrically opposite to my Principles: neither 'did I ever utter any such Expressions as my Judgment, and am confident, were that Mr. Twiss 'brought to my Face, he durst not aver any such 'thing.'

To the seventh Article nothing is deposed, being contrived and reported abroad by the Accuser, to draw an Odium upon me, as you may see in my Answer to it.

Art. 8. That he asserted he knew nothing to the contrary, but that a Man might company with more than one Woman, &c.

Depos. Susannah Grip saith, she told the Doctor, That she heard it was reported of him, he should keep unlawful Company with a Woman in London, and asked him, if it were true? To which the Doctor asked her, Who said so? The Deponent replied, She would not tell him. Whereupon the Doctor smiled, and was not troubled, but denied it, saying, No: but he made her a further Answer, That he did not disallow of any such thing, as she understood him. But what his expres words were, she cannot not remember.

Note, This last Clause makes all invalid, and shews her Rashness in swearing, that I did not disallow of any such thing; being she hath forgotten my words, by which only she can judge of my Sense.

And the Answer of the Doctor to this Particular being read to her, she thus replied: She doth not remember the Doctor uttered any such Passages as are therein mentioned; to wit, That he should say, I am a Man born to all manner of Sufferings.

It was further read to her, That the Deponent knew his Life and Conversation: This she could remember; and doth confess, she did then reply, she did not believe any such thing of him.

Being further asked by the Doctor, Whether this was expressed as his own Judgment, or the Judgment of some other? She thus replied; As far as she conceived, the Doctor did speak that Passage of allowing that a Man may have more than one Woman, as his own Judgment, not as another Man's.

Note, She did conceive amiss; for if ever I spake it, it was in reference to the Ranters, who then were much talked of: for such carnal Principles are very much against my Judgment, and questionless against the Truth.

Being further asked, Where it was spoken? she saith, In the Deponent's own Court: Being asked before whom? she answers, No body else was then present. Being asked when? she saith, it was about three or four Years since.

But let the Reader here take notice,

1. That this Article is not within the Limits of the Act. 2. That her Testimony is not legal, in that it is single and not positive, she confessing that she had forgot the expres Words. 3. That this is against my avowed Judgment; to prove which, besides my own Assertions, I had present three Witnesses, who were ready to depose, That I had often affirmed in Conference, That although this Principle was owned by the Ranters, yet it was much against my Judgment, as you may further see in my Answer.

Artic. 9. That he hath very frequent and familiar Converse with Angels.

Depos. Mr. Christopher Fowler of Reading, sworn and examined, deposeth, That about three Weeks or a Month since, he asked Mr. Daniel Blagrave the younger, whether he could not speak to the Doctor's Converse with Angels? He answered (as far as the Deponent remembers) he could speak much.

Mr. Fowler sworn again, and further examined, November 23. at the Bear in Reading, before the Com-

Commiſſioners, depoſeth, That about Michaelmas laſt, the Deponent ſpeaking with Mr. Daniel Blagrave the elder, concerning the Viſions of Angels that were at his Houſe, in reference to Mrs. Pindar; the Deponent told him, he the ſaid Mr. Blagrave was able to ſay much to the purpoſe, it being in his Houſe: and deſired him thereupon to ſpeak his knowledge of the Truth, both in point of Conſcience and Reputation, being cenſured for ſupporting ſuch a Man as Dr. Pordage.

The ſaid Mr. Blagrave anſwered, Why, the Doctor doth converſe with Angels; and I believe when he comes before the Commiſſioners, he will not deny but he doth converſe with Angels.

The Deponent thus replied to Mr. Blagrave, If the Doctor will confeſs them Angels, we will prove them Devils.

'Note, How full of Pride and Raſhneſs was this 'Speech of Mr. Fowler's, and how unſuitable to 'the Scriptures, and the Law of Charity? For 'there are two ſorts of Angels and Spirits, good 'and evil, light and dark, holy and wicked, which 'are continually tending upon Men in this World: 'the evil to tempt and draw Men into the ſame 'Condemnation with themſelves: the good, to 'guard and preſerve them from the evil Influences 'and malicious Deſigns of the other. But doth not 'the Accuſer ſeem to forget, that the Miniſtration 'of the holy Angels ſtill abides; who are miniſtring 'Spirits ſent forth to miniſter for thoſe who ſhall inhe-'rit Salvation? Heb. 1. 14. And the Pſalmiſt ſays, 'The Angel of the Lord pitcheth his Tent round about 'thoſe that fear him. How then dare Mr. Fowler 'affirm, that if I confeſs I have Communion with 'Angels, they will prove them Devils? How dare 'he thus limit the Holy One of Iſrael, and ſhut 'up his Favours within the narrow Limits of his 'own Conceptions and Enjoyments? And why 'may not God, for the Support and Comfort of 'ſome precious Saints, who in Humility, Self-'denial and Abſtractedneſs of Spirit, ſerve him 'Day and Night; I ſay, why may he not afford 'ſuch a ſweet and heavenly Converſe with the ho-'ly Angels? What Scripture is there that ſpeaks a-'gainſt it? Is it not ſuitable to what he afforded 'the Patriarchs, Prophets and Apoſtles, and the 'Primitive Chriſtians? But if my Accuſer lives ſo 'much in his Senſes, as to have no Senſe or Know-'ledge of it, yet why ſhould he thus raſhly condemn 'others?'

But the Accuſer proceeds in his Depoſitions:

And further, this Deponent ſaith, That he hath credibly heard ſomething tending to this purpoſe, That Doctor Pordage hath ſeen the Viſion of the ſaid Mr. Blagrave, ſomewhat a bright Viſion.

But here I put in a Queſtion, which was this: Mr. Chairman, I do confeſs in my Anſwer, Communion and Converſe with Angels; but pray ask Mr. Fowler, What Converſe with Angels Mr. Blagrave underſtood, viſible or inviſible?

To this the Deponent further ſaith,

That the entrance of this Diſcourſe with Mr. Blagrave, was in reference to Viſions that were ſeen with a bodily Eye; and mentioned the Viſions of Mrs. Pindar, that were by her reported to be ſuch. Upon this, he underſtood Mr. Blagrave, that the Purport of his Anſwer was a viſible Converſe with Angels.

And the Deponent further ſaith, That he delivered a Summons for Mr. Blagrave to atteſt theſe things in perſon, to Mr. Cook, one of the Commiſſioners, who ſent the Deponent word by Letter, that he had ſhewed the ſame to Mr. Blagrave, who hath notwithſtanding refuſed to appear.

And further, he ſpake thus in open Court againſt Mr. Blagrave, though the Clerk did not take it, viz. I do verily believe, ſuch a Judge as he was in this Caſe before, ſuch a Witneſs he would have been, were he now preſent: But I ſay, it was the Plague of this County to have ſuch a curſed Committee.

Note, Mr. Fowler here asked me ſome Queſtions to enſnare me, as, Whether I had not ſeen the Viſion of Mr. Daniel Blagrave? To which I anſwered, To this profound Queſtion I will anſwer when I ſee it atteſted upon Oath. And further asking me concerning Converſe with Angels; the Clerk took this Anſwer:

The Doctor doth confeſs that he hath daily Converſe with Angels: But he deſires Mr. Fowler to declare what Converſe with Angels Mr. Blagrave did inform that the ſaid Doctor had.

The Doctor doth further ſay, That he heard it credibly reported, that he hath every Day two Angels dreſſing of him: To which he added, That they that reported it to him, ſaid they had it from the Mouths of two godly Miniſters, that would not lye, viz. Mr. Fowler and Mr. Ford.

Note, I brought in this Story to ſhew the Vanity and Invalidity of ſuch Proofs as the Accuſer had before produced, as that he had credibly heard ſomewhat to that purpoſe, That I had ſeen the Viſion of Mr. Blagrave. And, for all the Accuſer knows, that which he heard ſo credibly reported might be as great an Untruth as that which I heard reported of my ſelf, as coming from him and his Brother Ford, whoſe Function ſeems very unſuitable to that of Lying and Slandering.

Afterward Mr. Fowler asked me again, Whether I had ſeen the Viſion of Mr. Daniel Blagrave? I anſwered, As long as it is atteſted only upon Report, I would not anſwer to it.

Art. 10, 11, 12, 13. Concerning the Apparitions of Spirits, and of a great Dragon.

Here I muſt entreat the Reader ſeriouſly to weigh the following Depoſitions, from which my Enemies have charged me to be a Conjurer and a Sorcerer; that ſo it may be ſeen whether they have any better ground thus to eſteem me, than they have to eſteem Job, who was terrified through Viſions; and Chriſt, who was tempted by Voice and Viſion in the Wilderneſs; and John, who in Viſions ſaw a great red Dragon, and terrible Locuſts go forth of the bottomleſs Pit, and three unclean Frogs, the Spirits of Devils, going forth to deceive the World; I ſay, than they have to eſteem theſe Conjurers and Negromancers for ſuch Sights.

But now to the Depoſitions:

Depoſ. Suſanna Grip, Wife of John Grip, of Reading, ſworn and examined, depoſeth, That the Doctor told her that a great many Spirits hovered about his Window, and kept a Noiſe; but the Doctor ſaid, He told the Company there ſhould come in but one at a time; and that a Dragon did come in with a long Tail, and great Eyes and Fangs, and did ſpit Fire at him.

And this Witneſs further ſaith, That his Angel ſtood by him in his own Shape, in the ſame Clothes, Band, and Cuffs, and did protect him.

Note, Where this Woman ſpeaks Truth, I ſhall not contradict her: But where ſhe miſtakes, I muſt inform inform the Reader of the Truth, and ſhew that ſhe raſhly ſwears Untruths. This then I told her, That I had an Angel of God that ſtood by me, aſſiſted me, comforted me, and protected me, when that dreadful Apparition was before me; and that the Dragon was then overcome.

And I further told her, That the Angel or Spirit of one Everard appeared in his own Shape, Clothes, Band, and Cuffs, &c. Which compared with Mrs. Grip's Depoſition, ſhews her Miſtake. This Everard I ſuſpected to be a Conjurer, and to be inſtrumental in the raiſing of thoſe Apparitions; though I was not ſo ſure of it as to proſecute him, or to ſwear he cauſed them: for the Devil may take up any one's Shape by God's Permiſſion, as it is generally thought he did Samuel's.

Further this Deponent ſaith, That the Doctor likewiſe told her, that Mrs. Pordage and Mrs. Flavel had their Angels ſtanding by them; and that he overcame the Dragon; and that he ſaid the Children ſaw the Spirits, and ſaid, Look there, Father! being not afraid, after they had faſted and prayed. And that the Doctor further ſaid, That the Spirits did afterward come into their Chambers, and drew the Curtains, and looked on them; but they would not take notice of them: And that the Spirits did come about three Days after he had faſted and prayed, and flaſhed open the Curtains, and looked upon them.

'Note, For three Weeks or a Month there were 'very many, and very ſtrange Apparitions; but 'the Curtains were never drawn but once, and 'that was by a Spirit in the Shape of Everard. 'For ſome other Particulars of this Depoſition, I 'do not remember whether I ſpake them or not.'

Depoſ. The Doctor being asked by Mr. Fowler, What he ſaith concerning the Apparition of the Dragon? the Doctor doth confeſs before the Commiſſioners, That he hath ſeen very many dreadful Apparitions of Devils at his Houſe; and that ſome of his Family did ſee them; and that a Dragon did come into his Houſe with a long Tail, and great Teeth: but that he ſaid his Angel did protect him, he denies. But he further ſaith, That about four Years ſince he had Apparitions both of good and bad Angels, for three Weeks together, at his own Houſe: But from that time to this, they have ceaſed in that manner.

Being further asked by Mr. Fowler, the Doctor doth deny that ever any Angel appeared in his Clothes, Band, and Cuffs; and further ſaith, That his Angel never did appear to him in any viſible Shape.

And being asked, Whether he ever ſaw Mrs. Pordage's and Mrs. Flavel's Angels ſtanding by them? he anſwereth, He never ſaw them ſtanding by them; but it doth not therefore follow that they might not ſtand by them: And though he can, yet he will not anſwer to any Queſtions, but ſuch as concern himſelf immediately.

And being further asked by Mr. Fowler, Whether he did not relate to Mrs. Grip that Mrs. Flavel and Mrs. Pordage had their Angels ſtanding by them? he anſwereth, He can neither affirm nor deny it; for he doth not remember whether he did, or no.

And being further asked by Mr. Fowler, Whether he did not relate to the ſaid Mrs. Grip that his Children ſaw the Spirits come into his Houſe, and cried, Look there, Father! and that the Spirits did often come into his Chamber, and drew the Curtains when they were in Bed?

To the firſt Part of the Queſtion he anſwereth, He cannot affirm or deny it; for in truth he doth not remember whether he did, or no. To the ſecond Part of the Queſtion he ſaith, He doth deny it poſitively; and he will prove the Depoſition to be Perjury.

And the Doctor being further asked whether or no he knows that the Children did ſee the Spirits come up and down the Houſe, or no; and whether they thereupon did ſay, Look there, Father!

To the firſt part of this Queſtion, he ſaith, He cannot know what the Eyes of Children do ſee; and otherwiſe he will not anſwer. And to the other part of the Queſtion, he anſwers, He cannot remember whether the Children did ſay ſo, or no; and therefore will neither affirm nor deny it.

2d Witneſs. Suſanna Grip, Daughter of the foreſaid John Grip, aged 21 Years, ſworn and examined, depoſeth;

That about three or four Years ſince, in her Mother's Kitchin ſhe heard Dr. Pordage ſay, That a Dragon came into his Chamber, and that he expoſtulated and contended with it; and that he ſaid the Dragon did ſpit Fire at him; and that his Angel did appear to him in the Shape of a Man, with his Band, and his Clothes, and Band-ſtrings, and did ſupport him while he contended with the Dragon. The Deponent further ſaith, That ſhe heard the Doctor ſay that the Spirits did come into his Chamber, and drew the Curtains, and looked upon him; and that the Doctor likewiſe ſaid they were affrighted at it at firſt, but afterward, when they were uſed to it, they were not.

She ſaith ſhe heard ſeveral other Things to this purpoſe, which ſhe cannot now remember to depoſe.

And being asked by the Doctor, whether the Doctor ſaid that the Angel that appeared with the Band and Band-ſtrings, was the Doctor's own Angel, or the Angel of ſome other? ſhe ſaith, To her beſt Remembrance, he ſaid it was his own Angel.

3d Witneſs. Elizabeth Benwell, Servant to Mr. Ellis of Shinfield, and formerly Servant to the Doctor, ſworn and examined, depoſeth;

That ſhe ſaw ſomething like a Star in the Red Chamber in the Doctor's Houſe by the Bed's Leg: It was light, and ſomewhat like a Star; but the Deponent cannot ſay it was a Star. Yet it was in the Night, and no other Light in the Room, to the beſt of her Remembrance.

She further ſaith, That ſhe hath heard Muſick at ſeveral times at the Doctor's Houſe, when ſhe did not know that any Inſtruments or Muſicians were in the ſaid Houſe. She ſaith ſhe hath heard it in the Kitchin, and in her Miſtreſs's Cloſet; did apprehend the ſame to be near her, but ſaw none playing.

She further ſaith, That Mrs. Flavel did uſually lie in the Doctor's Bed-chamber during the Time the Deponent was Servant there, which was about a Year and a quarter.

But immediately to this the Maid added, But I never lived in ſuch a Family for Piety and Holineſs, as that was; and I believe never ſhall again, except I return thither.

But this, by the Clerk's Knavery, was left out, although I ſtood by, and asked him why he did not write down thoſe Words. To which he replied, If you will have me, I muſt. I ſaid, I will have it. Yet he neglected it; and I believe by the Command of ſome of the Court, who were troubled at any thing that ſeemed to make for me:

me: But what Unjuſtneſs this was, let the Reader judge.

'But from theſe preceding Apparitions of Spi-'rits in my Family, in which we were merely 'paſſive, and by which we were excited the more 'to wait upon God in Prayer and Faſting, my Ene-'mies have ſcandalized me for Conjuration and 'Sorcery, reporting ſo confidently that I am a 'Conjurer, that many, who are not acquainted 'with my Principles and Converſation, believe it 'ſo in earneſt. But theſe horrid Scandals I take 'up as my Croſs, and ſee my ſelf in them conforma-'ble to Chriſt's Sufferings, who was reckoned 'amongſt Conjurers and Tranſgreſſors by the 'Jewiſh Zealots.

'But the Lord hath given me Peace in my Con-'ſcience, whilſt my Enemies have railed againſt 'me in their Pulpits, as Mr. Ford, in his Sermon 'at the Aſſizes held at Reading, Feb 28. 1653. 'In which, Page 22. he ſaith, That there is one 'of the moſt eminent Church-Livings in the Coun-'ty poſſeſſed by a Blaſphemer, and in whoſe Houſe 'the Devil is as viſibly familiar as any of the Fa-'mily; and ſhall the Horns of theſe Beaſts never 'be pared off by the Civil Magiſtrate?

'Here you ſee he endeavours to brand me for a 'Conjurer, and calls me Blaſphemer, exciting the 'Magiſtrate to perſecute me. And this was he 'who was choſen by the Commiſſioners to make a 'Speech in the Court before they gave Sentence 'againſt me, who there by envious Prevarication 'ſhewed himſelf a ſecond Tertullus, though no 'Orator.

Art. 14. That Mrs. Margaret Pindar acquainted with this Doctrine of Spirits, and pretending to be converted by Viſions of Angels, doth think ſhe was bewitched by them of Bradfield, &c.

Depoſ. Mr. Chriſtopher Fowler, ſworn to this Article, and examined, ſaith, That Mrs. Pindar, being asked by him, did acknowledge on Thurſday laſt, at London, that at Mr. Blagrave's Houſe, at Southcot, ſhe heard a great Noiſe of Drums and Trumpets; which Dr. Pordage (who was then ſent for to her) told her was the Alarum to the Spiritual War. And that one Night ſhe had the Viſion of young Mr. Daniel Blagrave come to her Bed-ſide, and ſhe took him by the Hand, which Hand felt cold; which Dr. Pordage expounded to her thus, That the Coldneſs of his Hand ſignified that he began to be cold to Vanity. And that ſhe asked the Doctor what the Viſions meant; and he replied to her, We do not uſe to reveal one another's Viſions.

The Depoſition taken on my behalf was this that follows:

MRS. Elizabeth Blagrave, Wife of Mr. Daniel Blagrave, ſworn and examined: This Deponent ſaith, She never heard Mrs. Pindar ſay that ſhe was bewitched by them of Bradfield; but the ſaid Mrs. Pindar told the Deponent that her Viſions were from God; and that the ſaid Mrs. Pindar told the Deponent ſhe never ſpake with the Doctor in her Life.

This Deponent further ſaith, That Mrs. Pindar told her ſhe had been at Mr. Fowler's Houſe; and that Mr. Fowler examined her touching her Viſions, and the Deponent asked her what ſhe ſaid: To which ſhe replied, She was ſure ſhe had ſaid nothing to him that could hurt the Doctor. Hereupon the Deponent asked her if ſhe told Mr. Fowler that the Doctor did ſend theſe Viſions? To which ſhe anſwered, She could not ſay the Doctor ſent them for a World.

This Deponent further ſaith, That Mr. Pindar told the Deponent that his Wife ſaid, when ſhe came to London, ſhe would not ſay what ſhe had ſaid to Mr. Fowler, if it were to do again; for ſhe perceived it was a Snare, or a Trap.

This Deponent further ſaith, She was by when the Queſtion concerning the Coldneſs of young Mr. Blagrave's Hand was put; and the Deponent asked it her ſelf to one in the Room: And the Anſwer was, That the Coldneſs of his Hand, as far as they knew, ſignified his dying to Vanity; which was delivered in a jeſting manner. Which Anſwer was not delivered by the Doctor. And the Deponent ſaith, The Doctor never gave ſuch an Anſwer in his Life, as ſhe knows.

Here follow the Depoſitions of John Grip of Reading, Joiner; who being ſworn and examined, depoſeth:

That he was at Mr. Blagrave's when Mrs. Pindar ſaw the Viſions that are mentioned in her Confeſſion; and that ſhe ſaid ſhe ſaw a Man in white, (as ſhe thought) with the Lamb's Book; and that the ſaid Man told her her Name was written in the Book; and that ſhe heard a Watch going; and that there appeared another in the Likeneſs of a black Man, with a Knife, which he offered unto her.

And this Deponent further ſaith, That at another time, at the Deponent's Houſe, the ſaid Mrs. Pindar did inform the Deponent that Dr. Pordage had ſaid he had power to beſtow the Gifts and Graces of the Spirit on whom he pleaſed.

Note, That this diſagreeth from Mrs. Pindar's Confeſſion, under the Head of the 14th Article, where ſhe ſaith that ſhe heard it reported at Southcot, That e'er long the Doctor ſhould have power —— to beſtow ſaving Graces on whom he pleaſed.

And this Depcnent further ſaith, That another time he was at Mr. Blagrave's Houſe, when the ſaid Mr. Blagrave was ill, and kept his Chamber; and Mr. Blagrave and the Deponent fell into Diſcourſe concerning Dr. Pordage in preſence of Mrs. Blagrave; that in the ſaid Diſcourſe Mr. Blagrave ſaid to his Wife, That the Doctor held ſtrange Opinions, ſuch as were not agreeable to the Word of God: for he did maintain that Jeſus Chriſt was not God; and that he was a Type, and but a Type; Man, and not God; a Shadow, and not the Subſtance. And Mr. Blagrave did labour very much to take off his Wife's Affections from the Doctor and his Ways; but could not prevail. This was about three quarters of a Years ſince, to the Deponent's beſt Remembrance.

In reference to theſe two laſt Particulars, touching Mr. Blagrave and his Wife, conſider this following Depoſition and Evidence.

MRS. Blagrave, ſworn and examined, depoſeth, That ſhe never knew any thing of the Doctor's Judgment; neither did he ever bring the Deponent into any Judgment; and that ſhe had never any Diſcourſe with the Doctor, till ſhe did firſt begin with him: and that if ever he had confirmed her in any thing, it was in nothing diſagreeable to the Word of God.

As to that part of the former Depoſitions, which concerns Mr. Blagrave's Relation of what Opinions I held, I had a Summons for his perſonal Appearance to witneſs the Truth in that Particular: But he being detained in London by earneſt Buſineſs, could not appear according to the Summons, and therefore wrote this following Letter to the Commiſſioners, which was exactly copied out by a Friend of mine, who had the Favour from Mr. Blagrave to read it.

Gentlemen,

UNderſtanding by this Bearer, Mr. Samuel Pordage, that one John Grip of Reading, upon his Examination againſt Dr. Pordage, did affirm upon Oath, That having Diſcourſe with me lately touching the Doctor's Opinions, I ſhould ſay that he denied that Chriſt was God; and that he held him to be a Man, and not God; a Type, and but a Type; a Shadow, and not the Subſtance: The Things are highly blaſphemous, if true. But this I aſſure you, if ever any ſuch Language fell from me, (which truly I do not remember) it was ſpoken as relating to that Charge he lay under at that time, raiſed by ſome who ſeem to know Mens Meanings and Opinions better than I do. In ſhort, this I do affirm, and ſhall readily atteſt upon Oath, when required, That the Doctor hath ſeveral times moſt ſolemnly avowed the contrary; and to me by Scripture, under his own Hand, evinced it: For the truth is, I have with much Boldneſs charged the Doctor with Things of that nature, having received them upon report. But upon Debate he hath given me ſuch clear Satisfaction, both touching the Divinity of Chriſt, and other Matters of Faith of the higheſt Concernment, that I have ſtood ſilent, having nothing to object againſt him. I did therefore apprehend it a Duty incumbent upon me thus to write; for as I will never be inſtrumental to clear him in what he is guilty, ſo not to condemn him wherein I believe he is innocent.

Thus, deſiring the juſt and all-knowing God to direct you in this great Work, I remain,

Gentlemen,

28 Novemb. 1654. Weſtminſter. Your Friend and Servant,

Dan. Blagrave.

I deſired that this Letter might have been read in the open Court: But they denied it, though I alledged that it was Evidence on my behalf. But whether this was not more conſiderable, and ſo more fit openly to be read, than Mr. Grip's Stories and Hearſays to be openly received as Evidence, let the Reader judge.

But Mr. Grip further on Oath depoſeth, That at other times he hath often had Conference with Mr. Blagrave: And at one time, above the reſt, walking over the Fields toward Southcot, we fell into Diſcourſe concerning Dr. Pordage; and the ſaid Mr. Blagrave did then tell him that the Doctor did go about to perſuade him to leave off all Imployment, and to ſell his Eſtate, and retire to his Houſe; for his Houſe was the Ark, as Noah's Ark was, to receive all thoſe that muſt be ſaved. This was ſome time the laſt Summer. And that Mr. Blagrave did ſeem very much to ſlight and ſcorn it, and asked the Deponent what he thought he ſhould have got by it, had the Doctor prevailed. To which the Deponent replied, That he thought the Doctor had a grand Deſign in it: For Mr. Blagrave being taken notice of to be one of the wiſeſt Men in the County, if the Doctor had prevailed to draw him away, he might likewiſe have drawn away moſt of the County; and then the Doctor would have ſet himſelf up like a Mahomet.

In oppoſition to this Story, Mrs. Blagrave, ſworn and examined, depoſeth, That ſhe had heard a Muttering that Mr. Grip ſhould ſay that the Doctor had perſuaded Mr. Blagrave to leave all, and come and live with him. Whereupon the Deponent asked Mr. Blagrave, about five or ſix Weeks ſince, concerning it; and the ſaid Mr. Blagrave anſwered to the Deponent, That he did not remember that the Doctor ever ſaid any ſuch thing.

This Deponent, John Grip, further ſaith, That Mr. Daniel Blagrave, the younger, told him, When the Spirit came upon the Doctor, he could leap over Pales of a great height, about five Foot and an half high, as the Deponent could conceive by his Relation; and that this was told him within five Months laſt paſt.

This Deponent further ſaith, That Mr. Charles Blagrave told him ſome time the laſt Summer, that Dr. Pordage ſhould ſay that Chriſt was not perfect; and that he quoted that Place of Scripture, mentioning our Saviour's Paſſion, when he cried out, My God, my God, &c. to prove the ſame.

Art. 28, 29. Concerning Mrs. Mary Pocock's Relation to Mrs. Forſter, of what was acted in my Houſe; and of Mrs. Flavel's being in a Trance, and ſeeing what was the Philoſopher's Stone.

The Depoſitions of Mrs. Mary Pocock, taken at the Bear in Speenhamland, November 30. before the Commiſſioners, for the Proof of the two former Articles.

MRS. Pocock, ſworn and examined, depoſeth: The Queſtion being asked, Whether the Deponent did not tell Mrs. Forſter and Mrs. Evelyn, That the Doctor had contended with the dark Power in his Shirt two or three Hours? ſhe anſwereth, It is ſo long ſince that ſhe cannot remember any thing poſitive ſhe then ſaid: But ſhe ſaith there was ſome great Power then amongſt the Doctor's Family.

And being asked, Whether ſhe did not ſay to the aforeſaid Parties, that when the Doctor contended with the dark Power, there was ſuch an Expoſtulation between them, as, Thou lyeſt; and thou lyeſt, &c. ſhe anſwereth, She cannot tell.

And being further asked, Whether upon this Conqueſt of the dark Power by the Doctor, ſhe did not tell the aforeſaid Parties ſhe ſhould think the Doctor to be a bright Man? To this Queſtion ſhe anſwereth, If ſhe did not ſay ſo, ſhe hopes ſhe ſhall, when he hath the Victory.

And being asked, Whether ſhe did not tell the aforeſaid Parties, the Doctor's Family were ſtrangely acted, ſome in their Legs, Thighs, and Arms? To this ſhe anſwereth, She cannot tell.

And being further asked, Whether ſhe did not tell the ſaid Parties, that Mrs. Flavel did ſee in a Trance the Philoſopher's Stone? ſhe ſaith, She cannot tell.

And

And being further asked, Whether the Philoſopher's Stone, ſeen by Mrs. Flavel in a Trance, were not the Divinity in the Humanity? ſhe anſwereth, She knows no ſuch Thing.

Art. 30. This conſiſts of ſeven Particulars, being the firſt that relates to Scandal in my Converſation.

Depoſ. Roger Laughton of Heſton in the County of Middleſex, Locksmith, ſworn and examined, depoſeth;

That about nine Years ſince, or upwards, Dr. Pordage brought to the Deponent's Houſe Mrs. Flavel behind him, under the Name of Mrs. Fruin; and that both the Doctor and the ſaid Mrs. Flavel did ask for Entertainment for her; and that they did ask what they ſhould give for her Board, and her Son Stephen's: and that they did bargain for eight Shillings a Week, and then he carried her away; and ſhe came not till after Chriſtmas. But he ſaith, How ſhe then came, whether in a Cart, with her Trunk and Clothes, or otherwiſe, he knoweth not; but the Doctor did not then come with her. And after ſhe had been there a while, the Deponent's Wife conceived ſhe was with Child; which ſhe denied, ſaying it was a Tympany. And that ſhe remained there till betwixt Eaſter and Whitſuntide, where and when ſhe was brought to bed of a Daughter; and ſhe did not deſire any ſtore of Company to come to her Labour, though the Deponent's Wife did deſire it. And after ſhe had been a ſhort time delivered, the Doctor came and baptized the Child in the Deponent's Chamber, and named it Hannah. And after that the Doctor called the Deponent aſide into his Orchard, and prayed him to find out a private Place, two or three Miles from the Deponent's Houſe, where the ſaid Mrs. Flavel might come now and then to ſee her Child. The Deponent ſaid it would be inconvenient, becauſe it was a Time of Soldiers, and the Corn was high; and thereupon the Deponent did not look out as he deſired. And he further ſaith, When the Nurſe did bring the Child oft-times to ſee the ſaid Mrs. Flavel, ſhe would not permit her Son Stephen to call her Siſter, ſaying, Stephen, it is Nurſe's Child. Afterwards the ſaid Mrs. Flavel departed from the Deponent's Houſe to Kenſington, where ſhe remained about a Month. And that the Deponent having occaſion to go to London, called at Kenſington by the way, to ſpeak with her; but ſhe was gone: Whereupon the Deponent ſaid her Child was not well. Then two Gentlewomen of the Houſe told the Deponent, that ſhe denied unto them that ſhe had any other Child but her Son Stephen. And the Deponent further ſaith, That the Doctor came to the Deponent's Houſe three or four times, in Term-time only: And that both the Doctor and the ſaid Mrs. Flavel did inform the Deponent that ſhe was married to one Mr. Fruin, a Miniſter; but was now a Widow, as both of them ſaid when they came to the Deponent's Houſe.

For the clearing of Truth, in reference to this Depoſition, I ſhall here annex the Confeſſion of the ſame Perſon, as ſubſcribed by him, and owned before two ſufficient Witneſſes; which is as follows.

THat about nine Years ago Dr. Pordage brought a Gentlewoman, by Name Mrs. Fruin, behind him from London, as he ſaid, to one Roger Laughton's Houſe, a Smith in Heſton Pariſh: That the ſaid Mrs. Fruin agreed with him her ſelf for her Boarding.

That ſhe told his Wife, at her firſt coming, ſhe knew not certainly whether ſhe were with Child, or not; but thought ſhe was.

That her firſt Husband's Name was Mr. Flavel; and that ſhe had had a ſecond Husband, by Name Mr. Fruin, who alſo was then dead.

That the Cauſe of her private living there was, in that her Brother-in-Law threaten'd he would have her Body, if it were above Ground, ſhe being then in Law with him.

That at the ſame time the Doctor owned that he dwelt at Reading; and that he was Miniſter of St. Lawrence Church; and that he knew the Gentlewoman to be ſober and godly.

That ſhe told him, for his Security, he might enquire at the Bulwark by the Tower of London; where he might know that ſhe had there an Eſtate in Houſes.

That after ſhe had been in the ſaid Roger Laughton's Houſe about four Months, ſhe was brought to-bed of a Girl, which was chriſtened by the ſaid Doctor, and named Hannah. That the Time of her Continuance with him was about three quarters of a Year; in which Time the ſaid Doctor viſited her ſome three times, or four at the moſt, and that in Term-time, when he went to London.

That by Enquiry he came to know ſhe was in great Troubles at Law.

That the ſaid Doctor never agreed with him, nor paid him for her Board, nor removed her, ſo far as he knows, to Kenſington from his Houſe.

R. L.

This was delivered into the Court after Laughton had finiſhed his Depoſition: But they would not ſuffer it to be enrolled among the Depoſitions, it in ſome Particulars croſſing Laughton's preſent Teſtimony, and in others, tending to clear the Truth, in reference to the Occaſion of Mrs. Flavel's being there. But the Accuſer asking him whether he would not ſtand to his preſent Depoſition? he ſaid, Yea. Whereupon the Clerk returning me the Paper again, wrote this at the bottom of it, Mr. Laughton acknowledgeth the two Letters, R. L. to be his Writing; but will ſtick to what he hath now depoſed.

'There was not a Word altered after he had 'ſubſcribed the Paper, as two Witneſſes then pre-'ſent could atteſt by Oath. Now the Particulars 'in which he croſſeth himſelf, cannot be all true. 'And if a Man will ſolemnly own and ſubſcribe 'an Untruth, he may after ſwear an Untruth: 'But the Confeſſion here wrote laſt is much to 'be regarded, being he owned and ſubſcribed it 'before the other, being then in a calm, ſober 'Poſture; but the other he depoſed after my 'Adverſaries had been a whole Day tampering 'with him at the Bear in Reading, and poſſeſſing 'him with Prejudice againſt me; which he open-'ly ſhewed in the Court by bitter Expreſſions, 'and by thoſe Circumſtances in the former Depo-'ſition, which tend to blaſt the Gentlewoman's 'good Name and Reputation.

'But for further Satisfaction, 1. I refer you to 'my Anſwer; in which I have largely ſhewed the 'Reaſons of her private Retirement there, which 'may in Juſtice clear me from that undeſerved Aſ-'perſion my Enemies have caſt upon me.

'2. Conſider that this, as to me, is no legal Proof 'of any Crime, but a mere circumſtantial Thing, 'brought to raiſe Suſpicions and Prejudices againſt 'me, being but of the nature of a Libel, and ſo 'unfit to have been received into a judicial Court: 'for whoſe Name and Reputation may not be 'blaſted, if ſuch libellous illegal Things, ſo long 'paſt, ſhould be received into Courts of Judicature 'as Accuſations to condemn them?

'3. Tho that Crime, which my Accuſer would 'render me ſuſpected for by this circumſtantial De-'poſition, had been ever ſo clearly proved, yet the 'Date of it (being nine or ten Years ſince) had 'put it quite out of the Cognizance of the Com-'miſſioners, not only by the Act of general Par-'don, but alſo by another Law, made particularly 'by the Parliament in reference to Things of this 'nature, which takes away all legal Guilt from 'any Perſons that are not accuſed within a Year 'after the Commiſſion of any ſuch Crime; beſides, 'the Act to which the Commiſſioners are confined, 'as their Rule to judge of Scandal, was made ma-'ny Years ſince. Therefore, I ſay, they neither 'had nor have Power to take a Buſineſs ſo long 'paſt, tho otherwiſe ever ſo criminal, into their 'Cognizance.

'But notwithſtanding theſe Things, the Com-'miſſioners ſent a Summons for Mrs. Flavel, tho 'they had no poſitive Charge againſt her; and af-'ter her Appearance, would have forced an Oath 'upon her, and examined her to Queſtions con-'cerning her ſelf. But ſhe, as in Juſtice ſhe might, 'refuſed to anſwer them, alledging, That if any 'one durſt lay any poſitive Crime to her Charge, 'ſhe would anſwer by the Mouth of her Lawyer. 'Whereupon the Commiſſioners threaten'd to ſend 'her immediately to Priſon, tho they durſt poſi-'tively accuſe her of nothing.'

Art. 33. That he is a very ignorant and inſufficient Man for the Work of the Miniſtry.

George Haſtlet, of Bradfield, Weaver, ſworn and examined, depoſeth, That he heard Dr. Pordage in a Sermon, in the Church of Bradfield, about two Years ſince, deliver, That it was a vain Thing to truſt in the Blood of him that died at Jeruſalem 1600 Years ſince, or more, unleſs it were acted in me, or in thee; for that was but in the Type, the Subſtance muſt be fulfilled in us: And that Chriſt muſt be crucified in us, we muſt have the Jews and Pilate to put him to death in us; otherwiſe it was a vain Thing to believe in him that died at Jeruſalem 1600 Years ſince without us.

'Note, As I own and embrace the Hiſtorical 'Birth, Life, Death, and Reſurrection of Chriſt 'without us, with the bleſſed Effects of them, 'clearly held forth in the Goſpel; ſo do I alſo be-'lieve the Myſtical Birth, Death, and Reſurrec-'tion of Chriſt in us, according to the Scriptures, 'Matt. 12. 50. Gal. 3. 1. Epheſ. 2. 5.

'And to ſay that both theſe are neceſſary to be 'known, at leaſt experimentally enjoyed by all 'that will be ſaved; and that it is vain to depend 'upon the firſt, without ſome Senſe and Feeling of 'the laſt, as it is to depend upon a notional Juſtifi-'cation, without a real Sanctification: I ſay, to 'aver this, is not againſt, nay, altogether accord-'ing to the Holy Scriptures; For we know that 'Chriſt Jeſus is in us, except we be Reprobates: And 'if we have not his Spirit, we are none of his.'

This Deponent further ſaith, That the ſaid Doctor, about a Month ſince, in Bradfield Church, did deliver, That doubtleſs the Apoſtles by that Text (Know you not that your Bodies are the Temple of the Holy Ghoſt?) did not mean theſe earthly Bodies.

'Note, I never denied our elemental Bodies to 'be the mediate Temples of the Holy Ghoſt, 'but the immediate: For the immediate Temple 'of the Spirit is the Image of God in us, which 'is renewed in Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs, 'and may truly be called the Body of Righteouſ-'neſs and Life, in oppoſition to that Body of Sin 'and Death, Rom. 7. 24. which hath many Mem-'bers, Coloſ. 3. 5. being the evil corrupt Inclina-'tions and Habits of the Old Man. This inward 'Body, which is the immediate Temple of the Spi-'rit, is called, Rev. 16. 15. our Garments, which 'we are exhorted there to keep, leſt we walk na-'ked; and the Armour of Light, Rom. 13. 12. 'which we are there commanded to put on, in op-'poſition to the Works of Darkneſs, which we are 'to caſt off. This may alſo be called our pure 'Fleſh, in oppoſition to that ſinful Fleſh ſpoken of 'Rom. 7. 18. And as in the laſt there dwells no 'good Thing, ſo in the firſt nothing but Good, 'being it is the immediate Tabernacle of the Ho-'ly Ghoſt, Joel 2. 28. I will pour out my Spirit upon 'all Fleſh.'

And this Deponent further ſaith, The Doctor did deliver, That by that Text (Gen. 18. 19. I know him, that he will command his Children and his Houſhold after him, &c.) was not meant the outward Houſhold of Abraham, but his inward Houſhold, his Will and Affections, which he was Lord paramount over; and he quoted that Text in the laſt of Joſhua, (As for me and my Houſe, we will ſerve the Lord) which he likewiſe ſaid was the inward Houſe, and not the outward. This was about two Years ſince, as far as this Deponent can remember. And the Deponent ſaith, He judged the ſame contrary to the Mind of the Holy Ghoſt.

'Note, Had the Commiſſioners allowed me ſo 'much Time as to have brought in what Evidence 'I could againſt this Man's Depoſition, I ſhould 'have proved, that in the Tenor of my Miniſtry I 'never denied or rejected the hiſtorical or literal 'Senſe of the Scriptures, for which there can be 'no juſt Ground; but that I have uſually joined 'the literal and allegorical Interpretation toge-'ther, even as Paul doth, Gal. 4. 24, 25, 26. which 'ſweetly united, cannot but make an amiable Har-'mony. And the Deponent miſtakes, in ſaying I 'excluded the Hiſtory; for I had before opened it 'in the plain hiſtorical Senſe, and afterwards came 'to open it myſtically, in making a ſpiritually mo-'ral Uſe of thoſe Scriptures, in applying them to 'the Work of God upon the inward Man.

'Let the Reader further know, That the Com-'miſſioners could not in Juſtice take this as Evi-'dence againſt me, becauſe it was all brought the 'very Day of my Sentence, I having no Time al-'lowed me to make my Defence by the Teſtimo-'nies of ſome other that conſtantly hear me, who 'might have certified this Deponent's Miſtakes, in 'miſrepreſenting both my Words and Meaning, 'by ſhewing I excluded not the literal Meaning 'of the Texts produced. 2. In regard I objected 'againſt him as a Drunkard, and ſo an inſufficient 'Witneſs. 3. In that there was no concurrent 'Teſtimony. 4. In that he wrote not this down, 'and ſo could not exactly deliver ſo much Word for 'Word, as I ſpake it, eſpecially ſo long after ſome 'part of it was delivered, and ſo by a little Miſ-'take might prevaricate my Senſe and Meaning.

This

This Deponent further ſaith, That Goodwife Knap told him about a Month ſince, that ſhe being at the Doctor's Houſe, Mrs. Flavel was very angry with her, and threatned to have her whipt, for ſaying the Child Hannah was Mrs. Flavel's Child; and that ſhe then denied ſhe had any other Child except Stephen her Son. And that when the ſaid Goodwife Knap denied ſhe had ſaid any ſuch thing, and began to be outrageous, both old and young Mrs. Pordage deſired her to be pacified, ſaying, Happily it might be another Woman might ſpeak ſo.

'Note, The Woman here mentioned hath under 'her Hand, before Witneſs, denied what the De-'ponent here relates of her; ſo that either the 'Deponent is perjured, or this Woman aſhamed 'to ſtand to ſo groſs an Untruth, as the Deponent 'pretends ſhe related to him. But the Sentence 'being given the day in which this Depoſition was 'taken, I had not time to bring this Woman face 'to face to the Deponent, ſo to ſee where the 'Guilt of Perjury, or a lying Slander lay. Tho 'as to the Strength of this Teſtimony, there was no 'ſuch thing neceſſary, it being a mere Hear-ſay.'

Art. 34. The Teſtimony of Richard Sawood, who was neither ſworn nor examined in publick Court.

I came into Bradfield-Parſonage in the Evening, Septemb. 9. 1650. and there I heard a very mournful Cry, as if it had been one in extreme Pains; but who it was, I knew not, for it continued all the time I was at the door, which was well near a quarter of an hour; and ſo it continued when I went away. And then on the tenth day in the Morning I came to Mr. Francis Pordage, at the Parſonage of Stanford-Dingley, and he inquired of me, what I did think of the noiſe that I heard? I told him, I could not tell. Then he related to me, that the Lord was about a great Work in this Kingdom, and to this Nation. And the Cauſe of this Cry was one in Travail, and the Pains were ſo extreme, that had I ſtaid there but a little longer, I might have heard it as far as the Town; but now ſhe was delivered of a Man-Child, and the Travail was at an end, and that he and others were Witneſſes of it.

Mr. Pordage, Miniſter of Stanford-Dingley, ſworn and examined to the former Depoſition of Richard Sawood.

This Deponent being asked, Who it was that was in Travail of the Child in the ſaid Depoſition mentioned, and what became of it? To this Queſtion he anſwereth, That it was one Mrs. Flavel. And he further ſaith, That above four Years ſince, Mrs. Flavel was very earneſt in Prayer, on a day when they were faſting; which was at the time when one Sawood came to the door: the ſaid Sawood knocking, the Deponent went to the door to him. And he ſaith, he doth acknowledge that Richard Sawood did come to him (about the time mention'd in the Examination of the ſaid Sawood) to the Parſonage of Stanford; and he ſaith, it is probable he did ask the ſaid Sawood, what he did think of the Noiſe he heard in the Doctor's Houſe the day before? And that when the ſaid Sawood anſwered to this foregoing Queſtion, He could not tell, it is very probable the Deponent did relate to him, that the Lord was doing a great Work in this Kingdom, and to this Nation; and doth confeſs, that unadviſedly he told the ſaid Sawood, that the Cauſe of the foreſaid Cry was one in Travail; but doth not remember he ſpake any ſuch thing, as that the Pains were ſo extreme, as that, had he ſtaid longer, he might have heard it as far as the Town: but doth confeſs, that he ſaid ſhe was in Travail of a Man-Child, and that he and many others were Eye-witneſſes of it.

And being asked who it was that was in Travail? he anſwered, Mrs. Flavel. And being further asked, what became of this Man-Child? he anſwereth, It was the Birth, Death, and Reſurrection of Chriſt in her Nature. And being asked, How the Birth, Death, and Reſurrection of Chriſt, in the Nature of Mrs. Flavel, was ſo great a Work, that God was doing to this Nation? he anſwereth, He never ſaid any ſuch thing. And being further asked, Whether himſelf (being demanded what this Man-Child was) did not anſwer, The Child of Reformation? to this he anſwereth negatively.

He further ſaith, That this Travail of a Man-Child was not any natural Birth of a Child out of the Womb; but the Cry that was then made, was nothing elſe but the Groanings and Interceſſions of the Spirit in her Prayer.

'Note, This laſt part is the real Truth of the 'Buſineſs, which I could have proved by many Wit-'neſſes more, who were preſent in my Houſe at 'the time, and whom I had ready before the Court, 'to atteſt upon Oath, that there was no natural 'Travail, nor any natural Birth, nor any ſuch 'Child born; but only the Gentlewoman was 'then very earneſt in Prayer. But this was thought 'ſuperfluous, being that the Deponent Mr. Pordage, from the miſtake of whoſe Diſcourſe this 'came to be made an Article againſt me, cleared 'the Buſineſs himſelf by Oath. But how my 'Name hath ſuffered from this groundleſs Buſineſs, 'is known very well, both to my Friends and 'Enemies; ſome of which, as the Accuſer Mr. 'Fowler for one, in open Court, ſcoffed at me, 'threatning to prove great things againſt me from 'this Depoſition of Sawood's.'

To the 35th and 37th Articles;

Mr. John Tickle of Abingdon, ſworn again, and further examined, depoſeth, That a Summons being iſſued for the Appearance of Suſanna Day, the Meſſenger went for her, and met with her on Tueſday Night laſt, being the fifth Inſtant, at the Deponent's Houſe, and that ſhe was willing to come, and could not in regard of her Diſtemper at preſent: but the ſaid Suſanna having reported to ſeveral People in Abingdon, and particularly to the Deponent's Wife, that ſhe was at Dr. Pordage's Houſe, and that the People there told her her Eyes were opened, and ſhe ſaid ſhe ſaw at that time the New Jeruſalem to come down from Heaven all of precious Stones, and ſo on, according as in the Article.

The ſaid Suſanna told the Deponent on the ſaid Tueſday Night, That the laſt time ſhe was at the Doctor's Houſe, ſhe ſaw the New Jeruſalem to come down from Heaven, a City four-ſquare, with Borders and precious Stones. And being asked, whether it was not her Fancy only? ſhe anſwered, ſhe ſaw it really.

The Deponent ſaith, That he asked the ſaid Suſanna, whether ſhe ſaw any Angels in the Doctor's Houſe? to which ſhe anſwered, No. But ſhe ſaid the Doctor's Daughter did ſee two Angels holding a golden Crown over her head.

Thus have I finiſhed this laſt Charge of Articles, being in number 37. Of theſe, 21 were paſſed paſſed by without any Depoſitions brought to prove them; and of thoſe Articles to which ſomewhat was ſaid to prove them, moſt part was atteſted but by Hear-ſays and Reports from others; as the Depoſitions of Mr. Fowler the Accuſer, of Mr. Woodbridge, Mr. Tickle, and John Grip, clearly ſhew; which cannot be accounted ſo much as concurrent Teſtimonies, being they are not any way Teſtimonies in Law. The reſt were atteſted but by a ſingle Witneſs, (except thoſe of Viſions and Apparitions, which I acknowledged myſelf, and which are no way criminous, nor under the cognizance of thoſe Commiſſioners) viz. Mrs. Grip, who in her Teſtimony is not wholly poſitive, tho ſhe did ſwear very deſperately to two or three of the Articles; the Particulars of which are no way included in the Act of ſcandalous Opinions, as to their Nature or Time: for as to the laſt, I was ſo far from being accuſed within ſix Months after the pretended ſpeaking thoſe words, as it was four Years before they were alledged againſt me. Beſides, this Woman ſpeaking an Untruth upon Oath, was really perjured, and had been ſo proved, had I had juſt dealings from the Commiſſioners; whence in equity her Teſtimony is to be accounted invalid, as in Law it might have been, had my Witneſſes been but examined, who were ready to prove it.

Now as to that Article of Ignorance and Inſufficiency, I have before ſhewed, That the Depoſitions of George Haſtlet, brought to prove it, cannot in Juſtice and Equity weigh any thing to condemn me, for the Reaſons before expreſſed.

And now let the Reader conſider, whether Mr. Fowler was not very raſh, to proclaim in the open Court at Newbury, That if he did not prove the greateſt part of theſe Articles, he would be accounted a Slanderer. Which Title, whether he deſerves or not, I leave to the Judgment of the judicious Reader.

But to proceed; The Depoſitions on both ſides being ended, I preſented into the hands of Mr. Dunch the Chairman, this following Proteſtation, to be read publickly before the Court and the People; but they privately conſulting of it, would not ſuffer it openly to be read, but ſuppreſſed it, as before they did Mr. Blagrave's Letter.

My Proteſtation was this:

I John Pordage do ſolemnly avow and proteſt, before the all-ſeeing Eye of Almighty God, That I do maintain, hold, and embrace theſe following Principles of Divine Truth, as my real and avowed Judgment.

1. That there is a Trinity of Perſons in the Unity of the Divine Eſſence, viz. The Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, diſtinct from each other.

2. That Chriſt is God, coeternal, coeſſential, and coequal with the Father, and therefore Jehovah.

3. That Chriſt is a perfect Saviour and Redeemer of his Church, and ſo more than a Type.

4. That Chriſt's Righteouſneſs is a moſt holy, pure, ſpotleſs, compleat, and perfect Righteouſneſs for the Satisfaction of loſt Sinners.

5. That the Blood of Chriſt is not only redeeming and ranſoming, in reference to Hell and Damnation, but alſo purchaſing in reference to Salvation, as having purchaſed an open Gate and Way to Glorification and Life eternal for purified Saints.

6. That all Arts of Necromancy, and black Magick, all Compacts with evil Spirits, whether explicit or implicit, direct or indirect, are unlawful, being againſt the Holy Scriptures, and never looked into or practiſed by me; but, on the contrary, abominated, even as they are to be deteſted and abhorred, not only by all Chriſtians, but by all Mankind.

7. That Polygamy, and all ſuch Practices that tend to the indulging of the Fleſh, are contrary to the Mind of God, and not to be owned by Chriſtians.

I do moreover diſown and reject theſe ſubſequent Poſitions, which are contrary to the former Principles.

1. As to maintain that there is no ſuch thing as Perſons in the Holy Trinity.

2. That Chriſt is not God; That Chriſt is not Jehovah.

3. That Chriſt was not perfect, and that he is no more than a Type.

4. That Chriſt's Righteouſneſs is a poor, vain, empty, and ſapleſs Righteouſneſs.

5. That the Blood of Chriſt is not meriting and redeeming Blood, or that it is a poor thing to live upon the Blood of Chriſt.

6. That it is lawful to have Communion with evil Spirits, or any Compact with them, explicit or implicit.

7. That it is lawful for a Man to keep company with more Women than one.

Now this moſt ſolemn Proteſtation I make in all Humility and Reverence before the Divine Majeſty, the Omnipreſent God, the Searcher of all Hearts, and from a true Intention, without any Veil or Covering, as I ſhall anſwer it at the great Day, when the Secrets of all Hearts ſhall be revealed. And now if you my Judges have not ſo much as a Grain of Faith, to believe this my cordial and ſolemn Proteſtation; let God, Angels, Saints, and all here preſent, bear witneſs that I have left every one of you inexcuſable.

And now having performed what I could, and what I thought myſelf obliged to do in reference to the Vindication of that pure Truth I own and live to; I am as ready to receive any Sentence from you, whether of Acquitment or Ejectment, as you are to deliver it.

'Now altho the Commiſſioners would take no 'notice of this ſolemn declaring of my Judgment, 'yet it is of great moment, as you may ſee by 'that Paſſage in the Ordinance, by which the 'Commiſſioners are to act, pag. 613. where it runs 'thus; Such Miniſters ſhall be deemed and accounted 'ſcandalous in their Lives and Converſations, as ſhall be 'proved guilty of holding and maintaining ſuch blaſphemous and atheiſtical Opinions, &c. In which you 'ſee the time preſent is only reſpected: what 'then have the Commiſſioners to do to judge 'any for things many Years paſt, tho then guilty, 'as I never was, if now they diſown them, and 'own the contrary as their Judgment?'

But to proceed in relating the Tranſactions of the laſt Day of Tryal: After the Particulars before recited, Mr. Dunch the Chairman ſaid to me, If Mr. Starkey (being of Counſel for me) had any thing to preſent on my behalf, he might have liberty to ſpeak. Whereupon Mr. Starkey being deſired by me, recited all the Evidence, with much Acuteneſs, Method, and Judgment; ſhewing, That if they ſquared their Proceedings by the Rules of Law they were to act by, they could have no ground to give Sentence againſt me: which he demonſtrated ted ſo clearly, by enumerating both the Teſtimonies on both ſides, and alſo the particular Laws and Privileges which freed me from the Imputation of any legal Guilt, that many, tho prejudiced Perſons, were much ſtaggered, doubting of the Iſſue in reference to Sentence. But after this Speech, we were all commanded to withdraw; and about an hour and a half after, we were called in again, and the Regiſter was commanded to proceed to Publication. Whereupon all the Depoſitions on both ſides were read: which being done, Mr. Ford was ordered by the Commiſſioners to make a Speech in juſtification of their intended Sentence againſt me; which Office he performed as wretchedly, as he undertook it willingly, miſrepreſenting the Evidence with confuſed Paraphraſes and Miſtakes, labouring to refute the Law of my Counſel's Speech, with ſuch Aſſertions as theſe, viz. That altho many of the Proofs brought againſt the Doctor, were not Proofs according to Law; yet to the Commiſſioners, who are a Court of Equity, and of an Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction, and ſo not obliged to judge according to poſitive Laws and Statutes, they were, and might be eſteemed ſufficient Proofs.

'Many ſuch Speeches as theſe he uſed, contrary 'to the Liberty of the Subject, the Rule of Rea'ſon and Scripture, endeavouring to perſuade the 'People, I was as monſtrous, as he and ſome o'thers had repreſented me in their Pulpits and 'Diſcourſes: but I ſhall ſay no more of him and 'his Speech, leaving them both to the righteous 'Judge of all things, who one day will juſtify, 'whom he and others of his way have condemned.'

After this Speech of Mr. Ford's was ended, I deſired liberty of Mr. Dunch, the Chairman, to ſpeak ſomething to the People, in reply to ſome things Mr. Ford had untruly ſaid againſt me: but it would not be permitted.

Then I deſired them to receive in this my laſt Requeſt, and to weigh it ſeriouſly, before they proceeded to Sentence; which tho it was returned into my hand again before it was read, I ſhall here preſent, for the Satisfaction of the judicious Reader.

Gentlemen,

BEfore you proceed to Judgment, and paſs Sentence, I deſire you ſeriouſly to conſider theſe ſubſequent Particulars.

1. That I was according to Law acquitted of that Charge atteſted by Mr. Tickle, whence I produced my Diſcharge before you, which according to the Judgment of judicious Lawyers is undoubtedly legal, and will hold good, notwithſtanding all Pretenſions to the contrary.

2. That the Matters of the ſame Charge are acknowledged by the Witneſs to have been ſpoken a Year before that Act was made, intitled, An Act againſt ſeveral Blaſphemous Atheiſtical Opinions; to which the Commiſſion refers, as the Rule to judge of ſcandalous Opinions, which make a diſtinct Head from Matters of Ignorance and Inſufficiency, according to the Tenour of the Commiſſion.

3. That the ſame Act cannot take into cognizance any Crime for which the Offender was not accuſed within ſix Months after the committing of it; therefore nothing in either the firſt or laſt Charge that hath been any way proved, can be judged as an Offence againſt that Act.

4. In reference to my third or laſt Charge, there hath been nothing directly proved againſt me; but ſome Words and Expreſſions dropt from me in a private Diſcourſe to one ſingle Witneſs: which Expreſſions, as you ſee, are capable of a harmleſs Interpretation, being never owned in that ſenſe the Witneſs took them, as my avow'd Judgment, but ſolemnly diſowned, as contrary to it, and therefore incapable legally to prejudice me; for the former Act doth not make one an Offender for a Word, but for avowedly maintaining or holding forth in Words or Writing, any thing there prohibited.

5. That in reference to thoſe Words in both my Charges, which have been any way proved to have fallen from me, I never owned them as my Judgment, in that ſenſe my Accuſer takes them; but have openly denied and diſowned them: which therefore cannot render me guilty, either by the Law of that former Act, or by the Law of Scripture, which denounceth Judgment againſt thoſe who make a Man an Offender for a word, Iſa. 29. 20, 21. which deſerves your ſerious Conſideration.

6. That the particular Articles both of my firſt and laſt Charge, that ſeem to be of worſt conſequence, cannot juſtly be brought within the cognizance of that Act, according to the literal and genuine Scope of it; being chiefly made againſt the Principles and Practices of theſe call'd Ranters.

7. That nothing of Scandal in Life and Converſation being proved againſt me, my free owning and confeſſing the Appearance of evil Spirits for ſome time in my Family, permitted by God, oppoſed and overcome by the Chriſtian Weapons of Prayer and Faſting, ought not in Equity to prejudice any againſt me, ſo as to ſway them in their Sentence or Judgment; I having cordially, ſolemnly, and ſincerely proteſted my Innocency, as to any Communion or Compact with evil Spirits: and that you would conſider that things of this nature, tho criminous, are not under the cognizance of the Act, but to be try'd by the Common Law, according to the uſual Cuſtom of this Nation.

8. That the Act of general Pardon doth clearly take away all legal Guilt from things done or ſpoken before 1651, that are not excepted in the ſaid Pardon. Now the Particulars of my firſt Charge, and all thoſe of my third or laſt, which ſeem to be of moment, and to be any way proved, were ſpoken or done before the Year 1651. Now this being the poſitive Judgment of able Lawyers, who have ſeen it experienced in things of more dangerous conſequence, may give you the Commiſſioners ſufficient ground of ſerious Reflections upon it.

9. That (according to the Judgment of wiſe, judicious, and knowing Men, your Commiſſion having been long ſince, and being now again under Conſideration and Debate, whether to be confirmed or altered) you the Commiſſioners in the interim have not compleat Power to act, eſpecially in reference to Sentence, Judgment, and Execution: which I believe is the reaſon why ſo few of the Commiſſioners have ſate, and why others that were at firſt ſo earneſt in their Proceedings, have ſince withdrawn themſelves.

10. That in reference to Judgment and Sentence concerning me, Scandal ought to be preſerved as an abſolute diſtinct Head from Ignorance and Inſufficiency, according to the Letter of your Commiſſion, miſſion, and the undoubted Judgment and Intent of the Authors.

11. That the Teſtimony of any one, tho by Oath, concerning what another related to him touching a third Perſon, (i. e. the Defendant) is no Proof at all according to Law, being not ſo much as concurrent Teſtimony, if the Defendant deny it, and do not own it himſelf: Moreover, That the Teſtimony Mr. Fowler gave, is not legally valid; becauſe, beſides the former Reaſon, he is the Accuſer, and incapable to be witneſs, according to Law.

12. That in the Day of Sentence, Mr. Dunch and Mr. Trapham cannot by Law ſit as Judges, becauſe they condemned me long before Proof; threatning me before Witneſs, to turn me out of my Living, at the ſitting of this Parliament; and the laſt was a Witneſs againſt me. That Mr. Fowler, Mr. Woodbridge, and Mr. Tickle, cannot by Law ſit as Aſſiſtants to the Judges, or give their Votes in the Day of Sentence; the one being my Accuſer, the other two Witneſſes againſt me.

After I had delivered this to be read, and had received it again, we all withdrew; and about two hours after were called in again: when the Room being full of People, one Mr. Lee a Miniſter, the graveſt Man amongſt them, began a very formal Speech to me, in which he very rhetorically expreſſed what a grief and trouble it was to them to paſs Sentence againſt me, and that he durſt not judge that I then was guilty of holding thoſe monſtrous Tenents I was accuſed of; yet they muſt proceed ſecundum Allegata & Probata. Afterward he proceeded to give me many Exhortations and ſecret Reproofs, in which he with much Artifice made me guilty of all I was accuſed of. Whereupon, after I had heard him for a pretty ſpace, being very ſenſible of his diſguiſed prejudicing Diſcourſe, and his Deſign in it, I was forced to ſtop him, by replying, That if he had any brotherly Exhortations to give me, he might come in private with me: but thus to pretend to admoniſh and exhort me, yet really to repreſent me as guilty of all I was accuſed of, and that before the People, was the Cuſtom of the Scribes and Phariſees, who were wont to hide foul Deſigns under fair Colours, witneſs their Dealings with Chriſt. Whence I deſired him to ſpare his Admonitions, and to leave off twiſting ſuch ſilken Halters, ſaying, I was prepared for Sentence, and that I deſired him and the reſt to take heed of condemning and betraying the Innocent. Upon this, the Man being ſtruck ſomewhat ſilent, Mr. Dunch the Chairman commanded the Regiſter to do his Office; who preſently read the Sentence of my Ejectment in the open Court, which was then very brief, tho afterwards enlarged with many circumſtantial Aggravations, and great Untruths; as this following Copy ſent to me from the Clerk, on the next day after my Sentence, clearly ſhews.

Berks ſſ. By the Commiſſioners appointed by Ordinance of his Highneſs the Lord Protector and his Council, for ejecting of Scandalous, Ignorant, and Inſufficient Miniſters and School-Maſters. Reading, Dec. 8. 1654.

WHereas ſeveral Charges have been exhibited to us againſt Dr. John Pordage, Rector of Bradfield in this County, who hath given in ſeveral Anſwers in writing thereunto; and thereupon we have proceeded to Examination of ſeveral credible Witneſſes upon Oath, for proof of the ſaid Charges in open Court; which Witneſſes the ſaid Doctor hath been permitted fully and freely to croſs-examine: And the ſaid Doctor hath been required to produce his Witneſſes for his Juſtification, and to bring in his Interrogatories, upon which he would examine his ſaid Witneſſes, and hath had day after day aſſigned him for that purpoſe; but notwithſtanding hath peremptorily refuſed ſo to do, perſiſting in his own way, and refuſing to obſerve our Direction in his proceeding; and hath publickly, by his evil and contumacious Expreſſions, ſlighted and affronted the ſaid Commiſſioners, and inſtead of producing his Interrogatories in writing, according to our Order, he hath now verbally offer'd ſeveral Queſtions, which he deſires to have propounded to ſeveral of his ſaid Witneſſes, which the Commiſſioners (upon conſideration of) have judged impertinent to clear him from the Matters charged againſt him, but merely to delay and weary out the ſaid Commiſſioners; and therefore they have examined only to two of the ſaid Queſtions, which they conceived might ſomewhat tend to his Juſtification: And upon full hearing what the ſaid Doctor could ſay, and Mr. Starkey, of Counſel in his behalf, upon the whole matters; and upon due Conſideration, it appeareth that the ſaid Doctor is guilty of denying the Deity of Chriſt, and the Merit of his precious Blood and Paſſion; and hath aſſerted and maintained, That Chriſt was a Type, and but a Type, and not perfect, and that his imputative Righteouſneſs was ſapleſs, and ſeveral other helliſh Opinions; and is otherwiſe ſcandalous, as by the ſaid Depoſitions may more fully appear. And it is likewiſe declared, under the Hands of ſix of the ſaid Commiſſioners, and ſeveral Miniſters their Aſſiſtants, That upon the Matters proved againſt him, the ſaid Dr. Pordage is ignorant, and very inſufficient for the Work of the Miniſtry. It is therefore ordered, That the ſaid Dr. Pordage be, and he is hereby ejected out of the Rectory of Bradfield aforeſaid, and Profits thereof: But the ſaid Commiſſioners do grant him time to remove himſelf, Family, and Goods and Chattels out of the ſaid Parſonage-Houſe, till the ſecond of February next; and further time to remove his Corn out of the Parſonage-Barns, till the 25th of March next.

A True Copy, Mat. Langley Regiſt.

The

The Tryal of the Honourable Colonel JOHN PENRUDDOCK, 19 April, 1655. 7 Car. II.

UPON Thurſday the 19th of April 1655, the Commiſſioners of Oyer and Terminer being ſat in the Caſtle of Exon, ſummoned before them myſelf, Mr. Hugh Grove, Mr. Richard Reeves, Mr. Robert Duke, Mr. George Duke, Mr. Thomas Fitz-James, Mr. Francis Jones, Mr. Edward Davis, Mr. Thomas Poulton, and Mr. Francis Bennet. Being all called to the Bar, we were commanded to hold up our Hands, and an Indictment of High Treaſon was read againſt us: and being asked whether we would plead Guilty or Not Guilty to the Indictment, in the behalf of myſelf and of the Gentlemen therein charged, I ſpake as followeth.

Col. Penruddock. My Lords, tho my Education hath been ſuch, as not to give me thoſe Advantages which the Knowledge of the Laws would have aſſiſted me with, for the defending myſelf; yet upon the hearing this very Indictment, my Reaſon tells me that it is illegal: and therefore I do demand Counſel, that may diſpute the Illegality thereof.

Serjeant Glyn. Sir, you deſire that which cannot be granted; therefore give your Anſwer, whether you are Guilty or Not Guilty of the Treaſon of which you ſtand charged.

Col. Pen. Sir, by your favour, it is that which hath been granted to my Inferiours, viz. to Mr. Lilburne, and to one Rolf a Shoemaker; and I have as great a Right to the Laws, as any Perſon that ſits here as my Judge: I do therefore challenge it as my Right. Judge Nicholas, whom I there ſee, will tell you he himſelf was Counſel for this Rolf: and it is a hard caſe, if a free-born Gentleman of England cannot have the ſame Privilege that his Inferiours have had before him.

Attorney-General. Sir, there is a great difference between Treaſon acting and acted; the latter is your Caſe: therefore flatter not yourſelf, and do not think your being mute ſhall ſave your Eſtate in caſe of Treaſon; for if you plead not to the Indictment, Sentence will be pronounced againſt you, as if you had been found guilty of the Fact you are charged with.

Col. Pen. Sir, I obſerve your Diſtinction: but all the Logick you have, ſhall not make me nor any rational Man acknowledge, that this was either acting or acted, before it be proved. Sir, it is but a bare Suſpicion, and I hope you will not condemn me before I am convicted: I ſay the Indictment is illegal, and I do demand Counſel.

At. Gen. Sir, the Court muſt not be dallied withal: I do peremptorily demand of you, Are you Guilty or Not Guilty? If you plead, you may have favour; otherwiſe we ſhall proceed to Sentence.

Col. Pen. Sir, put caſe I do plead, ſhall I then have Counſel allowed me?

At. Gen. Sir, the Court makes no Bargains; refer yourſelf to us.

[Hereupon my Fellow-Priſoners perſuaded me to plead Not Guilty: which being done, I demanded Counſel, as being partly promiſed it. Mr. Attorney told me, I could have none. Then I reply'd;]

Col. Pen. Sir, Durus eſt hic Sermo, it is no more than I expected from you; but rather than I will be taken off unheard, I will make my own Defence as well as I can.

[The Jurors being then called, I challenged about 24 of the 35 I might have challenged. The reſt of the Gentlemen were ſent from the Bar, I was left alone upon my Tryal; and the Jurors were ſo pack'd, that had I known them, the Iſſue had been the ſame that it was. The Jurors being ſworn, and the Indictment again read, Mr. Attorney demanded what Exception I could make to it.]

Col. Pen. Sir, I except againſt every part thereof; for I take it to be illegal in toto Compoſito.

Record. Steel. Sir, it is not uſual for any Court to admit of general Exceptions, therefore we expect that you ſhould make it to ſome Particular.

Col. Pen. Sir, I deſire a Copy of my Indictment, and time until to-morrow to make my Defence.

At. Gen. Sir, you cannot have it; the Court expects you ſhould do it now.

Col. Pen. Then if I cannot have time, if my general Exception might have been admitted, it would have told you, That there can be no High Treaſon in this Nation, but it muſt be grounded either upon the Common or Statute Law. But this is neither grounded upon the Common Law, or the Statute; ergo, no Treaſon, (againſt a Protector, who hath no Power according to Law:) neither is there any ſuch thing in Law as a Protector, for all Treaſons and ſuch Pleas are propria Cauſa Regis.

Serj. Glyn. Sir, you are peremptory, you ſtrike at the Government; you will fare never a whit the better for this Speech: ſpeak as to any particular Exception you have to the Indictment.

Col. Pen. Sir, if I ſpeak any thing which grates upon the preſent Government, I may confidently expect your Pardon: my Life is as dear to me, as this Government can be to any of you. The holy Prophet David, when he was in danger of his Life, feigned himſelf mad, and the Spittle hung upon his Beard: you may eaſily therefore excuſe my Imperfections. And ſince I am now forced to give you my particular Exception (more plainly) to the Indictment, I am bold to tell you, I obſerve in the latter part of the Indictment, you ſay I am guilty of High Treaſon, by virtue of a Statute in that caſe made and provided: If there be any ſuch

Statute, pray let it be read; I know none ſuch. My Actions were for the King; and I well remember what Bracton ſaith, [5 Tract. de Delatis cap.] Rex non habet ſuperiorem niſi Deum; ſatis habet ad pœnam, quod Deum expectat ultorem. And in another place he ſaith, [Bract. Rem. H. 3. cap. 3. ſect. 24.] Rex habet poteſtatem & juriſdictionem ſuper omnes qui in Regno ſuo ſunt: ea quæ ſunt juriſdictionis & pacis, ad nullum pertinent, niſi ad regiam Dignitatem; habet etiam coercionem, ut Delinquentes puniat & coerceat. Again he ſaith, Omnes ſub Rege, & ipſe nullo niſi tantum Deo; non eſt inferior ſibi ſubjectis; non parem habet in Regno ſuo. This ſhews us where the true Power is: You ſhall find alſo,

That whoever ſhall refuſe to aid the King when War is levied againſt him, or againſt any that keep the King from his juſt Rights, offends the Law, and is thereby guilty of Treaſon. [Parl. Rol. num. 7.] Again

All Men that adhere to the King in perſonal Service, are freed from Treaſon by Law: [Rex & Conſuetudo Parliament. 11 *H.*7. cap. 1.] Andyet you tell me of a Statute, which makes my adhering to my King according to Law, to be High Treaſon: Pray let it be read.

Attorn. Gen. Sir, you have not behaved your ſelf ſo as to have ſuch a Favour from the Court.

Col. Pen. I require it not as a Favour, but as my Right.

Attorn. Gen. Sir, you cannot have it.

Col. Pen. If I cannot have it, theſe Gentlemen that are the Jurors, have not offended you, their Verdict reaches to their Souls, as to my Life; pray let not them go blind-fold, but let that Statute be their Guide.

Attorn. Gen. Sir, The Jury ought to be ſatisfied with what hath been already ſaid, and ſo might you too.

Col. Pen. Sir, I thank you; you now tell me what I muſt truſt to.

Mr. Attorney then made a large Speech in the Face of the Court, wherein he aggravated the Offence with divers Circumſtances; as ſaying, I had been four Years in France, and held a Correſpondency with the King my Maſter, of whom I had learned the Popiſh Religion; That I endeavoured to bring in a debauch'd lewd young Man, and to engage this Nation in another bloody War; and that if I had not been timely prevented, I had deſtroyed them, (meaning the Jurors) and their whole Families. I interrupted him, and ſaid,

Col. Pen. Mr. Attorney, you have been heretofore of Counſel for me; you then made my Caſe better than indeed it was: I ſee you have the Faculty to make Men believe Falſhoods to be Truth too.

Attorn. Gen. Sir, you interrupt me; you ſaid but now you were a Gentleman.

Col. Pen. Sir, I have been thought worthy heretofore to ſit on the Bench, though now I am at the Bar. Mr. Attorney then proceeded in his Speech, and called the Witneſſes. Then I ſaid,

Sir,you have put me in a Bear's Skin,and now you will bait me with a witneſs. But I ſee the Face of a Gentleman here in Court, (I mean Captain Crook) whoſe Conſcience can tell him, that I had Articles from him which ought to have kept me from hence. Captain Crook hereupon ſtood up, and his guilty Conſcience (I ſuppoſe) adviſed him to ſit down again,after he had made this Speech, (that is to ſay) he opened his Lips and ſpake nothing. The ſeveral Witneſſes now come in, Mr. Dove the Sheriff of Wilts, and others; my Charity forbids me to tell you what many of them ſwore: I ſhall therefore omit that, and only tell you that one of our own Party (and indeed I think an honeſt Man) being forc'd to give his Evidence; I ſaid, My Lords, it is a hard caſe, that when you find you cannot otherwiſe cleave me in pieces, that you muſt look after Wedges made of my own Timber. The vertuous Cryer of Blanford being asked what were the words I uſed in the proclaiming King Charles at the Market? he ſaid, I declared for Charles the Second, and ſettling the true Proteſtant Religion; for the Liberty of the Subject, and Privilege of Parliaments.

Then I ſaid to the Attorney-General and the whole Court, You ſaid even now, that I had learn'd of the King my Maſter the Popiſh Religion, and endeavoured to bring him in: your own Witneſs tells you what, and whom I would bring in; and that it was the true Proteſtant, and not the Popiſh Religion, his Majeſty is of, and intends to ſettle. I urged divers Caſes to make the Buſineſs but a Riot (as my Lord of Northumberland's) pretending it was for the taking of Taxes; and that the Power was not declared to be where they ſay it is. I required the Judges to be of Counſel for me, and told them it was their Duty. Commiſſioner Liſle told me I ſhould have no Wrong, (but he meant Right) but Judge Rolle and Nicholas confeſſed themſelves Parties, therefore would ſay nothing. Then I told the Court, if I had ſeen a Crown upon the Head of any Perſon, I had known what had been Treaſon; the Law of England would have taken hold of me, out of the Reſpect it has to Monarchy: There were no ſuch Land-marks before me, therefore I conceive I cannot be guilty of what I am charged with. And my Lord, and Mr. Attorney, you here indict me for a Treaſon committed at South-moulton in Devonſhire; and, Gentlemen, ye ſwear Witneſſes againſt me for Facts done in other Countries; Sarum, Blanford and South-moulton are not in a Pariſh. You puzzle the Jurors with theſe Circumſtances, pray go to the Kernel. And you, Gentlemen of the Jury, ſave your Labour of taking thoſe Notes. Mr. Attorney then addreſſed himſelf to the Jury; and to be ſhort, after the ſpace of half an Hour long, gave them Directions to bring me in guilty. This being done, I craved the Favour from the Court, that I might ſpeak to the Jury; which being allowed, I ſaid to them as followeth, or to the ſame effect.

Gentlemen, You are called a Jury of Life and Death; and happy will it be for your Souls, if you prove to be a Jury of Life. You have heard what hath been ſaid to make my Actions Treaſon; and with what Vigour many Untruths have been urged to you. I have made appear to you, that there can be no Treaſon but againſt the King; that the Law knows no ſuch Perſon as a Protector. Mr. Attorney pretends a Statute for it, but refuſeth the reading thereof either to me or you; vilifies me at pleaſure, and tells you I am a Papiſt, and would bring in the Popiſh Religion; and that if I had not been timely prevented, I had deſtroyed you. I hope you are alſo ſatisfied of the contrary, from the Mouth of one of the bittereſt Witneſſes. You are now Judges between me and theſe Judges. Let not the Majeſty of their Looks, or the Glory of their Habits, betray you to a Sin which is of a deeper Dye than their Scarlet: I mean that Sin, Blood; which calls to Heaven for Vengeance. Gentlemen, you do not ſee a Hair of my Head but is numbered, neither can you make any one of them, much leſs can you put Breath into my Noſtrils when it is taken out: A Sparrow doth not fall to the Ground Ground without the Providence of God, much leſs ſhall Man, to whom he hath given Dominion and Rule over all the Creatures of the Earth. Gentlemen, look upon me, I am the Image of my Creator, and that Stamp of his which is in my Viſage, is not to be defaced, without an Account given wherefore it was. I have here challenged, as I am a Gentleman, and free-born Man of England, the Right which the Law allows me; I demanded a Copy of my Indictment and Counſel, but it is denied me. The Law which I would have been tryed by, is the known Law of the Land, which was drawn by the wiſe Conſultation of our Princes, and by the ready Pens of our Progenitors. The Law which I am now tryed by, is no Law, but what is cut out by the Point of a rebellious Sword; and the Sheets in which they are recorded, being varniſhed with the Moiſture of an eloquent Tongue, if you look not well to it, may chance to ſerve for ſome of your Shrouds. If the Fear of diſpleaſing others, ſhall betray you to find me guilty of any thing, you can at the moſt but make a Riot of this. Pray, by the way, take notice, that the laſt Parliament would not allow the Legiſlative Power to be out of themſelves; ſeventeen of twenty in this very County were of that Opinion, and deſerted the Houſe; they were your Repreſentative: if you ſhould find me guilty, you bring them in danger, and in them your ſelves. Have a care of being drawn into a Snare. Gentlemen, your Blood may run in the ſame Channel with mine: If what I have ſaid do not ſatisfy you, ſo as to acquit me; if you bring a ſpecial Verdict, you do in ſome meaſure acquit your ſelves, and throw the Blood that will be ſpilt upon the Judges. Conſider of it, and the Lord direct you for the beſt.

The Jury, after a quarter of an Hour's Retirement, brought me in guilty: The Lord forgive them, for they knew not what they did.

Upon Monday the 23d of April, we were again called to the Bar, being then in number twenty-ſix. Serjeant Glyn asked of me firſt, what I could ſay for my ſelf, that I ſhould not have Sentence according to Law? Then I ſaid,

My Lords and Gentlemen, you ask what I can ſay for my ſelf, that I ſhould not have Sentence paſſed upon me. The Jury found me guilty: if I ſhould go about to make a Defence now, it would ſignify no more than as if my Friends ſhould petition for my Pardon after I am executed. I could have offered you Articles here, but I thought them inconſiſtent with this Court. When I look upon my Offence (as to the Protector) I conclude my ſelf a dead Man; but when I reflect upon the Favour he hath ſhewed to others of my Condition, and the Hopes I have of your Interceſſion, methinks I feel my Spirits renewed again. My Lords, Death is a Debt due from me to Nature; the Protector has now the keeping the Bond, and has put it in ſuit by his Attorney; if he pleaſe to forbear the ſerving me with an Execution, and let me keep it a little longer, I will pay him the Intereſt of Thanks for it as long as I live, and engage my Poſterity and a numerous Alliance to be bound for me. So the Lord direct you all for the beſt. If I have found Favour, I ſhall thank you; if not, I ſhall forgive you.

This being done, Serjeant Glyn, after a moſt bitter and nonſenſical Speech, gave Sentence againſt us; viz. to be drawn, hanged and quartered. A pretty Exchange for unworthy Crook's Articles for Life, Liberty and Eſtate; which I can prove, and will die upon. My Tryal held at leaſt five Hours. This is as much as at preſent I can remember of it; excuſe the Errors.

One of the Jury being asked by a Gentleman, why he found me guilty? anſwered, He was reſolved to hang me, before he did ſee me.

I obſerve Treaſon in this Age to be an individuum vagum, like the Wind in the Goſpel, which bloweth where it liſteth; for that ſhall be Treaſon in me to day, which ſhall be none in another tomorrow, as it pleaſeth Mr. Attorney.

The Judges are ſworn to do Juſtice according to the Law of the Land [3 Part Inſt. pag. 22. 2 Part Inſt. pag. 47, 48. Prince's Caſe. 8 Report.] and therefore have miſerably perjured themſelves in condemning me contrary to Law: And (not ſo contented) muſt cauſe the Jury (ſo wiſe they were) through their falſe and unjuſt Directions, to deſtroy their own Rights and Properties, and ſet up a new Arbitrary and Tyrannical Government.

The Judges would not give me their Advice in point of Law, (as was their Duty) becauſe they ſaid they were Parties; yet could ſit ſtill on the Bench in their Robes, to countenance, and approve of my Sentence.

No Man can be a Judge where he is a Party in the ſame Cauſe; [Hobart fol. 120. Doct. Bonam's Caſe, 8 Part of Coke's Reports.] therefore my Tryal was contrary to Law.

The Judges being Parties, ought not to ſit upon the Bench, but ſtand by; therefore my Tryal was illegal: the reſt being no Judges, but the Protector's immediate Servants, ſo could not be my Judges in caſe of High Treaſon; for none but the ſworn Judges of the Land are capable of it by Law.

One thing of Colonel Dove, the reverend Sheriff of Wilts, who, that the Jury might be ſufficiently incenſed, complaining of the many Incivilities (he pretended) were offered him by our Party, being upon his Oath, ſaid, That one of our Men did run him through the Side with a Carabine. Surely it was a very ſmall one, for the Wound is not diſcernable.

A great deal of pains every Man in his place took for the carrying on his Maſter's Work.

Be merciful unto me, O Lord, be merciful unto me: under the Shadow of thy Wings will I hide my ſelf, till this Tyranny be overpaſt.

Glory to God on high, in Earth Peace, Good-Will towards Men; and ſo have Mercy on me, O Lord.

JOHN PENRUDDOCK.

A Report from the Committee, to whom the Tryal of JAMES NAYLER for Blaſphemy, and other Miſdemeanours, were referr'd. 8 Car. II. 1656.

Reſolved,

THAT the Matter of Fact, together with the particular Reſolutions of this Committee thereupon, be reported to the Houſe.

Firſt, I ſhall give you the ſhort Hiſtory of his Life, as the Committee had it from his own Mouth. He ſaith he was born in the Pariſh of Ardiſloe, near Wakefield in Yorkſhire, where he lived 22 or 23 Years, till he was married (according to the World) as he expreſſed it. Then he removed into the Pariſh of Wakefield, where he continued till the laſt Wars began; during which time he was under ſeveral Commands, and at laſt was Quarter-maſter in Major-General Lambert's Troop; in which Service he continued till diſabled by Sickneſs in Scotland, and ſo retired to his own Home: about which time he was a Member of an Independant Church at Horbery in Yorkſhire, of which Church Mr. Chriſtopher Marſhal was Paſtor; and by the ſame Church ſince caſt out (as himſelf confeſſeth he hath heard:) by which Church he was charged as guilty of Blaſphemy, and uncivil and wanton Carriage with one Mrs. Roper a married Woman, as that ſhe ſhould ſit on his Knee, and kiſs him before divers other Perſons; and that it was his Opinion, he might lie with any Woman that was of his Judgment. And then after ſome time went to viſit the Quakers in Cornwall, and by his way was by Major Saunders committed to the common Goal in Exon, as a Vagrant: And thence he and his Company being delivered by an Order from the Council, they travelling to Briſtol, in the way Nayler took upon him, as was alledged againſt him. And as he paſſed through Chewſtoke in the County of Somerſet, towards Briſtol, it is informed upon Oath, certified by three Juſtices to the Committee, That ſtaying in that Town one Night, he was there in a Chamber with three Women of his Company, leaning upon the Bed with one of them at Night when the Servant of the Houſe left them: And in the Morning the Servant found Nayler on the Bed with one of the Women, and the Curtains drawn; and ſome of the Company wiſhed the Servant to make no noiſe to awake them.

The way taken in this Report, will be,

Firſt, To give you the Articles charged againſt him.

Secondly, The Evidence, wherein there will be a little mention of the Examinations and Informations upon Oath taken at Briſtol; againſt which, becauſe there lies a ſeeming Objection, I ſhall firſt clear that upon the Matter of Fact.

The Objection was, That they were not read again to the Parties, as is uſual in ſuch Caſes.

Anſwer. That two Witneſſes, both of more than ordinary good Repute, in that place were both put, and took Characters of the Queſtions and Anſwers there; and comparing their Notes, did both of them publickly avow to the Committee, as that which they were ready to depoſe, That every material Paſſage was read unto the Parties once or twice after they writ it down; and that they were the ſame which were offered to the Committee, atteſted under the Mayor of Briſtol's Hand to every of the ſaid Examinations and Informations, and the City Seal annexed to the whole. And beſides, there is nothing in the ſaid Examinations and Informations taken there, but what is generally more clearly made out upon their Examinations before the Committee.

Other Evidence will be from Nayler's Examination, wherein is moſt of this whole Matter, which was taken in Characters by five of the Committee, who were appointed to, and did compare their Notes.

Thirdly, The Opinion of the Committee.

The whole Fact will fall under one of theſe two Articles.

Firſt, James Nayler did aſſume the Geſture, Words, Honour, Worſhip and Miracles of our bleſſed Saviour.

Secondly, The Names and incommunicable Attributes and Titles of our bleſſed Saviour.

As to part of the firſt Article, That James Nayler riding through a Town in Somerſet, his Company ſpread their Garments, and ſang, Holy, Holy, before him; and alſo ſang the like at his Entrance into Briſtol, one going bare-headed before his Horſe:

The Evidence was, That Dorcas Erbury, in her Examination before the Committee in the Painted Chamber, confeſſed, That ſhe did ſpread Garments before him. And Martha Simmons in her Examination at the ſame time ſaith, That thoſe Garments that ſhe did ſpread, ſhe ſpread in obedience to the Lord. And Hannah Stranger being then alſo examined, ſaid, ſhe threw two Handkerchiefs before him, which ſhe did, becauſe he that is Lord of all commanded her ſo to do. And

John Stranger confeſſeth, that he ſaw others ſpread Garments before him in the way from Exon to Briſtol. And James Nayler himſelf confeſſeth (upon the Queſtion, Whether Garments were ſpread before him?) That ſome Clothes were caſt down, and afterwards, that ſome Gloves and other things.

The Evidence for ſinging Holy, Holy, was thus:

Dorcas Erbury, in her Examination at Briſtol, being then asked, Why ſhe paſſed along ſinging? ſaid, She did not do it; but they that did it, were commanded to do it: and the Lord hath made it manifeſt, that they were moved of the Lord to do it. And being asked, To whom they ſang? and whom they called the Holy One of Iſrael? ſhe ſaid, Him that rode upon the Horſe; and ſhe would maintain it with her Blood. And being examined by the Com-

Committee as to this part of the Examination, and adviſed to deny, if it were falſe; yet did not deny it, though ſhe did ſome other part of that Examination.

Martha Simmons being examined in the Painted Chamber, Whether ſhe did ſing the words, Holy, Holy, before the ſaid James Nayler? anſwered, It is my Life to praiſe the Lord, whether he be before me, or from me, it is my Life to praiſe the Lord. And being asked, Whether ſhe heard any Perſons ſing Holy, Holy, before the ſaid James Nayler? ſhe anſwered, It is our Life to praiſe the Lord.

Hannah Stranger being examined in the Painted Chamber, Whether ſhe ſang the words, Holy, Holy? anſwered, She could not well remember the words; but if ſhe did not ſing Holy, Holy, ſhe witneſſeth the Holy of Holies was riſen, which moved her ſo to do: but ſaid further, ſhe did not ſtand there to accuſe her ſelf.

James Nayler being examined by the Committee, whether any ſang Holy, Holy, before him as he rode? anſwered, There were Praiſes ſung to the Lord. And being asked, whether thoſe words, Holy, Holy, were ſung? anſwered, That he heard thoſe words. And being asked as to the ſinging before him when he rode into Briſtol, anſwered, That there was a Pſalm ſung, ſuch a one as the Lord was pleaſed to give into the Hearts of them that ſang. And being asked as to the words of the Pſalm, whether they were not Holy, Holy? ſaid, It may be it was; very like it might be ſo.

And in his Examination at Briſtol, being asked why he came in there in ſuch an unuſual manner, two Women leading his Horſe, and ſinging, with one bare before him? ſaid, It was for the Praiſes of his Father; and that he may not refuſe any thing that is moved of the Lord: and that he did think the Father did command them to do it. And being there asked, Whom they meant by the word Holy that they ſang? he anſwered, That they that ſang were all of Age to anſwer for themſelves.

And this ſpeaks ſomething for the proving of another part of the firſt Article, vindicating one going bare-headed before him, and Women leading his Horſe; which is more fully proved by the Informations upon Oath of George Witherley and Richard Hart, taken at Briſtol, before the Mayor there, and certified as aforeſaid; and upon the Confeſſion of one Thomas Woodcock before the ſaid Mayor, who went bare-headed before James Nayler, and ſaid he was moved by the Spirit ſo to do. And James Nayler himſelf, upon his Examination by the Committee, when he was asked, Whether any went bare-headed before him as he went into Briſtol? anſwered, He did not know, he took little notice of it, but heard ſome ſay it was ſo. And being asked whether any Women led his Horſe? anſwered, There was a Woman took hold of the Bridle of the Horſe.

Reſolution of the Committee upon this whole Evidence.

The Committee were of Opinion, that the firſt Article was proved.

One thing alſo, being part of the Matter of Fact, we think worthy your Knowledge, though much Streſs will not be laid on it; and that is, That the Deſcription of our Saviour by Publius Lentulus to the Senate of Rome in Writing, (which is alſo imprinted) was taken upon one of James Nayler's Attendants, which is alſo certified by the ſaid Mayor. And for Nayler's Hair, both Colour and Manner of wearing it, as alſo the Faſhion of his Beard, and Feature and Perſon, did much agree with that Deſcription; which alſo was taken notice of by many of the Committee, how much he reſembled (as they apprehended with ſome Affectation) the Picture uſually drawn for our Saviour.

That in divers Anſwers he imitated our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, uſing the ſame Expreſſions that he did; in one place he ſaith, That he lived ſome Weeks, fifteen or ſixteen Days, without any Food or other Suſtenance; and being asked, wherewithal God fed him, if not with Food? anſwered, Man liveth not by Bread alone, but by every Word which proceedeth out of the Mouth of the Lord.

I ſhall here mention one remarkable one in his Examination at Briſtol: his Expreſſion was, If they had known the Father, they ſhould know him alſo. And Nayler being examined by the Committee to this, Whether that were his Anſwer at Briſtol? he anſwered in theſe Words; Truly I can ſay little of that, whether I did ſay it or no; but if I did ſay it there, it is true: for if any one do know the Father, they ſhall know what I am, and where I live; and none can know my Life further than they know the Father; for the Father is my Life: none can know my Life, but they that know my Father; for he is my Life. This I particularly mention, being commanded by the Committee, who reſolved, That this whole Anſwer of James Nayler be reported to the Houſe.

Another part of this Article was, That he received the outward Worſhip of being kneeled unto, and having his Feet kiſſed. And for this the Evidence was Martha Simmons, in her Examination at Briſtol, ſaid, She ought to worſhip him, but here denied.

And further the Evidence went, That after his Impriſonment at Briſtol, it appeared by the Information upon Oath at Briſtol, to wit, of Thomas Perkins and Thomas Cole:

Thomas Perkins informeth, That Dorcas Erbury fell down at Nayler's Feet, and kiſſed his Feet; and the ſame Evening one Alice Brock fell on her Knees before the ſaid Nayler, and Nayler put his Hands upon her Head, and ſaid, Stand faſt, &c.

Thomas Cole informeth, That the 25th of October Martha Simmons and Hannah Stranger being called out of Nayler's Room into their own Lodging, they one after another kneeled before Nayler, and laid their Heads on his Knees; and he laid his Hands on their Heads, making a groaning Noiſe within himſelf; and before they roſe from their Knees, he croſſed his Hands over their Heads. And Hannah Stranger at her Examination before the Committee, confeſſed, That ſhe kneeled at James Nayler's Feet and kiſſed them. And others being demanded concerning theſe Actions, would give no Anſwer. And James Nayler being examined, whether any kneeled and kiſſed his Feet, anſwered, That there might be ſuch things, though he did not mind it, being things that he did not glory in.

As for his doing of Miracles particularly, Dorcas Erbury ſaith, That ſhe was dead in Exeter Goal two Days, and that Nayler laid his Hands upon her, and raiſed her; which ſhe affirmed in her Examination at Briſtol, and did not deny when examined as to this by the Committee.

To which Nayler being examined whether Dorcas Erbury was dead in Exon Goal, as in her Examination, anſwered, If you ſpeak of ſuch a Death as you may underſtand, ſhe was dead. Being further asked, How ſhe was dead, in his Underſtanding? anſwered, I ſhall ſay little of my ſelf in that thing.

thing. And being further asked, whether he raiſed her from the dead? anſwered, I can do nothing of my ſelf. Being asked, whether any other did raiſe her by his Hands, and if he laid his Hands upon her? anſwered, There is a Power in me from above. And being demanded, whether he had ſuch a Power as to raiſe from the dead? anſwered, I have ſaid before, I cannot bear witneſs of my ſelf in the thing. And being asked, who bore witneſs of him? anſwered, The Scriptures do bear witneſs to the Power which is in me, which is everlaſting. And being demanded, whether he raiſed from the dead by virtue of that Power? anſwered, I can do nothing but what the Power doth in me: and it is the ſame Power whereof you read in the Scriptures, that hath raiſed the Dead, according to the Meaſure of the Power manifeſt.

And being asked, whether that Power were manifeſt in ſuch a manner in him as to raiſe Dorcas Erbury from the dead? anſwered, I have ſaid; I ſhall not ſatisfy in words concerning the thing further than only this, that you may clearly underſtand that wherein Dorcas Erbury, or any elſe do attribute unto me, as to a Creature that hath Beginning and Ending, that I utterly deny; but that that any ſee of God in me, by the ſame Spirit that revealed any thing to them, that I do not deny. This may ſerve at one word; for there cannot be a more abominable thing than to take from the Creator, and give to the Creature: the ſame Power which did raiſe from the dead, which you read in the Scripture, the ſame Chriſt, the ſame Anointing according to the Meaſure of him, is manifeſt in me, and no other. And being asked, if any prayed to Chriſt in him, whether he did diſown it? anſwered, As a Creature I do diſown it.

Theſe things and divers others we have reported as part of the Matter of Fact.

Second Article: That the ſaid James Nayler aſſumed the Name, and the incommunicable Attributes and Titles of our bleſſed Saviour: as firſt,

The Faireſt of Ten Thouſand.

As for this, the Evidence was in a Letter of Hannah Stranger, found about him at Briſtol, ſhe giving him the Title of the Faireſt of ten thouſand: which upon her Examination at Briſtol and before the Committee, ſhe confeſſed ſhe wrote to him in her Letter. And James Nayler being asked by the Committee, whether any ſuch Title as the Faireſt of ten thouſand, had been given to him in any Writing or Letter? he anſwered, To what they did in the Letter, if they gave it to me as to the viſible, then I do deny it; but if they ſpeak it to that begotten of the Father in me, then I dare not deny it. And being willed to repeat that Anſwer again, he ſaid, If they ſpeak it as to the viſible, as to that which is earthly, then I deny any ſuch thing belonging to me in that Senſe: but if they ſpeak it to that which the Father hath begotten in me, then I dare not deny it; becauſe that (as he ſaid) is beautiful, wherever it is begotten. And in his ſecond Examination before the Committee, his Anſwer was to the ſame effect.

Reſolution of the Committee.

Upon this Evidence the Committee were of Opinion, That James Nayler had aſſumed the Title of the Faireſt of Ten Thouſand.

The Only-begotten Son of God.

And for that the Evidence was, That Hannah Stranger in the ſaid Letter gave him that Title: And being demanded whether he did aſſume that Title, anſwered in theſe words: That there are many Sons beſides, yet the Son of God I muſt witneſs, and dare not deny: The Son of God I am, and dare not deny. And being often preſſed to give a direct Anſwer, whether he were the only-begotten Son of God? anſwered thus; I am the Son of God, but I have many Brethren; and again ſaid, I have many Brethren, though ſome of them do not yet know me. And being urged to confeſs or deny it, anſwered in theſe words; I have anſwered, that I have given of my Father to ſpeak for the preſent unto that thing. Being asked, whether he were the only-begotten Son of God? he anſwered, Thou haſt ſaid it. Which Queſtion and Anſwer being repeated to him as his Anſwer, he anſwered, Do not enſnare the Innocent. And upon his Examination taken, certified and atteſted, as aforeſaid, being asked, whether he be the only-begotten Son of God? anſwered, That he was the Son of God; and that the Son of God was but one.

But being examined by the Committee as to this part of his Examination at Briſtol, he affirmed, that this was not his Anſwer.

Reſolution of the Committee.

Upon this Evidence the Committee were of Opinion, That the Title of the only-begotten Son of God, was given to James Nayler. And being demanded whether he aſſumed that Title, he did not deny it.

The Prophet of the Moſt High.

This Title we find given him in a Letter to Nayler from one Jane Woodcock, found about him at Briſtol. And being examined there upon that Clauſe in the Letter, he anſwered, That he was the Prophet of the moſt high God.

And Martha Simmons, upon her Examination at Briſtol, ſaid, There was a Time when James Nayler was a true Prophet of the moſt high God, but now he is gone beyond, and is in the Adminiſtration of Peace, and is the Beloved of the Lord.

James Nayler being examined by the Committee, whether he owned this Title of the Prophet of the moſt high God? he anſwered, Yea, I am a Prophet of the moſt high God. And being preſſed to anſwer whether he were the Prophet, he anſwered, There be other Prophets beſides me. And being preſſed again with the ſame Queſtion, anſwered, I have ſaid what I may, as to that thing in the Counſel of my Father.

Upon this his Confeſſion at Briſtol, and Anſwer as aforeſaid,

Reſolution of the Committee.

The Committee were of Opinion, That James Nayler had aſſumed the Title of the Prophet of the moſt high God.

The King of Iſrael.

And for this the Evidence was, We find in a Letter from one Thomas Symmons this Title given to to James Nayler; and in the Examination of Dorcas Erbury, taken at Briſtol aforeſaid, we find ſomething to this purpoſe; who being asked why ſhe pulled off his Stockings, ſhe anſwered, Becauſe he is the Holy One of Iſrael, and deſerves and is worthy of it.

And Martha Simmons, upon her Examination at Briſtol, ſaith, That James Nayler's Name is now buried, and that he is anointed King of Iſrael. To which being examined by the Committee, expreſly owned the Examination as to that to be true, and the thing itſelf: But becauſe this varies a little from the Charge, and faſtens it not altogether upon James Nayler, they had this further Proof: James Nayler, in his Examination at Briſtol, being asked whether he were the King of Iſrael? anſwered, Thou haſt ſaid. To this James Nayler, being examined by the Committee, whether this Queſtion were ſo demanded as aforeſaid? he anſwered, That it was not asked by way of a Queſtion, whether he were the King of Iſrael, but that the Examiner did poſitively affirm, Thou art the King of Iſrael; to which he anſwered, Thou haſt ſaid it. And being particularly examined by the Committee, whether he did own the Title of the King of Iſrael? he anſwered in theſe Words, I have no Kingdom in this World, yet a Kingdom I have; and he that hath redeemed me, hath redeemed me to be a King for ever. And being examined again to the ſame Queſtion, whether he owned the Title of the King of Iſrael? he anſwered, As a Creature, I deny any ſuch Thing, further than as God manifeſted in the Fleſh: And if they gave that Title to Chriſt in me, then I do own it.

Reſolution of the Committee.

Upon this Evidence the Committee were of opinion, That James Nayler aſſumed the Title of the King of Iſrael.

The Everlaſting Son of Righteouſneſs.

This we find given to him in a Letter by Hannah Stranger in theſe Words, Thou Everlaſting Son of Righteouſneſs. And Martha Symmons, in her Examination at Briſtol, calls him Lord of Righteouſneſs; which ſhe alſo affirmed before the Committee. And James Nayler himſelf being examined by the Committee, whether any Perſon had given him that Title of the Everlaſting Son of Righteouſneſs? he anſwered, Where God is manifeſted in the Fleſh, there is the Everlaſting Son of Righteouſneſs. And being asked twice, whether God was manifeſted in the Fleſh in him? anſwered both times, God manifeſt in the Fleſh I witneſs, and may not deny.

Prince of Peace.

This we find given him in a Letter by the ſaid Hannah Stranger; and in her Examination at Briſtol ſhe owned him to be the Prince of Peace. The ſame Title was alſo given him by Martha Symmons, as it appeared by her Examination at Briſtol, which was confeſſed by her before the Committee. And being particularly asked, what ſhe called the Man whom we call James Nayler? anſwered, I call him a perfect Man. And being further demanded, whether ſhe did not call him the Prince of Peace? anſwered, He that is a perfect Man, he is the Prince of Peace. And Nayler being examined by the Committee, whether he owned the Title of the Prince of Peace? anſwered, the Prince of Peace I own, the Everlaſting Peace is begotten in me.

Sent to judge and try the Cauſe of Iſrael.

The Evidence of this was in the ſame Letter of Jane Woodcock's we find it given to him; and in his Examination at Briſtol, whether that Title was given to him, he would make no Anſwer. And being examined by the Committee, whether he aſſumed to judge and try the Cauſe of Iſrael? anſwered in theſe Words; The Judge of Iſrael is but one, and that Judge I witneſs in me, which is the Chriſt: And further anſwered, If thou ſpeak of him whom the Father hath ſent into the World and begotten in me, the Holy Ghoſt, the Spirit of the Father, and the Son in me, which is in me; if thou ſpeak of it, this I own. And being asked, in what reſpect he was ſent? he anſwered no otherwiſe, but as God manifeſt in the Fleſh, though not as mortal. And being asked, by whom he was ſent to try the Cauſe of Iſrael? anſwered, By him who hath made all Creatures, and hath ſent his Spirit into me, his Son into me, to try the Cauſe; though he ſaid he was no Judge in carnal Matters. And being asked, whether he were more ſent to judge and try the Cauſe of Iſrael, than another? anſwered in theſe Words; As to my ſaying I am ſent, mind that no otherwiſe than as the Father and the Son is in me: and to that I ſay further, That no other Man is ſent in that Senſe, but he that knoweth the indwelling of that God, and according to the Meaſure of his Knowledge of the living God, ſo far is Judgment committed to him, and no further.

And being urged to anſwer, whether any other had the ſame Meaſure of Judgment, to judge the Cauſe of Iſrael, as he had? he anſwered, That he had not at preſent any thing given him of his Father to anſwer unto that.

Reſolution of the Committee.

That James Nayler hath aſſumed to be ſent to judge and try the Cauſe of Iſrael.

JESUS.

And for this the Evidence was,

John Stranger in a Poſtſcript in his Wife's Letter directed to, and found upon James Nayler, uſed theſe Words; Thy Name is no more to be called James, but Jeſus. Which Poſtſcript being ſhewed to Stranger by the Committee, he owned it written by him: nd being asked, wherefore he called him Jeſus? anſwered in theſe Words; I was moved of the Lord, and afterwards by the Spirit o the Lord. And being asked, whether by Jeſus he meant the Saviour of the World? he would give no Anſwer. And Martha Symmons in her Examination at Briſtol, ſaith, That ſhe hath heard ſome call him Jeſus; which Examination being read unto her, ſhe denied not that, though ſhe denied another part of that Examination. And James Nayler being examinated, whether any Perſon had called him by the Name of Jeſus? anſwered in theſe Words; As I am viſible here before you, I believe they have not; but that the Name of the Lord is in me, that I dare not deny: And further ſaid, That they have given that Name to him who is the Jeſus. but if they have given it to any other than to the Son of God that is in me, I do deny what they have ſpoken. And being asked, whether he denied that they gave him the Name of Jeſus? anſwered, As I am a Creature, I believe they did not: And afterwards confeſſed that the Name of Jeſus was given him in a Letter; and if he had underſtood it of any other than the Jeſus, he ſhould have denied it. Being demanded, whether they gave the Name of Jeſus to him? he anſwered in theſe Words, No otherwiſe than as to the Son of God. Being demanded, whether any had given him the Name of Jeſus? anſwered, Not as to the Viſible. And being demanded, to what then they gave the Name of Jeſus? anſwered in theſe Words, I underſtand they gave that Name to the Jeſus, to the Chriſt that is in me.

that

Upon his ſecond Examination, being asked whether he owned the Name of Jeſus; and if that Title belonged to him, as to Chriſt within? he anſwered, That Name was never publiſhed to be called by me, neither do I call my ſelf by that Name; but what my Father hath publiſhed, is another thing.

Reſolution of the Committee.

Upon this Evidence the Committee were of Opinion, That James Nayler aſſumed the Name of Jeſus.

He in whom the Hope of Iſrael ſtandeth.

And for this, the Evidence was in the Letter of Martha Symmons, found upon James Nayler, where were theſe Words, Thou well-beloved Lamb of God, in whom the Hope of Iſrael ſtands. And James Nayler, in his Examination at Briſtol, being asked, whether he were the Lamb of God, in whom the Hope of Iſrael ſtands? anſwered, That if I were not his Lamb, I ſhould not be ſo ſought to be devoured; and that the true Hope of Iſrael ſtands in the Righteouſneſs of the Father, in whomſoever it is. And being asked, whether Iſrael's Hope were in any meaſure in him? he anſwered, Yea. Which Examination of his at Briſtol being read to him by the Committee, he denied not this part of it. And being examinated by the Committee, whether their Hope of Iſrael did ſtand in him? anſwered in theſe Words, It ſtands only in Chriſt Jeſus, and as Chriſt Jeſus is known in me. And being asked again, whether he were he in whom the Hope of Iſrael ſtands? anſwered in theſe Words, No way but as Chriſt is me. And being then asked, whether as Chriſt is in you, ſo are you he in whom the Hope of Iſrael ſtands? anſwered, Nay, do not add to my Words; I ſpeak as plain as I can, that all the Glory may be given to God, and none to the Creature; that the whole Glory may be given to my Father, and none to me, as you look upon me as a Creature. And the next Queſtion was, Whether as Chriſt is in you, are you he in whom the Hope of Iſrael ſtands? To which he anſwered, Chriſt in me, the Hope of Glory. And being examined, what Hopes Iſrael had in him beyond any other Perſon? anſwered, None can know, but they that are of Iſrael: They can give an account of their Hopes; Iſrael muſt give an account of their Hopes themſelves.

The Reſolution of the Committee.

That James Nayler aſſumed to beſeem him in whom the Hope of Iſrael ſtands.

The Committee being deſirous to inform themſelves how far the ſaid Nayler was conſenting unto that Worſhip, and thoſe Titles, before given unto him, beſides the former Evidence, they did find in his Examination at Briſtol, where being asked why he came in ſo unuſual a Manner, as the Woman leading his Horſe, and ſinging before him? he anſwered, That he might not refuſe any thing that's moved of the Lord: Which being read unto him at the Committee, he denied not. And for the better clearing of this, the Committee examined Hannah Stranger, whether Nayler reproved her for caſting her Garments before him, or for kneeling, or kiſſing his Feet? From whom they could get no other Anſwer than this, She would not accuſe or juſtify any. The Committee did alſo find in their Examination of Nayler, being asked by them, whether he reproved the Women for ſpreading their Garments, and ſinging before him, anſwered in theſe Words, Nay, only I ſaid unto them, take heed that they did nothing but what they were really moved of the Lord. And being alſo examined by the Committee, whether he reproved thoſe that gave him the Title before mentioned? anſwered, That he had not at all ſpoken unto them concerning that Thing, only the Letters he had, wherein the Titles were given; and did not think at all that any ſhould have ſeen them, becauſe he knew there was Things in them that many could not bear; but now he ſaw his Father purpoſed they ſhould not be hid.

Nayler, at his ſecond Examination before the Committee, being demanded, whether he had reproved the Perſons that gave him thoſe Titles and Attributes? he would not ſay he had reproved them. Being demanded, whether he owned them, or diſclaimed them? anſwered in theſe Words, If they had it from the Lord, what am I, that I ſhould judge it? And being preſſed again with the ſame Queſtion, anſwered thus, If the Father move them by his Spirit to give them to Chriſt, I may not deny; if they give that to any other but Chriſt, I diſown it. And being asked again, whether he reproved them, or not? anſwered, If attributed to the Creature, then it is reprovable; if they did it to the Lord, then I dare not reprove it. And being asked, whether he thought not Chriſt robbed of his Honour, by that Honour or Worſhip given unto him? anſwered, That he looked upon it to be really to the true Honour of Chriſt, or elſe he would utterly have denied it. And being asked, whether he had at any time whatſoever reproved thoſe Perſons? he anſwered, I never underſtood that they gave that Honour but to God.

Here we thought to have concluded this Report; but the Committee meeting with ſome further Evidence, they were willing you ſhould be Partakers of it. And it is this: John Baynham, Deputy to the Serjeant of the Houſe, to whoſe Cuſtody Nayler and his Company are committed, informed, That the uſual Poſture of James Nayler is ſitting in a Chair, and his Company, both Men and Women, do ſometimes kneel; and when they are weary of kneeling, they ſit upon the Ground before him, ſinging theſe and divers other Words to the like purpoſe, viz. Holy, holy, to the Almighty, to the true God, and great God; and Glory to the Almighty, &c. And thus they do uſually all the Day long: But the Informer never heard Nayler ſing as aforeſaid. And ſaith, There is great Reſort to the ſaid Nayler by divers Perſons, who, moſt of them, do kneel before him in the manner aforeſaid. And Martha Symmons, in the Poſture aforeſaid, ſung, This is the joyful Day; behold the King of Righteouſneſs is come. And further, the Informer ſaith, ſaith, That he never knew the ſaid Nayler ſhew any Diſlike, either by Reproof, or otherwiſe, of that Honour or Worſhip which John Stranger and his Wife, Martha Simmons, and Dorcas Erbury, and the reſt, gave him, as aforeſaid. And a Member of the Houſe, being lately at the Place where Nayler is now a Priſoner, informs the Committee, That he ſaw Nayler and his Company in the Poſture aforeſaid: and heard John Stranger, and one of the Women ſing, Holy, holy, holy Lord God; and, Holy, holy, holy to thee, thee, thee, Lord God. And whilſt John Stranger ſung theſe Words, he did ſometimes look upwards, and ſometimes upon James Nayler. Another Member informed us, as upon his own View, to the ſame purpoſe. And at Nayler's laſt Examination before the Committee, being Wedneſday the 3d inſtant, one William Piggot did inform, That Nayler ſitting in a Chair where he is now a Priſoner, one Sarah Blackbery came to him, and took him by the Hand, and ſaid, Riſe up my Love, my Dove, my Fair-one, and come away: Why ſitteſt thou among the Pots? And preſently put her Mouth upon his Hand, and ſunk down upon the Ground before him.

To which Nayler himſelf, being examined by the Committee, confeſſed ſhe took him by the Hand, and ſpoke the Words aforeſaid; but denies the putting her Mouth upon his Hand, and ſuch Bowing-down: But ſaith, That he ſat low; and that he was not free to go with her. And Nayler being asked to whom ſhe directed that Speech? anſwered, To the Lord, and to him that raiſeth from the Duſt, and caſteth them down that are exalted. And being asked, whether he reproved her for that Expreſſion? he anſwered, He reproved her not. And further, William Piggot informed the Committee, That the laſt Week he was at the Place aforeſaid, where Nayler is now a Priſoner; and that one Stranger and Martha Simmons were, with others, ſitting upon their Heels before and about Nayler; and that Stranger roſe up, and ſtood and ſung juſt before Nayler, according to their uſual manner of ſinging, when and where a Man Quaker (being preſent) asked Nayler, Doſt thou own that Voice? Nayler anſwered, Yea, I do. And Nayler being asked by the Committee, if this were ſo, anſwered, If I tell you the Truth, you will not believe me. And Nayler being preſſed to anſwer, whether he owned the Voice aforeſaid? anſwered, That Voice I will not deny.

To ſum up all: The Committee asked Nayler what he had more to ſay? (that being likely to be the laſt Time of hearing him before the Committee reported the whole Fact to the Houſe) he thus anſwered:

I do abhor that any of that Honour which is due to God ſhould be given to me, as I am a Creature: But it pleaſed the Lord to ſet me up as a Sign of the coming of the Righteous One; and what hath been done in my paſſing through the Towns, I was commanded by the Power of the Lord to ſuffer ſuch Things to be done to the Outward as a Sign. I abhor any Honour as a Creature.

The Tryal of Sir Henry Slingsby Kt. for High Treaſon, June 2. 10 Car. II. 1658.

THE High Court being ſet, and the Names of the Commiſſioners being called, the Serjeant at Arms was commanded to fetch the Priſoner to the Bar. Sir Henry Slingsby was brought accordingly to the Bar. Then Proclamation made for Silence, and the Commiſſion for Tryal of the Priſoner read. Proclamation for Silence again was made. Then Mr. Attorney-General Prideaux exhibited a Charge of High Treaſon againſt Sir Henry Slingsby the Priſoner; which was read. The Subſtance of which Charge was as followeth, viz.

'THat the Town of Kingſton upon Hull, in the 'County of Kingſton upon Hull, in England, on 'the 11th of October, 1656. and ever ſince, unto 'the Day of the exhibiting of this Charge, was 'and hath been, and is yet, a Town belonging 'to this Commonwealth; where there is a Gariſon, and a great part of the Army and Forces 'belonging to this Commonwealth: That Sir Henry 'Slingsby, late of Redhouſe, in the County of York, 'Knight, minding and intending to imbroil this 'Commonwealth in inteſtine Wars, the 30th of 'April laſt, and divers Times ſince the 10th of Octo'ber 1656. and before the ſaid 30th of April laſt, 'as a falſe Traytor and Enemy then and yet to his 'Highneſs Oliver, Lord Protector of theſe Nations, 'together with one Robert Gardiner and Edward 'Chapman, and with one William Smith, of the 'ſaid County of York, Gentlemen, and divers o'thers, did traitorouſly, adviſedly, and malici'ouſly combine together, and plot and contrive to 'betray and yield up the ſaid Gariſon of Hull un'to Charles Stuart, eldeſt Son of the late King 'Charles, now an Enemy to this Commonwealth.

'That the ſaid Sir Henry Slingsby, by like traito'rous Combination, the ſaid 30th of April laſt, 'and divers Times after the ſaid 10th of Oct. 1656. 'did traitorouſly and maliciouſly plot, and con'trive, and endeavour to ſtir up Mutinies within 'the ſaid Gariſon, to withdraw Ralph Waterhouſe, 'John Overton, George Thompſon, &c. Officers of 'the ſame, from their Obedience to his Highneſs 'Oliver Lord Protector.

'That then and there, and at divers other 'Times, as well before as after the ſaid 30th of 'April laſt, and after the ſaid 10th of October, '1656. he the ſaid Sir Henry Slingsby did traitorouſ'ly, adviſedly, and maliciouſly plot, contrive, and 'endeavour to ſtir and raiſe up Forces againſt 'Oliver Lord Protector, and againſt the Govern'ment of this Commonwealth, as the ſame is eſta'bliſhed, and to alter the ſame.

'That the ſaid Sir Henry Slingsby did traitorouſ'ly, &c. then and there declare, publiſh, and pro'mote the ſaid Charles Stuart to be King of Eng'land, Scotland, and Ireland, and the Dominions 'thereto belonging, and held Correſpondence with 'him. All theſe Things the ſaid Sir Henry Slingsby, 'at Kingſton upon Hull aforeſaid, did malicouſly, '&c. carry on by conferring with the ſaid Officers 'how to effect the aforeſaid Treaſon, and encou'raging the ſaid Officers thereto, by promiſing to 'them, and every of them, Rewards and Sums of 'Money to join with him in the Treaſon afore'ſaid, and by delivering to the ſaid Ralph Water'houſe, one of the Officers of the Gariſon, a 'certain Inſtrument under Seal, which the ſaid Sir 'Henry Slingsby ſaid was from Charles Stuart, and 'did purport to be a Commiſſion from the ſaid 'Charles Stuart, to him the ſaid Ralph Waterhouſe, 'to be Governor of the Caſtle. All which ſaid 'Treaſons are contrary to the Statute in that Caſe 'made and provided. With which Treaſons the 'ſaid Attorney-General, on behalf of the Lord 'Protector, &c. doth charge the ſaid Sir Henry 'Slingsby, and prays that the ſaid Sir Henry Slingsby 'may be put to anſwer thereto; averring that the 'ſaid Sir Henry Slingsby is the Perſon by Name ap'pointed by his Highneſs the Lord Protector to be 'tried and proceeded againſt. Signed May 25. '1658.'

Edm. Prideaux.

* Lord Preſident. Thou here ſtandeſt charged for High Treaſon: This Court requires that thou give a poſitive Anſwer, whether guilty, or not guilty. * John Liſle.

Sir Henry Slingsby. I desire to have Counsel assigned me.

Ld President. There is Matter of Fact laid to your Charge, which amounts to Treason; and there is no Law allowed in Matters of Fact.

Sir H. Slingsby. There is also Matter of Law: And I desire to be tried by a Jury, which is according to the Law of the Land.

Ld President. We are all here your Jury, as well as your Judges: We are the Number of two or three Juries. And your Jury is well known; for they are chosen by the Parliament. You are to plead to your Indictment.

Sir H. Slingsby. I desire to know whether there can be any Conviction, unless it be by Confession?

Ld President. If you had looked upon the Act of Parliament, that would have told you: It speaks of Examination of Witnesses; it speaks of your Confession and Answer, and of your Default; and if you do not plead to it, it will be very penal to you.

Sir H. Slingsby. If it be by the Laws of the Land, that the Tryal should be by a Jury, I desire I may have that Privilege.

Ld President. Acts of Parliament make Justice and Law: They are both. They think fit to change the Custom of Tryals that have been in former Times, and all Persons must submit to it. And the Parliament hath thought fit to make this Court both Jury and Judges: And therefore I require that you answer, whether guilty or not guilty.

Sir H. Slingsby. I desire that the Act of Parliament may be read.

Ld President. You are before your Jury and Judges. Parliaments have great Care of the Rights of the People, and have appointed this Court; and his Highness hath appointed you to be tried by us; you ought therefore to plead to your Indictment.

Sir H. Slingsby. The Law gives Liberty in case of Juries to the Party accused, to make his Exceptions against the Jury; which he cannot do here, where you are both Judge and Jury.

Ld President. If you have any particular Exception to any Man, you may make it: You were, Sir, of the Parliament when this Act was made.

Sir H. Slingsby. I was a Prisoner at the same time.

Ld President. Although a Prisoner, yet you are bound by Act of Parliament.

Mr. Phelps, Clerk. You have heard your Charge read, and Plea demanded: The Court again requires of you that you give a positive Answer, whether guilty, or not.

Sir H. Slingsby. I am, my Lord, of an Opinion (though you account it a Paradox) that I cannot trespass against your Laws, because I did not submit to them.

Ld President. All the People of England must submit to the Laws of England, to the Authorities of England; all must submit to my Lord Protector and Acts of Parliament. We sit here by Authority of his Highness, by a Commission under the Great Seal of England, and by Authority of Parliament; and you must submit to our Authority.

Sir H. Slingsby. The Laws have been so uncertain with me, that I could not well know them; and when I was a Prisoner, I could not take notice of them: I could have no Benefit by your Laws, because that is no Law to me which doth not give me Interest and Property to what I have. It is the Benefit of Laws, that they do distinguish between meum and tuum: But when you take all from me, in my Case it is not so.

Mr. Attorn. Gen. Prideaux. He may enjoy as much Benefit by the Laws as any, if he have not forfeited it; and I desire he may be put to answer.

Ld President. The Court again require you to plead to your Indictment.

Sir H. Slingsby. Not guilty.

Mr. Phelps. Your Plea then is, That you are not guilty. To which Sir Henry Slingsby answered, Yes.

Mr. Lechmere. Mr. Attorney-General having exhibited a Charge of High Treason against this Gentleman, Sir H. Slingsby, the Prisoner at the Bar, the Charge doth set forth, That the Town of Kingston upon Hull, October 11. 1656. and ever since, to the Time of exhibiting the Charge, was a Town of this Commonwealth's; and that within that Town, in all that Time, there is and hath been a Garison, and part of the Army of this Commonwealth; and during that Time Ralph Waterhouse, John Overton, George Thompson, &c. were Officers of the Forces of that Garison. That Sir H. Slingsby, minding to imbroil the Commonwealth in War, April 30. last, and divers other Times since October 10. 1656. as a false Traytor and Enemy to his Highness the Lord Protector, did plot, contrive, and endeavour to betray the said Town and Garison to Charles Stuart, an Enemy to this Commonwealth. It sets forth further, That Sir H. Slingsby, the Time and Place aforesaid, did contrive and endeavour to stir up Mutinies among the Soldiery of that Garison, and to raise Forces against this Commonwealth; and that he did publish and declare the said Charles Stuart to be King of England, Scotland, and Ireland, &c. and hath held Correspondence with him; and that he delivered to the said Ralph Waterhouse a certain Instrument, which he said was a Commission from Charles Stuart: All which Treasons are contrary to the Form and Effect of the Act of Parliament. And the Prisoner having pleaded Not guilty, which Plea is recorded, we are ready to prove him guilty, and ready to call our Witnesses.

Mr. At. Gen. You have heard the Charge, and Plea Not guilty; it rests upon us to prove it to you. This Gentleman himself, I believe, when he hath heard them particularly opened, will be convinced that of these Acts he hath been guilty. It would not have been expected from him to have tasted of the Mercy of this Court: For had he had Justice done formerly, he had not been to have answered this here. I do believe it was expected from those that did govern, to have got him off by Mercy, not to take him off by Justice. But he ceased not to interpose on the behalf of Charles Stuart, and endeavoured to bring him in again, and had like to have withdrawn the faithful Officers of that Gason to betray their Trust: If Money would have done it, that was not wanting to be offered; if Preferment would have wrought upon them, that was proffered; if Hopes of higher Preferment under Charles Stuart would have wrought upon them, it would have been done. But to our Witnesses.

Ralph Waterhouse sworn.

Mr. At. Gen. What Discourse had you with Sir Henry Slingsby, touching the delivering up of Hull?

Mr. Waterhouse. I had several Discourses with him; particularly about the latter end of December last, being a hunting, Sir Henry Slingsby's Son came to me in the Field, and told me his Father presented his Service to me, and gave me a Book; which I looked on about an Hour after, and found it was a printed Book. At the beginning was a Paper thus written, written, Put this out with your Finger, and then tell me whether Rob. Gardiner had not ſpoke to me to ſerve the King, &c. Preſently after I acquainted Col. Smith, who adviſed me to diſcover if I could, whether Sir H. Slingsby was carrying on any Plot. I went to Sir H. Slingsby, and Sir H. S. took me to the Window-ſide, and hugged and embraced me; and asked me if Robert Gardiner had not ſpoke to me to ſerve the King: And then began with a great many good words, and ſaid that one (meaning his Highneſs) had put a Diſreſpect upon me, and if I would I might right myſelf, with many other words; and promiſed me a Sum of Money, to ſecure the South-houſe for the Service of the King. About a Week after, he ſent the Book again, and in the ſame Leaf wrote a few Lines more, which I alſo ſhew'd to Col. Smith; he promiſed me 5000 l. in Land or Money here or elſewhere. I made many Queries, and told him I thought it was to no purpoſe: he told me, that if that Houſe were ſecured, in a little time he would bring an Army to beſiege Hull, and then half our Work would be done. He after ſent me another Paper, which was to this purpoſe, That if the Governour ſought for him, he would give Security for his peaceable living; and ſaid, if I would give him a Piece, he would make it twenty if he did not procure me a Commiſſion from C. Stuart within fourteen days. He ſaid further, That a great Party were engaged in Scotland. Upon the ſecond of April he delivered to me a Commiſſion, which he ſaid was from the King; and the Commiſſion being read in Court, the ſaid Mr. Waterhouſe averred it to be the ſame he received of Sir Henry Slingsby, and which ran thus:

C. R.

CHARLES by the Grace of God (with the old uſual Title, &c.) To our Right Truſty and Well-beloved Major Ralph Waterhouſe: We do by theſe Preſents conſtitute and appoint you to be Governour of the Caſtle and two Block-Houſes near Hull, and to put ſuch a Gariſon of Horſe and Foot therein, as you ſhall judge neceſſary for the Defence of the ſame; and to command the ſaid Gariſon as Governour thereof, and to do all things neceſſary for the Preſervation of the ſaid Place. Given at Bruges, March 12. 1657.

Sir H. Slingsby alſo ſaid to me, That he had ſpoken with Capt. Overton, and promiſed to furniſh him with Money to lay in Proviſion, and engaged by a Bond to repay ſuch Money, as I ſhould lay out for the victualling of the South-Houſe: and alſo read a Letter from C. Stuart running thus, I can never be enough ſenſible of your Favours, &c. I demanded how the Army ſhould come; he anſwered, that the Duke of York had 7 or 8000 Men, that the King of Spain would furniſh them, if there was a Place of Security. And asking him what way of Correſpondence he had with C. Stuart, he ſaid he had a way of having Commiſſions from C. Stuart, which he would not diſcover. [Here Sir H. Slingsby ſtood up, and diſowned any ſuch Expreſſion.]

Mr. At. Gen. What Officer were you, Mr. Waterhouſe?

Mr. Waterhouſe. I have the Command of a Company, and of the South Block-houſe.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Waterhouſe, what Letter was that Sir H. Slingsby ſent to his Son?

Mr. Wat. The Contents were thus; That Harry would ſpeak to the two Men to be very importunate with the twelve. Sir H. Slingsby promiſed ſo many Men that he offered Capt. Overton 20 l. to raiſe forty Men.

Mr. At. Gen. How many Men did he tell you ſhould be at Paul near Hull?

Mr. Wat. 600 to march into Hull.

Mr. At. Gen. What Men did he tell you Andrew would raiſe?

Mr. Wat. He ſaid Andrew would raiſe fifty or ſixty Men when he pleaſed, and that Capt. Overton ſhould have a Deputation to command the Caſtle under me: he ſaid he had good hopes of Col. Smith, and that he had a Commiſſion for him, if he would accept of it.

Sir H. Slingsby. This which is here ſpoken in Serioufneſs, was then ſpoke in Mirth, a mere Diſcourſe, as thoſe that are in good Fellowſhip may have, and what I ſaid or did was but in jeſt.

Ld Preſident. There ought to be no good Fellowſhip in Treaſon.

Mr. Wat. I never viſited him but by Col. Smith's Commiſſion. Sir H. Slingsby according to his Engagement, upon receipt of a Piece, gave me another Commiſſion running thus; Oliver, Lord Protector, &c. took it again, and burned it.

Mr. At. Gen. Sir Henry, was it you that filled up that blank Commiſſion?

Sir H. Sliagsby. It is more than any Man knows: but it is not the Commiſſion I gave Waterhouſe, which is dated 12 March 1657.

Capt. John Overton ſworn.

Mr. Phelps ſhew'd him the Commiſſion dated 12 March 1657.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you ſee that Commiſſion delivered to Waterhouſe by Sir H. Slingsby?

Capt. Overton. Yes, I did; he delivered it to him in the Caſtle, about the ſecond of April laſt.

Sir H. Slingsby. Mr. Overton, what Date did that Commiſſion which I then delivered, bear?

Capt. Overton. This is the ſame Commiſſion, and (having it in his hand) I here ſee it is dated 12 March 1657.

Sir H. Slingsby. I deny that the Commiſſion I then delivered did bear that Date.

Waterh. & Overton. My Lord, we are upon our Oaths.

Capt. Overton. I ſaw Sir H. give it to Major Waterhouſe in his own Chamber in the Caſtle of Hull, and Major W. bid me read it, which I did.

Sir H. Slingsby. Was that Commiſſion, which you read, dated 12 March?

[Capt. Overton reads the Copy of it, which he then wrote from the Original, which agreed with this.]

Sir H. Slingsby. I deny that the Commiſſion then delivered was of that date.

Waterh. & Overton. Both deny the altering of the Date.

Sir H. Slingsby. Major Waterhouſe deſired me to alter the Date of the Commiſſion, and I ſcraped out April and the Day, and put in March.

Capt. Overton examined.

Mr. At. Gen. What Treaty was between Sir H. and you at Hull? Are you an Officer there?

Capt. Overton. Yes.

Mr. At. Gen. How long have you been an Officer there?

Capt. Overton. About ten Years.

Mr.

Mr. At. Gen. What Proceedings was there between Sir H. and you? What Meetings had you, &c? Was he your Priſoner?

Capt. Overton. He was my Priſoner. The firſt time he ſpake any thing to me, was on Febr. 18. laſt, when he told me, he thought me the ſtricteſt Man alive with Priſoners, but now would believe the contrary: ſaid, that I ſearched a Man of his for a Letter; but afterwards, to prevent me, he gave his Letter in a Purſe with ſome Money to his Landreſs, who carried it into the Town, and ſent it away; and after that (he told me) I never found any Letter. I told him, if he wanted any thing neceſſary, I would go to the Governour about it: he told me, it was not much for that, but that I might very much befriend him. He wrote to me, that a Colonel (naming him) was engaged to bring ſix Regiments from the King; asking whether I knew my Men were right for me, and particularized one Clark: I told him he was right. He asked me what I thought of 100 l. to give them: I told him they did not uſe to have ſuch great Gratuities. This was 18 Febr. 1657.

28 Febr. He asked me where the Sally-port was: I told him it was twenty yards from the Caſtle. He told me, ſome Priſoners not long ago intended to make an Eſcape that way, but were prevented; and asked me which way it enter'd into the Caſtle, which way I could let in any Men into the Caſtle, that I ſhould not want Money; whether I could tell how to victual the Caſtle, he would be glad if I could do it. He told me, that the King kept his Deſigns ſo cloſe, that none knew of them, and that it was not known whether he would land at Hull or Scarborough.

3 March. He asked me whether I continued my Command: I told him I knew nothing to the contrary; to which he ſhew'd much gladneſs. He told me, Duke Daſſy was to bring a conſiderable Party, but ſtaid ſo long that the reſt were gone.

6 March. He asked me what News, and ſaid that Chapman had aſſured his Son the Town was too ſtrong for the Gariſon; and asked me who I knew in the Town to be right: I told him, Edw. Chapman was not for the Soldiery.

14 March. I told him, that his old Maſter C. Stuart was about to ſet ſail with 7 or 8000 Men. He ſaid, that the King was more private than to let any Man know his Deſign; but asked me, whether I was ready to receive him?

23 March. Sir H. Slingsby being below in our Chamber, told me that I had a fit opportunity to receive ſuch Men as might be right for me. I told him, I thought I could not have half my number. He told me, he was glad I would ſerve the King; and ſaid, that if he had any Favour from the King, I ſhould not want any thing. He told me he had aſſurance, that any that aſſiſted the King when he firſt came to kiſs his Mother Earth, he would give them 4 or 5000 l. That he would furniſh me with Money; and deſired that I would not ſhoot any great Bullets at King Charles's Men when they were landing. And further told me, That if I would take a Deputation to command under Major Waterhouſe, he would procure it.

On April 2. Sir H. S. told Major Waterhouſe, That he had a Commiſſion for him to be Governour of Hull, and I ſaw him deliver a Parchment Commiſſion to Major Waterhouſe.

Mr. At. Gen. If Sir H. hath any thing to object, he may.

Sir H. Slingsby. I ſee that I am trepan'd by theſe two Fellows; they have ſaid that ſeriouſly againſt me, which was ſpoken in mirth between us: I never ſought to them, but they to me; the Commiſſion was procured by no Intercourſe with any Perſons beyond the Seas, but a Blank which I had for four Years together. Nor had I any Correſpondence beyond Sea, to carry on any Deſign here.

Lieutenant George Thompſon ſworn.

Being asked what Officer he was, he anſwered, I am a Lieutenant to Major Waterhouſe, I was deſired to go and ſee Sir H. Slingsby, April 16. who told me, That he had great Confidence in me. I ſaid to him, Why? He told me, he thought I had good Thoughts of the King. His Son told me, he heard the King was to come in, and to bring in a conſiderable Army, but knew not when. Next day I went again to Sir H. and asked him if he would walk on the Leads, which he did; and there I told him, I had been pondering on the words he laſt ſpoke to me: who then hugging me, ſaid, I have a great deal of Confidence in you, there is a Deſign in agitation to bring in the King with a conſiderable Army, but he did not know how ſoon it would be; but told me, I ſhould have notice of it: and ſaid that the King had promiſed Pardon to all Officers but the Lord Protector and Lord Bradſhaw.

Sir H. Slingsby. I confeſs ſuch like Diſcourſes; but—— Waterhouſe ſpoke to me, that I would ſpeak to Thompſon to try whether he would be aſſiſtant; but I told him I would not, leſt he ſhould not accept it, and then turn him out of his Place. Waterhouſe preſſed me to go to Thompſon, and Major Waterhouſe invited us to his Houſe to Dinner: After Dinner he ſpoke to Thompſon to go with me on the Leads, to ſhew me the Guns; we walked about, and came down again. Then ſaid Waterhouſe to me, Did not you ſpeak to Thompſon? I ſaid not. You had a good opportunity, ſaid he. At laſt Thompſon came to me, and I had ſome Diſcourſe with him about it.

Ld Preſident. Sir H. S. have you any thing elſe to ſay?

Sir H. Slingsby. No, my Lord.

[Then Mr. Serjeant Maynard ſummed up the Charge, Plea, and Evidence, and eloquently ſet forth the Fulneſs and Clearneſs of the Evidence, with the Heinouſneſs of the Offence, and demanded the Judgment of the Court.]

Mr. At. Gen. I ſhall not trouble you with Repetition, the Matter being clearly laid open. The Place where this Acting was, and where the Deſign was laid, was, I may ſafely ſay, the moſt conſiderable Place in England for Charles Stuart's Deſign; a Place ſtrongly ſeated and ſituated, and remote from this City: and had he prevailed there, as he endeavoured, it had not been Peace with us that now are here. And truly, my Lord, I cannot but pity thoſe Gentlemen that are thus drawn into Deſigns which I am confident will never take; and I am ſorry that People ſhould be ſo ſeduced as they are, for their Seducers bring them to the Gallows, and then laugh at them. And, my Lord, I pity this Gentleman (pointing at Sir H.) that thoſe grey Hairs ſhould thus go to the Grave. I have no more to ſay, but crave the Juſtice of this Court.

The

The Serjeant at Arms was commanded to take away the Priſoner.

Proclamation for Adjournment of the Court into the Painted Chamber: after a little private Debate in the Painted Chamber, they adjourned till Thurſday next, Nine in the Morning.

Thurſday, May 27. being appointed for the Meeting of the ſame Court, about Ten of the clock they accordingly met in the Painted Chamber Weſtminſter; where after about two Hours private Debate, they adjourned till Tueſday next, the firſt Day of June.

The Tryal of Dr. John Hewet, on Tueſday the firſt Day of June 1658. 10 Car. II.

THE Serjeant at Arms being commanded by the Court to fetch the Priſoners to the Bar; Dr. Hewet was brought to the Bar accordingly.

After Proclamation was made for Silence, the Lord Preſident asked Mr. Attorney-General what he had to ſay againſt the Priſoner at the Bar. Mr. Attorney-General thereupon exhibited an Impeachment of High Treaſon againſt the Priſoner, and deſired it might be read, and pray'd that the Court would pleaſe to receive his Anſwer thereunto. The Charge was read by Mr. Phelps the Clerk; the Effect of which was as followeth, viz.

'THAT John Hewet, late of the Pariſh of Gregory's in the City of London, Doctor of Divinity, minding and intending to embroil this Commonwealth in new and inteſtine Wars, the 30th of April now laſt paſt, and at divers times ſince the 10th of October, which was in the Year of our Lord 1656, and before the ſaid 30th of April laſt paſt, as a falſe Traytor and Enemy to Oliver then and yet Lord Protector of the Commonwealth of England, Scotland, and Ireland, and the Dominions and Territories thereunto belonging, and to the ſaid Commonwealth; together with one Trelawney late of London Gent. Henry Biſhop of Lewes in Suſſex Gent. and other their Complices, at the Pariſh of Gregory's aforeſaid, and at Lewes in Suſſex, did traitorouſly, adviſedly, and maliciouſly plot, contrive, and endeavour to ſtir up Force, and levy War againſt the ſaid Oliver Lord Protector, and againſt the Government of this Commonwealth, as the ſame is now eſtabliſhed, and to ſubvert and alter the ſame. And did alſo then and there, and at divers other times and places, as well before as after the ſaid 30th Day of April now laſt paſt, and after the ſaid 10th of October 1656. traitorouſly, adviſedly, and maliciouſly declare, publiſh, and promote Charles Stuart, eldeſt Son to the late King Charles, to be King of England, Scotland, and Ireland, and the Dominions thereunto belonging: And did then and there traitorouſly, adviſedly, and maliciouſly hold Intelligence and Correſpondence with the ſaid Charles Stuart. All which ſaid Treaſons he the ſaid John Hewet, at the Pariſh of Gregory's in the ſaid City of London, and alſo at Lewes and elſewhere, did traitorouſly, adviſedly, and maliciouſly declare, at the times and places aforeſaid, by conferring with John Stapely and Henry Mallory how to effect the ſame; and by encouraging the ſaid John Stapely and Henry Mallory thereunto, and by delivering Commiſſions to them from the ſaid Charles Stuart, concerning the levying War againſt the ſaid Oliver Lord Protector of the Commonwealth of England, Scotland, and Ireland, &c.——— All which ſaid Treaſons are contrary to the Statute in that caſe made and provided. With which ſaid Treaſons committed and done, the ſaid Attorney-General for and on the behalf of his Highneſs the Lord Protector and the Commonwealth, doth charge and impeach the ſaid John Hewet; and for and on the behalf of the ſaid Oliver Lord Protector, and the Commonwealth, prayeth that the ſaid John Hewet may be put to anſwer; that ſuch Tryal, Judgment, and Proceedings may be had againſt him, as to Juſtice doth appertain. And the ſaid Attorney-General doth aver that the ſaid John Hewet is the Perſon by Name appointed by his Highneſs the Lord Protector to be try'd and proceeded againſt according to the Act.'

[Dr. Hewet the Priſoner ſitting covered whilſt his Impeachment was reading, the Lord Preſident commanded his Hat to be taken off; which the Doctor obſerving, took it off himſelf. Then Mr. Phelps, Clerk to the High Court, addreſs'd to the Priſoner to this effect:]

Mr. Phelps. John Hewet D. D. thou ſtandeſt here charged of High Treaſon; this Court requires you to give a poſitive Anſwer, whether Guilty or Not Guilty.

Dr. Hewet. My Lord, if I have already miſbehaved myſelf here, my Error is the more pardonable, becauſe I have not had any Counſel; and I dare not preſume to have any Knowledge in any Faculty, eſpecially in the Law. I never did change my Caſſock into a Jump; I am better acquainted with a Pulpit than a Bar; better read in St. Auſtin than my Lord Coke; and in the Fathers, than Raſtal's Reports, or Plowden's Commentaries. In all my Life I never ſtudied any Law-Caſe till now; that Neceſſity that hath no Law hath made me thus far to become a Lawyer, as to think to plead (not for my Livelihood, but) for my Life. God forgive them that have occaſioned this unuſual and unaccuſtomed accuſtomed Study, that hath put me into ſuch a Pulpit as I never ſaw before. And therefore, my Lord, in as much as I have often heard that there are ſuch Niceties in the Law, that a Man may be loſt in the Severity of it for a word ſpoken in mere Simplicity; I ſhall crave that there may be nothing taken, in prejudice to my Innocency, from words ſpoken in Simplicity: and I hope you will pleaſe to grant me that.

Ld Preſident. Dr. Hewet, I am ſorry, truly very ſorry, to ſee ſuch a one as you in that place; but you are impeached of High Treaſon: All Favour will be ſhewn you according to the Rules of Juſtice. I think you deſire Counſel.

Dr. Hewet. No, my Lord, it is firſt, that I knowing nothing of the Law, may have nothing (ſimply ſpoken) prejudice me; and that you will allow me Counſel.

Ld Preſident. The Court is Counſel for you, your Buſineſs is to plead to the Indictment; you are required by the Court to anſwer whether guilty or not guilty.

Dr. Hewet. My Lord, you ſit there as Judge, I beſeech you let me know by what Commiſſion you ſit there.

Ld Preſident. Dr. Hewet, we ſit here by a Commiſſion under the Great Seal of England, in purſuance of an Act of Parliament; that's our Commiſſion.

Dr. Hewet. Pray give me the favour to have the Commiſſion read, my Lord.

Ld Preſident. Dr. Hewet, we know our own Authority, it is not uſual to read Commiſſions to Priſoners; the Laws of England and Acts of Parliament are to be ſubmitted to.

Dr. Hewet. I am not to own every Perſon that will ſit to judge me, therefore I deſire to know by what Commiſſion you ſit, and who are the Judges, and then I ſhall ſay more.

Ld Preſident. Thoſe that are to judge you, are very well known; you conſented your ſelf to the Judges, we are all choſen by Act of Parliament, the Parliament hath conſented to it; we are choſen Judges, and are your Judges by Act of Parliament.

Dr. Hewet. My Lord, I muſt know the Perſons, whether they be all here; I ſee but very few.

Ld Preſident. Here be very many, and we have been all called this Morning, as the Courſe is, and we ſit now as your Judges.

Dr. Hewet. Under favour, my Lord, as I remember, the Commiſſion by the Act is directed to 150, and there are the Lords Commiſſioners of the Great Seal, with the Lords of his Highneſs's Treaſury, and all the Judges, and divers other Perſons, are named in the Act of Parliament: I do not ſee ſo many Faces as are mentioned in that Act.

Ld Preſident. Dr. Hewet, I muſt tell you the Quorum is any Seventeen or more of them: if we are here Seventeen or more, we are a Quorum by that Commiſſion: we are here I believe forty or fifty.

Dr. Hewet. My Lord, with Submiſſion, the Caſe is true, in caſe the Commiſſioners were but ſeventeen, and they all preſent, then they might hear and determine; but if one were abſent, they cannot, my Lord, as I conceive.

Ld Preſident. You are a Perſon of Parts, and therefore we may delight to hear you; but we muſt keep our ſelves to the Buſineſs of the Court: You are required by the Court to anſwer the Impeachment.

Dr. Hewet. My Lord, if you ſit by the Act, ſit according to the Act, and then I ſhall ſubmit. It was reſolved by all the Judges of the King's-Bench in the 13th of Eliz. in the Earl of Leiceſter's Caſe. See Plowden, fol. &c.

Mr. At. Gen. The Doctor did profeſs his Ignorance in the Laws, yet pretends more Knowledge than the Court: The Court are here, and know themſelves lawfully authorized to try you. Dr. Hewet, if you pleaſe to proceed to give your Anſwer, whether guilty or not, you will find the Juſtice of the Court to be according to the Laws of England.

Dr. Hewet. This learned Gentleman, I know his Face, though not his Name; he ſpeaks according to Worth, but I cannot anſwer him according to Law, and therefore ſtill plead Ignorance of the Law, but deſire to be tryed according to Law; and I have given you a Law-Precedent, if you will go againſt it, I ſhall ſay no more.

Mr. At. Gen. This Gentleman hath it by Tradition, not by his own Knowledge; but the Caſe he mentions cannot parallel this. The Act of Parliament ſaith, an Hundred and Fifty, or any Seventeen; here are three Seventeens.

Mr. Sol. Ellis. I think the Commiſſion is directed to your Lordſhips, or any Seventeen: [Which Commiſſioners, or any Seventeen, &c.] The Meaning whereof is, That thoſe Seventeen, or more reſpectively, ſhould hear, &c. There were ſeveral Quorums for England, Scotland and Ireland; Seventeen for England, Thirteen for Scotland, &c. That Caſe out of Plowden differs clearly from this: for if a Commiſſion be directed, and there be no Quorum, then the Commiſſioners muſt all certify. We humbly conceive, that if your Lordſhips be here Seventeen, or more, you are fully authorized to proceed.

Mr. At. Gen. In many Caſes you have a Quorum of Perſons, ſuch and ſuch Men: it's true, here is no Quorum of Perſons, but a Quorum of the Number; and if there be a Quorum of Seventeen, it is warrantable.

Dr. Hewet. This learned Gentleman, he is better able to ſpeak what is Law than I; but under favour, and with ſubmiſſion, I do not think he may judge of the Laws, or the other (that ſpoke his private Conception) to interpret the Meaning of the Parliament. And, my Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, I ſhall make this my humble Appeal to the learned Judges of the Law, That if they will ſay in this reſpect, that this is a lawful Judicature, I ſhall proceed.

Ld Preſident. You have heard the words of the Act of Parliament read, Authority is given to the Commiſſioners, or any Seventeen or more of them; [Which ſaid Commiſſioners reſpectively] that is, for England Seventeen, or more of them: and you have heard the Judgment of the Court upon that. That which you ſpeak of in relation to my Lord Leiceſter's Caſe is true; if a Commiſſion be directed to Commiſſioners, and no Quorum appointed, then all muſt certify; but by the Act of Parliament, and the Commiſſion made in purſuance of it, the Quorum is Seventeen: but here are three Quorums.

Dr. Hewet. My Lord, in as much as all the Commiſſioners are named in that Act, and that Commiſſion is according to the Act, they are all commiſſionated to ſit; and unleſs all ſit, the reſt cannot try and examine, &c. And I ſhall refer it to the Judges of the Laws.

Ld Preſident. We did not call our ſelves to be your Judges; by being named your Judges by Act of Parliament, we have power to declare to you what what the Law is by that Act of Parliament, I have declared it.

Dr. Hewet. My Lord, if the Quorum had been named, then it were somewhat; but it being directed to seventeen, or more, when more or seventeen are commissionated, all must sit: I refer it again to the Judges of the Laws.

Ld President. Dr. Hewet, what you say now, or what you say hereafter, besides this, you have time to speak to, as to Matter of Law, after Matter of Fact hath been tryed; if you plead to Matter of Fact, what you say to the Court as to Matter of Law, we shall be ready to hear it; apply your self to the Court in Matter of Fact. The Court asks you, whether guilty or not?

Dr. Hewet. My Lord, I must first know whether the Court be a lawful Judicature before I give in my Defence.

Ld President. Dr. Hewet, you have offered very much touching the Jurisdiction of the Court, in Conclusion you must acquiesce; I must put you up to plead; you know the Danger, if you do not plead, being required: if you stand mute and do not plead, it is equally as dangerous to you, as if you had confessed the Crimes.

Dr. Hewet. I am so highly sensible of the Priviledges of an Englishman, that both for the Satisfaction of my own Conscience, and all Persons, I would not willingly give up the Liberties and Privileges of any English Freeman to any body that demands it; I am very loth that there should be any just Imputation laid upon me, that I should seek a Disturbance in point of Self-interest, to divide my self from the Communion of those that are my Fellow-Freemen; and I should (as I have always) abhorr'd to be both a Schismatick from the Church, and singular from the State. My Lord, I am so concerned for the Privileges of an English Freeman, and publick Interest, that I should be loth to do any thing towards the giving them up, that might make my Heart ake. I shall desire it may be determined by the Judges.

Ld President. You speak of common Friendship; what is common Friendship, but to be a Friend to the publick Government? If you have been a Friend to the Government and Peace of this Nation, you need not fear to plead to the Indictment: And therefore I require you to plead to it.

Dr. Hewet. Whenever you shall come to a particular Examination of the Business, it will not appear that I have been an Enemy; I desire, that whereas there are many Niceties in the Laws, I humbly crave the Engagement of your Honours, that there may not be any Advantage taken.

Mr. At. Gen. God forbid.

Dr. Hewet. My Lord, I think I have not spoken any thing unreasonably, or against Law, and therefore humbly crave my former Request.

Mr. At. Gen. If you please, the Doctor knows that there must be a Judgment in which we must acquiesce: This is that Judicature that calls you before them; you sit by the highest Authority of England; an Act of Parliament in the first place, a Commission under the Great Seal in the second place, and a Commission of his Highness, against whom, of which the Doctor is one; I desire he may give an Answer to the Impeachment; that being done, we shall have Liberty on both sides to speak to what is Justice, and Law, and Fact: if you are not guilty, be you assured that this Court will not take your Blood upon them, you have a very fair Court.

Dr. Hewet. This learned Person speaks very fairly; it shall be far from me to question any Act of a lawful Parliament: but under favour, as yet it doth not appear to me, that you have by that Act by which you sit, Power to hear and determine concerning the Matters of which I am charged: I refer it, and appeal again and again to the learned Judges of the Laws, even his Highness's Judges.

Ld President. Dr. Hewet, the Court has had much Patience in hearing of you thus long, you having not so much as owned their Authority; if you will not own us, we will own you: therefore I require the Clerk to enter it, that we have required you to plead.

Mr. Phelps Clerk. John Hewet, you here stand charged of High Treason against his Highness the Lord Protector and the Commonwealth; the Charge hath been read to you, the Court have demanded whether guilty or not guilty; they again demand of you whether guilty or not guilty.

Dr. Hewet. My Lord, I shall be very loth to do any thing to save my Life, and forfeit a good Conscience; and I shall not, for my private Interest, give up the Privileges of those that are equal Freemen with my self: I am look'd upon in a double Capacity, as a Clergyman, and as a Commonwealth's Man; I should be very loth to be scandalous in either: And pray be pleased to do that Justice to your selves, as to vindicate the Legality of your Judicature, and then I'll proceed.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, you was pleased to tell the Doctor, That you will own him when he doth not own you; but, my Lord, his flying in your Face, and taxing you thus, is not to be endured: I wish he would have that Consideration of himself, that if he doth not own your Authority, you expect to be owned, otherwise he will be supposed to be guilty of all those Crimes that are laid to his Charge; and by not pleading, he doth confess them; that will be an high Scandal, Mr. Doctor: therefore to vindicate your self, I desire you to answer.

Dr. Hewet. This learned Gentleman hath urged it with a great deal of Civility and Respect to me, which I must own, and thankfully acknowledge: but, my Lord, withal, I dare not, for the saving of my self, give up others; so many thousands of others, by my Precedent, that might likewise be involved in the same Condition that I am in: therefore, my Lord, let it appear that it is a lawful Judicature, and I have done.

Mr. At. Gen. I beseech Mr. Doctor to consider his Case; he is not brought as a Champion for the People of England; as he stands charged, he appears to you to be contrary affected: I humbly beg that he may be put to plead, that so his Innocency may be clear'd.

Dr. Hewet. My Lord, I said before that I am no Lawyer, I understand nothing of it, neither desire to be Judge in my own Cause; but I do not desire likewise to be judged by every Person that would sit to judge me; neither would I give up that Right that belongs to an Englishman, to every one that demands it: Therefore I desire you to grant this Petition, That you will make appear that you are a lawful Judicature. I would rather die ten thousand times than I will be guilty of giving up my Fellow-Freemen's Liberties and Privileges.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, some of his own Coat have acknowledged the like Authority before him; but if Mr. Doctor be peremptory in this, that he will not own your Authority, and plead to his Charge, I must do my Duty; that is, humbly to pray the Court, that if he refuſe to anſwer, I muſt pray their Judgment, and acquaint him with the words of the Act; [which accordingly were read.] So that, my Lord, in default of Anſwer, if Mr. Doctor will not plead to this, my Lord, I muſt thereupon pray that you will proceed according to the Act, as in Caſes of High Treaſon, which is very penal. I have no more to ſay.

Dr. Hewet. My Lord, I ſuppoſe theſe learned Gentlemen, who are ſo learned in the Laws, will be cautious what they do againſt Law; and I hope they will remember what Condemnation and Execution befel Treſilian in the 11th of Richard the Second, that did there miſadviſe the King to do ſuch and ſuch things; that is much like to this Caſe of mine: And withal, I hope they will remember what befel the Judges in the Caſe of Ship-money, in the time of the late King; and therefore I hope they will be cautious themſelves in doing any thing that is contrary to Law.

Ld Preſident. Dr. Hewet, you have heard the Clauſe of the Act of Parliament read to you, whereby you may underſtand, that either we muſt proceed upon your Anſwer, or elſe to Judgment upon your Refuſal; if upon your Anſwer you clear your Innocency, then thoſe Freemen you ſpeak of, may faithfully embrace you: but if you will not anſwer, we muſt proceed to Judgment. I am ſorry for your Robe-ſake, but if you will not anſwer, you cannot acquit your ſelf; you thereby confeſs it: Therefore let me adviſe you, for your Robe-ſake, to follow the beſt Counſel; that is, to put your ſelf upon that which Priſoners muſt do. Anſwer to it, guilty, or not guilty?

Dr. Hewet. My Lord, I hope it is not the Senſe of the whole Court, that they ſhould proceed againſt me, either to Sentence, or any other way, till firſt they clear themſelves to me.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, who is the Judge? You muſt clear your ſelf to him.

Ld Preſident. If there be any here that are of another Opinion, let him declare himſelf. Dr. Hewet, you loſe your ſelf mightily in ſaying this one thing ſo often, and we loſe our time: I require you again to plead.

Dr. Hewet. My Lord, I cannot ſpeak of that too often, that is ſo dear and precious to me and every Perſon.

Mr. At. Gen. I can ſay no more, but pray your Juſtice.

Ld Preſident. Dr. Hewet, I am called upon by the Court, becauſe of your Refuſal to anſwer; but I pity you very much, and therefore deſire once more the Patience and Favour of the Court, that they would give you leave to anſwer: Therefore Mr. Doctor, that we may not record your ſtanding mute, and refuſing to anſwer, I ſhall once more, in favour to you, require you to anſwer. Clerk, ſtay your hand a while.

Dr. Hewet. My Lord, both the Court and all theſe Perſons will thus clear me to the whole World, that I have referred my ſelf, and appealed to his Highneſs's Judges of the Law, to reſolve whether this be a lawful Judicature: this Appeal is denied, therefore I muſt proceed to ſome other thing, ſeeing you all deny me that.

Mr. Phelps, Clerk. John Hewet, D. D. you ſtand here charged on behalf of his Highneſs the Lord Protector, of Treaſon againſt him and his Commonwealth; you have heard the Charge, the Court hath ſeveral times demanded your Anſwer, and you refuſe; they the third time require your Anſwer, whether guilty, or not guilty.

Dr. Hewet. Pray, my Lord, is there any Indictment found againſt me by a Grand Jury, by which I am to be tried? For by the fifth and ſixth of Edward the Sixth, all Treaſons are to be inquired into, and preſented by twelve Men: the Commiſſion by which you ſit, doth not declare any other way: I beſeech you, is there any other Indictment?

Ld Preſident. You have a very great Grand Jury, forty Perſons, and we have Power upon a ſpecial Act of Parliament, to give order for a Charge to be brought in againſt you; and we have, according to that Power and Authority, given order for this Charge to be brought in againſt you, and you are to anſwer to it.

Dr. Hewet. My Lord, with Submiſſion, you are not a competent Jury.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, now it is the ſecond Part to the ſame Tune; I know there are many others upon the ſame String when this is reſolved. Sir, this is the Grand Jury, the Petty Jury, and your Judge; they require you to give your Anſwer, whether guilty, or not guilty.

Dr. Hewet. My Lord, this is likewiſe denied me, I now humbly crave a Copy of my Charge, Time to anſwer to it, and Counſel aſſigned me.

Ld Preſident. For the Copy of your Charge, it was never granted to any Priſoner indicted for High Treaſon. For Counſel, you are now upon Matter of Fact, whether guilty or not guilty.

Mr. At. Gen. I have a word to inform him, I would not preſs any thing againſt him, which in my Judgment I thought not legal; you have given him your Reſolution as to the Juriſdiction, there is nothing now to ſay, but guilty or not guilty: he muſt bring himſelf to be a Party, or elſe nothing can be asked.

Dr. Hewet. I think the Priſoner cannot be charged and tryed on one and the ſame Day, no more than a Man can be indicted and tried the ſame Day, as in Calway's Report's; and this was declared to be Law in the Caſe of the Portugal Ambaſſador's Brother.

Mr. At. Gen. You are not upon your Tryal, you muſt plead and join Iſſue, and then we will conſider whether we will try you now or no; yet there is many a Man hath been brought to Priſon the ſame day, found the ſame day, and tryed the ſame day.

Dr. Hewet. I deſire a Copy of my Charge, if not that, I deſire time to ſpeak, and Counſel aſſigned me, which hath been the Courſe of former times; for Counſel it hath been uſually allowed, as in the Caſe of Humphry Stafford in the time of Henry the Seventh, and in the Caſe of Lilburn. Baron Nicholas and Serjeant Maynard were of Counſel for Major Rolph, who endeavoured to poiſon the late King: And for Matter of Law, it ought to be allowed, as in my Lord Coke—— and Dyer's ſixth Book of his Reports, 14 fol. is of the ſame Opinion. Arundel had Counſel aſſigned him for Murder, in Matter of Law.

Sol. Ellis. For Matter of Fact, it was never allowed; but if he plead, and any Matter of Law do ariſe that's doubtful to the Court, then the Court, if they doubt of it, aſſign Counſel; but the Priſoner muſt plead firſt to the Matter of Fact. For a Man to be accuſed the ſame day, and tryed the ſame day, is no new thing. For Counſel, if any thing thing ariſe in Matter of Law, then it may be conſidered. The Portugal Embaſſador's Brother came, and was accuſed and tryed the ſame day. We ſhall humbly pray that he may plead guilty or not guilty; if any Matter of Law ariſe, your Lordſhips may do him Juſtice.

Dr. Hewet. My Lord, with Submiſſion, this learned Gentleman hath underſtood me but in part; my Requeſt was for Counſel for Matter of Law in general, as well as particular for Matter of Fact. I humbly conceive that there are ſeveral Acts of Parliament that do free me from this Charge, and particularly the great Charter of England; for which I humbly crave I may have Counſel aſſigned me.

Ld Preſident. You are now in Generals; you ſpeak of ſeveral Acts of Parliament, and you would have Counſel to plead; Counſel was never allowed in this Caſe upon ſuch a general Deſire: many that ſtand about you may have a Prejudice to you, and think you are loth to plead; I have called upon you often: if we ſhould once record the Refuſal, it would be very penal. I would adviſe you to plead to the Indictment.

Dr. Hewet. My Lord, ſince you have denied me Counſel, I ſhall deſire to ſpeak ſomething in my own behalf.

Mr. At. Gen. This is a very ill Precedent to the Juſtice of England; I ſuppoſe that you will allow him all Favour, but the Juſtice of England muſt be preferred againſt all Perſons whatſoever. The Juriſdiction is ſettled to the Satisfaction of the Doctor himſelf; if he will bring himſelf a Party, and ask any thing of you, that muſt be by pleading: till then he can ask nothing.

Dr. Hewet. My Lord, the Judicature is not yet cleared to me, for the Legality of it; and if you pleaſe to give a little Patience, I ſhall give you the Reaſons why.

Mr. At. Gen. I ſhall deſire it may be no more thus.

Ld Preſident. I ſhall ſay no more to you, we muſt make our Authority appear to you either by trying of you, or judging of you: will you be try'd?

Dr. Hewet. My Lord, the Charge depends upon an Act of Parliament which was made about two Years ſince; the Members of which Parliament were choſen by the People, yet notwithſtanding one hundred and fifty of them were not permitted to ſit—— 17 Septemb. 1656.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we muſt not ſuffer this; pray, if he will not be otherwiſe ſatisfied, I muſt require your ſtrict Juſtice. Your words they are ſeditious; this ſhews the Spirit of the Man.

Dr. Hewet. I hope you will have Patience to hear me for Vindication of my ſelf, and Satisfaction of my own Conſcience and all Perſons whatever; and withal, for the clearing of your ſelves, that you do not bring Blood upon your ſelves by taking that Power that is not juſtifiable——

Mr. At. Gen. Truly, my Lord, this is inſufferable; Mr. Doctor hath had as much Reſpect as ever any had. I have attended many, I never ſaw the like in my time; you have had the Patience to hear him oppoſe your ſelves, your Authority, your Perſons, and to ſtrike at the Root of all. Mr. Doctor, I would have you to carry your ſelf with more Reſpect. This ſhews that much of what is charged againſt him, is true: if you will ſcorn the Court, ſay it poſitively.

Dr. Hewet. My Lord, I humbly ſubmit my ſelf to the Laws of the Land; I ſhall not diſpute Acts of Parliament, but I conceive (if you will pleaſe to give me a little Patience) an Houſe of Commons is not Authority enough——

Ld Preſident. Mr. Doctor, pray remember that Text, He that ſeemeth to be religious, and bridleth not his Tongue, his Religion is vain. Will you plead or not?

Dr. Hewet. My Lord, whilſt I ſpeak for the Laws of the Land, this is not an evil Speech.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, if you pleaſe, I did receive your Commands to prepare this Charge againſt this Doctor; in obedience to you I have done it, not willingly againſt your Perſon, Mr. Doctor; I have ſome others to proceed againſt, if you will pleaſe that Mr. Doctor may diſpatch one way or other. I muſt pray your final Sentence, if he do not plead immediately.

Dr. Hewet. My Lord, what I petitioned for before, I do again, That ſeeing you will not pleaſe to give me leave to ſpeak either as to the Privileges of Engliſhmen, nor as to the Act, I deſire time to ſpeak to the Charge, and Counſel.

Ld Preſident. You have heard that I muſt require your Anſwer; you muſt plead guilty, or not guilty.

Dr. Hewet. Hath your Lordſhip aſſigned me Counſel in Matter of Fact, when Matters of Law ariſe?

Ld Preſident. We ſhall then take the Conſideration of it, now is not a time.

Dr. Hewet. My Lord, I am in a great ſtraight, I pray God aſſiſt me; and I here appeal to Almighty God, and to all the World, that I do againſt my Soul and Conſcience nothing that ſhall be to the Prejudice of the Privileges of the Laws of England; if there ſhall be any thing in theſe Proceedings that ſhall be to the Diſadvantage of others, my Soul be clear of it, the Guilt be upon others; ſeeing I am neceſſitated upon this, and cannot have Counſel aſſigned me for the Judicature, for the Legality of it, I referring my ſelf to the Judges of the Land: I durſt refer my ſelf to his Highneſs's own Counſel, that if they will ſay that this Particular that I have urged, that this is a lawful Judicature, I will go on.

Ld Preſident. I am required by the Court, before I enter your Refuſal, I require your Anſwer.

Dr. Hewet. I am in a great Diſpute, and I pray God direct me what to do in this Caſe; though I do not at all diſpute my own Innocency, which I hope I ſhall clear; yet I could petition again (though I am tedious to you, yet I can never importune enough) to take into your Thoughts your ſelves and Poſterity, and all the People of England.

Ld Preſident. I ſhall deſire, becauſe you may ſee what I ſay comes from the Act of Parliament, I ſhall deſire the words may be read to him, what is to be done, if he refuſe to anſwer.

Clerk, read the Clauſe.

['And for Examination of Witneſſes upon Oath '(which the ſaid reſpective Commiſſioners are 'hereby authorized to adminiſter) and thereupon, 'or upon Confeſſion of the Party, or in Default of 'ſuch Anſwer, to proceed to Conviction and final 'Sentence, as in Caſes of High Treaſon, and Miſ-'priſion of Treaſon, according to Juſtice and the 'Merits of the Cauſe; and ſuch final Sentence to 'execute, or cauſe to be executed ſpeedily and im-'partially.']

Dr. Hewet. My Lord, this is a printed Paper which is called an Act of Parliament——

Ld Preſident. I muſt take you off, you have been required to anſwer, often required; and having refuſed, in the name of the Court I require the Clerk to record it; and pray take away your Priſoner.

Dr. Hewet. My Lord——

Court. Take him away, take him away.

The

The Tryal of JOHN MORDANT Esq; on Tuesday the First of June, 1658. 10 Car. II.

THE Serjeant at Arms was commanded to bring John Mordant Esq; to the Bar; who was brought accordingly.

Lord President. Mr. Atttorney, what have you to say against the Prisoner at the Bar?

Mr. Attorney-General. My Lord, I have prepared a Charge of High Treason against the Gentleman at the Bar, which I desire may be read.

The Substance of the Impeachment.

Mr. Phelps. John Mordant Esq; stand at the Bar, and hear your Charge.

A Charge of High Treason against John Mordant of Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, Esq; as followeth, viz.

'THAT John Mordant, late of the Parish of 'Clement Danes, in the said County of Middlesex, Esq; minding and intending to embroil 'this Commonwealth in new and intestine Wars 'and Seditions, on the 30th of April now last past, 'and at divers other Days and Times since the '10th of October, 1656. and before the said 30th 'of April last, as a false Traytor and Enemy to 'Oliver, then and yet Lord Protector of the Com'monwealth of England, Scotland, and Ireland, and 'the Dominions thereto belonging, and to this 'Commonwealth; together with Henry Bishop, late 'of Parham, in the County of Sussex, Gent. Hartgil 'Baron, and Francis Mansel, and divers others, their 'Complices, at the Parish of Clement Danes aforesaid, 'and at divers other Places, did traitorously, ad'visedly, and maliciously plot, contrive, and en'deavour to stir up and raise War against the said 'Oliver, then and yet Lord Protector of this Com'monwealth, and against the Government thereof, 'as the same was established, and to alter and sub'vert the same; and did also then and there, as 'well before as after the said 30th of April last 'past, and after the 10th of October, 1656. traito'rously, advisedly, and maliciously declare, pub'lish, and promote Charles Stuart, eldest Son of the 'late King Charles, to be King of England, Scotland, 'and Ireland, &c. and did then and there traito'rously, advisedly, and maliciously hold Intelligence 'and Correspondence with the said Charles Stuart. 'All which said Treason and Treasons he the said 'John Mordant, the said 30th of April last, and 'other the Times and Places aforesaid, and af'ter the said 10th of October, 1656. at Clement 'Danes, and other Places, did traitorously declare 'by Overt-Act, that is to say, by conferring with 'J. Stapely Esq; and Henry Mallory, and others, 'how to effect the same; and did then and there 'encourage the said John Stapely and Henry Mal'lory, and others, thereunto; and did deliver 'Commissions to several Persons in the Name of, 'and as from the said Charles Stuart, concerning 'the raising of Forces, and levying War against 'the said Oliver, then and yet Lord Protector, 'and against this Commonwealth: All which said 'Treason and Treasons are contrary to the Statute 'in that Case made and provided. With which said 'Treason and Treasons, he the said Attorney-Ge'neral, for and on the behalf of the said Oliver, then 'and yet Lord Protector, and on the behalf of the 'said Commonwealth, as aforesaid, doth charge 'and impeach the said John Mordant. And the 'said Attorney General prayeth, That he the said 'John Mordant may be put to answer; and that 'such Proceedings, Tryal, and Judgment may be 'had against the said Mordant, as is agreeable to 'Law. And the said Attorney-General doth aver 'that the said John Mordant is a Person by Name 'appointed by his Highness and Council to be 'proceeded against.'

Mr. Phelps. John Mordant Esq; thou standest here charged with High Treason against his Highness the Lord Protector and the Commonwealth. You have heard the Charge read: The Court demands your positive Answer thereto, whether guilty, or not guilty.

Mr. Mordant. My Lord, I desire I may hear the Commission read, by which you sit.

Ld President. You are impeached of High Treason: We require your Answer.

Mr. Mordant. I desire the Commission may be read, and the Commissioners Names.

Ld President. You are to be tried by the Laws of England, Act of Parliament, and Commission under the Great Seal of England, in pursuance of that Act.

Mr. Mordant. I claim it as my Right; I am ignorant in Law: I desire it may be read.

Ld President. It is not granted to any.

Mr. Mordant. My Lord, will you take away that Liberty, that we shall not know by what Commission we are tried, and who are our Judges? I desire I may not be made the first Precedent.

Ld President. It is visible who are your Judges; they are named by Act of Parliament: We are your Judges.

Mr. Mordant. My Lord, if the Act specify any such Thing that it may not be read, I have done.

I de-

I desire it may be read, that I may have a legal and just Proceeding.

Ld President. The Act of Parliament doth not require it.

Mr. Mordant. The Act doth not deny it.

Ld President. You shall have all the Privileges that may be: But you must first plead.

Mr. Mordant, My Lord, I demand this, to hear the Commission read.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, pray let him know what is done, to warn him, lest he fall into the same Condemnation. There was one but a little before you that demanded the same Thing, and the Court hath ruled it otherwise; and he hath received his Sentence. I tell you of it, that you may beware, and know how to carry your self. If Mr. Mordant will be pleased to answer whether or no guilty of those Crimes, then he shall have a fair Tryal, and full Examination: If otherwise, the same Sentence must be required as before; that is, upon Refusal, the Judgment pronounc'd for High Treason.

Mr. Mordant. My Lord, I humbly crave the Act may be read.

Mr. At. Gen. The Act is publick: The Court are not to give you an account of their Authority, or the Way of their Proceedings. They require your Answer.

Mr. Mordant. My Lord, shall I not know by what Law I am tried, nor by what Act, nor by what Commission?

Ld President. You seem to be a young Gentleman: I wish rather you would plead Not guilty, or make an ingenuous Confession.

Mr. Mordant. My Lord, this is the first Time that I have been before any Court in my Life: I desire that my Reason may be convinced. Either assign me Counsel to argue it with this learned Counsel; and if they convince my Counsel, I shall submit: Or, if this Counsel will say the Law doth debar me the hearing of the Commission and the Act read to me, I shall refer it to the Judges of the Law, and by their Opinions I will stand or fall.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord President, you have offered that Gentleman very seasonable Advice: I wish he may be capable of it. And in these Debates, I wish he doth not lose those Advantages that are really intended for him. For the Court, it is by Act of Parliament; and no Judicature in England can require an Account of their Proceedings.

Mr. Mordant. My Lord, pray give me leave to ask this Question, Whether there is any Precedent for this?

Mr. At. Gen. By way of Advice, I do acquaint you that there is no Judicature in England superior to this, but the Parliament immediately. You are here impeached of a very high Crime, High Treason; it may be a Strain of Youth: the first Step to Mercy is Confession.

Mr. Mordant. My Lord, I have heard that the Judges of the Land are the best and proper Expositors of the Law: And if they declare that this is the Sense of the Act, I'll submit to the Court. If the Court will allow me Counsel, I shall submit if my Counsel be convinced. I desire to hear the Commission read.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, this Gentleman was a Fellow-Prisoner with one that went before him; he walks after the same Steps: I wish he may not run into the same Error. These Things were urged by Dr. Hewet, and the Court hath ruled that their Authority is sufficient; and therefore, my Lord, be pleased that this Gentleman may plead.

Mr. Mordant. I am over-borne both for Jury and Counsel: I desire that my Reason may be convinced. If this Counsel will give it under their Hands that this is Law by the Act of 1656. if you will say under your Hands that this is Law, that I must be excluded of Jury and Counsel, and that I must not know the Commission by which I am tried, I will proceed.

Ld President. I am afraid you have received ill Advice from others: Possibly you know what is become of that Prisoner that spake of Counsel. We cannot assign you Counsel as to Matter of Fact: The Law and Act of Parliament have made us your Judges, and therefore you are to plead.

Mr. Mordant. My Lord, I desire that that Act may be read, to know whether I am to be excluded of Jury and Counsel: I refer it to this Counsel.

Mr. At. Gen. I doubt the Gentleman is in Jest: We are here to attend by Command of his Highness the Lord Protector; these Gentlemen are all sworn by Act of Parliament. It is a little slighting of the Court, to appeal from the Court to the Counsel: But, my Lord, I beseech you he may forbear to say he is over-borne. You shall have Justice done, if you will plead; if not, there was a Precedent but now. If you please to put your self upon the Tryal, you shall have a fair Tryal.

Mr. Mordant. My Lord, convince me by this Act that I am to lose the Right of Jury; I have not heard any Reason why I must lose it.

Mr. At. Gen. I do tell you the Court hath given Judgment just now in the like Case.

Mr. Mordant. I ask a Precedent for this.

Mr. At. Gen. I tell you a Precedent, Sir Henry Slingsby and Dr. Hewet.

Mr. Mordant. Is it a good Precedent? If any give an ill Precedent, it is reason I should debate it my self.

Mr. At. Gen. I humbly conceive that this Court is your Court, and you ought to plead it.

Mr. Mordant. My Lord, I desire I may be heard: The Words are, That the respective Commissioners, or the major part of them, are to meet, &c. I humbly conceive, without the whole I cannot be tried.

Ld President. All this that you ask of us now, we have declared this Morning already to one who was before you at the Bar: The Quorum of this Commission is seventeen, or any of them. We must require you again to plead.

Mr. Mordant. My Lord, I desire a little Patience: The Number of the Commissioners is seventeen: I conceive that must be very much strained in Reason, that they must try, because it relates to the respective Commissioners. Several Persons were allowed Counsel; I humbly desire Counsel.

Ld President. That is when there is Matter of Law. You have alledged nothing: You are now upon Matter of Fact.

Mr. Mordant. My Lord, my Indictment is Matter of Law, and upon that I may safely demand Counsel: I desire to have Counsel as to my Indictment.

Ld President. Your Reason, and my Reason, and all Reason, must submit to the Law. You are now upon Matter of Fact: The single Question is, Guilty, or Not guilty?

Mr.

Mr. At. Gen. My Advice to you is, That you would put your ſelf upon your Tryal.

Mr. Mordant. I am not convinced at all, but forced upon it; and it is a hard Thing: It is reaſon that my Reaſon ſhould be convinced. If this Act doth ſay in any place that I muſt loſe theſe Privileges, or if the Judges will declare it to be ſo, I will ſubmit to it. If the Judges will declare that I muſt be tried thus, God's Will be done; I deſire to ſtand and fall by the Laws.

Mr. Sol. Ellis. I will tell you where his Miſtake is: He ſpeaks of former Tryals, which we do not deny. But this Gentleman will agree that it is in the power of Parliaments, by Acts of Parliament, to alter thoſe Tryals. We conceive that this Act of Parliament hath determined this very Queſtion: For, my Lord, it is, That you ſhall examine upon Oath, and thereupon proceed to Conviction and final Sentence, not by Jury: And this Act of Parliament hath entruſted you to be both Judge and Jury. All Engliſhmen muſt ſubmit to what the Parliament hath done: And the Parliament hath determined this Queſtion, that you have power to examine upon Oath, and thereupon to proceed to Conviction, &c. If a Jury was to do it, you were not to proceed to Conviction. This Gentleman ſays there is no Precedent for it; but we ſay it was the ſame in Queen Elizabeth's Time: They proceeded to Conviction and final Sentence, when they proceeded againſt Duke Hamilton, Lord Capel, and Holland. Did not the Parliament approve of what they did in that Caſe as juſt, honourable, and lawful? Did not Duke Hamilton, did they not all petition to the Houſe? Did not the Parliament order Execution upon ſome, and cleared others? To ſay this is without Precedent, when Precedents are ſo frequent, I wonder that ſhould be ſaid. To that Point of a Jury: I muſt tell this Gentleman he ſpeaks of a Jury, but hath not put himſelf upon a Tryal. After he hath pleaded Not guilty, then it muſt be conſidered the Manner of the proceeding; but to come before he plead Guilty, or Not guilty, to deſire a Jury, this is a little to anticipate your Judgment.

Mr. Mordant. I do not ſhun to be tried by the Act of Parliament, but refer my ſelf to the Judges, that thoſe Privileges of the Act may not be taken from me.

Mr. At. Gen. The Parliament hath thought fit to go this way, and it is not to be diſputed: They that live in this Nation are not to diſpute it. If that Gentleman will pleaſe to recollect himſelf, and not, my Lord, thus expoſtulate and diſpute with the Court of Juſtice, if he pleaſe to put himſelf upon a Tryal, if he thinks himſelf innocent, I think it is beſt; and if he refuſe it, his Sentence is from himſelf.

Mr. Mordant. I do not, my Lord, diſpute the Power of the Court; but I deſire my Reaſon may be convinced, and that I may have Counſel.

Ld Preſident. We are clearly of Opinion, we have not Power in this Caſe to appoint any other Jury, not to ſummon a Jury; we our ſelves have taken an Oath. You would do well to plead.

Mr. Mordant. My Lord, I have but little to ſay; and that is, That, as that Gentleman ſaid, it was referred to the Court what Jury I ſhall have, I deſire, my Lord, to know whether the Court doth intend to try me by a Jury.

Mr. Sol. Ellis. They do not.

Mr. Mordant. Is the Court Judge and Jury?

Mr. At. Gen. If you will deal ingenuouſly with the Court, I think that is beſt.

Mr. Mordant. Seeing I am here over-ruled, tho not convinced in my Reaſon, I ſhall demur to the Court, and plead Not guilty. I deſire a Copy of my Indictment, and Time to plead.

Ld Preſident. It was never done: For any Indictment of High Treaſon was never delivered to any Priſoner.

Mr. Mordant. I urge my Lord Coke for Authority, for a Copy of my Indictment.

Mr. Phelps. John Mordant Eſq; you ſtand here charged of High Treaſon; to this Charge you plead Not guilty: Is this your Plea?

Mr. Mordant. Yes. I beg, my Lord, that my Ignorance of the Laws may not prejudice me, not underſtanding or knowing any thing of the Laws: And this granted me, I ſhall addreſs to my Juſtification.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you ſtand to your Plea, Not guilty?

Mr. Mordant. Yes.

Mr. Lechmere. My Lord, I ſhall ſhortly open the Impeachment: The Attorney-General hath exhibited a Charge of High Treaſon againſt John Mordant Eſq; viz. That he the ſaid John Mordant intending to imbroil this Nation in new and inteſtine Wars, the 30th of April laſt paſt, and at divers Times ſince the 10th of October 1656. together with Henry Biſhop, Hartgil Baron, &c. at the Pariſh of Clement Danes, in the County of Middleſex, did traitorouſly, adviſedly, and maliciouſly plot, contrive, and endeavour, Firſt, To ſtir and raiſe Force, and levy War againſt his Highneſs the Lord Protector and the Commonwealth, to ſubvert and alter the Government of the ſame. Secondly, That he did traitorouſly, adviſedly, and maliciouſly declare, publiſh, and promote Charles Stuart to be King of England, Scotland, and Ireland. Thirdly, That he did traitorouſly, adviſedly, and maliciouſly hold Intelligence and Correſpondence with Charles Stuart; and that he did declare theſe Treaſons by Overt-Act, that is to ſay, by conferring with John Stapely and Henry Mallory how to effect the ſame, and did deliver ſeveral Commiſſions from Charles Stuart to ſeveral Perſons; and this contrary to the Statute. To this Charge of High Treaſon the Priſoner pleads Not guilty: We are ready, my Lord, to call our Witneſſes to prove him guilty of theſe ſeveral Crimes, and with the leave of the Court, we ſhall call our Witneſſes.

Mr. At. Gen. I wiſh Mr. Mordant had done this before, and made himſelf capable of more Favour.

[Mr. Mordant then deſired to have Pen, Ink, and Paper, which was granted him.]

[John Stapely and Anthony Stapely were then called.]

John Stapely ſworn.

Mr. At. Gen. We produce this Gentleman (I ſuppoſe he is well known to the Priſoner) to prove the Charge: I deſire he may declare what he knows. What do you know concerning the Diſcourſes of Mr. Mordant with you, touching the bringing in of Charles Stuart?

John

John Stapely. I have been in Mr. Mordant's Company ſeveral Times; and what I can ſay will not be much. Mr. Mordant did once tell me there was ſuch a Deſign as the bringing in of the King; and he did ask me if I did not know of ſuch a Thing. I told him no. He was pleaſed to tell me ſomewhat of it. I asked him if he was engaged in it: He told me he was not.

Mr. At. Gen. What did he tell you concerning his being entruſted by the King therein?

John Stapely. He told me the King wrote to him, to ſpeak to his Friends that they would be ready to aſſiſt him when he ſhould come into England with Force; which he told me was with 7000 Men. This was the chief of all.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he not ſay that he had Commiſſions from the King?

John Stapely. He did not tell me ſo; but I have heard him ſay others had had Commiſſions, two other Gentlemen in Surrey.

Mr. At. Gen. Did not he encourage you thereto? What Arguments did he uſe?

John Stapely. He ſpoke to me of it ſeveral times.

Mr. At. Gen. After what manner?

John Stapely. Only in Commendation of the Thing: I heard him ſay that if there were a Neceſſity, Surrey Folks would come into Suſſex, to aſſiſt them.

Mr. At. Gen. Who was preſent at any of theſe Diſcourſes.

John Stapely. There was none but him and my ſelf.

Mr. At. Gen. At what Place, and at what Time?

John Stapely. Near his own Houſe, at ſeveral Times. I have told you the main of the Diſcourſes.

Mr. Mordant. Mr. Stapely, about what Time was this?

John Stapely. Above a Year ſince.

Mr. Mordant. Mr. Stapely, at what Place was the Encouragement made?

John Stapely. I do not know what he means by Encouragement: He only told me of it.

Mr. Mordant. I deſire to know when I told you that I had received a Letter to encourage my Friends from beyond-Sea, and who was by?

Mr. Stapely. There was no body by.

Ld Preſident. About what Time did he tell you of this Letter?

John Stapely. About half a Year ſince.

Ld Preſident. Who was by?

John Stapely. No body, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Ellis. Did he tell you it was the King that wrote to him; and therefore it was juſt to aſſiſt him?

John Stapely. I think I heard him ſay ſo; I cannot take my Oath of it.

Ld Preſident. Did he tell you what conſiderable Perſons were concerned?

John Stapely. I have heard him ſpeak of ſome Perſons that were engaged in this Deſign; Sir Francis Vincent, and one Brown: He ſaid that Sir William Waller ſpake to him to ſpeak to me.

Ld Preſident. When?

John Stapely. Above a Year ſince: It was ſince the Parliament.

Mr. Mordant. My Lord, I do not know Sir William Waller.

Anthony Stapely Sworn.

Mr. At. Gen. What Diſcourſe have you had with Mr. Mordant touching Charles Stuart?

Anthony Stapely. We were about a quarter of a Year ago at the Half-Moon Tavern in Alderſgate-Street: At that time there was no Diſcourſe about the Buſineſs at all. After that he was ſpeaking to me about the Times, Loſſes of Privileges, great Taxations, &c. wherein I agreed with him, and wiſhed they might be better. I asked him if there was any way to help it. He ſaid, Yea; and ſaid that Charles Stuart was intending for England; and that would be a fair Opportunity to redreſs all Grievances. At Berkſhire-Houſe, there he was pleaſed to enquire concerning the Affairs of Suſſex, and in what Preparation they were, in caſe the King of Scots ſhould land. I told him I did not know; I had not been in the Country lately; I did believe that there would not be an Appearance ſuitable to his Expectation. He told me ſomething concerning Surrey; that there was a conſiderable Strength there, ready to aſſiſt us in Suſſex, and join with us when any ſuch Thing ſhould happen. He did ſay that he had delivered out four Commiſſions, three for Horſe, and one for Foot; but to whom I know not: I dare not ſwear it; but it is to the beſt of my Remembrance.

Mr. At. Gen. What Diſcourſe paſt between you at the Half-Moon Tavern in Alderſgate-Street about March laſt?

Anth. Stapely. It was the Day that the Cavalier Party were to depart the City: There was Captain Mallory, my ſelf, and this Gentleman, Mr. Mordant. And then he ſpoke again concerning Suſſex; that the King of Scots coming was ſuddenly expected; and deſire to know in what Readineſs we were. I told him I could not tell; but I did believe that Things would be in as great a Forwardneſs as the Times would permit. It was agreed upon that ſome of our Country ſhould meet Mr. Mordant at Crawly, in Surrey, upon the Tueſday following.

Mr. At. Gen. What was the End of your Meeting?

Anth. Stapely. It was to conſider further how Things might be carried on, as to the Buſineſs of Surrey and Suſſex: There was an Expectation of the landing of Charles Stuart; and he did ſay that he heard Charles Stuart was in a Readineſs. Mr. Mallory, my ſelf, and Mr. Mordant, were to meet, further to debate of Things. I underſtood it was for the Buſineſs of the King; but it was not poſitively ſo expreſſed. He asked me how Things went on in Suſſex. I told him I could not ſatisfy him: Therefore we told him there ſhould ſome of our Country meet him at Crawly, to give him an account. He ſaid there was a conſiderable Force; I but never heard him ſpeak of any Number of Horſe or Foot in Surrey.

Mr. Mordant. Mr. Stapely, I deſire to know when I ſpoke to you of this.

Anth. Stapely. My Lord, it was; I cannot tell the Days: But it was ſuddenly after the breaking-up of the Parliament; all the Diſcourſes were ſince the breaking up of the laſt Parliament.

Mr. Mordant. I deſire to know where I ſpoke this, and who was by?

Anth. Stapely. As I take it, the firſt Diſcourſe was at Long-Acre; but no body by.

Mr.

Mr. Mordant. I desire to know the Time when I met him at the Half-Moon Tavern?

Anth. Stapely. It was the Day set for the departing of the Cavalier Party out of Town.

Mr. Mordant. I desire to know who was by?

Anth. Stapely. Captain Mallory.

Mr. Mordant. I desire to know whether I did meet at the Place appointed?

Anth. Stapely. My Brother and Mr. Mallory did not meet him, because my Brother was sent for to Whitehall.

Mr. Mordant. I desire to know the Witnesses to all he says?

Anth. Stapely. It was all private; only once at the Half-Moon Tavern with Captain Mallory.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, there was mention made of one Captain Mallory, whom we did intend to have as a Witness: He was committed upon this Design, being privy to it. It hath so fallen out that he is lately escaped. I desire that Mr. Serjeant at Arms, Major Ellison, Thomas Tatlock, and William Capput, may be sworn.

All Four sworn.

Mr. At. Gen. We do produce these Witnesses for this End: Captain Mallory was a Prisoner, and we did intend to make use of him here; but it hath so fallen out, that his guilty Conscience hath made him to fly. Ask these concerning his being in Custody, and Endeavour of Escape.

Major Ellison. My Lord, Captain Mallory was in Custody, and a Guard constantly set upon him, which Guard was relieved every twenty-four Hours. The Manner of his Escape I only had by relation. We have used all our Endeavours to have found him since he is escaped: We did that Night send presently to Southwark, to Inns there, and laid wait for him; and sent to Captain Mallory's Brother-in-Law, where he formerly lay, examined him, but all in vain. Where we had any Intimation of any Relation of his, we did send to search for him.

Serj. Dan. My Lord, upon the twenty-eighth of of May last, since the Escape of Captain Mallory, I received a Warrant from the Counsel, commanding me to use all Diligence for apprehending Captain Mallory; I have accordingly endeavoured it: Not knowing his Relations, I did not speak to them. I have used all Means I could; but cannot find him.

Tho. Tatlock. My Lord, Captain Mallory went away about Nine a-clock at Night: He went away in a black Suit and Cloke.

Will. Capput. All that I know, my Lord, is, That Captain Mallory was a Prisoner, and changed his Habit, and Hair, went away, and left Money in the Window to pay for his Lodging.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, the Intention is to shew you Captain Mallory was a Prisoner, is escaped, and what Means have been used for his Apprehension. Officer, pray swear Mr. Scobell.

Mr. Scobell sworn.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, Mr. Scobell was one of the Justices of the Peace that took Captain Mallory's Examination upon Oath.

Mr. Scobell. My Lord, Captain Mallory gave in Information upon Oath, before my Lord Goffe and my self, upon the twenty-first of April last; and upon his Oath did inform us, That about the beginning of March last Captain Anthony Stapely and himself being at the Half-Moon Tavern, John Mordant Esq; being upon the Exchange, was sent for to Mr. Stapely, and that he came. Thereupon Mr. Stapely presented Captain Mallory to Mr. Mordant as a Gentleman that was interested in Charles Stuart's Design, together with Mr. Stapely, that was his Brother: He said that by that Brother he meant John Stapely Esq; Thereupon he informed us, That Mr. Mordant did demand of Captain Mallory in what Readiness the Horse that were to be raised in Sussex were. Mr. Mallory informed us, That to that he returned an Answer, that they were not in so good a Posture as he did believe Mr. John Stapely had represented to Mr. Mordant, but doubted that it would fall much short. Mallory told us, That at that Answer Mr. Mordant did much wonder, because he said Charles Stuart the King was in a very good Posture; and that there was a daily Expectation of his coming over with Forces: and that thereupon Mr. Mordant did desire that there might be a Meeting in some convenient Place between him and Mr. Stapely, and some others of that County of Sussex, as should be thought fit. My Lord, it was (he said) to this End, That they might confer together, and understand how the Affairs stood in reference to the Counties of Sussex and Surrey, that they might the better assist each other in the intended Insurrection. He did inform us, my Lord, That accordingly it was agreed there should be a Meeting upon the Tuesday following at Crawly; and in order thereunto, he said that Mr. Anthony Stapely and himself did speak with Mr. John Stapely to have a Meeting accordingly at Crawly upon the Tuesday following, and they did agree to it. He said that they should meet with Mr. Mordant at Crawly; but in the mean time Mr. John Stapely being sent for to Whitehall, that Meeting was prevented. My Lord, this is all.

Ld President. Mr. Mordant, would you ask Mr. Scobell any Question?

Mr. Scobell. I suppose that Mr. Mordant's asking me any Question will not advantage him, or that my Testimony is disadvantageous to him: For all that I have spoke was the same that Mallory declared unto me, and my Lord Goffe, as Justices of the Peace.

Mr. Mordant. My Lord, I neither know this Gentleman, nor Mr. Mallory, upon my Oath.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Anthony Stapely, were you with Captain Mallory and Mr. Mordant at Dinner together at the Half-Moon?

Mr. Anth. Stapely. My Lord Captain Mallory was once there; but not at Dinner.

Mr. Sol. Ellis. The Attorney-General hath exhibited a Charge of High-Treason against the Prisoner at the Bar, that was, to raise Force against the Government, and publish Charles Stuart to be King, and held Correspondence with him.

Mr. Mordant. My Lord, you have heard the Witnesses: The first Gentleman, Mr. John Stapely, he was pleased to urge against me, that I said Charles Stuart writ to me to engage my Friends, but said not that he saw the Letter, or that any one was by. He did not name the Time or Place but at random; but that I said so. Being asked about Commissions, he denies that I told him I either had Commissions, or delivered any. He says I gave him Encouragement to this Engagement, or what he calls it, I know not; but he doth not say what kind of Encouragement it was; he doth not say I promised him Money or Preferment. He says he heard I engaged two other Gentlemen, Sir Francis Vincent and Col. Brown. He was asked, if any was by at these Discourses; he said none was by. My Lord, this is a single Evidence: he says it was a Year or more since; he says I said I was intrusted by Charles Stuart about the latter end of the last Winter. For Mr. Anthony Stapely, he urges against me, that at his Lodging I discoursed with him, that the way to help us was to bring in Charles Stuart: he says, that I said in Surrey was a considerable Strength to join with Charles Stuart, which if true might prove troublesome to me; but I have not been in Surrey this Year and a half. He says, only to the best of his remembrance, I said I had three or four Commissions, but he says it is to the best of his remembrance, but doth not say he saw the Commissions, and will not swear whether they were for Horse or Foot. He says, at the Half-Moon I spake with him and Mallory; who that is, I have already spoke to. He says, I did not name the Number of any Forces that were ready: He says, that we agreed to meet on the Tuesday following at Crawly with Mr. Mallory, but says that I was not there. My Lord, I do not know that place; he says it is in our Country, but it is not: He says it was his Brother John Stapely that was to meet me. He says, it was not about any positive thing why I was to meet there, but in general to carry on things about the intended Design. He says not that I said it, but that I said I heard that Charles Stuart would land with a considerable Party. He says it was to debate things in general: he said, it was not said about Charles Stuart, that he was not mentioned, but he supposed it to be so. He says positively, that I never spake of any number of Horse or Foot, or any thing of that kind. I asked him, when I first spoke of this; he returned no time, would not say any positive time, but said all was since the breaking up of the Parliament. I asked him who was by; he said no body, all was private. He says, the time when we were at the Half-Moon was near the time that those that served the late King were banished. He says positively I did not meet at the place appointed, and he gives the reason, a very insufficient one, because his Brother was sent for up; that could not hinder me. He waves his own Meeting: he says all was private. I submit it all to this honourable Court.

Mr. Sol. Ellis. The Charge is for levying of War to alter the Government, and embroil us again in a new War: to which he pleads Not Guilty. For the proof of this, we have offered to you Witnesses; I shall take them in order as the Gentleman did at the Bar. John Stapely said, Mr. Mordant said the King writ to him to encourage and engage his Friends to assist him at his coming; but says not the time when this was done. He says he did not see the Letter, but says Mr. Mordant told him he had a Letter, all the Discourses (because he says there was no time) it agrees that they were since the tenth of October 1656. and so it is clear within this Act, and within your Jurisdiction. Now see how it was carried on: After he had told him this, how doth he encourage him in his telling him the Justice of the Cause, the Persons engaged therein, and of Sir William Waller? Then, my Lord, he told them if the Forces of Sussex were not sufficient, that the Surrey Forces would come to assist them for the coming in of Charles Stuart: this both John and Anthony Stapely. So that we conceive, under favour, that John Stapely and Anthony Stapely do agree in most of the Circumstances. Anthony Stapely says, that Mr. Mordant came to him, tells him there were great Grievances; Ay, says he, but how shall it be remedy'd? Tells him that Charles Stuart intended to come to England with a great Force, which would redress them. He asked him how the Business was in Sussex? He said it was not in so good a posture as he expected: he said that Surrey Forces should join with Sussex. My Lord, I leave it nakedly to you, if you find this to be true, we submit it to you, and Mr. Attorney-General will pray what his Place requires.

Mr. At. Gen. You have heard the Business, this Gentleman hath interposed himself where he was not called; it is a Happiness this Business was discovered. Upon this Evidence, I leave it to your Justice; and as you shall judge, I shall say more.

Mr. Mordant. My Lord, I will speak to you very short, it is this: That to all this, though it be urged against me by the ablest Men in the Land, yet there is but one Witness in a manner, and that differing in many Circumstances——[Here he was interrupted.] My Lord, I leave it to you, I remit my Life into your hands, resting and believing your Lordships will deal with me as one of this Nation, an English Freeman. I leave it to you, and do submit.

Ld President. Withdraw the Prisoner.

Proclamation to adjourn into the Painted Chamber.

After a little Debate in the Painted Chamber, they adjourned till the morrow, the second of June.

June 2. 1658.

THE Lords Commissioners met in the Painted Chamber about Ten in the Morning, and there continued till about Four a clock in the Afternoon, and then adjourned into Westminster-Hall; where Proclamation being made, the Names of the Lords Commissioners being read,

Mr. Serjeant was commanded to bring Dr. Hewet, Sir Henry Slingsby, and Mr. Mordant to the Bar.

Proclamation for Silence was made.

Mr. Phelps. Sir H. Slingsby, stand at the Bar, and hear what the Court hath to say to you.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, as for Sir H. Slingsby and Mr. Mordant, you have heard the Impeachment read, and their Pleas; I have given in the Evidence, I pray your Judgment as to them: as for the other, you have heard the Impeachment, and no Defence; I pray your Justice.

Ld President. Sir H. Slingsby Kt. thou hast been impeached, on the behalf of the Lord Protector and this Commonwealth, of High Treason: to which thou hast pleaded Not Guilty, which the Court hath taken into consideration: What hast thou to say further, why this Court should not proceed to Judgment?

Sir H. Slingsby. My Lord, I humbly desire I may be try'd by a Jury, for I must say you are my Enemies, (pardon the Expression;) if not so, why did you sequester me, and sell my whole Estate? And why did you deny me the Act of Oblivion? There is no Man would willingly appeal to his Adversaries; there are some among you that have been instrumental in my Sequestration, and in the selling of my Estate, for which they gave me no reason but this, That I would not compound, when

I thought not fit so to do, when there was no Establishment or settled Peace: if I had compounded, I had not been sure whether I might not have compounded over again. My Estate hath been sequestred and sold. Now to be my Judge and Jury —— I humbly pray, being a Commoner, I may be try'd by Commoners.

Ld President. Sir H. Slingsby, I am not to hear you as to any of these things, (you have pleaded already) this is not a Time of Pleading, but a Time of Judgment; therefore I must require your Silence, and hear me a few words.

The Lord President's Speech.

'SIR Henry Slingsby, I am really and truly afflicted for your sad Condition; but when I consider the Nature of your Offence, with the Circumstances and Aggravations of your Treason committed; when I consider your Person, and that such a Person as you are should be instrumental in so detestable a Conspiracy, and when I think of that Judgment that must be given against you; methinks you are one of the saddest Spectacles that ever I beheld in all my days: I beseech God that you may seriously lay it to your heart, with Sorrow and Repentance, and that you may be more sensible of what you have done, than of what you are to suffer.

'Sir, was it not a great Aggravation of the Sins of the Egyptians, that when God had declared himself by so many Signs and Wonders on the behalf of the Israelites, that yet notwithstanding they would still pursue Moses and Israel? Was not this a great Aggravation of their Sin?

'Who is so great a Stranger in this Nation, as to be ignorant what God hath done amongst us, by a Series of wonderful Providences so many Years together, against that very Party who are still hatching of Treasons and Rebellions amongst us? It grieves my very Soul to think of it, that after so many signal Providences, wherein God seems to declare himself, (as it were by Signs and Wonders) that your Heart should be still harden'd, I may say, more harden'd than the very Hearts of the Egyptians: for they at length did not only see, but confessed that the Lord fought against them; but you, O that you would confess, and give glory to God. You cannot chuse but see that the Lord fights against you, that the Stars in their Courses fight against you; and yet you will not see, you will not confess, until Destruction overtakes you. This is a sad Lamentation, and I beseech God that you may seriously consider it.

'Sir, if the signal and the wonderful Providences of God will not deter you, yet methinks national Considerations should deter you from such a Treason as this is. Charles Stuart is in Confederacy with Spain against England, he is in Confederacy with that great Popish Interest. Is it imaginable that an Englishman, that a Protestant should assist such a Confederacy as this is? Yet that which is not imaginable in itself, is here clearly and evidently proved before us.

'Sir Henry Slingsby, there are three Witnesses, Major Waterhouse, Captain Overton, and Lieutenant Thompson; two of them full in Evidence as to every Charge against you, and three of them as to some of the Charges; and besides your own Confession at the Bar, full in proof against you. Did it not clearly appear in proof before us, that you promoted Charles Stuart to be King of England? Did it not clearly appear before us, that you endeavoured to betray the Garison of Hull to Charles Stuart? Did it not likewise clearly appear before us, that you endeavoured to withdraw the Officers, and some of the Soldiers of that Garison from their Obedience to his Highness, and to make a Mutiny in that Garison, and all the Circumstances did clearly appear? Was it not proved before us, that you offered a Commission to Major Waterhouse, and promised him a Commission in the first place, and a second to Captain Overton, and a Deputation to the third? And what you promised, did you not make it good? Did you not with your own Hand offer a Commission sealed, and said it was from Charles Stuart? And did you not only encourage him, by telling him that he was coming into England with a considerable Force; but did you not promise also, that upon his landing, 5000 l. should be paid to Major Waterhouse? All these things were clearly proved before us.

'Sir, What said you to this Proof? You confessed upon the matter all, in effect all; but only some things you said by way of Excuse, and I shall truly relate them all. All you did, you told us was but in jest. What, Sir, if those discontented English that comply'd with Spain in Queen Elizabeth's days in 88, had said they had been in jest; what would you have thought of that, Sir? What if those Jesuited Papists that would have blown up the Parliament-House upon the 5th of Novemb. with Barrels of Gunpowder, had said that they had brought in those Barrels in jest; what would you have thought of it? Sir, be not deceived: As a Man sows, so shall he reap; you have sow'd Treason and Rebellion, and you are now come to reap the Fruit of it.

'And, Sir, you told me you did not own the Government, you were a Prisoner, and therefore could not be bound by the Laws of that Government. Sir, doth not every Englishman owe a natural Allegiance to the Supreme Magistrate of England? Is not every Englishman, whether in Prison, or out of Prison, bound by the Laws of England? Sir, if you own not the Government of England, that is an Offence in itself, a great Offence; and would you make an Offence against the Government to be an Excuse or Justification for Treason?

'The last thing you said was this, You told us you were trepan'd into it. Sir, did not you yourself of yourself promise a Commission to Major Waterhouse? Did you not of yourself offer Five Thousand Pound to be paid as soon as Charles Stuart landed upon English Ground? I shall name those worthy Gentlemen, for Honour's sake to them, that had a hand in this Discovery. It was that prudent and faithful Governour of Hull, Colonel Smith, that had a hand in it. There was those worthy and faithful Commanders, who were here in Court, Major Waterhouse, Captain Overton, and Lieutenant Thompson: Sir, these faithful and worthy Gentlemen have carried themselves in this Business, like the Man of Understanding, that Solomon speaks of.

'I have done, only I would say one word to you, because I hear you are a Protestant: I would only ask you this Question, What think you would have become of the Protestant Interest, of the Protestants of England, Scotland, and Ireland; if you had had your Will, if Charles Stuart had 'come in? If you had but time (but the Lord 'knows you have not time) to look over the Records of England, to look over the Declarations 'of Parliament since 1640; if you could remember it, Sir, it would tell you what Family it was 'that betray'd the Proteſtants of France, when 'Rochel was taken; what Family it was that betray'd the Proteſtants in Germany, and in the Palatinate, when a Peace was made with Spain without Conſent of Parliament. What could you 'think of that Family that did tolerate Popery for 'a Match with Spain? What then would that 'Family have done, if it could have gained them 'England, Scotland, and Ireland?

'come

'And now, Sir, but one word more to you as 'you are an Engliſhman: I beſeech you conſider 'what would have become of this Nation, if you 'had had your will; you had brought a new Civil 'War upon England at the leaſt. I cannot think of 'a new Civil War upon England, but I think of 'Deſolation upon Deſolation to this poor Nation, &c.

'I have but one word to ſay to Dr. Hewet: And 'Sir, when I look upon you as a Miniſter, I muſt 'confeſs I do not know how to ſpeak to you, be'cauſe it has always been my way to ſpeak to Men 'of your Profeſſion, to Miniſters, I never ſpake 'to them but as a Child ſpeaks to his Father; ſuch 'Reverence and ſuch Regard I bear to their Office. But to ſpeak ſo to a Miniſter as a Judge 'ſpeaks to a Traytor, I muſt confeſs I know not 'how to do it. But, Sir, there muſt be words 'ſpoken to you, though I do not ſpeak them; and 'not only to you as a Traytor, but a Traytor in 'the higheſt degree; not as a Traytor, (as you 'are intitled, for endeavouring to levy a new 'War, and to bring Deſolation and a War in this 'Nation) but ſuch an one as ſhould rather die a 'Traytor, than own the Authority of the Nation. 'But, Sir, I know not how to ſpeak to you, and 'therefore the Record muſt ſpeak to you; and I 'myſelf will not any further.

'I have now a word to ſpeak to you, Mr. Mor'dant: God hath appeared in Juſtice, and God 'doth appear in Mercy; as the Lord is juſt to 'them, ſo he is exceeding merciful to you: and I 'may ſay to you, That God appears to you at this 'time, as he ſpeaks to Sinners in Jeſus Chriſt; 'for, Sir, he doth clear Sinners in Chriſt Jeſus, 'even when they are guilty, and ſo God cleareth 'you: I will not ſay you are guilty, but ask your 'own Conſcience whether you are or no. Sir, 'bleſs God as long as you live, and bleſs my Lord 'Protector, by whoſe Authority you are cleared. 'Sir, I ſpeak no more, but I beſeech you to ſpeak 'to God.

'And now let me add this word to thoſe two 'Gentlemen: Sirs, when I have done ſpeaking, I 'ſhall never have done praying for you, as long as 'you are alive; that is the laſt thing I muſt ſay to 'you. And now let the Judgment of the Court 'be read.'

Thereupon the Clerk read the Judgment and Sentence of the Court againſt Sir H. Slingsby Kt. which was as follows:

"THAT the ſaid Sir Henry Slingsby, as a falſe "Traytor to his ſaid Highneſs the Lord Pro"tector and this Commonwealth, ſhall be con"vey'd back again to the Tower of London; and "from thence through the middle of the City of "London, directly ſhall be drawn unto the Gallows "of Tyburn, and upon the ſaid Gallows there ſhall "be hanged, and being alive, ſhall be cut down "to the ground, and his Entrails taken out of his "Belly, and, he living, be burnt before him; and "that his Head ſhall be cut off, and that his Body "ſhall be divided into four Quarters, &c."

In the next place, the ſame Judgment and Sentence of the Court was read againſt Dr. Hewet, being ingroſs'd in like manner.

This being done, the Judgment of the Court was declared concerning Mr. Mordant, which (in ſhort) was, "That upon Conſideration of the "whole Matter, in reference to the Charge againſt "him, and his Plea thereunto, they did adjudge "him Not Guilty." And ſo the Priſoners were diſmiſs'd.

Proclamation being made, the Court adjourned back to the Painted Chamber, where they order'd the Execution of the Sentence upon Sir Henry Slingſby and Dr. Hewet to be on Saturday next. And Warrants were iſſued out to the Sheriffs of London, to ſee Execution done accordingly.

Then the Court adjourned itſelf till Thurſday the tenth inſtant.

Notwithſtanding the former Sentence paſſed by the High Court, yet his Highneſs being informed, that Dr. Hewet, Priſoner in the Tower of London, who ſtands attainted of High Treaſon, before the Commiſſioners appointed by Act of Parliament, for levying War againſt his Highneſs and the Commonwealth, had Judgment to be hanged, drawn and quartered at Tyburn this inſtant Saturday; his Highneſs was graciouſly pleaſed, upon humble Suit made, to reprieve him till Tueſday the eighth inſtant, at which time he is to be executed on Tower-Hill, by ſevering his Head from his Body: And his Highneſs's Pleaſure is, that the Judgment ſhall be remitted.

The like Favour alſo was extended to Sir Henry Slingsby, who is to ſuffer the ſame day, in the ſame place.

After Proclamation for Silence was made, it pleased Sir Orlando Bridgman, Lord Chief Baron of His Majesties High Court of Exchequer, to speak to the Jury as followeth.

The Lord Chief Baron's Speech.

Gentlemen,

YOU are the Grand Inquest for the Body of this County of Middlesex: You may perceive by this Commission that hath been read, that we are authoriz'd by the King's Majesty to hear and determine all Treasons, Felonies, and other Offences, within this County: But because this Commission is upon a special Occasion, the Execrable Murther of the Blessed King, that is now a Saint in Heaven, King Charles the First, we shall not trouble you with the Heads of a long Charge. The Ground of this Commission was, and is, from the Act of Oblivion and Indempnity. You shall find in that Act there is an Exception of several Persons, who (for their Execrable Treasons, in Sentencing to Death, and Signing the Warrant for the taking away the Life of our said Sovereign) are left to be proceeded against as Traytors, according to the Laws of England; and are out of that Act wholly excepted and fore-priz'd.

Gentlemen, You see these Persons are to be proceeded with according to the Laws of the Land; and I shall speak nothing to you but what are the Words of the Laws. By the Statute of the Twenty fifth of Edward the Third, (a Statute or Declaration of Treason) it is made High-Treason to compass and imagine the Death of the King. It was the Antient Laws of the Nation. In no Case else Imagination, or Compassing, without an Actual Effect of it, was Punishable by our Law. Nihil efficit Conatus nisi sequatur Effectus; that was the Old Rule of Law: But in the Case of the King, his Life was so Precious, that the Intent was Treason by the Common Law; and declar'd Treason by this Statute. The Reason of it is this; In the Case of the Death of the King, the Head of the Commonwealth that's cut off; and what a Trunk, and inanimate Lump, the Body is when the Head is gone, you all know. For the Life of a ſingle Man, there's the Life of the Offender; there's ſome Recompence, Life for Life: But for the Death of the King what Recompence can be made? This Compaſſing and Imagining the cutting off the Head of the King is known by ſome Overt-Act. Treaſon it is in the wicked Imagination, though not Treaſon apparent; but when this Poiſon ſwells out of the Heart, and breaks forth into Action, in that Caſe it's High-Treaſon.

Then what is an Imagination or Compaſſing of the King's Death? Truly it is any thing which ſhews what the Imagination is. Words, in many Caſes, are Evidences of this Imagination; they are Evidences of the Heart. Secondly, As Words; ſo if a Man, if Two Men do conſpire to levy War againſt the King, (and (by the Way) what I ſay of the King, is, as well of the King Dead, as Living; for, if a Treaſon be committed in the Life of One King, it is Treaſon, and Puniſhable in the Time of the Succeſſor,) then, I ſay, in Caſe, not only of Words, but if they conſpire to levy War againſt the King, there's another Branch of this Statute, the Levying of War, is Treaſon. But, if Men ſhall go and conſult together, and this is to kill the King, to put him to Death, this Conſultation is clearly an Overt-Act to prove this Imagination, or Compaſſing of the King's Death.

But what will you ſay then, if Men do not only go about to conſpire and conſult, but take upon them to judge, condemn, nay, put to Death, the King? Certainly, this is ſo much beyond the Imagination and Compaſſing, as 'tis not only laying the Cockatrice's Egg, but brooding upon it till it hath brought forth a Serpent. I muſt deliver to you for Plain and True Law, That no Authority, no ſingle Perſon, no Community of Perſons, not the People Collectively, or Repreſentatively, have any coercive Power over the King of England. And I do not ſpeak mine own Sence, but the Words of the Laws unto you. It was the Treaſon of the Spencers in King Edward the Second's Time, in Calvin's Caſe, Second Report. The Spencers had an Opinion, that all Homage and Allegiance was due to the King, by Reaſon of the Crown, as they call'd it. And thereupon (ſay the Books and Records) they drew out this execrable Inference, (among others,) That if the King did not demean himſelf according to Right, becauſe he could not be Reform'd by Law, he might per aſpertee, that is, by ſharp Impriſonment; but this was adjudg'd horrid Treaſon by Two Acts of Parliament.

Gentlemen, Let me tell you what our Law-Books ſay; for there's the Ground, out of which (and the Statutes together) we muſt draw all our Concluſions for Matter of Government.

How do they ſtile the King? They call him, The Lieutenant of God, and many other Expreſſions in the Book of Primo Henrici Septimi; ſays that Book there, the King is immediate from God, and hath no Superior. The Statutes ſay, That the Crown of England is immediately ſubject to God, and to no other Power. The King (ſays our Books) He is not only Caput Populi, the Head of the People; but Caput Reipublicæ, the Head of the Commonwealth, The Three Eſtates. And truly thus our Statutes ſpeak very fully. Common Experience tells you, when we ſpeak of the King, and ſo the Statutes of Edward the Third, we call the King, Our Sovereign Lord the King: Sovereign, that is, Supreme. And when the Lords and Commons in Parliament apply themſelves to the King, they uſe this Expreſſion, Your Lords and Commons, your faithful Subjects humbly beſeech. I do not ſpeak any Words of my own, but the Words of the Laws. Look upon the Statute, primo Jacobi, there's a Recognition, that the Crown of England was lawfully deſcended on the King and his Progeny.

(The Statute itſelf was read, to which it is deſired the Reader will be referr'd.)

Theſe are the Words of the Act. And this is not the Firſt Precedent; for you ſhall find it primo Eliz. cap. 3. They do aknowledge the Imperial Crown lawfully deſcended on the Queen, the ſame Recognition with this. Before that (becauſe we ſhall ſhew you we go upon Grounds of Law in what we ſay) Stat. 24 Hen. 8. cap. 12. Whereas by ſundry Old Authentick Hiſtories and Chronicles it is manifeſtly declared and expreſſed, that this Realm of England is an Empire, and ſo hath been accepted in the World, govern'd by One Supreme Head and King, having the Dignity and Royal Eſtate of the Imperial Crown of the ſame, &c.

25 Hen. 8. c. 21. There it is the People ſpeaking of themſelves, That they do recognize no Superior under God, but only the King's Grace.

Gentlemen, You ſee, if the King be immediate under God, he derives his Authority from no body elſe; if the King have an Imperial Power, if the King be Head of the Commonwealth, Head of the Body Politick, if the Body Politick owe him Obedience, truly I think it is an undenied Conſequence, he muſt needs be Superior over them.

Gentlemen, This is no New Thing to talk of an Emperor, or an Imperial Crown. Do not miſtake me all this while: It is one Thing to have an Imperial Crown, and another Thing to govern Abſolutely.

Gentlemen, The Imperial Crown is a Word that is ſignificative; you ſhall find in all Statutes primo Eliz. and the Firſt of King James, nay, even in the Act of Judicial Proceedings of this Parliament it is call'd an Imperial Crown. They that take the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, they ſwear, that they will, to their Power, aſſiſt and defend all Juriſdictions, Priviledges, Preheminences, and Authorities, granted or belonging to the King, his Heirs, and Succeſſors, or annex'd to the Imperial Crown of this Realm. What is an Imperial Crown? It is that, which, as to the Coercive Part, is ſubject to no Man under God. The King of Poland has a Crown; but what is it? At his Coronation it is conditioned with the People, That if he ſhall not govern them according to ſuch Rules they ſhall be freed from their Homage and Allegiance; but the Crown of England is, and always was, an Imperial Crown, and ſo ſworn.

Gentlemen, As I told you, even now, the Imperial Crown is a Word ſignificative; that Crown, which, as to the Coercive Part, is not ſubject to any Human Tribunal, or Judicature, whatſoever. And truly that this is ſuch an Imperial Crown, though I have cited Authorities Ancient enough, you may find them much more Ancient. I remember in the Story of William Rufus (you ſhall find it in Matthew Paris and Eadmerus) ſome Queſtion was about Inveſtiture of Biſhops, and the like, the King writes his Letter, That, &c.

God forbid I ſhould intend any Abſolute Government by this. It is one thing to have an Abſolute Monarchy, another Thing to have that Government Abſolutely without Laws, as to any Coercive Power over the Perſon of the King; for as to Things or Actions,

Actions, they will fall under another Conſideration as I will tell you by and by.

Gentlemen, Since this is ſo, conſider the Oath of Supremacy, which moſt Men have taken, or ſhould take. All Men that enter into the Parliament Houſe, they are expreſſly enjoined by Statute to take the Oath of Supremacy. What ſays that Oath? We ſwear that the King is the only Supreme Governour within this Realm and Dominions. He is Supreme, and the only Supreme; and truly if he be Supreme, there is neither Major nor Superior. I urge this the more, leſt any Perſon, by any Miſconſtruction or Inference which they might make from ſomething that hath been acted by the Higher Powers, they might draw ſome dangerous Inferences or Conſequences to colour or ſhadow over thoſe Murtherous and Traiterous Acts, which afterwards they committed. They had no Authority: But as I told you, tho' I do ſet forth this, and declare this to you, to let you know that the King was immediately ſubject to God, and ſo was not Puniſhable by any Perſon: yet let me tell you there is that excellent Temperament in our Laws, that for all this the King cannot rule but by his Laws. It preſerves the King, and his Perſon, and the Peoples Rights.

There are Three Things touching which the Law is Converſant, Perſonæ, Res & Actiones; Perſons, Things, and Actions. For the Perſon of the King, he is the Supreme Head, he is not Puniſhable by any Coercive Power; the Laws provide for that. The King can do no Wrong; it is a Rule of Law, it is in our Law Books very frequent; 22d of Edward the Fourth, Lord Coke, and many others. If he can do no Wrong, he cannot be puniſh'd for any Wrong. The King, he hath the Infirmities and Weakneſs of a Man; but he cannot do any Injury, at leaſt not conſiderable, in Perſon; he muſt do it by Miniſters, Agents, Inſtruments. Now the Law, though it provide for the King, yet if any of his Miniſters do Wrong, though by his Command, they are Puniſhable. The King cannot arreſt a Man, as he cannot be arreſted himſelf; but if he arreſt me by another Man, I have Remedy againſt this Man, though not againſt the King; and ſo he cannot take away my Eſtate. This as to the Perſon of the King: He is not to be touched, Touch not mine Anointed.

I come to Things. If the King claim a Right, the King muſt ſue according to his Laws; the King is ſubject to the Laws in that Caſe, his Poſſeſſions ſhall be tried by Juries. If he will Try a Man for his Father's Death, you ſee he will try them by the Laws. The Law is the Rule and Square of his Actions, and by which he himſelf is judg'd.

Then for Actions, that is, ſuch Actions whereby Rights and Titles are proſecuted or recovered, the King cannot judge in Perſon betwixt Man and Man, he does it by his Judges, and upon Oath; and ſo in all Caſes whatſoever, if the King will have his Right, it muſt be brought before his Judges. Though this is an Abſolute Monarchy, yet this is ſo far from infringing the Peoples Rights, that the People, as to their Properties, Liberties, and Lives, have as great a Privilege as the King. It is not the ſharing of Government that is for the Liberty and Benefit of the People; but it is how they may have their Lives, and Liberties, and Eſtates, ſafely ſecured under Government. And you know, when the Fatneſs of the Olive was laid aſide, and we were governed by Brambles, theſe Brambles, they did not only tear the Skin, but tore the Fleſh to the very Bone.

Gentlemen, I have done in this Particular, to let you ſee that the Supreme Power being in the King, the King is immediately under God, owing his Power to none but God. It is true (Bleſſed be God) we have as great Liberties as any People have in Chriſtendom, in the World; but let us own them where they are due; we have them by the Conceſſions of our Princes. Our Princes have granted them; and the King, now; he in them hath granted them likewiſe.

Gentlemen, I have been a little too long in this, and yet I cannot ſay it is too long, becauſe it may clear Miſunderſtanding, ſo many Poiſonous Opinions having gone Abroad. To come a little nearer: If we conſider; ſuppoſe there were the Higheſt Authority; but when we ſhall conſider this horrid Murther (truly I cannot almoſt ſpeak of it, but —— Vox faucibus hæret.) When we ſhall conſider, that a few Members of the Houſe of Commons, thoſe that had taken the Oath of Supremacy, and thoſe that had taken the Oath of Allegiance, that was to defend the King, and his Heirs, againſt all Conſpiracies, and Attempts, whatſoever, againſt his and their Perſon, their Crowns and Dignities; not only againſt the Pope's Sentence, as ſome would pretend, but, as otherwiſe, againſt all Attempts and Conſpiracies, not only againſt his Perſon, Crown, and Royal Dignity, nor Pope's Sentence, not only in Order to the Profeſſion of Religion; but Abſolutely or otherwiſe, that is, whatſoever Attempts, by any Power, Authority, or Pretence whatſoever. I ſay, when a few Members of the Houſe of Commons, not an Eighth Part of them, having taken theſe Oaths, ſhall aſſume upon themſelves an Authority; and Authority, what to do? Shall aſſume to themſelves an Authority to make Laws, which was never heard before; Authority to make Laws: What Laws? A Law for an High Court of Juſtice, a Law for Lives, to ſentence Mens Lives; and whoſe Life? The Life of their Sovereign: Upon ſuch a King, who, as to them, had not only redreſſed long before, at the beginning of the Parliament, all Grievances that were, and were imaginable, taken away, the Star-Chamber, High Commiſſion-Court, and about Shipping; ſuch a King, and after ſuch Conceſſions that he had made in the Iſle of Wight; when he had granted ſo much, that was more than the People would have deſired. When theſe few Commons, not only without, but excluding the reſt of the Commons; not only without, but excluding the reſt, but rejecting the Lords too, that then ſat: When theſe few Commons ſhall take upon them this Authority, and by colour of this, their King, Sovereign Liege Lord, ſhall be ſentenc'd, put to Death; and that put to Death, even as their King, and ſentenc'd as their King; put to Death as their King, and this before his own Door, even before that Place where he uſed in Royal Majeſty to hear Embaſſadors, to have his Honourable Entertainments; that this King ſhall be thus put to Death at Noon-day, it is ſuch an Aggravation of Villany, that truly I cannot tell what to ſay. No Story, that ever was, I do not think any Romance, any Fabulous Tragedy, can produce the like. Gentlemen, If any Perſon ſhall now come, and ſhroud himſelf under this pretended Authority, or ſuch a pretended Authority, you muſt know, that this is ſo far from an Excuſe, that it is an Height of Aggravation. The Court of Common-Pleas is the Common Shop for Juſtice; in that Court an Appeal is brought for Murther, which ought to have been in the King's Bench, the Court gives Judgment, the Party is condemn'd, and executed: In this Caſe it is Murther in them that executed, becauſe they had no Lawful Authority. I ſpeak this to you, to ſhew you, that no Man can ſhroud himſelf by Colour of any ſuch falſe or pretended Authority. I have but One Thing more to add to you upon this Head, and that is (which I ſhould have ſaid at firſt) if Two or more do compaſs or imagine the Kings Death; if ſome of them go on ſo far as to Conſultation, if others of them go further, they ſentence, and execute, put to death: In this Caſe they are all Guilty; the firſt Conſultation was Treaſon. I have no more to add, but one Particular, a few Words.

As you will have Bills preſented againſt thoſe for Compaſſing, Imagining, Adjudging, the King, ſo poſſibly you may have Bills preſented againſt ſome of thoſe for Levying War againſt the King: Levying of War, which is another Branch of the Statute of 25th of Edward the Third. It was but Declarative of the Common Law; it was no New Law. By that Law it was Treaſon to Levy War againſt the King. But to Levy War againſt the King's Authority you muſt know is Treaſon too. If Men will take up Arms upon any Publick Pretence; if it be to expulſe Aliens; if but to pull out Privy-Councellors; if it be but againſt any Particular Laws, to reform Religion, to pull down Encloſures: In all theſe Caſes if Perſons have aſſembled themſelves in a Warlike Manner to do any of theſe Acts, this is Treaſon, and within that Branch of Levying War againſt the King. This was adjudg'd in the late King's Time in Berſtead's Caſe, Queen Elizabeth's, Henry the Eighth's, former Times, King James's Time; much more, if Men will go not only to Levy War againſt the King, but againſt the Laws, all the Laws, ſubvert all the Laws, to ſet up New Laws, Models of their own. If any of theſe Caſes come to be preſented to you, you know what the Laws are. To conclude, you are now to enquire of Blood, of Royal Blood, of Sacred Blood, Blood like that of the Saints under the Altar, crying Quouſque, Domine? How long, Lord, &c. This Blood cries for Vengeance, and it will not be appeas'd without a Bloody Sacrifice.

Remember but this, and I have done: I ſhall not preſs you upon your Oaths; you are Perſons of Honour; you all know the Obligation of an Oath. This I will ſay, that he that conceals or favours the Guilt of Blood, takes it upon himſelf, wilfully, knowingly, takes it upon himſelf; and we know that when the Jews ſaid, Let his Blood be on us and our Seed, it continued unto them and their Poſterity to this Day.

God ſave the King. Amen, Amen.

The Grand Jury return'd the Indictment Billa Vera. Court adjourn'd to the Old-Bailey 10th of October.

The 10th of October, 1660.

SIR John Robinſon, Knight, Lieutenant of his Majeſties Tower of London, according to his Warrant receiv'd, delivered to Mr. Sheriff the Priſoners hereafter named, who were (in ſeveral Coaches) with a ſtrong Guard of Horſe and Foot convey'd to Newgate, and about Nine of the Clock in the Morning delivered to the Keepers of that Priſon, and thence brought to the Seſſions-Houſe in the Old-Baily, London, where the Commiſſioners of Oyer and Terminer were in Court Aſſembled, and where their Indictment was publickly read by Edward Shelton, Eſq; Clerk of the Crown.

Seſſions-houſe in the Old-Baily, October, 10. 1660.

THE Court being Aſſembled, and Silence Commanded, the Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer was again read. After which Sir Hardreſs Waller, Colonel Thomas Harriſon, and Mr. William Heveningham, were brought to the Bar and commanded to hold up their Hands; which Sir Hardreſs Waller and Mr. Heveningham did; but Harriſon being commanded to hold up his Hand, anſwered, I am here, and ſaid,

My Lord, If you pleaſe I will ſpeak a Word——

Court. Hold up your Hand, and you ſhall be heard in due Time. Mr. Harriſon, the Courſe is that you muſt hold up your Hand firſt. And then he held up his Hand.

The Indictment was read, purporting, That he, together with others, not having the Fear of God before his Eyes, and being inſtigated by the Devil, did maliciouſly, treaſonably, and feloniouſly, contrary to his due Allegiance, and bounden Duty, ſit upon and condemn our late Sovereign Lord, King Charles the Firſt, of Ever-Bleſſed Memory; and alſo did upon the Thirtieth of January, 1648, Sign and Seal a Warrant for the Execution of his late Sacred and Serene Majeſty, of Bleſſed Memory. Where alſo, &c.

Clerk of the Crown. How ſayeſt thou Sir Hardreſs Waller? Art thou Guilty of that Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, and for which thou haſt now been Arraigned? Or Not Guilty?

Sir Hardreſs Waller. My Lords, I dare not ſay, Not Guilty; but ſince that in a Buſineſs of this Nature we have no Council or Advice, and being not able to ſpeak to Matter of Law——

Lord Chief Baron. I am loth to interrupt you; but this is the Courſe: You have heard the Indictment read, and the Courſe is, you muſt plead Guilty, or Not Guilty. There is no Medium, Guilty, or Not Guilty. It is that which is the Law, and the Caſe of all Men. Are you Guilty? Or Not Guilty?

Sir Hard. Waller. I may confeſs myſelf Guilty of ſome Particulars in that Indictment, but not of all; for ſo, inſtead of diſcharging, I ſhall wound, my Conſcience.

Clerk. Are you Guilty? Or Not Guilty?

Sir

Sir Hard. Waller. If I might have that Liberty to——

Court. You ſhall have that Liberty that any Subject of the Nation can have or can challenge. No Man, ſtanding at the Bar in that Condition you are, muſt make any other Anſwer to the Indictment than Guilty, or Not Guilty. It's the Common Caſe of all Men. Your Confeſſion muſt be Plain and Direct, either Guilty, or Not Guilty.

Sir Hard. Waller. My Lord, I deſire ſome Time to conſider of it, for it is a great Surprizal.

Court. You have had Time enough to conſider of it; you muſt follow the Directions of the Court, Guilty, or not Guilty? You muſt not thus diſcourſe of being ſurprized; for theſe Diſcourſes are contrary to all Proceedings of this Nature.

Clerk. How ſay you, Sir H. Waller? Are you Guilty, or Not Guilty.

Sir Hard. Waller. I dare not ſay, Not Guilty.

Clerk. Will you confeſs then?

Sir Hard. Waller. I would be glad to be underſtood ——

Court. Your Plea muſt be direct, Guilty, or Not Guilty.

Sir Hard. Waller. Shall I be heard, my Lord?

Court. Yes, upon your Trial. There is but Two Ways, Plead Not Guilty, or confeſs it. Sir Hardreſs Waller, we would not have you to be deceived. If you confeſs, and ſay, you are Guilty, there is nothing then but Judgment: If you ſay Not Guilty, then you ſhall be heard with your Evidence. Conſider with yourſelf. Plead Not Guilty, or confeſs, and ſay you are Guilty.

Sir Hard. Waller. My Lord, it puts me upon a great Conteſt with myſelf. I ſhall be very free to open my Heart ——

Court. Sir, you muſt plead Guilty, or Not Guilty.

Sir Hard. Waller. My Lord, my Condition differs from others, I am a Stranger; I have been Thirty Years tranſplanted into Ireland, which has made me unacquainted with the Affairs of the Law here.

Court. You muſt keep to the Courſe of the Law, either Guilty, or Not Guilty. There is but one of theſe two Pleas to be made.

Sir Hard. Waller. I dare not ſay Not Guilty.

Court. There are but theſe Three Things to be conſidered. Either you muſt ſay Guilty, which is Confeſſion, and then there remains no more but Judgment; or Not Guilty, and then you ſhall be heard, or Judgment will paſs for your ſtanding Mute, which is all one as if you had confeſſed.

Sir Hard. Waller. Inaſmuch as I have ſaid I dare not ſay Not Guilty, I muſt ſay Guilty.

Clerk. You ſay you are Guilty? You confeſs the Indictment.

Sir Hardreſs Waller. Yes.

Clerk. Thomas Harriſon, How ſayeſt thou? Art thou Guilty of the Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, and art now Arraigned? Or Not Guilty?

Tho. Harriſon. My Lords, have I Liberty to ſpeak?

Court. No more (at this Time) than Guilty, or Not Guilty. Mr. Harriſon, you have heard the Direction before. We can give you but the ſame Rule. If you plead Not Guilty, you ſhall be heard at large; if Guilty, you know what remains.

Tho. Harriſon. Will you give me Leave to give you my Anſwer in my own Words.

Lord Chief Bar. There is no Anſwer but what the Law directs; it is the ſame with you as with all others, or as I would deſire if I were in your Condition. You muſt plead Not Guilty: Or if you confeſs Guilty, there muſt be Judgment upon your Confeſſion. The ſame Rule for one muſt be for another.

Tho. Harriſon. You expreſs your Rule very fair, as well to me as this Gentleman (pointing at Sir Hardreſs Waller) but I have ſomething to ſay to your Lordſhips, which concerns your Lordſhips as well as myſelf.

Court. You muſt hold and plead Guilty, or Not Guilty. If you go otherwiſe (as I told you before) it will be as if you pleaded not at all, and then Judgment will paſs againſt you. The Law gives the Words, frames your Anſwer, it is none elſe but the Laws, Guilty, or Not Guilty?

Tho. Harriſon. My Lord, I have been kept cloſe Priſoner near theſe Three Months, that no body might have Acceſs to me. Do you call me to give you a Legal Anſwer, not knowing of my Trial till Nine of the Clock laſt Night, and brought away from the Tower, to this Place, at Six of the Clock this Morning?

Court. You muſt give your direct Anſwer, Guilty, or Not Guilty. You cannot ſay it is ſudden, or unprovided. You ſpend Time in vain. You trouble the Court. You muſt plead Guilty, or Not Guilty. We muſt not ſuffer you to make Diſcourſes here. You muſt plead either Guilty, or Not Guilty.

Clerk. Are you Guilty? Or Not Guilty?

Thomas Harriſon. I am ſpeaking. Shall I not ſpeak Two Words?

Court. If you will not put yourſelf upon your Trial you muſt expect that Courſe that the Law directs.

Tho. Harriſon. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, I am now ——

Clerk. Are you Guilty? Or Not Guilty?

Tho. Harriſon. I deſire to be adviſed by the Law; this is a Special Caſe.

Court. The Law allows nothing now, but to plead Guilty, or Not Guilty.

Court. You muſt plead to your Indictment. If it be Treaſon it cannot be juſtified; if it be juſtifiable, it is not Treaſon; therefore plead Guilty, or Not Guilty.

Tho. Harriſon. Give me Advice in this ——

Clerk. Tho. Harriſon. Are you Guilty? Or Not Guilty?

Thomas Harriſon. I would willingly render an Account of all my Doings ——

Clerk. Are you Guilty? Or Not Guilty?

Court. You have been acquainted with the Legal Proceedings. You never found in all your Experience that any Priſoner at the Bar, for Felony or Treaſon, was ſuffered thus to Diſcourſe, or to anſwer otherwiſe than Guilty, or Not Guilty.

Clerk. Are you Guilty? Or Not Guilty.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I do beſeech your Lordſhips he may Plead; peradventure he knows his Caſe ſo well that he thinks it as cheap to defie the Court, as ſubmit to it.

Court. We muſt enter your ſtanding Mute; that's Judgment.

Clerk. Are you Guilty? Or Not Guilty?

Tho. Harriſon. Will you refuſe to give me any Satisfaction?

Court. Are you Guilty? Or Not Guilty?

Tho. Harriſon. Will you give me your Advice?

Court. We do give you Advice. The Advice is, there is no other Plea, but Guilty, or Not Guilty. You ſhall be heard when you have put your ſelf upon your Tryal.

Clerk. Are you Guilty? Or Not Guilty?

Tho. Harriſon. You do deny me Council, then I do plead Not Guilty.

Clerk.

Clerk. You plead Not Guilty. Is this your Plea?

Tho. Harriſon. Yes.

Clerk. How will you be Tried?

Tho. Harriſon. I will be tried according to the Laws of the Lord.

Clerk. Whether by God and the Countrey?

Lord Chief Baron. Now I muſt tell you, if you do not put your ſelf upon your Countrey you have ſaid nothing.

Clerk. How will you be Tried?

Tho. Harriſon. It is to put my ſelf upon what you pleaſe to put me upon.

Court. If you underſtand (you are not every Man, you are verſed in Proceedings of Law,) you know you muſt put yourſelf upon the Trial of God and your Countrey, if you do not, it is as good as if you had ſaid nothing.

Tho. Harriſon. You have been miſinformed of me.

Court. You have pleaded Not Guilty, that which remains is, that you muſt be Tried by God and the Countrey, otherwiſe we muſt Record your ſtanding Mute.

Clerk. How will you be Tried?

Tho. Harriſon. I will be tried according to the ordinary Courſe.

Clerk. Whether by God and the Countrey? You muſt ſpeak the Words.

Tho. Harriſon. They are vain Words ——

Court. We have given you a great deal of Liberty and Scope, which is not uſual. It is the Courſe, and Proceedings of Law, if you will be Tried you muſt put yourſelf upon God and the Countrey.

Clerk. How will you be Tried?

Tho. Harriſon. I do offer my ſelf to be tried in your own Way, by God and my Countrey.

Clerk. God ſend you a good Deliverance.

Clerk. William Heveningham, hold up your Hand. How ſayeſt thou? Art thou Guilty of the Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, and art now Arraigned? Or Not Guilty?

Will. Heveningham. Not Guilty.

Clerk. How will you be tried?

Will Heveningham. By God and the Countrey.

Clerk. God ſend you a good Deliverance.

Sir Hard. Waller then preſented his Petition to the Court, directed to the King's Majeſty and the Parliament, which was received, but not at this Court read, and then the Three Perſons aforeſaid were diſmiſſed.

Clerk. Bring to the Bar Iſaac Penington, Eſq; Henry Marten, Eſq; Gilbert Millington, Gentleman, Robert Tichbourn, Eſq; Owen Roe, Eſq; and Robert Lilburn, Gentleman, who were called, and appeared at the Bar, and being commanded ſeverally, held up their Hands.

The Indictment was read again as to the former Perſons.

Clerk. Iſaac Pennington, hold up thy Hand. How ſayeſt thou? Art thou Guilty of the Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, and art now Arraigned? Or Not Guilty?

Iſaac Pennington. Not Guilty, my Lord.

Clerk. How will you be tried?

Iſaac Pennington. By God and the Countrey.

Clerk. God ſend you a good Deliverance.

Clerk. Henry Marten, How ſayeſt thou? Art thou Guilty of the Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, and art now Arraigned? Or Not Guilty?

Hen. Marten, I deſire the Benefit of the Act of Oblivion ——

Clerk. Are you Guilty? Or Not Guilty?

Court. You are to underſtand the Law is this, the ſame to you and every one; you are to plead Guilty, or Not Guilty. If you will demand the Benefit of the Act of Oblivion, it is a Confeſſion of being Guilty.

Hen. Marten. I humbly conceive the Act of Indempnity ——

Court. You muſt plead Guilty, or Not Guilty.

Hen. Marten. If I plead I loſe the Benefit of that Act.

Court. You are totally excepted out of the Act.

Hen. Marten. If it were ſo I would plead. My Name is not in that Act.

Court. Henry Martin is there.

Mr. Sollicitor-Gen. Surely he hath been kept cloſe Priſoner indeed, if he hath not ſeen the Act of Indemnity. Shew it him.

Mr. Shelton opening the Act.

Court. How is it written?

Clerk. It is Henry Martin.

And then the Act was ſhewed to the ſaid Mr. Marten.

Hen. Marten. Henry Martin. My Name is not ſo, it is Harry Marten.

Court. The Difference of the Sound is very little. You are known by that Name of Martin.

Hen. Marten. I humbly conceive all Penal Statutes ought to be underſtood literally.

Clerk. Are you Guilty? Or Not Guilty?

Hen. Marten. I am not Henry Martin.

Clerk. Are you Guilty? Or Not Guilty?

Court. Be adviſed; the Effect of this Plea will be Judgment.

Here Mr. Sollicitor General cited ſomewhat Parallel to this in a Caſe formerly of Baxter, where the Name was Bagſter, with an S. and adjudged all one, being of the ſame Sound.

Clerk. Are you Guilty? Or Not Guilty?

Hen. Marten. My Lord, I deſire Council; there will ariſe Matter of Law, as well as Fact.

Court. You are Indicted for Treaſon, for a Malicious, Trayterous Compaſſing and Imagining the King's Death; if you have any Thing of Juſtification plead Not Guilty, and you ſhall be heard; for if it be Juſtifiable, it is not Treaſon. The Rule is, either you muſt plead Guilty, and ſo confeſs, or Not Guilty, and put your ſelf upon your Trial; there is no Medium.

Hen. Marten. May I give any thing in Evidence before Verdict.

Court. Yes, upon your Trial you may give any Thing in Evidence that the Law warrants to be lawful Evidence.

Clerk. Are you Guilty? Or Not Guilty?

Court. Underſtand one Thing, becauſe I would not have you miſtaken; you cannot give in Evidence the Miſnomer, but any thing to the Matter of Fact.

Hen. Marten. I ſubmit, and plead Not Guilty.

Clerk. How will you be Tried.

Hen. Marten. By God and the Countrey.

Clerk. God ſend you a good Deliverance.

Clerk. Gilbert Millington, Hold up your Hand. How ſayeſt thou? Art thou Guilty of the Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, and art now Arraigned? Or Not Guilty?

Gilb. Millington. My Lord, I am an Ancient Man, and Deaf; I humbly crave your Lordſhip's Pardon to hear me a few Words; I will promiſe it ſhall be pertinent enough.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Impertinent enough he means.

Court. You muſt plead either Guilty, and ſo confeſs it, or Not Guilty, and then you ſhall be heard any Thing for your Juſtification.

Clerk. Are you Guilty? Or Not Guilty?

Gilb. Millington. I deſire I may——

Court. There is nothing you can ſay but Guilty, or Not Guilty; all other Diſcourſes turn upon your ſelf.

Clerk. Are you Guilty? Or Not Guilty?

Gilb. Millington. You might enlighten me in ſome Scruples. Does my Pauſe trouble you much? I ſhould not be long.

Court. Your particular Caſe cannot differ from others.

Clerk. Are you Guilty? Or Not Guilty?

Gilb. Millington. There are ſome Things in the Indictment that I can ſay Not Guilty to, there are others that I muſt deal ingenuouſly, and confeſs them.

Clerk. Are you Guilty in Manner and Form as you are Indicted? Or Not Guilty?

Gilb. Millington. Not Guilty.

Clerk. How will you be Tried?

Gilb. Millington. By God and the Country.

Clerk. God ſend you a good Deliverance.

Clerk. Robert Tichbourn, Hold up your Hand, How ſayeſt thou? Art thou Guilty of the Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, and art now Arraigned? Or Not Guilty?

Tichbourn. My Lord, I have been a very cloſe Priſoner, without any Advice; I am altogether unable in Law to ſpeak.

Court. You know the Courſe hath been delivered to you by others, I will not trouble you with it. It is neither long nor ſhort; the Law requires your Anſwer, Guilty? Or Not Guilty?

Tichbourn. Spare me but one Word. If upon the Trial there ſhall appear to be Matter of Law ſhall I have the Liberty of Council for it? If I ſhall be put in my own Caſe to plead Matter of Law againſt thoſe Noble Perſons who plead on the other Part, I ſhall but prejudice myſelf, and therefore I crave Council.

Court. You muſt plead Guilty, or Not Guilty.

Tichbourn. I have no Reaſon nor Deſign to diſpleaſe you. I am ſure I am no ways able to plead with Equalneſs in Point of Law with thoſe Noble Gentlemen. To the Matter of Fact this is my Plea, in Manner and Form that I ſtand Indicted I am Not Guilty.

Clerk. How will you be tried?

Tichbourn. By God and the Country.

Clerk. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

Clerk. Owen Roe, Hold up your Hand. How ſayeſt thou? Art thou Guilty of the Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, and art now Arraigned? Or Not Guilty?

Owen Roe. My Lord, there hath been ſo much ſaid already by others I think I need ſay no more. In Manner and Form as I am now Indicted I plead Not Guilty.

Clerk. How will you be Tried?

Owen Roe. By God and the Country.

Clerk. God ſend you a good Deliverance.

Clerk. Robert Lilburn, hold up your Hand. How ſayeſt thou? Art thou Guilty of the Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, and art now Arraigned? Or Not Guilty?

Robert Lilburn. I deſire, in regard that being ſo cloſe a Priſoner for Twenty Days, that no body has been ſuffered to adviſe with me——

Lord Chief Baron. I muſt interrupt you. You muſt not miſ-ſpend the Time. Underſtand the Law. You muſt Plead Guilty, or Not Guilty.

Rob. Lilburn. Will you give me leave to deſire Council before I plead, to adviſe me touching my Plea.

Clerk. Are you Guilty? or Not Guilty?

Robert Lilburn. I deſire Council——

Court. Take heed, if that be your Anſwer, You deſire Council, and do not Plead, and that be Recorded, Judgment will paſs againſt you. There is nothing to Plead, but Guilty, or Not Guilty. If Not Guilty, what you have to ſay will be heard.

Rob Lilburn. If you over-rule me I muſt ſubmit.

Court. Do not let ſuch Language fall from you; it is improper.

The Law gives us a Rule. The Priſoner muſt plead Guilty, or Not Guilty.

Rob. Lilburn. I ſay then in Manner and Form as I am Indicted I am Not Guilty.

Clerk. How will you be Tried?

Rob. Lilburn. By God and the Country.

Clerk. God ſend you a good Deliverance.

Clerk. Bring to the Bar Adrian Scroop, John Carew, John Jones, Thomas Scot, Gregory Clement, and John Cook.

Who were brought accordingly, and being commanded, ſeverally held up their Hands at the Bar. The Indictment was read to the Perſons at the Bar as before.

Clerk. Adrian Scroop, Hold up thy Hand. How ſayeſt thou; Art thou Guilty of the Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, and art now Arraigned? Or Not Guilty?

Adr. Scroop. My Lord, Not Guilty.

Clerk. How will you be Tried?

Adr. Scroop. By God and the Countrey.

Clerk. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

Clerk. John Carew. Hold up thy Hand. How ſayeſt thou? Art thou Guilty of the Treaſon whereof thou art Indicted, and art now Arraigned? Or Not Guilty?

John Carew. There is ſome ſpecial Matter in that Indictment, that ought not to before——

Clerk. Are you Guilty, or Not Guilty?

John Carew. Saving to our Lord Jeſus Chriſt his Right to the Government of theſe Kingdoms——

Court. Are you Guilty, or Not Guilty?

John Carew. I ſay I am Not Guilty.

Clerk. How will you be Tried?

John Carew. How would you have me?

Clerk. Will you be Tried by God and the Countrey?

John Carew. I, if you will.

Clerk. You muſt ſay the Words. How will you be Tried?

John Carew. By God and the Countrey.

Clerk. God ſend you a good Deliverance.

Clerk. John Jones, Hold up thy Hand. How ſayeſt thou? Art thou Guilty of the Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, and for which thou art now Arraigned? Or Not Guilty?

John Jones. Not Guilty, my Lord.

Clerk. How will you be Tried?

John Jones. By God and the Countrey.

Clerk. God ſend you a Good Deliverance.

Clerk. Thomas Scot, Hold up thy Hand, How ſayeſt ſayeſt thou? Art thou Guilty of the Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, and for which thou art now Arraigned? Or Not Guilty?

Th. Scot. Truly I cannot call it Treaſon, and therefore I Plead Not Guilty.

Clerk. How will you be Tried?

Th. Scot. By God and the Countrey.

Clerk. God ſend you a good Deliverance.

Clrk. Gregory Clement, Hold up your Hand. How ſayeſt thou? Art thou Guilty of the Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, and for which thou art now Arraigned? Or Not Guilty.

Greg. Clement. My Lord, I cannot excuſe my ſelf in many Particulars; but as to my Indictment, as there it is, I plead Not Guilty.

Clerk. How will you be Tried?

Greg. Clement. By God and the Countrey.

Clerk. God ſend you a good Deliverance.

Clerk. John Cook, Hold up thy Hand. How ſayeſt thou? Art thou Guilty of the Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, and for which thou art now Arraigned? Or Not Guilty?

John Cook. I humbly conceive that this is now Time to move for Council for Matter of Law——

Court. You know too well the manner of the Court. Are you Guilty? Or Not Guilty?

John Cook. Not Guilty.

Clerk. How will you be Tried?

John Cook. By God and the Countrey.

Clerk. God ſend you a good Deliverance.

Clerk. Bring Edmund Harvey, Henry Smith, John Downs, Vincent Potter, and Auguſtine Garland, to the Bar.

Who were brought accordingly, and being commanded, ſeverally held up their Hands. The Indictment was Read to them.

Clerk. Edmund Harvey, Hold up your Hand. How ſayeſt thou? Art thou Guilty of the Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, and for which thou art now Arraigned? Or Not Guilty?

Edmund Harvey. Not Guilty, my Lord.

Clerk. How will you be Tried?

Edmund Harvey. By God and the Countrey.

Clerk. God ſend you a good Deliverance.

Clerk. Henry Smith, Hold up thy Hand. How ſayeſt thou? Art thou Guilty of the Treaſon whereof thou art Indicted, and for which thou art now Arraigned? Or Not Guilty?

Henry Smith. Not Guilty, my Lord.

Clerk. How will you be Tried?

Henry Smith. By God and the Countrey.

Clerk. God ſend you a good Deliverance.

John Downs, Vincent Potter, Auguſtine Garland, upon the Queſtion preſently pleaded Not Guilty, and put themſelves on God and the Country to be Tried.

Clerk. Set to the Bar George Fleetwood, Simon Meyn, James Temple, Peter Temple, Thomas Wait, Hugh Peters, Francis Hacker, and Daniel Axtel.

Who being at the Bar, held up their Hands according to Order; afterward the Clerk read the Indictment againſt the ſaid Perſons; which being ended, he proceeded in this Manner.

Clerk. George Fleetwood, Hold up thy Hand. What ſayeſt thou? Art thou Guilty of this horrid Treaſon, whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, and art now Arraigned? Or Not Guilty?

George Fleetwood. My Lord, I came in upon His Majeſties Proclamation.

Clerk. Art thou Guilty? Or Not Guilty?

George Fleetwood. I muſt confeſs I am Guilty, (and thereupon he delivered a Petition in to the Court, which he ſaid was directed to his Majeſty and the Parliament, and the Court did receive it accordingly.)

Clerk. Set him aſide.

Clerk. Simon Meyn, Hold up thy Hand. What ſayeſt thou? Art thou Guilty of this horrid Treaſon, whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, and art now Arraigned? Or Not Guilty?

Simon Meyn. Not Guilty. I came in upon His Majeſties Proclamation, my Lord.

Clerk. How wilt thou be Tried?

Sim. Meyn. By God and the Country.

Clerk. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

Clerk. James Temple, Hold up thy Hand. What ſayeſt thou? Art thou Guilty of this horrid Treaſon, whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, and art now Arraigned? Or Not Guilty.

James Temple. Not Guilty.

Clerk. How wilt thou be Tried?

James Temple. By God and the Countrey.

Clerk. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

Clerk. Peter Temple, Hold up your Hand. How ſayeſt thou? Art thou Guilty of the Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, and for which thou art now Arraigned? Or Not Guilty?

Peter Temple. Not Guilty.

Clerk. How wilt thou be Tried?

Peter Temple. By God, and the Countrey.

Clerk. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

Clerk. Thomas Wait, Hold up your Hand. How ſayeſt thou? Art thou Guilty of the Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, and for which thou art now Arraigned? Or Not Guilty?

Th. Wait. I deſire to be heard a Word or Two——

Court. There is a Rule of Law which is ſet to us, and you, that in all theſe Caſes you are to plead Guilty, or Not Guilty. When you have pleaded, if Not Guilty, you may ſpeak what you will in its proper Time.

Clerk. Are you Guilty? Or Not Guilty?

Th. Wait. I pray let me be heard a Word. I am very unwilling to ſpend Time, knowing you have a great deal of Buſineſs. I am very unwilling to deprive myſelf of my Native Right. I ſhall ſpeak nothing but that which is Truth.

Court. Do not Preface then, but ſpeak what you would ſay.

Th. Wait. My Lord, my Caſe is different from the reſt.

Court. Whatſoever the Caſe be, you have no Plea to us, but Guilty, or Not Guilty. We can go no other Way. The Law ſets out your Plea.

Th. Wait. My Lord, I would ſpeak one Word. There was a Great Peer of this Nation Indicted at Northampton, within theſe Two Years, for killing a Man. The Judges there——

Court. You muſt plead Guilty, or Not Guilty. Pray who are you that ſhould take this upon you more than all the reſt? You muſt go the ordinary Way; Guilty, or Not Guilty: Are you Guilty? or Not Guilty? We do not intend to prevent any Thing you have to ſay, but it muſt be proper.

Clerk. Are you Guilty? Or Not Guilty?

Th. Wait. I cannot ſay I am Guilty.

Court.

Court. How then?
Th. Wait. I am Not Guilty.
Clerk. How wilt thou be Tried?
Th. Wait. By God and the Countrey.
Clerk. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

Clerk. Hugh Peters, Hold up thy Hand. How ſayeſt thou? Art thou Guilty of the Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, and for which thou art now Arraigned? Or Not Guilty?

Hugh Peters. I would not for Ten Thouſand Worlds ſay I am Guilty. I am Not Guilty.

Clerk. How will you be Tried?

Hugh Peters. By the Word of God. (Here the People laughed.)

Court. You muſt ſay, By God and the Countrey. Tell him you that ſtand by him what he ſhould ſay, if he doth not know.

Clerk. How will you be Tried?

Hugh Peters. By God and the Countrey.

Clerk. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

Clerk. Dan. Axtel, Hold up thy Hand. What ſayeſt thou? Art thou Guilty of the Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, and for which thou art now Arraigned? Or Not Guilty.

Dan. Axtel. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, I deſire to have the Freedom of an Engliſhman; that which is my Right by Law and Inheritance: I have ſomething to offer in Point of Law.

Clerk. Art thou Guilty? Or Not Guilty?

Dan. Axtel. My Lords, give me Leave to ſpeak. For the Matter of the Indictment I conceive is upon the King's Death; that there is a Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer for you to Sit: But in regard it was in Purſuance of an Act of Parliament, I conceive no Inferior Court ought to judge of it. I deſire Council, it being of great and eminent Concernment in Law, That ever any Judges, or any Inferior Court, ſhould judge of the Powers and Priviledges of a Parliament; and I pray that Council may be aſſigned me.

Clerk. Are you Guilty? Or Not Guilty?

Dan. Axtel. If the Court over-rule me, and I ſhall not have my Liberty, as an Engliſhman ——

Court. The Courſe of Law is this; No Man can juſtifie Treaſon. If the Matter which you have to ſay be Juſtifiable, it is not Treaſon; if Treaſon, it is not Juſtifiable; therefore you muſt go to the ordinary Courſe of the Law. You muſt Plead Guilty, or Not Guilty.

Dan. Axtel. I can produce many Precedents ——

Court. Are you Guilty? Or Not Guilty? The Language is put into your Mouth. You have no other Words to expreſs yourſelf by at this Time, but Guilty, or Not Guilty.

Dan. Axtel. Judge Heath had Council aſſign'd him upon the ſame Caſe.

Court. That is very ſtrange; the ſame Caſe? What, was it for killing a King?

Dan. Axtel. If the Court will over-rule me I cannot help it.

Mr. Solicitor Gen. It may be this Gentleman may be deceived by a Miſtake. It may be he knows not the Law, which your Lordſhips may be pleas'd to acquaint him with: That to ſtand Mute in High-Treaſon is all one as to Confeſs the Fact, and will have the ſame Sentence and Condemnation upon them, as if they had confeſſed it.

Lord Chief Baron. Then I'll tell you the Law, He that doth refuſe to put himſelf upon his Legal Trial of God and the Countrey, is a Mute in Law; and therefore you muſt Plead Guilty, or Not Guilty. Let his Language be what it will, he is a Mute in Law.

Dan. Axtel. I do not refuſe it.

Court. Then ſay.

Dan. Axtel. I am Not Guilty.

Clerk. How will you be Tried?

Dan. Axtel. By Twelve Lawful Men, according to the Conſtitutions of the Law.

Court. That is by God and the Countrey.

Dan. Axtel. That is not Lawful. God is not locally here.

Clerk. How wilt thou be Tried? You muſt ſay, By God and the Countrey.

Dan. Axtel. By God and the Countrey.

Clerk. God ſend you a good Deliverance.

Lord Chief Baron. Mr. Axtel, have you your Papers again?

Dan. Axtel. Yes, my Lord.

Lord Chief Baron. When your Indictment is read the Second Time, when you come to your Trial, you may take what Notes you pleaſe.

The Court then adjourned to the ſame Place till the next Morning Seven of the Clock.

October 11*th.* 1660.

The Court being Aſſembled, the Keeper was commanded to ſet the Priſoners to the Bar.

Thomas Harriſon, Adrian Scroop, John Carew, John Jones, Gregory Clement, Thomas Scot, were brought to the Bar accordingly. After which Silence was Commanded.

Court. You that are the Priſoners at the Bar, if you, or any of you, deſire Pen, Ink, and Paper, you ſhall have it; and if you, or any of you, will Challenge any of the Jury, you may when they come to be Sworn, and that before they are Sworn.

Sir Thomas Allen being call'd, was deſired to look on the Priſoner, and lay his Hand on the Book: His Oath was then read to him, viz. You ſhall well and truly Try, and true Deliverance make, between our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Priſoners at the Bar, whom you ſhall have in Charge, according to your Evidence. So help you God.

Sir Joſhua Aſh being next call'd, Mr. Scroop excepted againſt him.

Sir Jeremy Whichcot, Baronet, being next to be Sworn, Mr. Harriſon excepted againſt him.

James Halley, Eſquire, being next to be Sworn, Mr. Scot excepted againſt him.

Court. If you will not agree (ſpeaking to the Priſoners) in your Challenges, we muſt be forc'd to Try you ſeverally.

Henry Mildmay, Eſq; being called next, Mr. Scroop excepted againſt him.

Court. We muſt needs Try them ſeverally, therefore ſet them all aſide but Harriſon.

Court. Gentlemen, you that are excepted muſt not depart the Court.

Sir Joſhua Aſh being again call'd, was excepted againſt by Mr. Harriſon.

Sir Jeremy Whichcot, Bart.
James Halley, Eſq;
Henry Mildmay, Eſq;
Chriſtopher Abdy, Eſq;
} Being called again, were ſeverally excepted againſt by the Priſoner.

Court. Mr. Harriſon, You know the Law. You muſt ſay, I Challenge him.

Mr. Harriſon. I ſhall, Sir.

Ralph Hartley being next called, and being very ſick, humbly prayed to be excus'd by the Court, which was granted.

Arthur Newman was called next.

Mr. Harriſon. May I not ask of what Quality he is?

Court. No, Sir, you are to Challenge him, or not to Challenge him.

Mr. Harriſon. I Challenge him.

Thomas Blith was next called, and alſo Challenged.

(Here the People ſeemed to Laugh.)

Mr. Harriſon. My Lord, I muſt make uſe of my Liberty in this Caſe.

Court. God forbid.

Then Grover, Robert Clark, and Richard Whalley, were called, and by Mr. Harriſon Challenged.

Court. Mr. Harriſon, you know how many to Challenge; if you go beyond the Number at your own Peril be it.

Mr. Harriſon. My Lord, pray tell me what it is.

Court. You ſay very well; God forbid but you ſhould know. You may Challenge Five and Thirty Peremptorily, if you go beyond you know the Danger.

Mr. Harriſon. My Lord, I do not this to keep you off from the Buſineſs.

William Vincent, and Henry Twiford, were then called, and Challenged.

John Liſle was next called.

Mr. Harriſon. I do not know him.

Mr. Liſle. Nor I you Mr. Harriſon. He was Sworn.

Thomas Franklin Sworn.

Thomas Winter Challenged.

Richard Nichol Sworn.

Moyce being Sick, prayed Excuſe, which was granted accordingly.

Richard Cheyney Challenged.

Allen Parſons Challenged.

Henry Edlin Called.

Mr. Harriſon I challenge him.

Mr. Harriſon. Let him be Sworn.

Court. No, no, (Whereupon he was ſet aſide.)

Mr. Harriſon. If I have any Apprehenſion or Knowledge of them, that's the Thing that leads me to it, as touching this Man, he may be Sworn.

Court. When he is Challenged he cannot be recalled.

Mr. Harriſon. I am content.

Samuel Greenhill Sworn.

Thomas Bede Challenged.

John Page Challenged.

Richard Rider Challenged.

Mr. Harriſon. Leſt I may run into an Hazard, in making uſe of that Liberty which the Law gives me in this Caſe, and having not taken Notice of any Perſons Challenged, I mean as to the number, I deſire your Officer that takes Notice may acquaint me with the number.

Court. You ſhall know it; God forbid the contrary.

Edward Rolph was called next.

Mr. Harriſon. Mr. Rolph is his Name? Let him be Sworn.

Francis Beal Challenged.

John Kirk Challenged.

Charles Pitfield Challenged.

John Smith Challenged.

Bell Sworn.

Edward Franklin Challenged.

William Whitcomb Challenged.

Samuel Harris Sworn.

John Collins Challenged.

Thomas Snow Sworn.

William Blunt Challenged.

George Rigth Challenged.

John Nichol of Finchley Sworn.

Timothy Taylor Challenged.

Thomas Fruin Challenged.

Richard Abel Challenged.

Thomas Morris Sworn.

Ambroſe Scudamore Challenged.

Ralph Halſel Challenged.

George Tirry Challenged.

Court. You have Challenged Thirty Three already.

Mr. Harriſon. I pray the Names may be read to me, to ſee if it be ſo.

Court. When you come to Thirty Five you ſhall have the Names Read.

John Galliard Challenged.

Thomas Swallow Challenged.

Court. Now read their Names to him.

Which were read accordingly. In all Thirty-five Challenged.

George Pickering was next called, and Sworn.

Then they were called over who were admitted, viz.

Sir Thomas Allen, John Liſle, Thomas Franklin, Richard Nichol, Samuel Greenhil, Edward Rolph, Bell, Samuel Harris, Thomas Snow, John Nichol, Thomas Morris, George Pickering; and ſworn.

Proclamation was then made.

If any Man can inform my Lords, the King's Juſtices, the King's Serjeant, or the King's Attorney, before this Inqueſt be taken, let them come forth, and they ſhall be heard, for now the Priſoner ſtands at the Bar upon his Deliverance. And all thoſe bound by Recognizance to appear, let them come forth, and give their Evidence, or elſe to Forfeit their Recognizance.

George Maſterſon, James Nutley, Robert Coytmore, Holland Simpſon, and William Jeſſop, Witneſſes, were called.

Court. Gentlemen, that are not of the Jury, pray clear the Paſſage. The Priſoner is here for Life and Death, let him have Liberty to ſee the Jury.

Clerk. Thomas Harriſon, Hold up thy Hand.

Clerk. Look upon the Priſoner, you that are Sworn. You ſhall underſtand that the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands Indicted by the Name of Thomas Harriſon, late of Weſtminſter, in the County of Middleſex, Gentleman, for that he, together with John Liſle, &c. here the Indictment was read) upon which Indictment he hath been Arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded Not Guilty, and for his Trial hath put himſelf upon God and the Countrey, which Countrey you are. Now your Charge is to enquire, whether he be Guilty of the High-Treaſon in Manner and Form as he ſtands Indicted, or Not Guilty. If you find that he is Guilty, you ſhall enquire what Goods and Chattels he had at the Time of committing the ſaid Treaſon, or at any Time ſithence. If you find that he is Not Guilty, you ſhall enquire whether he did fly for it; and if you find that he fled for it, you ſhall enquire of his Goods and Chattels; as if you had found him Guilty: If you find that he is Not Guilty, nor that he did fly, you ſhall ſay ſo, and no more. And take heed to your Evidence.

Mr. Keeling enforced the Charge at large: After whom Sir Heneage Finch, his Majeſties Solicitor General, in theſe Words.

MAY it pleaſe your Lordſhips, We bring before your Lordſhips into Judgment this Day the Murtherers of a King. A Man would think the Laws of God and Men had ſo fully ſecured theſe Sacred Perſons, that the Sons of Violence ſhould never approach to hurt them: For (my Lord) the very Thoughts of ſuch an Attempt hath ever been preſented by all Laws, in all Ages, in all Nations of the World, as a moſt unpardonable Treaſon.

ſon. My Lord, This is that that brought the Two Eunuchs in the Perſian Court to their Juſt Deſtruction; Voluerunt inſurgere, ſays the Text, and yet that was enough to Attaint them. And ſo (my Lords) it was by the Roman Laws too, as Tacitus obſerves; Qui deliberant, deſciverunt. To Doubt or Heſitate in a Point of Allegiance, is direct Treaſon and Apoſtaſie. And upon this Ground it is, that the Statute upon which your Lordſhips are now to proceed hath theſe expreſs Words; If a Man doth Compaſs or Imagine the Death of the King, &c. Kings, who are God's Vice-gerents upon Earth, have thus far a kind of Reſemblance of the Divine Majeſty, that their Subjects ſtand accountable to them for the very Thoughts of their Hearts. Not that any Man can know the Heart, ſave God alone; but becauſe when the Wicked Heart breaks out into any open Expreſſions, by which it may be judged, 'tis the Thoughts of the Heart which makes the Treaſon; the Overt-Act is but the Evidence of it.

My Lords, This Care and Caution is not ſo to be underſtood, as if it were the Single Intereſt of One Royal Perſon only. The Law doth wiſely judge and foreſee, that upon the Life of the King depends the Laws and Liberties, the Eſtates and Properties, the Wealth and Peace, the Religion, and in Sum, the Glory of the Nation.

My Lords, This Judgment of the Law has been verified by a ſad Experience; for when that Bleſſed King (whoſe Blood we are now making Inquiſition for) was untimely taken away, Religion and Juſtice both lay buried in the ſame Grave with him; and there they had ſlept ſtill, if the Miraculous Return of our Gracious Sovereign had not given them a New Reſurrection.

My Lords, My Lord Coke in his Comment upon this Statute has one Conceit, which is ſomewhat Strange; I am ſure it is very New; he ſeems to think that it would have added to the Perfection of this Law if there had been a Time limited for the Party to be accuſed. But certainly the Work of this Day has quite confuted that Imagination. For here is a Treaſon that has ſo long out-fac'd the Law, and the Juſtice of this Kingdom, that if there had been any Time of Limitation in the Statute, there would have been no Time nor Place left for Puniſhment. And if this Treaſon had but once grown up to an Impunity, it might perhaps have drawn the Guilt of that Innocent Blood, and with it the Vengeance due to it, upon the whole Nation.

The Scope of this Indictment is for the compaſſing the Death of the King, the reſt of the Indictment, as the Uſurping Authority over the King's Perſon, the Aſſembling, Sitting, Judging, and Killing of the King, are but ſo many ſeveral Overt-Acts to prove the Intention of the Heart. We are not bound (under Favour) to prove every one of theſe againſt every particular Perſon who is Indicted; for he that is in at one, is Guilty in Law of all the reſt, as much as if he had ſtruck the Fatal Stroke itſelf: Nay (under Favour) if we can prove any other Overt-Act beſides what is laid in the Indictment, as the encouraging of the Soldiers to cry out, Juſtice, Juſtice; or Preaching to them to go on in this Work, as Godly and Religious; or any other Act of all that Catalogue of Villanies, for which the Story will be for ever Infamous; this may be given in Evidence to prove the Compaſſing and Imagining the King's Death. The Concluſion of this Indictment alledges the Fact done to be to the great Diſpleaſure of Almighty God, and to the great Diſgrace of the People of England. A Truth ſo clear and known, that it can neither be heightened by any Aggravation, or leſſened by any Excuſe.

As for the Fact itſelf, with the Manner of it, I ſhall not need to open it at large, for theſe Things were not done in a Corner; every true Engliſh Heart ſtill keeps within itſelf a bleeding Regiſter of this Story; only (my Lords) in the Way to our Evidence, with your Lordſhips Favour, this I think may be fit to be ſaid.

Firſt, for the Year 1648, (for that was the Fatal Year of this King, and beyond that Year we ſhall not now enquire,) I ſay whatſoever in the Year 1648 could have been done by a Parliament to ſave the Life of a King, was done in this Caſe.

They opened the Way to the Treaty in ſpight of the Army; and while theſe Sons of Zerviah, who were too hard for them, were engaged in Service in the Remoter Parts, they haſtened the Treaty as much as was poſſible; the Debates upon his Majeſties Conceſſions were Voted a good Ground for Peace; notwithſtanding the Remonſtrances of the Army ſtill flew about their Ears, and notwithſtanding the Oppoſitions of a fearful and unbelieving Party of the Houſe of Commons, whom the Army had frighted into an Awful and a Slaviſh Dependance upon them. And when nothing elſe could be done for him, they were ſo true to the Obligations they lay under, that they reſolved to fall with him, and did ſo. For the Army, who ſaw the Treaty proceed ſo faſt, made as great haſte to break it. They ſeize upon the Bleſſed Perſon of our Sacred King by Force, and bring him to London; and here they force the Parliament, ſhut out ſome Members, impriſon others, and then called this wretched little Company which was left a Parliament. By this, and before they had taken upon them the Boldneſs to diſſolve the Houſe of Peers, they paſs a Law, and erect, forſooth! an High Court of Juſtice, as they call it, a Shambles of Juſtice, appoint Judges, Advocates, Officers, and Miniſters, ſit upon the Life of the King. Now they Speak out and Expound their own Declarations, and tell us what that was which before they had demanded in obſcure Terms, when they called for Juſtice againſt all Delinquents. Now they ſpeak plainly what they mean, and call this Bleſſed King, this Glorious Saint, the Grand Delinquent:

—— Hæc Acies victum factura Nocentem eſt.

My Lords, When they had thus proceeded to appoint their Judges, Officers, and Court, then they call this Perſon, their only Liege Lord and Sovereign to the Bar, and by a Formal Pageantry of Juſtice, proceed to Sit upon him, Arraign, Try, Sentence, Condemn, and Kill, (I had almoſt ſaid Crucifie,) him, whom they could not but know to be their King; and all this againſt the cleareſt Light, the ſharpeſt Checks, and moſt through Convictions of Conſcience, that ever Men reſiſted. And yet in this Moment of Time, ſuch was the Majeſty and Innocence of our Gracious Sovereign, that the People followed him with Tears in their Eyes, and Acclamations in their Mouths, God Save the King; even then, when the Soldiers were ready to Fire upon them who did either look ſadly, or ſpeak affectionately. And yet it will appear upon our Evidence too, that ſo few of the very Common Soldiers could be brought to approve theſe Proceedings, or to cry out Juſtice, that their Officers were fain by Money, or Blows, or both, to bring a great many to it.

My Lords, The Actors in this Tragedy were many, very many, ſo many, that ſure their Name is Legion, or rather many Legions. And certainly (my Lords) when we ſhall conſider the Thing that they have done, we cannot but look upon it as a Villany which had in it all the Ingredients to make it deteſtable, ſtable, that it was poſſible for the Counſel of Men, or Devils either, to put together. But yet, if any Thing can be of a deeper Dye than the Guilt of that Sacred Blood, wherewith they ſtand Polluted, methinks their Impudence ſhould make them more odious than their Treaſon. It was the Deſtruction of God's Anointed, in the Name of the Lord. It was the Murther of a moſt Bleſſed and Beloved Prince, in the Name of his People. Him whom they had taken the tranſcendent Boldneſs to impriſon, as the Author of the War, they put to death, becauſe he would have been the Author of our Peace; and that with ſo much Scorn and Indignity, that ſome of them were not aſham'd to ſpit in the Face of our Lord and Sovereign. And when they had thus quenched the Light of Iſrael, Darkneſs and Confuſion did overſpread the Face of the Land; many Poor Subjects at Home, and ſome Proteſtants in Foreign Nations, at the very News of it fell down Dead; as if this Excellent King had been in a Natural as well as a Religious Sence, the Breath of our Noſtrils, the Anointed of the Lord, who was taken in their Pits. The Judges, Officers, and other immediate Actors in this pretended Court, were in Number about Fourſcore, of theſe ſome Four or Five and Twenty are Dead, and gone to their own Place. The God of Recompences hath taken the Matter ſo far into his own Hands; and who knows but that it might be one dreadful Part of his Vengeance that they died in Peace? Some Six or Seven of them, who are thought to have finned with leſs Malice, have their Lives ſpared indeed, but are like to be brought to a ſevere Repentance by future Penalties. Some Eighteen or Nineteen have fled from Juſtice, and wander to and fro about the World with the Mark of Cain upon them, and perpetual Trembling, leſt every Eye that ſees them, and ev'ry Hand that meets them, ſhould fall upon them. Twenty nine Perſons do now expect your Juſtice. Amongſt them the Firſt that is brought is the Priſoner at the Bar, and he deſerves to be the Firſt; for if any Perſon now left alive ought to be ſtil'd the Conductor, Leader, and Captain of all this Work, that's the Man. He (my Lord) brought the King up a Priſoner from Windſor, but how, and in what Manner, with how little Duty, nay, with how little Civility, to a Common Perſon, you will hear in Time. He Sat upon him, Sentenced him, he Sign'd the Warrant firſt to call that Court together, then the Bloody Warrant to cut off his Sacred Head. Againſt him, as againſt all the reſt, our Evidence will be of Two Sorts; Witneſſes Viva voce, that ſhall firſt prove to your Lordſhips that every Perſon now in Queſtion did ſit in that Court, when their King ſtood as a Priſoner at the Bar. We ſhall prove that the Precept by which this pretended Court was ſummon'd, was not obeyed and executed, till it had had the Hands and Seals of moſt of the pretended Judges; among the reſt the Hand of the Priſoner at the Bar will be found there. We ſhall prove his Hand to the Bloody Warrant for ſevering the Sacred Head of our Bleſſed Sovereign from the Body, and then ſome Circumſtances of his Malice, and of his Demeanour. And after we have done with our Witneſſes Viva voce, if we have Occaſion to uſe Records of Parliament, we ſhall ſhew them too; for we have the Originals, or Authentick Copies. But now we ſhall proceed to our Evidence.

Proclamation was made for Silence.

Sir Edward Turner. My Lords, The Service of this Day doth call to my Memory the Story of good King Amaziah. We read in Holy Writ, that his Father, King Joaſh, was murthered, and murthered by his own Subjects; but we read further, that when Amaziah had regain'd the Crown, was ſettled in the Government, he ſlew thoſe that ſlew his Father. He did go down into Edom, the Valley of Salt, and there he did ſlay Ten Thouſand. The Work of this Day doth very much reſemble that Action. Our Good and Gracious King, his Father of Bleſſed Memory, and our Father, his Natural, and our Politick, Father, to whom our Natural Allegiance was due, was murthered, and by his own Subjects. But, my Lords, this was not a National Crime; and our Good and Gracious Sovereign hath done us that Honour and Right to vindicate us in Foreign Nations; and now he is come Home in Power and Glory, he does continue in the ſame Mind: That's the Reaſon we are not now ſlain by Thouſands, but that thoſe Miſcreants are gathered up here and there that did commit the Offence, and would have involved the Nation in a common Infamy.

Gentlemen of the Jury, Your Time to enquire of this Matter is precious, more precious than my Words, elſe I would repeat to you the Hiſtory of that Tragedy, at leaſt that Summary that was entred in the Black Book, or the Journals of that they then called a Parliament. It ſhall ſuffice to tell you, and that moſt truly, that it was but an handful of Men in reſpect of the whole Nation, that did contrive and deſign this damnable and traiterous Plot, to ſubvert the Laws, and change the Government, of this well govern'd Nation. In Proſecution of which they did caſt abroad, and ſpread forth, Jeſuitical Maxims, Damnable and Diabolical Principles, to intoxicate the People; and when their Heads were troubled, they were eaſily led into Arms, where after ſome Time they grew drunk with Succeſſes; and when they had drunk too much of the Loyal Blood of the People, then they thirſted for the Royal Blood alſo. I do confeſs we read in Stories that Kings have before this Time been murthered; ſome in our Nation, as King Richard the Second, and Edward the Third; and in other Nations. But the Actors of thoſe Murthers were modeſt to theſe. They did it in Private, theſe in the Face of the Sun, and the People; but it was thoſe People, Gentlemen, they had corrupted with Shares in their Robberies and Villanies. They pretended it was in a Way of Juſtice; but you muſt know no Juſtice can be excuted upon the Perſon of the King. Touch not mine Anointed, ſaith God himſelf.

My Lords, I do read in the Roman Story, that both amongſt them, and other Nations, there was no Law againſt Parricide. It was not thought that any Man was ſo Unnatural and Deviliſh to deſtroy his Father. But we do find among the Romans ſuch a Fact was committed, and then they were at a Loſs to puniſh it. The Way was this that was found out; the Offender they ſewed into a Mail of Leather, ſo cloſe that no Water could get in; when they had done, they threw him into the Sea; by this denoting, the Offender was not worthy to tread upon the Ground, nor to breathe in the Air, nor to have the Benefit of any of the Four Elements, nor the Uſe of any of God's Creatures, and ſo be ſtarved.

Gentlemen, Parricide and Regicide differ not in Nature, but in Degree. Parricide is the killing of the Father of one, or a few, Perſons; Regicide the killing the Father of a Countrey. What Puniſhment then is ſuitable to this Offence? Gentlemen, the

The Priſoner at the Bar is accus'd of this Offence, and now to be Tried by you: But before we enter upon the Evidence, I muſt, with the Leave of the Court inform you, that though the Indictment contains many Circumſtances and Gradations in the Treaſon, yet the Imagining and Compaſſing the Death of our late Sovereign, is the Treaſon to which we ſhall apply our Evidence; this being, both by the Common-Law, and by the Statute of the 25*th of* Edward the 3*d, the Principal Treaſon to be enquired of. And the other Circumſtances in the* Indictment are but ſo many Matters to prove the Overt-Act, the Conſultations, the Aſſuming Power to Try and Condemn the King, the Aſſault upon him, and the Fatal Blow that was given him, are but ſo many Demonſtrations, and open Acts, proving the firſt Treaſonable Deſign of the Heart.

It will be enough for you, and ſo my Lords will tell you, if we prove the Treaſon itſelf, which is the Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King, though we fail in ſome of the Circumſtances laid in the Indictment. I do not ſpeak this as if we ſhould fail in any; but it is not neceſſary to prove them all, if we prove any you are to find the Priſoner Guilty. I am not willing to hold your Lordſhips too long in the Porch, but deſire to deſcend into the Body of the Buſineſs; and ſo we ſhall call our Witneſſes, and doubt not but to prove, that this Man at the Bar was the firſt, and not the leaſt, of theſe Offenders.

Mr. George Maſterſon was called.

Mr. Harriſon. When I was before your Lordſhips Yeſterday, I offered ſomething very material, in reference to the Juriſdiction of the Court; but you told me according to the Rule, I muſt plead Guilty, or Not Guilty; and what I had to offer ſhould be heard in its proper Place. I now deſire to know, whether it be proper now to deliver my ſelf, before you proceed to the calling of Witneſſes, for I would go the beſt Way, and would not willingly diſpleaſe you.

Lord Chief Baron. What was promiſed you Yeſterday God forbid but you ſhould have it. But I think it will be beſt for you to hear the Evidence, and then what you have to ſay you ſhall be fully heard.

Mr. Harriſon. I am content.

Whereupon George Maſterſon, Stephen Kirk, Francis Hearn, William Clark, Robert Coytmore and James Nutley, were called, and ſworn.

Council. Mr. Maſterſon, whether did the Priſoner at the Bar ſit in that which they called the High Court of Juſtice, to Sentence the King, or no? Pray tell my Lords, and the Jury thereof, and what elſe you know of the Matter.

Mr. Maſterſon. Upon the Oath I have taken, (my Lords, and Gentlemen of the Jury,) I ſaw the Priſoner, Th. Harriſon, ſit in that which they called the High Court of Juſtice, upon the 27th Day of January, in the Year 1648, to Sentence the King.

Council. Was it the Day the Sentence was paſſed againſt the King?

Mr. Maſterſon. It was the Day of the Sentence, the 27th of Jan. 1648.

Council. Can you ſay any Thing elſe?

Mr. Maſterſon. I do (Sir) further remember, that when the Clerk of the Court (as he was called) read the Sentence againſt the King, and ſaid, it was the Sentence of the whole Court, I ſaw the Priſoner at the Bar, together with others, ſtand up, to my Apprehenſion, as aſſenting to it.

Council. Was there not Direction that all ſhould ſtand up as Aſſenting?

Mr. Maſterſon. I do not know that; but when the Sentence was read ſeveral of them did ſtand up, and he among the reſt, as Aſſenting to the Sentence, as the Spectators underſtood.

Council. Mr. Clark, What do you ſay to the ſame Queſtion?

Mr. Clark. My Lords, and Gentlemen of the Jury, I remember I ſaw the Priſoner at the Bar ſit ſeveral times in the Court of Juſtice, as they called it; particularly on the 23d and 27th of January, 1648, as I took Notice of it in a Book.

Council. Was that the Day of the Sentence?

Mr. Clark. Yes, my Lord.

Council. What ſay you to that of the riſing of thoſe Perſons in the Court?

Mr. Clark. I remember they all roſe; but I did not take particular Notice then of the Priſoner.

Council. Mr. Kirk, You hear the Queſtion. Did you ſee the Priſoner at the Bar in Weſtminſter-Hall, ſitting upon the Bench in that which they called the High Court of Juſtice, when the King ſtood Priſoner at the Bar there?

Mr. Kirk. My Lord, I did ſee the Priſoner at the Bar ſit ſeveral Days in that which they called the High Court of Juſtice; I was there every Day of their Sitting.

Council. Do you remember he was there on the 27th of Jan. 1648.

Mr. Kirk. I do, Sir.

Council. Tell the Jury what was the Work there.

Mr. Kirk. It was Sentence. I did take the Names of all thoſe Gentlemen that did appear in the Court on that Day, the 27th of Jan. 1648, and amongſt the reſt I took a Note of that Gentleman's Name, as being preſent.

Council. Whereas theſe Gentlemen (Mr. Maſterſon and Mr. Clark) have declared, that, as Aſſenting to the Sentence, they all ſtood up; did you ſee them ſtand? And whether by Direction, or no?

Mr. Kirk. As for the Direction I know nothing of it; but the Members then preſent in the Court, (after Sentence was read,) as far as my Eyes could perceive, ſtood up unanimouſly, I ſuppoſe, as Aſſenting to the Sentence.

Court. Mr. Nutley, Did you know the Priſoner at the Bar? Have you ſeen him ſit in Weſtminſter-Hall at any Time upon the Bench when the King was brought as a Priſoner to the Bar?

Mr. Nutley. My Lords, and Gentlemen of the Jury, I ſaw the Priſoner at the Bar ſeveral Days ſit there, amongſt the reſt of the Judges, as a Judge, I ſuppoſe. To the beſt of my Remembrance he ſat there Four Days together.

Court. Was he there upon the Day of the Sentence?

Mr. Nutley. I did take Notes, My Lord, that Day in the Court, and I find he did ſit that Day.

Court. Do you know any Thing more of the Priſoner at the Bar.

Mr. Nutley. Thus much I know concerning the Priſoner at the Bar, my Lord, the firſt Day they ſat in Publick was (as I remember) the 20th of Jan. 1648. ſome few Days afore that, there was a Committee that ſat in the Exchequer-Chamber, and of that Committee the Priſoner at the Bar was one of the Members. I do remember well it was in the Evening; they were Lighting of Candles, they were ſomewhat private. This Gentleman was there, I ſaw him; for through the Kindneſs of Mr. Phelps, who was then Clerk to that Committee, I was admitted, pretending firſt to ſpeak with the ſaid Mr. Phelps;

Phelps, and that I had ſome Buſineſs with him, and ſo (as I ſaid before) I was admitted into the Committee-Chamber: Being there, I did obſerve ſome Paſſages fall from the Priſoner at the Bar; the Words were to this Purpoſe: He was making a Narrative of ſome Diſcourſes that paſſed between his late Majeſty and himſelf in coming between Windſor and London, or Hurſt Caſtle, I know not well whether. My Lord, that Paſſage that I obſerved to fall from him in that Diſcourſe was this: He ſaid, That the King as he ſat in the Coach with him, was importunate to know what they intended to do with him.

Mr. Harriſon. In the Coach was it?

Mr. Nutley. Yea, Sir, it was in the Coach. He told the reſt of the Company (as I ſaid before) that the King asked, What do they intend to do with me? Whether to murther me, or no? And I ſaid to him, There was no ſuch Intention, as to kill him, we have no ſuch thoughts. But (ſaith he) the Lord hath reſerved you for a Publick Example of Juſtice. There is one Word more, my Lords, and that is this, which I heard from this Priſoner at the Bar, The Reaſon and End of their Meeting together at that Committee was concerning the Charge. So much I obſerv'd. It was concerning the Contracting of the Impeachment. I obſerv'd that ſome found fault with the Length of that, as it was drawn. They were offering ſome Reaſons to Contract it, and I heard this Priſoner at the Bar vent this Expreſſion, Gentlemen, it will be good for us to Blacken him what we can; pray let us Blacken him: Or Words to that purpoſe. I am ſure Blacken was his Word.

Mr. Windham. Mr. Nutley, you ſpeak of an Impeachment. Againſt whom was that Impeachment?

Mr. Nutley. It was againſt his late Majeſty the King.

Council. And it was to draw up that Impeachment ſo as to Blacken him. Was it ſo?

Mr. Nutley. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Coytmore Sworn.

Mr. Windham. Did you ſee the Priſoner at the Bar ſitting in that which they call'd the High-Court of Juſtice on the Day when the King was Sentenced, or at any other Time? Pray tell my Lords and the Jury.

Mr. Coytmore. My Lords, and Gentlemen of the Jury, I was in that which they called the High-Court of Juſtice Three or Four Times. I ſaw this Gentleman either once or twice ſitting there.

Councel. Do you know any Thing more.

Coytmore. No really: I came only to hear and ſee what they were doing, and I did there ſee him, I think, ſeveral Days; I am ſure once.

Council. Did you ſee him on the Seven and Twentieth of January 1648. ſitting there, which was the Day of the Sentence?

Coytmore. I cannot call that to Memory.

Council. Do you know of any Expreſſions that the King ſhould be an Example of Judgment?

Coytmore. No, my Lords.

Mr. Windham. My Lords, in the next Place we ſhall ſhew that Inſtrument that was made under the Hand and Seal of the Priſoner at the Bar, as well as others, for Execution of the King, that Bloody Warrant. But firſt we will ask this Witneſs another Queſtion.

Council. Did you ſee the Priſoner at the Bar ſit on the Bench as an ordinary Spectator, or as one of the Judges?

Coytmore. He was in the Court, ſitting among the reſt of the Judges, as one of them.

Mr. Solicitor. My Lords we will prove that this Priſoner at the Bar was one of them that took upon him the conducting of the King, and that the King was in is Cuſtody; and to the High Court of Juſtice alſo.

The Lord Newburgh Sworn.

Council. Pray, my Lord, give your ſelf the Trouble to raiſe your Voice, and to tell my Lords and the Jury what you know of the Priſoner at the Bar; the part that he acted in bringing up the King.

Lord Newburgh. I was then living at his Majeſties Lodge at Bagſhot, when the Priſoner at the Bar brought the King from Hurſt-Caſtle to London He was the Perſon that commanded the whole Party; and when the King by the Way went to Dinner, by his Orders there were Centries ſet at every Door where he was. When the King had dined he carried him to Windſor, and appointed ſeveral of his Officers to ride cloſe to the King, as he was riding, leſt he ſhould make his Eſcape from them.

Council. That was an Impriſonment itſelf, and ſo a Treaſon.

Mr. Windham. My Lords, we ſhall now produce to you Two Inſtruments which were made, the one for Convening and Summoning the Aſſembling of that which they called the High-Court of Juſtice, and ſhew this Priſoner's Hand and Seal to that, and then ſhew you likewiſe that which was the Conſummating of all, that Bloody Warrant for Execution of his late Majeſty of Bleſſed Memory, with the Hand and Seal of the Priſoner at the Bar unto it amongſt others.

Mr. Solicitor. My Lords, it will be fit before this to give you an account how we came by theſe Inſtruments.

Mr. Jeſſop Sworn.

Council. Shew to Mr. Jeſſop the Warrant for ſummoning that Court.

Mr. Solicitor. Mr. Jeſſop, pray tell my Lords and the Jury how you came by that Inſtrument you have in your Hand.

M. Jeſſop. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, I having the Honour to attend the Houſe of Commons, the Houſe was pleaſed to make an Order that Mr. Scobel ſhould deliver into my Hands all ſuch Books and Records, Papers, and other Things, as did belong to the Houſe of Commons; and in Purſuance to that Order I did receive amongſt other Things this Inſtrument, as a Thing that had been formerly in his Hands, as Clerk of the Houſe of Commons.

Mr. Solicitor. We deſire it may be read, my Lords.

Court. Pray firſt prove his Hand.

Mr. Harriſon. I deſire to know what is offered to be read.

Court. It is a Warrant that you Sealed amongſt other pretended Judges of your High Court of Juſtice (as you call'd it) for Trial of the King for ſummoning that Court.

Council. Mr. Kirk, have you ſeen the Handwriting of the Priſoner at any Time?

Mr. Kirk. I have very often ſeen it, and am well acquainted with it; and ſo far as it is poſſible a Man can teſtifie touching the Hand of another Perſon, I do verily believe this to be his Hand.

Council. How came you to be acquainted with his Hand?

Mr. Kirk. As he was a Member of the Houſe of Commons, and my Employment having relation thereto, I have ſeen him ſet his Hand ſeveral Times.

Mr. Farrington Sworn.

Council. Do you believe that this is the Handwriting writing of the Prisoner at the Bar? (The Instrument being shewed him.)

Mr. Farrington. I did not see him write it, my Lords, but I believe it to be his, for I have often seen his Hand-writing. It is his Hand so far as possibly a Man can know any Person's Hand that did not see him write.

Mr. Harrison. I desire to see the Instrument. Which being shew'd to him, he said, I believe it is my own Hand.

Council. That's the Warrant for Summoning that Court that he owns his Hand to.

Court. Shew him the other Instrument.

That being for Execution of the Sentence; it being shew'd him,

Mr. Harrison. I do think this is my Hand too.

Council. If you think it the Jury will not doubt it. That's the Bloody Warrant for Execution; and we desire they may be both read.

Mr. Harrison. My Lords, do these Learned Gentlemen offer these as being any Records?

Council. No, but as your own Hand-writing.

Mr. Harrison. If you do not read it as a Record, I hope your Lordships will not admit of any thing of that kind against me.

Council. He knows that a Letter under his Hand and Seal may be read in a Court. We do not offer it as a Record, but prove it by Witnesses that it is your Hand-writing.

Court. You have confessed these to be your Hands. Whether they are Records, or no; whether Papers, or Letters, they may be read against you. You Sign'd the Warrant for Convening together those which you call'd the High Court of Justice, and you Sign'd the other Warrant for putting the King to Death. You do confess these Two Things. We do not see what further Use may be made of them.

Court. You might observe how the Inndictment was for the Imagining, Compassing, and Contriving, the King's Death. To prove that there must be some Overt-Act, and a Letter under the Party's Hand is a sufficient Overt-Act to prove such Imagination; to that End these are used.

Mr. Harrison. I do not come to be denying any Thing that in my own Judgment and Conscience I have done or committed, but rather to be bringing it forth to the Light.

Court. Sir, you must understand this by the way, this you must take along with you, that these are read, not as any Thing of Authority in themselves, or as us'd to any other Purpose, but as an Evidence of the Fact against you: Take that along with you.

(The Two Bloody Warrants for Trial, and for Execution of his Majesty, were here read, the latter of which is as followeth.)

At the High-Court of Justice for the Trying and Judging of Charles Stuart, King of England, Jan. 29. 1648.

WHereas Charles Stuart, King of England, is and standeth Convicted, Attainted, and Condemned, of High-Treason, and other High Crimes; and Sentence upon Saturday last was pronounced against him by this Court, to be put to Death, by the Severing his Head from his Body, of which Sentence Execution yet remaineth to be done. These are therefore to will and require you to see the said Sentence executed in the open Street before White-hall upon the Morrow, being the 30th Day of this Instant Month of January, between the Hours of Ten in the Morning and Five in the Afternoon of the same Day, with full Effect; and for so doing this shall be your sufficient Warrant. And these are to require all Officers and Soldiers, and other the good People of this Nation of England, to be assistant unto you in this Service. Given under our Hands and Seals.

To Colonel Francis Hacker, Colonel Huncks, and Lieutenant-Colonel Phayre, and every of them.

Mr. Windham. Gentlemen of the Jury, We have done our Evidence; and you must know, Gentlemen, that the Principal Point of the Indictment is for Compassing, Imagining, and Contriving the Death of his late Majesty of Glorious Memory. There lyes the Treason; so says the Statute of the 25th Ed. III. It hath nothing of Killing the King there, but of Imagining and Compassing the Death of the King. The going about it, that's the Treason, as hath been learnedly opened to you; the rest are but Overt-Acts: If there be such an Imagination or Compassing the Death of the King once declared, though no Fruit at all follow, it is Treason. Here certainly you have a very full Evidence given. We shew you a Consultation; this is one Overt-Act which would do the Work if there were nothing else. I must tell you (and that with Submission to my Lords, the Justices) if they had advised, and gone no further, that had been Treason in the Letter of the Law. They conven'd and met together, and suppose then they had absolved and acquitted him, do you think they had absolved themselves from Treason? With Reverence be it spoken, if they had acquitted him, they had been Guilty of Treason. Assuming a Power to put the King to Death is an Overt-Act declaring ring ſuch an Imagination. You ſee this Priſoner was no ordinary Actor in it; his Hand is in at all Games. Taking of him, Impriſoning of him, bringing him to London, and Setting Guards on him. You ſee alſo his Malice, let us Blacken him; for they knew his Innocency would ſhine forth, unleſs it was Blackened by their Imputations. He Sate many Times, as you hear, and Sentenced him, and aſſented to that Sentence by ſtanding up, and likewiſe by concluding the Cataſtrophe of that ſad beginning of Sufferings, his making a Warrant for his Execution; and accordingly you know what did follow: I think a clearer Evidence of a Fact can never be given than is for theſe Things.

(Here the Spectators Humm'd.)

Lord Chief Baron. Gentlemen, this Humming is not at all becoming the Gravity of this Court. Let there be Free Speaking by the Priſoner and Council. It is more fitting for a Stage-Play than for a Court of Juſtice.

Mr. Harriſon. It is now Time, my Lords, to offer what I have to ſay. Have theſe Learned Gentlemen offered what they will ſay?

Council. We have no more till he hath given us Occaſion; not for Evidence of the Fact.

Mr. Harriſon. My Lords, the Matter that hath been offer'd to you, as it was touch'd, was not a Thing done in a Corner. I believe the Sound of it hath been in moſt Nations. I believe the Hearts of ſome have felt the Terrors of that Preſence of God that was with his Servants in thoſe Days, (however it ſeemeth good to him to ſuffer this Turn to come on us,) and are Witneſſes that the Things were not done in a Corner. I have deſired, as in the Sight of him that ſearcheth all Hearts, whilſt this hath been done, to wait, and receive from him Convictions upon my own Conſcience, tho' I have ſought it with Tears many a Time, and Prayers over and over, to that God to whom you and all Nations are leſs than a Drop of Water of the Bucket; and to this Moment I have receiv'd rather Aſſurance of it, and that the Things that have been done, as aſtoniſhing on one Hand, I do believe e'er it be long it will be made known from Heaven, there was more from God than Men are aware of. I do profeſs that I would not offer of myſelf the leaſt Injury to the pooreſt Man or Woman that goes upon the Earth. That I have humbly to offer is this to your Lordſhips; you know what a Conteſt hath been in theſe Nations for many Years. Divers of thoſe that ſit upon the Bench were formerly as Active ——

Court. Pray Mr. Harriſon do not thus reflect on the Court. This is not the Buſineſs.

Mr. Harriſon. I followed not my own Judgment; I did what I did as out of Conſcience to the Lord; for when I found thoſe that were as the Apple of mine Eye to turn aſide, I did loath them, and ſuffer'd Impriſonment many Years. Rather than to turn as many did, that did put their Hands to this Plough, I choſe rather to be ſeparated from Wife and Family than to have Compliance with them, tho' it was ſaid, Sit at my Right-hand, and ſuch kind of Expreſſions. Thus I have given a little poor Teſtimony that I have not been doing Things in a Corner, or from myſelf. May be I might be a little miſtaken, but I did it all according to the beſt of my Underſtanding, deſiring to make the Revealed Will of God in his Holy Scriptures as a Guide to me. I humbly conceive that what was done, was done in the Name of the Parliament of England, that what was done was done by their Power and Authority; and I do humbly conceive it is my Duty to offer unto you in the Beginning, that this Court, or any Court below the High-Court of Parliament, hath no Juriſdiction of their Actions. Here are many Learned in the Law, and to ſhorten the Work, I deſire I may have the Help of Council Learned in the Laws, that may in this Matter give me a little Aſſiſtance, to offer thoſe Grounds that the Law of the Land doth offer. I ſay what was done was done by the Authority of the Parliament, which was then the Supreme Authority, and that thoſe that have acted under them are not to be queſtioned by any Power leſs than them. And for that I conceive there is much out of the Laws to be ſhewed to you, and many Precedents alſo in the Caſe. Much is to be offered to you in that; according to the Laws of the Nations that was a due Parliament. Thoſe Commiſſions were iſſued forth, and what was done was done by their Power; and whereas it hath been ſaid we did aſſume and uſurp an Authority, I ſay this was done rather in the Fear of the Lord.

Court. Away with him. Know where you are, Sir; you are in the Aſſembly of Chriſtians; will you make God the Author of your Treaſons and Murthers? Take heed where you are, Chriſtians muſt not hear this; we will allow you to ſay for your own Defence what you can; and we have with a great deal of Patience ſuffer'd you to ſally out, wherein you have not gone about ſo much for Extenuation of your Crimes, as to juſtifie them, to fall upon others, and to Blaſpheme God, and commit a New Treaſon: For your having of Council, this is the Reaſon for allowing of Council, when a Man would Plead any Thing, becauſe he would Plead it in Formality, Council is allowed. But you muſt firſt ſay in what the Matter ſhall be, and then you ſhall have the Court's Anſwer.

Lord Finch. Tho' my Lords here have been pleaſed to give you a great Latitude, this muſt not be ſuffered, that you ſhould run into theſe damnable Excurſions, to make God the Author of this damnable Treaſon committed.

Mr. Harriſon. I have Two Things to offer to you, to ſay for my Defence in Matter of Law. One is, That this that hath been done was done by a Parliament of England, by the Commons of England Aſſembled in Parliament; and that being ſo, whatever was done by their Commands or their Authority, is not queſtionable by your Lordſhips, as being (as I humbly conceive) a Power Inferior to that of an High-Court of Parliament; that's One. A Second is this, That what therefore any did in Obedience to that Power and Authority, they are not to be queſtioned for it, otherwiſe we are in a moſt miſerable Condition, bound to obey them that are in Authority, and yet to be puniſhed if obeyed. We are not to judge what is Lawful, or what is unlawful. My Lords, upon theſe Two Points I do deſire that thoſe that are Learned in the Laws ſpeak too on my Behalf. It concerns all my Countreymen. There are Caſes alike to this, you know, in King Richard the Second's Time, wherein ſome Queſtion had been of what had been done by a Parliament; and what followed upon it I need not urge in it. I hope it will ſeem good to you that Council may be aſſigned, for it concerns all my Countreymen.

Council. You are miſtaken if you appeal to your Countreymen; they will cry you out, and ſhame you.

Mr. Harriſon. May be ſo, my Lords, ſome will, but I am ſure others will not.

Mr.

Mr. Solicitor Gen. These Two Points, my Lords, are but One, and they are a New Treason at the Bar, for which he deserves to Die if there were no other Inditment. It is the Malice of his Heart to the Dignity and Crown of England. I say this is not Matter for which Council can be assigned. Council cannot put into Form that which is not Matter Pleadable itself. It is so far from being true, that this was the Act of the Supreme Parliament of the People of England, that there was nothing receiv'd with more Heart-bleeding than this Bloody Business. But that the World may not be abused by the Insinuations of a Man, who acts as if he had a Spirit, and in truth is possess'd, I will say, that the Lords and Commons are not a Parliament; that the King and Lords cannot do any Thing without the Commons; nor the King and Commons without the Lords; nor the Lords and Commons without the King, especially against the King. If they do, they must answer it with their Head; for the King is not accountable to any Coercive Power. And for the Prisoner to justifie his Act, as if it were the Act of the Commons of England, he is very much to be reproved: Shall he pretend that One House, nay, the Eighth part of a House, (for so it was,) can condemn a King, when both Houses cannot condemn One Man in Spight of the King? I desire, my Lords, it may pass with a due Reproach, and a Sentence upon it.

Lord Chief Baron. It is true, your Questions are but One Point. You pretend the Parliaments Authority, and when you come to speak of it, you say the Commons of England. They were but One House of Parliament. The Parliament, what is that? It is the King, the Lords, and the Commons. I would fain know of you where ever you read, by the Light you say you have in your Conscience, that the Commons of England were a Parliament of Engiand, that the Commons in Parliament us'd a Legislative Power alone. Do you call that a Parliament that sat when the House was Purged, as they call it, and was so much under the Awe of the Army, who were then but Forty, or Forty-five at most? Then you say it was done by Authority of them. You must know where there is such an Authority, (which indeed is no Authority,) he that confirms such an Authority, he commits a double Offence; therefore consider what your Plea is. If your Plea were doubtful, we should, and ought, and would, ourselves be of Council for you. That which you speak concerning Conviction of your own Conscience, remember that it is said in Scripture, that they shall think they did God good Service when they slay you, as it is in St. John. He hath a great deal of Charity that thinks that what you did was out of a Conscientious Principle; it was against the Light of Noonday and common Practice. You make yourself a Solicitor in the Business. Let us Blacken him as much as we can. I have not touched at all upon the Evidence, I will not urge it now. I say you justifie it upon Convictions of Conscience, and pretend it upon Authority; a Thing never known or seen under the Sun, that the Commons, nay a few Commons alone, should take upon them, and call themselves the Parliament of England. We have been cheated enough by Names and Words; there is no Colour for what you say. I do think and hope my Brethren will speak to this Case, that none of us do own that Convention, whatsoever it be, to be the Parliament of England. There was another Aggravation; at this Time that this pretended Authority usurped that Power, the Lords were then sitting. You had not taken this usurp'd Power to dissolve those Lords. No; you did this Act in Despight of the Lords; you had sent up an Ordinance to the Lords, and they rejected it, and thereupon these Members took it upon themselves: Amongst those there were some Negatives, and those Members were under the Awe and Power of your Forces at that Time. What you plead, the Court are of Opinion tends to the Subversion of the Laws; for you to usurp Power over the People without their Consents, to call this the People, we never knew the like before; but the Parliament of England was the King, Lords and Commons. For you to speak of this Power, and justifie this Power, is an Aggravation, adding one Sin and Treason to another. We shall tell you, that neither both Houses of Parliament, if they had been there, not any single Person, Community, not the People, either collectively, or representatively, had any Colour to have any Coercive Power over their King. And this Plea which you have spoken of, it ought to be over-ruled, and not to stand good.

Mr. Annesley. I do the more willingly speak to this Business, because I was one of those that should have made up that Parliament that this Prisoner pretends to. I was one of that Corrupt Majority (as they call'd it) that were put out of the House. He cannot forget that at that Time there were Guards upon both Houses of Parliament to attend them that were of their own Appointment; and that those Guards were forcibly removed by the Prisoner at the Bar, and his Fellows, and other Guards put there, who instead of being a Defence unto them when those Commons stood at the Door, were by them threatned. Yet the Lords and Commons of England in Parliament Assembled, a full House of Commons, did resolve, notwithstanding what was aforesaid, that the Treaty in the Isle of Wight was a Ground for Peace. Afterwards the major part of the House of Commons having resolved on this, sent it up to the Lords; that very Day when they were Adjourned there were Forces drawn down to the House of Commons Door, and none suffered to come into the House but those that they pleased. All those that had a Mind for Peace, that minded their Duty, and Trust, and Allegiance, to their King, were seized on by this Gentleman and his Fellows. When this was done, what did he and those Fellows do? They sat and put a Check upon all those that should come in. None must come in but those that would renounce their Allegiance and Duty to their King and the People, for whom they served, and then declar'd against that Vote which had been passed upon Debate of Twelve or Fourteen Hours, and then to call this an House of Commons, nay, the Supreme Authority of the Nation, he knows is against the Laws of the Land. For the House of Commons alone cannot so much as give an Oath. It hath not Power of Judicature of Life and Death: This he knows well to be according to the Laws of England. He knows that no Authority less than an Act of Parliament can make a Law; and he knows an Act of Parliament must be passed by the King, Lords, and Commons. I wonder much to hear a Justification in this kind by one that knows the Laws of England so well. There will none of the Court allow that that was a Parliament: The Majority of the House did all disavow it. These Things have been already discoursed of; I shall only say, that he knowing the Laws so well, I hope he shall suffer for Transgression thereof.

Mr. Hollis. You do very well know that this that you did, this horrid, deteſtable Act which you committed, could never be perfected by you till you had broken the Parliament. That Houſe of Commons, which you ſay gave you Authority, you know what yourſelf made of it when you pulled out the Speaker; therefore do not make the Parliament to be the Author of your Black Crimes. It was innocent of it. You know yourſelf what Eſteem you had of it, when you broke and tore it in ſunder, when you ſcattered, and made them hide themſelves, to preſerve them from your Fury and Violence: Do not make the Parliament to be the Author of your Crimes. The Parliament are the Three Eſtates: It muſt not be admitted that one Houſe, Part of the Parliament, ſhould be called the Supreme Authority. You know what that Rump that you left did, what Laws they made. Did you go home to adviſe with your Countrey that choſe you for that Place? You know that no Act of Parliament is binding but what is Acted by King, Lords, and Commons: And now as you would make God the Author of your Offence, ſo likewiſe you would make the People Guilty of your Opinion; but your Plea is over-ruled.

To which the Court aſſented.

Mr. Harriſon. I was miſtaken a little. Whereas it was ſaid the Points were one, I do humbly conceive they were not ſo. I ſay what was done, was done in Obedience to the Authority. If it were but an Order of the Houſe of Commons, thus under a Force, yet this Court is not Judge of that Force. I ſay if it was done by One Eſtate of Parliament, it is not to be queſtioned.

Court. It was not done by One Eſtate, they were but a Part, nay, but an Eighth Part.

Denz. Hollis. It was not an Houſe of Commons; they kept up a Company by the Power of the Sword: Do not abuſe the People, in ſaying it was done by the Supreme Power.

Council. My Lord, if it were an Houſe of Commons, neither Houſe of Commons, nor Houſe of Lords, nor Houſe of Lords and Commons together; no Authority upon Earth can give Authority for murthering the King; this that he alledgeth is Treaſon; my Lord, this that is ſaid is a clear Evidence of that which is charged; there is only this more in it, he hath done it, and if he were to do it again he would do it.

Lord Chief Baron. It is clear as the Noon-day that this was not the Houſe of Commons. Suppoſe it had been an Houſe of Commons and full, and ſuppoſe (which far be it from me to ſuppoſe) they ſhould have agreed upon ſuch a Murtherous Act; for the Houſe of Commons to do ſuch an Act, it was void in itſelf; nay, any Authority without the Houſe of Lords and King is void. You plead to the Juriſdiction of the Court whether we ſhould judge it, or no. Yes, I tell you, and proper too: We ſhall not ſpeak what Power we have; the Judges have Power after Laws are made to go upon the Interpretation of them. We are not to judge of thoſe Things that the Parliament do. But when the Parliament is purged, (as you call it,) for the Commons alone to act, for you to ſay that this is the Authority of Parliament, it is that which every Man will ſay intrenches highly upon his Liberty and Priviledge: And what you have ſaid to your Juſtification, what doth it tend to but as much as this, I did it, juſtifie it, and would do it again; which is a New Treaſon. The greateſt Right that ever the Houſe of Commons did claim is but over the Commons. Do they claim a particular Right over the Lords? Nay, over the King? Make it out if you can, but it cannot poſſibly be made out. What you have ſaid doth aggravate your Crimes: It is ſuch an Approvement of your Treaſon that all Evidences come ſhort of it: King, Lords, and Commons, is the Ground of the Engliſh Law, without that no Act of Parliament binds.

Juſtice Mallet. I have been a Parliament-Man as long as any Man here preſent, and I did never know or hear that the Houſe of Commons had Juriſdiction over any, ſaving their own Members, which is as much as I will ſay concerning the Parliament. I have heard a Story of a Mute, that was born Mute, whoſe Father was ſlain by a Stranger, a Man unknown. After Twenty Years, or thereabouts, this Mute Man fortuned to ſee the Murtherer of his Father, and theſe were his Words, Oh! here is he that ſlew my Father. Sir, the King is the Father of the Countrey, Pater Patriæ, ſo ſaith Sir Edward Coke. He is Caput Reipublicæ, the Head of the Commonwealth. Sir, what have you done? Here you have cut off the Head of the whole Commmonwealth, and taken away him that was our Father, the Governour of the whole Countrey. This you ſhall find Printed and Publiſhed in a Book of the greateſt Lawyer, Sir Edward Coke. I ſhall not need, my Lord, to ſay more of this Buſineſs. I do hold the Priſoner's Plea vain and unreaſonable, and to be rejected.

Juſtice Hide. I ſhall not trouble you with many Words. I am ſorry that any Man ſhould have the Face and Boldneſs to deliver ſuch Words as you have. You, and all, muſt know, that the King is above the Two Houſes. They muſt propoſe their Laws to him: The Laws are made by him, and not by them; by their Conſenting, but they are his Laws. That which you ſpeak as to the Juriſdiction, you are here Indicted for High-Treaſon, for you to come to talk of Juſtification of this by Pretence of Authority, your Plea is naught, illegal, and wicked, and ought not to be allowed. As to having of Council, the Court underſtand what you are upon; Council is not to be allowed in that Caſe, and therefore your Plea muſt be over-ruled.

Mr. Juſtice Twiſden. I ſhall agree with that which many have already ſaid; only this, you have eas'd the Jury, you have confeſſed the Fact. I am of the ſame Opinion, that you can have no Council, therefore I over-rule your Plea, if it had been put in never ſo good Form and Manner.

Earl of Mancheſter. I beſeech you, my Lords, let us go ſome other Way to work——

Sir William Wild. That which is before us is, whether it be a Matter of Law or Fact: For the Matter of Law, your Lordſhips have declar'd what it is, his Juſtification is as high a Treaſon as the former. For Matter of Fact, he hath confeſs'd it. I beſeech you, my Lord, direct the Jury for their Verdict. This Gentleman hath forgot their Barbarouſneſs; they would not hear their King.

Court. No Council can be allowed to Juſtifie a Treaſon; that this is a Treaſon, you are Indicted by an Act of the 25th of Edw. III. That which you ſpeak of the Houſe of Commons, is but part of the Houſe of Commons; they never did, nor had any Power, to make a Law, but by King, Lords, and Commons; and therefore your Plea is naught, and all the Court here here is of the ſame Opinion; if they were not they would ſay ſo, therefore what you have ſaid is over-rul'd by the Court. Have you any Thing elſe to offer?

Mr. Harriſon. Notwithſtanding the Judgment of ſo many Learned ones, that the Kings of England are no ways accountable to the Parliament, the Lords and Commons in the Beginning of this War having declared the Kings beginning War upon them; the God of Gods——

Court. Do you render yourſelf ſo deſperate that you care not what Language you let fall? It muſt not be ſuffered.

Mr. Harriſon. I would not willingly ſpeak to offend any Man; but I know God is no Reſpecter of Perſons. His ſetting up his Standard againſt the People——

Court. Truly, Mr. Harriſon, this muſt not be ſuffered: This doth not at all belong to you.

Mr. Harriſon. Under Favour this doth belong to me. I would have adhorr'd to have brought him to Account, had not the Blood of Engliſhmen, that had been ſhed——

Council. Methinks he ſhould be ſent to Bedlam till he comes to the Gallows to render an Account of this. This muſt not be ſuffered. It is in a a Manner a New Impeachment of this King, to juſtifie their Treaſons againſt his late Majeſty.

Mr. Solicitor-General. My Lords, I pray that the Jury may go together upon the Evidence.

Sir Edw. Turner. My Lords, this Man hath the Plague all over him; it is Pity any ſhould ſtand near him, for he will infect them. Let us ſay to him as they uſed to write over an Houſe infected, The Lord have Mercy upon him, and ſo let the Officer take him away.

Lord Chief Baron. Mr. Harriſon, we are ready to hear you again; but to hear ſuch Stuff, it cannot be ſuffered. You have ſpoken that which is as high a Degree of Blaſphemy, next to that againſt God, as I have heard. You have made very ill uſe of theſe Favours that have been allowed you to ſpeak; your own Conſcience cannot but tell you the Contradiction of your Actions againſt this that you have heard as the Opinion of the Court. To extenuate your Crimes you may go on, but you muſt not go as before.

Mr. Harriſon. I muſt not ſpeak ſo as to be pleaſing to Men; but if I muſt not have Liberty as an Engliſhman——

Court. Pray do not reflect thus; you have had Liberty, and more than any Priſoner in your Condition can expect; and I wiſh you had made a good uſe of it. Keep to the Buſineſs, ſay what you will.

Mr. Harriſon. My Lords, thus; There was a Diſcourſe by one of the Witneſſes that I was at the Committee preparing the Charge, and that I ſhould ſay, Let us Blacken him. The Thing is utterly untrue; I abhorred the doing of any Thing touching the Blackening of the King. There was a little Diſcourſe between the King and myſelf. The King had told me that he had heard that I ſhould come privately to the Iſle of Wight to offer ſome Injury to him; but I told him I abhorred the Thoughts of it. And whereas it is ſaid that my Carriage was hard to him when I brought him to London, it was not I that brought him to London, I was commanded by the General to fetch him from Hurſt-Caſtle. I do not remember any hard Carriage towards him.

Court. Mr. Harriſon, You have ſaid that you deny that of Blackening, which the Witneſs hath Sworn; and ſomewhat elſe touching the King in his Way to London, that the Witneſs hath Sworn to alſo. The Jury muſt conſider of it, both of their Oaths and your Contradictions. If you have nothing more to ſay, which tends to your Juſtification. We muſt direct the Jury. The end of your Speech is nothing but to infect the People.

Mr. Harriſon. You are uncharitable in that.

Juſtice Foſter. My Lords, This ought not to come from the Bar to the Bench; if you ſalley out thus about your Conſcience; if your Conſcience ſhould be a darkened Conſcience, that muſt not be the Rule of other Mens Actions. What you ſpeak of that Nature is nothing to the Buſineſs. If you have any thing to ſay, by Way of Excuſe for yourſelf for Matter of Fact, you may ſpeak: But if you will go on as before, it muſt not be ſuffered.

Mr. Harriſon. The Things that have been done, have been done upon the Stage, in the Sight of the Sun——

Court. All this is a Continuance of the Juſtification and Confeſſion of the Fact. We need no other Evidence.

Council. He hath confeſſed his Fact, my Lords. The Matter itſelf is Treaſon upon Treaſon; therefore we pray Direction to the Jury.

Lord Chief Baron. Mr. Harriſon, I muſt give Direction to the Jury if you will not go further touching the Fact.

Mr. Harriſon. My Lords, I ſay what I did was by the Supreme Authority. I have ſaid it before, and appeal to your own Conſciences, that this Court cannot call me to Queſtion.

Lord Chief Baron. Mr. Harriſon, you have appealed to our Conſciences. We ſhall do that, which, by the Bleſſing of God, ſhall be juſt; for which we ſhall anſwer before the Tribunal of God. Pray take heed of an Obdurate, Hard Heart, and a Seared Conſcience.

Mr. Harriſon. My Lords, I have been kept ſix Months a Cloſe Priſoner, and could not prepare myſelf for this Trial by Council. I have got here ſome Acts of Parliament of that Houſe of Commons, which your Lordſhips will not own; and the Proceedings of that Houſe, whoſe Authority I did own.

Lord Chief Baron. This you have ſaid already. If you ſhew never ſo many of that Nature they will not help you: You have heard the Opinion of the Court touching that Authority. They all unanimouſly concur in it.

Gentlemen of the Jury, You ſee that this Priſoner at the Bar is Indicted for Compaſſing, Imagining, and Contriving the Death of our late Sovereign Lord, King Charles the Firſt, of Bleſſed Memory. In this Indictment there are ſeveral Things given but as Evidences of it; they are but the Overt-Acts of it. The one is, firſt, that they did meet and conſult together about the putting the King to Death; and that alone, if nothing elſe had been proved in the Caſe, was enough for you to find the Indictment; for the Imagination alone is Treaſon by the Law. But becauſe the Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King is ſecret in the Heart, and no Man knows it but God Almighty, I ſay, That the Imagination is Treaſon; yet it is not ſuch as the Law can lay hold of, unleſs it appears by ſome Overt-Act. Then the firſt Overt-Act is their Meeting, Conſulting, and Propoſing to put the King to Death. The Second is more open; namely, their Sitting together, and Aſſuming an Authority to put the King to Death. The Third is Sentencing the King. And I muſt tell you that any one of theſe Acts prove the Indictment. If you find find him Guilty but of any one of them, either Conſulting, Propoſing, Sitting, or Sentencing (though there is full Proof for all,) yet notwithſtanding you ought to find the Indictment. You have heard what the Witneſſes have ſaid, and the Priſoner's own Confeſſion. Witneſſes have Sworn their Sitting together; and that he was one: One ſwears he ſat Four times, another Twice; ſome ſeveral Times. There are ſeveral Witneſſes for this, as Mr. Maſterſon, Mr. Clark, Mr. Kirk, and Mr. Nutley. And then you have another Thing too, which truly the Priſoner did not ſpeak of. Witneſs was given againſt him, that he was the Perſon that Conducted the King; this was before that, which he would have to be done by a Legiſlative Power, and that is another Overt-Act. If a Man will go about to Impriſon the King, the Law knows what is the ſad Effect of ſuch Impriſonment. That hath often been adjudged to be an Evidence of Imagining and Compaſſing the Death of the King. That Man, the Priſoner at the Bar, it hath been proved to you did Impriſon the King; and it appears by his own Hand to the Warrant for ſummoning of that Traiterous Aſſembly, The High-Court of Juſtice, as they called it. And alſo it appears by his Hand to the Warrant for Execution; that Bloody Warrant. He hath been ſo far from denying, that he hath juſtified theſe Actions. The Evidence is ſo clear and pregnant as nothing more. I think you need not go out.

The Jury went together at the Bar, and preſently unanimouſly agreed on their Verdict, whereupon they were demanded by the Clerk.

Clerk. Are you agreed upon your Verdict.

Jury. Yes.

Clerk. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. Our Foreman. (Which was Sir Tho. Allen.)

Clerk. Thomas Harriſon, Hold up thy Hand. Gentlemen of the Jury, look upon the Priſoner. How ſay ye? Is he Guilty of the Treaſon whereof he ſtands Indicted, and hath been Arraigned? Or Not Guilty?

Fore-man. Guilty.

Then the Keeper was charged to look to the Priſoner.

Clerk. What Goods and Chattels had he at the Time of Committing this Treaſon, or at any Time ſithence?

Fore-man. None to our Knowledge.

Which Verdict being repeated to the Jury by Mr. Clerk of the Crown, the Jury owned it unanimouſly.

Mr. Solicitor-Gen. My Lords, upon this Verdict that hath been given againſt the Priſoner at the Bar I humbly move that we may have Judgment given.

Your Seſſions will be long, and your Work will be great; his Demeanour hath been ſuch that he doth not deſerve a Reprieve for ſo many Days that you are like to ſpend in this Seſſion.

Court. Mr. Harriſon, they deſire Judgment upon the Verdict. What do you ſay for yourſelf why Judgment ſhould not paſs againſt you?

Clerk. Thomas Harriſon, hold up thy Hand. What haſt thou to ſay for thy ſelf why Judgment ſhould not paſs againſt thee, to Die according to Law?

Mr. Harriſon. I have nothing further to ſay, becauſe the Court have not ſeen meet to hear what was in my Heart to ſpeak, I ſubmit to it.

The Crier made Proclamation for Silence whilſt Judgment was in giving.

Lord Chief Baron. You that are the Priſoner at the Bar, you are to paſs the Sentence of Death, which Sentence is this. The Judgment of this Court is, and the Court doth award, That you be led back to the Place from whence you came, and from thence to be drawn upon an Hurdle to the Place of Execution, and there you ſhall be Hanged by the Neck, and being Alive ſhall be cut down, and your Privy Members to be cut off, your Entrails to be taken out of your Body, and (you living) the ſame to be Burnt before your Eyes, and your Head to be cut off, your Body to be divided into Four Quarters, and Head and Quarters to be diſpoſed of at the Pleaſure of the King's Majeſty, and the Lord have Mercy upon your Soul.

And then Proclamation was made for Adjournment of the Court to this Place till Seven of the Clock to morrow Morning; and all Jury-Men and Witneſſes were Commanded to be at the ſaid Place and Time upon Forfeiture of an Hundred Pounds apiece.

October 12. 1660.

The Proclamation for Silence.

The Jury called.

Priſoners brought to the Bar, viz.

John Jones, Adrian Scroop, Thomas Scot, Gregory Clement, John Carew.

Crier. Sir Thomas Allen.

Clerk. Sir Tho. Allen, lay your Hand on the Book, look upon the Priſoner at the Bar.

Scroop. I challenge him, my Lord.

Lord Chief Baron. That you may not miſtake, if you challenge in this manner, and do not join in your Challenges, we muſt Try you ſeverally one after another; I muſt tell you the Courſe of the Law, if one challenge one, and another challenge another, we muſt ſever, and go to Trial one by one. Call the next.

Clerk. Sir Henry Wroth.

Scroop. I challenge him.

Lord Chief Baron. Then we muſt go on ſeverally, ſet all aſide but Mr. Scroop; Mr. Scroop, you may challenge particularly whom you will till you come to Thirty-five, if you go beyond that Number you will loſe the Benefit of the Law.

Scroop. I deſire, my Lord, that whoſoever was challenged yeſterday may not be called again.

Court. No, that cannot be, that is nothing to you. The Court thereupon proceeded, and called — Challenged, John Liſle, Nich. Raynton, Thomas Wynter, Thomas Frankelyn, Randal Nichol, Jo. Kirke, Ambroſe Scudamore, George Tirrey, who were all challenged.

Jury, Thomas Willet, Hen. Marſh, Charles Pitfield, Chriſtopher Abdy, Richard Cheny, Tho. Bid, Jo. Smith, Richard Abel, Ralph Halſal, Jo. Gallyard, Tho. Swallow, Sam. Starnel, were admitted and ſworn on the Jury.

Clerk. Cryer make Proclamation. If any Man can inform my Lords, the King's Juſtices, the King's Serjeant, or the King's Attorney, before this Inqueſt be taken between our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Priſoner at the Bar, let them come forth and they ſhall be heard, for now the Priſoner ſtands at the Bar upon his Delivery, and all others bound by Recognizance to give Evidence againſt the Priſoner

at

at the Bar, let them come forth and give their Evidence, or elſe they ſhall forfeit their Recognizance.

Clerk. Adrian Scroop, Hold up thy Hand; you Gentlemen that are Sworn, look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Charge; you ſhall underſtand, &c. upon this Indictment he hath pleaded Not Guilty.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, this Priſoner at the Bar ſtands Inſtricted for Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the late King of Bleſſed Memory. The Indictment ſets out, that to that End and Purpoſe the Priſoner at the Bar did, with others, aſſemble and ſit together at Weſtminſter-Hall, conſulting upon him, and Uſurped an Authority to proceed againſt the Life of our ſaid late Sovereign, and in Purſuance of that our late Sovereign was brought to his Death. Theſe Things are alledged in the Indictment as ſeveral Overt-Acts, to ſhew the Treaſon of his Heart, which was the Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King; Compaſſing and Imagining are the Words of the Statute, the reſt of the Indictment is but as ſo many Overt-Acts, Evidences and Manifeſtations of that corrupt and wicked Heart of his, by which he firſt thought ſuch a Thought againſt his Sovereign. The Manner of our Evidence ſhall be this: Before they could come to accompliſh this damnable Deſign, it was neceſſary to meet in a Traiterous Aſſembly, which they called the High-Court of Juſtice, that under the Pageantry and Mockery of that, they might pretend to Murder him by a Sentence; and before that Aſſembly could come to ſit, there was a Precept ſet forth very formally to ſummon them to ſit. This Priſoner at the Bar is one of thoſe Perſons, who under his Hand and Seal did ſummon that Court to ſit upon the Life of our late Sovereign. When the Court, in Obedience to that Summons (as they called it) did meet, they ſate ſeveral times, and he among them; they did proceed with a wonderful Impudence (as they had begun) to pronounce Sentence of Death upon our late Sovereign; my Lords, this Priſoner at the Bar was amongſt them, and was at that Court, and gave the Sentence. When they had done, that they might compleat their Villany, they made a Bloody Warrant for Severing the Head of his late Majeſty from his Body, and the Hand of the Priſoner is to that Warrant alſo; and this is the Scope of our Indictment.

Scroop. My Lords, may I have Liberty to ſpeak?

Court. If you do confeſs that which is opened in Evidence againſt you, we ſhall not need to examine any Witneſſes.

Scroop. Examine what you think fit, if I underſtand that worthy Gentleman that ſpake laſt, he ſaid that my Hand was to the Warrant for Execution; my Lord, if I can ſee my Hand I can tell, and I will not deny my Hand.

Court. Shew it him: Which was done accordingly.

Scroop. My Lords, I will not deny but that it is my Hand, but it is not my Seal.

Council. Crier, call Mr. Maſterſon, Mr. Kirke, Mr. Clark, Mr. Carr, who were all Sworn.

Mr. Maſterſon, pray tell my Lords and the Jury whether you did ſee the Priſoner at the Bar in that which they called the High-Court of Juſtice, ſitting as a Judge upon the late King.

Mr. Maſterſon. My Lords, and Gentlemen of the Jury, I ſaw upon the 22d or 23d of Jan. in the Year 1648, the Priſoner at the Bar ſitting upon the Bench as one of the Judges in that which they called the High-Court of Juſtice, the King ſtanding a Priſoner at the Bar; I ſay either the 22d or 23d. But I ſay particularly upon the 27th of Jan. 1648, in which the Sentence was paſſed upon the late King, I ſaw the Priſoner at the Bar ſitting upon the Bench, in that which they called the High-Court of Juſtice.

Council. How did he demean himſelf when the Sentence was read?

Mr. Maſterſon. When the Sentence was read it was by the Preſident (as he was called) of that Court, ſaid to be the Sentence and Judgment of the whole Court, upon which the Priſoner at the Bar roſe up, as to my Apprehenſion, teſtifying his Aſſent. All their Aſſents were taken ſo, and no otherwiſe, to us that were as Spectators.

Scroop. I beſeech your Lordſhips that I may ſpeak without Offence, and anſwer to this.

Court. Mr. Scroop, you may pleaſe to have Paper, and Pens, and Ink, to take Notes, or to ask any Queſtions.

Scroop. My Lords, give me Leave to ask him this Queſtion; Whereabouts did he ſee me ſit in the Court?

Court. Mr. Maſterſon, you hear the Queſtion, pray anſwer to it.

Mr. Maſterſon. My Lords, I cannot particularly ſay where he ſat, but I ſaw him in the Court, and to the beſt of my Remembrance it was on the Second Seat on the Left-hand of Bradſhaw.

Scroop. I would not give Offence to the Court in any Kind; I am now pleading for my Life, I deſire to take a little Liberty to ask this Gentleman if ever he and I were in Company together, that he knows me ſo well.

Mr. Maſterſon. For my part I do not remember I ſaw his Face before the ſitting of that Court: If this Gentleman ask me if I were ever in his Company, I know not how I may conſtrue the Word Company; but I am ſure I never eat nor drank with him; I have ſeen him very many Times at Committees, more than Twenty Times ſince that Buſineſs.

Mr. Clark called.

Council. Mr. Clark, you have heard the Queſtion, did you ever ſee the Priſoner at the Bar in that which they called the High Court of Juſtice?

Mr. Clark. I do remember in the Year 1648 I ſaw the Priſoner ſitting in that which they call the High-Court of Juſtice upon the Trial of the King.

Scroop. My Lords, you may deſiſt in examining Witneſſes touching my Sitting.

Court. Do you acknowledge you did ſit in that which they call the High-Court of Juſtice.

Scroop. Yes, I ſee it proved, and I ſee a Gentleman here in my Eyes that I know very well, I will not deny it.

Court. Did you ſit upon the Sentence Day, that is the Evidence, which was the 27th of January? You are not bound to anſwer me, but if you will not we muſt prove it. Do you confeſs that?

Scroop. I do not confeſs that I ſtood up as aſſenting to the Sentence.

Mr. Clark called.

Council. Mr. Clark, what ſay you to that?

Clark. I did not take particular Notice of him that Day, that he ſtood up; but the Whole Court ſtood up to my Apprehenſion, but I took Notice that he was there then preſent.

Council. Mr. Clark, do you remember that you ſaw any of them ſit?

Clark. I did not take Notice of any that ſate then, but all ſtood up to my Thoughts.

Mr.

Mr. Carr called.

Council. Mr. Carr, tell my Lords and the Jury whether you did ſee the Priſoner at the Bar ſitting in that which they called the High-Court of Juſtice.

Carr. My Lords and Gentlemen of the Jury, the 22d, 23d, and 27th of January 1648, I was preſent when the Names of that they called the High-Court of Juſtice were called, and amongſt others that were Judges of that Court, as was Printed in a Paper which I then had in my Hand, I found the Name of Mr. A. Scroop, who I ſaw did there ſit and appear.

Mr. Carr looked in that Paper when he gave his Evidence.

Scroop. I hope you will not take any Evidence from a Printed Liſt.

Council. The Manner of his Evidence is, he ſaith this, That he had this Printed Paper in his Hand when the Names of that Court were called, and marking the Perſons in that Paper who were preſent, and that you were One of them who did appear.

Scroop. My Lord, I ſhall not diſpute in Regard of my Want of Skill in the Law the Lawfulneſs of bringing in any Paper in Evidence into the Court, I ſhall not diſpute againſt your Lordſhips; but by your Favour I do ſuppoſe there is no Witneſs ought to uſe any Paper, or look upon any Paper when he gives Evidence, but I ſhall ſubmit it to your Lordſhips.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Ask him the Queſtion without his Paper, but yet nothing is more uſual than for a Witneſs to make Uſe of a Paper to help his Memory.

Scroop. The Gentleman that ſpake laſt I cannot hear him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We do not need his Paper in this Caſe, he will tell it without a Paper. Mr. Carr. ſpeak without a Paper.

Carr. My Lords, upon the calling of thoſe that were Judges in that Court which they called the High-Court of Juſtice then ſitting, this Gentleman the Priſoner at the Bar did anſwer to his Names then called.

Scroop. Did you ſee me?

Carr. I heard you anſwer, and ſaw you.

Scroop. I pray he may be ask'd whereabout I ſate in that Court.

Council. Mr. Carr, you hear the Queſtion, anſwer to it.

Carr. I am not able particularly to tell now, it being many Years ſince.

Scroop. My Lord, obſerve of what Value this Evidence is; I am ſure I never was in his Company, I do not know that ever he ſaw me in his Life: I beſeech you give me Leave to plead for myſelf in all Humbleneſs and Modeſty, my Lord.

Lord Chief Baron. Notice is taken of it Mr. Scroop, God forbid you ſhould be debarr'd of it.

Scroop. I ſay he comes with Evidence of a Paper, he hear'd my Name call'd, and marked it: It is ſtrange that a Gentlemen whom I never ſaw, I know not his Name, nor I do not think he knew my Name if he had met me.

Lord Chief Baron. I told you that was laid aſide, and you heard him ſpeak Viva voce without a Paper.

Council. Mr. Kirk, did you ſee the Priſoner at the Bar in that Court which they called the High-Court of Juſtice for Trial of the late King.

Kirk. My Lords and Gentlemen of the Jury, I did ſee the Priſoner there, and I did wonder to ſee him there, which was the Reaſon I took the more ſpecial Notice of his being there.

Scroop. Pray, my Lord, let me intreat one Thing before he ſpeaks, That your Lordſhips will be pleas'd to ſpeak to him to give in his Evidence without any Speech.

Council. How can that be? Can he give Evidence without ſpeaking?

Scroop. I beſeech you, my Lords, give me Leave to ſay this, Let him give in his Evidence in plain Words without any Speech.

Lord Chief Baron. Mr. Scroop, he muſt be excuſed, there are Circumſtances inducing which are as much as the Principal; this that he hath ſaid is very material; ſaith he, I did ſee the Priſoner at the Bar there; I did not expect it, and wondered at it, and therefore took the more Notice —— Let him go on, ask him what Queſtion you will.

Scroop. My Lord, I ſubmit.

Lord Chief Baron. Mr. Kirk, you muſt ſpeak the Truth, and the whole Truth; go on.

Kirk. I ſay as I ſaid before, I ſaw this Gentlemean ſitting in that which they called the High-Court of Juſtice, and I did therefore wonder at it, becauſe I did not expect him there, I came to know him formerly as he was called Captain Scroop.

Council. Go on.

Kirk. And as I ſaid before, I ſaw this Perſon, this Priſoner at the Bar, ſit amongſt the reſt of thoſe Perſons, Judges, as they called themſelves, of the High Court of Juſtice for the Trial of the King; I did more particularly take Notice of this Perſon, becauſe I did not expect him there: I knew him formerly upon this Report, being an Eminent Man, by the Name of Captain Scroop, and at that Time was an Aſſociate of one Captain Vivers, and Captain Wingham; I had not ſeen him ſome Years before this Buſineſs, and ſeeing of him there, I did the more particularly take Notice of him.

Scroop. Have you done, Sir? I beſeech your Lordſhip ask him what Employment he had there himſelf when he ſaw me there.

Kirk. My Lord, I was there to hear the Trial.

Lord Chief Baron. Mr. Scroop, I am not willing you ſhould have any Thing of Interruption, unleſs you reflect upon any Perſon that concerns not you, Mr. Scroop, do not think it will be for your Advantage, nor is it proper for you to ask.

Scroop. In all Humbleneſs I do ſpeak it to your Lordſhips, that your Lordſhip will pleaſe to conſider, that if he had any Employment in that Buſineſs himſelf how unfit a Witneſs he is againſt me.

Court. Much fitter.

Scroop. If it be ſo I have done.

Kirk. My Lord, I was there only as a Spectator, I went only there to ſee and hear what was there to be ſeen and heard; I ſtood there and took Notes in Characters of the Proceedings, and ſeveral others with myſelf did the like, and we compared them together; that was all my Buſineſs at that Time, nd I ſaw him ſit there the 27th Day of Jan. 1648, which was the Day of Sentence againſt the King.

Scroop. Whereabouts did you ſee me ſit there?

Kirk. It is not, I think, imaginable that any Perſon ſhould be able after ſo many Years poſſibly to ſay where any Perſon ſate; but to the beſt of my Remembrance you ſate upon the Second Bench next the Preſident. But I dare not be poſitive in that, I dare not juſtifie it upon my Oath, it is but my Remembrance.

Here Mr. Scroop talked to one that ſtood near him.

Lord Chief Baron. We muſt deſire that of you, Mr.

Mr. Scroop, that you will not ſpeak to any here but what the Court may hear.

Scroop. I ſhall obſerve your commands.

Mr. Coytmore Sworn.

Council. Did you ſee the Priſoner at the Bar ſitting in that which they called the High-Court of Juſtice as a Judge upon the King?

Coyt. I did ſee him.

Council. When? What Day?

Coyt. I cannot name the Day; I was there Three Days of their Sitting, there I ſaw him once or twice; once I am ſure.

Scroop. What Day?

Coyt. I cannot remember.

Council. Did he ſit there as a Judge upon the King?

Coyt. He ſate among the reſt as a Judge.

Scroop. Give me Leave to ask him whereabouts he ſaw me ſit?

Council. Where did you ſee him ſit?

Coyt. I cannot remember the Place, he was among them; I ſaw him either One or Two Days; there was a great Company of them together.

Council. Mr. Nutley, did you ſee the Priſoner at the Bar ſitting in that which they called the High-Court of Juſtice?

Nut. If it pleaſe your Lordſhips, I was there in the Court thoſe Four ſeveral Days that they ſate in Judgment, I heard the Priſoner at the Bar called by his Name. I did take Notice he was there, truly I think he was there twice or thrice to my Remembrance.

Council. Can you tell what Day, whether the 27th of Jan. 1648.

Nut. I cannot ſay poſitively, but to the beſt of my Remembrance he was there, that was the laſt day when Judgment was given.

Mr. Baker Sworn.

Council. Mr. Baker, what ſay you? Did you ſee the Priſoner at the Bar ſitting in that which they called the High Court of Juſtice?

Baker. Yes I did ſee Col. Scroop on Tueſday the 23d of Jan. 1648 very particularly ſtand up and anſwer to his Name.

Council. Mr. Coytmore, are you acquainted with Col. Scroop's Hand.

Coyt. I have had ſeveral Letters from him.

Council. Mr. Scroop. have you a Mind to ſee the Warrant for ſummoning the Court?

Scroop. I deſire to ſee it; I do not remember I ſet my Hand to it.

Court. Shew it him. It being ſhewed him,

Scroop. I cannot ſay it is my Hand.

Council. It is too true, we ſhall prove it to you.

Court. Shew it to Mr. Coytmore.

Scroop. Be pleas'd to let me ſee it once more: Which was again ſhewed him: Truly, my Lord, I will ſave him the Labour.

Council. You do acknowledge it was your Hand.

Scroop. I'll ſave him the Labour; for I confeſs I do not love Men ſhould be put to their Oaths more than needs.

Here likewiſe the Warrant for Execution was read.

Council. My Lords, we ſhall conclude our Evidence with Major-General Brown, the Lord Mayor Elect.

The Lord Elect Sworn.

Council. My Lord, be pleaſed to tell my Lords what Diſcourſe hath lately paſſed between the Priſoner at Bar and you concerning the Death of the King.

Lord Elect. My Lords, upon ſome Occaſion I was accidentally at the Chamber of the Speaker, there I met this Gentleman, whom indeed I knew not; he told me who he was; and when I underſtood who he was I ſaid to him (or Words to this Purpoſe, I cannot tell the Words) becauſe I would not diſtaſte him, and ſay You have done this, therefore I put it thus, We have done this; What a ſad Caſe have we, ſaid I, brought this Kingdom unto? Why, ſaith he? You ſee, ſaid I, how it is ruined now the King is murthered, &c. Saith he, ſome are of one Opinion, and ſome of another. Sir, ſaid I, do you think it was well done to murther the King? Saith he, I will not make you my Confeſſor, Sir; it was much to this Purpoſe.

Council. When was this ſpoken?

Lord Elect. Truly I do not know the Day, but it was that Day that Sir H. M. rendered himſelf to the Speaker, it was ſince the Coming in of the King.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Neither Time nor the Hand of God appearing in this Buſineſs, nor the Condition he was in, was ever able to bring this Gentleman to be ſorry for his Offence; but we do not give it as any Evidence of his Crimes: You have heard the Priſoner confeſs the Two Warrants: You have heard by ſeveral Witneſſes produced that he did ſit in that which they called the High-Court of Juſtice, by Three that he ſat particularly on that Day they called the Day of their Judgment; you have heard how little Penitence he hath had by his Declaration to the Lord Mayor Elect.

Scroop. I hope now that you have heard the Evidence againſt me that you will give me Leave to make ſome Defence for my ſelf.

Lord Chief Baron. God forbid otherwiſe but that you ſhould have free Liberty.

Scroop. Truly my Lords, though my Breeding hath not been in the Way of the Laws, and therefore I have a great Diſadvantage when there be ſuch Learned Gentlemen as theſe are to plead againſt me. I muſt confeſs to you I have ſomething for Matter of Law to plead for the Juſtification of the Fact, tho' I would not undertake to juſtifie the Perſon, this I humbly intreat, if it may be granted, that I may have ſome Time given me, and ſome Council, that I may anſwer Matter of Law.

Lord Chief Baron. Mr. Scroop, if you have any Thing of matter of Law for which you would have Council, you muſt alledge that matter firſt; the Uſe of Council is only to put in Certainty what you have of Matter of Law, and then the Court and Judges muſt judge of it. If you have Matter of Law, you muſt tell what it is; if it be Matter that there is Cauſe to over-rule it, there is no Cauſe of making further Uſe of Council. If One be Indicted for Murther, when he comes to Tryal he will ſay, I have Matter of Law to plead; What is that? That Murther is no Felony: Do you think Council will be admitted in this? If you do alledge what this Matter is wherein you deſire Council, you ſhall have your Anſwer.

Scroop. My Lords, as well as I am able to do it I ſhall do it; my Lord, I was not in the Parliament; take Notice of that; and that which was done in the High Court of Juſtice, it was done by a Commiſſion from the Parliament. My Lord, it was that Authority, which was then, I will not ſay it was ſo, becauſe I would not give Offence; it was that Authority then which was accounted the Supreme Authority of the Nation; and that Authority, My Lord, that a great many of the Generality of the Nation ſubmitted to. My Lord, I having received a Command from that Authority, what I did was in Obedience to that Authority: My Lord, I have not had Time to conſider of theſe Things, becauſe I have been for theſe Six Weeks Time ſhut up a cloſe Priſoner, and that I could neither come at Council nor any Thing elſe, nor to get any Thing to prepare for it; therefore I deſire your Lordſhips to do me the Favour, if you ſee any Weight in it, to let me have Time and Council aſſigned me.

Lord Chief Baron. Have you done, Sir?

Scroop. Yes.

Lord Chief Baron. Then I take it this is the Effect of what you have ſaid; if I have not taken it aright tell me ſo: You ſay you juſtifie the Fact, though not your Perſon; that you were not of the Parliament; that what was done was by Commiſſion from the Parliament: Be pleaſed not to miſtake me, for I ſay you ſaid this: That that which I have to plead in Juſtification of it, I do not ſay that I juſtifie myſelf, but that which I have to ſay is for Juſtification of the Fact: I was firſt no Contriver of the Buſineſs; and then, ſecondly, I did it by Virtue of the Command, and in Obedience to the Authority, of the Parliament: That that Authority was then accounted the Supream Authority of the Nations, and that the Generality of the Nations did ſubmit to their Authority; I think I have repeated all you have ſaid. Then, Mr. Scroop, you muſt know this, that there is no Cauſe at all why Council ſhould be given for what you ſpeak; I profeſs it rather tends to the Aggravation than Extenuation of what you did. Firſt, you ſay you did it by Authority of Parliament, I am afraid you have been miſtaken as well as others; by the Word Parliament, what doth that mean? I am ſure you, and every one, knows, that there was not one Precedent ever heard of till this, that the Houſe of Commons ſhould take upon them the Legiſlative Power, and make ſuch an Act as this was; there was no Colour for it. Then for Men upon their own Heads, never heard of before, and againſt the Liberty and Freedom of the People, that they ſhould call it the Parliament when there was but 46 ſate, whereas there was above 240 excluded; and how you can call this a Houſe of Commons is a great wonder to me; but I tell you this, take it for granted, that if they were the moſt perfect Houſe of Commons that could be, did ever the Houſe of Commons, before this ſingle Act, take upon them the Legiſlative Power without the Lords? The Acts are begun in the Commons Houſe; when you have done, if the Lords not paſs it, it is Abortive; if it be done by both Houſes there ought to be a Royal Aſſent: But the Lords had rejected this Act; then they muſt take upon them theſe 46 Men, whereof I do believe there was not above 25 or 26 Men that did Vote this, and this muſt be called the Parliament, the Commons of England. I would fain know whether any Man hath heard that the Houſe of Commons took upon them the Legiſlative Power before this Act; but this hath been over-rul'd in the like Caſe, and I ſhall ſay no more to it. What is the Oath of Allegiance? Is it not that you would defend the King, his Crown, Rights, and Liberties, againſt all Perſons whatſoever? It was not only againſt the Pope (as ſome would have it) but the Word is, or otherwiſe: They broke the Oath of Supremacy, which was, That the King was Supreme Governour of theſe Nations. They ſwore that they would maintain and keep all Priviledges, Immunities, Preheminences, annexed to the Imperial Crown of this Realm; there is Difference between ſome Crowns and Imperial Crowns: An Imperial Crown, it was that which was not to be touched in the Perſon: We do not ſpeak any Thing of the Abſolute Power of the King, for you ſee he cannot judge concerning the Death of his Father, but by Laws. When you ſwore this Allegiance, all thoſe Members to break all this at once, this would be ſo far from having any Colour of Authority, that he that juſtifies it, juſtifies it againſt the Light of Conſcience and Laws. You ſay you did it by Commandment from them; he that doth a Command by ſuch an Authority, it is his Guilt: Our Law-Books ſay, That if a Court at Common-Law exceed their Juriſdiction, in that Caſe he that obeys that Command is puniſhable. In the Court of Common-Pleas, if there be an Appeal there for Murther, it is only proper to the Upper Bench; and therefore if the Party be Condemned, Sentenced, and Executed thereupon, the Executioner in that Caſe is Guilty of Murther, for obeying that Authority, which was indeed no Authority: And therefore whereas you would go about to juſtifie the Fact, becauſe you did it by Command of that Authority, that is an Aggravation: That when Men ſhall aſſume an Authority which is a Devil at the Noon-day, appearing without Vizors; I ſay ſhall aſſume an Authority never heard of before; if Men will countenance their Acts by obeying of them, it is an Aggravation: We have already declared this in the Caſe of the Priſoner Yeſterday; we are all ſatisfied in the Law in that Caſe: It is ſo clear a Point in Law, that my Brethren here and we did over-rule it Yeſterday in the like Caſe, and ſo we muſt now; and I hope that all do concur in this Opinion that hath been delivered.

Lord Finch. I hope all do concur in this Opinion delivered by my Lord Chief Baron: you ſhelter yourſelf under a Command of the Houſe of Commons; but let me tell you, and all the World, That if the Houſe of Commons (let it have been never ſo compleat) had given a Command, it had been a Thing no Ways juſtifiable; the Juſtification is an Aggravation.

Scroop. My Lord, I do ſee that every Thing I ſpeak, though it be for clearing of myſelf from your Ill Opinion, I ſee it is taken in an Ill Sence (I humbly beſeech Pardon for the Expreſſion) if I err I will crave your Lordſhip's Pardon; but, my Lord, I ſay this, If I have been miſled, I am not a ſingle Perſon that have been miſled. My Lord, I could ſay, (but I think it doth not become me to ſay ſo,) That I ſee a great many Faces at this Time that were miſled as well as myſelf, but that I will not inſiſt upon: I ſay this, That I hope an Error in Judgment ſhall not be accounted Malice or an Error of the Will: Truly (my Lord) I never went to the Work with a Malicious Heart; I humbly deſire your Lordſhips to take Notice of it, That I never bore any Malice at all againſt his late Majeſty.

Lord Chief Baron. Mr. Scroop, have you done?

Scroop. My Lord, I do beſeech your Lordſhips to take Notice, That an Error in Judgment is not an Error in the Will.

Lord Chief Baron. Mr. Scroop, I am very glad to hear you ſay ſo; but let me tell you what the Law ſaith; the Law in this Caſe creates the Malice. If a Man do an Act of this Nature, that may be ſome Kind of Excuſe to God, but towards Man you are to look to the Fact, the Law implies the Malice. If there be any Thing you will ſay in the Extenuation of your Offence, we will be very glad to hear that may tend to your Help.

Scroop. My Lord, there is one Evidence comes in againſt againſt me that I muſt confeſs I am very ſorry to ſee; and, my Lord, there was a ſaying, and it is by my Lord Mayor Elect: Truly he is a Worthy Gentleman, but I deſire the Lord may forgive that which he hath ſpoken: Truly, my Lord, I did never intend any Thing in this, neither can I directly remember that I ſpake thoſe Words directly, as my Lord Mayor Elect doth ſpeak: I do believe my Lord Mayor cannot very well remember them himſelf; for he ſaith, ſo far as he can remember; I muſt confeſs that when I was there, and had appeared according to the Proclamation, that ſuch Diſcourſe ſomewhat like it was raiſed, not of my procuring; I did not procure the Diſcourſe; I never intended the Juſtification of the Fact; but it was my ill Succeſs that I ſhould meet with that worthy Gentleman to have ſo much Diſcourſe with him.

Lord Chief Baron. Mr. Scroop, my Lord Mayor Elect ſaith no further than this, ſo far as he remembers, and the Words that you ſhould ſay were theſe, That ſome are of one Opinion, and ſome are of another.

Scroop. Upon the Death of the King, (my Lord,) I muſt confeſs to you, that ſomewhat I ſaid to him, but I cannot own that I ſaid thoſe Words. My Lords, He is a worthy Perſon, I do not deſire to ſpeak any Thing to degenerate in the leaſt kind from him; it is but his yea, and my no; there was no Body there.

Lord Chief Baron. Have you any Thing more to ſay for yourſelf?

Scroop. My Lord, if your Lordſhip do over-rule it ſo that I may not have Council, I have little more to ſay.

Lord Chief Baron. You have heard the Senſe of the Court in that particular, you cannot have Council allowed you as to the Matter you have pleaded.

Scroop. I have done, but only this, my Lords, I know not whether it be ſeaſonable to mention it; I came in upon the Proclamation; and, my Lords, by Means of theſe unhappy Words that have been reported of me in the Houſe of Commons, whereas before I was no excepted Perſon, I came to be excepted, and upon the very laſt Day of paſſing that Act, never was excepted before the very laſt Day: I beſeech you take Notice of this.

Lord Chief Baron. Mr. Scroop, That is a Thing that is not before us, but there will be a proper Time to conſider of it in another Place; that is nothing to the Trial; have you any more to ſay, Sir?

Scroop. No, my Lord; Will your Lordſhip pleaſe to let me ſpeak a Word to the Jury.

Lord Chief Baron. If you ſpeak to the Court the Jury will hear it.

Scroop. Truly, my Lord, this I do perceive, that I am under a very great Prejudice as to this Fact. It hath been the Caſe of many Gentlemen beſides myſelf; I deſire that theſe Gentlemen would take my Caſe into Conſideration, as they would their own, and I deſire that the Lord would give them Direction that they may do that which is according to Juſtice and Mercy; that is all that I have to ſay my Lords.

Lord Chief Baron. You Gentlemen that are ſworn of this Jury, you ſee the Priſoner Mr. Scroop hath been Indicted for Imagining and Contriving the Death of his late Majeſty, of Bleſſed Memory, King Charles the Firſt. You ſee there are ſeveral Things in this Indictment; the Charge is the Imagining and Compaſſing the Death of the King. In the Indictment there are ſeveral Matters of Fact to prove this Imagination. The Imagination is the Treaſon, the Matters of Fact to prove it are but the Evidences of that Imagination; if any one of them be proved to you it is ſufficient, the one is Conſulting and Meeting together how to put him to Death, the other Sitting and Aſſuming Authority to bring him to Trial. Then you have a Sentence by the Court to put the King to Death thereupon; afterwards he was put to Death: Any one of theſe Matters are Evidence enough for you to prove the Indictment; for though the Indictment concludes that ſo they did Imagine and Compaſs the Death of the King, and that the King was put to Death in Manner and Form as aforeſaid; the Manner and Form aforeſaid goes to this, to the Imagination of the Heart; for the Law did not think any one would put the King to Death, they thought it ſo a Crime, they thought it not convenient to bring it into the Statute. But the Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King is made Treaſon: Then to apply it, this Fact, to the Gentleman, it appears to you here by the Proofs againſt him. Here is Mr. Maſterſon, he ſwears he ſaw him ſit in that pretended Court, there was your Evidence of the firſt, the firſt was their Meeting together; and of the Second too, they did aſſume Authority upon them; and he ſwears further to the Sentencing, That the Priſoner was there. Here were the Three Overt-Acts all proved. He confeſſes he did Sign the Warrant for putting the King to Death: This, without any Witneſs at all, was a ſufficient Proof, a Proof of Proofs. The other Witneſſes, you hear what they ſay; you hear Mr. Kirke, Mr. Clark, Mr. Nutley, ſwear all to his Sitting there. It is true, when this comes to the Particulars where he ſate, you muſt remember it was Twelve Years ago; when a Man ſees a mixt Number of about Eighty Perſons, it is impoſſible a Man ſhould be able to anſwer this Particular after Twelve Years where ſuch a one ſate; but you may ſee by his Sentencing what he did. They all witneſs they ſaw him poſitively; and one tells you, He wondered he ſaw him there; and indeed it might be a Wonder; for Mr. Scroop (to give him his Right) was not a Perſon as ſome of the reſt, but he was unhappily engaged in that Bloody Buſineſs, I hope miſtakenly; but when it comes to ſo High a Crime as this, Men muſt not excuſe themſelves by Ignorance or miſguided Conſcience. As to God, for this Horrid Murther of the King ſomewhat may be, but there is no Excuſe or Extenuation before Man; there may be, I ſay, before the Lord. You ſee the Proof is full againſt this Gentleman, as full as may be; Witneſſes ſaw him Sit, and he himſelf confeſſed he Signed the Warrants. I have no more to ſay to you, but, Gentlemen, you ſee what it is; I think for Matter of Fact you need not go from the Bar; but I leave it to you.

Scroop. My Lord ——

Lord Chief Baron. Mr. Scroop, If you have any Thing to ſay when the Jury have brought in their Verdict, if you will ſay any Thing for Matter of Mercy, the Court will hear you.

Scroop. I thank your Lordſhip.

The Jury went together, and preſently ſettled themſelves in their Places.

Clerk. Adrian Scroop, Hold up thy Hand. Look upon the Priſoner. How ſay you? Is he Guilty of the Treaſon whereof he ſtands Indicted, and hath been Arraigned, or Not Guilty?

Jury. Guilty.

Clerk. What Goods and Chattels, &c.

Jury. None that we know.

Lord Chief Baron. If you will ſay any Thing the Court will hear you.

Scroop. I have no more, my Lord, but refer myſelf to this Honourable Court.

Clerk. Set John Carew, Tho. Scot, John Jones, and Gregory Clement to the Bar, who were ſet accordingly; and being Commanded, they ſeverally held up their Hands.

Clerk. Theſe Men that were laſt called, &c.

Sir Thomas Allen, Lay your Hand on the Book: Look, &c.

Carew. I Challenge him.

Lord Chief Baron. Are you all agreed as to your Challenges?

Priſoner. No, my Lord.

Lord Chief Baron. Then we muſt do as before, ſever you, and go to Trial ſeverally: Take the Three away, and let Mr. Carew ſtand at the Bar.

Challenged, Charles Pitfeld, Wille, Will. Smiths, Rich. Rider, Edward Rolph, James Shercroſt, Thomas Uffman, Francis Beal, Will. Whitcombe, Samuel Harris, Jo. Nicol of Finchley, George Rigth, Thomas Fruen, Ab. Newman, Thomas Blithe, Will. Vincent, James Hawley, Chr. Abdy, Tho. Bide, John Smith, Abr. Scudamore, Ralph Halſel, John Galliard. In all 23.

Jury Sworn, Robert Clarke, Thomas Grover, Richard Whaley, Samuel Greenhil, Nicholas Raynton, Thomas Winter, Richard Cheney, John Kerk, Rich. Abel, Tho. Morris, George Tirrey, Tho. Swallow; in all 12.

If any Man can inform my Lords the King's Juſtices, &c.

Clerk. John Carew, Hold up thy Hand.

You that are Sworn look upon the Priſoner: You ſhall underſtand, &c.

Sir Edward Turner. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, our Hue and Cry ſtill proceeds againſt the Murtherers of our late Sovereign Lord King Charles the Firſt of Bleſſed Memory, and this Gentleman the Priſoner at the Bar is apprehended as one among others for ſhedding that Precious Blood. Gentlemen of the Jury, he ſtands Indicted before you; for that he (I cannot expreſs it better) not having the Fear of God before his Eyes, but being ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, he did Imagine and Compaſs the Death of his ſaid late Majeſty. In Proſecution of this, Gentlemen, there be ſeveral Things that are mentioned in the Indictment, which are the open Acts to diſcover to you theſe Secret and Private Imaginations. He did meet and conſult with divers Perſons touching the Death of the King, that did Uſurp and take upon them to exerciſe a Power and Juriſdiction to Try the King; and finally, moſt horribly put him to Death. The Treaſon by the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. and which you are to enquire of, is, the Imagination and Compaſſing the Death of the King, the reſt of the Indictment are but Particulars to prove that he did ſo Imagine and Compaſs the Death of the King. If we ſhall prove theſe, or any of theſe Facts, you have then ſufficient to convict them. There was a Thing they called a High Court of Juſtice, that was ſet up, wherein they did intend to Try our late Sovereign Lord, and a Precept made, and that under the Hand and Seal of the Priſoner at the Bar, amongſt others, for ſummoning and convening that Bloody Court, where (among the reſt of the Miſcreants) the Priſoner at the Bar did ſit, and had Confidence, nay, Impudence, to pronounce Judgment againſt his Sovereign. In this he reſted not, but he, among them, ſet his Hand and Seal to that Bloody Roll or Warrant for putting him to Death, which accordingly was done, and to theſe ſeveral open Acts we ſhall call our Witneſſes, and ſo proceed.

M. Maſterſon, M. Clark, and M. Kirk, ſworn.

Council. Mr. Maſterſon, look upon the Priſoner, did you ſee him ſit in that they called the High Court of Juſtice?

Lord Chief Baron. Mr. Carew, if you will have Pen, Ink, and Paper, you may have it, pray call for it.

Carew. I have no need of it.

Council. Mr. Maſterſon, did you ſee, &c.

Maſterſon. My Lords, and Gentlemen of the Jury, I was preſent at that Aſſembly, which they called the High Court of Juſtice for Trial of the King, upon the 22d, 23d, and 27th, Days of January 1648, and there I ſaw the King ſtand a Priſoner at the Bar. I ſaw this Gentleman, the Priſoner at the Bar, ſit upon the Bench in that Court, as one of his Majeſties Judges; particularly upon the 27th Day of January, which was the Day of Sentence, I ſaw him ſitting there.

Council. Mr. Clark, You hear the Queſtion; Do you remember that you ſaw the Priſoner at the Bar ſitting in that which they called the High Court of Juſtice?

Mr. Clark. I remember I ſaw the Priſoner at the Bar ſitting in that which they called the High Court of Juſtice for the Trial of the late King, and particularly I took Notice upon the 23d and 27th of January 1648, that he was preſent.

Council. What was done upon that 27th Day?

Mr. Clark. The 27th Day the late King was Sentenced to Death.

Jury. What is your Name, Sir?

Council. His Name is William Clark.

Council. Mr. Kirk, What ſay you to the former Queſtion touching the Priſoner, his being at that which they called the High Court of Juſtice?

Mr. Kirk. My Lords, and Gentlemen of the Jury, I was preſent at the Trial of his late Majeſty of Bleſſed Memory, I ſaw that Gentleman, the Priſoner at the Bar, ſeveral Days there, particularly the Day of the Sentence, which was the 27th Day of January 1648, when the Sentence was paſſed he roſe up, aſſenting to it. Then the Warrant for ſummoning that pretended Court was ſhewed to Mr. Kirk.

Council. Do you believe that Hand to be the Hand of Mr. Jo. Carew, Priſoner at the Bar?

Kirk. My Lords, I do believe it to be his Hand; I have ſeen his Hand to ſeveral Orders, and being very well acquainted with his Hand-writing, I believe it to be his Hand as much as any Man can poſſibly know another Man's Hand. Then the Warrant for Execution of the King was likewiſe ſhewn him.

Council. Is that the Hand alſo of the Priſoner at the Bar?

Kirk. It is the ſame Hand, my Lord.

Court. Was Mr. Carew a Member of the Long Parliament?

Kirk. Yes, my Lord.

Council. Had you Occaſion to be acquainted with his Hand.

Kirk. My Lord, I have ſeen him ſet his Hand ſeveral times to Orders and other Papers.

Mr. Farrington Sworn.

Council. Do you know (the Warrants being ſhewn him,) thoſe Hands to be the Writing of the Priſoner at the Bar?

Far. My Lords, really I believe theſe are his Hands.

Court. Are you acquainted with his Hand?

Far-

Farrington. Yes, my Lord, and I do believe these to be his Hand-writing; I did not see him write them, but so far as possibly a Man can know anothers Writing I do believe these to be his.

Court. If you will ask to see them you may see them Mr. Carew.

Carew. Please you to go on. Here they were both read.

Council. May it please your Lordships, we shall not need to trouble the Jury any farther, we have proved that the Prisoner did Sign that Warrant for summoning that Court of Injustice, that he sate there and sentenced the King to Death among other, and that he signed the Warrant for Execution.

Lord Chief Baron. Mr. Carew, you have heard the Evidence, you may please to speak what you think fit for your self.

Carew. My Lords, the Crimes that are here laid to my Charge in this Indictment are Treason and Murther.

Lord Chief Baron. I would not have you to be mis-informed, it is Treason only, but it carries the other in with it, Murther.

Carew. Because you say it carries the other inclusively.

Lord Chief Baron. It doth, the Charge is the Compassing and Imagining the Death of the King, the other is but Evidence.

Carew. Then the Thing that I stand upon before the Lord, and before you all, I say before the Lord, before whom we must all stand, and give an Account of this Action, which is a very great and weighty one: And whereas it is charged there, for I shall not trouble you with many Words as to the Particulars, or as to the Proofs, but I shall ingenuously acknowledge what the Truth is, and how far I can believe it; and therefore I say as to the Beginning of what was charged by the Council, and according to the Course of the Indictment, that what was done in those Things, that it was not having the Fear of God before mine Eyes, but being moved by the Devil, and that it was done with a Traiterous, Malicious, and Deviliſh Heart, and all those Things mentioned in the Indictment: As for that I can say in the Presence of the Lord, who is the Searcher of all Hearts, that what I did was in his Fear, and I did it in Obedience to his Holy and Righteous Laws.

Here the People humm'd——

Lord Chief Bar. Go on, he stands for his Life, let him have Liberty.

Carew. It is Part of my Charge not to have the Fear of God, &c. I did such and such Things. I hope I may have Liberty.

Lord Chief Baron. Go on, you shall not be interrupted.

Carew. I say that I did it in the Fear of the Lord, and I will begin with that and confess ingenuously the Truth of it. When this came into Question, there was an Ordinance brought in to Try the King, where my Name was not as one of the Judges. There was another afterwards, an Act which I shall mention upon what Ground by and by, what that was, and that Act was brought in and committed, and Names brought in, and my Name was not brought in, and so afterwards my Name was put in, and seeing it I did strike it out: After the Committee was up, I told them I did desire to be excused in such a Business. I have told you, how, wherein, and the Ground that I did it, which I shall leave with the Lord, in whose Hand your and my Breath, and all our Breaths, are; and therefore when it was so, I did, because of the Weight of it, as being a very great and special Thing, and so I was very unwilling, because of there being enow, which I thought had more Experience every Way for so great a Concernment as that was to be imployed rather than I; yet being satisfied with that Authority that did it, this is to shew you how that I had the Fear of the Lord, and did weigh the Things: After that, when the Bill was brought into the House, my Name was put in there with several others, so I came to be in; and what I did was upon these Two Accounts: First in Obedience (as I told you) to the Lord, which was the chief Thing, and in Obedience to that which was then the Supreme Authority of this Nation; and therefore I shall mention these Grounds very briefly, because indeed the Things that are controverted here at this Time, they have been controverted in the Face of the whole World in several Nations; and the Lord hath given an Answer upon solemn Appeals to these Things; I shall therefore mention them very briefly; because they have been so publick. The Declarations and Remonstrances that have passed between the King and Parliament concerning the beginning of the Wars ——

Lord Chief Baron. Mr. Carew. I would be very loth to interrupt you, but I see what Course is taken, and the Peoples Eyes are upon you: You seek Delays, and against the Course of Prisoners you say you will confess, but you do confess the Fact after you have spent the Time; and all the Witnesses are heard for this that you speak of now; you go about to justifie as in the Fear of the Lord, or any Thing of that Nature, that we cannot allow of; but we do allow you to speak and give the Heads of what you will say as to the Matter of Fact; but to hear you make Discourses and Debates which are a Justification of a horrid and notorious Treason, we cannot hear it; we ought not to hear the maintaining of open Treason; cannot hear you to speak that upon your opening, which is Treason: We are willing that you open the Heads what you have to say; we are upon our Consciences, and to appear before God for what we do, and so are you too; but remember the Devil sometimes appears in the Habit of an Angel of Light. If you will couch your Matter in a few Words, the Court affords you Liberty, which is indeed beyond the strict Rules of Law.

Carew. You say you sit here by the Laws of the Land, and are sworn to maintain the Laws. We ought not that we should plead to this Indictment, for what we did was by an Act of Parliament.

Court. Pray Sir, this must not be let fall without Reproof, or rather Punishment.

Carew. I believe there is no Precedent for it.

Court. Sir, we know the Act of Parliament as well as you, and most of the standers-by: You go upon a false Ground, there was no such Act of the Supreme Authority as you pretend to; these are but Phantasms of your own Brain, and must not be suffered; these Things have been controverted and decided many a time again and again.

Carew. I desire to have Time to speak how it was begun and carried on, or else how shall I be able to make my Defence, or to tell you what are the Heads I will inſiſt upon? I ſhall declare the Grounds upon which the Parliament did proceed.

Lord Chief Baron. Mr. Carew, If that be your Ground, the Parliament did it, the Houſe of Commons did it, I have ſomething to offer (not to interrupt you) to the then Commons——

Carew. In my humble Opinion for the maintaining of this, it was by Authority, the Supreme Authority by which it was done.

L. Chief Baron. Did you Sign this Warrant for the Summoning and Warning of that Court? And did you Sign the Warrant for Executing the late King.

Carew. I deſire I may go on with my Defence.

Lord Chief Baron. We would not have you be miſtaken: You ſeem to confeſs the Act, and now you juſtifie it; you cannot ſpeak any Thing for your Juſtification till you confeſs the Fact.

Carew. I ſhall ſpeak to that in its Time.

Lord Chief Baron. You muſt ſpeak to that firſt, that is Matter of Fact, whereupon the Jury are to go.

Carew. There is Matter of Law.

Court. You muſt ſpeak to Matter of Fact firſt.

Carew. I ſay this is that I was about to ſay, That the Supreme Authority ——

Court. You muſt ſpeak to the Fact firſt, Whether you did Compaſs, &c. the King's Death, or not? That is the firſt Ground; if you did not there's an End of the Buſineſs: It is proved againſt you that you did it; if you come to juſtifie it, it muſt be when you have firſt agreed the Matter of Fact.

Carew. I deſire I may have Liberty to proceed, either for Matter of Fact, or Law, as I liſt.

Court. No, no, you muſt firſt ſpeak to the Fact, you may be after heard. You know in all Caſes they muſt begin with the Fact, either denying or extenuating; for Matter of Law in this Caſe muſt ariſe from the Fact.

Carew. But I humbly conceive there is a Matter of Law in this Caſe, and it is Matter of Law that is above the Juriſdiction of this Inferior Court.

Mr. Sol. Finch. I pray that he may be held to the Iſſue, Guilty, or, Not Guilty: If he deny the Fact let us rely upon our Evidence, and he upon his; he cannot come to Law till he hath confeſſed the Fact. The Queſtion is, whether you did, or not? There is the Fact; if you have any Thing to juſtifie, that follows.

Carew. I was upon that, and going on to ſhew the Reaſons and Grounds of it.

Court. Firſt you muſt confeſs it, if you will ſhew the Reaſons why you did it.

Carew. I told you there was ſome Things I did.

Court. What are thoſe ſome?

Carew. I do acknowledge that I was there at the Court.

Council. Did you Sign the Warrants for Summoning that Court, and for Execution of the King?

Carew. Yes, I did Sign them both.

Council. Then ſay what you will.

Lord Chief Baron. Now go on.

Carew. In the Year 1640 there was a Parliament called according to the Laws and Conſtitutions of this Nation, and after that there was ſome Difference between the King and the Parliament, the Two Houſes of Parliament, Lords and Commons, and thereupon the King did withdraw from the Two Houſes of Parliament, as appears by their own Declaration, The Great Remonſtrance, Printed in 1642, and thereupon the Lords and Commons did declare——

Lord Chief Baron. Mr. Carew, the Court are of Opinion not to ſuffer you to go on in this; they ſay it tends not only to juſtifie your Act, but you caſt in Bones here to make ſome Difference. You talk of the Lords and Commons, you have nothing to do with that Buſineſs; your Authority that you pretend to was an Act of Parliament (as they called themſelves) and that where there was but 46 Commons in the Houſe, and but 26 Voted it.

Carew. I ſay, that the Lords and Commons by their Declaration ——

Mr. Juſtice Foſter. Hold your Hand a while, Sir, not ſo faſt; you go to raiſe up thoſe Differences which I hope are aſleep; New Troubles, to revive thoſe Things which by the Grace of God are extinct, you are not to be ſuffered in this; it is not the ſingling out of a few Perſons that makes a Parliament. We ſee as before, ſo ſtill, it is your Courſe to Blow the Trumpet of Sedition. Did you ever hear, or can you produce, Inſtances of an Act of Parliament made by the Houſe of Commons alone, though this was not the Houſe of Commons, as you heard before?

Carew. Neither was there ever ſuch a War, or ſuch a Precedent.

Court. Nor we hope never will be: Pray remember, you were returned to ſerve in the Houſe; what was that Writ that Summoned your Appearance? You had no Manner of Ground in the World to go that Way that you did.

Council. We pray that the Priſoner at the Bar give us Patience a little to repeat that to him which your Lordſhips have been ſo often troubled with declaring; this is not the Firſt or Second Time that in this Publick Aſſembly it hath been ſaid, That neither the Lords nor the Commons, jointly nor ſeverally, have any Power at all to proceed upon the Perſon of the King; that it is not in their Power to condemn any Man in England without the good Pleaſure of the King, much leſs the King himſelf; and that this is the great Liberty of the People of England that it ſhould be ſo; and it was the Firſt Breach and Invaſion of our Liberty that that Firſt Parliament made, and which you juſtifie in the Name the Lord. In this Caſe to throw us upon Debates of the War, and to talk here of the Cauſes and Reaſons of that Quarrel which ended in ſuch a Tragedy. For this Perſon to come here with this Confidence, and to juſtifie it, but that he knows he cannot be in a worſe Condition, one would wonder it ſhould fall from any Man that hath any regard of himſelf; it is all one to them that Periſh whether they fall by one Sin, or Multitudes. He makes no Scruple to multiply Treaſons; I do beſeech your Lordſhip he may not offer as he hath begun, but that the Jury may proceed.

Court. All the Court are of the ſame Opinion, not to hear any thing like the former Diſcourſes.

Carew. I deſire I may be heard; I have not Compaſſed the Death of the late King, Contrived the Death of the King; what I did I did by Authority.

Court. This is not to be heard; you have heard what hath been ſaid to you, there could be no ſuch Authority, neither was, nor could be; but you would by a Wire-lace bring it in by this; you have confeſſed the Fact, which muſt be left to the Jury.

L. Anſley. I think you were preſent in the Houſe of Commons when that Vote paſſed for Agreement with the King in the Treaty at the Iſle of Wight. You know the King having condeſcended to moſt of the Deſires of his Parliament, there was a Debate in the Houſe, and a Concluſion that they were Grounds for Peace. You know the Lords and Commons mons did resolve to agree with their King; when that was done, that would not satisfie you, and other Members of the House; then you go and contrive New Ways; you contrive a New-fashioned Parliament, the driving away many Members by Power, which you could not do by the Law of the Land: Nay, the Parliament had declared against that which you pretend is by Authority, is no Authority; for a few of you set up an Arbitrary Parliament of a few of yourselves, when you had driven away the rest: This Kind of Parliament gives you the Authority you pretend to. You were saying that the Parliament was called at first, the Lords and Commons by the King, according to the Antient Constitutions of the Laws: Did such a Parliament give you such Authority as you pretend to, an Act of Parliament, as you call it, which was but an Order of some of the Commons, and but a few of them; you can have no Manner of Justification, and therefore your Plea must be over-ruled as Yesterday it was in the like Case. You are Indicted upon a clear Act of Parliament of 25 Edward III. and you defend your self upon Pretence of an Act of Parliament which hath been over-ruled as no Act.

Carew. I am a Stranger to many of these Things which you have offered, and this is strange, you give Evidence sitting as a Judge.

Lord Chief Baron. You are mistaken, it is not Evidence; he shews you what Authority that was, an Authority of 26 Members: How is this Evidence? Mr. Carew, if you have any Thing more of Fact go on: If you have nothing, but according to this kind of Discourse, I am commanded to direct the Jury.

Carew. I am very willing to leave it with the Lord, if you will stop me that I cannot open the true Nature of those Things that did give me ground of Satisfaction in my Conscience that I did it from the Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I do pray for the Honour of God, and our King, that he may not be suffered to go on in this manner. You have been suffered to speak, you have said but little, only Sedition; you pretend a Conscience, and the Fear of the Lord, when all the World knows you did it against the Law of the Lord, your own Conscience, the Light of Nature, and the Laws of the Land, against the Oaths you have taken of Allegiance and Supremacy.

Carew. Gentlemen of the Jury, I say I shall leave it with you. This Authority I speak of is right, which was the Supream Power; it is well known what they were.

Council. It is so indeed, many have known what they were.

Lord Chief Baron. Mr. Carew, You have been heard what, and beyond what, was fit to say in your own Defence; that which you have said, the Heads of it you see the whole Court hath over-ruled. To suffer you to expatiate against God, and the King, by Blasphemy, is not to be endured; it is suffering Poison to go about to infect People; but they know now too well the Old Saying, In Nomine Domini, in the Name of the Lord, all Mischiefs have been done, that hath been an Old Rule. I must now give Directions to the Jury.

Lord Chief Baron. Gentlemen of the Jury ——.

Carew. I have desired to speak the Words of Truth and Soberness, but have been hindered.

Lord Chief Baron. Gentlemen of the Jury you see the Prisoner here at the Bar hath been Indicted of Treason, and this was for Compassing and Imagining the Death of our Sovereign Lord, King Charles the First, of Blessed Memory. This Indictment sets forth several Overt-Acts to prove this Imagination, for otherwise it is Secret in the Heart; the Fact itself, the Treason itself, is the Imagination of the Heart: The Overt-Acts that are laid down in the Indictment to prove this, That they did consult and meet together how to put the King to Death, That they did sit upon him: And Thirdly, That they did Sentence him to Death, and afterwards he Died. You heard what is proved against the Gentleman, the Prisoner at the Bar, by several Witnesses, his own Confession, That he signed the Warrant for Summoning and Convening that Court together, whereby the King was to be brought to his Trial; and that he sate at his Sentence, and issued the Warrant for his Execution: You saw that this Gentleman did the Fact, did Compass and Imagine the King's Death. That which you are to try is this Issue, being Indicted for High Treason, and pleading Not Guilty; whether this Gentlemen that went so far, Sate upon him, Condemned him, Signed the Warrant for his Execution, did not Compass and Imagine the King's Death? I think you need not stir from the Bar where you are, but I leave that to you.

After a very small Time of Consultation by the Jury amongst themselves at the Bar, they agreed in a Verdict.

Silence was Commanded.

Clerk. John Carew, Hold up thy Hand; Gentlemen of the Jury, look upon the Prisoner: How say you? Is he Guilty of the horrid Treason whereof he stands Indicted, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Clerk. What Goods and Chattels, &c.

Jury. None that we know of.

Mr. Scot's Trial, on Friday October 12. 1660. at the Sessions-House aforenamed.

Clerk. Set Thomas Scot to the Bar, (which was accordingly done) Thomas Scot, Hold up thy Hand. These Men that have been of the last Jury are to try, &c. If you will Challenge all, or any of them, you must Challenge them before they are Sworn.

Scot. I desire that those Men who have been of the former Jury may not be named. I know my Liberty of excepting against my Number.

Lord Chief Baron. Mr. Scot, That which you do desire is a Thing not right; the Offence with one is not the same with others: I speak not but that the Court will do you all Right; the Court will grant it if you will wave your Challenges; but if you mean those that have been by others Challenged, it is against Law.

Scot. I am willing to bring my self upon my Trial, and I will take the ordinary Way of Excepting and Challenging.

Sir Hen. Worth, Sir Jer. Whitchcote, James Hawley, Rich. Rider, Fra. Beale, Chr. Abdy, Nicho. Rainton, Tho. Winter, John Kirke, Rich. Abel, Sir Tho. Aleyn, Abr. Scudamore, Ralph Halsall, George Tirrey, Tho. Swallowe, Charles Pickerne, Arthur Newman, Tho. Blithe, William Vincent, Rich. Whaley, were called and challenged.

Thomas Grover, Edw. Rolfe, Tho. Usman, William

William Whitcombe, Rich. Cheney, Tho. Bide, Charles Pitfield, John Smith, Tho. Morris, Tho. Fruen, Henry Twyford, Samuel Starnel, were the Jury ſworn.

Clerk. Crier make Proclamation.

Cryer. O Yes, if any Man can inform my Lords the King's Juſtices, &c.

Clerk. Tho. Scot, Hold up thy Hand. You that are ſworn of this Jury you ſhall underſtand that the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands Indicted by the Name of Tho. Scot, late of Weſtminſter, in the County of Middleſex, Gent. For that he, together with John Liſle, &c.

[Here the Indictment was read.] Unto which Indictment he hath been arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded Not Guilty, and for his Tryal hath put himſelf upon God and the Countrey, which Countrey you are. Now your Charge is to enquire whether, &c.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You that are ſworn of this Jury, this Inquiſition for Blood, Royal Blood goes on againſt the Priſoner at the Bar; he ſtands Indicted for Compaſſing, Imagining, and Contriving the Death of the late King, of Bleſſed Memory: It is laid to his Charge in the Indictment, that he did Aſſemble at Weſtminſter, and that he, with other Perſons, uſurped the Authority of Sitting and Sentencing to Death his ſaid late Majeſty, and that in Conſequence and Purſuance of that the King came to his Death: The Treaſon he ſtands charged with is the Compaſſing and Imagining the King's Death; the other Parts of the Indictment are but Overt-Acts, that do but Evidence and Prove the Corruption of his Heart. If we prove but ſome of theſe Overt-Acts, then you muſt find him Guilty. Our Evidence againſt this Gentleman will be thus: We ſhall call Witneſſes to prove his Sitting in the Court, Sentencing his King, while his King ſtood a Priſoner at the Bar; the Warrant for Execution of the King, directed to certain Perſons to ſee Execution done accordingly, was under Hands and Seals, and among thoſe Hands and Seals the Hand and Seal of the Priſoner at the Bar is one: And then we ſhall produce to your Lordſhips Witneſſes to ſhew you with what a hard and impenitent Heart this hath been Committed; for he ſo gloried in the Act, that he deſired it might be writ upon his Tomb——

Mr. Nutley, Mr. Kirke, Mr. Maſterſon, and Mr. Clark, ſworn.

Council. Mr. Maſterſon, be pleaſed to tell my Lords and the Jury if you have ſeen the Priſoner at the Bar ſit in that which they called the High-Court of Juſtice.

Mr. Maſterſon. My Lords, and Gentlemen of the Jury. I ſaw the Priſoner at the Bar preſent at the High-Court of Juſtice (as they call'd it) for the Trial of the late King ſome Days; that is to ſay, either upon the 22d or 23d Day of January 1648, but particularly upon the 27th Day of that Month in the ſaid Year, when the Sentence of Death was pronounced againſt his late Majeſty, I ſaw the Priſoner at the Bar preſent.

Council. As one of the Judges do you mean?

Mr. Maſterſon. As one of the Judges ſitting upon the Bench.

Scot. Do you know whereabouts I ſate?

Mr. Maſterſon. I cannot ſatisfie you in that, but I ſaw you ſitting upon one of the Benches.

Council. Mr. Clark, you hear the Queſtion, pray anſwer what you know touching it.

Mr. Clark. My Lords, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I was preſent in the Year 1648, when his late Majeſty ſtood a Priſoner at the Bar in that which they called the High-Court of Juſtice, and among other Perſons there preſent in that Buſineſs, I obſerved Mr. Scot, the Priſoner at the Bar, to ſit as one of the Judges, and particularly upon the 23d and 27th Days of January in the ſaid Year, upon which laſt Day the Court pronounced Judgment upon the late King.

Council. Did he ſtand up as aſſenting to the Sentence?

Mr. Clark. They all ſtood up to my Apprehenſion, I know not particularly whether the Priſoner at the Bar did.

Council. Mr. Kirke, tell my Lords and the Jury your Knowledge in this Buſineſs touching the Priſoner at the Bar.

Mr. Kirk. I was preſent at the Trial of his late Majeſty ſeveral Days; among the reſt of the Perſons that ſate in the Court as Judges, I ſaw the Priſoner at the Bar, and particularly upon the Day of the Sentence, the 27th of January 1648, the Court ſtood up unanimouſly as aſſenting.

Council. Shew him the Warrant for Execution.

Kirk. This is his Hand.

Council. Have you ſeen his Hand often?

Kirk. Yes, Sir, and am well acquainted with it.

George Farrington Sworn.

Council. Shew Mr. Farrington the Warrant; do you know that to be Mr. Scot's Hand-writing?

Mr. Farrington. I did not ſee him write it, but I do verily believe it to be his; I have often ſeen his Hand-writing.

Council. Mr. Nutley, do you know Mr. Scot's Hand-writing? Is that Mr. Scot's Writing? [The Warrant ſhewn him.]

Mr. Nutley. I do verily believe it is.

Council. Have you been acquainted with the Writing of his Name?

Mr. Nutley. I have ſeen him write his Name, and do verily believe it to be his Hand.

Council. Clerk, read the Warrant: He read it accordingly.

Council. That which remains of our Evidence is to prove his boaſting of this Villany; we ſhall deſire you to hear Sir Theophilus Biddolph.

Sir Theophilus Biddolph Sworn.

Council. Pray tell my Lords and the Jury what you have heard the Priſoner ſay touching this Buſineſs of putting the King to Death.

Sir Theophilus Biddolph. I did hear him confeſs that he did Sit as one of the Judges of the late King; and that he was ſo far from repenting of the Act, that he did deſire when he died that a Tomb-ſtone might be laid over him with this Inſcription, Here lies Thomas Scot, who adjudged to Death the late King.

Council. Where did he ſay this?

Sir Theo. Biddolph. In the Parliament Houſe.

Colonel Copley, Eſq; Sworn.

Council. Pray Mr. Copley tell my Lords what you know of this Buſineſs.

Mr. Copley. My Lord, I was one of the Secluded Members; when we were called to ſit in the Houſe again, the Priſoner at the Bar, Mr. Thomas Scot, (I think it was the laſt Day we ſate,) there being ſome ſpeaking of the horridneſs of the Fact, he made a long Harangue about that horrid Act; and he ſaid, He hoped he ſhould never repent of it, and deſired that when he died it might be written upon his Tomb-ſtone, Here lies Thomas Scot, who adjudged to Death the late King.

Council. We have done with our Evidence.

Court. Sir Theophilus Biddolph, When was it you heard him ſpeak thoſe Words?

Sir

Sir Theo. Biddolph. To my beſt Remembrance it was in Richard's Parliament; it was about January or February was Twelve Months.

Council. Were not you a Member for the City of London in that Parliament.

Sir T. Biddolph. Yes.

Council. Mr. Copley, When was it that you heard it?

Mr. Copley. It was in April laſt.

Mr. Sol. Gen. It was a ſettled Perſuaſion of his Heart, and he thought it fit to be gloried in.

The Lord Mayor Elect ſworn.

Council. Pray my Lord tell my Lords what you know concerning the Priſoner at the Bar.

Lord Mayor Elect. My Lords, I was one of thoſe Secluded Members that were returned again a little before the coming in of his Majeſty: Upon the laſt Day of our Sitting, Mr. Scot ſeeing the Houſe muſt break, ſaid, Their Heads muſt be laid to the Block if there was a new Parliament, for ſaid you, (looking on Mr. Scot,) I confeſs I had a Hand in putting the King to Death, and I deſire all the World may take Notice of it, and I deſire when I die it may be written on my Tomb, I do not repent of any Thing I have done; if it were to do I could do it again.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do it again! He follows his Blows Home.

William Lenthall, Eſq; ſworn.

Council. Mr. Lenthall, pray be pleaſed to tell my Lords, and the Jury, what you do remember of any Diſcourſe of Mr. Tho. Scot, (the Priſoner at the Bar,) tending to the glorying in this Act, or any Thing in Juſtification of that Act.

Mr. Lenth. My Lords, the laſt Day it was, the laſt Inſtant of Time, we were reſolving of breaking the Houſe, there was ſome Oppoſition in it, not very much: The general Conſent of the Houſe was to diſſolve it; I muſt confeſs at that Time I did hear Mr. Scot much juſtifie that Act of the Death of the King, (which truly I was much offended at,) I confeſs to you upon my Oath touching his Speech of the Inſcription upon his Tomb I did not hear that: Juſtifying the Death of the King he made a long Harangue about, and he ſate at the upper end of the Gallery; but theſe Words, Of having it written upon his Tomb, and to have all the World take Notice of it, I do not remember.

Council. My Lords, my Lord Mayor Elect omitted ſomething; pray let him ſpeak to it.

Lord Mayor Elect. My Lords, the Concluſion of his Speech ended thus; Being it is your Pleaſure to have it ſo, (the Houſe Diſſolved,) I know not how to hinder it; but when that is done, I know not where to hide this hated HEAD of mine.

Council. We deſire to hear what the Priſoner will ſay for himſelf.

Scot. I have no Certainty from the Witneſſes that I was there, but in a Wandring Way, they know not where I ſate, nor my Poſture.

Mr. Baker ſworn.

Council. We do not call this Witneſs as Material, for we muſt inſiſt upon it quite through, that after 12 Years Time it is not poſſible a Witneſs ſhould remember where every particular Perſon ſate. Pray hear this Witneſs.

Mr. Baker. I do perfectly remember that Mr. Scot ſate Two Rows above Mr. Bradſhaw on his Left Hand in that which they called the High Court of Juſtice.

Scot. As to the Warrant you ſpeak of, I know not what it ſignifies, I deſire to know what the Nature of it is.

Council. The Warrant hath been read, it is not produced againſt him as a Record, for then it needed not be proved: But it is produced againſt him as an Evidence in Writing under his own Hand, that he was conſenting to the Death of the King.

Scot. They may very much miſtake my Hand; you ſpeak of Words that I ſhould utter in Parliament, I do humbly inſiſt upon it that I am not to anſwer, nor they alledge, any Thing of that Nature: It is a high Breach of Priviledge.

Council. There is no Priviledge of Parliament for Treaſon. Firſt, ſome of the Words were ſpoken in Richard's Parliament, and that you do not own to be a Parliament, then another Thing (a known Rule in Law) there is no Priviledge of Parliament for Treaſon.

Scot. I have heard the Rule, but do not ſo well underſtand it, of that ſpoken in Richard s Parliament; it will be a Nice Thing for me to diſtinguiſh between that and another Parliament; but this I think, that Convention of the People ought to have the Priviledge of the Parliament, as well as any other. I humbly conceive it was Teſtimony ought not to be given to you; whatever I ſay in Parliament, the Priviledge extends to no more than this, that I may be lawfully ſecured till the Parliament hath been acquainted with it, but not finally concluded till the Parliament have heard it.

Lord Chief Baron. You are Indicted for Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King: I would have you underſtand, that in caſe a Man ſhould commit an Act of Treaſon, be it in what Place ſoever, there is no Place of Sanctuary for Treaſon; in caſe of Felony, if a Man be Indicted for Felony in the Parliament-Houſe, during the Time of Parliament, this is not to be tried in Parliament, but according to the Rule of Common Law; ſo in caſe of Treaſon, the Houſe of Commons in Parliament doth not try Treaſons: That Diſtinction which you make is nothing.

Scot. I humbly conceive there is ſuch a Priviledge, that no Man ſhall ever be called to Account for any thing ſpoken in Parliament, if he be not called to Account by the Houſe before any other Member be ſuffered to ſpeak.

Lord Chief Baron. That is, the Houſe will not determine; but that doth not extend to your Caſe, you are not charged here criminally for ſpeaking thoſe Words that have been teſtified againſt you, but for Compaſſing and Imagining the King's Death, of which there are other Evidences, and this but an Evidence to prove that.

Scot. My Lord, I never did ſay theſe Words with that Aggravation which is put upon them, I have a great deal of hard Meaſure; as to ſay, I hope I ſhall never repent, I take God to Witneſs I have often, becauſe it was ſpoken well of by ſome, and ill by others, I have by Prayers and Tears often ſought the Lord, that if there were Iniquity in it he would ſhew it me; I do affirm I did not ſay ſo.

Mr. Baker. My Lord, I omitted ſomething, which was this; I had occaſion to ſpeak with Mr. Scot whilſt Richard's Parliament was Sitting, and among other Diſcourſe inſiſting upon ſome Things that Richard had done, ſaith he, I have cut off one Tyrant's Head, and I hope to cut off another.

Scot. My Lord, this is but a ſingle Witneſs.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I ſuppoſe he meant Richard for he was a Tyrant.

Lord Chief Baron. Speak on Mr. Scot whatever you have to ſay.

Scot. If that be laid aſide as an Impertinency, I have the leſs to ſay.

Lord Chief Baron. The next Thing you have to do

do is to anſwer to the Fact, whether you did it, or did it not.

Scot. I ſay this, whatever I did, be it more or leſs, I did it by the Command and Authority of a Parliamentary Power; I did ſit as one of the Judges of the King, and that doth juſtifie me, what ever the Nature of the Fact was.

Lord Chief Baron. We have had theſe Things alledged before us again and again: The Court are clearly ſatisfied in themſelves that this Act could not be done by any Parliamentary Power whatſoever. I muſt tell you what hath been delivered, that there is no Power on Earth that hath any Coercive Power over the King, neither Single Perſons nor a Community, neither the People Collectively nor Repreſentatively. In the next Place, that which you offer to be done as by Authority of Parliament, it was done by a few Members of the Houſe of Commons; there were but 46 there at that Time, and thoſe 46, not above 26 that voted it, at that Time the Houſe of Lords was ſitting, who had rejected it, and without them there was no Parliament, there was a Force upon the Parliament, there was excluded Seven Parts of Eight: Suppoſing you were a full Houſe of Commons, and that without Exception, there was not Authority enough; and it is known to you, (no Man better,) that there never was a Houſe of Commons before this Time; that this Foul Act was made for erecting that High Court of Juſtice, (as you call'd it,) aſſumed that Authority of making a Law; you cannot pretend to Act by Authority of Parliament; and becauſe you would excuſe it, you did it by Authority of Parliament, whether it were Good or no: If any Man do that which is unlawful by an unlawful Authority, the aſſuming to do it by that Authority is an Aggravation, not an Extenuation, of the Fact: It was over-ruled; I think my Lords will tell you, That they do not allow of that Authority at all, either to be for Juſtification or Plea.

Scot. My Lords, I humbly pray leave to ſay, that without Offence to the Court, (every Perſon whereof I honour,) this Court hath not Cognizance to declare whether it were a Parliament or no.

Lord Chief Baron. That was objected too; and we muſt acquaint you, That firſt of all it is no Derogation to Parliaments, that what is a Statute, ſhould be adjudged by the Common Laws. We have often brought it into Queſtion, whether ſuch and ſuch a Thing was an Act of Parliament, or not; any Man may pretend to an Authority of Parliament: If Forty Men ſhould meet at Shooters-Hill, as the Little Convention did at Weſtminſter, and ſay, We do declare ourſelves a Parliament of England; becauſe they do ſo, ſhall not this be judged what is a Statute, and what not? It is every Days Practice, we do judge upon it; the Fact is ſo known to every Body, they did aſſume to themſelves a Royal Authority; it hath been over-ruled already; it hath been the miſtake of many; the vulgar Acceptation of the Word Parliament. A Parliament conſiſts of the King, Lords, and Commons; it is not the Houſe of Commons alone, and ſo it is not by Authority of Parliament: It is not, unleſs it be by that Authority which makes up the Parliament: You cannot give one Inſtance that ever the Houſe of Commons did aſſume the King's Authority.

Scot. I can many, where there was nothing but a Houſe of Commons.

Court. When was that?

Scot. In the Saxons Time.

Court. You ſay it was in the Saxons Time; you do not come to any Time within 600 Years; you ſpeak of thoſe Times wherein Things were obſcure.

Scot. I know not but that it might be as lawful for them to make Laws as this late Parliament, being called by the Keepers of the Liberties of England: My Lords, I have no Seditious Deſign, but to ſubmit to the Providence of God.

Court. This is Notorious to every Man; this we have already heard and over-ruled.

L. Finch. That that I hope is this, That Mr. Scot will contradict that which he hath ſaid before; that is, that he hopes he ſhould not Repent, I hope he doth deſire to Repent. Mr. Scot, for this we muſt over-rule it, as we have done before; there is nothing at all to be pleaded to the Juriſdiction, and this Point hath been determined before.

Scot. The Parliament in former Times conſiſted not ſo much of King, Lords and Commons, but King and Parliament. In the beginning of the Parliament in 1641, the Biſhops were one of the Three Eſtates; if it be not properly to be called a Parliament, a Legiſlative Power, though it be not a Parliament, it is binding: If Two Eſtates may take away the Third, if the Second do not continue to execute their Truſt, he that is in Occupancy may have a Title to the whole: I do affirm I have a Parliamentary Authority, a Legiſlative Power, to juſtifie me.

Lord Chief Baron. Mr. Scot, what you ſpeak concerning the Lords Spiritual is nothing to your Caſe, be it either one Way or other, it was done by an Act of Parliament, with Conſent of the King, Lords, and Commons; though you will bring it down to make theſe Commons have a Legiſlative Power, I told you it was over-ruled before. We have ſuffered you to expatiate into that which was a Thing not intended by many of my Lords, that you ſhould have any ſuch Power to expatiate into that which is nothing but indeed to make a new Government, which is the higheſt Treaſon next to the Murthering of the King, in the World; to ſubvert the Laws, and to make a few of the Commons, nay, if they had been the whole, to make them to have the Legiſlative Power. Mr. Scot, if you have any Thing in Extenuation of the Fact we ſhall hear you, further we cannot.

L. Finch. If you ſpeak to this purpoſe again, for my part I will profeſs myſelf I dare not hear further of it; it is ſo Poiſonous Blaſphemous a Doctrine, contrary to the Laws, if you go upon this Point, I ſhall (and I hope my Lords will be of that Opinion too) deſire the Jury may be directed.

Scot. I thought, my Lord, you would rather be my Council; it is not my ſingle Opinion, I am not alone in this Caſe, therefore I think I may juſtifie myſelf in it; it was the Judgment of many of the Secluded Members to own us to be a Parliament.

Lord Anneſley. What you ſaid laſt doth occaſion my Riſing; you ſeem to deliver my Opinion, who you know could never agree to what you have alledged; truly I have been heartily ſorry to hear the Defence you have made to Day, becauſe you know I have had Letters from you of another Nature; I was very confident to have heard you an Humble Penitent this Day, inſtead of Juſtifying yourſelf: As to that which you ſay of the Secluded Members owning you to be a Parliament, they were ſo far from it, that you know for how many Years they lay under Sufferings and Obſcurity becauſe they could not acknowledge that an Authority which was not ſo: You cannot forget the Declaration of both Houſes that was publiſhed upon a Jealouſie that the People had, they would change the Government of King, Lords and Commons; it was

was far from their Thoughts, it was called in that Declaration, A Black Scandal caſt upon them: This Declaration you know was by Order of both Houſes affixed in all Churches of England, that People might take Notice what they held to be the Fundamental Government of this Kingdom, King, Lords, and Commons: After this for you to ſet up another Government, and under them to act ſuch Things that one would think ſhould hardly enter into the Heart of any Man. You know very well all along they declared themſelves Faithful Subjects to the King, and ſo would have lived and died; and you might have had your Share of the Happineſs of that Peace, if you could have had an Inclination to ſubmit to that which both Houſes had reſolved, when you and others could not bring your Hearts to ſtoop to your Fellow Subjects, when you could not ſubmit to that equal Rule to take your Share with them. When Pride carried ſome ſo high, then was the beginning of your Fall and others; and none could expect other than what is now come to paſs, that they ſhould come to that Shame and Sorrow that this Day hath brought upon you: I could have wiſhed to have heard nothing but an humble Confeſſion of the Fault that hath been clearly proved, and no Juſtification of it: You have ſworn, among others, to preſerve the Laws and People of this Kingdom; but you drove away not only the Houſe of Lords, but moſt of the Commons, and then to give the Name of a Parliament to the Remainder, this is a great Aggravation of your Treaſon. I think we of the Secluded Members could not have diſcharged our Duty to God and the Kingdom if we had not then appeared in Parliament to have Diſſolved that Parliament, and ſo by our joint Aſſent put an End to all your Pretences, which if we had not done, we had not ſo ſoon come to our Happineſs, nor you to your Miſeries.

Lord Chief Baron. The Court hath told you before their Opinions in the Thing, and no further Debate is to be allowed in this, the Juſtification of it doth comprehend Treaſon; we our-ſelves are not by Law to allow the Hearing of it. If you have nothing to ſay for yourſelf I muſt give Direction to the Jury.

Scot. I humbly crave Leave to move the Jury that they bethink themſelves, and conſider of it rather as a ſpecial Verdict, than of a definitive one, I think there is Cauſe of a Special Verdict.

Court. If there was need of a Special Verdict, (we are upon our Oaths,) I ſhould give Direction to the Jury. What we do, we do upon our Oaths, and muſt anſwer it before God Almighty. The Court hath delivered their Opinions before, that in this Caſe the pretended Authority under which you did derive that Power which you did execute, that it is no Authority, it is void in Law, it is a Foundation (if it were true) of ſubverting all Laws, and indeed of all Religion, a Power that you aſſume to yourſelves of Judging and Condemning your King, that you would countenance ſuch an Authority is a great Aggravation of the Fault. They are Judges whether you did Imagine or Compaſs the King's Death, that is all the Jurors have to do. Gentlemen of the Jury ——

Scot. I would know what particular Law I have tranſgreſſed in this Thing.

Court. The Law of God and Man, 25 Edw. III.

Scot. I humbly conceive that reaches not to this Caſe.

Court. To ſatisfie you in that, the very Words of the Statute are, If any Man do Compaſs or Imagine the King's Death it is Treaſon; the Indictment is, That you did Imagine and Compaſs the Death of the King; If the Fact be proved againſt you, you are within the Statute.

Scot. You will not ſay the King ſhall be a Traytor if he ſhall Compaſs the Death of the Queen.

Court. The Queen is a Subject.

Scot. I am not yet convinced.

Lord Chief Baron. Gentlemen of the Jury.

Scot. I do plead and claim that I am within the Compaſs of ſeveral Pardons, and deſire Council in that Particular; I do come within the Compaſs of his Majeſties Pardon.

Lord Chief Baron. If you had not gone on to Matter of Juſtification you might have been more heard to this of Pardon; but after a Juſtification then to come for a Pardon, which implies a Confeſſion of Guilt, they are Contradictory; I muſt tell you we are now upon Point of Law, that Proclamation I doubt not but his Majeſty will inviolably make good; but we are not to Judge of that, it is nothing to a Legal Proceeding: You are now in a Court of Law, it is not to be pleaded in a Court of Law; the King's Pardon in Law muſt be under his Broad Seal: How far you are under that Proclamation Care will be taken, and what is fitting to be done will be done; but it is nothing in the Matter of the Charge to this Jury.

Scot. I deſire Council touching the Statute 23 Edw. III.

Court. You ſhould have done it before you had confeſſed the Fact.

Scot. I may do it in Arreſt of Judgment.

Lord Chief Baron. Mr. Scot, for that of the King's Proclamation, if you be within the Benefit and Compaſs of it, according to his Royal Word and Honour in it, you will have the Benefit of it, but it is not a Plea in Law, but it muſt be a Pardon under Seal; whatſoever concerns that Proclamation will be conſidered, it is nothing to the Matter whereupon the Jury are to go.

Lord Chief Baron. Gentlemen of the Jury, you ſee the Priſoner, Tho. Scot, ſtands Indicted for Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of our Dread Sovereign King Charles the Firſt, of moſt Glorious and Bleſſed Memory: He is Indicted for Compaſſing and Imagining his Death, there is the Treaſon; and what is ſet afterwards in this Indictment is only to manifeſt this Compaſſing and Imagining, becauſe that being in the Heart alone, without ſome Overt-Act no Body can prove it: There are ſeveral Overt-Acts laid in the Indictment; one is, A Traiterous Conſulting and Meeting together how to put the King to Death: Then a ſitting upon the King as a Priſoner, being before them about his Life and Death: The Third is Sentencing to Death; that which followed is, that he was Murthered: If any of theſe Acts ſhould be proved the Indictment is proved; for the Proof, there are ſeveral Witneſſes have fully proved that he did ſit there ſeveral Times, particularly upon Jan. 27. which was the Day of the Sentence; that he did ſit there all of them agree to that; it is true, as to the Circumſtance where he ſate, one Gentleman ſaith he ſate in the Second Row, on the Left Hand of Bradſhaw; you will remember it is 12 Years ago, how any Man upon the View, and after ſo long a Diſtance of Time, ſhould be able to remember in what Poſture one Man was from the reſt, I think neither you nor I can remember: Here is one proves to you that he did Sign the Warrant for Executing the King; he ſaith, How can another know his Hand? You ſee what the Witneſſes ſay, they knew it; a Man can prove nothing more of another Man's Hand than that, unleſs they ſee it written; there is nothing to put upon you but his Words: You see what Words are Aggravated against Mr. Scot; whereas he saith, it is a Breach of the Priviledges of Parliament; if it were so, it is nothing to this Fact; though another Man should break the Priviledges of Parliament; it is nothing to you; but besides; it is not a Breach of the Priviledge of Parliament. You have heard the Witnesses what they have said against him. Mr. Lenthall swears that he did speak at large fully in owning that Business of the King's Death, the rest swear positively to the same Effect, and that at several Times; what was that? He gloried in it, defended it, and said, He could wish it were Engraven on his Tomb-Stone; he hath denied this that the Witnesses have proved: That which is left to you is, whether upon all this Matter that you have heard, whether the Prisoner at the Bar is Guilty of Compassing and Imagining the King's Death; and so go together ——— After a little Consultation together they settled in their Places again.

Clerk. Tho. Scot, Hold up thy Hand. Look upon the Prisoner at the Bar; how say you, is he Guilty of the Treason whereof he stands Indicted? Or not Guilty?

Jury. Guilty.

Clerk. Look to him Keeper.

Clerk. You say the Prisoner is Guilty, &c. and so you say all.

Jury. Yes.

Clerk. Set Mr. Scot aside.

Clerk. Set John Jones and Gregory Clement to the Bar.

Which was done accordingly

Thereupon the said Gregory Clement preferred his Petition to the Court.

Indictment read against them both.

Lord Chief Baron. If you do confess your Offence your Petition will be read.

Clem. I do, my Lord.

Lord Chief Baron. Mr. Clement, if you do confess (that you may understand it) you must when you are called, and when the Jury are to be charged; you must say, (if you will have it go by Way of Confession,) that you wave your former Plea, and confess the Fact.

Clerk. Gregory Clement, you have been Indicted of High Treason, for Compassing and Imagining the Death of his late Majesty, and you have pleaded Not Guilty; are you contented to wave that Plea, and confess it?

Clem. I do confess myself to be Guilty, my Lord.

Clerk. Set him aside.

Clerk. John Jones, hold up thy Hand. These Men that were last called, &c. if you will Challenge all, or any of them, you must Challenge them when they come to the Book, and before they are Sworn.

Jones. I confess I sate amongst them some Days, but not maliciously contrived the Death of the King.

Council. He is troubled at the Form, he confesseth the Matter, that he was there sitting in the High-Court of Justice. If he will not confess it, he knows we can prove his Hand and Seal to that Bloody Warrant. He is troubled that he is said to have Traiterously and Maliciously contrived the King's Death: He that doth these Acts towards it is by Law responsible as to the Malice.

Jury Sworn.

Sir Tho. Allen, Sir Henry Wroth, Sir Jer. Whitchcott, James Hawley, Henry Mildmay, Christ. Abdy, Nich. Raynton, Richard Cheney, Tho. Byde, Charles Pitfield, Abraham Scudamore, Charles Pickerne, in all Twelve.

Clerk. Crier, make Proclamation.

Crier. If any Man can inform, &c.

Clerk. John Jones, Hold up thy Hand. Look upon the Prisoner, &c.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lords, and Gentlemen of the Jury, I must open to you, as to other Juries, that the short Point of this long Indictment is but this, that the Prisoner at the Bar did Imagine and Compass the Death of the King, which is your Issue to Try. We shall prove it by those Overt-Acts which the Law doth require. To prove the Sitting, Sentencing, and Signing the Warrant for Execution by the Prisoner at the Bar.

Council. Call Mr. Clark, and Mr. Carr, and Holl. Sympson, who were sworn.

Mr. Sympson, did you see the Prisoner at the Bar sitting in that which they called the High Court of Justice.

Sympson. I did see Mr. Jones sit divers Times, both there, and in the Painted Chamber.

Jones. I do confess I sate divers times.

Council. Did he Sit the Day of Sentence?

Sympson. I cannot say it.

Council. Mr. Clark, you hear the Question, pray Answer my Lord.

Clark. My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, I was there the 27th of January 1648. I saw Colonel Jones there several Days before, but I did not see him that Day; his Name was called, but I do not know whether he was Present.

Council. Mr. Carr, did you see him sit on the 27th Day, which was the Day of Sentence?

Carr. My Lords, he answered to his Name some Days, I am not able to tell what Day.

Mr. Nutley sworn.

Council. Can you tell whether the Prisoner at the Bar was present in that which they called the High Court of Justice.

Nutley. The Prisoner at the Bar was several times in the Court which was called the High Court of Justice; truly I cannot say whether he was there the 27th Day, the Day of the Sentence.

The Warrant for Summoning the Court being shewed.

Council. Is that Mr. Jones's Hand (the Prisoner at the Bar) set to that Warrant?

Nutley. I have been acquainted with his Hand, I do believe it is.

The Warrant for Execution was also shewed.

Council. Is that the same Hand-writing?

Nutley. Yes, I believe it is; he hath written several Letters to me.

Mr. Hartlib sworn.

Court. Mr. Hartlib, do you know Mr. Jones's Hand?

Hartlib. I never did see him write, but I have seen several Letters out of Ireland, and other Papers which have been supposed to be his Hand-writing; this seems to be like that which was reputed to be his Hand.

Council. Mr. Clark, do you know Mr. Jones's Hand-writing?

Clark. I have seen several Letters of Col. Jones's, and these are like his Hand-writing; I do believe they are his Hand-writing.

Mr. Jones looks upon them both, and confesses they are like his Hand-writing.

Council. We have given our Evidence: What do you say for yourself before Charge be given to the Jury?

Jones. I have little to say, your Lordships have already heard what is to be said in this Case; I have nothing to say to the Point; I am not fit to Plead any Thing, especially in Matter of Law; I must wholly put put myself upon the Lord, and this Honourable Court and Jury.

Lord Chief Baron. Gentlemen of the Jury, here is this Prisoner, John Jones, stands Indicted, for that he, with others, did Compass and Imagine the King's Death, that is the Substance of the Indictment. The Indictment sets forth several Acts, each proving the Compassing and Imagining the King's Death: One of them is, that he did consult and meet together, and propound how the King should be put to Death: The Second is, they did assume a Power to Judge the King: The Third is, that they did actually sit upon him: And the last of them is, that they sentenced the King, and afterwards the King was murthered. The whole Substance is, whether he did Compass and Imagine the King's Death. If any one of these Particulars that are alledged for the Overt-Acts be proved, you are to find the Indictment. He hath confessed very Ingenuously, that he did sit upon the King, that he did sit in that Court, and so there is an Overt-Act proved; if nothing else, you ought to find him guilty of this Treason. There is further Evidence (though not any Evidence of his sitting the last day of the Sentence,) you have had Three comparing Similitudes of Hands to prove that he did Sign that Sentence, that horrid Instrument, whereby the King was ordered to be put to Death; one of them having received Letters from Ireland, and others acquainted with his Hand, say, that it is like his Hand; he hath so confessed the Likeness of his Hand, but he saith he doth not remember he Signed it. As to you of the Jury, there is no more to be considered, if any one of the Acts do appear true to you, that is sufficient to find him guilty, (though he were not guilty of all;) but that he did Compass and Imagine the King's Death is clear, in Sitting and Signing the Warrant; for the other, whether you shall find that he did Sentence the King, that must be left to you. Whatsoever it is, still it is the same; if any one be proved you ought to find him guilty of the Indictment, which is the Compassing and Imagining the King's Death. I think you need not stir from the Bar, for he hath confessed it.

The Jury went together, and after a little Consultation, returned to their Places.

Clerk. Are you agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Clerk. Who shall say for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Clerk. John Jones, Hold up thy Hand. Look upon the Prisoner at the Bar. How say ye, is he Guilty, &c.

Foreman. Guilty.

Clerk. Look to him Keeper.

Clerk. You say the Prisoner at the Bar is Guilty, &c. and so you say all.

Jury. Yes.

Clerk. Set all that have been Tried this Day to the Bar.

Lord Chief Baron. Mr. Scot, I must speak a Word to you; you made mention of the King's Proclamation for Pardon, and you did desire the Benefit of it. As I told you before, so now again, that it was not proper for us upon that Proclamation to give any Allowance by Way of Plea, because the Pardon ought to be under the Broad Seal; but God forbid but just and due Consideration should be had of it with Honour, so far as you are comprehended within it; though Judgment shall pass, no Warrant for Execution shall go out against you till Consideration be had, how far you are within the Compass of that Proclamation, and the like to you, Mr Scroop.

Clerk. Adrian Scroop, Hold up thy Hand. Thou hast been Indicted of High-Treason, and hast thereof been found Guilty: What canst thou say for thy self why Judgment should not pass for thee to Die according to Law?

Scroop. I do humbly submit to his Majesties Mercy.

Clerk. John Carew, Hold up thy Hand. Thou art in the like Condition with the former, what canst thou say, &c.

Carew. I commit my Cause unto the Lord.

Clerk. Thomas Scot, Hold up thy Hand. Thou art in the like Condition with the former, what canst thou say, &c.

Scot. I shall only say, I do only cast my self upon His Majesty, and pray Mercy.

Clerk. John Jones, Hold up thy Hand. Thou art in the like Condition with the former, what hast thou to say, &c.

Jones. I pray his Majesties Clemency.

Clerk. Gregory Clement, Hold up thy Hand. Thou standest Indicted of High Treason, and thereunto hast pleaded Guilty, what canst thou say? &c.

Clement. I pray Mercy from the King.

Lord Chief Baron. You that are Prisoners at the Bar, ye see the Sentence of Death is to pass against you; and for ought you know, or we know yet, may be nearer than you are aware: How soon it will be executed we know not; when you have reflected upon your own Consciences, many of you could not chuse but look there, and see, as in a Glass, the Foulness of this horrid Offence: It is the Murder of our most Gracious Sovereign King Charles the First of Blessed Memory; a Prince whom we (such of us as had the Honour personally to attend him) knew was of such Parts and Virtues, if he had been a Private Man more could not have been desired; truly what he did as a King, his Clemency, how it appeared at first in this Princes Time: If you look what Peace and Prosperity we enjoyed in his Days, we will not find it in other Kings Times; you had not a Nobleman put to Death, save One, and that for an Offence which must not be named; a Prince that had granted so much: You may remember what was granted before the Beginning of these Wars; Grievances complained of, Star-Chamber, High-Commission Court, Ship-money, the Claim of Stannery, &c. all these were taken away: What Concessions he made after in the Isle of Wight; how much he wooed and courted the People for Peace. I urge this unto you only that you would lay it to your Hearts, that you would consider what it is to Kill a King, and to Kill such a King. If any of you shall say, that we had no Hand in the actual Murther of the King, remember that they that brought him to the Bar, were all one as if they had brought him to the Block; as St. Paul confessed, though he held but the Cloaths, he killed the Martyr Stephen. You are shortly to appear before God's Tribunal, and I beseech God Almighty that he will give you, and us all, those Hearts, that we may look into ourselves; no Fig-leaves will serve the Turn; whatsoever you have said now as Prisoners, or allowed to say for your own Preservation in Point of Fact; notwithstanding it will not serve before God Almighty: All Things are naked before him. Lay it to your Hearts; God Almighty, though you have committed these foul and horrid Sins, yet he can Pardon you, as he pardoned that Murther of David: I speak it to you that you may lay it to your Hearts; I am heartily sorry, in Re-

ſpect you are Perſons of great Civility, and (thoſe that I know) of very good Parts; and this I muſt ſay, That you will conſider with yourſelves, if any of you have been led away, though it were with his own Conſcience, if any of you did it, as you conceived in Conſcience, remember that our Saviour ſaith, the Time ſhall come when they will perſecute you, and kill you, and think they do God good Service. I have the Judgment of Charity, poſſibly ſome of you did it in this Kind, and this is leſs than doing it wilfully; others might do it by a miſ-guided Conſcience; there is a Spiritual Pride; Men may over-run themſelves by their own Holineſs, and they may go by pretended Revelations: Men may ſay I have prayed about ſuch a Thing, I do not ſpeak it with Reproach to any; if a Man that ſhould commit a Robbery, or Murther, meerly becauſe he will, and ſhould come and ſay, I have prayed againſt it, and cannot underſtand it to be a Sin, as one in Shropſhire did, and yet notwithſtanding killed his own Father and Mother; try your own Spirits, you muſt not think that every Fancy and Imagination is Conſcience; Men may have a ſtrange Fancy and Preſumption, and that they may call Conſcience: Take heed, there is a Spiritual Pride; the Devil doth many times appear like an Angel of Light, do not reſt upon that Self-confidence: Examine your Hearts, conſider the Fact by the Word of God; that is the Rule, the Law is to be applied to it, Eccleſ. 8. Where the Word of a King is, there is Power; and who can ſay unto him, What doſt thou? That is to ſhew the Power of Kings in Scripture: Remember withal that of David in Pſalm 51. that Penitential Pſalm, when he had committed that horrid Sin againſt Uriah; remember what he ſaid being a King, Tibi ſoli peccavi, againſt thee only have I ſinned; truly it being in ſuch a Caſe, I ſpeak it as before God Almighty, according to my Duty and Conſcience, I wiſh moſt heartily as to your Perſons: I pray God to give you that Grace that you may ſeriouſly conſider it, and lay it to Heart, and to have Mercy upon you, and to forgive you, and this is all that I have to ſay; and now not I, but the Sentence of the Law, the Judgment which I have to give againſt you, is this, You Priſoners at the Bar, the Judgment of the Court is, and the Court doth award, that you be led back, &c. and the Lord have Mercy on your Souls.

Clerk. Crier make Proclamation.

Crier. O Yes, &c. All manner of Perſons, &c. Jurors and Witneſſes, to appear to Morrow Morning at Seven of the Clock, at this Place, ſo God ſave his Majeſty.

Seſſions-Houſe in the Old-Baily, October the 14th, 1660.

The Court being Aſſembled, Proclamation was made.

Clerk of the Court. Set Cook, Peters, Hacker, and Axtel, to the Bar: They being brought, the Keeper was afterwards ordered to take back all, except Mr. Cook.

Clerk. John Cook, hold up thy Hand, &c.

Jury. Sir J. Whitchcot, James Hawley, Jo. Nichol, of Henden, Tho. Nichol, F. Thorn, Edw. Wilford, Will. Gumbleton, Jo. Shelbury, Tho. Jenney, Tho. Willet, Sir H. Wroth, Richard Cheney, of the Jury called and ſworn.

Mr. Cook. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I do not know any of theſe Perſons, I beſeech your Lordſhip, that in Regard the Safety of my Life depends upon the Indifferency of theſe Perſons, that your Lordſhip may demand of the Sheriff to know whether he hath not heard them ſay, or any of them, that they are pre-ingaged; I hope they are not, and thereupon I have not Challenged any.

Lord Chief Baron. Sir, the Officer reads their Names out of his Papers, I ſuppoſe he doth not pick and chuſe them; I would not have him; and I am ſure he will not do you any Wrong in that Particular.

Cook. My Lord, I am ſatisfied.

Clerk. If any Man can inform, &c.

Clerk. J. Cook, Hold up thy Hand.

Cook. My Lords, I deſire Pen, Ink and Paper.

Lord Chief Baron. Give it him.

Clerk. J. Cook, Hold up thy Hand. You that are Sworn look upon the Priſoner; you ſhall underſtand, &c. (Here the Indictment was read as before.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, and you Gentlemen that are Sworn of this Jury, the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands Indicted for High-Treaſon for Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the late King of Bleſſed Memory: The Indictment ſets forth, That he, together with others, did aſſemble at Weſtminſter-Hall, and ſets forth many other Particulars of Sitting, Sentencing, and of the conſequent Death and Murder of the King. The Matter and Charge of the Indictment is, for Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King, the reſt of the Circumſtances of the Indictment are but alledged as Overt-Acts to prove the Imagination, which only is the Treaſon. This Priſoner at the Bar ſtands here Indicted for this Treaſon of Compaſſing and Imagining the late King's Death. My Lord, his Part and Portion in this Matter will be different from thoſe that have been Tried before you; they ſat as Judges to Sentence the King, and he, my Lord, ſtood as a wicked Inſtrument of that Matter at the Bar, and there he doth with his own Hand ſubſcribe and exhibit a Charge of High-Treaſon, a Scandalous Libel againſt our Sovereign, to that pretended Court to be read againſt him, as an Accuſation in the Name of all the People of England; when he had done that, he makes large Diſcourſes and Aggravations to prove (if it had been poſſible) Innocency itſelf to be Treaſon. When he had done, he would not ſuffer his Majeſty to ſpeak in his Defence, but ſtill took him up, and ſaid, that he did ſpin out Delays, and deſired that the Charge might be taken as if he had confeſſed it: He preſſed the Court that Judgment might be given againſt the King; he was the Man that did demand that wicked Judgment before the Court pronounced it; and he was the Man that did againſt his own Conſcience, after he had acknowledged that he was a Wiſe and Gracious King, yet, ſays he, That he muſt die, and Monarchy with him; there in truth was the Treaſon and the Cauſe of that Fatal Blow that fell upon the King. This was his Part to carry on; how he did it as a wicked Counſellor we ſhall prove to you, and the Wages and Reward of the Iniquity that he did receive.

James Nutley Sworn.

Council. Pray tell the Circumſtances of the Priſoner's Proceedings at Weſtminſter-Hall, when he did exhibit a Charge againſt the King.

Mr. Nutley. My Lords, the firſt Day of bringing his Majeſty to his Trial was Saturday Jan. 20. 1648. Before they ſate in publick, they that were of the Com-

Committee of that which they call the High-Court of Juſtice, did meet in the Painted Chamber, which was in the Forenoon of that Day. Being there, I did obſerve that there was one Price a Scrivener that was writing of a Charge; I ſtood at a great diſtance and ſaw him write, and I ſaw this Gentleman, the Priſoner at the Bar, near thereabouts where it was writing, I think it was at the Court of Wards. This Charge afterwards (a Parchment Writing) I did ſee in the Hands of this Gentleman the Priſoner at the Bar. A very little after that they called their Names they did adjourn from the Painted Chamber into Weſtminſter-Hall, the great Hall. The Method that they obſerved, the firſt thing was to call the Commiſſioners by Name in the Act; the pretended Act for trying the King was read; that is, when the Court was ſate the Commiſſioners were called by their Names, and as I remember they ſtood up as their Names were called: The next thing was reading the Act for trying of his late Majeſty. After that was read, then this Gentleman, the Priſoner at the Bar, preſented the Parchment Writing, which was called the Impeachment, or Charge, againſt his Majeſty: Mr. Bradſhaw was then Preſident of that Court, and ſo called Lord Preſident; he commanded that the Priſoner ſhould be ſent for, ſaying, Serjeant Dendy, ſend for your Priſoner; thereupon the King was brought up as a Priſoner, and put within a Bar: And when the Court was ſilenced, and ſettled, this Gentleman, the Priſoner at the Bar, did deliver the Charge, the Impeachment to the Court, and it was read; the King was demanded to plead to it preſently. Here I ſhould firſt tell you, that upon the King's firſt coming in there was a kind of a Speech made by Mr. Bradſhaw to the King in this Manner, I think I ſhall repeat the very Words, Charles Stuart King of England, the Commons of England, aſſembled in Parliament, taking Notice of the Effuſion of Blood in the Land, which is fixed on you as the Author of it, and whereof you are guilty, have reſolved to bring you to a Trial and Judgment, and for this Cauſe this Tribunal is erected: There was little Reverence given to his Majeſty then, which I was troubled at: He added this further, that there was a Charge to be exhibited againſt him by the Solicitor-General; I think this Gentleman was ſo called at that Time, and he called to him to exhibit the Charge; and this Gentleman, (the Priſoner at the Bar,) did deliver an Impeachment, a Parchment Writing, which was called a Charge againſt the King at that Time, which was received, and read againſt him.

Council. Did you ever ſee the Charge (which was now ſhewn to Mr. Nutley?

Mr. Nutley. My Lords, I do believe that this is the very Charge, I am confident it is the ſame Writing; I have often ſeen him write, and by the Character of his Hand this is the ſame.

Council. Go on with your Story.

Mr. Nutley. My Lords, immediately upon the Delivery of this Charge of Impeachment which was delivered in the King's Preſence, after it was read the King was demanded to give an Anſwer to it; His Majeſty deſired to ſpeak ſomething before he did Anſwer to the pretended Impeachment, (for ſo His Majeſty was pleaſed to call it,) he did uſe Words to this purpoſe; ſaith he, I do wonder for what Cauſe you do convene me here before you: He looked about him, ſaith he, I ſee no Lords here, where are the Lords? Upon this Mr. Bradſhaw, the Preſident, for ſo he was called, did interrupt his Majeſty, and told him, Sir, ſaith he, you muſt attend the Buſineſs of the Court; to that Purpoſe you are brought hither, and you muſt give a poſitive Anſwer to the Charge; ſaith the King, you will hear me ſpeak, I have ſomething to ſay before I Anſwer; after much ado; he was permitted to go on in the Diſcourſe he was in, ſo far as they pleaſed. His Majeſty ſaid, I was in the Iſle of Wight, and there I was treated with by divers Honourable Perſons, Lords and Commons, a Treaty of Peace between me and my People; the Treaty was ſo far proceeded, in that it was near a Perfection: Truly (ſaith he) I muſt needs ſay they treated with me honourably, and uprightly; and when the Buſineſs was come almoſt to an End, then (ſaith he) was I hurried away from them hither, I know not by what Authority; now I deſire to know by what Authority I was called to this Place? That is the firſt Queſtion I ſhall ask you before I Anſwer the Charge. It was told him by Mr. Bradſhaw, the Preſident, that the Authority that called him hither was a Lawful Authority; he asked him what Authority it was the Second Time; it was anſwered him by the Preſident, that it was the Authority of the Commons of England, Aſſembled in Parliament, which he affirmed then to be the Supream Authority of this Nation; the King ſaid, I do not acknowledge its Authority: Authority, if taken in the beſt Senſe, it muſt be of Neceſſity underſtood to be Lawful, therefore I cannot aſſent to that; I am under a Power, but not under an Authority; and there are many unlawful Powers, a Power that is on the Highway; I think I am under a Power but not under an Authority; you cannot judge me by the Laws of the Land, nor the meaneſt Subject. I wonder you will take the Boldneſs to Impeach me, your Lawful King. To this purpoſe His Majeſty was pleaſed to expreſs himſelf at that Time, with more Words to that Purpoſe. The King went on to further Diſcourſe concerning the Juriſdiction of the Court. Bradſhaw, the Preſident, was pleaſed to interrupt him, and told him ſeveral times, that he trifled out the Courts Time, and they ought not to indure to have their Juriſdiction ſo much as queſtioned.

Court. Pray go on.

Mr. Nutley. This Gentleman at the Bar I did hear him demand the King's Anſwer ſeveral times; a poſitive Anſwer was required of the King; the King often deſired to be heard, and he interrupted him again and again, ſeveral times, and at length it was pray'd that the Charge that was exhibited againſt him might be taken pro confeſſo.

Court. By whom?

Nutley. By the Priſoner at the Bar, if ſo be that he would not Anſwer. This, my Lord, is the Subſtance of what I have to ſay againſt him.

Council. Mr. Nutley, pray what Diſcourſe have you had at any Time with the Priſoner at the Bar concerning this Impeachment.

Nutley. Truly, my Lord, I knew the Gentleman well, I was well acquainted with him, and for the Satisfaction of my own Conſcience, (for I was very tender in the Buſineſs, and ſorry he was ingaged in it,) I went to him, and did deſire him to deſiſt; I had Diſcourſe with him, (for I was then a young Student in the Temple, and had a little Knowledge in the Laws:) I deſired him to conſider the dangerous Conſequences of ſuch a Proceeding; I may ſay I did it with Tears in my Eyes, for I had a very good Reſpect to the Gentleman for his Profeſſion Sake, being learned therein: Truly, my Lord, he did Anſwer me thus, I acknowledge it is a very baſe Buſineſs, but they put it upon me; I cannot avoid it, you ſee they put it upon me. I had ſome Diſcourſe with him concerning the Oath of Allegiance; truly he was ſatisfied that this Oath was againſt the

Bu-

Buſineſs in Queſtion: I ſaw he was troubled at it.

Council. Can ye ſpeak of the manner of calling for Judgment againſt the King?

Nutley. That (I have already anſwered to it) was ſeveral times done; the King was brought ſeveral Times to the Bar, and at every Time he was brought he was preſſed to Anſwer whether Guilty? Or Not Guilty?

Court. By whom?

Nutley. By the Sollicitor then, the Priſoner now at the Bar. My Lord, I remember His Majeſty was pleaſed when he ſaw he could not be heard to the Diſcourſe that he did intend to make of the whole Buſineſs; ſaith the King, if you will needs preſs me to Anſwer, I muſt Demurr to your Juriſdiction: My Lord, the Anſwer that was given to that was this, Mr. Bradſhaw, their then Preſident did ſay, Sir, ſaith he, if you Demurr to the Juriſdiction of this Court, I muſt let you know that the Court doth over-rule your Demurrer; this was ſaid, my Lord, and Judgment was preſſed very often.

Court. By whom?

Nutley. By the Priſoner at the Bar.

Cook. My Lord, may I ask him a Queſtion?

Court. Yes.

Cook. The firſt Queſtion is, whether the Parchment was delivered by me unto the Court, or brought into the Court by Mr. Broughton, the Clerk.

Mr. Nutley. I do encline to believe, (my Lord,) that it was brought into the Court, and delivered by ſome Hand or other to the Priſoner at the Bar; I do believe it was, for I do remember it was written by one Price; I was told that was his Name; that may be true; I believe it was brought into the Court, and delivered to the Priſoner now at the Bar.

Council. But did he exhibit it?

Nutley. Yes, my Lords.

Cook. Did you ſee me ſet my Hand to that Parchment?

Nutley. No, my Lords, but I believe it to be his Hand.

Cook. Another Queſtion, whether Mr. Nutley did hear me ſay concerning the Opinions of thoſe Gentlemen, what they intended to do in that Buſineſs?

Nutley. My Lords, I do remember that I had often Conference with the Gentleman at the Bar.

I deſired him to deſiſt from the Buſineſs, conſidering the dangerous Conſequences of it: Truly, my Lord, I do well remember that he did ſay he did hope they did not intend to take away the King's Life: Said I, if they go about any ſuch Thing do you uſe your utmoſt Endeavour to preſerve his Life; ſaith he, I did Labour to that Purpoſe, but they tell me they only intend to bring him to ſubmit to the Parliament.

Cook. It is ſaid that I demanded Judgment of his Life; Mr. Nutley, I demand of you whether I uſed the Words of Judgment againſt his Life, but only I demanded their Judgment.

Nutley. My Lords, for that I cannot remember poſſibly to a Syllable, but Judgment was demanded.

Court. By whom?

Nutley. By this Perſon.

Cook. I ſaid the Judgment of the Court, not againſt him, I meant Judgment for his Acquittal.

Court. Did you ever hear him deſire the Court that the Charge might be taken pro confeſſo?

Nutley. That I have ſaid, my Lord, it was urged by the Priſoner at the Bar againſt His Majeſty, that if he would not plead to the Charge, that then the Matter charged in it might be taken pro confeſſo. But my Lord, if you pleaſe to give me leave to add this one Word more, my Lord, I did hear him ſay at that Time; he ſhewed me a Paper, that contained an Order of the Court, that did direct the very Words that he ſhould uſe when he came to deliver the Charge; whether thoſe Words were in the Order I do not know.

Cook. Whether was I not directed by thoſe Gentlemen the very Words I ſhould ſpeak?

Court. We are ſatisfied in that; he ſaith by an Order that you ſhewed him, you were ſo directed. If you have any Thing more ask it him.

Mr. Farrington Sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray tell my Lords, and the Jury, what was the Carriage of the Priſoner at the Bar at Weſtminſter, at the Place they called the High Court of Juſtice.

Farrington. My Lord, I was preſent about the 20th of Jan. 1648, at that which they called the High Court of Juſtice, and Mr. Bradſhaw ſate then as Preſident, ſo much as I remember concerning the Priſoner at the Bar I ſhall acquaint your Lordſhip. This Gentleman at the Bar, after the reading of the Commiſſion, and Directions by the Preſident, to bring His Majeſty (the Priſoner they called him) to the Bar; the King being brought, after Silence made, and ſome Speeches made by the Preſident, this Gentleman, the Priſoner at the Bar, having then a Parchment in his Hand, the Subſtance of it was for levying War againſt the Kingdom, he prayed that it might be read, and accepted as a Charge, in Behalf of the good People of England. It was accordingly read, and afterwards being demanded to Anſwer, after His Majeſty having given ſeveral Reaſons as to the Juriſdiction of the Court Four Days, every Day the Priſoner at the Bar demanded the Judgment of the Court. And if His Majeſty would not Anſwer to the Charge it might be taken pro confeſſo.

Council. Do you know his Hand if you ſee it?

Farrington. I have not ſeen his Hand a long Time: Then the Impeachment was ſhewn to the Witneſs.

Farrington. Truly, Sir, this is like his Hand.

Council. Do you believe it?

Farrington. It is very like it, I do not know poſitively.

Council. Did you hear the Words pro confeſſo?

Farrington. Yes, my Lord, ſeveral times after the firſt Day.

Council. Did he interrupt the King in his Diſcourſe, as to ſay theſe Words, that the Charge might be taken pro confeſſo?

Farrington. I do remember one Day there was ſome Interruption between the King and him, the King laying his Cane upon his Shoulder, deſiring him to forbear.

Cook. You cannot ſay that I interrupted his Majeſty.

Farrington. I remember that the King laid his Cane upon your Shoulders.

Cook. Whether did I the firſt or the laſt Day demand Judgment, or that any Thing might be taken pro confeſſo?

Farrington. The firſt Day? No, but after the firſt Day he did ſeveral Days; you did the laſt Day.

Griffith Bodurdo, Eſq; ſworn.

Council. Sir, you have heard the Queſtion, give an Account to my Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, of the Carriage of the Priſoner at the Bar towards his Majeſty during the Time of the Trial.

Mr. Bodurdo. My Lord, I was all the Time that the King was brought there before the Court, as a Pri-

Priſoner; I was preſent all the Day, having a Conveniency out of my Houſe into a Gallery that was ſome patt of it over that Court. I do remember that the Priſoner at the Bar (whom I never ſaw before that Time) did exhibit a Charge the firſt Day againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, which was the King, in theſe very Terms, the Priſoner at the Bar: The Charge I heard it read then, I have not ſeen it ſince; the Subſtance was this. That for levying War againſt the Parliament and People of England, and namely, at ſuch and ſuch a Place killing of the People of England, (I think Naſeby and Keinton Field was named in it, and divers other Places were nam'd in the Charge,) and the Concluſion was, that he had done thoſe Things as a Tyrant, Traitor, Murtherer, and a Publick and Implacable Enemy of the Commonwealth. But this Priſoner at the Bar did exhibit the Charge, and the King did then, as you have heard he did, plead to the Juriſdiction of the Court. The King would fain have been heard, but I think they did adjourn for that Time. The next Day he pleaded the ſame Thing; I remember the Anſwer that was ſeveral Times given; twice given by Bradſhaw to the King thus, That the Court did aſſert their own Juriſdiction, the Second and Third Day, I do not remember any Day after the Firſt, but that the Priſoner at the Bar did demand Judgment for the Kings not Pleading, and did ſeveral Times make Complaints to the Court of the King's Delays; that he intended Delays, and nothing elſe.

Cook. Pray, my Lord, One Queſtion, whether my Lord, before he heard me ſpeak of demanding Judgment againſt the King, whether he did not hear Mr. Bradſhaw ſeveral Times ſay that the Court own'd their Authority, and that the Matter would be taken pro confeſſo?

Mr. Bodurdo. I did hear the Priſoner at the Bar deſire of the Court, that it might be ſo; and I heard the Priſoner tell the King that it muſt be ſo.

Joſeph Herne ſworn.

Council. Mr. Herne, Tell my Lords what you know of the Priſoners Carriage at the High-Court of Juſtice, as they called it.

Mr. Herne. Upon Saturday the 20th of January 1648, it was the Firſt Day His Majeſty was convened before them. I could not come near the Court, only I ſaw him at a Diſtance; I heard nothing but the Acclamations of the People, crying out, God Save Your Majeſty; what was done in Court I know nothing of. On Monday I was there, and had a Conveniency to ſee and hear what was acted; and ſo His Majeſty being come to the Seat appointed for him, the Priſoner at the Bar being called upon by the then Preſident Bradſhaw, he demanded of him what he had to ask of the Court. He was then talking with Doriſlaus, and ſeem'd not to mind the Buſineſs of the Court. His Majeſty ſitting near, takes his Stick and thruſts the Priſoner at the Bar upon his Shoulder; and the Priſoner looking back with a great deal of Indignation turned about: I did hear Bradſhaw ſpeaking to him in theſe Words, Mr. Solicitor have you any Thing to demand of the Court? Whereupon the Priſoner at the Bar did uſe theſe of the like Words; May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, I have formerly in the Name of the Commons Aſſembled in Parliament, and the good People of England, exhibited a Charge of High-Treaſon, and other High Crimes, againſt Charles Stewart, the Priſoner at the Bar, flinging his Head back in this manner to him; he had there further to require of the Court that he might be demanded to make poſitive Anſwer by Confeſſion or Denial; if not, that the Court would take it pro Confeſſo, and proceed according to Juſtice; this was on the Firſt Day I was in the Court. The Preſident Bradſhaw told his Majeſty, that he heard what was craved in the Name of the Commons Aſſembled in Parliament, and the good People of England, againſt him, by the now Priſoner at the Bar. The King ſtood up, but Bradſhaw prevented him in what he had to ſay, telling of him that the Court had given him Time to that Day to know when he would plead to the Charge. His Majeſty proceeded to object againſt the Juriſdiction, and ſaid he did Demur to the Juriſdiction of the Court; upon which the Preſident anſwered him, If you Demur to the Juriſdiction of the Court, you muſt know that the Court hath over-ruled your Demurrer; and you muſt plead to your Charge, Guilty, or not Guilty: Upon that the King asked their Authority, and deſired he might give Reaſons againſt it; he was denied it by the Preſident; the Preſident at laſt was content to tell him, that though he was not ſatisfied with their Authority, they were, and he muſt; but to ſatisfie him, he told him in ſhort, they ſat there by the Supream Authority of the Nation, the Commons Aſſembled in Parliament, by whom his Anceſtors ever were, and to whom he was accountable; then the King ſtood up, By your Favour ſhew me One Preſident. Bradſhaw ſits down in an angry manner, Sir, ſaith he, we ſit not here to anſwer your Queſtions, plead to your Charge, Guilty, or not Guilty: Clerk, do your Duty; whereupon Broughton ſtood up, and asked what he had to ſay, whether Guilty or not Guilty? And Preſident Bradſhaw ſaid, that if he would not plead they muſt record his Contempt. His Majeſty turned about to the People, and ſaid, then remember that the King of England ſuffers, being not permitted to give his Reaſons, for the Liberty of the People; with that a great Shout came from the People, crying, God ſave the King, but there was an Awe upon them, that they could not expreſs themſelves as they would have done, I believe.

Council. What did Cook ſay to the Judgment? Did you hear him preſs for Judgment?

Mr. Hern. Yes, I heard theſe Words from the Priſoner at the Bar, That if the King would not plead, his Charge might be taken pro Confeſſo, and that the Court might proceed according to Juſtice.

Cook. One Queſtion more, Whether he often heard me ſpeak thoſe Words, that it might be taken pro Confeſſo, and to proceed according to Juſtice?

Mr. Hern. You deſired he might be held to his Plea, Confeſſion or Denial, that he might not be ſuffered to uſe any Words to the Juriſdiction of the Court.

Cook. Whether he heard the Charge read?

Hern. I did not hear the Charge read, I was not there the Firſt Day. I heard you confeſs you had exhibited a Charge of High-Treaſon againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, which was then the King's Majeſty.

Cook. Whether I did not in the Charge conclude, that all Proceedings might be according to Juſtice?

Court. Read the Title and laſt Article of that Charge, which was accordingly read, and follows in hæc Verba.

The Title of the Charge.

The Charge of the Commons of England againſt Charles Stewart, KING of England, of High-Treaſon, and other Crimes exhibited to the High-Court of Juſtice.

The

The Laſt Clauſe in the Charge.

And the ſaid John Cook by Proteſtation (ſaving on the behalf of the People of England, the Liberty of exhibiting at any Time hereafter any other Charge againſt the ſaid Charles Stewart, and alſo of replying to the Anſwers which the ſaid Charles Stewart ſhall make to the Premiſes, or any of them, or any other Charge that ſhall be ſo exhibited, (doth for the ſaid Treaſons and Crimes on the Behalf of the ſaid People of England Impeach the ſaid Charles Stewart as a Tyrant, Traitor, Murderer, Publick and Implacable Enemy to the Commonwealth of England, and prayeth that the ſaid Charles Stewart, King of England, may be put to anſwer all and every the Premiſes; that ſuch Proceedings, Examinations, Trials, Sentences, and Judgment, may be hereupon had as ſhall be agreeable to Juſtice.

Court. Mr. Cook, will you have any Witneſſes examined touching the Queſtion you laſt asked?

Cook. No, be pleaſed to go on.

Mr. Baker Sworn.

Mr. Baker. My Lords and Gentlemen of the Jury, I was at the High-Court of Juſtice, as they called it, the Firſt, Second, and Third Days, not to trouble you with the Proceedings of Bradſhaw, I will tell you what I obſerved of this Gentleman; I have the Notes that I took there, and pray that I may read them to help my Memory, which was granted, and then proceeded in this Manner; That Day, my Lord, Mr. Cook told the Court, that he charged the Priſoner at the Bar (meaning the KING) with Treaſon and High Miſdemeanours, and deſired that the Charge might be read; the Charge was this, That he had upheld a Tyrannical Government, &c. and for that Cauſe was adjudged to be a Tyrant, &c. and did then preſs that the Priſoner might give an Anſwer to that, and that very earneſtly. The Second Day, my Lord, he told the Court that he did the laſt Day exhibit a Charge of High-Treaſon againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, (meaning the King,) and that he did deſire he might make Anſwer to it; and he told them alſo, that inſtead of making an Anſwer to the Court, the King had delayed the Court, but deſired the King might make a poſitive Anſwer, or otherwiſe that it might be taken pro Confeſſo. The Third Day, my Lord, he came and told the Court as before, that the King had delayed them, and then he Charged him with the Higheſt Treaſons and Crimes that ever were acted upon the Theatre of England, and then preſſed that Judgment might be given againſt him; and another Expreſſion was, that it was not ſo much he, but the Innocent and Precious Blood that was ſhed, that did cry for Judgment againſt the Priſoner at the Bar: This, my Lord, is the Subſtance; there were other Paſſages.

Cook. Whether before this Time he had not heard ſomething of an Act or Order Proclaimed at Weſtminſter? Whether there was any other Word in Effect uſed in that Charge more than in the Proclamation?

Mr. Baker. I did hear of the Proclamation and Charge, and the Subſtance of it, I have given an Account of it, and I did hear you preſs upon it very much; the Proclamation, I heard of it, that it was made for the Summoning of the Court, but I did not hear the Proclamation made.

Cook. That that was called the Act of the Commons for Trying of the King.

Mr. Baker. I did hear of the Act, but did not take Notice of it.

Mr. George Maſterſon Sworn.

Council. Mr. Maſterſon, pray inform my Lords and the Jury what you know touching the Carriage of the Priſoner at the Bar at the Trial of his late Majeſty.

Mr. Maſterſon. My Lords, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I was preſent in that they called the High Court of Juſtice upon the 22d, 23d, and 27th Days of January, in the Year 1648, I ſhall wave thoſe Circumſtances which you have heard, and many of which I well remember, and what I heard likewiſe between the King, who was then a Priſoner, and the then Preſident Bradſhaw; but concerning the Priſoner at the Bar, this I very well remember, that upon Monday I heard him ſay he had exhibited a Charge of High-Treaſon againſt the Priſoner, (then the King,) and demanded now that he might plead to his Charge; I do very well remember that after ſome Paſſages between the King and the Court, the Priſoner at the Bar deſired the King might plead to his Charge, or elſe it might be taken pro Confeſſo: I remember upon the laſt Day, the Day of that Fatal Sentence, I heard the Priſoner at the Bar demand in the Name of the Commons Aſſembled in Parliament, and all the good People of England, Judgment upon the Priſoner at the Bar, pointing to the King; this is all.

Mr. Burden Sworn.

Council. Do you know who did examine the Witneſſes againſt the King? And were you examined? And by whom?

Burden. By Judge Cook, for ſo he was called in Ireland.

Council. Did he examine you as a Witneſs againſt the King? Did he give you an Oath?

Burden. Yes, my Lord, and many others.

Cook. This is a New Thing, I never heard of this before; Where was it that I examined him? I had no Power.

Council. No, we know that, but you were Active.

Court. Where was it?

Cook. Whether there were not any others with me in the Room? And where was it?

Burden. It was at Weſtminſter-Hall, within the High Court of Juſtice.

Cook. Who was there beſides me?

Burden. I cannot tell; Axtel, he was there, and I am ſure Cook was there.

Council. Mr. Burden, pray tell my Lords and the Jury what Queſtions you were examined upon, and what they tended to.

Burden. He examined me, and gave me my Oath, there was Eight or Nine of us, we had been in the King's Army in former Times; this Gentleman (Colonel Axtel brought us in, Commanded us out of our Company, I was in his Company, and this Gentleman) himſelf gave us our Oaths, he asked us where we ſaw the King in Action? I did reply to him, and told him, I ſaw him in the Field with his Army; he asked me many other Queſtions that I could not tell him, he asked me, whether I did ſee the King at Nottingham ſet up his Standard? And I was never at Nottingham in my Life; theſe were the Queſtions.

Mr. Starkey Sworn.

Court. Pray inform my Lords and Gentlemen of the Jury what paſſed between you and the Priſoner at the Bar concerning the Trial of his late Majeſty.

Mr. Starkey. My Lords, this Gentleman, now Priſoner, and myſelf, have been acquainted a great while, being of the ſame Society of Grays Inn; and and truly, my Lord, I confeſs I owe all my Knowledge in the Laws to that Gentleman; when I came firſt he was accus'd for Debt, and was pleaſed to do me, and ſeveral other Gentlemen, now and then the Favour to reaſon the Law with us, and aſſiſt us in the Beginning of the Long Parliament; that is, to give you an Account of his being indebted, he did deſire I would do my Endeavour to get his Protection. Near the Time of the King's Trial there was a Gentleman with myſelf, one Samuel Palmer of Grays-Inn, which frequented his Company, had ſeveral Nights the Opportunity of underſtanding the Affairs at Weſtminſter, and truly he himſelf did ſeem to us to count that a very ridiculous Council. I remember what he ſaid one Night, I think they are all Mad, which was within Two or Three Days before the King's Trial; and inſtanced how a Fellow cried out to the Lord Fairfax, that if he did not conſent to the Proceedings he would kill Chriſt and him. After that I did not think he did go to this Council for Employment, but out of Curioſity: When the King came to Trial we heard that Mr. Cook was the Perſon that was Solicitor, and acted that Part that you have heard of; and that during that Trial, whether the Second or Third Day, I cannot ſay that certainly, Mr. Cook came to Grays-Inn that Evening about Ten or Eleven of the Clock at Night, only upon ſome particular Occaſion, as he ſaid; I being walking in the Court in the Walk before my Chamber with another Gentleman, I did ſee him paſs out of a Houſe to go back again; I thought it was he, called after him; Mr. Cook; ſaid I, upon that he turned back and met me; I took him by the Hand, ſaid I, I hear you are up to the Ears in this Buſineſs, no, ſaith he, I am ſerving the People; truly, ſaid I, I believe there's a Thouſand to One will not give you Thanks; ſaid I, I hear you Charge the King for the Levying War againſt the Parliament, how can you rationally do this, when you have pull'd out the Parliament to make Way to his Tryal? He anſwered me, you will ſee ſtrange Things, and you muſt wait upon God. I did ask him, but firſt he ſaid this of himſelf, ſaid he, he was as Gracious and Wiſe a Prince as any was in the World; which made me reflect upon him again, and asked how he could preſs thoſe Things as I have heard? What Anſwer he made to that I cannot tell, I did by the Way inquire what he thought concerning the King, whether he muſt ſuffer or no? He told me he muſt die, and Monarchy muſt die with him.

Cook. Whether was this after or before the Sentence?

Mr. Starkey. It was before the Sentence; for it was either the Second or Third Trial; or rather in ſome interim of Time before the Sentence; for there was an Adjournment for a Day or Two; but I am ſure it was before the Sentence.

Court. Mr. Cook, they have concluded their Evidence, plead for yourſelf what you think fitting.

Cook. My Lord, I have been a Priſoner Three Months, I humbly deſire to acknowledge His Majeſties and his Councils Favour, that I was not put into a Jeremy's Priſon, but in the Tower, and not in Irons; I give your Lordſhips humble Thanks for that; and truly, conſidering the Nature of the Charge, had it been in ſome other Kingdom they would have ſerved us as John Baptiſt in Priſon; I thank you that I have a fair Tryal with the Judges of the Law, who are upon their Oaths to do equal Right and Juſtice between our Sovereign Lord the King, and every Priſoner, concerning Matters of Life and Death; and likewiſe thoſe Noble Lords, that though they are not put upon their Oaths, but upon their Honour, if they know any Law to preſerve my Life I truſt they will rather ſave than deſtroy. My Lords, I do therefore ſay as Paul ſaid, my Plea is much of that Nature, againſt the Law, and againſt Cæſar, I hope I have not offended at all, and ſo I have pleaded Not Guilty. The Learned Council have examined ſeveral Witneſſes againſt me; and I humbly conceive that the Matter will reſt in a very narrow Compaſs; the Subſtance of the Charge (ſo far as my Memory will ſerve) doth reſt in theſe Three Things, the other being but Matter of Form. That I, with others, ſhould Propound, Conſult, Contrive and Imagine the Death of the late King. Secondly, That to the perfecting and bringing about this wicked and horrid Conſpiracy, that I, with others, did aſſume a Power and Authority, (as I remember,) Power I am ſure, then to Kill and Murther the King; and Thirdly, That there was a Perſon unknown that did cut off the King's Head, and that we were abetting, aiding, aſſiſting, countenancing, and procuring the Perſon, (or Words to that Effect,) againſt the Form of the Statutes, and ſo forth. I have Twelve poor Words to offer for myſelf in this Buſineſs, wherein if I do not Anſwer every Thing that hath been particularly objected, I hope you will give me leave afterwards to offer it. Firſt, I humbly propound this, that if it was not made appear to your Lordſhips that I did ever propound, conſult, adviſe, contrive, attempt, or any way plot or counſel the Death of his Majeſty, then I hope I cannot be found Guilty within the Statute of 25 Edward the Third; for the Naked Truth Mr. Nutley hath in a great Part ſpoke to; I was appointed upon the Tenth of January, 1648, for to give my Advice concerning a Charge, there having been upon the Ninth a Proclamation for the Tryal; and upon the Tenth Mr. Steel, Dr. Doriſlaus, and Mr. Ask, and myſelf, were appointed, and ordered to be of Council to draw up a Charge; here I have the Order atteſted by Mr. Jeſſop, and pray it may be read.

Court. They do admit the Thing that you were ſo aſſigned.

Cook. Then I humbly conceive that that cannot be ſaid to be done maliciouſly, or adviſedly, or with any wicked Intention in me, which I was required and commanded to do; acting only within my Sphere and Element as a Counſellor, and no otherwiſe. The next Thing is this, my Lord, that by Law Words will not amount unto Treaſon; we uſually ſay, that Words may declare an Heretick, but not a Traytor; there were ſome Statutes formerly 1 Edw. 6. where Words are made Treaſon, but they are all repealed by 1 Mariæ, that nothing ſhall be Treaſon but what is expreſſed in 25 Edw. 3 this Objection will ſeem to lye, that theſe were Words put in Writing, and that I humbly conceive to be the greateſt Matter objected; to which I anſwer, 1. Whether there be any full, certain, clear Proof, that that is my Hand to the Charge, I muſt leave to you; Two or Three Witneſſes ſay they believe it, and that it is like my Hand; that I leave to you if that appear; yet (my Lord) that that is put in Writing as done by another that is the Dictator, and does dictate unto me; I humbly conceive, that for any Man to write Words, which in their own Nature may be Treaſonable, if he doth but write them by the Command of another, by ſpeaking them after another, taking them upon rebound, that is not Treaſon, becauſe they do not diſcover a traiterous Heart; thoſe Words of compaſſing the Death of the King in the 25 Edw. 3. they are ſecret Imaginations in the Heart,

Heart, and they must be manifest by some Overt-act; that which was dictated (my Lord) unto me, that I had expressly prescribed me, what I should say, what Words I should say. That I did not invent any Thing of mine own Head, of my own Conceit, and therefore cannot properly be said to be malicious. The next Thing that I crave Leave to offer is this, that the pure and plain demanding and praying of Justice, tho' Injustice be done upon it, cannot possibly be called Treason within the Statute, then I hope nothing that has been said against me will amount to Treason: For the Words in the Natural, Grammatical, Plain, Genuine, and Legal Sence, will bear no other Construction, as I humbly conceive, but (that whereas those Gentlemen had his Majesty then in their Power a Prisoner) that it was prayed by me that they would do him Justice; I do hope that it will appear that I did give bonum & fidele Consilium. It will appear, I hope, that some would have had a very voluminous and long Charge; that I was utterly against it, as conceiving that it was not fit and requisite that any Thing should be put in; at least I durst not invent one Word myself, but what was expressed in the Act for Tryal; if your Lordships will not admit it an Act, you will an Order, and so it will bear me forth, at least to excuse me from Treason, because I kept myself to the Words; whereas in that it was said, that they should proceed according to the Merits of the Cause, I was against that, that I did not understand that; but according to Justice, and that is but according to Law, because the Law is the Rule of Justice. I do humbly hope, (my Lord,) that if by Law, when Words may be taken in a double Sence, they shall always have the more favourable Interpretation, much more when the Words in the legal Sense will bear it; when it is prayed they will proceed according to Justice, I hope it will not be inferred there was any Intention of doing Injustice, when Justice was required. And therefore, (my Lord,) the next Word that I would offer is this, if, my Lord, in all Tragedies which are, as we call them, judicially or colourably, there are but these Four Actors, Accusers or Witnesses, the Jury, Judges, and Executioner; if I be none of these I cannot be Guilty of Treason. I hope I may safely say according to Law, that I had not a Hand at all in his Majesties Death. My Lord, the Court and Council, it is very true, they do aim at the same Thing; the Council Requirendo Justitiam; the other Exequendo Justitiam, the End being the same, to have Justice. If when Justice be demanded, and Injustice be done, what is that to the Council? We read in the 19th of John concerning Pilate, Knowest thou not (speaking to Christ) that I have power to crucifie thee, and have power to release thee? My Lord, I humbly answer this to that which seems to be the most material part in the Indictment, That we did assume a Power; my Lords, I did not assume a Power, I hope it will not be said that the Council had any Power, Eloquentia in the Council, Judicium in the Judges, and Veritas in the Witnesses. 25th of Acts, Tertullus, that Eloquent Orator, accused Paul; Paul answered for himself, and it is said, Festus being willing to do the Jews a courtesie, he left Paul bound; it was not the Council that left him bound. His Majesty was never a Prisoner to me, and I never laid any Hands upon him; if any Witnesses have spoke of any Irreverence, I must appeal to God in that I did not in the least manner carry my self undutifully to his Majesty, though One of the Witnesses was pleased to say that I said these Words, That there is a Charge against the Prisoner at the Bar; it was not said the Prisoner at the Bar, there was not One Disrespective Word from me. There is a Case in the Third Institutes of my Lord Coke', it is to this purpose, that one wilfully and knowingly forswore himself; the Case was put to inveigle the Court; and though the Court does Injustice upon a false Oath, it is not Injustice at all in the Witness, it is Perjury in him; if there can be no Injustice in a Witness, much less a Counsellor can be said to have his Hand in the Death of any, because he has no Power at all; this must needs follow, that if it shall be conceived to be Treason for a Counsellor to plead against his Majesty, then it will be Felony to plead against any Man that is condemned unjustly for Felony. The Counsellor is to make the best of his Clients Cause, then to leave it to the Court; it is said, I should demand Judgment, I do not remember that, I leave it to you, but still to demand Justice. Counsellors they do engage in Business before they do rightly understand the true Matter of the Fact; it is part of a Serjeants Oath, that so soon as he does discover the Falsity of the Cause, he should forsake the Cause. My Lord, by what Mr. Nutley hath said it appears, and I have many Witnesses in the Countrey, Three or Four in Leicestershire, would have spoken full to this, that (my Lord) there was not before the Sentence of the King (to the best of my Knowledge) a Word spoken by any that they did intend to put him to Death; I say to my Knowledge; and my Lord, when Judgment is demanded is it not Twofold, of Acquittal and Condemnation? If those that then were entrusted with the Power of Judicature, if they did not know any Law to proceed by to take away his Majesty, then I demanding their Judgment, it doth not appear to be my Judgment; and I refer it to the Learned Council, that Council many Times at the Assizes and other Courts have been sorry that the Verdict hath been given for their Clients, when they have known the Right lay on the other Side, and so I might in this. The next Thing I humbly offer, is, that if in Right Reason, considering the Condition his Majesty was then in, the advising to draw up the Charge was rather to be looked upon as a Matter of Service than Disservice, then it cannot be called Treason; it is very true, my Lord, that a very little small Overt-Act will amount to a Treason; and my Lord, had this been in Times of Peace, and had his Majesty been no Prisoner, (now he was under the Power of an Army,) this had been great Treason; but he being a Prisoner, not by my Means, (for I was no Sword-man,) what can a Man that knows himself Innocent, being a Prisoner, desire more than a speedy Trial? So that making the Trial more Speedy cannot be said to be done Traiterously. A Trial doth follow Imprisonment as naturally and necessarily as the Shadow doth the Body. If any Man shall desire and be instrumental in bringing him to a Trial which might acquit, rather than condemn him, and so humbly pray Proceedings according to Justice, this will have, I hope, a better Name than Treason. I am much beholding to His Majesty and this Honourable Parliament for the Penning of the Act of Indempnity, which I hope my Lord, you will give me leave to take Notice of.

Court. Open as much as you will of it.

Cook. My Lords, the Words that I would make use of are in the Beginning, Treason, Murder, and other Felonies that are spoken of, they are said to be counselled, commanded, acted or done; in the Preamble, which is as the Key to open the Mind and Meaning of the Law-makers, it is said, that all Persons shall be pardoned for all, excepting such as shall be named, and in such manner as they shall be excepted, and then it comes, provided that this Act shall not not extend to Pardon ſuch and ſuch Perſons, and by Name I am one; and it is ſaid, all which Perſons, for their execrable Treaſon, in Sentencing to Death, or Signing the Inſtrument for the horrid Murther, or being Inſtrumental in taking away the Precious Life of our late Sovereign Lord, Charles the Firſt, of Glorious Memory, are left to be proceeded againſt as Traytors to His late Majeſty, according to the Laws of England, and are out of the ſaid Act wholly excepted and foreprized. There is not any Thing offered againſt me upon the Two Firſt great Words, which are Sentencing and Signing; that which I have to do to endeavour to clear myſelf is this, being Inſtrumental in taking away the Life of his ſaid Majeſty; firſt, I humbly offer this to the Juries Conſideration, That where the Parliament doth begin to fix the Treaſonable Part, there, I hope, and no otherwiſe, this Honourable Court will fix it: If it had been the Intention that Counſellors, Adviſers, and ſuch as ſpoke their Minds ſometimes in the Buſineſs, (you know that was Epidemical,) many Words were ſpoken which cannot be juſtified; whether naturally it would not have followed, that all ſuch Perſons for their Counſelling, Adviſing, or being Inſtrumental, are left to be proceeded againſt as Traytors, I hope you will take that into Conſideration; concerning the Words, or being Inſtrumental, obſerve it is not ſaid, or being any otherways Inſtrumental; but Sentencing, Signing, or being Inſtrumental; if therefore the Word Inſtrumental be not of a general comprehenſive Nature, then all this Evidence which hath been given in againſt me, being before the Sentencing and Signing, will fall to the Ground; that this is the Legal, Genuine and Grammatical Senſe, and cannot be any otherwiſe than as Particular, as if it were the Sentencer, Signer, and Executioner; which if it had been ſo nothing of the Evidence would have reached me. My Argument is this, ſuch a Uſe is to be made of an Act of Parliament, that no Word may be fruſtrate and inſignificant; but if this Interpretation ſhall be put upon it, Sentencing, Signing, or being any Way Inſtrumental, then the Words Sentencing and Signing need not have been. If Inſtrumental will carry the Words Sentencing and Signing, then theſe Words will carry no Force at all; eſpecially, my Lord, when there is no need of any Retroſpect at all; if it be ſo, I know not how far it may look back; there is no Neceſſity of putting any comprehenſive Generality upon this Word Inſtrumental, but that the plain natural Senſe will be this, that thoſe that did Sentence and Sign, and thoſe that were Inſtrumental in taking away his Life, that is, thoſe that did Abet and Comfort that Perſon unknown, or Juſtifie, or Countenance him, which is after the Sentencing, and not before, in the Legal Senſe. Next I conceive, that a Counſellor cannot be ſaid to do any Thing vi & armis.

It is ſaid, that by Force and Arms I did Abet, &c. it is Rhetorical to ſay that Words may be as Swords, but Legal it is not, unleſs there be ſomething vi & armis; in the Grammatical Senſe Inſtrumental in taking away the King's Life; it is not ſaid Inſtrumental in order to take away the King's Life, or Inſtrumental in adviſing to take away the King's Life, but Inſtrumental in taking away the King's Life. My Lord, the next Thing is, that there cannot be any Thing to be ſaid to be done by me, firſt not falſo, becauſe in that Senſe it muſt have the Operation of Mendacity; that there muſt be a Lie told in it; I did nothing but what I was required to do, to ſet down ſuch and ſuch Words, I did not invent nor contrive them, I heard nothing of it till the 10th Day of January. My Lord, for malitioſe, that I did not any Thing maliciouſly, I hope it will appear in this; what I then ſpoke it was for my Fee; it may be called avaritia, but not malitia, for the Law will imply a Malice; but when there is no other expreſs Ground or Reaſon why the Thing was done, but here was an expreſs Ground to ſpeak for my Fee, I hope the Jury will take that into Conſideration. Then Secondly, I was not Judicial in the Caſe, I was not Magiſterial as any Officer, but Miniſterial. As touching examining of Witneſſes, it is a great Miſtake, the Court had Power to give an Oath; I might be there, but I had no Power to give an Oath, but whether I might ask any Queſtion, I do not remember, but that I ſhould give an Oath, that is a Falſity; then, my Lord, for Proditorie, I hope there is nothing at all that appears to the Jury; ſo that there was no Malice nor Traiterous Intention in the Thing. There are ſome Matters of Law which I deſire your Lordſhips will give me Leave to ſpeak to, and that your Lordſhips will be of Council with me. I would offer ſomething concerning his Majeſties Gracious Declaration from Breda to the Parliament; I (was then in Ireland,) I did put in a Petition to the Honourable Commiſſioners before any Exception was, that I might have the Benefit of that Declaration; I did lay hold of it: My Lords, there are Two Things in that Declaration that I would offer. His Majeſty ſaith, that for the reſtoring of the King's Peers and People of the Kingdom to their juſt Rights and Liberties, he will grant a Free and General Pardon to all, excepting ſuch as ſhall be by Parliament excepted; and within Three or Four Lines after it is ſaid a Free Parliament; though I do not in the leaſt queſtion the Legality of this Parliament, yet, my Lords, to this particular Purpoſe, whether the Parliament that was to except ought not to be a Parliament that was to be called according to his Majeſties Writ, according to the Laws of the Kingdom, I humbly conceive it will bear that, though his Majeſty is pleas'd to confirm this, yet it is not ſuch a Parliament that was to except, that I offer to your Lordſhips. My Lords, that that I would humbly make Bold to put for myſelf, becauſe it is the Priviledge of one in my Condition, is this, There is, my Lords, many Lords, the Earl of Eſſex, the Earl of Southampton, and others, that were adjudged in the 44 of Eliz. 3. Inſtitutes, they did Traiterouſly and Maliciouſly conſpire to take her Majeſty Priſoner, and to remove her Counſellors from her, which were found Guilty, and ſuffered accordingly; the Reaſon is, That becauſe thereby if it had been done, they had deſpoiled her Majeſty of her Regal Government; and the Caſe is Inſtant in Philip, who was a Nominative King, that it was not Treaſon to have attempted any Thing againſt him. My Lords, his Majeſty being a Priſoner without any Hand of mine, I giving Advice according to what was dictated to me to bring him to that Trial, whereby he might have been Acquitted, and ſo ſet at Liberty, I hope that will not be ſaid as Inſtrumental.

My Lords, I humbly ſhall offer but Two Words, 1. To the Honourable Court, then to the Jury, the Words 25 of E. 3. and ſo the Expoſition of the Learned Judges have been from Time to Time, that there ſhall be no Semblable Treaſons made by Preſumptions or Strains of Wit, but thoſe Treaſons ſpecified there: It is ſaid if a Huſband do kill his Wife, or a Wife kill her Husband, a Maſter ſhould kill his Servant, or the Servant ſhould kill his Maſter, that that ſhall be petty Treaſon; a Child did kill his Father, though that was looked upon as a great Sin, yet the Judges do not preſume that to be Treaſon, becauſe it was not in the very Words; this being an extraordinary Caſe, to write a Thing after another doth not appear that there was a Malicious Heart in him that did write. There hath been the Act of Parliament that doth call these Courts Tyrannical and Unlawful Courts; but, my Lords, a Tyrannical and Unlawful Court is a Court de facto, though not de jure; If a Court be not a Just and Lawful Court, it cannot be said but that it is a Court: We say a Thief is a True Man, though Morally he is not so; this was a Court, Officers attending on them; some said they had Authority; and therefore for one to come and act within his Sphere, not to act out of that, nor doing any Thing but what he had a Prescript Form appointed him, I hope that will not be found to be within the Letter of the Law; I have been told, (how true I cannot tell) that there have been some Votes in the Honourable Parliament, that those that did only counsel or advise, those were not to be looked upon as Traitors; I have been told so, that those that did only speak as Council for their Fee, who were not the Contrivers of it, the Parliament did not intend they should be left to be proceeded against.

Court. That Letter that was sent from the Commons to the King at Breda, they speak first of the Violation that was put upon the Parliament, and of the base horrid Murther of his late Majesty. It is said that the Parliament (I conceive they meant of the remaining Part) they were not guilty, but some few ambitious, bloody, guilty Persons, who contrived the same, and others misled by them.

Cook. The other Matter of Law is this, I say that I do hope that though that Order, which I was about to produce concerning my acting, that if it may not in a Legal Sense any way be said to be an Act of the Parliament and Commons, yet it may be said to be such an Order to bear out those that did Act according to it, because there was then no Authority de facto, otherwise it were not lawful for any Man to excercise his Profession during such a Power. I hope Counsellors might then exercise their Profession as well as others. My Lord, though I should suffer my self in this Case, I should be loth the Honourable Profession of the Law should. I think I was in my Sphere, acting as a Counsellor. Now Gentlemen of the Jury, that which I have to say to you is an Evidence concerning Matter of Life; it must be so clear that every one that hears it may understand it. It is called an Evidence because it is evident; it is one Reason why Prisoners for their Lives are not allowed Council for Matter of Fact, because the Evidence is, and ought to be, so clear and plain that every one should be satisfied, both Jury and Standers by; and it is a proper Word to say the Prisoner is convicted, that is as much as his Mouth is stopped; and therefore I say, truly as I hope I may speak it to you without Offence, as Jeremy in another Case, when some of the People would have had them put him to Death, As for me, behold I am in your Hand, do with me as seemeth good and meet unto you, Jer. 26. ver. 14, 15. saith he, But know ye for certain, that if ye put me to Death ye shall surely bring innocent Blood upon your selves. I hope you will not willingly be guilty of any such Thing; I must leave it to your Consciences, whether you believe that I had an Hand in the King's Death, when I did write but only that which others did dictate unto me, and when I spoke only for my Fee; and this I would be bold to say, though the Argument is not so directly confessed, that Humane Justice, (I do first say as this my Principle and Opinion is,) that as every Man ought to pay his moral Debts, so all political Debts; there is a Debt due to Humane Justice, so political, if the Lord should have suffered me to have been Drunk, and killed a Man, for which I ought to have died, instead of speaking for my self, I would have rather intreated the Jury to have found me Guilty, I think these Things ought to be answered political Debts; when I was in Ireland, and had Opportunity of going away, if I thought I had been Guilty I might have done it; my Name is put into His Majesties Proclamation. It is true, I was a Prisoner Three or Four Months before, so that I could not render my self, to what End should that Proclamation mention my Name? It was said I obscured my self, but I did not; Humane Justice doth never punish so much for Expiation as for Prevention; the Judgments of the Learned Aquinas, Grotius, and Amesius, and many others, that if a Man doth kill a Man, commit any Thing worthy of Death, though he doth repent never so much, yet that others may be deterred from committing such Acts, the Magistrate is bound to put him to Death. But where there is not such a Thing there it is different; though it is said the Land is defiled, that is, where there is Danger that the like may be committed again; now all Things are settled, there is no Danger at all; now there can never come such a Case as this again; I say, my Lord, what I acted I did as a Counsellor, I had no malicious Intention in it. Mr. Nutley bare Testimony so far, that I told him there was not Intention of putting his Majesty to Death; I only did say, that I desired them to do Justice; and I hope what was done was their Act, not mine, and so I leave my self to your Lordships.

Court. Silence Commanded.

Mr. Solicitor General. My Lords, this Gentleman who is the Prisoner at the Bar requires such an Evidence of the Fact as may be evident, he saith so evident as may be as clear as the Sun; I think that Evidence is not to seek; but if he must never be convicted till he be so far convinced as to be speechless, I believe we may stay long enough; nevertheless if he be willing (as he saith he is) to pay his Debts to political Justice, we shall quickly give him the total Sum. That which he hath said hath been like a Lawyer, the best that his Case will bear, but withal, it is a great Aggravation to his Crime, that he that knew the Law so well, should so much transgress it. He began, Words do not make Treason; he mistakes, his Charge is not for Words, Gentlemen, his Charge is for Compassing and Imagining the Death of the King, and the Evidence of that Charge is meeting in that Assembly, and the Part that he bore in that Assembly. And yet, my Lords, he will be much mistaken too, (under Favour, and with Submission to your Lordships Judgment, and those that hear him,) if they think that in all Cases it is a general Rule that Words are no Treason; for when a Man shall proceed to declare the Imagination of his Heart, as to exhort and perswade Men to effect that wicked thing, the killing of the King, certainly there cannot be a greater Overt-Act than these Words, nor a clearer Evidence of such an Imagination, for out of the abundance of the Heart the Mouth speaks. My Lord, to say that the demanding of Justice is not Treason, though Injustice do follow, is a very weak Gloss upon a wicked Action. The Subject Matter was a Charge of High-Treason against the King, the Conclusion of the Charge was a Protestation, by which he saved to himself a Liberty to put in a new Charge, if that was not sufficient; upon the whole he desires, that the King, as a Traytor, may be brought to Justice. Judge ye now Gentlemen, upon the Nature of this Demand, whether this were such a Demand of Justice as might end in Acquittal; whether he that presses that this Charge may be taken pro Confesso, did mean that when the Court had recorded it they should Acquit him when they they had done. My Lords, to ſay there are Four Actors in this Caſe, the Witneſs or Accuſer, the Judge, the Jury and the Executioner, and that he is none of them, and therefore in this Caſe he cannot be a Traytor; ſtill, my Lord, that is to beg the Queſtion; for if he be one of them that did Aſſemble in the Place and were any Inſtrument of that Aſſembly, he hath thereby given an Evidence of an Overt-act of his wicked Heart; and when all is done this poor Gloſs amounts but to this, I am none of thoſe Four Ranks, that is, there were others worſe than my ſelf, and therefore I am none at all. My Lord, the Thing that he hath mainly inſiſted upon is the Act of Indempnity; my Lord, he doth obſerve that his Name is excepted in that Act; that he doth hope that it is ſo Penn'd, as by the Favour of the Parliament it may reach his Caſe; and he hath argued very much upon it, and he ſpeaks as if he did believe it himſelf. But ſurely there is no colour for that Interpretation, that he ſhould ſtep out of this Proviſo, by the very Act of Indempnity, that was made on purpoſe to bring him in by Name; the Words are, Provided that this Act, nor any Thing therein contained, ſhall extend to Pardon, or give any Benefit to John Cook, &c. all which Perſons, for their execrable Treaſons in Sentencing to Death, or Signing the Inſtrument for the Horrid Murder, or being Inſtrumental in taking away the Precious Life of our late Sovereign Lord King Charles the Firſt, of Glorious Memory, are left to be proceeded againſt as Traytors, &c. Firſt, my Lord, this general and clear Anſwer, I conceive, is to be given, that the Priſoner at the Bar being by Name excepted out of the Act of Indempnity, by the Proviſo mentioned in it, although the ſubſequent Lines that follow be the Reaſons why the Parliament do except; yet if it be within the very Words of the Exception, whether he be in the Reaſons that moved them to that Exception, is not material, if he could diſtinguiſh that he was not Inſtrumental in that Senſe, to which he labours to reſtrain this Proviſo, he can but ſay this, the Parliament was miſtaken in their Reaſon but not in their Concluſion; but he is directly within the Exception, and the Reaſon of it too, for the Word Inſtrumental goes as far as far can be, and he is properly and literally in the ſtrict Notion of the Word, an Inſtrument of the Death of the King: The King could never have been brought to Death, if not to the Bar; never had been Sentenced, if he had not been Impeached, that Impeachment could never have been taken pro Confeſſo, nor the Impeachment itſelf delivered, if he had not delivered the one, and preſſed the other: He that brought the Axe from the Tower was not more Inſtrumental than he; and beſides, a Lawyer, as he, of great Underſtanding, and of good Parts, he knows very well there are no Acceſſaries in Treaſon, but he that Acts any Part in ſo wicked a Conſpiracy, let him begin at what End he will, he ſtands reſponſible for the utmoſt Conſequence of it; and in Effect the very penning of this Proviſo is an expreſs Judgment of Parliament, that he was Inſtrumental, but that is not to be preſſed.

The next Thing he doth inſiſt upon is the Declaration of his Majeſty, that he ſent from Breda, which he ſaith he laid hold upon; here lyes the Weight of his Anſwer, The King writes his Letter to the Parliament now ſitting, that he doth purpoſe, for the quieting of the Hearts of Men that may be in doubt, to pardon all Perſons all Crimes of what Nature ſoever, either againſt himſelf or Royal Father, excepting thoſe which ſhall be by Act of Parliament excepted; and, my Lord, he doth ſay, and modeſtly preſſes, that he doth conceive the meaning of that is to pardon all Perſons what Crimes ſoever they have committed, except ſuch as by a Free Parliament ſhall be excepted; a Legal Parliament, called by the Writ of the King, which this Parliament is not. To that I give theſe Anſwers; Firſt, my Lord, I do ſay that this Letter of our Gracious Sovereign from Breda in itſelf undoubtedly is no Pardon in Law for Treaſon, that cannot be without the Broad-Seal. Next, a Pardon under the Great-Seal in ſuch a Form of Words as this is would not be a Pardon for Treaſon, for that muſt not be pardoned by Implication, but by poſitive Words; ſo in the Caſe of Sir Walter Raleigh, a Commiſſion directed to Our Well-beloved Subject would not pardon the Treaſon of which he was Condemned. In the next place, this Letter at the moſt is but a Pardon in Honour, which muſt always be taken according to the Meaning; and that the Kings Honour may be for ever Sacred, I ſay this Letter doth no Way help the Priſoner at the Bar.

Firſt, it is plain by the very Superſcription of this Letter in which the Declaration was incloſ'd, that it is directed to the Speaker of our Houſe of Commons in Parliament Aſſembled, which cannot poſſibly be expounded of any other Parliament than that which was then Sitting, to whoſe Speaker it was written.

Secondly, The Letter it ſelf ſays, we have left it to you to provide for Security and Indempnity; and again, if there be a Crying Sin for which the Nation may be involved in Infamy, we cannot doubt but you will be as ſolicitous to vindicate it as we can be. And then in this very Letter encloſeth that Declaration, upon the Penning of which the Priſoner ſo much relies: Now lay all together, and it is clear the Parliament, meant by the Declaration, muſt be the ſame Parliament which was meant by the Letter; and that was this very Parliament whom the King intended to truſt, both with Indempnity, and with the Vindication of his Father's Death, and to be the Diſpenſers both of Mercy and Juſtice in this particular. Another Thing is this, This very Parliament, as the Priſoner obſerves, they did go to the King according to his Gracious Letter, and in the Behalf of all the Good People of England, they did lay hold of the King's Mercy in his Letter and Declaration, and prayed that this Claim by their Speaker, in Behalf of all the reſt of the Commons of England, might be Effectual to all Purpoſes, and for all Perſons other than thoſe that ſhould be by themſelves afterward excepted, according to their Requeſts, His Majeſty accepts their Petition, and makes Proclamation, that his Pardon ſhould extend to all but ſuch as they ſhould except: What can be more clear and evident, than that this is the Parliament which the King did mean to be the very Parliament to which the Letter ſhould have Reference till the Act of Oblivion was paſſed again? The late Tranſactions of theſe Twelve Years paſt had involved ſo many Perſons, that we could ſcarce find a Man but he had need of Mercy; nay, this very Parliament to which this Letter was written had need of Indempnity; and is it probable in the Nature of the Thing, or can it be underſtood by any Man, that the King writing to this Parliament, and offering them Pardon and Indempnity, ſhould mean ſuch a Pardon and Indempnity as a future Parliament to be called by his own Writ, ſhould be willing to afford them? Whoſe Hearts would have been ſatisfied with ſo contingent a Security?

My

My Lords, upon the whole Matter, by what the King hath ſaid in this Letter, and by what the Parliament hath done in purſuance thereof, and by what the King hath proclaimed, it is to my Underſtanding as clear as the Noon-day, that the Honour of the King is not concern'd at all in the Exemption of the Priſoner at the Bar; and for the Caſes of my Lord of Eſſex and Southampton, which he hath cited, they make againſt him; they were condemned becauſe they endeavoured to impriſon the Queen, and to remove her Counſellors, of which very Fact the Priſoner is in Law Guilty too; and then the Caſe of King Philip, the Husband of Queen Mary, makes nothing for him neither, unleſs he will ſpeak out, and tell us plainly, that becauſe by a former Violence the King was made a Priſoner, he became but like a Titular King, as King Philip.

In the next Place he ſaith, my Caſe is out of the Law, I acted as a Counſellor in my own Particular for my Fee; it was Avaritia, but not Malitia, nor Falſo, Malitioſe, or Proditorie: But he muſt know, that no Man hath, or can have, a Lawful Calling to purſue the Life of his King; and the Law implies Malice; for Malitioſe and Proditorie are not only Words of Courſe, but of Truth too, in this Caſe, elſe it were as much as to ſay, that no Council can be Guilty of High-Treaſon, than which nothing can be more abſurd: My Lord, for that which he ſaid laſt, (for I muſt omit ſome Things, and give him leave to take the Advantage of it,) to ſtand upon it, that the Place was a Court, ſuch a one it was that he was not anſwerable for the Conſtitution of it; if it were not in a Legal Sence, it was ſuch an Order as might bear him out, that is, with Modeſty and good Manners to juſtifie High-Treaſon; it is not with ſuch Inſolency as ſome others before him did it, but it amounts to that, That an Order of a few Perſons that firſt made themſelves a Parliament, and then made a Court of Juſtice, had Officers, and met together, and perfected ſo great a Treaſon; I ſay, that this Order to bear him out is impoſſible. He that is a Lawyer, he muſt account to the Laws for what he hath done; if the Authority were not Lawful, he cannot but know that this which he calls the Parliament was ſo far from a Legal Authority, that it was one Part of the Treaſon that he did aſſiſt ſuch an Aſſembly.

Gentlemen of the Jury, this is your own Caſe, here is a Charge that is exhibited by the Priſoner at the Bar, as he ſaith, in the Name of all the People of England. Look to it, for you are ſome of them if you own it; then it may be true what he hath ſaid; but I hope you meet here to tell this Nation, and all the World, that the People of England had no Hand in that Charge; do but conſider how that this Priſoner at the Bar had hunted the Life of the King, how he did fiſh out and examine Evidence, whether the King ſet up his Standard at Nottingham, was at ſuch a Place, and ſuch a Place; to what End is all this, but with Deſign of Blood? Were theſe Things to be produced againſt the King, and then Judgment to be demanded that he may be ſaved? Is it not plainly proved to you by Witneſſes, how he did exhibit the Charge, preſs it, aggravate it, deſired it might be taken pro Confeſſo, was afflicted with the Delays, how angry he was when he was interrupted? Is it not proved to you, that he was at firſt againſt the Thing, and ſaid, It was a baſe Buſineſs? When he was engaged in it ſaid, that he was a Servant of the People of this Kingdom? What doth he do at laſt when the Thing had gone far? He ſpeaks that which is the only Truth which I have heard yet from him, He muſt die, and Monarchy then muſt periſh with him; from which Event, Good Lord deliver us.

Sir Edward Turner. My Lord, the Subſtance of the Defence that the Priſoner hath made at the Bar, with much Skill and Cunning, may be referred to Two Heads. The Firſt to the Statute of the 25th of Edward the 3d, the Second to the late Act of Oblivion: For the Firſt, my Lord, he ſaith, that his Fact is not comprized within that Statute; ſaith he, I did never Conſpire or Imagine the Death of the King; nor did believe that would be a Conſequent of their Actings. It was expreſly proved that himſelf did ſay that the King muſt Die, and Monarchy with him; but, Gentlemen, though he had ſaid true, that it had not been proved, or that he did not believe that would be a Conſequent, yet, my Lord, I muſt tell you, that every Step of this Tragedy was Treaſon; the Summoning themſelves, that was Treaſon; every Proceeding upon that was Treaſon; the Summoning of their Meetings in the Painted Chamber, Coming into Weſtminſter-Hall, every Perſon as Inſtrumental, thoſe that came to act the leaſt Part in that Tragedy, were every one Guilty of Treaſon; what, ſaith he, I acted as a Counſellor for my Fee: It was that Fee that Judas had the 30 Pieces of Silver, that made him hang himſelf. He goes further, and tells you, there muſt be no Semblable Treaſons, this is clear; the Conſpiring and Imagining the Death of the King, that's the Treaſon that is mentioned in the Act; Treaſon by the Common Law; though this be not named the killing of the King; yet all theſe Proceedings are Demonſtrations to you there was a Secret Imagination to kill him. Then to the Act of Oblivion his Argument is, That becauſe the Act ſaith, that if they had Sentenced, Signed, or been Inſtrumental in the Death of the King, that they ſhould be excepted; but it is not ſaid, or otherwiſe Inſtrumental; that this therefore ſhould refer to ſubſequent, not precedent Acts. that's a ſtrange Expoſition; take it Grammatically it hath the moſt large Conſtruction, Inſtrumental, more large than if they had ſaid or otherwiſe, for it doth comprehend every Thing: There having been ſo full an Anſwer already, I will be ſhort; I will not meddle with his Civil Debts, but with his Political; if a Man kill another, though he do repent, the Magiſtrate muſt do Juſtice in Terrorem. Though he doth repent, (I hope in God he doth ſo,) the Magiſtrates, your Lordſhips, muſt do Juſtice in Terrorem; I deſire that Juſtice may be done upon that Man. He ſaid it was no Treaſon to demand Juſtice againſt the King, becauſe he did but demand it; I hope he will think it no Unkindneſs in me to deſire Judgment againſt him, becauſe it is Juſt.

Mr. Wadham Windham. As I underſtand the Priſoner at the Bar, the chief Argument which he ſhelters himſelf under was his Profeſſion, which gives a Blaſt to all of us of the Long Robe; I will not mince his Arguments; ſaith he, here was a Court, I was appointed Sollicitor; and ſaith he, for Men to practiſe before thoſe that have not a proper Judicature, it is not Felony, Murther, or Treaſon, (I would not willingly mince his Argument,) and that I was appointed, and the Words dictated to me; and a Counſellor carrying himſelf within the compaſs of his Profeſſion is not Anſwerable; but if he will exceed his Bounds, his Profeſſion is ſo far from ſheltering him, that, as it has been opened, it is very much an Aggravation; it is the Duty of a Counſellor to give Counſel; if a Man ſhall come to me and ask Counſel, and I ſhall counſel him to kill a Man, am not I acceſſary to that Murder? Words by his Argument will not amount to Treaſon; if the Fact follows I am as Guilty as if I did the Fact; in Point of Treaſon it is all one as if I had done that very Act. If Mr. Cook did adviſe that Act, or was Inſtrumental, he is as much a Traytor as the Man in the Frock that did the Execution; for his Profeſſion, truly, my Lord, I do not think that a Counſellor is always bound to know the Patent of him that ſits as Judge, that will not be his Caſe; here was no ordinary Warrant of Law to carry on Juſtice: Grotius ſaith, in Caſe of Neceſſity for carrying on Juſtice, there may be many things allowed: I pray where did Mr. Cook read of ſuch a Court as a High Court of Juſtice; there was never ſuch a High Court of Juſtice read of in the Law, then as this was a Mock-Court, ſo under good Favour it was a Mock-Juriſdiction. Was there any Law under Heaven to put the King to Death? Is it not out of the Compaſs of all Courts whatſoever to do it? And under good Favour, my Lord, this is but to ſhelter a Man's ſelf under Colour of Juſtice to do the moſt Execrable Treaſon in the World; I have no more to ſay to you.

Lord Chief Baron. I would repeat the Evidence and your Anſwer to you, if you have any thing New ſpeak to it.

Cook. This is New; it was ſaid by one, that if there had been no Charge there had been no Sentence given in the Caſe; I ſay that the Indictment or Charge is no part of the Trial by the Statute of Magna Charta: The Peers of the Land ſhall be Tried by Peers, but are Indicted by the Country; I conceive by what they have ſaid they do make me cauſal of the Kings Death. It is ſaid in the Indictment there was a Power; I ſay this, I did not aſſume any Power; it cannot be ſaid; if Council be come in to an unlawful Power, that he takes the Power, but ſtands with Reſpect at the Bar. At Aſſizes Judgment paſſes, the Clerk of the Aſſizes he is not Inſtrumental in taking away Life; for that which Mr. Starkey ſhould ſay, that I ſhould ſay, The King muſt Die and Monarchy with him, I humbly beg that the Jury would take Notice of what Mr. Nutley ſaid, that I told him there was no Intention of taking away the King's Life; and beſides, it is but a ſingle Witneſs. I hope there muſt be Two Witneſſes in Point of Law to Convict a Man of High Treaſon.

Lord Chief Baron. Mr. Cook, you ſaid right but even now, that if there was any Thing in Matter of Law which the Court knows of, which may be of Advantage to you, they are of Council to you, and ſo they ought to be.

Cook. I thank your Lordſhips.

Lord Chief Baron. I ſhall repeat the whole Evidence, and begin with that firſt; (we are upon our Oaths;) the Witneſſes that are againſt you, I took Notice of them; you have had a great deal of Liberty, which you have made uſe of civilly; but, Sir, for the Fact, I think it is a great deal more full than as you have anſwered. Firſt, The Firſt Witneſs produced againſt you was Mr. Nutley, (I ſhall ſpeak only the Material parts that concern your Charge,) he ſwears expreſly that he ſaw Price a Scrivener writing a Charge in the Court of Wards, that he ſaw his Charge in your Hands; he ſaw afterwards, when the King of Bleſſed Memory was brought as a Priſoner, that there you delivered the Charge in; there is more than Words, you delivered that Charge in, that alone is an Overt-act; then if there were nothing elſe in that Caſe, that a Man in a Paper ſhould call the King Traitor, Tyrant, Murtherer, and Implacable Enemy, as there the Words are, and he deliver this Paper, and this be read, if this be not an Overt-Act of Imagining and Compaſſing the King's Death, I do not know what an Overt-Act is; and he gives further Evidence; if I miſtake take free Liberty to interrupt me.

Cook. Sir, they were not my Words, but their Words that Commanded me.

Lord Chief Baron. This I ſay, that this very Thing alone, ſuch a Paper approved by you, delivering this Paper to an Aſſembly, and requiring it may be read, this is an Overt-act to prove the Imagination of your Heart for the Death of the King; the Reaſon is, if the King ſhould be a Tyrant, a Traitor, &c. it ſtirs up Hatred in the People, and the Conſequences of that Hatred is the Death of the Prince. The next Thing that Mr. Nutley ſaid was this, he ſaid that you demanded poſitively Judgment againſt him, againſt the Bleſſed King, then Priſoner at the Bar. I remember you ſaid that you did demand Judgment, but that you did not demand Judgment againſt the King; take it ſo whether you did, or not, (though you ſhall find in ſome other Witneſſes that I ſhall repeat, that you ſaid Judgment againſt the King,) the Conſequence will be the ſame; who could you demand Judgment againſt but the King? He was the Priſoner; becauſe he did demand a further Hearing by the Parliament, you urged that his Charge might be taken pro Confeſſo, then it muſt needs be Judgment againſt the King; it is effectively and implicitly the ſame. He went further, and that was, that being your Friend and Acquaintance, and acknowledging your Parts as a Lawyer, (which truly I do very much know my ſelf, and do know this Gentleman to be a Man of very great Parts in his Profeſſion,) he had familiar Acquaintance with you; he told you what a baſe Buſineſs it was, and you did yourſelf acknowledge it; ſaid the Priſoner to Mr. Nutley himſelf, it is a baſe Buſineſs, but they put it upon me. He did diſcourſe further to him of the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, which he knew very well, no Man better; this Gentleman, he very ingenuouſly confeſſed it, ſaying, I confeſs it is ſo, they put me upon it, I cannot avoid it; but then excuſes it, I am the Servant of the People: Afterwards he preſſed the King to anſwer poſitively, whether Guilty or not Guilty; the preſſing of the King to anſwer, what was it in Effect but to haſten Judgment? And that was to haſten his Death; ſo that that is the Subſtance of Mr. Nutley's Teſtimony, that he preſſed Judgment, Judgment was demanded by the Priſoner now at the Bar; it is not only demanded, but preſſed, and all the Current of the Witneſſes at ſeveral Days are to this purpoſe. It is true (that I may repeat the whole for you, and againſt you,) that this Gentleman, the Priſoner at the Bar, when Mr. Nutley did urge this to him, ſaid, he hoped they did not intend to take away the King's Life; I verily believe they do not intend to take away the King's Life; I hope they do not. But, Mr. Cook, it is no Excuſe to ſay you hope, or you believe, they will not, &c. How far it may be in ſuch a Crime ſomething in Extenuation in Foro Cœli, but not in Foro Civili; you opened it yourſelf, that if a Man ſhould go about to take the King Priſoner, it is Treaſon; the Law adjudg'd that to be Treaſon; when you knew they would condemn him as a Tyrant, Murtherer, &c. you muſt eaſily believe what would follow ſuch a Condemnation, truly Death; that is no Colour of Excuſe in Foro Civili. Farrington ſwears to the ſame Purpoſe, that he ſaw you, having a Parchment in your Hands, delivering it it in, and prayed it might be read as a Charge of the People; you did not ſpeak, I deliver this in as from thoſe that deliver'd it to me; that was not in the Paper, that you ſaid of yourſelf; my Brethren will tell you all this is an apparent Point of the Imagination of your Heart; at that Time he ſwears the ſame Thing, that you did deſire it might be taken pro Confeſſo. Mr. Bodurdo is the Third, he ſwears the ſame Thing too, that you exhibited a Charge of High-Treaſon againſt the Priſoner then at the Bar, and tells you the Subſtance of it; he ſaith that all but the Firſt Day you demanded Judgment for not pleading to the Charge; he adds, that you complained of the Delays; I am ſure that was not dictated to you; that could not be thought that you ſhould deſire Judgment for the Priſoner: It is very true which you ſay for yourſelf in that, that you did not demand it firſt, till it was demanded by the Court; Mr. Bodurdo tells you, and ſo it was granted the Firſt Day, that Bradſhaw only ſaid it, but afterwards that you always demanded it: The next was Mr. Herne, he ſwears the ſame Words again, that you did in the Name of the Commons Aſſembled in Parliament, and the People of England, exhibit a Charge, &c. Theſe are your own Words; if you did exhibit a Charge againſt the King, to exhibit a Charge of High-Treaſon the very Thing followed; if it were ſo, there was Death, ſo certainly there cannot be a greater Expreſſion of the Imagination of a Man's Heart than that is: It is true, you asked then a Queſtion, and that was, whether that that you concluded was not that you defired them to proceed according to Juſtice? It is true, the Words of the Charge are ſo, but before you come to Concluſion you Charge him as a Traytor, Tyrant, &c. Communis Hoſtis; after you had given that Charge you demanded Juſtice; thoſe that ſpit in his Face they demanded Juſtice; every one knew what belonged to that Juſtice: Then Baker, he ſwears poſitively that you did exhibit the Charge in this Manner; he ſaid this, that you ſaid, you had exhibited a Charge of High-Treaſon, &c. and that the King ſought Delays; there is your inſiſting upon it; he ſays further that you ſaid theſe Words, that you did deſire Judgment ſhould be given againſt him, and not ſo much you, as the Blood that had been ſhed that cried for Judgment; truly whether that was a Judgment that you intended for Acquittal, that muſt be left to the Jury. You asked (becauſe I will repeat it in order as my Memory will give me leave) whether there was any other Words in the Charge than was in the Proclamation? Mr. Cook, Whether there was any other Words, or no, that differed in the Proclamation, as it was a great Sin and foul Fact in the Proclamation, ſo it was as foul in the Charge. Maſter Maſterſon ſwears the ſame too, he heard you ſay the Second Day you had delivered a Charge (the Day before) againſt the King, and that he had delayed his Anſwer; you deſired he might plead Guilty, or not Guilty; the laſt Day, that you did in the Names of the Commons Aſſembled in Parliament, and the People of England, demand Judgment againſt the King; and then another ſwears thoſe Words, Judgment againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, which was the King. Burden ſwears you Examined him as a Witneſs againſt the King, in what Place he was with the King; it ſeems he was in the King's Army; he ſwears you gave him an Oath, (it is Teſtimony fit to be believed;) but however, if you did not give the Oath, by what you ſay yourſelf you may be by, and asked him the Queſtion. Maſter Starkey, he tells you, that during the Trial, and before the Sentence, that you, being an Old Acquaintance of his in Grays-Inn, and ſpeaking with him, he ſpake like a Friend to you, I hear you are up to the Ears in this Buſineſs; and whereas you talk of the People, there is a Thouſand for one againſt it; that you ſhould tell him again, You will ſee ſtrange Things, but you muſt wait upon God; theſe Words of waiting upon God are Words of that Nature, People do uſe them now-a-days when they would do ſome horrid Impiety, which hath been the Sin of too many; it is but a Canting Language, that is the beſt Term I can give it: You told him then He muſt Die, this was before the Sentence; (that is to be obſerved, Gentlemen of the Jury,) you ſay you did not know of the Sentence, you ſaid He muſt Die, and Monarchy with him; you muſt here know that ſome of thoſe Perſons that ſate upon him ſaid, the King was a Gracious and Wiſe King; and as Mr. Cook did ſay, and they were the beſt Words they ſpoke, and I think he thinks ſo in his Conſcience; but in Concluſion He muſt Die, and Monarchy muſt Die with him; others ſaid, they did not hate King Charles, but they hated Monarchy and Government, but Monarchy was the Thing that they would Behead; I think I have done with the Evidence that was given againſt you, the Indictment itſelf was read, the Overt-Acts was the Meeting, Propounding, and Conſulting about it. It appears he was in the Chamber about the Charge, that he did propound it, he delivered the Charge, and it appears withal, that he demanded Judgment, he deſired the King might anſwer, or that it might be taken pro Confeſſo: Theſe are Overt-acts to declare the Imagination of his Heart. The Anſwer of Mr. Cook I will repeat it as clearly as I can, becauſe nothing ſhall go to the extenuating of the Fact but it ſhall be ſpoken. Mr. Cook, in your Anſwer, your Defence that you make, you ſet forth the Heads of this Indictment, and you ſet them forth very truly; the Heads are the Aggravations of the Indictment, the Indictment was the Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King; you ſaid it was upon theſe Grounds, that you did Propound, Abet, and Conſult the Death of the King; that you with others did aſſume Power and Authority to kill the King, and that thereupon a Perſon unknown in a Frock did accordingly kill the King. You ſay to the firſt Part, if it did not appear that you did adviſe the Death of the King, that you were not Guilty: For that, Sir, as I told you before, taking them either complexly or ſingly, if any of the Particulars reached to one of theſe Acts, it was enough, but it reaches to all: You required Judgment againſt the King as a Traytor, and that with a Reaſon, and certainly Death muſt follow: You ſay you were appointed to give your Advice; you had a Proclamation firſt for Trial of the King; you had the Order of January 10. whereby you were appointed to give your Advice; if it were ſo it will be no excuſe at all; the Proclamation gives you no Warrant at all; he that obeys ſo wicked a Proclamation it will not ſave him; it appears you were privy to this before the Proclamation; if you were not at all, when ſuch a thing as this is ſuch a Proclamation and Act, and ſuch a Manner of Trial, as I believe though you have read very much, you never heard of ſuch a Thing in our Law, or Foreign Nations, that you thereupon ſhould take upon you to be of Council againſt the King, it Aggravates the Fact: Other Men may be Impudent and Ignorant, but you that were a Learned Lawyer, your being of Council doth aggravate the Thing. You ſay, Secondly, By Law Words will not amount to Treaſon, for that I would not have that go for Law by no means, though it be not your Caſe; for you are not Indicted for Words, but Words are Treaſon, and Indictments are often for it; but the Difference is this, the Indictment is not for Words, but Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King; Words are Evidences of the Compaſſing and Imagining the King's Death; it is the greateſt Evidence of the Imagination of the Heart; Words do not make a Treaſon, that is, if it be by Inference or Conſequence, but reductively; but if it be immediately, I ſhall ſay to a Man, Go kill the King, by that which is an abſolute, immediate, neceſſary Conſequence to ſay this is no Treaſon, I would not have that go for Law; your Caſe is not for Words, but for delivering a Charge, the Ground that you ſpeak of; Words may make a Heretick, but not a Traitor; it was a witty Saying, but you have no ſufficient Authority for it, theſe are Words put in Writing; we all know if a Man put his Words in Writing, if a Man ſpeak Treaſonable Words, and put them in Writing, they have been ſeveral Times adjudged Treaſon; and ſo in my Lords Cook's 3 Inſtitutes, the Caſe of Williams of the Temple; there was a Book of Treaſon in his own Study of his making, and he was Indicted for it, Words put in Writing is an expreſs Evidence of the Imagination of the Heart; you ſay it was dictated to you, but when Words are written in a Charge, and your Name to it, (which I had almoſt forgotten,) that's more than Words; the Witneſſes ſwear the Likeneſs of your Hand; they do but ſwear the Likeneſs of your Hand; no Man can ſwear more, unleſs he was preſent and ſee it; but you owned the Charge, and there your Name is; that beſides the Two Witneſſes there is your own Actions to prove it. When Two Witneſſes ſhall ſwear it is like your Hand, and you own that Charge, I muſt leave it to the Jury: You ſay you did this after Command, the Words were dictated to you, the Words were conceptis Verbis, appointed and ordered by the Court, but the preſſing was yours; he ſtands upon Delays, let it be taken pro Confeſſo, demanding Judgment; theſe were your Words; another Man may dictate a Thing, but you are not forced to ſpeak it; you urged it, owned it; you demanded not in the Name of the Court, but in the Name of all the People of England; you ſay further, that your demanding Juſtice is not within the Statute; as I ſaid before, what can be the Effect of demanding Juſtice, but that the King ſhould Die upon thoſe Premiſes? You ſay farther, that it was in behoof of the King, as you would urge it; to do the King a Courteſie, in asking the King might have Juſtice; but you did not Name what Juſtice it was; but you did him a Courteſie; truly the King was but a little beholden to you for that Requeſt; all the World knows what that demanding of Juſtice was, it was to have the King's Head cut off; you went as far as you could; it ended with you when you demanded Juſtice; that is as far as you could you cut off the Head. St. Paul, when the Witneſſes laid down the Cloaths at his Feet, he ſaid, I killed Stephen the Martyr. You ſay further, that in all Tragedies the Accuſer or Witneſs, the Jury, the Judge, and Executioner, are the only Perſons; and you are none of theſe; you are only of Council; if Juſtice was not done, what was it to you? You ſaid you did not aſſume a Power, there was only Eloquence required in the Council; it hath been truly ſaid, that this is a great Aggravation to be of Council againſt the King; you you ſaid his Majeſty was then a Priſoner and accuſed; Council cannot be heard againſt the King; you undertake to be Council againſt the King in his own Perſon, and in the higheſt Crime; if the Council at the Bar in behalf of his Client ſhould ſpeak Treaſon, he went beyond his Sphere; but you did not only ſpeak, but acted, Treaſon; you ſaid you uſed not a diſreſpective Word to the King; truly for that you hear what the Witneſſes have ſaid; you preſſed upon him; you called it a Delay; you termed him not the King, but the Priſoner at the Bar, at every Word; you ſay you did not aſſume an Authority, it is an Aſſumption of Authority, if you countenance and allow of their Authority; you ſay you do not remember you demanded Judgment againſt the King; that is fully proved againſt you; you yourſelf asked the queſtion; whether you did ſay againſt the King he did not remember; but others poſitively, that you demanded Judgment againſt the King and Priſoner at the Bar; you ſaid that before Sentence there was not an Intention to put the King to Death, to that Mr. Starkey ſwears that you expreſly ſaid, the King muſt die, and Monarchy with him, and this before the Sentence: Whereas you ſay this is but One Witneſs, that there is to be in Treaſon Two Witneſſes; but that there ſhould be Two Witneſſes to every Particular that is an Evidence of the Fact, that is not Law; if to one Particular that is an Evidence there be one Witneſs, another to another, here are Two Witneſſes within the Meaning of the Statute; Two Witneſſes to the Indictment Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King, being accompanied with other Circumſtances, this One Witneſs if you believe him, is as good as Twenty Witneſſes, becauſe other Overt-acts are expreſly proved by ſeveral Witneſſes: You ſay next, for the drawing of the Charge, in right Reaſon it ought to be counted for the Service of the King: Firſt you do acknowledge, and truly very ingenuouſly, that in the Time of Peace to bring him to the Bar, not being a Priſoner, is Treaſon, (you ſay it,) according to the Law, and that you delivered the Charge for the accelerating of the Charge; and that it was not done by you traiterouſly, you ſay the King was a Priſoner before; and you ſay what Hands he was in, in the Hands of Men of Power and Violence; it had been your Duty to have delayed it, not accelerated it, that there might have been ſome Means of Prevention of that Bloody Act that followed; if you knew that to be Treaſon to make him a Priſoner, Subjects do not uſe to make King's Priſoners, but Death follows. You urge in the next Place the Act of Indempnity, and that you are not excepted, for that you have made as much of it as the Matter will bear; yet you muſt conſider, Firſt, as a Rule in Law, that where they are General Words, when they come to be explained by the Particulars, you ſhall not include them within the General: Mark the very Words, they are theſe, Provided that this Act, nor any Thing therein contained, ſhall extend to Pardon, Diſcharge, or give any other Benefits whatſoever unto ſuch, and ſuch, (among whom you are named,) nor any of them, nor thoſe Two Perſons, or either of them, who being diſguiſed by Frocks and Vizards, did appear upon the Scaffold erected before Whitehall, upon the Thirtieth of January 1648. All which Perſons, theſe are the Words. Firſt, It ſhall not extend to you, then it comes, All which Perſons for their execrable Treaſon in ſentencing to Death, or ſigning the Inſtrument for the horrid Murther, or being Inſtrumental in taking away the Precious Life of our late Soveraign Lord CHARLES the Firſt of Glorious Memory, are left to be proceeded againſt as Traytors to His late Majeſty according to the Laws of England, and are out of this preſent Act wholly excepted and foreprized. Firſt, as I told you before, and as it was very well ſaid by Maſter Solicitor, admitting the Reaſon had been miſtaken, and that you had not been comprehended in the Reaſon, you are excepted out of the Body, provided it ſhall not extend, &c. Many times Laws do make Recitals, which in themſelves are ſometimes falſe in Point of Fact; that which is the Law is Poſitive Words, the other Words are for the Reaſon; excepting all which, that is, Maſter Cook, which Perſons are excepted not for Doing of it, but for his execrable Crimes in being Inſtrumental. It is clear without that, if it were not ſo, we ſay when a Sentence is, or ſuch a one, or ſuch a one, the Third Or makes all disjunctive: Here are Three Ors, firſt in ſentencing to Death, or ſigning the Inſtrument, then comes this, or being Inſtrumental in taking away the Precious Life of our late Sovereign, &c. this Or doth clearly exclude the other Two, or Inſtrumental not only in Point of Death; but farther, being neither a Sentencer, Signer, or being Inſtrumental in taking away the King's Life; that is, being any way Inſtrumental. Truly, whether it be not Inſtrumental to exhibit a Charge againſt him, or complain of his Delays, to ask Juſtice againſt him in the Name of the People, to do all this, and deſire that the Charge might be taken pro Confeſſo, if this be not Inſtrumental, I know nothing elſe Sentencing and Signing: Some ſigned the Sentence, ſome the Inſtrument for Death: The next degree of being Inſtrumental, the higheſt degree of that, is to Accuſe him, to deliver in the Charge againſt him in the Name of the People, do it again and again, be angry at the Delays. The next Thing is this, that you did not do this falſo or malitioſe, but for your Fee; and that though there might be avaritia, there was not malitia in it; it was done by your Profeſſion, you were not Magiſterial in it; you thought the Conſequences that did follow, would not follow. If a Man does but intend to beat a Man, and he die upon it, you know in Law it is all one: You muſt underſtand there is a Malice in the Law; if a Man beat One in the Streets, and kill him, though not maliciouſly in him, but it is ſo in Law. That you deſire to have the Benefit of the King's Declaration; that you did put in your Petition proving the ſame; that you were a Priſoner before; that the Commons in behalf of themſelves and the People of England, they craved the Benefit of it, which was granted, excepting ſuch as ſhould be by Parliament excepted; and that the King ſhould mention a Free Parliament; for this, it hath been fully anſwered to you, and clearly by Mr. Solicitor, that you are not at all concerned in the King's Declaration at Breda. For Firſt, it is nothing in Law, it binds in Honour; and we have given the ſame Directions Yeſterday upon the like Occaſion, that is, that the Kings Declaration binds him in Honour and in Conſcience, but it does not bind him in Point of Law, unleſs there were a Pardon granted by the Broad Seal; the Thing is cleared to you what Parliament the King meant by it; they were ſitting at that Time, had acknowledged their Duty and Allegiance to their King; they went ad ultimum potentiæ for a Free and Abſolute Parliament, whilſt the King was abſent, though the King was away; yet notwithſtanding the King declared whom he meant; he directed one of thoſe Declarations to Our Speaker of the Houſe of Commons, and another to the Speaker of our Peers; in this Caſe it was loquendum ut vulgus; it was owned by him as having the Name of a Parliament; it was done with great Wiſdom and Prudence, and ſo as it could be no otherwiſe, they that were Loyal Subjects; acting in the King's Abſence; he conſenting to it; the King owning that Authority; ſo he was obliged in Honor no further than his own Meaning and Words; but there is another Clauſe in the Act excludes all theſe Perſons. The next Thing is this, you ſay the Statute of 25 Edward 3. and it is very true, you ſay if it be any Semblable Treaſon; we were not to judge upon that, unleſs they were the Treaſons in the Act; and it is moſt true; now you would urge but this, that this is but a Semblable Treaſon; but you are Indicted for the Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King: If theſe Acts did not tend to the Compaſſing and Imagining the King's Death, I know not what does; I am ſatisfied you are convicted in your Conſcience. The next Thing (for you have ſaid as much as any Man can in ſuch a Cauſe, it is Pity you have not a better,) you ſay, though it was a Tyrannical Court, as it is called, but ſuch a Court it was, and there were Officers you ſay, it had figuram judicii, that aggravates the Fact to you, to your Profeſſion. There is a difference between a ſtanding Court, and that which is but named to be a Court; this was but One of a Day or Two's growth before, and you know by whom; by ſome that pretended to be only the Commons; your Knowledge can tell you that there was never an Act made by the Commons aſſembled in Parliament alone; and you may find it in my Lord Cook, that an Act by the Lords and Commons alone was naught, as appeared by the Records; Sir James Ormond was Attainted of Treaſon; the Act was a private Act, by the King and Commons alone, the Lords were forgot; when the Judges came to try it, it was void, and another in Henry the 6th's Time; you know this was no Court at all; you know by a Printed Authority, that where a ſettled Court, a true Court is, if that Court meddle with that which is not in their Cognizance, it is purely void; the Miniſter that obeys them is puniſhable; if it be Treaſonable Matter, it is Treaſon; if Murder, it is Murder: So in the Caſe of Marſhalſea, and in the Common Pleas, if a Man ſhall begin an Appeal of Death which is of a Criminal Nature, and ought to be in the King's Bench, if they proceed in it it is void; if this Court ſhould condemn the Party convicted, and he be executed, it is Murder in the Executioner; the Court had no Power over ſuch Things; you ſpeak of a Court. Firſt, it was not a Court: Secondly, no Court whatſoever could have any Power over a King in a coercive Way, as to his Perſon. The laſt Thing that you have ſaid for yourſelf is this, that admitting there was nothing to be conſtrued of an Act or an Order, yet there was a difference; it was an Act de facto, that you urged rightly upon the Statute of 11 Hen. 7. which was denied to ſome, God forbid it ſhould be denied you; if a Man ſerve the King in the War, he ſhall not be puniſhed, let the Fact be what it will. King Henry the 7th took Care for him that was King de facto, that his Subjects might be encouraged to follow him, to preſerve them, whatever the Event of the King was: Mr. Cook you ſay, to have the Equity of that Act, that here was an Authority de facto; theſe Perſons had gotten the Supream Power, and therefore what you did under them you do deſire the Equity of that Act; for that clearly the Intent and Meaning of that Act is againſt you, it was to preſerve the King de facto, how much more to preſerve the King de jure; he was owned by theſe Men, and you, as King; you Charged him as King, and he was Sentenced as King. That that King Henry the 7th did was to take Care of the King de facto againſt the King de jure; it was for a King and Kingly Government, it was not for an Antimonarchical Government; you proceeded againſt your own King, and as your King, called him in your Charge Charles Stewart King of England. I think there is no Colour you ſhould have any Benefit of the Letter, or of the Equity of the Act. They had not all the Authority at that Time, they were a few of the People that did it, they had ſome Part of the Army with them; the Lords were not diſſolved then when they had adjourned ſome Time, they did ſit afterwards, ſo that all the Particulars you alledge are againſt you. The laſt Thing was this, you ſay, that it having pleaſed God to reſtore the King, Judgment ſhould be given for Example for Terrour to others, that this could not be drawn into Example again; why? Becauſe by the Bleſſing of God Peace was reſtored; no Probability that if your Life was ſpared, that it would be drawn again into Example, this is the weakeſt Thing you have urged; you muſt know the Reaſon: There are Two Things, there is the Puniſhment and Example; Puniſhment goes to the Priſoner, but Example to the Documents of all others; God knows what ſuch Things may be in After-Ages, if there ſhould be Impunity for them; it would rather make Men Impudent and Confident afterwards: If you have any more to ſay I will hear you, if not I muſt conclude to the Jury: You hear the Evidence is clear for Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King; you have heard what he has ſaid, and what he hath done; he has within, and examined Witneſſes againſt the King, that he was by at the drawing of the Charge where it was drawn; you hear he exhibited this Charge in the Name of the Commons Aſſembled in Parliament, and the good People of England; and what this Charge is; it is High-Treaſon, and other High-Miſdemeanors; you find that he does complain of Delays, does again and again ſpeak of this Charge, deſire it may be taken pro Confeſſo; in the cloſe of all, it was not ſo much he as Innocent Blood that demanded Juſtice; this was more than was dictated to him. You have heard the Witneſſes; he was perſwaded to forbear; acknowledged the King to be a Gracious and Wiſe King; the Oaths alledged againſt him, and you have heard his Excuſe; I have nothing more to ſay; I ſhall be very willing to hear you further; I have not abſolutely directed the Jury.

Cook. I do humbly acknowledge your Patience in hearing me, and that your Lordſhips have truly and juſtly ſtated both Proofs and my Anſwer. If your Lordſhips are pleaſed to lay aſide theſe Acts, or Orders, or Authority, whereby I did at that Time truly conſcientiouſly act, and did think that it would bear me out, if you lay aſide that, and look upon it as ſo many Men got together without Authority, and as well thoſe that were Inſtrumental, though not Sentencers or Signers, and that Clauſe in the Act, I confeſs I humbly make bold to ſay I have not received Satisfaction in my Judgment, thoſe very Words of not ſo much I as the Innocent Blood cries for Juſtice were dictated to me; there was nothing at all left to me, becauſe his Majeſty did not plead; there was no Trial; that which I did was according to the beſt, though it may be according to the weakeſt, Part of my Judgment: I have no New Matter.

Lord Chief Baron. You have ſaid no New Matter, unleſs it be worſe than before, for now you warrant that Authority.

Cook. Do not miſtake me, (my Lord,) I mean ſo far as to excuſe me in the Point of High-Treaſon.

Lord Chief Baron. We delivered our Opinions as to that formerly; we were of Opinion, that the acting by Colour of that pretended Authority was ſo far from any Extenuation, that it was an Aggravation of the Thing; the meeting by that Authority was Treaſon, and in them that acted under them, and approving of it, the making of that traiterous pretended Act, making the Proclamation, ſitting upon it, they were all ſo many Treaſons; that was the Reaſon why that was urged againſt you, aſſuming upon you the Power, that was, you approving of their Power by acting under them, ſo that there is nothing more to be ſaid.

Gentlemen of the Jury, You have heard the Indictment was for Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King; you have heard the ſeveral Overt-Acts repeated, and whether theſe are Guilty of Treaſon to deliver in a Charge againſt the King, ſuch a One as that was in theſe Words, as againſt a Traytor, Tyrant, Murderer, and Implacable Enemy to the Commonwealth; in theſe very Words to deſire Judgment againſt the Priſoner (then the King) at the Bar, angry at Delays, to deſire that the Charge might be taken pro Confeſſo, to have it expreſly, again and again to demand Judgment, if theſe be not Overt-acts of Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King, and that which hath been ſaid by the Witneſſes, it muſt be left to you: I think you need not go from the Bar. Jury went together. Silence is Commanded.

Clerk. Are you agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Clerk. Who ſhall ſpeak for you?

Jury. The Foreman.

Clerk. John Cook, Hold up thy Hand. Look upon the Priſoner at the Bar, how ſay you, is he Guilty of the Treaſon in Manner and Form as he ſtands Indicted? Or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Clerk. Look to him Keeper.

Clerk. What Goods and Chattels?

Jury. None that we know of.

The Tryal of HUGH PETERS, the ſame Thirteenth of October, and at the ſame Bar.

Clerk of the Crown. Set Hugh Peters to the Bar, which was done accordingly.

Clerk. Hugh Peters, hold up thy Hand; thou ſtandeſt Indicted, &c. If you will challenge any of the Jury you muſt challenge them when they come to the Book, before they are Sworn.

Lord Chief Baron. Mr. Peters, you may challenge to the Number of 35 peremptorily, but beyond that you cannot, without good Cauſe ſhewn; and you may have Pen, Ink, and Paper.

Peters. My Lord, I ſhall challenge none.

Jury Sworn 12, Sir Jer. Whitch. James Hally, Chriſt. Abdy, Nich. Rainton, Rich. Cheney, Jo. Smith, Rich. Abel, G. Terry, Char. Pickern, Jo. Nichol, Fran. Dorrington, Anthony Hall.

Clerk. Hugh Peters, Hold up thy Hand. Look on the Priſoner you that are Sworn, &c.

Sir Edward Turner to the Jury. You have often heard repeated to you that the Subſtantial Part of the Charge is the Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King, and all the reſt will be but Evidence to prove that Imagination againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, whom we will prove to be a Principal Actor in this ſad Tragedy, and next to him whom God hath taken away, and reſerved to his own Judgment; and we ſhall endeavour to prove, that he was a Chief Conſpirator with Cromwel at ſeveral Times, and in ſeveral Places; and that it was deſigned by them: We ſhall prove that he was the Principal Perſon to procure the Soldiery to cry out, Juſtice, Juſtice, or aſſiſt or deſire thoſe for the taking away the Life of the King. He did make uſe of his Profeſſion, wherein he ſhould have been the Miniſter of Peace, to make himſelf a Trumpeter of War, of Treaſon and Sedition, in the Kingdom: He preached many Sermons to the Soldiery, in direct Terms for taking away the King, comparing the King to Barabbas: He was Inſtrumental when the Proclamation for the High Court of Juſtice (as they called it) was proclaimed, directing where it ſhould be proclaimed, and in what Place. When the King was brought upon the Stage, that Mock-work, he was the Perſon that ſtirred up the Soldiery below to cry for Juſtice; we ſhall ſhew you as he preached at ſeveral Times upon ſeveral Occaſions, ſtill he was in the Pulpit to promote this Buſineſs; the next Day after he was brought to Trial he commends it; you ſhall hear all out of the Mouth of the Priſoner, therefore I ſay no more; call the Witneſſes.

'Dr. William Young Sworn.

Council. Tell my Lords and Jury what the Priſoner at the Bar has declared to you concerning the Contrivance of bringing the King to Tryal.

Dr. Young. My Lords and Gentlemen of the Jury, it was near about (and that the Priſoner may remember) the Month of July 1648, ſince we came firſt acquainted, when he went over to Ireland; it was about the Siege of Pembroke Caſtle; but afterwards in the Year 1649 we renewed our Acquaintance; he went over into Ireland with that Uſurper, the late Protector, as he was called, after the Town of Wexford was taken; coming over he fell Sick of the Flux, and ſaid he received it by Infection, praying over Captain Horton: Coming into Milford, that Captain ſends a Summons to me to come on Board, that was to fetch this Priſoner at the Bar, who was Sick. I found him there grovelling upon the Deck, and Sick he was indeed; with much Difficulty we got him on Shore; within a very few Days (to the beſt of my Remembrance Five Days) I perfected his Cure: We became very Familiar; I obſerved in him that he had ſome Secret Thoughts that I could not well diſcover, neither well underſtand; whereupon I thought it might tend to my Security that I ſhould ſo much ſympathize with him, to get within him to know his Intentions. After ſome Weeks, (for he continued with me Ten Weeks, or near thereabouts, ſome few Days rather over than under,) we grew ſo Familiar, that at laſt I found he began to enlarge his Heart to me. Many Times I ſhould hear him rail moſt inſufferably againſt the Blood Royal, not only againſt our Martyred King, but againſt his Royal Off-ſpring; ſtill as we continued our Acquaintance, he became more and more open to me; ſo we would ſit up diſcourſing (till about Twelve or One of the Clock at Night very often) about theſe unhappy Wars late in England. At laſt, my Lord, I found him that he began to tell me how he came into England, and upon what Account he came out of New-England. I ſhall deſire that in regard his Diſcourſes were various, that I may deliver them orderly; they were delivered to me within the Compaſs of Ten Weeks, but the Days and Weeks I cannot remember. Firſt, he told me (diſcourſing of New England and the Clergy there, and much of the Clergy here in England, and of the Buſineſs here of Reformation,) he told me, that for the driving on of this Intereſt of this Reformation, he was imployed out of New-England for the ſtirring up of this War, and driving of it on; this I ſhall my Lord ſpeak to in the Firſt Place, and that upon the Oath I have taken: And, Secondly, he was pleaſed at another Time to acquaint me, and that by way of Complement, complaining then againſt the Parliament, ſaying, that ſome time after he was come into England he was ſent over into Ireland by the Parliament to receive further Inſtructions to drive on the Deſign, to extirpate Monarchy; ſaith he, I did diſpend a great deal of my own Money, yet never had that Satisfaction from them which they promiſed me, that was, they promiſed me 2 or 3000*l.* for my Journey, and yet they have given me no more but only a ſmall Pittance of Land out of my Lord of Worceſter's Eſtate in Worceſter-ſhire. I have ſeen his Letters directed to his Kinſman here in London, as I take it his Name was Parker, adviſing him for the ſettling of this Land, and ſelling it. Thirdly, my Lord I have obſerved, that by way of Vilification of the Monarchical Government, I have found him jocundarily ſcoffing at it, and would ordinarily Quibble in this Manner, ſaying, this Common-wealth will never be at Peace till 150 be put down. I asked him what this 150 was, he told me Three L's, and afterwards interpreted the meaning to be the Lords, the Levites, and the Lawyers; with that ſaid I, we ſhall be like Switzers, Tinkers and Traytors. Now, my Lord, we are come to the laſt Particular, we diſcourſing thus frequently, and withal he was then a Colonel, and had a Commiſſion under that Uſurper Oliver, and brought over his Commiſſion for Raiſing of Soldiers to foment that War in Ireland; that it was ſo I appeal to the Dictates of his own Conſcience, and whether he did not preſs me very importunately to accept of a Commiſſion of Major, or a Captain; he did Iſſue forth Two Commiſſions under his own Hand, one of them to bring over from Devonſhire Two Foot Companies unto Cork. My Lord, becauſe we were Militarily affected, amongſt the Diſcourſes of our unhappy Wars, I know not how it came from him, it being near Eleven Years ſince, and I have had many Sufferings incumbent on me, ſo that I may fail in ſome particulars, but in general thus it was: We were diſcourſing concerning our Martyr'd King, as then we call'd him, and of his Impriſonment in Holmeby-Houſe, which I wondered at; thus we diſcours'd; he told me the Story how they had uſed him at Holmeby; and at laſt came up to this, when he was taken away from Holmeby-Houſe, the Parliament had then a Deſign to have ſecured Oliver Cromwell, and my ſelf being then in London; ſaith he, we having Intelligence of it, eſcaped out of London, and rode hard for it, and as we rode to Ware we made a Halt, and adviſed how we ſhould ſettle this Kingdom in Peace, and diſpoſe of the King; the Reſult was this, They ſhould bring him to Juſtice, Try him for his Life, and cut off his Head: Whether this was the Expreſſion of Cromwell I cannot tell; but to the utmoſt of my Remembrance, and I am miſtaken if it was not the Advice of Mr. Peters to Cromwell; and I believe it, becauſe his former Relations of his Inſtructions out of Ireland did tend to that effect.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I will ask you this Queſtion; we will not preſs you particularly upon your Memory, whether Cromwell or Peters ſaid the Words?

Do

Do you remember he confeſſed to you they were agreed upon that Matter?

Young. They did conſult and agree upon it.

Peters. My Lord, I deſire to ſpeak a Word, (his Voice being ſo low he was brought to the Second Bar,) I am the Bolder to ſpeak to your Lordſhips at this Time a Word, and it is high Time to ſatisfie my Conſcience; if theſe Things were true there is enough ſaid to deſtroy me; I deſire leave to tell you what Offence I take at the Witneſs, thus my Lord. This Gentleman I do know ——

Council. What ſay you to him?

Peters. That which I have to ſay is this, that in his Story he hath told that which is not true; but I will not find fault with him, becauſe he was my Hoſt, I will not reflect and recriminate; I ſhall give your Lordſhips in Simplicity as much Satisfaction myſelf as any Witneſs; this I ſay to the Man that ſpeaks, and this is certain, I did ſpend ſome time at this Gentleman's Houſe, he is called there Dr. Young; and my Trouble at this Diſcourſe is this, I do not know my Lord, that I found a more violent Man for the Parliament than himſelf; ſo far he undertook to be a Spy on one Side; this I find to be ſo, he will not deny it; he was very fierce in that Way; I think Words of ſuch a Man ought to be little attended to. The Second is this, this Gentleman is not a competent Witneſs, and that upon a Twofold Ground. Firſt, Becauſe I know he is under a very great Temptation and Trouble in this very Thing, and it is upon this Account he was put out of his Living in the Countrey, and here he came to me to help him in again, and was very highly offended becauſe I did not do it. Secondly, it is not that I would invalidate his Witneſs, but give me Leave to tell you, it is his way to ſnap and catch at every Man, which is the Complaint of the People in his own Countrey. I know that ſame which is ſpoken is falſe; I ſpeak it in the Preſence of God, I profeſs I never had any near Converſe with O. C. about ſuch Things; I ſpeak this to the Jury, that they would have a care of the Witneſs; I was in Sickneſs then; thoſe that have known me do know likewiſe I have much Weakneſs in my Head when I am Sick, and to take Words that are ſpoken in a Sick Condition, he ought not to do it; for the Words themſelves I do here profeſs againſt them, for the Generality of them; and that he hath been freer in my Judgment in any Communication this Way than I have been; it is marvellous, here I profeſs the Things Untruths, I call God and Angels to witneſs they are not true. I will give you an Account of my whole Condition by and by, if I may be heard.

Court. You ſhall be heard at large; that which you have been heard now is concerning the Competency or Incompetency of the Witneſs, the Incompetency againſt him is this, that when you came thither none more violent for the Parliament than himſelf, and that he was a great Spy, and you ſay s uſual with him to take ſuch Courſes, theſe are but Words; if you have any Witneſſes we will hear them; the Man may be traduced and ſlandered, and ſo all Witneſſes may be taken away.

Court. Mr. Peters, if you take this Courſe God knows when this Buſineſs will end; if you have a Mind take Pen, Ink, and Paper, and take Notes of the Witneſſes, and make Exceptions to them one after another; but interrupting one, and ſo another, we ſhall never have done.

Young. I do recollect my ſelf of ſome other Conferences between us; as to my being Malicious, I know he never did me any Wrong, and therefore I cannot be Malicious; and as for my Reputation, having reſided Two Years in London, I can have Certificates both from my Country, and ſome of this City, to vindicate me in that particular: But, my Lord, that which I would inform your Lordſhip is this, he told me he took Duke Hamilton a Priſoner himſelf in his own Chamber, ſeized on his Goods, and took his George and Blue Ribbon off his Shoulder, and the George he ſhewed me.

Wybert Gunter Sworn.

Council. Mr. Gunter, what can you ſay concerning a Meeting and Conſultation at the Star in Coleman-ſtreet.

Gunter. My Lord, I was a Servant at the Star in Coleman-ſtreet, with one Mr. Hildeſley; that Houſe was a Houſe where Oliver Cromwel and ſeveral of that Party did uſe to meet in Conſultation; they had ſeveral Meetings; I do remember very well one among the reſt, in particular that Mr. Peters was there; he came in in the Afternoon about Four a Clock, and was there till Ten or Eleven at Night; I being but a Drawer could not hear much of the Diſcourſe; but the Subject was tending towards the King after he was a Priſoner, for they called him by the Name of Charles Stewart: I heard not much of the Diſcourſe; they were writing, but what I know not; but I gueſſed it to be ſomething drawn up againſt the King; I perceived that Mr. Peters was privy to it, and pleaſant in the Company.

Court. How Old were you at that Time?

Gunter. I am now Thirty Years the laſt Bartholomew Day, and this was in 1648.

Court. How long before the King was put to Death?

Gunter. A good while; it was ſuddenly, as I remember, Three Days before Oliver Cromwell went out of Town.

Peters. I was never there but once with Mr. Nathanael Fines.

Council. Was Cromwel there?

Gunter. Yes.

Council. Was Mr. Peters there any oftner than once?

Gunter. I know not, but once I am certain of it; this is the Gentleman, for then he wore a great Sword.

Peters. I never wore a great Sword in my Life.

Mr. Starkey Sworn.

Starkey. My Lords, in the Month of December before the King died, in the beginning of that Month, and ſo towards the 12th of January following, the Head-Quarters of the Army were at Windſor, and Mr. Ireton, that is Dead, (who was a General Officer of the Army, was Quartered in my Fathers Houſe there, and by reaſon of his long Reſidence there, being about Two Months, (his Wife was there too,) my Lords, this Gentleman Mr. Peters, he likewiſe Quartered in another Place in that Town, and Cromwel himſelf was Quartered at one Mr. Baker's that lay low in the Town; ſo that in Truth my Father's Houſe being near the Caſtle, and there being in it a large Room, and in reſpect that Mr. Ireton was Quartered there, uſually the Council of War ſate there. My Lords, I was then in the Houſe conſtantly: Beſides this Council of War, which did commonly ſit there, I did obſerve that Cromwel, Ireton, and this Gentleman, Mr. Peters, and one Colonel Rich, and a Fifth Perſon, whoſe Name I have forgot, did uſually meet and conſult together, and would ſit up till Two or Three a Clock in the Morning very privately together; this was their uſual Courſe when their Council

Council of War ſate; Mr. Ireton came in to Supper, but went out again; there were Guards upon them: After this Time it happened ſo that I was often in Mr. Ireton's Company, where Mr. Peters coming to him, was very often at Meals there, but eſpecially at Nights, by occaſion of that.

Mr. Ireton being Civil in Carriage, would uſually entertain Diſcourſes with Mr. Peters, likewiſe would favour me ſometimes with Diſcourſe; and in that Diſcourſe I did many Times take occaſion to aſſert the Laws in Point of the King; and diſcourſing about the King as being a Capital Inſtrument in the late Inconveniences, as they called it, in the Times of the War, Mr. Ireton would diſcourſe this ordinarily; I was bold to tell them that the Perſon of the King was ſolutus legibus; this Gentleman, the Priſoner at the Bar, told me it was an unequal Law. I did obſerve Mr. Peters did bend his Diſcourſe, not by Way of Argument only, but in Point of Reſolution of Judgment, fully againſt the Perſon and Government of the King. I remember ſome of his Expreſſions were theſe, That he was a Tyrant, that he was a Fool, that he was not fit to be a King, or bear that Office; I have heard him ſay, that for the Office it ſelf, (in thoſe very Words which ſhortly after came into Print,) that it was a Dangerous, Chargeable, and Uſeleſs Office. My Lords, the conſtant Diſcourſe of this Gentleman at that Time was ſuch as he did believe would never be called into Queſtion, ſo it was not a thing that a Man was neceſſitated to obſerve by an Accident, but it was their whole Diſcourſe. I will put you in mind of a particular Paſſage, When the News came to Windſor that the King was in Priſon at the Iſle of Wight, my Father, whoſe Houſe that was, was very much troubled at it; and being an Ancient Man, was not able to controul his Paſſions with Reaſon, told my Mother that they (meaning Mr. Ireton, &c. ſhould have no Entertainment there, and took the Key of the Cellar and put it in his Pocket; his Paſſions being leſſened, Mr. Ireton, his Wife, and another Officer being at Supper, and afterwards my Father ſaid Grace, and, as he uſually did, tho' they were there, he ſaid that Uſual and Honeſt Expreſſion, praying for the King in theſe Uſual Words, God ſave the King, Prince, and Realm; ſometimes they did laugh at it, but never did reflect upon him; but this Night he made this Expreſſion, God ſave the King's moſt Excellent Majeſty, and preſerve him out of the Hands of all his Enemies, Peters, who was then at the Table, turns about to him, and ſaid, Old Gentleman, your Idol will not ſtand long; I do conceive he meant it of the King. For a matter of Two Months of the conſtant reſidence and being of the Army there, I did obſerve that in the General Council there, and in this Private Cabal, (after the Buſineſs was broke out, and when the King was taken Priſoner; and carried to Windſor,) Mr. Peters was the conſtant Man; and when the Buſineſs broke out, I looked upon it in reaſon that Cromwel, Ireton, and this Gentleman at the Bar, and Rich, and that other Gentleman, whoſe Name I have forgot, that they were the Perſons that did the Buſineſs. My Lords, Mr. Peters he continued at Windſor; I remember very well that after the Body of the Army, the General, and the Officers of the Army, were gone to London, he continued in Windſor: I remember a Paſſage of one Bacon, who was a Sectary; Mr. Peters being in Diſcourſe of the King, Mr. Bacon took great Diſtaſte at Mr. Peters for ſome Affront put upon the King; Mr. Peters falls upon him, and rails at him, and was ready to beat him; we underſtood it ſo, becauſe he did tell him of his affronting the King.

Council. Mr. Peters, if you have any thing to ask this Witneſs you may.

Peters. I have many Things to ask him. Did I ever lye there?

Starkey. No.

Peters. Did you ſee me there at Three a Clock in the Morning?

Starkey. I have ſeen you go up at Ten a Clock at Night to Mr. Ireton's Chamber, and ſometimes I underſtood you did not go away till Four a Clock in the Morning; I went to Bed it's true, but I underſtood it ſo.

Thomas Walkeley Sworn.

Council. Give your Teſtimony what Conſultation you have had with the Priſoner at the Bar.

Walkeley. I came out of Eſſex in at Aldgate; juſt as I came in a Proclamation was read for Tryal of his late Majeſty; I went down the next Day to the Painted Chamber at Weſtminſter, where I ſaw Oliver Cromwel, John Goodwin, and Peters, and others; John Goodwin ſate in the middle of the Table, and he made a long Speech or Prayer, I know not whether, but Mr. Peters ſtood there: After John Goodwin had done his Prayer, it was deſired that Strangers might avoid the Room; then came up Cook, and Doriſlaus, and Humphryes, and Ask, and Dendy, and ſeveral others, and ſtood by Bradſhaw at the upper End of the Table; but Cromwel ſtood up and told them it was not neceſſary that the People ſhould go out; but that was over-ruled; and ſo I went out, and ſtaid their riſing, and ſaw this Genteman Mr. Peters come out with them. After that, when the King was brought to Town a Priſoner, the Lord Carew, a very Honourable Perſon, meeting with me, ſaith he, Walkeley; if you will ever ſee your Old Maſter, go now, or elſe it may be you will never ſee him. Where is he, my Lord, ſaid I? ſaith he, he is coming on this ſide Brainford. I went to the farther end of St. James's Corner, and there I met ſome of the Army coming, and then I ſaw his Majeſty in his Coach with Six Horſes, and Peters, like Biſhop Almoner, riding before the King triumphing; then after that, in St. James's Park, I ſaw Peters marſhalling the Soldiers, and I was forced to go about. My Lord, this is all I can ſay concerning that; I remember one thing further of him; I heard him in Weſtminſter-Hall ſay, within a Year or Two after the Army was raiſed, If we can keep up our Army but Seven Years longer we need not care for the King and all his Poſterity.

Mr. Proctor Sworn.

Proct. I having occaſion to go from London to Windſor the Day that the King was brought from thence a Priſoner, a little on this ſide Brainford I ſaw great Troops of Horſe; I did conceive what the Cauſe was, having heard the King was to be brought up to his Trial; after I had paſſed ſome number of Horſes, at laſt I eſpied the Priſoner at the Bar immediately before the King's Coach, ſingly riding before the Coach-horſes, and the King ſitting alone in the Coach. My Lord, I did put off my Hat, and he was Graciouſly pleaſed to put off his Hat; the Troopers ſeeing this, they threw me into the Ditch, Horſe and all, where I ſtaid till they Paſſed by, and was glad I eſcaped ſo.

Hardwick Sworn.

Council. When the Proclamation was read in Weſtminſter-Hall for Trial of the King, did you ſee Mr. Peters there?

Hardwick. I was in the Hall when that ugly Proclamation was proclaimed, where I ſaw Dendy, King, and that Gentleman, the Priſoner at the Bar, in the Hall; after the Proclamation was proclaimed, the

Priſoner

Priſoner at the Bar came out into the Palace-Yard, and told them, Gentlemen, ſaith he, (a great many Officers and Soldiers being there,) all this is worth nothing unleſs you proclaim it in Cheapſide, and at the Old Exchange.

Council. Explain yourſelf, what Proclamation do you mean?

Hardwick. The Proclamation for the High-Court of Juſtice.

Holland Simpſon Sworn.

Council. What do you know concerning the Priſoner at the Bar?

Simpſon. I do know Mr. Peters very well, I have known him theſe 11 or 12 Years: When the High-Court of Juſtice was ſitting, both in the Court and Painted Chamber I ſaw this Gentleman in Conſultation there, and at ſeveral other Places, at Sir Will. Brereton's, and otherwhere.

Council. Did you ſee him at the Trial?

Simpſon. I ſaw him, but not as a Judge. There was one Day in the Hall Colonel Stubbards, who was Adjutant-General, (he was a very buſie Man,) and Colonel Axtel; Mr. Peters going down the Stairs, comes to him, and bids Stubbards to command the Soldiers to cry out Juſtice, Juſtice, againſt the Traytor at the Bar.

Council. Who did he mean?

Simpſon. The King was at the Bar at the ſame Time; whereupon, my Lord, the Soldiers did cry out upon the ſame; and as the King was taken away to Sir Robert Cotton's, ſome of them ſpit in the King's Face, but he took his Handkerchief, wiped it off, and ſmiled.

Peters. I do not know this Gentlemen, did he ever ſee me?

Simpſon. Yes, divers Times in the Painted-Chamber, at Sir William Brereton's, at the Deanery, in Conſultation with Bradſhaw, and you were admitted, and no Man elſe, as I know, unleſs Sir Will. Brereton, who came along with you.

Thomas Richardſon Sworn.

Richardſon. My Lords, the Firſt Day that this Court of Juſtice (as they called it) did adjourn, I went up into the Court, and I ſaw the Priſoner at the Bar with ſome more ſtanding in the Court, and I came and ſtood cloſe by him, and ſome with him, whom I did not know, I heard him commend Bradſhaw, the Carriage of him in the Trial of the King, and another Cook's Carriage; to be ſhort, Mr. Peters holding up his Hands, ſaid, This is a moſt Glorious Beginning of the Work.

Sir Jeremy Whitchcot Sworn.

Whitch. My Lords, I have by Accident, not by Choice, been ſeveral Times in Mr. Peters Company; truly I have heard him ſpeak very ſcurrilouſly of the King; amongſt the reſt he was making ſome kind of Narration of Cromwel making an Eſcape, and that he was intended to be ſurpriz'd; That if he had not preſently gone away he had been clapt up in the Tower, and declared a Traytor; he ſaid there was a Meeting of the Officers of the Army, where he us'd this Expreſſion, And there we did reſolve to ſet aſide the King. My Lord, after this (it was at another Time) he was ſpeaking of that which they called the High Court of Juſtice, and I do very well remember this was his Expreſſion of it, I cannot but look upon this Court with a great Reverence, for it doth reſemble in ſome Meaſure the Trial that ſhall be at the End of the World by the Saints. This is all that I perfectly remember; it was a great while ago; I cannot ſpeak more punctually; I have ſeldom heard him ſpeak of the King, but of the Tyrant: I remember one Time he was ſaying he would have Preached before the King, but, ſaid he, the Poor Wretch would not hear me.

Richard Nunnelly Sworn.

Coun. Was Peters upon the Scaffold at the Time of Execution or before?

Nun. On that unhappy Day, 30th of Jan. 1648, this Hugh Peters came an Hour before the King came to Whitehall; I came with a Warrant of 40 or 50000 l. to Oliver Cromwel, being Door-keeper to the Committee of the Army; Nunnelly, ſays Oliver Cromwel, will you go to Whitehall? Surely you will ſee the Beheading of the King, and he let me into Whitehall; coming into the Boarded Gallery I met Hugh Peters, and he was in the Gallery; and then I got with Hugh Peters into the Banqueting-Houſe; being there, Hugh Peters met one Tench of Houndſditch, that was a Joiner; meeting him, he ſpeaks to him, and whiſpers in his Ear, and told him ſomewhat, I do not know what it was; but Tench preſently went and knocked Four Staples upon the Scaffold; I meeting Tench again, what art thou doing, ſaid I? What will you turn Hangman? Says he, this Day will be a Happy Day; ſaid I, pray God ſend it be not a Bloody Day; upon that Hugh Peters went upon the Scaffold juſt an Hour before the King came, and then he went off again, I watched at the Window when the King's Head was cut off, and afterwards I ſaw the Vizards going into a Chamber there; about an Hour afterwards (I ſtaying there at the Door) there comes Hugh Peters in his Black Cloak and Broad Hat out of that Chamber (as I take it) with the Hangman; I am ſure I did ſee him go along with the Hangman to take Water; this is all I can remember, it being many Years ſince.

Peters. I humbly beg I may be heard in this Caſe; I have here a Witneſs, and I deſire he may be examined; it is noiſed I was upon the Scaffold, I here call God to witneſs I was not out of my Chamber that Day; I was Sick that Day; I ſpeak in the Preſence of the Lord.

Court. If your Witneſs will ſtay he ſhall be heard; there are more Witneſſes to the ſame Thing, and ſo he may ſpeak to altogether.

Dr. Mortimer Sworn.

Mortimer. Me Lar, me ha ſerd de King, &c.

Court. We cannot underſtand a Word.

Coun. He is a Frenchman, my Lord.

Court. Pray let there be an Interpreter.

One Mr. Young was Sworn to interpret truly his Evidence.

But it being afterwards found difficult and troubleſome, the Council waved his Evidence, and prayed another Witneſs might be called.

Dr. Mortimer. Me Lar, me can peak Englis—

Coun. No, no, pray ſit down, we will examine other Witneſſes, call Stephen Clough.

Stephen Clough Sworn.

Coun. What do you know of Hugh Peters.

Clough. My Lords and Gentlemen of the Jury, in 1648 I heard of a meeting of the Council of Officers at Weſtminſter, I think in the Painted-Chamber, and I being willing (my Lord) to hear what their Conſultations were, I went thither, and was there as one of them, (but I was not one,) amongſt the reſt Hugh Peters was one; when the Room was pretty full the Door was ſhut, Mr. Peters deſired to call for a Bleſſing upon their Buſineſs, in his Prayer he uttered theſe Words, " O Lord, (ſaid he) " what a Mercy is it to ſee this great City fall " down before us! And what a Stir is there to bring " this

" this Great Man to Trial, without whose Blood " he will turn us all into Blood if he Reign again!

Peters. What Day was this?

Clough. It was about Three Weeks or a Month before the King died.

Peters. Where was this?

Clough. In the Painted Chamber.

Peters. You have been very Bold.

Clough. I speak upon my Oath.

Peters. How long was this ago?

Clough. In 1648.

Peters. How many Years since is that?

Clough. You know your self sure how many Years since 1648.

Peters. How long before the King Died do you say?

Clough. About Three Weeks or a Month before the King was Murdered.

Council. We shall call a Witness to prove, that in December 1648, there was a Solemn Fast appointed to seek God in what they were about, and Mr. Peters was appointed to Preach before them.

Mr. Beaver Sworn.

Mr. Beaver's Evidence. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, upon a Day that was appointed for a Feast for those that sate then as a Parliament, I went to Westminster to find out some Company to Dine with me, and having walked about an Hour in Westminster-Hall, and finding none of my Friends to Dine with me, I went to that Place called Heaven, and Dined there; after I had Dined I passed through St. Margaret's Church-yard to go Home again, (I lay in the Strand,) I perceived all the Church yard full of Muskets and Pikes upon the Ground, and asked some Soldiers that were there what was the Business? They told me they were Guarding the Parliament that were keeping a Fast at St. Margaret's; who Preaches said I? They told me Mr. Peters is just now gone up into the Pulpit; said I, I must needs have the Curiosity to hear that Man, having heard many Stories of the Manner of his Preaching; (God knows I did not do it out of any Manner of Devotion;) I crouded near the Pulpit, and came near the Speaker's Pew, and I saw a great many Members there, whom I knew well: I could not guess what his Text might be, but hearing him talk much of Barabbas and our Saviour, and insisting altogether upon that, I guessed his Text was that Passage wherein the Jews did desire the release of Barabbas and crucifying of Christ; and so it proved; the First Thing I heard him say was, It was a very sad Thing that this should be a Question amongst us, as among the Old Jews, whether our Saviour Jesus Christ must be crucified, or that Barabbas should be released, the Oppressor of the People: O Jesus, saith he, where are we, that that should be a Question amongst us? Says he, And because that you should think, my Lords and Gentlemen, that it is a Question, I tell you it is a Question; I have been in the City, which may very well be compared to Hierusalem in this Conjuncture of Time, and I profess those foolish Citizens for a little Trading and Profit they will have Christ (pointing to the Redcoats on the Pulpit-stairs) crucified, and that great Barabbas at Windsor released, says he; but I do not much heed what the Rabble says: I hope, says he, that my Brethren of the Clergy will be wiser, the Lips of the Priests do use to preserve Knowledge; I have been with them too in the Assembly, and having seen and heard what they said, I perceive they are for crucifying of Christ, and releasing of Barabbas; O Jesus, what shall we do now? With such like strange Expressions, and shrugging of his Shoulders, in the Pulpit.

Council. How long was this before the King was Murdered?

——It was a few Days before the House of Commons made that thing called An Act for his Trial.

Council. What did he say to the Members?

—I am coming to it; says he, my Lords and you Noble Gentlemen of the House of Commons, you are the Sanhedrim, and the great Council of the Nation, therefore you must be sure to do Justice, and it is from you we expect it; you must not only be Inheritors of your Ancestors, but you must do as they did; they have opposed Tyrannical King's, they have destroyed them; it is you chiefly that we look for Justice from. Do not prefer the great Barabbas, Murderer, Tyrant and Traytor, before these poor Hearts, (pointing to the Redcoats,) and the Army, who are our Saviours: And thus for Two or Three Hours Time that he spent, he nothing but rak'd up all the Reasons, Arguments and Examples, he could to perswade them to bring the King to condign, speedy and capital, Punishment.

Peters. I do not know you, are you sure you saw me at that Time? Do you know me?

——Yes, Sir.

Peters. I did not Preach there at that Time.

Council. Pray my Lord will you call Mr. Jessop, who hath the Records of the Parliament, and can produce the Order, whereby you were appointed to carry on the Work of that Fast; there was the Order for his Preaching, and Order for Thanks for his Work.

Mr. Jessop produced the Journal, wherein was the Order following, which was read.

Clerk. reads, Die Jovis 7. September 1648. Resolved that there be a Day of Publick Humiliation for this House to seek God in these Times of Difficulty, and that to Morrow be the Day, and kept here in this House. Resolved that Mr. Peters, Mr. Marshal, and Mr. Caryll, be desired to perform the Duty on the Day of Humiliation with the House to Morrow.

Council. That is not it we intend, there was one after that in December 1648.

Clerk. reads, 20 December 1648. Ordered that Mr. Peters be desired to Preach on Friday next, the Day of Publick Humiliation, at Margaret's Westminster, in the Place of——

Council. Call Mr. Chace. After this the Work went on, and the High-Coutt of Justice sate; and the First Day they sate was Saturday January 20. in Westminster-Hall, the 21st being the Sunday following; I think this Gentleman was at White-Hall; he will tell you what he preached.

Mr. Chase Sworn.

Chase. My Lord, I heard the Prisoner at the Bar preaching before Oliver Cromwel and Bradshaw, who was called Lord President of the High-Court of Justice, and he took his Text out of the Psalms in these Words, Bind your Kings with Chains, and your Nobles with Fetters of Iron; that was part of the Text: But says he in his Sermon, Beloved, it is the last Psalm but one, and the next Psalm hath Six Verses, and Twelve Hallelujahs, Praise ye the Lord, praise God in his Sanctuary, and so on; for what? Says he, Look into my Text, there is the Reason of it, That Kings were bound in Chains, &c. He went on with a Story of a Mayor and a Bishop and his Man; the Bishop's Man, saith he, being Drunk, the Mayor laid him by the Heels; the Bishop sends to the Mayor to know by what Authority he Imprisoned his Servant; the Mayor's Answer was, there is an Act of Parliament for it, and neither the Bishop nor his Man are excepted out of it;

and

and applied it thus, Here is, ſaith he, a great Diſcourſe and Talk in the World, what? Will ye Cut off the King's Head, the Head of a Proteſtant Prince and King? Turn to your Bibles and you ſhall find it there, Whoſoever ſheds Man's Blood, by Man ſhall his Blood be ſhed; ſays he, I will even anſwer them as the Mayor did the Biſhop, here is an Act of God, Whoſoever ſheds Man's Blood, by Man ſhall his Blood be ſhed; and I ſee neither King Charles, nor Prince Charles, nor Prince Rupert, nor Prince Maurice, nor any of that Rabble, excepted out of it. And further he ſaid, This is the Day that I and many Saints of God beſides, have been praying for theſe many Years.

Peters. Ask him whether he took Notes.

Chaſe. No Sir, but it being ſo Memorable a Sermon I took ſpecial Notice of it; I came to my Brothers Houſe in Shooe-Lane, and told him, ſaid I, Brother, I have been at White-Hall, and have heard the moſt Execrable Buſineſs that ever was heard in the World by a Miniſter of the Goſpel, and I told him the Words: I obſerved that Oliver Cromwel did Laugh at that Time when you were Preaching.

Tho. Tongue Sworn.

Council. What do you know of the Priſoner's Preaching.

Tongue. Upon January 21. 1648, I was at Whitehall, where this Gentleman preached, and he preached upon this Text, Pſalm 149. v. 8. To bind their Kings in Chains, and their Nobles in Links of Iron; in which Text this Peters did much applaud the Soldiers there; he ſaid he hoped to ſee ſuch another Day following as the Day before, and that Bleſſed be God (ſays this Parſon Peters) the Houſe, the Lower Houſe, is purged, and the Houſe of Lords themſelves they will down ſuddenly; this is all that I well remember at that Time. Upon the 28th of January, 1648, next Day after Sentence of the King, I heard Peters Preach upon this Text in St. James's Chapel, Pſalm 149. 6, 7, 8, 9, Verſes. Let the high Praiſes of God be in their Mouth, and a Two-edged Sword in their Hands, to execute Vengeance upon the Heathen, and Puniſhment upon the People, to bind their Kings with Chains, and their Nobles with Fetters of Iron, to execute upon them the Judgment written, this Honour have all his Saints, praiſe ye the Lord: And there he did ſo Saint the Redcoats, and ſo Reprobate the Poor King's Friends. And in the Middle of his Sermon he took Occaſion to produce a Text, Pſal. 14. 18, 19, 20. All the Kings of the Nations, even all of them, lye in Glory, every one in his own Houſe. But thou art caſt out of thy Grave like an abominable Branch, and as the Raiment of thoſe that are ſlain, thruſt through with a Sword, that go down to the Stones of the Pit, as a Carcaſs trodden under Feet; thou ſhalt not be joined with them in Burial; becauſe thou haſt deſtroyed thy Land, and ſlain thy People, the Seed of Evil-doers ſhall never be renowned: Says he, this I did intend to inſiſt and preach upon before the poor Wretch, and the poor Wretch would not hear me.

Council. Who did he mean?

Tongue. His Majeſty, who was the Day before Condemned; ſaith he, look in your leſſer Bibles and you ſhall find the Title is, The Tyrant's Fall.

Council. That that was ſpoken of the King of Babylon, the Ignominy that was caſt upon him, he applies it to the King of England.

Peters. Ask him where it was?

Tongue. It was in St. James's Chapel, Sunday the 28th of January 1648, in the Forenoon.

Reynold Bowdler Sworn.

Bowdler. That which I have now to ſay is this, I did hear him a few Days before the King was Murthered, Preach in St. Sepulchre's Church, there he compares the King that was then to Die, to Barabbas a Murderer, and in this Manner; ſaith he, there is a great Company amongſt us like the Jews, they cry out, let Chriſt be crucified, and let Barabbas be releaſed, ſtill comparing the King to Barabbas the Murtherer; theſe were his Words, with many more to the ſame Purpoſe.

William Rider Sworn.

Council. Speak what you know concerning the Priſoner.

Rider. I was at the ſame time at Church in St. Sepulchres.

Council. How long was that before the King died?

Rider. It was very near the King's Death.

Council. Was it after the High-Court of Juſtice ſate, as they called it?

Rider. About that Time it was. My Lord, as ſoon as ever he had read the Words of his Text, which was, He ſhall call his Name Emanuel, he preſently ſhook Hands with his Text, and fell (as he was wont) to News, and there he ſaid, the great Inquiry now is to know what ſhould become of the King; let that alone, ſaith he; and preſently he falls to it again, and was pleaſed to ſtile the King Barabbas; ſaith he, there is a great many of the People had rather Chriſt ſhould be crucified than Barabbas; and here he was applauding the Soldiers; and ſaid that Emanuel was written upon the Bridles of their Horſes; and he was ſpeaking of the Kings Soldiers, ſaith he, I have known Eighty Thouſand of them, and not one of them a Gracious Perſon.

Council. Now we expect the Anſwer of the Priſoner at the Bar, the Indictment hath been fully proved.

Peters. I deſire that Witneſs may be admitted which I ſpoke of, his Name is Cornelius Glover.

Council. We have omitted One Evidence, we deſire Maſter Walker may be called.

Mr. Walker Sworn.

Walker. On Sunday after the King was firſt brought to his Trial, out of Curioſity I went to hear Mr. Peters at Whitehall; after he had made a long Prayer, ſaith he, I have prayed and preached theſe Twenty Years, and now I may ſay with Old Simeon, Lord, now letteſt thou thy Servant depart in Peace, for mine Eyes have ſeen thy Salvation. Afterwards he ſpeaks of the Text, of binding their Kings in Chains, &c. then much reviled the King: But ſoft there, ſaith he, I muſt not talk ſo here, I am in the King's Chapel; there is a very Remarkable Paſſage in Amos, Amos went to Preach, and Amaziah would not let him, but Amos would Preach; the Poor Wretch would not hear me, but yet I will Preach. Afterwards he ſpeaks of the Mayor of Exeter that committed the Biſhop's Servant for being Drunk; ſaith the Mayor, here is an Act of Parliament for it, and I do not ſee that the Biſhop nor his Man are either of them excepted out of the Act; and, ſaith he, in Scripture it is ſaid, Whoſoever ſheddeth Man's Blood by Man ſhall his Blood be ſhed; and I do not find that either King Charles, Prince Charles, Prince Rupert, Prince Maurice, or any of that Rabble are excepted.

Council. Now Mr. Peters you may call your Witneſs.

Cornelius Glover not Sworn.

Lord Chief Baron. Where do you dwell?

Glover. In Paul's Church-yard.

Lord Chief Baron. What is your Quality of Life?

Peters. A Servant of the King's.

Lord Chief Baron. I do not ask you, Mr. Peters.

Glover. I belong to the Post-house.

Peters. Pray hear him speak.

Lord Chief Baron. What would you have him asked?

Peters. Whether I was out of my Chamber that Day the King suffered.

Lord Chief Baron. What say you to that?

Glover. I was come to Mr. Peters a little before that Time, to live with him as his Servant; it fell out that Day he was ill in his Chamber all the Morning; the Soldiers in St. James's House were all gone away; I had a Desire to go see the Meeting, where they were at Whitehall; saith he, thou seemest to have a great Desire to go and look about thee, it is very sad, but if you will go you may. I did go over the Park.

Council. What Time?

Glover. About Noon.

Council. What Hour?

Glover. I do not know; I did not stay there; the Soldiers and the People fill'd the Place, and I went back again to the Chamber; I came back again within a matter of an Hours Time.

Council. Was the King dead before you came back again?

Glover. They said he was not: When I went Home he asked me what was doing? I told him there was a great Croud, I could not come near; I staid there an Hour, and then went out again, and still there was a Croud; and I came back again, and Mr. Peters was in his Chamber then.

Council. Was he in Bed, or up?

Glover. I do not remember.

Council. How Old were you then?

Glover. I am not above 32 or 33.

Council. Was Mr. Peters Sick?

Glover. Yes, he was Melancholy Sick, as he used to be.

Lord Chief Baron. How long have you been at the Post house.

Glover. About Five Years.

Lord Chief Baron. Mr. Peters, have you any more to ask him?

Peters. I brought him to testifie that I was not out of my Chamber that Day, and that I was Sick.

Lord Chief Baron. Did you desire to go, or did he send you?

Glover. I did desire to go, being newly come to London.

Lord Chief Baron. This Gentleman, though not upon Oath, is examined, and it is only to One Particular, nothing at all to the Main Proofs.

Peters. I bring him only to vindicate myself from that Aspertion of my being upon the Scaffold.

Lord Chief Baron. They do not lay the Weight of their Evidence upon that: The King's Council have done with their Evidence, if you have any Thing to say you have your Liberty.

Peters. May it please your Lordships, I will give you an Account of the Business: I lived Fourteen Years out of England, when I came over I found the Wars begun; I began no War, my Lord, nor have been the Trumpeter; when I came out of the West-Indies, I fled from the War into Ireland, to the Western Part there; and it was after the Rebellion, when some of the Irish had been stirring there, I went and spent my Time there. I was neither at Edge-hill, nor Naseby; but, my Lord, after I came over there was War that the People were engaged in; I was not here in the Beginning of it, but was a Stranger to the Carriage of it. When I came into the Nation I looked after Three Things; One was, that there might be Sound Religion; the Second was, that Learning and Laws might be maintained; the Third, that the Poor might be cared for; and I must confess I have spent most of my Time in these Things, to this End and Purpose: There was a Noise in all Parts of some Miscarriages in Matters of Religion, after it was settled I lived in Ireland; I must Profess for my own Part solemnly that my Carriage hath been upon these Heads. For Religion, I have, through God's Mercies, spoke the Truths of the Protestant Church, upon this Account I did stay to see what God might do; I was sent over to his Majesty that we might have a little Help in Point of Excise and Customs, and Encouragement in Learning. My Lord, this is true, that I being here in the Nation, and being sent over upon the Occasions of the Countrey, and not upon any Design; but this I say, (I cannot deny it,) that after I came over, and had seen the State of England, in some Measure I did stir, but by strong Importunities, the Ministers of London deeper than I: I am very sorry to hear of my Carriage towards the King; it is my great Trouble; I beg Pardon for my own Folly and Weakness; I thought God had a great Controversy with the Nation, and the Lord was displeased on all Hands; that which some People took to I did take unto; I went into the Army; I saw at the Beginning of it that Corruptions grew among them; I suppose none can say I have gone aside from any Orthodox Truth of the Lord: And now to take off the Scandal upon me, and to the Business, let me beg of your Lordships to consider whatever Prejudices or Revenge may take up Mens Hearts, there is a God that knows all; God hath a Regard to the People of England; I look upon this Nation as the Cabinet of the World. That that doth concern the Business is this, my Lord, that after this Time hither I came, and did bear Witness to all the World, that there was amongst us something that was for better, and something worse, for the Nation; I took Advice of some great Persons concerning the Weightiness of it, I had neither Malice nor Mischief in my heart against the King; upon this I did engage so far, being Invited; I went into the Wars, and there I found very Strange and several Kinds of Providences, as this Day hath been seen; I do not deny but that I was Active, but not to stir in a way that was not Honourable. I challenge a great Part of the Nation to manifest my Carriage among them; I shall make it good divers ways; I had so much respect to his Majesty, particularly at Windsor, that I propounded to his Majesty my Thoughts Three ways to preserve himself from Danger, which were good as he was pleased to think, though they did not succeed, and the Work died; as for Malice I had none in me. It is true, there was a difference amongst us, an Army, and an Army; I never had a Groat or Peny from O. Cromwel since I knew this Place; I profess I have had no Ends for Honour or Gain since I set Foot upon this Shoar; I challenge any Man that belonged to that Party whether they had not the same Respect from me as my own Party; I have not persecuted any with Malice; I will only take off Malice.

Lord Chief Baron. Your Business is Matter of Fact.

Peters. I am unskilful in Law, this that I offer is to shew that I had no Malice in me; I was so far from Malice, that I have a Certificate, if worth the reading, from one of the Eminentest Persons in the Nation, to shew I had no Malice: It is concerning cerning the Marquiſs of Worceſter under his Ladies Hand, beginning with theſe Words, I do here teſtifie that in all the ſufferings of my Husband Mr. Peters was my great Friend, &c. I have here a Seal, (and then produced it) that the Earl of Norwich gave me to keep for his Sake for ſaving his Life, which I will keep as long as I live.

Lord Chief Baron. I am not willing at all to interrupt you, or hinder you; that which you ſpeak of doing good Services is not at all to the Point; we do not Queſtion you for what Good you have done, but for the Evil you have done; I hope there is no Malice in your Heart, nor upon the Court nor Jury, we and they are upon our Oaths; and you hear the Matter alledged againſt you; pray come to the Matter.

Peters. My Lord, I cannot remember them.

Lord Chief Baron. Then I will remember you, you are charged by this Indictment for Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King, and there is ſet forth ſundry Particulars to prove the Overt-act, that you, with other Perſons named in that Indictment, did conſult and meet together how to bring about the King's Death. Then you are charged with ſeveral Acts of Contriving and Endeavouring the King's Death. Overt-acts that tend to the Compaſſing and Imagining the King's Death, or any one of theſe, to encourage the bringing on the King to his Death, the conſulting or meeting together about it, though you did not ſit or ſentence: yet if you did any Thing tending to that Incouragement, or otherwiſe Abet it, Comfort, or any wiſe Aid thoſe Trayterous Perſons that did it, in the doing of it you are by Law Guilty of the whole Fact: The propoſing and determining the King ſhall die, though you were not he that actually put him to Death, yet notwithſtanding if you did the other, you are Guilty of all; if you ſhall ſpeak any Seditious Speeches, be they in the Pulpit, or out of the Pulpit, if you ſhall utter any Thing that tends to Sedition, theſe are open Acts, which prove the Imagination of the Heart, though Imagination of the Heart be Treaſon, yet it cannot be proved but by open Acts, yet the Imagination it ſelf is Treaſon. Firſt you did conſpire, all the Witneſſes go along to prove this. Dr. Young ſaith, you came over from Ireland to his Houſe, and after Five Days that you were recovered of the Flux, you ſtaid there Ten Weeks; you ſaid yourſelf there was enough, if it were true, to condemn you or any Man: I ſhall repeat it to you; you told him a Narrative, that you came from New-England, from thence to Ireland, and then you came to Holland, with an Intent to ſee how you might bring on the Kingdom to be a Commonwealth: Next he ſaith, you ſpake very often againſt the King by way of Diſgrace, againſt him and his Family, againſt the King and his off-ſpring, this you ſaid very often: Then you ſpake in Vilification of Monarchical Government, that this Commonwealth would never be at Peace till 150, or Three L's, Lords, Levites, and Lawyers were taken away, at which he replied, then they muſt be all Switzers, Tinkers or Traytors; he ſwears you were a Colonel, and had a Commiſſion; that you would have had him accept of a Commiſſion; and that you had Two Companies come from the Weſt; you told him the Parliament had an Intent to ſecure Cromwel and yourſelf, but that you rid hard for it; and then you confeſſed you agreed then upon his Death, to bring him to Trial, and to cut off his Head; you did agree together, and he believes it was your Advice to Cromwel; your Anſwer was this, that he was more violent than yourſelf; that he took upon him to be a Spy; and that he was no competent Witneſs, becauſe he was under a Temptation, becauſe you did not help him to his Living, and ſo conceived it to be Malice; you ſay he was uſed to take up ſuch Courſes in his own Countrey; the Matter is not whether you had Malice to the King's Life or Monarchy. For the next, One Gunter, he ſwears, that he was a Servant to Mr. Hildeſley, at the Star in Coleman-ſtreet, and this was in 1648; he ſaith, that many of the Party of Cromwel did uſe to reſort thither, among the reſt he ſaw you, he ſaid he came in to them, and their Diſcourſe was about Charles Stewart, and the Priſoner —— and did gueſs it was about the King; that you were privy to it then; he ſaith this was Three Days before Oliver Cromwel went out of Town; the Effect of that is urged no further than this, that you were ſo far of the Cabal, that you were preſent with thoſe Perſons, Cromwel, Ireton, Rich, and others; you ſaid, I was there once with Mr. Nathanael Fines. Starkey, he ſaith, that at his Father's Houſe Ireton lay, and was quartered there at Windſor, before and when the King was Priſoner; that you had your Quarters there, and Cromwel too, in that Town: The General Meeting of the Council of War was at his Father's Houſe; that Ireton and his Wife lying there, you came and reſorted thither very often; he ſaith then, that it appeared that after the Council of War had done, many Times Rich, and you, and Cromwel, and Ireton, were there together, ſometimes till Two a Clock in the Morning; he ſaith then, that he did obſerve there was a Fifth Perſon, (he did not remember his Name) and you ſat up uſually till Two or Three in the Morning; you had Guards about you; he ſaith further, that Ireton being a Domeſtick, he often diſcourſed with him, and you came ſometimes to be there too; that there being ſome Diſcourſe concerning the King, many Times he did aſſert the Law concerning him, that he was ſolutus legibus, as to his Perſon; that you ſhould ſay, that it was an unequal Law, and that you did then diſcourſe fully againſt the King's Government; you ſaid he was a Tyrant, not fit for that Office; that the Office was uſeleſs, chargeable and dangerous; theſe very Words he obſerved, which afterwards were Printed when they took away Monarchy. He ſaith further, that was their full and whole Diſcourſe; he ſaith that his Father at Supper uſed to ſay that uſual Grace, God ſave the King, Prince, and Realm; but afterwards that he heard the King was made a Priſoner, that his Father altering the Grace, he ſaid, God ſave his moſt excellent Majeſty, and deliver him out of all his Enemies Hands, you roſe up, and ſaid, Old Gentleman, your Idol will not ſtand long; that he did obſerve you often with them; he ſaith further, when Bacon was coming out, and ſpeaking ſome Words concerning your frequent Affronting the King, you took up a Staff, and were ready to beat him, and made an Uproar: It appears alſo of your being privy to Cromwel's Actions; the next Witneſs is Walkeley, and he ſwears this againſt you, that he was in the Painted Chamber the next Day after the Proclamation was made, and there he ſaw John Goodwin and you; and there was an Aſſembly, and at the Middle of the Table John Goodwin was, and made a long Speech or Prayer; that Cromwel would have had the People ſtay there, but it was ordered they ſhould be turned out; at the End he ſaw you come out with the reſt; there it appeared you were in the Conſultation; he ſaith he met the Army at St. James's, and there, when they were half paſt, he ſaw the King in his Coach, and there he ſaw Mr. Peters like Biſhop Almoner riding immediately before the King; and at St. James's Park he ſaw you Marſhalling the Soldiers, that he was forced thereupon to go about; he ſaith further, that within a Year or Two after the Army was raiſed he heard you ſay theſe Words, If we can keep up our Army Seven Years longer we need not care for the King and all his Poſterity.

Peters. My Lord, I muſt deny Abundance of this; the King commanded me to ride before him, that the Biſhop of London might come to him.

Lord Chief Baron. But this was Three Weeks after——— The next Witneſs againſt you is one Proctor; he ſaith, that Day (as the other Witneſs did) he ſaw you riding juſt before the King's Coach, and becauſe he did his Duty the Soldiers threw him, Horſe and all, into a Ditch. The next Witneſs is one Hardwick, he ſaith, that when the Proclamation was read he ſaw you in Weſtminſter-Hall, and that you ſaid, they had done as good as nothing, unleſs it was proclaimed in Cheapſide and at the Old-Exchange; this you ſaid to ſome of the Officers there.

Peters. My Lord, I cannot acknowledge it.

Lord Chief Baron. The next Witneſs againſt you is Simſon, he ſwears he ſaw you in Conſultation with Oliver Cromwel, and take Sir William Brereton by the Hand, and come to Bradſhaw's, and this during the time of the King's Trial; he further ſaith, that one Day when the King was at his Trial you commanded Colonel Stubbers to bid his Soldiers cry out Juſtice, Juſtice, which they cried, and afterwards ſome of the Soldiers ſpit upon the King.

Peters. I do believe that he that ſwore that cannot ſay I was there.

Lord Chief Baron. Another Witneſs is one Richardſon, who ſaw you the Firſt Day in the Court; and he ſaid further, that you commended Bradſhaw and another, to wit Cook, for their Carriage in the Trial of the King; that you held up your Hands, and ſaid, this is a moſt Glorious Beginning of the Work.

Peters. Whereabouts in the Court?

Richardſon. In the Body of the Court, called then the High Court of Juſtice.

Peters. My Lord, I do not know that ever I was in the Body of the Court.

Lord Chief Baron. The next Witneſs is Sir Jeremy Whichcot, he ſaith he heard you often ſpeak ſcurrilouſly of the King; and making a Narrative of Cromwel's Eſcape, you ſaid there was a Meeting, and there we reſolved to ſet aſide the King; remember what the other Witneſs ſaid, we agreed, and here we reſolved; you ſaid, I cannot but reverence the High-Court of Juſtice, it doth reſemble the Judging of the World at the Laſt Day by the Saints, ſo it was the Saints that ſat there; I would have preached before the Wretch, but the Poor Wretch would not hear me; you often called him Tyrant; I cannot poſſibly remember the Place, Things, or Words, that are alledged. Then you have another Witneſs, Nunnelley, he ſaith he came with a Warrant to Oliver Cromwel for ſome Money, and that he ſhould ſay, go and ſee the Beheading of the King at White-Hall; he ſaith there he met with you (though you ſaid you were not there that day) going to the Banqueting-Houſe; that you ſpoke to Tench, and whiſpered in his Ear, and that Tench went and knocked Staples on the Scaffold; he meeting Tench, ſaid, what, are you a Hangman? Saith Tench, this Day will be a happy Day; he ſaith, after all this Hugh Peters was upon the Scaffold, and that he went out with the Hangman——

Peters. I do profeſs to your Lordſhips before Angels and Men that I did not ſtir out of my Chamber that Day.

Lord Chief Baron. The Council doth not put Reliance upon that, becauſe of what your Witneſs ſaith, tho' his Evidence is not at all Satisfactory. The next is Clough, and he ſwears this, that he ſaw you in the Painted-Chamber with the Council of Officers, and there you deſired them to call on God for a Bleſſing upon their Buſineſs, and there you ſaid, O Lord, what a Mercy it is to ſee this great City fall down before us! And what a Stir is there to bring this Great Man to Trial, without whoſe Blood he will turn us all into Blood, if he reign again! And this was about a Month before the King was Murthered.

Lord Chief Baron. You hear it, Mr. Peters.

Peters. Some Part I did, but it is impoſſible for me to bear down many Witneſſes; indeed my Lord, I ſay this, they are marvellous Uncharitable, and ſpeak many falſe Things.

Lord Chief Baron. The next is this, the Teſtimony concerning ſeveral Sermons of yours; and let me tell you the Pulpit ought not to be a Place where Men with Impunity may ſpeak any Thing, what they liſt, of Sedition and Treaſon.

Peters. I am of the ſame Judgment myſelf, my Lord.

Lord Chief Baron. And there was a Solemn Day to ſeek God, then you preach'd at St. Margaret's Church; this was Mr. Bever; in he came, and heard you talk much of Barabbas and our Saviour; there you fell upon this, ſpeaking of the King, it is a ſad thing that it ſhould now be a Queſtion, whether we ſhould crucifie our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, or that great Barabbas, ſpeaking of the King; you called him Traytor, Tyrant, Murtherer of his Subjects, and the like, you went on in a Way of a Story, theſe Citizens for a little Trading they will have Chriſt crucified, and the great Barabbas at Windſor releaſed; and ſaid you, the Clergy, the Aſſembly, they are all for crucifying Chriſt, and releaſing Barabbas; you made that Expreſſion, O Jeſus, what ſhall we do? The King was a Priſoner then at Windſor; you made your Application to the Parliament that was then preſent; you told them the People did expect Juſtice from them; you muſt not prefer the great Tyrant and Traytor, naming the King, to theſe poor Hearts, (the Redcoats ſtanding by.)

Peters. I muſt profeſs againſt moſt of that.

Lord Chief Baron. There is the ſame by others. It is further proved by the Order that you were appointed to preach.

Peters. I do not deny I preached, but not theſe Things.

Lord Chief Baron. The next Thing is this, there was one Mr. Chaſe, this was during the Trial, he ſaith you preached at White-Hall upon this Text, Pſalm 149. To bind their Kings in Chains, and their Nobles in Fetters of Iron: You had Two or Three other Verſes more; then you made a Diſcourſe of a Mayor and a Biſhop's Man, the Biſhop's Man being drunk, the Mayor committed him to Priſon; the Biſhop being angry, asked by what Authority? The Mayor ſaid, there was an Act of Parliament for it; he did not find that either the Biſhop or his Man was excepted; you applied that to the King; ſaid you, I will ſhew you an Act of the Bible, Whoſoever ſheds Man's Blood, by Man ſhall his Blood be ſhed; this doth not except the King, Prince, Prince, Prince Rupert, Prince Maurice, or any of that Rabble.

Peters. It is falſe.

Lord Chief Baron. You ſaid further, this is the Day that I and many other Saints of God have prayed for theſe many Years; and Oliver Cromwel laughed at that Time. The next Witneſs was Tongue, he heard you Preach, and he ſwears the ſame with the former; that you applauded the Soldiers, and that you hoped to ſee ſuch another Day following as the Day before; and that Bleſſed be God the Houſe is purged, and the Lords will be ſhortly pull'd out; and the Twenty Eighth Day of January, which was the Day after the King was Sentenced, at St. James's, his Chapel, you took for your Text the 149th Pſalm, 6, 7, 8, and 9, Verſes, whereof theſe Words were Part, To bind their Kings in Chains, and their Nobles with Fetters of Iron; there in the middle of that Sermon, having ſpoken before of the King, you ſaid you did intend to Preach before the poor Wretch upon the 14th of Iſaiah, 18, 19, and 20 Verſes, ſpeaking of all the Kings of the Nations, Thou art caſt out of thy Grave like an abominable Branch, &c. he ſaith further, you ſaid, look upon your leſſer Bibles and you will find the Title is, The Tyrant's Fall. There is another Witneſs, that is one Bowdler, a few Days before the King's Death, at St. Sepulchres, there you fell upon the Old Compariſon; all along you compared the King to Barabbas; and that a great many would have Chriſt crucified, and Barabbas releaſed; all along comparing the King to Barabbas. One more, and that was Ryder, he heard this Text, He ſhall call his Name Emanuel; you fell to ſpeak of News; what ſhall become of the King? And you ſaid the King was Barabbas, and a great many would rather have Chriſt crucified than Barabbas. And then Mr. Walker he ſaith, that after the King was firſt brought to his Trial he heard you ſay this, I have prayed and preached this Twenty Years, and now may I ſay with Old Simeon, Lord, now letteſt thou thy Servant depart in Peace, for mine Eyes have ſeen thy Salvation: He mentions that you made Uſe of the other Compariſon of the Mayor and the Biſhop's Man, and inferred from thence, that the King and Prince, &c. were not excepted out of the Scripture, where it is ſaid, Whoſoever ſheds Mans Blood, &c. you have heard all this witneſſed againſt you, what have you to ſay for yourſelf?

Peters. Theſe are but ſingle Witneſſes.

Lord Chief Baron. The Statute is Two Witneſſes for Treaſon, but not Two to One individual Thing, tho' there are ſeveral Witneſſes have proved the ſame Thing about Barabbas and our Saviour, bind their Kings with Chains, &c. and of your other Actions there is a whole Jury of Witneſſes, Two Witneſſes expreſly, we agreed upon the King's Death, and we reſolved to ſet the King aſide.

Peters. I do not know the Witneſſes.

Lord Chief Baron. One is Sir Jeremy Whitchcot, the other is Doctor Young; you ſhall do well if you have any Thing to ſay to invalidate theſe Witneſſes to ſpeak it, elſe the Jury will be ſent together to deliver up their Verdict.

Peters. My Lord, if I had Time and Opportunity I could take off many of the Witneſſes, but becauſe their Teſtimony is without Controul I cannot ſatisfie my ſelf; I have no Skill in the Law, elſe I might have ſpoke for my ſelf; I do not know what to ſay more, unleſs I had more Time and Counſel.

Mr. Solicitor General. If the Priſoner can ſay no more, here is this in it; here are Five Places where he did conſult about the King's Death, at Windſor, at Ware, in Coleman-ſtreet, in the Painted Chamber, and in Bradſhaw's Houſe; and Four Witneſſes to prove this; there are Two Witneſſes to his Compariſon of the King and Barabbas, and Two Witneſſes to his Text of binding their Kings in Chains, &c. Proof that he hath been in Action in New-England; that he came from it with that Intent, and then went to Holland; that he had been in Arms; that he called the Day of his Majeſties Trial a Glorious Day, reſembling the Judging of the World by the Saints; he prays for this in the Painted-Chamber, preaches for it at White-Hall, St. James's Chapel, St. Sepulchres; what Man could more contrive the Death of the King than this miſerable Prieſt hath done? The Honour of the Pulpit is to be vindicated; and the Death of this Man will preach better than his Life did; it may be a Means to convert many a miſerable Perſon, whom the Preaching of this Perſon hath ſeduced; for many come here and ſay they did it in the Fear of the Lord; and now you ſee who Taught them; and I hope you will make an Example of this Carnal Prophet.

The Jury went together, and after a little Conſultation ſettled in their Places.

Clerk. Are you agreed in your Verdict.

Jury. Yes.

Clerk. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Clerk. How ſay you? Is the Priſoner at the Bar Guilty of the Treaſon whereof he ſtands Indicted? Or Not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Clerk. And ſo you ſay all?

Jury. Yes.

Clerk. Look to him Keeper.

Council. We deſire Mr. Cook may be brought to the Bar, and that they may both have their Judgment pronounced.

Clerk. John Cook, Hold up thy Hand; what haſt thou to ſay why the Court ſhould not pronounce Judgment for thee to Die according to Law?

Cook. I have a few Words, Matter of Law: Firſt, there is no Averrment in the Indictment, that John Cook mentioned in the Act of Indempnity, is the ſame with the John Cook mentioned in the Indictment, and that I am the John Cook mentioned in both.

Lord Chief Baron. This will not help you in this Caſe, you have owned, and have pleaded by the Name of John Cook.

Cook. The ſecond is this, that the Overt-Acts ſhould be particularly expreſſed in the Indictment.

Lord Chief Baron. This cannot be alledged in Arreſt of Judgment, the Jury have found you Guilty of Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King by the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. and this cannot help you.

Cook. I ſay it was profeſſionately.

Lord Chief Baron. That hath been over-ruled already; we have delivered our Opinions; the Profeſſion of a Lawyer will not excuſe them, or any of them, from Treaſon, and this hath been over-ruled, and is over-ruled again.

Cook. I humbly conceive that the remaining Part of the Houſe of Commons were to be Judges whether there was a Force or not.

Lord Chief Baron. This is all paſt and over-ruled.

Cook. Then I have no more.

Clerk. Hugh Peters, Hold up thy Hand; what haſt thou to ſay for thyſelf why Judgment ſhould not paſs againſt thee to Die according to Law?

Peters.

Peters. I will ſubmit myſelf to God, and if I have ſpoken any thing againſt the Goſpel of Chriſt I am heartily ſorry.

Silence commanded.

Lord Chief Baron. You are both Perſons of that Ingenuous and Liberal Education as I hope I ſhall not need to tell you what it is to Die, you have had a great deal of Time to think of it; you could not but think of this Iſſue of your Doings long ago, and therefore I ſhall ſpare my Labour of telling you what it is to Die, and of that Eternity that you are to enter into; only give me leave in a few Words, in relation to both your Profeſſions, to ſay ſomething to ſhew the Nature and Heinouſneſs of this Offence, the Murther of the King, if you were not actually guilty of putting the King to Death; nay, admitting (in Charity) you had no intent to go as far as you did, you are by the Laws of Chriſt and this Nation, guilty of High-Treaſon, in that you that are a Lawyer know very well, (and I ſpeak it that you may lay it to your Heart in the Convictions of your Conſcience. I muſt ſay to you as Joſhua ſaid to Achan, my Son, give Glory to God, and confeſs; and it would become you ſo to do,) you know very well it is the Law of this Nation, that no one Houſe, nor both Houſes, of Parliament, have any coercive Power over the King, much leſs to put him to Death; you know, (as you cited very well,) that the impriſoning of the King is Treaſon. You know both of you this is an undoubted Truth; the Rule of Law is, that the King can do no Wrong; that is, the King can do no Wrong in the Eſtimation of Law; he may do ſome particular Acts as a private Perſon, but he can do little Prejudice in his own Perſon; if he would hurt any it muſt be by Miniſters, in that Caſe the Law provides a Remedy; if he doth it by Miniſters they muſt Anſwer for it. The King of England is one of thoſe Princes who hath an Imperial Crown; what is that? It is not to do what he will; no, but it is that he ſhall not be puniſhed in his own Perſon if he doth that which in itſelf is unlawful. Now remember this when you took the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy; (I preſume you both did ſo;) What was your Oath of Supremacy? It was this, that the King was the only Supreme Governour of theſe Realms; it goes further, as he was Supream Governour, ſo he was the only Supream Governour, that excludes Co-ordination; you ſwear farther, that you will to the utmoſt of your Power defend the King againſt all Conſpiracies and Attempts whatſoever; truly you that were a Lawyer when you had thus ſworn, your Fee could be no Excuſe againſt what you had ſworn to. We know that the King, in his Politick or Natural Capacity, is not only ſalus Populi, but ſalus Reipublicæ. The Law hath taken Care that the People ſhall have Juſtice and Right; the King's Perſon ought not to be touched; the King himſelf is pleaſed to judge by the Law; you ſee he doth by Law queſtion the Death of his Father; he doth not judge it himſelf, but the Law judges it. Mr. Peters knows very well he ſubſcribed the 39 Articles of Religion; look upon them that were made in 1552, and upon thoſe Articles that were confirmed in 13 Elizabeth; the King is there acknowledged to have the chief Power in theſe Nations; the meddling with the King was a Jeſuitical Doctrine: This I ſpeak, not that the King ſhould or ought to Govern but by the Fundamental Laws of the Land; they that keep within the Bounds of the Law are happy; you that are a Lawyer know this in Point of Law, and you that are a Divine know this in Point of Divinity. You both know the Truth of it, and when you have thought upon it, I hope you will reflect upon that horrid Crime, the ſhedding of Royal Blood. You ſee he had granted all thoſe Grievances of the People, taken them away, ſecured them, for the future; and at this very Time, when this horrid Act was done, you ſee he had granted all at the Deſire of the People; he had made thoſe Conceſſions, ſuch, as (were it not in reſpect of others more than thoſe that treated themſelves) they thought was more than could be expected by the Nation. You that had a Hand in the King's Death, it falls upon you, the Guilt of it, becauſe you were ſome of thoſe Inſtruments that aſſiſted thoſe Perſons that broke the Treaty; prepare yourſelves for that Death which you are to die; it is a Debt which we all owe to Nature; if in this Caſe there is ſomething of Shame comes to you, it is that you muſt take as Part of the Reward of your Sin. The only Work I have now to do is to pronounce the Judgment, and this is the Judgment of the Court, and the Court doth award, that both of you be led back to the Place from whence you came, and from thence ſhall be drawn upon a Hurdle, &c. and the Lord have Mercy upon your Souls.

Clerk. Crier make Proclamation.

Crier. O Yes, &c. All Manner of Perſons, &c. and all Jurors and Witneſſes, are to appear at this Place to Morrow Morning at Seven of the Clock in the Morning, upon Pain of One Hundred Pound apiece. So God bleſs King Charles, &c.

The Tryal of WILLIAM HEWLET, on the Fifteenth of October, 1660, at the Seſſions Houſe in the Old-Baily.

Memorandum. That the Bill of Indictment againſt William Hewlet, alias Howlet, was found at Hicks's-Hall, October 12th. inſtant.

Proclamation of the Court being made.

Clerk of the Crown. Set William Hewlet, alias Howlet to the Bar, which was done accordingly.

Clerk. William Hewlet, alias Howlet, Hold up thy Hand. Thou ſtandeſt Indicted of High Treaſon in the County of Middleſex, by the Name of William Hewlet, alias Howlet, for that thou, &c. How ſayeſt thou, art thou Guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof thou haſt been Indicted, and art now Arraigned? Or Not Guilty?

Hewlet. I am Not Guilty my Lord.

Clerk. How wilt thou be Tried?

Hewlet. By God and the Country.

Clerk. God ſend thee a good Delivery.

Set him aſide.

Octob. 15. 1660.

Clerk of the Crown. Set Axtell to the Bar, which was done accordingly.

Clerk. Daniel Axtell, Hold up thy Hand.

Axtell. Pray, my Lord, let me have Pen and Ink.

Lord Chief Baron. Give Mr. Axtell Pen and Ink.

Clerk. Daniel Axtell, theſe Men that were laſt called of the Jury are to paſs, &c. if you will challenge them, or any of them, you muſt challenge them when they come to the Book, before they are Sworn.

Lord Chief Baron. Do you know how many you have Liberty to Challenge? Becauſe I would not have have you misinform'd, 35 you may Challenge peremptorily, and no more.

Axtell. I thank your Lordship.

Lord Chief Baron. Unless you have any particular Cause; if so, you may challenge more.

Axtell. I confess I am wholly ignorant of the Law.

John Kirke, John Smith, Thomas Morris, Ralph Halsell, John Sherecroft, Francis Beale, Robert Cromwell, John Gallyard, John Shelbury, George Rithe were called, and by the Prisoner Challenged.

Thomas Bide, Charles Pitfield, Robert Sheppard, William Dod, Thomas Usman, William Maynerd, George Plucknet, Samuel Harris, John Nicholl of Hendon, Henry Marsh, Thomas Bishop, Thomas Snow, in all Twelve, were admitted, and sworn of the Jury.

Clerk of the Crown. If any Man can inform my Lords the King's Justices, &c.

Clerk. Daniel Axtell, Hold up thy Hand. Look upon the Prisoner you that are sworn, and hearken to your Charge; you shall understand that the Prisoner stands Indicted, &c.

Council. May it please your Lordships, and you Gentlemen that are Sworn of this Jury, the High-Court of Injustice that was Erected for Trial of the late King, it had all the Formalities of a Court to put in Execution that Bloody Act; they had their President, their Council, their Chaplain, and their Guards; some of their Judges have been already Tried, one of their Council, and their Chaplain. Now, my Lord, we come to the Guards, and this Gentleman at the Bar, that is now the Prisoner, he was Commander of that Black Guard, that Cruel and Bloody Guard: The Indictment is, That he did Imagine and Compass the Death of the King; there be several Overt-Acts that are mentioned in the Indictment as Evidences of that Imagination, as the Consultation to bring him to Trial, the actual bringing him to Trial, and the Bloody Execution upon the Scaffold; our Evidence shall be this, that during the Time of the Trial the Prisoner at the Bar did Command the Soldiers in Westminster-Hall, himself did keep the Entrance into the Court; and when Bradshaw did speak to the King, and told him he trifled away Time, and required his Answer to the Charge exhibited in the Name of the Commons of England Assembled in Parliament, and the good People of England, that a Noble Person in the Gallery there cried out, It was a Lie; saying, that above half the Commons disowned it; saying, where are these good People? It is a Lie, Oliver Cromwel is a Traytor; this Bloody Fellow commanded the Soldiers to Shoot her; he did several times command and encourage the Soldiers to cry out, Justice, Justice; and the last Day of that horrid Trial, called by them the Day of Judgment, he likewise commanded them to cry out, Execution, Execution; and when some of them would not do it, he had the Valour to Beat them. My Lords, and Gentlemen of the Jury, if we prove any of these Particulars to demonstrate unto you that he was Guilty of Compassing and Imagining the King's Death, it is equal as if we had proved he did actually cut off the King's Head.

Mr. Bodurdoe, Mr. Nutley, Mr. Harrington, Sir Purbeck Temple, Mr. Simpson, Mr. Baker, Mr. Hunks, and Mr. Jeoner, Sworn.

Council. Mr. Simpson, Tell my Lords, and the Jury, who had the Command of the Soldiers during the Trial of the King in Westminster-Hall.

Simpson. My Lords, (as I said before in the Case of Mr. Peters,) Col. Stubberd and Col. Axtell had the Command of the Soldiers below Stairs, near that which was called the High-Court of Justice.

Axtell. I desire to know his Name, my Lord?

Simpson. My Name is Holland Simpson.

Council. Did you see him there commanding the Soldiers?

Simpson. There was a kind of Hubbub in the Court; there was a Lady (they said it was the Lady Fairfax) who at the exhibiting of the Charge against the King, said to be in the Name of the Commons and People of England, she spoke out aloud, and said, it was a Lie, that not half, nor a quarter of the People; Oliver Cromwel is a Rogue and a Traytor; they called for a Guard, this Gentleman he was called, and brought up some Musquetteers, and commanded his Soldiers to Present and give Fire against the Lady, and commanded her to Unmask.

Axtell. What Lady was it? I desire to know.

Simpson. She went by the Name of the Lady Fairfax; I know not whether it was so or no, it was the common Report it was she.

Clerk. Mr. H. pray tell my Lord what you know of the Prisoner at the Bar.

Huncks. My Lord, to say positively any Thing of the Man touching his Command I cannot, but only that Morning the King died he came into the Door of the Room where Colonel Phayre, Colonel Hacker, Cromwel, and myself, were, (Ireton and Harrison lying in bed together in the same Room,) and then he stood at the Door half in and half out; I refusing to Sign an Order for Executing the King, as Cromwel ordered me, and some little cross Language having passed, saith the Prisoner at the Bar, Colonel Huncks, I am ashamed of your, the Ship is now coming into the Harbour, and will you strike Sail before we come to Anchor? This I appeal to yourself; but for crying out, knock them down, shoot them, I know not who it was; the Officers cried, Justice, and some of the Soldiers, but I profess I know not who it was particulary; but they cried, Justice, and then I fell a trembling, for I was afraid of the King; but these were the Words he used to me, will you strike Sail, &c?

Axtell. My Lord, I desire to ask him a Question.

Lord Chief Baron. Ask him what you will.

Axtell. If I am not in the right I hope your Lordships will direct me.

Lord Chief Baron. Go on.

Axtell. Colonel Huncks, where was it?

Huncks. In a little Room in White-Hall, where Ireton and Harrison lay in bed together.

Axtell. Do you know whereabouts?

Huncks. I think I can go to the Room again; I appeal to your own Conscience before all this People.

Axtell. By your Favour, Sir, the Room I perceive you know not, and truly, Sir, My Lord, if you please to give me Leave, because he appeals to my Conscience, I do appeal to the Great God, before whom it may be I may be Arraigned to give an Account of all my Words, Thoughts, and Actions, I do not remember that ever I had any Converse with this Man there, or met him there, or any of that Company there, that Day; he was a Stranger to me, but I wish that you (to save yourself being in the Warrant for Execution) do not make others a Peace offering to save yourself; the Lord that knows my Heart I appeal to him; I appeal to your own Conscience, because you appeal to my Conscience, I never met you, nor saw you there.

Huncks. Have you done? Then give me Leave; you say you do not know me; I appeal to the same God, when Cromwel took upon him to have the Crown, have not I said, What have you got by being

ing Jehu-like? Lord, ſtrike me Dead here if it be not true.

Axtell. *I will not reflect upon him; but becauſe he hath appealed to my Conſcience therefore I ſpeak it; it is known Notoriouſly how Jehu-*like you were, when you were one of the Chief Guards of his Majeſty, One of the Forty Halberteers that did oppoſe every Perſon then for the King; had I had Time, and had not been a cloſe Priſoner as I was, there were Witneſſes enough.

Council. This after our Evidence is more proper.

Huncks. Spare me not Colonel Axtell.

Lord Chief Baron. Take the Old and Ancient Courſe, let the Witneſſes that are produced for the King be all heard, then give your Anſwer to all of them together.

Axtell. My Memory is not very good.

Lord Chief Baron. You have Pen, Ink, and Paper.

Lord Chief Baron. Mr. Axtell, is this all that you deſire to ſpeak to Colonel Huncks?

Axtell. Yes, my Lord.

Lord Chief Baron. Have you any other Queſtions?

Council. My Lord, we have a few Words; he objects as if Colonel Huncks were under a Danger; he is pardoned.

Axtell. I deſire to ask him upon what Account theſe Words were ſpoke.

Huncks. My Lord, it was this; Cromwel having a Commiſſion, (which I think I heard read here,) Colonel Hacker was reading of it, my Lord, Cromwel he comes to me, and by Vertue of that Commiſſion he would have me to write a Warrant for Executing the King. I refuſing to write that Warrant, (upon this which he ſpeaks of that ſtanding at the Door, If God bleſs me I will ſearch all the Doors at White-Hall but I will find it out,) I not doing it, I ſaid, why ſhould it be offered to me? Says Cromwel, thou art a Peeviſh Fellow; Cromwel fell a writing, as ſoon as ever he had done that writing, he gave Hacker the Pen, what Hacker writes I know not; and upon my refuſing, this Priſoner at the Bar ſaid, Colonel Huncks, I am now aſhamed of you, The Ship is now coming into the Harbour, and will you now ſtrike Sail before you caſt Anchor?

Council. You obſerve the Courſe of this Evidence; there was a Warrant of Commiſſion directed to Three Perſons, Hacker, Huncks, and Phaire, for Execution of the King; Cromwel demanded of this Gentleman (Colonel Huncks) that he ſhould ſign a Warrant by Vertue of that other Warrant, and this Gentleman refuſing it, the Priſoner objects this, that he to ſave himſelf doth witneſs this againſt the Priſoner; Gentlemen, he did refuſe the Thing; have you any Thing to ask Colonel Huncks?

Axtell. He ſays Colonel Phaire and Hacker were there, I do not doubt but they will be ſo conſcientious to vindicate me from all this Charge.

Lord Chief Baron. If it be any Thing that tends to your Defence that you will be heard afterwards; but have you any Queſtions to ask Colonel Huncks?

Axtell. No more; I know nothing of it if I were to Die at this Bar preſently.

Council. Sir Purbeck Temple, pray tell my Lords and the Jury your Knowledge of the Carriage of this Gentleman touching the Trial of his late Majeſty.

Sir Purbeck Temple. My Lord, being preſent, and engaged by ſome Perſons of Honour, Servants of his late Majeſty, to be preſent when that horrid Murther was acting before this Court of Juſtice, (as they called it,) I was preſent at all the Trials of the King, and very near him; I heard the King demand from Bradſhaw by what Authority and Commiſſion they proceeded thus ſtrangely to Try him. Then I heard the Lady Fairfax, and one Mrs. Nelſon, (my Siſter,) after the exhibiting of the Charge in the Name of the Commons Aſſembled in Parliament, and the good People of this Kingdom, againſt Charles Stewart, King of England; I ſay I heard the Lady cry out from a Gallery over the Court, Not half the People; it is falſe; where are they or their Conſents? Oliver Cromwell is a Traytor. Upon which I heard the Priſoner at the Bar cry out, Down with the Whores, ſhoot them; which made me take farther Notice of him; ſeeing him in Weſtminſter-Hall commanding the Soldiers there, I ſaw him the moſt active Perſon there; and during the Time that the King was urging to be heard, he was then laughing, entertaining his Soldiers, ſcoffing aloud, whilſt ſome of the Soldiers, by his Suffering, and (I believe) Procurement, did fire Powder in the Palms of their Hands, that they did not only offend his Majeſties Smell; but enforced him to riſe up out of his Chair, and with his Hand to turn away the Smoke; and after this he turned about to the People, and Smiled upon them, and thoſe Soldiers that ſo rudely treated him: Then turning himſelf to Bradſhaw, ſaid to him and the Court, There are ſome ſitting here (fixing his Eyes upon ſome Perſons near Bradſhaw) that well knew that if I would have forfeited or betrayed the Liberties and Rights of the People I need not have come hither, (or Words to this Effect,) but their Liberties and Rights are dearer and nearer to me than my Three Kingdoms, nay, than my Life itſelf; therefore I deſire you to hear me, and remember that I am your Lawful King, that have done you many Acts of Grace and Favour.

After which this Perſon, Mr. Axtell, Priſoner at the Bar, commanded his Soldiers to cry out Juſtice, which the Soldiers not readily obeying of him, I ſaw him beat Four or Five of them with his Cane untill they cried out, (with himſelf,) Juſtice, Juſtice, Execution, Execution, which made me turn to a Noble Lord, by whom I then ſtood, and ſaid, pray my Lord take Notice, there is not above Four or Five that cry out Juſtice, Juſtice, I heard alſo of their ſpitting in the King's Face; and I think No bodies Sufferings have been ſo like thoſe of our Saviour Chriſt Jeſus as his Majeſties were. After this this Perſon crying, Juſtice, Juſtice, Execution, Execution, a ſecond Time, the Court proceeded to paſs a Sentence; the which His Majeſty preſſed hard againſt, and told him, Sir, before you paſs that ugly Sentence, (which I very well underſtand you are intended to do,) I deſire you to hear me; hear me, hear me, paſſionately and not affectionately expreſſing it, which they denying the King, and the Noiſe of Juſtice, Juſtice, Execution, Execution, being repeated, they proceeded, and read that ugly Sentence of Death: After which His Majeſty was immediately hurried away from the Bar into a common Cedan, where he was carried by Two common Porters; which Cedan I followed to the middle of King's-Street, where I ſaw the Two Porters in Reverence go bare till the Soldiers (under the Command of the Priſoner at the Bar) beat them, and would not ſuffer them to go bare when they carried him. After this the People cryed out, what do you carry the King in a common Cedan, as they carry ſuch as have the Plague? God deliver your Majeſty out of ſuch Enemies Hands. In which Street I was forced to leave the Sight of His Majeſty, occaſioned by the Injuries and Hurts I received in my Perſon from the Soldiers under Axtell's Command, they carrying him through the Streets ſhouting in Triumph. A ſhort Time after I received an importunate Command from a Lady of great Honour, (a Servant of His Majeſties,) that I would en-endeavour to find out where the Body of the Martyr'd King was, and to give her an Account where it then was: Applying myſelf to Whitehall, after Two or Threeſcore Intreaties, I was denied; but underſtanding that Money would do it, I gave the Perſon then under the Command of Mr. Axtell, that then kept it, to ſhew it me, half a Piece, who in a ſcoffing Manner took me by the Hand, ſaid, If thou thinkeſt there is any Sanctity or Holineſs in it, look here; where I ſaw the Head of that Bleſſed Martyr'd King lye in a Coffin with his Body, which ſmiled as perfectly as if it had been alive; this is the ſad Account of the Martyr'd King, and this ſad horrid Priſoner, Mr. Axtell.

Axtell. My Lord, may I ask that Gentleman ſome Queſtions?

Lord Chief Baron. Yes, yes.

Axtell. My Lord, he ſeems to ſay that I bid the Soldiers cry out for Juſtice; he doth not at all ſay I was there in Command, but he ſaith a Lady, by report the Lady Fairfax, ſpake ſome Words, and that I ſhould bid the Soldiers ſilence her; truly I deſire to know the Certainty of the Place where I ſtood.

Sir Purbeck Temple. My Lords, and Gentlemen of the Jury, I ſaw this Perſon ſtanding within a Pike or two's Length, as I can gueſs it, (I remember the Place within a Yard of the Ground in Weſtminſter-Hall,) I do not ſay this Perſon ſate in the Court as a Principal Officer that did then hold his Majeſty Priſoner at the Bar; I did not ſay it was a Lady unknown, or reported to be ſuch a one; but I ſaid it was the Lady Fairfax, and my own Siſter, Mrs. Nelſon, and he cried, Shoot the Whores.

Axtell. He ſeems now to ſay I Commanded the Guards; I never was a Guard to his Majeſty, or had any Thing to do in that Buſineſs, but it was wholly committed to a Company of Men I know not of. That Gentleman that ſpoke I have no Acquaintance with him, I think he did not know me at that Time.

Lord Chief Baron. Have you any thing to ask him?

Sir Purbeck Tem. My Lord, another Paſſage he puts into my Memory; when I did obſerve a Thouſand of ſad Faces, I ſaw none laughing but yourſelf, as if you had been carouſing and entertaining the Soldiers. I do not charge you that you Commanded thoſe Halberteers, but thoſe Redcoats; you were all in Red: I ſaw you Cane thoſe Four or Five Soldiers I mentioned, till they cryed, Juſtice, Juſtice, with you; and that with the Powder in the Palms of their Hands they forced the King to riſe out of his Chair, which you were much pleaſed with, and laughed at.

Axtell. I ſay before the Lord, before whom I muſt be judged again for this, I do deny this whole Obedience.

Griffith Bodurdoe, Eſq; Sworn.

Bodurdoe. My Lords, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I was at the time of this ſad Trial in Weſtminſter-Hall.

Axtell. Your Name Sir, I beſeech you?

Council. His Name is Mr. Bodurdoe.

Bodurdoe. I ſay I was all the Time of the King's Trial in Weſtminſter-Hall; I was in a Gallery that I had out of my Houſe where I then lived, juſt under and beſides the Houſe of Commons, and I do remember I ſaw this Gentleman there; I do think he was then called Lieutenant-Colonel Axtell, ſo far as I remember; truly I have not ſeen him ſince before this Day, nor have had any Reaſon to have known him, but that I ſaw him very Active in giving Commands to the Soldiers there: This Gentleman was keeping the Court, letting ſome in, and putting others out; he ſeemed to have Command of it; one Day (whether it was about ſome Paſſage, or their Preſident's Speech, I know not) there was a Lady in the ſame Gallery where I ſtood, and ſome Muttering, It is a Lie, not half the People, or Words to this Effect, he the now Priſoner at the Bar ſtanding below in the Court within the Bar, not far from Dendy, with Five or Six Soldiers, upon this Muttering and Diſturbance (as he apprehended) to the Court, he called to the Soldiers, ſaying, Shoot them if they ſpeak one Word more; they did alſo preſent the Muzzles of their Muskets up to the Gallery; my Lord, by this we were very huſh; after that immediately within half a Quarter of an Hour Dendy came to the Gallery from the Court, to know who it was that made that Diſturbance; but the Lady was withdrawn into my Chamber, and did not come out afterwards.

Axtell. Where was this, Sir?

Lord Chief Baron. What is it you deſire?

Axtell. My Lord, where he ſaw me then?

Lord Chief Baron. Mr. Bodurdoe, you hear the Queſtion.

Mr. Bodurdoe. There was a Gallery, which I do believe is yet ſtanding, and the Court was juſt underneath the Gallery, and you were juſt underneath the Gallery, and Five or Six Soldiers with you.

Richard Young Sworn.

Council. What do you know of the Carriage of the Priſoner at the Time of the Trial.

Young. I was upon a Scaffold, whereby I did ſee what was done in the Hall, I ſaw that Lieutenant Colonel Axtell was buſy and very active in encouraging the Soldiers to ſay, Let us have Juſtice againſt the King.

Axtell. I deſire to ask Mr. Young one Queſtion; others ſay that the Word was Cry for Juſtice, this Gentleman is pleaſed to make ſome Addition, Let us have Juſtice againſt the King.

Young. No, not againſt the King, but I conceived you meant againſt the King.

Axtell. I cry you Mercy, you do but conceive ſo.

Young. You were upon the Right Hand of the Hall, almoſt at the Corner near the Pavement; it could not be otherwiſe applied.

John Feonar Sworn.

Council. Speak your Knowledge of Col. Axtell's Carriage at the High-Court of Juſtice.

Feonar. I had the Honour to wait upon the King as a Domeſtick Servant, to the Time of his Death; that Day, which was the Firſt Day the King was brought to his Trial, I did wait upon him among other Servants; we ſtood cloſe to the Bar where the King was, ſome Three or Four of us; Colonel Axtell was upon the Right Hand of us commanding the Guard, to keep Things in Order when the Court was to be withdrawn; the many Circumſtances about the Lady Fairfax ſhall be omitted;) the Preſident commanded the Priſoner to be withdrawn; with that Col. Axtell ſteps down before me to draw out his Guard; this I heard him ſay, Soldiers, cry for Juſtice, Juſtice, I was the next Man to him; and upon the laſt Day of the Trial he did come down in the ſame manner, and bid the Soldiers cry out for Execution, Execution.

Axtell. I do deſire a Queſtion may be asked of that Gentleman; I muſt confeſs I did not know the Gentleman at that Time, though he ſaid he knew me; he ſeems to ſay that at the Firſt Day I encouraged the Soldiers to cry, Juſtice, Juſtice, and the Laſt Day, Execution, Execution; what Place was this in, Sir?

Feonar. I tell you the King was brought from Cotton-Houſe, through a Guard, that you managed, of Muſquetteers, and with a Guard of Partizans; beſides, there was myſelf and others there: When we came up we got as cloſe to the Bar as we could; you were paſſing up and down from above and below: When the Court was diſſolved you ſtept down juſt before to draw your Guard to make ready, and to cry, Juſtice, Juſtice, and the Second Time, Execution, Execution, you were very near me, and then you cried, Juſtice, Juſtice, Execution, Execution.

Axtell. Are you certain? I have heard other Men, I confeſs, accuſed for this, ſome other Officers.

Jeonar. I did hear you, I do know you by Sight.

Council. You know him now to be the ſame Perſon.

Jeonar. Yes.

Samuel Burden Sworn.

Council. Tell my Lord and the Jury what you know of the Carriage of the Priſoner.

Burden. My Lords and Gentlemen, I do believe Col. Axtell knows me well enough, I was then under his own Command at White-Hall; there were ſome Cavaliers then in the Regiment; it was my Fortune I came into your Company, I wiſh I never had: You commanded more beſides myſelf to be a Witneſs againſt the King, and Juſtice Cook took my Examination; you brought me in, you commanded the Guards that Time at White-Hall when the King was upon his Trial.

Axtell. What more?

Burden. And you commanded Eliſha Axtell with a File of Soldiers, to take a Boat and go down to the Common Hang-man, that liv'd beyond the Tower, to Execute the King; he is now Sheppard's Serjeant in Ireland.

Axtell. My Lord, I deſire to ask him a Queſtion; he was pleaſed to ſay I deſired him to be a Witneſs.

Burden. Yes.

Axtell. Where was it?

Burden. In the Court at White-Hall.

Axtell. My Lord, I have ſeen the Printed Liſt of Witneſſes againſt the King, and in that Liſt you ſhall find no ſuch Name.

Burden. I have been a Priſoner in Dublin by your means.

Axtell. My Lord, I hope you will take Notice of that.

Council. Burden, do you remember any of his Commands to Web, to draw up in the Banqueting-Houſe?

Bur. He commanded Web to draw up in the Banqueting-Houſe, during the time of Execution, his own Company. I was one of his own Company then.

Council. In order to what?

Burden. For Execution.

Axtell. My Lord, is Web here?

Bur. He is in Dublin.

Axtell. I wiſh he were here.

Edward Cook Sworn.

Cook. And it pleaſe your Honour, my Lord, the laſt Day of the Trial of His Majeſty I came into Weſtminſter-Hall, coming where the Court was, I did ſee Col. Axtell, the Priſoner at the Bar, there with ſome Muſqueteers.

Council. What Day was this?

Cook. The laſt Day of His Majeſties Trial.

Lord Chief Baron. Go on, Sir.

Cook. Standing there a little while, His Majeſty came Guarded with ſome Halberteers, when he came by the Soldiers that ſtood with Colonel Axtell, His Majeſty Bowed, and afterwards put off his Hat, and went up to the Court; I could not know what Bradſhaw ſaid to him, I ſtood below; I heard him ſay he was brought by the Conſent of the Commons and People of England; there ſtood a Lady above in a Gallery, crying out, it is a Lie, where are the People? or their Conſents? Cromwel is a Traytor: Whereupon Colonel Axtell ſtanding by, ſaith he, what Drab is that that Diſturbs the Court? Come down, or I will fetch you down.

Mr. Nelſon Sworn.

Council. Tell my Lords, and Gentlemen of the Jury, touching the Diſcourſe between you and the Priſoner at the Bar in Dublin.

Nelſon. My Lords, and Gentlemen of the Jury, upon a Diſcourſe with the Priſoner at the Bar in Dublin, Five or Six Years ſince, upon the Platform in that Caſtle we diſcourſed of the late King's having had ſeveral Reports, I deſired to know of him who it was that Executed the King, thinking he might inform me; he was pleaſed to tell me this, ſaith he, the Perſons that were employed in that Service, you know them as well as I do; truly Sir, not I, ſaid I, I ſaw them in Vizards, but not their Viſage, as I know of; yes, ſaith he, you do know them; it is true, ſaith he, myſelf and others were employed in that Affair, in order to the Execution; but there were ſeveral Perſons came and offered themſelves, out of a kind of Zeal, to do the Thing, but we did not think it proper to imploy Perſons whom we did not know, but we made choice of a couple of Stout Perſons; pray let me hear their Names, ſaid I; ſaith he, it was Hewlet and Walker; I deſired to know their Reward; truly, ſaith he, I do not know whether 30 l. apiece, or between them; I ſaid it was a ſmall Reward for a Work of that Nature; truly, ſaith he, that was all.

Axtell. You named one Man, I did not hear the other named.

Nelſon. I named Hewlet and Walker, we was one that managed the Execution, he told me ſo, and it pleaſed you, Sir.

Axtell. He is pleaſed to ſay that in Ireland there was ſuch Conference, was any Body by?

Nelſon. No, Sir.

Axtell. Did I Name any Body to you?

Nelſon. You named thoſe Two Perſons.

Axtell. Certainly I muſt Invent them then, for I had no more Knowledge of them than any one here.

Nelſon. You told me you were one of them that had the managing of that Affair.

Council. My Lord, we have done with our Evidence; thoſe Particulars that were firſt opened to you have rendred the Priſoner much a blacker Perſon than we thought; we leave him to his Defence.

Axtell. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, in the firſt place, becauſe I am ignorant in the Laws, I deſire to know upon what Statute this Indictment is grounded.

Lord Chief Baron. It is grounded upon the Statute of the 25th of Edward the Third.

Axtell. My Lords, I muſt acknowledge my Ignorance of the Laws, being a Thing I never ſtudied, nor have the Knowledge of, but I have heard it is the Duty of your Lordſhips and the Judges to be of Counſel for the Priſoner in Things wherein he is ignorant in Matter of Law, to make his juſt Defence; and therefore, my Lord, the Indictment itſelf being Matter of Law, if your Lordſhips pleaſe not to grant me Council to ſpeak to Matters of Law, I humbly pray that your Lordſhips will be pleaſed, that for want of Knowledge, Formalities, Punctilioes, and Niceties of the Law, I might not undo myſelf:

ſelf: I have heard by a learned Judge, that though the Judge be of Council to the King, yet by his Oath he is alſo to be Councellor to the Priſoner, and ſtands as Mediator between the King and Priſoner; and therefore, my Lord, I ſhall beg that humble Favour, that wherein I ſhall fall ſhort to make the beſt Improvement of my Plea in Matter of Law, that your Lordſhips will help me, and not take Advantages againſt me, as to the Niceties, Formalities, and Punctilioes of the Law; and my Lord, this is a Reſemblance of that Great Day, where Chriſt will be Judge, and will judge the Secrets of all Hearts, and of all Words, and of all Perſons, and by him all Actions are weighed, knows all our Hearts whether there be Malice, or how it ſtands in the Frame of each Heart before him in this place; and therefore I hope there will be nothing by pre-judging, or any Thing by pre-cluding, to be ſo Black a Perſon as is ſeemed to be ſaid againſt me. My Lords, I muſt ſhorten the Time, and come to ſpeak as to the Authority.

Lord Chief Baron. As to what, Sir?

Axtell. I ſpeak as to the Authority by which, or under which, I acted; I humbly conceive, my Lord, under Favour, that I am not within the Compaſs of that Statute of the 25 Ed. 3. for that Queſtionleſs muſt intend private Perſons; Counſelling, Compaſſing, or Imagining the Death of the King. But you know, my Lords, the War was firſt ſtated by the Lord and Commons, the Parliament of England, and by Virtue of their Authority was forced to be raiſed, and they pretended by Law that the Right of the Militia was in them; and your Lordſhips will remember in ſeveral Declarations and Acts that was mutually exchanged between His Majeſty and Parliament; and, my Lord, that was the Authority, the Lords and Commons aſſembled in Parliament raiſed a Force, and made the Earl of Eſſex General, and after him the Earl of Mancheſter, of the Eaſtern Aſſociation, and after that Sir Thomas Fairfax, Lord General of the Forces; by this Authority I acted, and this Authority I humbly conceive to be legal, becauſe this Parliament was called by the King's Writ, choſen by the People, and paſſed a Bill they ſhould not be Diſſolved without their own Conſents; that the Parliament was in Being when the Trial was, and a Queſtion whether yet legally Diſſolved.

In the Fourth Place, they were not only owned and obeyed at Home, but Abroad, to be the chief Authority of the Nation, and alſo owned by Foreign States and Kingdoms, ſent Ambaſſadors to that Purpoſe; under them did all the Judges of the Land Act, who ought to be the Eye of the Land, and the very Light of the People, to guide them in their right Actions; and I remember the Judges upon Trial, (I have read it of High-Treaſon,) Judge Thorp, Nicholas and Jermin have declared it publickly, that it was a lawful juſtifiable Thing by the Law of the Land to obey the Parliament of England. My Lord, it further appears as to their Authority over the People of this Nation, Petitioning them as the Supreme and Lawful Authority: And, my Lords, as I have heard it hath been objected, that the Houſes of Lords and Commons could make no Act, truly my Lord, if you will not allow them to be Acts, tho' they intitle them ſo, call them ſo, and obeyed as ſo, by the Judges, Miniſters, and Officers of State, and by all other Perſons in the Nation, yet I hope they cannot be denied to be Orders of Parliament; and were they no more but Orders, yet were they ſufficient, as I humbly conceive, to bear out ſuch as acted thereby. And, my Lord, the Parliament thus Conſtituted, and having made their Generals, he, by their Authority, did Conſtitute and Appoint me to be an Inferior Officer in the Army, ſerving them in the Quarters of the Parliament, and under and within their Power; and what I have done, my Lord, it hath been done only as a Soldier, deriving my Power from the General; he had his Power from the Fountain, to wit, the Lords and Commons; and, my Lord, this being done, as hath been ſaid by ſeveral, that I was there, and had Command at Weſtminſter-Hall, truly, my Lord, if the Parliament Command the General, and the General the Inferior Officers, I am bound by my Commiſſion, according to the Laws and Cuſtoms of War, to be where the Regiment is; I came not thither Voluntarily, but by Command of the General, who had a Commiſſion (as I ſaid before) from the Parliament. I was no Counſellor, no Contriver, I was no Parliament Man, none of the Judges, none that Sentenced, Signed, none that had any Hand in the Execution, only that which is charged is, that I was an Officer in the Army; if that be ſo great a Crime, I conceive I am no more Guilty than the Earl of Eſſex, Fairfax, or the Lord of Mancheſter.

Judge Mallet. You are not charged as you were an Officer of the Army.

Axtell. My Lords, That is the main Thing they do inſiſt upon: My Lord, I am no more Guilty than his Excellency the Lord General Monk, who acted by the ſame Authority, and all the People in the Three Nations; and my Lord, I do humbly ſuppoſe, if the Authority had been only an Authority in Fact, and not Right, yet thoſe that acted under them ought not to be queſtioned; but if the Authority commanded, whatſoever Offence they committed, eſpecially that that guided me, was no leſs than the declared Judgment of the Lords and Commons ſitting in Parliament; they declared that was their Right as to the Militia; and having explained ſeveral Statutes of Henry the 7th, wherein the King having enterchanged Declarations with the Parliament, the Parliament comes to make an Explanation on that Statute; and, my Lord, it is in Folio 280, wherein they do poſitively expound it, and declare it as their allowed Judgment. To clear up all Scruples to all that ſhould take up Arms for them, ſaith the Parliament there, as to the Statute of 11th of Henry the 7th, Chapter the Firſt, which is printed at Large, comes there to explain it in General, and comes here, Folio 281, and gives this Judgment; It is not, ſay they, agreeable to Reaſon or Conſcience, that any one's Duty ſhould be known, if the Judgment of the High-Court of Parliament be not a Rule or Guide to them. In the next Place, this is the next Guidance, Rule, and Judgment of Parliament, upon the Expoſition of this Statute, and as they have ſaid in ſeveral Places, (was it not too much to take up your Lordſhip's Time,) they are the proper Judges and Expounders of the Laws. The High-Court of Parliament have taken upon them to expound the Law, and ſaid that we Lawyers will give the Meaning of the Text contrary to what they have Expounded the Meaning under their Hands: In the ſame Declaration His Majeſty is pleaſed to quit that Statute upon which I ſtand Indicted, the 25th of Edward the Third, where they do, my Lord, expound that very Statute in the Declaration made in 1643, Folio 722. I come to the declared Judgment, wherein they did poſitively ſay, that the Perſons that do Act under their Authority ought not to be queſtioned as Perſons Guilty, Folio 727, that is the Expoſition that the Lords and Commons Aſſembled in Parliament doth make upon the Statute.

Council. My Lord, this is an Argumentation of Diſcourſe in Juſtification of his Proceedings, we deſire to know what he will Anſwer as to the Plea.

Axtell. My Lords, I have this further to ſay, that if a Houſe of Commons Aſſembled in Parliament may be guilty of Treaſon, (for the Truth is, if I acted Treaſon that acted under the Authority of the Lords and Commons in Parliament, and of the Commons in Parliament,) then doubtleſs they muſt begin the Treaſon: If the Houſe of Commons, who are the Collective Body and Repreſentation of the Nation, all the People of England, who choſe them, are guilty too; and then where will there be a Jury to try this? Concerning the Commons alone I have been over-ruled.

Lord Chief Baron. If you have any Thing to ſay to the Lords and Commons, Anſwer to your Charge; your Charge is nothing of the Lords and Commons, but what you acted when the Houſe was broke and forced.

Council. You cannot but know that there is nothing charged againſt you, for which you can ſo much as pretend an Authority of the Lords and Commons; you know before you could do this horrid Murther, you were the Perſons that deſtroyed the Lords and Commons both; indeed you Ravel in a Buſineſs, and to make People gaze upon you without any Ground.

Axtell. I am upon my Life, I hope you will hear me patiently.

Lord Chief Baron. God forbid but we ſhould.

Axtell. I do deſire to aſſert my Authority; if any Thing was done upon the Houſe of Lords and Commons I do not come here to juſtifie their Actions, I was not concerned in it. My next Plea is this; that if a Houſe of Commons can be charged Guilty of High-Treaſon as a Community, the diſtributive Body muſt needs be Guilty.

Court. If there ſhould have been 20 or 40 Men come out of the Houſe of Commons, and ſhould Murther a Man, they muſt Anſwer for that; it is not the Community that can do ſuch an Act of Treaſon: Theſe Perſons that you call a Houſe of Commons, there was but 26 of them, and theſe muſt be the People; this is the State of the Caſe; and when you have thruſt out thrice the Number of thoſe remaining, only thoſe can ſerve your Turn.

Lord Anneſly. Mr. Axtell. I am very ſorry to ſee you in that Place, and it troubles me as much to hear you vent that for an Authority, which you know yourſelf was no Authority; you would now for your Defence for Life, (and it is Reaſon you ſhould make as full a Defence for Life as you can,) you would ſhelter yourſelf under that Authority, which I am ſorry I muſt ſay were one of the greateſt Violators of. You cannot forget how near a Cloſe of this Bloody War, by the Mercy of God, this Nation was, when the Army interpoſed, whoſe Trade it was to live by War, when they had felt ſo much of the Sweet of War, they would not ſuffer the People to enjoy Peace, though the Lords and Repreſentatives in Parliament had agreed to it; a Treaty was begun, Terms of Peace propounded and agreed to; this you cannot forget, and will have no need of Notes or Books to help your Memory: When the People Groaned under the Miſeries of War, and Thirſted after Peace, then came up the Army, who were Servants to the Parliament till that Time, taking upon them the Authority; (you cannot forget that yourſelf was one of the Number that came to offer Accuſations againſt the Majority of the Commons Houſe, calling them Rotten Members;) the Houſe of Lords was not then ſuffered to ſit, they would not join in that Ordinance that was preparing for the Trial of the King; when the Lords had refuſed, they were no longer fit to be Lords neither; then comes in a new Authority, which we never heard of before; a Remnant of the Houſe of Commons joining with the Army that had driven away the greateſt Part of the Houſe of Commons; (for in all Aſſemblies and Courts the Major Part muſt determine, or no Determination,) after this Courſe was taken, then is an Act ſet on Foot, they take upon them by Votes of their own to be the Parliament of England; that the Supreme Power of the Nation is in the Repreſentatives of the People; who were they? Thoſe few only that remained; almoſt all the Cities, Counties and Boroughs of England, had none left to repreſent them, they were driven away by Force; then was this Act of Parliament (ſuch an Act as was never heard of before) ſet on Foot and paſſed as an Act by a few of the Houſe of Commons; if you can plead this for your Defence, this is the Act that you muſt ſhelter under. But you know the Lords and Commons had unanimouſly reſolved for Peace, and ſo agree with the King. If this Act will be any Defence, you may plead it to the full; and this is all you have to ſay, therefore go upon no foreign Matter.

Axtell. If it pleaſe your Lordſhip, that worthy Lord that ſpoke laſt is pleaſed to ſay, that I was one of the Perſons that did accuſe ſome of thoſe Members of Parliament; truly, my Lord, I never did come to the Commons Bar but once, preſenting a Petition; and for my Hand either in Charging any of the Members, or Secluding any of them, I never had any Hand in that Matter; this is all to that Part. Next, I humbly conceive here I muſt ground my Bottom, and if I periſh, I periſh by a Judgment in a Parliament; my Commiſſion that did Authorize me to obey my General, was given me when the Lords and Commons ſate in Parliament; I had no other Commiſſion than this: My Lord Fairfax commanded the Army after the King's Death by the like Commiſſion; I did but my Duty in going to my Regiment; the General ſaith, go to ſuch a Place, ſtay there; if I refuſe, by the Law of War I Die; if I obey, I am in Danger likewiſe; I ſay my Commiſſion was given me by the Lords and Commons, and therefore I hope, my Lord, that what I have ſaid and offered in that Particular is not Truthleſs, but of Weight.

Court. The Effect of your Commiſſion is only to make you an Officer.

Axtell. My Commiſſion bears Date the 27th of March 1648, Ten Months before the King's Death; we had no other Commiſſions, therefore I humbly conceive the Queſtion will be this in Point of Law, and I humbly deſire it may be truly and fairly ſtated by your Lordſhip, and theſe Honourable Judges, that whether a Man being guided by the Judgment of the Lords and Commons Aſſembled in Parliament, and having declared their Judgments and Expoſition of that Statute of the 25th of Edward the Third, and Acting only by that Judgment of Parliament, and under their Authority, can be queſtioned for Treaſon. That, my Lord, is a Queſtion that I do humbly think is a Point in Law, and that you will pleaſe fairly and truly to ſtate it, whether I am within the compaſs of that Statute whereupon I am Indicted.

Council. My Lord, we do not charge him with any Thing that he did act under the Colour of his Commiſſion, or with any Thing he did before that, but that which we charge him with are the Acts that he did at the Trial of the King; ſhew us your Commiſſion from the Lords and Commons Aſſembled in Parliament, for Trial and Execution of the King; you ſay ſomething, we do not charge him for any Thing done by Vertue of that Commiſſion, but with thoſe violent Acts that he did in encouraging the Soldiers to cry, Juſtice, Juſtice, Execution, Execution, and all thoſe other violent Actions of his own malicious Heart againſt the King. We hum-humbly beſeech you he may anſwer to that which is the Charge againſt him, and that is, the Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the late King, and his declaring that by thoſe Overt-acts that we have proved. My Lords, we deſire that the Priſoner at the Bar may remember that he is not Indicted for Levying War againſt the King; if ſo, then that, Sir, which you offer, might be given as a Plea, and we ſhould have ſpoken to it; but you are Indicted for Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King; and that which we have given in Evidence were the ſubſequent Overt-acts to prove the ſame.

Axtell. I hope you will not think it much to give me ſome more Freedom for my own Defence for Life; My Lord, I muſt needs ſay, though there was a Force on the Parliament, I am not to juſtifie it; I was no Lawyer, no States-man, no Counſellor, but a Soldier; and if the General, who had a Commiſſion from the Lords and Commons, and that ſome Years before and after the King's Death, be not Guilty of Treaſon, what I did was by Command from my General; and though I am charged with being in Arms in Weſtminſter-Hall, and at ſuch and ſuch a Place, yet it was not a Voluntary Act, for I was bound to obey my General; I do humbly pray that I may have your Lordſhip's Judgment in this Point; I muſt ſay it was from the Sence of their Expoſition of the Law, and of the Statutes, and from the Authority, that every one took up Arms for, and ſerved them, and obeyed either the one General, or the other; I ſay, it was under this very Authority, and this muſt needs acquit me from all the Guilt that is laid upon me.

Lord Chief Baron. You put yourſelf upon the Judgment of the Court upon this which you call a Point in Law. Firſt, It is manifeſt that there is no Excuſe at all for Treaſon; no Man by his Commiſſion can warrant the doing of an Act which is Treaſon: You muſt take Notice of the Authority, whether it be good or no; your Commiſſion was not to put the King to Death, but on the contrary, to preſerve the King's Life. The Lords and Commons, what they did we do not meddle with; the Reaſon and Ground of what they did was the Preſervation of the King's Perſon, as well as the Maintenance of the Laws and Liberties of this Nation; they made Proteſtations, Declarations, and Oaths, for the Preſervation of the King's Perſon; and you could not but take Notice of thoſe Things: Now whereas you go about to ſhroud yourſelf under the Lord Fairfax, he had no ſuch Power, and therefore you can challenge no more than he had; and to what you ſay concerning the Judgment of the Parliament, there will be a great deal of Difference between a particular Caſe and a Declaration of Lords and Commons; there is nothing you have ſaid that hath any Thing of Force, and God forbid you ſhould make uſe of it; but I muſt tell you, you could not but notoriouſly know all thoſe Tranſactions that were in the Army, what the Army had done, that they came up with Swords in their Hands, and turn'd out whom they would; you ſaw what the Lords and Commons had done, that the Treaty was ready for his Birth; and then you came up with your Myrmidons, with Force and Arms, and exclude the greateſt Part of the Members, and then the Lords were laid aſide: It is true, the Lords were not wholly diſſolved, but they would not ſuffer them to Sit, nor Act at all, and this was apparent to the Nation. If Men, under Colour and Pretence of ſuch Things, namely, that a few Perſons, (for ſo they were,) but an Eighth Part of the Houſe of Commons, permitted to remain, and of that Eighth Part (which was but Forty Six in the whole) there was but Twenty Six that Voted that Act which you ſay you obeyed: But you ſay you obeyed the General; you are not to obey the General in this Caſe; for the Facts that you have committed are not charged as Acts of War; you are not charged for bringing the Soldiers in, but for thoſe violent Actions that you were guilty of there; you made the Soldiers cry out, Juſtice, Juſtice, Execution, Execution; you ſent officiouſly for a Hangman to come down to you; your Commiſſion gave you no Power for this; the Death of the King you know how it was deſigned; you know the Act for the bringing in of that Commiſſion (as they call'd it) to ſit in Juſtice was after the Houſe of Commons was reduced to a very ſmall Number, and ſome of thoſe diſſenting too; what you did act under that Authority, if you can juſtifie it, in the Name of God ſay ſo; but do not engage the Nation in thoſe Things which they abhorred, and by the Mercy of God are laid aſleep.

Mr. Juſtice Foſter. You begin at the wrong End, you ought, as all Men ought to do, firſt to Anſwer the Matter of Fact, and not to put in thoſe long dilatory Pleas till you have anſwered the Matter of Fact, whether thoſe Things charged on you be true or not; then if you have any thing further to ſay for yourſelf by Way of Excuſe, it will be the Time to ſpeak, and not before.

Axtell. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, I humbly conceive I am upon that Method to the firſt Part of the Witneſs; they accuſe me for commanding my Soldiers in Weſtminſter-Hall, then I muſt prove my Authority, which I have been about to do, and declared the Judgment of Parliament.

Lord Chief Baron. The Court have heard you with a great deal of Patience, and that which is not at all to the Buſineſs.

Axtell. I only refer this as to the Authority; (I humbly conceive you will give me Leave to inſiſt upon this, and how far I may improve it for my own Defence;) here is the Commiſſion by which my Lord Fairfax acted, and that after the King's Death, and I acted by the ſame Authority he did; I had not been at Weſtminſter-Hall but on the Command of the General.

Court. Doth that Commiſſion Authorize you to cry Juſtice, Juſtice? And to look up and down to get Witneſſes againſt the King? Is that in your Commiſſion?

Axtell. I am to ſerve and obey all my Superior Officers, that is my Commiſſion; if I do not I die by the Law of War.

Court. You are to obey them in their Juſt Commands; all Unjuſt Commands are Invalid. If our Superiors ſhould command us to undue and irregular Things, (much more if to the committing of Treaſon,) we are in each Caſe to make Uſe of our Paſſive, not Active, Obedience.

Axtell. Under Favour, it is not proved, that I did either Compaſs or Imagine the King's Death; that is Matter of Fact.

Court. Let us try that.

Axtell. My Lord, I did nothing but as a meer Soldier; I had Authority from the General; I would leave this before your Lordſhips and the Jury, that what I have done hath been by Authority of the General.

Lord Hollis. Sir, a Word to you; if you could ſatisfy the Court that you had received a Commiſſion from the General to do thoſe Things with which you ſtand charged it were ſomething, then were it proper for you to plead it, and the Court to Judge. Pray take this along with you, the General gave you no ſuch Command; what you are charged with in the Indictment is, for Compaſſing and Imagining the Death

Death of the King, and that by ſuch and ſuch Overt-acts, as making your Soldiers cry out Juſtice ahd Execution, for being active and forward in ſending for the Executioner, and ſuch other Acts; prove theſe are in your Commiſſion, and you ſay ſomething: I am ſure you cannot be ignorant that that very Authority that you now do urge to give Life and Power to your Actions, that you deſtroyed it, laid it in the Duſt, acted contrary to it ſeveral Ways; when the Parliament proteſted againſt fetching the King from Holmby, as they did, when they went on proceeding in the Way of Peace, then came you up to the Bar, (I think you yourſelf,) and charged ſome of the Members; firſt Eleven as Rotten Members, and theſe Men were forced away; this you know your General had no Commiſſion to do; and this you know was a Violation of that Power that gave your General the Commiſſion. After that, when the Treaty was brought on in the Iſle of Wight, when there was great hopes of Peace, then you know the King was hurried thence by Force, which the Parliament proteſted againſt. After that, when both the Houſe of Commons and Lords came to conſider of one Particular that paſſed, they reſolved that it was ſufficient Ground to proceed on for the Settlement of Peace, then did you fall upon theſe Houſes, and tear them in pieces, and throwing out above 200, ſuffering only about 40 to remain, and they were glad to ſend for One Member out of Priſon to make up a Houſe. That which you ſay of the Supreme Authority, and that by Vertue of which you did act, it ſhews that you did not at all go by any Authority, but you followed your own Luſts; and therefore do not ſew theſe Fig-leaves together, which will ſtand you in no ſtead; if you would apply yourſelf to anſwer that which you were charged with, it were ſomething.

Axt. I do deſire to have no more Interruptions than is meet in making my own Defence. My Lord, here are many Things by Way of Motive urged to the Jury which is not within the Charge, I deſire I may have that fair Play, that nothing may be urg'd but what is in the Charge.

Lord Chief Baron. You give the Occaſion, Mr. Axtell; keep to the Matter; and you ſhall not be interrupted.

Lord Hollis. I ſhall be very ſorry to urge any Thing againſt you which doth not neceſſarily follow; for what you ſay touching your Authority, I ſhall ſhew you have no Authority.

Axtell. My Lord, I have the ſame Commiſſion as the General; what I did was not of mine own Head, I had a Command: As for all that hath been charged againſt me I ſhall ſay this, I was none of the Court, I did not fetch the King from the Iſle of Wight, nor adviſ'd, compaſſed, or imagined, his Death, or Sentenced him to Death, or Signed the Warrant for his Execution, or Executed him; I am none of them, my Lords; and therefore whoever did make any Breach upon the Houſe of Commons, they were Grandees, Perſons of a greater Quality; I was an inferior Officer; I was never at the Houſe Bar, but upon preſenting one Petition to the Parliament from the Army. I ſhall now come to ſpeak to the Evidence which hath been given particularly againſt me; and the Firſt, my Lord, is Mr. Simpſon, he ſaith, I had the Command of the Guards at Weſtminſter-Hall: My Lords, I have told you already, ſhewn you by what Authority I came thither, and that I ought not to refuſe; if I had, according to the Laws of War I muſt have ſuffered Death; and that is all as to Mr. Simpſon, only that a Lady (he knows not who) ſpake ſomething there.

Lord Chief Baron. He ſaith he heard you bid the Soldiers give Fire againſt the Lady.

Axtell. My Lord, I muſt ſay, if there was any Lady that did ſpeak, who ſhe was I know no more than the leaſt Child here; but, my Lord, to Silence a Lady I ſuppoſe is no Treaſon; if a Lady will Talk impertinently it is no Treaſon to bid her hold her Tongue.

Lord Chief Baron. A Lady was ſpeaking pertinently enough, when ſhe heard Bradſhaw ſay to the King, ſuch a Charge is exhibited, a Charge of High-Treaſon againſt him in the Name of the Commons Aſſembled in Parliament, and the good People of England; ſhe ſaid, That was a Lie, not half, nor a quarter of the People of England; that Oliver Cromwel was a Traitor; then you took upon you to Command the Soldiers to Fire at her, and accordingly they levelled the Muzzles of their Muſquets towards her.

Axtell. My Lord, as to that particular concerning Oliver Cromwel, or any other Words concerning the Court, I underſtand them not; but if any Interruption was made, to preſerve the Peace, to deſire a Woman to hold her Tongue is no Treaſon. To the next Particular, wherein Colonel Huncks ſaith, at a Door of a certain Lodging where Ireton and Harriſon were in Bed together, he ſaith, that upon his Refuſal to Sign the Warrant for Executing the King, I ſaid to him, Colonel Huncks, I am aſhamed of you, the Ship is now coming into Harbour, and will you ſtrike Sail before we come to Anchor? Truly, my Lord I think all that amounts to nothing; if it were ſo, which I deny it; for to bring the Ship into Harbour, what is that? There is no Perſon named, Fact named, nor Deſign named; and I appeal to my Conſcience, I remember not the Time, Place, Perſon, or Words; and I can call for Colonel Phayre and Colonel Hacker, who were there; for I deſire Things may appear right, I deſire they Two Perſons may be called for their Evidence in that Point.

Lord Chief Baron. They both are in the ſame Condition, Colonel Hacker in the Priſon behind you, Colonel Phayre in the Tower; Mr. Axtell, you know the Strength of one Affirmative Witneſs; I ſaw ſuch a Man, and heard ſuch a Man ſay, &c. is more than if Twenty ſhould Witneſs they ſtood by, but did not ſee him, or hear him ſpeak.

Axtell. My Lord, he ſaith only this, I ſaw you at the Door going into Ireton's Chamber, and ſaid, Will you ſtrike Sail, &c? Truly, my Lord, he doth not ſay what, or how, or any Thing I meant; there muſt be according to Sir Edward Cook's 7th Book of his Inſtitutes, that Oracle of the Law, he ſaith, That Evidence ought to be as clear as the Sun at Noonday; all that you can ſay is this, it muſt be a wide Inference, a large Inference; I conceive there is nothing in theſe Two Witneſſes, and if the Two Priſoners were here they would clear me in this.

Lord Chief Baron. If by Law you could have had them, you ſhould; but I fear if they could be admitted they would not be to your Advantage.

Axtell. Then, my Lord, in the next Place, Colonel Temple is pleaſed to ſay, that the Lady Fairfax ſaying ſomething againſt the Court, (which in truth, as I ſaid before, I know not who it was, or what the Words were,) he ſaith, I bid Fire againſt them; I did nothing but what I was commanded upon Pain of Death, to preſerve Peace, and in Purſuance of that Command from the Superior Officers of the Army, Silence was required, and that was all that was done. I ſuppoſe where a Man is commanded to keep Silence,

Silence, as the Sheriff is required to keep all at Peace in a Court, if he reſtrain a Perſon that will not be quiet, it is not Treaſon in him, nor in me, in this Particular. My Lord, in the next Place Mr. Temple is pleaſed to ſay, that I ſtood upon the Pavement laughing, while others ſighed; truly, my Lord, I know not whether I ſaw the Gentleman, or no; certainly Smiling is no Treaſon, if I did ſo, though I believe I had as great a Sence that Day as many other Perſons there; this is the Sum of that he ſaith; only he further adds, that I bid the Soldiers cry for Juſtice, truly, my Lord, ——.

Lord Chief Baron. Becauſe it may be your Notes are ſhort, I will acquaint you there was a little more in it; he ſaid you bid the Soldiers cry out, Juſtice, Juſtice; and they coming not very readily to it, you ſtruck ſome of them, till they with yourſelf cried out, Juſtice, Juſtice, till they with yourſelf did it.

Axtell. My Lord, to that I anſwer, that in the Hall there was ſome kind of People did ſet up a crying ſome kind of Words, and may be ſome of the Soldiers might cry ſo too; I might command them to hold their Tongues, and to ſay I'll teach you to cry Juſtice, and ſo the Gentleman ſtanding by might believe I was the Perſon that bid them do it: Truly, my Lord, this is all that the Gentleman ſays, which I humbly conceive is nothing, becauſe he does not ſay againſt any Perſon; and therefore, my Lord, I do hold to that Maxim in the Law, as Sir Edward Cooke holds, (that Man of great Parts of Learning and Knowledge,) That in Matters of Treaſon, wherein a Man is the highlieſt concerned in his Life and Poſterity, there ought not to be conſtrued againſt him Inferences or Preſumptions, or Straint of Wit; there is no more in this, and this is all that I ſay in this Particular. In the next Place, Mr. Temple is pleas'd to ſay, that after the Court had ſentenced his Majeſty he was hurried away in a Cedan; truly, whether he was, or not, I know not; there was a Guard of Halberteers, whereof Colonel Huncks was one, and ſeveral others, as I have heard; they were Select Guards of his Majeſty, guarding him from St. James's to other Places; how he came to be hurried I know not, it was not by me; and whereas he ſays during the whole Trial I was there, truly I think I was there by Command of my General, by Authority of the Lords and Commons.

Lord Chief Baron. You ſpeak this that the Jury may underſtand you did it by Command of your General. Do you mean by Expreſs Command?

Axtell. I did not move a Day but by Special Command.

Lord Chief Baron. By whom?

Axtell. The Lord Fairfax gave his Orders every Morning to his Adjutant-General, or Major-General, and they iſſued them out to ſuch and ſuch Perſons as he appoints.

Lord Chief Baron. Who gave theſe Orders out?

Axtell. The Lord Fairfax; we did all under him.

Lord Chief Baron. You had not the Order immediately from him.

Axtell. The Major-General had.

Lord Chief Baron. What Major-General gave you that Order?

Axtell. There was Cromwel and Ireton.

Lord Chief Baron. The Lord Fairfax gave you no immediate Commiſſion.

Axtell. He gave my Superior Officers.

Lord Chief Baron. How do you know that?

Axtell. My Lord, becauſe they told me ſo, it was by his Command.

Lord Chief Baron. The Queſtion is now underſtood.

Axtell. The next Perſon that ſpeaks is Mr. Bodurdoe, and he ſays that I commanded the Soldiers at the King's Trial; and that a Lady that was ſpeaking was commanded Silence, to this Purpoſe; truly, my Lord, this is but the ſame as before.

Lord Chief Baron. You ſaid Shoot too.

Axtell. No, (my Lord,) I ſaid not any ſuch Word, or any Thing like it; I heard there was an Officer went up and intreated her to be ſilent; I ſay it is the ſame with the former, it is no Treaſon to deſire one to be ſilent. My Lord, the next Witneſs that ſpeaks in Evidence againſt me is Mr. Young; he ſays this, I bid the Soldiers cry for Juſtice; it is very like that Perſon, as well as Mr. Temple, might ſee me in the Croud ſpeaking to make the Soldiers quiet, I might repeat the Words that the People ſaid, repeat the Word Juſtice, or ſome ſuch Word, as the Peoples Words.

Lord Chief Baron. Remember how he repeats them; he ſaw you active in ſetting on the Soldiers to cry Juſtice.

Axtell. If I have taken them right; one ſays he heard me ſay ſuch Words as Juſtice, and that he ſaw me ſtrike Two or Three Soldiers; if in the Tumult ſuch a Word ſhould be ſtarted, I hearing of them I might ſtrike thoſe Soldiers that ſaid Juſtice, Juſtice, and might repeat the Words, I'll give you Juſtice, and ſo ſtrike them; that is a good Evidence that it might be a Repetition of their Words, and not any of mine own: They both ſpeak as to the Word Juſtice, but here was not Juſtice mentioned to any Perſon; I might repeat their own Words, and chaſtiſe them for thoſe Words; beſides this, (tho' I do not ſay the Word was ſpoken by me,) if the Word Juſtice had been ſpoken, my Lord, I hope it is no Treaſon to ſay, I deſire Juſtice; it is God's great Attribute, it is God's Ordinance, and that can be no Treaſon. I have read in Law-Books, (though but lately,) and I cannot find that the Word Juſtice ſhould be made Treaſon; then there is no Perſon to whom that adjunct doth belong. The next Evidence, my Lord, is Captain Jeonar, he ſaith I commanded a Guard; truly ſeveral Regiments took their Turns as they were commanded by the General, and I, as an Inferior Officer, was there; but that is no more than what was ſaid before, it was done by the Authority of the General; if I had not done it I had died by the Law of War: He ſaith, there was a Cry for Juſtice; I can ſay nothing more than I have formerly ſaid; it may be in the Tumult the Soldiers might ſay ſo, and I chaſtiſing of them, and repeating that in my Chaſtiſement, they might think they were mine own Words.

Lord Chief Baron. Mr. Axtell, I would help your Memory; he ſwears the laſt Day you encouraged the Soldiers to cry, Execution, Execution.

Axtell. For that Particular I am coming to it, (I thank your Lordſhip for helping me;) my Lord, for that of Execution, truly I cannot ſay whether I was there that Day or no; one Day I was commanded to be there with ſome Companies in Weſtminſter-Hall, but whether I was there any more than that one Time is the Queſtion: Admit I was there that Day, I was never there but when I was commanded; when the Colonel that commanded the Regiment was there, I, as an Inferiour Officer, ought to be there: I was there by a Special Order, and not by a Voluntary Act of mine own, and ſo it cannot be Compaſſing the Death of the King. For to the Word Execution, what can be the Senſe of this Word? Execution is a ſingle Word; thoſe People that ſtarted the Word Juſtice might put it in the Heads of the Soldiers, which I might ſtrike to command Silence;

they

they likewise might upon the same Account cry out Execution, and so to hinder all Tumults, and Hubbubs, and the like, in the Place; I might repeat their Words in correcting of them for it, I might say, I'le Justice you, I'le Excution you: But my Lord, this Word Execution of Justice, it is a Glorious Word; not that there can be an Inference that what they did I should say was Justice, or to approve of any Thing that they did, but only in General Execution of Justice, which, my Lord, relates not to any Person; possibly the rude People might be speaking (as hath been said before) in that Manner, and the Soldiers might take it up, and I might reprove them, and make Use of their own Words by Way of Repetion, I will Justice you, I will Execution you.

My Lord, in the next Place I do observe to speak that of Mr. Burden, he did observe to your Lordships and the Jury, my Country-men, my Brethren, with whom are the Issues of Life and Death, for whose Life they must answer before the Lord as to Righteousness, Judgment, and Equity; I say, my Lord, as to Mr. Burden, he tells you, that for my Sake he was Imprisoned; saith he, I have suffered much by him; and speaks it with much Indignation of Spirit; I have suffered, and been Imprisoned, by him, and afterwards he comes to speak his Evidence; how much his Evidence may be of Force I desire, my Lord, the Jury may consider of that; and then he comes and saith, I commanded a Guard at the Banqueting-House in White-Hall. Truly, my Lord, the Lord Fairfax commanded a Regiment to quarter there, and I, as an Inferior Officer, might be there: In the next Place, my Lord, he saith, I sent Elisha Axtell to fetch the Hangman; truly, my Lord, I wonder this Person is come from Ireland; (if this were so,) the Authority there would not send that Person with his great Evidence, as well as this Person; he may as well charge any Person with this as me: It is evident, Ireton, Hatrison, and Cromwel, they did all amongst themselves; I never was with them, amongst them, received no command from them, nor obeyed them; nor did any Thing but what I had Command for from the General, who, by the Law, I was bound to obey as a Soldier. I shall only observe one Thing more; this Person being so long a Prisoner, to Extricate himself out of his Imprisonment and Chains, poor Man! he may say more than is true. I wonder he should say I sent for the Executioner; I never knew of any Circumstance touching Consultation about his Death, or took him Prisoner. When they sent to me to be one of his Guard, I never would go; I humbly conceive there is nothing sticks upon me in this, considering the Circumstances, and the Words of the Person that spoke them.

My Lord, the next Person that speaks against me is Mr. Cook, he saith he heard me say, Thrust that Lady down that made a Disturbance in the Court, or Words to that Purpose; it is probable there might be a Desire of Silence. The next Evidence is Lieutenant Colonel Nelson, he saith, that upon a Discourse ——

Lord Chief Baron. I would put you in Remembrance, lest you should forget what Sir Purbeck Temple said, that by Leave of Persons under your Command he saw the Body of the King. It is only a Circumstance.

Axtell. I have heard there were Chirurgions, Physicians, and Halberteers, appointed by whom I know not; they had the Care of such Things, and had the keeping of him; he was locked up by them; no Body could come in but by them; I never had a Key; possibly Colonel Temple might come to me, quartering there, and desire me to speak to some Persons that had the Charge of it to let him in; whether I did or no I cannot remember; but if it were so I hope it will not amount to Treason. The last Thing given in Evidence against me is Mr. Nelson, he saith, that upon some Discourse between us, he was asking what Person cut off the King's Head, and that I should say Hewlet, &c. Truly, my Lord, I was never privy; and I appeal to Mr. Rushworth, if he were here, who was Secretary, if ever he saw me in any Council, to advise, or act, or any Thing in that Kind, in relation to the King's Trial, Sentence, or Execution; for me to know the Person that was imployed about the Execution it is strange, when (as I said before) they did all within themselves. I had no Knowledge thereof, and meddled not with any Thing but within my own Sphere as a Soldier under my Lord Fairfax, by Authority of Parliament. For naming any Person, truly, my Lord, it would be a wonder to me that I should name any Person to go to do any Person that Wrong and Injury, to say he was the Person; I must invent it, for I knew nothing of it. But by common Fame up and down the City it was said to be another Person; but who it was I cannot say, my Lord; but to all this that hath been said against me, there are but Two Things upon Two Witnesses that are placed upon me; the First, my Lord, here is Two Witnesses for crying Justice, and Execution.

Lord Chief Baron. I think you have more than Two to those Words.

Axtell. Not for both together.

Lord Chief Baron. No, but several for Justice.

Axtell. There is Three to that; I shall only say this to your Lordship, and this Jury, in whose Hand this Life of mine is, and is committed to them, either to acquit or condemn me; and God knows the Hearts of all Men, and my Innocency and Integrity; I shall say nothing to the Witnesses, it is a Day of Temptation; and I desire the Jury, my Countrymen, my Fellow Citizens, my Brethren, that they would well consider of it, the Word Execution and Justice; admit I had said them, (which, my Lord, I do not, I must not grant,) there being an Uproar of People, there such Words might be used, and possibly Soldiers might take them up from them, and chastising the Soldiers I might repeat the Words, I will Justice you, I will Execution you.

Lord Chief Baron. The Evidence is, that you beat them because they did not readily cry, Justice, Justice.

Axtell. It might be more probable I beat them because they did do it, I might chastise them for doing of it, and repeat it is a Reason for their Chastisement; and but admitting it was true, which I grant not, yet I hope Justice, and Execution of Justice, as it is so great an Attribute of God, by God's Laws, nor Man's Laws, is no where made Treason, but Mercy attends it, and Judgment attends the contrary; I leave it upon the Consciences of the Jury to weigh it carefully, how I could be guilty of Compassing and Imgining the Death of the King, when nothing is charged against me to be either of Council, Sentencing or Signing, or to be at the Execution; only one Man, as I told you before, he spoke something Wrathfully, and that he had suffered much, and therefore he is come over now, and saith I should send for the Executioner, which I never knew of, or had any Hand in sending for; how much Validity that hath I leave to the Jury; if it were so it is not Treason; for Words may make a Heretick, not a Traytor; I speak that by Way of Preface; I do humbly conceive that these theſe being only noted Words, Execution and Juſtice, the King not ſo much as named, nor any Thing done to it by me, I ſay, I conceive it doth not amount to Treaſon by the Law; and beſides, it is againſt the Law of the Great Judge, the Judge of Judges; all of us that are now, and are to come, ſhall ſtand before him to receive our Deſerts; I ſay it is againſt the Law of God to make me an Offender for a Word; for a Word; I have heard the Judges ſay, that the Laws of England are grounded upon the Laws of God, and the Laws of England are Laws of Mercy, not of Rigour: My Lord, if a Man ſhall be deſtroyed in his Life, in his Poſterity, for a Word, (admit the Thing had been ſo,) I leave upon the Conſciences of my Jury, before the Preſence of Jeſus Chriſt, and before whom they and I muſt come to be re-judged again at the Tribunal; and beſides, it is only Words, and Words uncertain; and Sir Edward Cook ſaith, he muſt declare plain Truth in Matter of Treaſon; nothing muſt be taken for Evidence that may be a Preſumption or Inference, or Strain of Wit; I hope upon this Conſideration that the Word Juſtice, fixed upon me by Two Witneſſes, may be taken up at Second or Third Hand from the People or Soldiers, by chaſtizing them for the Tumult. Then, my Lord, in the next Place, theſe Words were never put in Writing, and ſo not Treaſon; then, my Lord, there was never an Overt-Act done by me; for that Act of Indemnity that His Majeſty and both Houſes of Parliament paſſed, wherein they were pleaſed the very laſt to except me, I wonder'd when I came to be excepted of that Number; I do come back to the Place where I left, and that is the Overt-Act. My Lord, I would only bring it in in this Place; when I was excepted by the Houſe of Commons, one of the Twenty, I was excepted thus, not extending to Life; I went up and down free at Noon-day; I did not hide my ſelf; ingaging a Perſon that was one of His Majeſties Servants to do me a Courteſie, he promiſed me he would do it, and contrary to his Promiſe, he was pleaſed to bring the King's Warrant to carry me to the Tower; and after that I came to be excepted with that Black Catalogue of excepted Perſons, and to be brought to the Trial of the Law. Now (my Lord) I return to that Overt-act, as it was but Words uncertain, and they may be Words repeated from the Third or the Fourth Hand, for they were not put in Writing, according to that Act of Indemnity, which I underſtand the Meaning of to be thus; that for their execrable Treaſons, in Sentencing, Signing, or otherwiſe Inſtrumental, they are excepted out of this Act, and to be tried according to the Laws of this Nation. I unſterſtand that to be Inſtrumental, to be Inſtrumentally the Executioner of the King, I never had any Hand in that. Upon the whole, this is the Fact that is proved by Two Witneſſes; they heard me ſay, Juſtice and Execution, which muſt relate to the Execution of Juſtice, which by the Law of God is not Treaſon, eſpecially when there was not the Word King; for a Word to take away, and deſtroy ſo many, my Life, Wife, Children, and many Fatherleſs that are under the Charge of the Priſoner at the Bar, is very ſad; the Words I do not grant, but upon ſuch Probabilities as I have ſaid I might repeat them, I will Juſtice you, I will Execution you, and then the Words were not written; I ſay as Sir Edward Cooke ſaid, they may make a Heretick, but not a Traytor. The other Part of the Evidence is this, that I was there with Soldiers at Weſtminſter-Hall; I muſt ſay, if that be Treaſon to be guided by Judgment of Lords and Commons in Parliament, I muſt ſay, if that be Treaſon to take up Arms for a Parliament upon ſuch Grounds and Expoſitions of the Statute which they have made and publiſhed by their own Authority, if I am Guilty under the General, then the Parliament would be Guilty of Treaſon.

Lord Chief Baron. That you have ſpoke to —— I am loth to interrupt you.

Axtell. I thank your Lordſhip for informing me, but I was commanded to be there by my General; if I had not gone I muſt have died; I did only ſtand there for Preſervation of the Peace, in no other Senſe; if the General order me to be at ſuch a Rendezvous, I muſt be there; if I diſobeyed he would have condemned me by the Law of War. The next Thing againſt me material are theſe Two Things, that is, that I ſhould ſend one Eliſha Axtell for the Executioner; I muſt ſay it is moſt admirable ſuch Things ſhould be laid to my Charge; I hope your Lordſhips and the Jury do obſerve, he told you he ſuffered much, and a poor Man, under his Extremities, and Loſſes, and Sufferings, perhaps might ſtart ſome unadviſed Words, and being now ſent over, may aſcertain it. But doubtleſs this Eliſha Axtell being in Ireland, if by Command it had been ſo, would have been ſent over; truly I muſt ſay I had no Hand in the Buſineſs; it was left wholly to them amongſt themſelves, and whatever was done, or whatever was ſaid, it was ſaid and done by them; I never was acquainted with any Thing of that Nature; he ſaid he heard I ſhould ſend Eliſha Axtell for an Executioner; if Hear ſays may be Treaſon it will be a hard Leſſon; and, my Lord, Sir Edward Cooke ſaith, there muſt be Two Witneſſes, here is but one. It comes from ſuch a Man, my Lord, as the Providence of God, but I will ſay no more as to that, but pray the Jury will take Notice of it.

Lord Chief Baron. You need not doubt of it, it ſhall be taken Notice of this of Burden.

Axtell. Now, my Lord, I have but Two or Three Words more, the Statute of the 25th of Edward the Third it doth intend private Perſons, my Lord, here is my Commiſſion.

Lord Chief Baron. It is owned you had it from your General.

Axtell. My Lord, His Majeſty is pleaſed to ſay in His Gracious Letter, we do by theſe Preſents declare, That we do grant a Free and General Pardon to all our Subjects, of what Degree or Quality whatſoever, who within Four Days after the publiſhing hereof ſhall lay hold upon this our Grace and Favour, excepting only ſuch Perſons as ſhall hereafter be excepted by Parliament, that is, a Parliament called by his own Writ. You know this Parliament——

Lord Chief Baron. Mr. Axtell, I would not interrupt you to that, but this very Objection was made by one of the Priſoners before; this Anſwer was given, Firſt, the King's Declaration is not a Pardon in Point of Law, it muſt be under the Broad-Seal, but God forbid but it ſhould bind in Honour. You inſtanced in the Word Parliament, what was meant by the Word Parliament: You muſt know this, the Exigency of the Times were ſuch, that there were many Noble Perſons that took the Advantage to aſſemble themſelves together to reinſtate the King; they did that which was juſt and lawful, according to the Exigency of the Times; this Declaration he ſent to the Two Houſes, he called them his Two Houſes; ſo that it appears clearly and manifeſtly they were then ſitting, they being accepted by the King, and owned by him; and they did ſit in Way of Convention, according as a Parliament, and his Majeſty ſent his Letter to them; and theſe are the Perſons that have thought fit to except you out of that Act.

Axtell. My Lord, may I ſpeak to that any further?

Lord Chief Baron. If you do it will be over-ruled.

Axtell. I ſubmit —— with Submiſſion to the Providence of God; I did apply to Sir Harbottle Grimſton for the Mercy and Favour of his Majeſty, according to his Declaration, and here is Sir Harbottle's own Hand for a Certificate.

Lord Chief Baron. That is allowed you, that you did claim that Benefit within the Time, but you may remember that it was referred to thoſe Two Houſes of Parliament, they were to conſider who was fit for the Pardon, and you are by them excepted out by Name: Your Queſtion now is no more but whether Guilty? Or, Not Guilty? And theſe are but extravagant Diſcourſes that you ſay otherwiſe, and rather do you Harm than Good.

Axtell. I hope you will pardon me, my Lord; I hope I have ſpoken to clear the Point, the Fact charged by your Lordſhip, and before the Jury; and I hope the Lord will give the Jury a Memory of it, and a right Underſtanding in what I have ſaid for my own Defence. My Lord, the next Thing I have to offer is this, to expound that Act of Parliament, that it was the Intention of his Majeſty and Parliament that all ſhould be excepted, but thoſe Guilty of Councelling, Signing, or Sentencing. Truly, my Lord, I humbly conceive, I being none of thoſe, am not Guilty of Treaſon. I ſhall only ſpeak one Word to my Jury, That they will remember what I have ſaid, that there is but Two Things, Two Witneſſes, as to Juſtice and Execution; that it relates to no Perſon, but in General; and then I do not own the Things, but poſſibly they might hear ſuch Words, I taking of them up upon a Rebound, reproved the Soldiers; for the other, that I ſhould ſend one for the Executioner, (he heard ſo,) and that I ſhould name who was the Executioner, I would not have that Perſon, or any other, to ſuffer for that.

Lord Chief Baron. That is not at all preſſed upon you, not as to any Charge.

Axtell. I thank your Lordſhip. I am very Ignorant.

Lord Chief Baron. Have you done, Sir?

Axtell. I leave the Matter to the Jury, in whoſe Hands I and my little Ones, and Family, are left; I only ſay this to you, remember your Anceſtors, remember your Poſterity. I never heard it before that Words were Treaſon. In Queen Mary's Time Throckmorton was acquitted for Words by the Jury. Gentlemen of the Jury, I leave my Caſe, my Life, my All, in your Hands.

Lord Chief Baron. Gentlemen of the Jury, there hath been ſeveral Things offered by the Priſoner at the Bar, as near as my Memory will give me leave in ſo long a Diſcourſe, I ſhall repeat all Things which he ſaith for himſelf, and which are ſaid againſt him. There are ſome Things that he ſeems to utter as tending to Matter of Law, and ſomething meerly of Fact, proper only for you of the Jury. For Matter of Law he hath urged ſeveral Things for himſelf, not by Way of Juſtification of the Fact, (I muſt do him that Right,) but in Excuſe of himſelf; and I hope his Conſcience hath ſo wrought upon him, that he is of Opinion the Fact was a horrid Fact, which was ſo indeed.

For that which he hath ſaid for himſelf, Firſt, he doth alledge to have his Commiſſion from the Lord Fairfax, my Lord Fairfax had his Commiſſion from the Two Houſes of Parliament, and this Gentleman's was in March the Beginning of the Year 1648. He ſaith what he did was in Obedience to his Superiors, as a Soldier; that he never conſulted or adviſed about any Thing of the Trial or Execution of his Majeſty. For this Point, it hath already been ſpoken to, Gentlemen; for that which hath been ſpoken to at large heretofore I muſt repeat it here that he may know it, That no Perſon whatſoever, no Community, not the People, either Collectively or Repreſentatively, have any Coercive Power over the King; neither the Lord Fairfax, his General, nor he, nor any other Perſon, could be excuſed for this horrid Fact of bringing the King to Trial, no Perſon, as I ſaid before, nor Community, have any ſuch Power. The Law-books which he hath lately ſeen, (and truly he hath employed his Time well in that,) the Law-books tell us, that whereas the Two Spencers had broached a damnable and deteſtable Principle, that the Homage was only due to the King, in Reſpect to his Crown; that if he did not demean himſelf according to ſuch and ſuch Rules, his Subjects might rule him per aſpertee, by Aſperity and Sharpneſs; but this was condemned by Two Acts of Parliament; they both appear in my Lord Cooke in Calvin's Caſe. I do not go to repeat all the Evidence that might clear this Truth; I ſay, had there been any ſuch Thing, but it hath been told him there was no ſuch Thing in Fact. My Lord Fairfax's Commiſſion was for the Preſervation of the King, as well as for the Liberties of the People. The 11th of Richard 2. Robert de Vere, and others, for levying a War was puniſhed, but this Gentleman was not charged for levying of War. If either of the Houſes of Parliament ſhould command ſuch a Thing as tends to the Death of the King, it would be void in itſelf. Something he let fall of the Parliament not being diſſolved. My Maſters, for that you have heard ſome of my Lords declare how, and in what manner, this was an Authority of Parliament, but it was clearly nothing at all; this Gentleman goes by Virtue of a Power, from the Lord Fairfax. The next Thing he urges in Point of Law was this, he comes by Way of Dilemma; ſaith he, either I muſt obey my General, or die by the Law of War. He goes further, and urges the Statute of 11 Henry 7. He comes further, and ſaith, in the 25th Edward 3. that concerns ſingle Perſons, truly it concerns every Man. The Indictment, you ſee how it is laid, it is for Imagining and Compaſſing the Death of the King. The Overt-acts in the Indictment, you have heard what they are; there muſt be more than one Witneſs for Treaſon. It is very true, but if one Perſon prove one Thing, another Perſon another; if one ſwear he did cry, Juſtice, Juſtice, Execution, Execution, and another ſwear ſome other Part, Gentlemen, this was here before delivered to you for an Overt-act. It is any thing that opens and makes it appear to the Jury that he did do the Things for which he is Indicted; I ſay any one of theſe that they did meet together, and did conſult in order to the putting the King to Death. That they did meet in a Traiterous Aſſembly about the King's Death; I ſhall ſay no more; you need not I think go from the Bar.

The Jury go together, and after a little Conſultation among themſelves they returned to their Places.

Clerk of the Crown. Gentlemen of the Jury, are you agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Clerk. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Clerk. Daniel Axtell, Hold up thy Hand. Gentlemen, look upon the Priſoner at the Bar: How ſay you, you, is he Guilty of High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands Indicted, and hath been Arraigned? Or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Clerk. Look to him Keeper. What Goods and Chattels?

Jury. None to our Knowledge.

The Tryal of Colonel HACKER, on the Fifteenth of October, 1660, at the Seſſions Houſe in the Old-Baily.

Clerk of the Crown. Set Francis Hacker to the Bar, which was done accordingly.

Clerk. Francis Hacker, Hold up thy Hand. Theſe Men that were laſt called are to paſs upon you, &c. If you will Challenge all, or any of them, you muſt Challenge them when they come to the Book, before they are Sworn.

Lord Chief Baron. You may Challenge 35 Peremptorily, but no more.

Hacker. My Lord, I ſhall Challenge none.

Tho. Bide, Rob. Sheppard, Will. Dod, Sir Tho. Allein, Sir Hen. Wroth, Tho. Morris, Ralph Halſal, John Galliard, John Nichol, Tho Uſman, Tho. Nicol, Chriſtopher Abdy, in all Twelve. The Jury Called and Sworn.

Clerk of the Crown. Make Proclamation. If any Man can inform my Lords the Kings Juſtices, &c.

Clerk. Francis Hacker, Hold up thy Hand; look upon the Priſoner you that are Sworn of this Jury. You ſhall underſtand that Francis Hacker, Priſoner at the Bar, ſtands Indicted, &c.

Mr. Serjeant Keeling. My Lords, and Gentlemen of this Jury, Francis Hacker, the Priſoner at the Bar, ſtands Indicted, amongſt others, for Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the late King Charles the Firſt of Happy Memory. The Compaſſing and Imagining is the Treaſon itſelf; the other Points, as Convening, Aſſembling, Meeting together, and the actual Villany that followed all theſe, are but as Evidences of that Imagination. As to this Perſon at the Bar our Evidence will be thus; we ſhall make it appear to you that he was one of the Perſons that were upon the Guard, and kept the King a Priſoner, that he might be ſure to be brought to that Mock Court of Injuſtice. Then it will appear to you that this Priſoner at the Bar was highly Truſted by all thoſe Miſcreants that thirſted for the King's Blood, by their Bloody Warrant directed to him and others, to take the Kings Perſon into Cuſtody, and to ſee Execution done. This was the Perſon that kept him till he brought him to that Fatal Stage. That this Warrant was lately brought from his own Houſe by his own Wife to the Houſe of Lords; and then we ſhall ſhew you that this Perſon ſet his Hand to the Warrant to the Executioner for Execution. That he did not do it ignorantly nor unwillingly, for he heard the Warrant read. We ſhall make it appear that he was upon the Scaffold, and had the Axe in his Hand.

Council. Crier, call Holland Simpſon, Colonel Tomlinſon, Mr. Nunnelly, Mr. Nutley, Hercules Huncks, and Benj. Francis, who were all Sworn as Witneſſes.

Council. Mr. Simpſon, ſpeak your Knowledge of the Employment of the Priſoner touching the Trial and Execution of the King.

Hacker. My Lords, I will confeſs what I know in this Caſe, to ſave your Lordſhips the Trouble. I confeſs I was upon the Guard, and had a Warrant to keep the King for his Execution. (The Warrant being ſhewn to the Priſoner, he confeſſed that to be the Warrant.

Council. After you had that Warrant brought to you, did you by Virtue of that direct another Warrant for Execution of the King? Did you not take the King (then Priſoner) from the Cuſtody of Colonel Tomlinſon.

Hacker. No, Sir.

Council. We ſhall prove it; the Warrant was read, At the High Court of Juſtice for Trial, &c. My Lord at the time that this Warrant was Signed, the Perſon of the King was in the Cuſtody of Col. Tomlinſon; Did not you take and demand from Col. Tomlinſon the Perſon of the King as ſoon as you received that Warrant?

Hacker. No, Sir, I demanded him not.

Council. Col. Tomlinſon, tell my Lords the manner of that Buſineſs.

Tomlinſon. My Lords, and Gentlemen of this Jury, I ſhall, as my Memory enables me, make a faithful Narrative of this Buſineſs: I had indeed to do with the Guard that had to do with the Perſon of the King about St. James's. Being then an Officer of the Army, a Colonel of Horſe, when the King came to St. James's, it was obſerv'd by ſome that there was too great an Acceſs of People admitted to the King; and within One Day or Two after there was a Party of Halberteers appointed for the ſtricter obſerving the Guard; they were commanded by Three Gentlemen, of whom this Priſoner at the Bar was One; the Orders every Day for removing the Perſon of the King were commonly directed to Four Perſons, and thoſe were my ſelf, Lt. Col. Cobbet, Capt. Merryman and one more; but the Guards that ſtill went along were the Halberteers. So that every Day when the King did go to Weſtminſter, he went to Sir Robert Cotton's Houſe, and ſo far I went with him, and no farther; I never went with him, nor ſaw him, at that pretended High Court of Juſtice. When he uſed to go to the High Court of Juſtice, commonly (every Time indeed) the Serjeant, Serjeant Dendy, (as I remember his Name was,) he uſed to come and demand that the King ſhould go to the High Court of Juſtice, and Col. Hacker did ordinarily go with him, with the Halberteers. It was my Cuſtom to ſtay in the Room till he came back again; theſe Orders continued during the Time of his Trial. After the Sentence was given, on the Day whereon the Execution was to be done, it was ordered, (which Order may be produced if ſignificant,) that the Guards that were for the Security of the Perſon of the King ſhould ceaſe when a Warrant from the High Court of Juſtice for the Execution ſhould be produced: I would not omit any Thing that I well remember; and this I remember, that the Night before the Execution the King called me into his Chamber, and told me ſeveral Things; I will take the Occaſion to Trouble you with a ſhort Diſcourſe of it; he told me of ſome Legacies he had given; he told me he had prepared ſomething that he would ſpeak the next Day; and in the cloſe of it he deſired me that I would not leave him; (for I ſpeak it in Truth,) there were many times ſeveral Incivilities offered to him; and tho' I was upon a Duty that was of a harſh and unpleaſing Nature to me, and did deſire ſeveral Times to be releaſed from it, (as I believe is well known to ſome,) yet I did not admit any Time that any Incivility ſhould be offered to him; People would take Tobacco before him, and keep their Hats on before him, I always check'd them for it; he was pleaſed to have a Conſideration of that Care that I had in that Capacity I then ſtood. That very Night before his Death he was pleaſed to give me a Legacy, which was a Gold Tooth-picker and Caſe that he kept in his Pocket. The next Day, when the Warrant came, the Guard of Halberteers went with him through St. James's Park, I was preſent, walking near the King, the Biſhop of London, (now of Canterbury) was with him, and ſome others. As we were going through the Park he was pleaſed to Diſcourſe ſomething of what he had been Diſcourſing before, touching his Burial; he wiſhed that the Duke of Richmond and ſome others that he ſhould bring ſhould take Care of it. That Morning in the Park he told me he had been thinking of what he had ſaid the Night before. He told me had ſome Thoughts that his Son might come to Bury him, and deſired he might not ſuddenly be Buried; I gave him Aſſurance I would communicate his Deſire, and ſo I did: When he came to White-Hall he went into a Room in the Gallery, (I know not the Name,) the Guard ſtood in the outer Room there. There was a Gentleman that came to me there, and told me he was endeavouring to preſent a Letter from the Prince to the King, and told me he could not get an Opportunity; I ſaid he ſhould not want an Opportunity if I could help him; it was Mr. Henry Seymour; it was delivered, and the King read it, and he gave ſeveral Things in Charge to Mr. Seymour to acquaint the Prince with, and was pleaſed to mention to him ſomething of Civility that I had ſhewn him in his Impriſonment, the Effect and Fruit of it I find, and do moſt humbly acknowledge before all the World my Thanks to his moſt Gracious Majeſty the King, and to the Lords and Commons. After Mr. Seymour was gone from him, (I do not well remember the Time, whether it was Twelve, One, or Two a Clock,) Col. Hacker came in, and there was preſent with him the Two other Gentlemen that were named in the Warrant, (as I remember,) I am ſure Col. Hacker, (if my Memory fail me not.) did produce the Warrant. Myſelf, and thoſe Gentlemen that were concerned in the former Orders, looked upon this Warrant, by which the Orders which he had were at the End. I muſt confeſs I did not, nor none of thoſe did tell him, that the Orders for Security of his Perſon were at an End, but Col. Hacker did go in to him, and after a little while Col. Hacker comes to the Door, and the King was coming forth, and he told me that the King deſired I ſhould go along with him; and indeed the Night before, when the King told me that he had prepared ſomething to ſpeak, he deſired I would not leave him. So Col. Hacker led him forth, the Biſhop of London followed him, and I followed the Biſhop of London; the Guards were prepared without, and they went on to the Scaffold; when we came to the Scaffold I went ſo far as to the Entrance upon it; the King was upon it, and had looked a little while about it, and was thinking to have ſpoken over, but he turned about to me, and began to direct his Speech to me. I cannot trouble you with what the King ſaid, for I cannot remember it; but that Col. Hacker was there in Proſecution of that Warrant, and upon that Warrant our Orders were at an End, I do averr.

Council. You delivered him upon that Warrant, did you?

Tomlinſon. He went and received the King upon that Warrant; it was a Chamber that was known then by the Name of the Horn-Chamber, and there the King was in the inner Room; this is the Subſtance of all.

Council. We will trouble you with One or Two Witneſſes more.

Council. Mr. Tomlinſon, did Mr. Hacker, or his Soldiers, take Tobacco to the Offence of the King?

Tomlinſon. I do not ſay that any Tobacco was taken there by Mr. Hacker, but the Soldiers would be ſtepping in, and take Tobacco at his Chamber in St. James's, and committed other Incivilities.

Council. We have proved that the Priſoner did demand, and had the Perſon of the King: Now we will prove to you that himſelf had the Boldneſs to make a Warrant in purſuance of the former, for the Execution of the King.

Council. Crier, call Mr. Huncks. (He being Sworn ſaid)

Huncks. My Lords, and Gentlemen of the Jury, that Day the King died, a little before the Hour he died, I was in Ireton's Chamber, where Ireton and Harriſon were in Bed together, there was Cromwel, Col. Hacker, Lieut. Col. Phayer, Axtell, and myſelf, ſtanding at the Door; this Warrant for the Execution was there produced, and you (looking upon Mr. Hacker at the Bar,) were reading of it, but Cromwel addreſſed himſelf to me, commanding me, by Vertue of that Warrant, to draw up an Order for the Executioner; I refuſed it, and upon refuſing of it there hapned ſome croſs Paſſages. Cromwel would have no Delay. There was a little Table that ſtood by the Door, and Pen, Ink, and Paper, being there, Cromwel ſtepped and writ, (I conceive he wrote that which he would have had me to write:) As ſoon as he had done writing, he gives the Pen over to Hacker; Hacker, he ſtoops and did write, (I cannot ſay what he writ,) away goes Cromwel, and then Axtell; we all went out, afterwards they went into another Room.

Council. What followed?

Huncks. Immediately the King came out, and was Murther'd.

Mr. Secretary Morrice. Mr. Huncks, you did tell us in the Tower, (when we were ſent by His Majeſties Council to examine you, and others there,) that Colonel Hacker did then Sign that Warrant for nominating and appointing the Execution.

Huncks. My Lord, Cromwel comes to me, and bids me write a Warrant for that Purpoſe; I refuſing of it, Cromwel writes himſelf, and Hacker writing on the ſame Paper, what ſhould I conceive but that it was the Warrant? (the King preſently after coming to the Scaffold.)

Council. Did Cromwel give you no bad Names becauſe you would not write that Order? Did not he ſay you were a Coward?

Huncks. He ſaid I was a froward peeviſh Fellow.

Council. Did Hacker only write his Name, or give Directions, in the drawing up of the Order?

Huncks. I conceive he only writ his Name.

Council. My Lord, we have only that Eye-witneſs.

Huncks. Hacker confeſſed to the Gentleman Jaylor of the Tower, that if he did do it he did it by Order.

Mr. Secretary Morrice and the L. Anneſly Sworn.

Council. Mr. Secretary, we deſire you would be pleaſed to tell my Lords what Colonel Hacker, the Priſoner at the Bar, did confeſs to you, and others, touching this Buſineſs.

Mr. Secretary. When Colonel Huncks (for that Title he now aſſumes,) was brought over out of Ireland, and committed to the Tower of London, there was Three of the Council, by Order of the Board, ſent to examine him, Sir Anthony Aſhly-Cooper, Mr. Anneſly, and myſelf: In Obedience to that Order we repaired to the Tower, and had Col. Huncks brought before us; we told him, that he (being one of thoſe which was appointed by Warrant from the Suppoſitious High Court of Juſtice to carry on the Execution of the King, and ſee it done,) muſt needs know who was the Executioner: Whereunto he anſwered, that he, for his Part, did not know who was the Executioner, for the Warrant whereby the Executioner was nominated and appointed was refuſed to be ſigned by him, but Colonel Hacker ſigned it, and therefore Colonel Hacker muſt know it. Accordingly upon our Return we made our Report to the Board, and upon this there was an Order that Col. Hacker ſhould be ſent for, taken into Cuſtody, and brought before the Lords of the Council: Accordingly he was apprehended, and the ſame Three Counſellors were ſent down to examine him. We took him into a private Room, and examined him, and told him, (amongſt other Things,) that he being the Man that (as we are informed,) did Sign the Warrant for the nominating and appointing the Executioner, doubtleſs he muſt needs know who that was; at firſt he ſaid he did not Sign this Warrant: I told him I would have him well adviſed what he ſaid; for if you deny it it will be proved by ſuch a Man, naming Colonel Huncks, and that you will do yourſelf a great Prejudice if you deny that; ſaith he, I do believe I did Sign the Warrant for appointing the Executioner; this is all I can ſay.

tion

Lord Anneſly. Gentlemen of the Jury, it is very true as you have been told already, that I was amongſt thoſe that the Council ſent to the Tower of London, firſt to examine Colonel Huncks, and Mr. Cook, that hath been condemned, Hulet, and ſome other Priſoners. We did examine Colonel Huncks, and he did by his Examination acquit himſelf from Signing that Warrant that he was charged with, being one of the Three appointed to ſee Execution done; but they appointed another to Sign the Warrant. (Colonel Huncks refuſing,) and upon his refuſing, (as he ſaid,) Cromwel, that urged him to it, ſaid he was a cowardly fellow, or ſomething to that Purpoſe: When we examined him about the Perſon in the Frock, he ſaid he knew nothing of that, but that Colonel Hacker Signed that Warrant for Execution; this Examination being reported to the Council, the Lords ſent for Hacker. I think upon Notice Colonel Hacker came; he had been of the Army, and continued till that Time an Officer. When he came thither, the Lords of the Council having Notice of it, commanded the ſame Perſons formerly appointed to go out and examine him; we had him into a little Room belonging to the Clerks of the Council, and examined him to that Point concerning the Man that cut off the King's Head, whether he knew any Thing of it? He did affirm poſitively he did not know; we told him that he was the Man by Teſtimony that Signed a Warrant for Execution of the King, and then certainly he muſt know the Perſon that he appointed by his Warrant; he ſaid, if I did Sign any Warrant it was by Command of the General; that being but Hypothetical, we thought it meet to make it more poſitive, whereupon we asked him whether he was the Man that Signed the Warrant? Or no? Thereupon, (as I remember, and as the Examination, which was all written with mine own Hand, doth help my Memory,) he did ſay he did believe he did Sign ſuch a Warrant; thereupon he was asked further, how could it be poſſible that he could forget the Man if he Signed the Warrant; he knew who the Man was that was appointed; he ſaid for that, that he did believe the Warrant was read to him, and that therein the Man's Name might be, but he could not now remember his Name; this was the Effect of his Examination and Confeſſion.

Council. Mr. Francis, did you ſee Colonel Hacker at the Time of the Execution upon the Scaffold?

Francis. Yes, I did ſee him as a Principal Commander there; I was coming out of Weſtminſter into London, about half an Hour before the King came upon the Scaffold; coming near the Scaffold, as ſoon as I was engaged in the Throng, (when I had paſſed about Eight or Ten Yards,) I could not paſs backward nor forward; I was inforced to ſtand there: During that Time I ſaw the Scaffold, and the Ax, and the Block taken up by divers People; and principally I ſaw a Man that is not here, he is in Cuſtody, I ſaw him take it up, and try it with his Thumb, and lay it down; this was James Berry, he came off, and came not upon the Scaffold again, unleſs diſguiſed.

Council. Did you ſee Hacker there? Did you ſee him upon the Scaffold when the King came on?

Francis. I did ſee him, he was there; His Majeſty came to the Side of the Scaffold next to St. James's; he looked that Way and ſmiled; after a while the Block and Ax lying down about the middle of the Scaffold, there was a Black Cloth hung about the Rails of the Scaffold.

Council. We have another Evidence, the Priſoner hath confeſſed enough; but we have proved that he had the King in Cuſtody; he confeſſed that he believed he did Sign the Warrant, and that he at the Time of Execution was there to manage it. What do you ſay for yourſelf?

Hacker. Truly, my Lord, I have no more to ſay for myſelf, but that I was a Soldier, and under Command, and what I did was by that Commiſſion you have read.

Lord Chief Baron. Can you deny any Thing that Mr. Secretary and Mr. Anneſly have declared?

Hacker. I cannot tell what I might then ſay, the Gentlemen were very ſtrict with me; truly I have been no Counſellor nor Adviſor, nor Abettor of it, but in Obedience to the Command over me I did act. My Deſire hath been ever for the Welfare of my Countrey, and that Civil Power might ſtand.

Lord Chief Baron. Have you yet reſolved who you gave the Warrant for Execution to?

Hacker. No, my Lord, I delivered none.

Lord Chief Baron. But you know who it was directed to.

Hacker. No indeed, my Lord; be pleas'd to ask Col. Huncks whether I read this Warrant or no.

Lord Chief Baron. This is all you have to ſay for yourſelf?

Hacker. Yes, my Lord.

Lord Chief Baron. Then Col. Hacker, for that which you ſay for yourſelf, that you did it by Command, you muſt underſtand that no Power on Earth could Authorize ſuch a Thing, no Command in ſuch a Caſe can excuſe you. There is a Twofold Obedience, a Paſſive-Obedience, to ſuffer rather than do Things unlawful; and an Active Obedience, to do that only which is lawful; and therefore this will not excuſe your Obedience to thoſe unlawful Commands.—Gentlemen of the Jury, you ſee the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands Indicted for Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the late King; and there are ſeveral open Acts ſet forth in the Indictment, which tend to prove that Matter; one is Aſſembling and Meeting together, another is Sitting upon the King, another Sentencing, and at laſt concludes with the Murther of the King, as the Conſequence of all. Any Thing that tends to the proving of this Compaſſing and Imagining his Death in any one of theſe Particulars, that is an Evidence to you to prove the whole Indictment. This Gentleman was Commander of Halberteers; Col. Tomlinſon ſaith, that though he

he kept the Guards that were about the King's Person, this Gentleman, with Two other Persons, brought Halberteers, that there might not be such frequent Access as formerly to the King; there is one Act. He commands these Halberteers at that Time, when the Business was in Agitation, before that High Court, as they called it. You see after the Sentence was given that he was one of the Persons to whom the Warrant for Execution was directed; you see afterwards there was a consulting together, Cromwel, Ireton, Harrison, and Axtell, were in the Chamber, when Col. Huncks refused to Sign; the Prisoner signed the Warrant, but knows not the Person to whom it was directed: You see besides Col. Tomlinson's Testimony, who saith further, that when they were discharged, Col. Hacker went in, and the King was brought out presently after to that Fatal Place. Col. Huncks Swears, that when the Warrant was offered to him he refused it; that Hacker, the Prisoner at the Bar, signed a Warrant, though he doth not remember the Name of the Person to whom; it appears by Two Witnesses (honourable Persons) he confessed he signed it, but he did not know the Person to whom directed. You see another Witness, Benjamin Francis, he saith he saw Hacker upon the Scaffold with the King.

He doth not deny the Fact; you need go no further, it is very plain he had a Hand in this Business, a principal Agent in it; he that brought the King to the Scaffold, he that had the Care in managing that Business, he that signed the Warrant to the Executioner, either he is Guilty of Compassing the Death of the King, or no Man can be said to be Guilty.

The Jury went together, and after some little Consultation returned to their Places.

Clerk of the Crown. Gentlemen of the Jury, are you agreed on your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Clerk. Who shall say for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Clerk. Francis Hacker, Hold up thy Hand. Gentlemen, look upon the Prisoner at the Bar, how say you, is he Guilty of High-Treason, whereof he stands Indicted, and hath been Arraigned? Or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Clerk. Look to him Keeper.

Clerk. What Goods and Chattels, &c.

Jury. None that we know of.

The Tryal of WILLIAM HULET, on the Fifteenth of October, 1660, at the Sessions House in the Old-Baily.

Clerk of the Crown. Set William Hulet to the Bar, (who was brought accordingly,) William Hulet, alias Houlet, Hold up thy Hand. Those Persons that were last called of the Jury are to pass, &c. if you will challenge them, or any of them, you must Challenge them when they come to the Book before they be Sworn.

Lord Chief Baron. Understand you have Power to Challenge Five and Thirty Men, and not above; you may Challenge them without Cause shewn. If you have Cause for any other you may Challenge them also. If you will have Pen, Ink, and Paper, you may have them.

Hulet. Truly, my Lord, I cannot write but a very little, I shall not need them. I did not understand my Indictment well, I desire to hear it again.

Lord Chief Baron. You will hear it read again.

Clerk. Sir Thomas Allen, Sir Henry Wroth, Tho. Bide, Robert Sheppard, Thomas Morris, Ralph Halsal, John Gallyard, John Nichol, Thomas Usman, Christopher Abdy, William Dod, in all Twelve. Jury Called and Sworn.

Clerk of the Crown. William Hulet, alias Houlet, Hold up thy Hand, You Gentlemen that are Sworn, look upon the Prisoner.

Clerk. You shall understand that he stands Indicted of High-Treason, by the Name of William Hulet, alias Houlet, late of Westminster in the County of Middlesex, Gent. for that he as a false Traytor, &c. (here the Indictment was read,) unto which Indictment he hath pleaded not Guilty, and for his Trial hath put himself upon God and the Countrey, which Countrey you are: Now your Charge is to enquire, &c.

Sir Edward Turner. May it please your Lordships, and you Gentlemen that are Sworn of this Jury, we are now entering upon the last Act in this sad Tragedy of the Murther of the late King; there have been before you some of the Judges, the Council, the Chaplain, and the Guard; this Prisoner at the Bar, in the last Place, was one of those which came with a Frock on his Body, and a Vizor on his Face, to do the Work. The Course of our Evidence will be this, First, we shall prove by Witnesses that saw him, and knew him, that he was thus disguised; he hath confest that he was upon the Scaffold, that he hath had several Preferments; and I fear it will appear that it was he that gave that Fatal Blow; for he hath confessed he had an Hundred Pounds given him for his Service therein; and we doubt not but to pluck off his Vizor by and by. The Indictment is for Compassing and Imagining the Death of his late Majesty of Glorious Memory; if we prove to you any Circumstantial Overt-act whereby you shall be convinced of this, you are to find him Guilty.

Richard Gittens Sworn.

Council. Mr. Gittens, tell my Lord and the Jury what you know concerning the Prisoner at the Bar.

Gittens. The Thing is this, my Lord, this Gentleman at the Bar and myself were both in a Regiment in One Company as Serjeants about Twelve or Thirteen Years together. About a Day or Two before the King came to the Scaffold, Colonel Hewson did give Notice to a Lieutenant that we should come to him, about 38 of us, and he put us all to our Oaths, that we should say nothing of what they did; he Swore us to the Book; after he had Sworn us, he asked us if we would undertake to do such an Act; if we would we should have an Hundred Pounds down, and Preferment in the Army as long as that stood, and the Parliament. Afterwards we refused every Person, we thought Captain Hulet did refuse; after all refused, it seems he did undertake to do the Deed. When the King was brought on the Scaffold, we were in Scotland-yard, and they were upon the Guard in the Banqueting-Chamber; when they were there I laid down my Arms, and got into the Company; Captain Webb kept the Guard, with his Halbert in his Hand, by the Scaffold, and I did bustle to come near to them; then I returned back. Hulet (as far as I can guess) when the King came on the Scaffold for his Execution, and said, Executioner, is the Block fast? Then he fell upon his Knees.

Council. Who did?

Gettins. Hulet, to ask him forgiveness; by his Speech I thought it was he; Captain Atkins, who would not undertake to do this Fact, I told him I would would not do it for all the City of London; no, nor I neither for all the World, ſaith Atkins; you ſhall ſee Hulet quickly come to Preferment; and preſently after he was made Captain-Lieutenant.

Council. Was he with his Regiment that Day?

Gittens. We could not ſee him with the Regiment all that Day; he was never abſent at any Time before.

Council. Did you know his Voice?

Gittens. Yes, Sir.

Council. Did you mark the Proportion of his Body, or his Habit, what Diſguiſe he was in?

Gittens. He had a Pair of Freeze Trunk Breeches, and a Vizor, with a Gray Beard, and after that Time Colonel Hewſon called him Father Gray Beard, and moſt of the Army beſides, he cannot deny it.

Hulet. I deſire as to this Witneſs; he doth alledge that he and I were Serjeants in One Company, which I deny; he was not in that Company I was in; I deſire to know of him how he comes to know that I was there at that Time.

Gittens. By your Voice.

Hulet. I will Swear that this Man was with the Regiment under the Scaffold; where were you at that Time when the Act was done?

Gittens. Where was I? By Captain Webb.

Hulet. Where was he?

Gittens. At the Door of the Banqueting-houſe.

Hulet. Was you on the Scaffold, or no, Sir?

Gittens. I was on the Scaffold End.

Hulet. My Lord, I deſire you to conſider what this perſon ſaith, that he was upon the Guard in Scotland-yard, and at the Scaffold with Captain Webb. My Lord, I deſire again, whereas he ſaid I had a Gray Beard, let any Man beſides himſelf ſay that ever I was called by that Name Gray Beard, throughout the Regiment. Stammers Sworn.

Council. What have you to ſay concerning the Priſoner at the Bar.

Stammers. He was a Captain Lieutenant to Colonel Hewſon's Troop; when I had entered my ſelf into that Troop I was a while in Dublin, and I was commanded by the Priſoner at the Bar, I and the reſt, to march to a Place called Lutterels-Town, about 5 Miles beyond Dublin; the Priſoner at the Bar came thither to us Two Days after, then being in his Chamber he ſent for me up; I went up and ſate down; he examined where I had ſerved: I told him I did formerly belong to the Lord of Inchiqueen; he asked me if I was ever in the King's Army? With that he walks about the Room Two or Three Turns; ſaith he, I was the Man that Beheaded King Charles, and for doing it I had an Hundred Pounds, ſaying, I was a Serjeant at that Time.

Hulet. I deſire to ask him a Queſtion; I confeſs — (what is your Name?)

Council. Stammer, his Name is Stammers.

Hulet. Such a one was under my Command: I think I have not ſeen you theſe Eight Years: I deſire to know when theſe Words were ſpoken, and the Place.

Stammers. I ſay in Lutterels Town, in your own Chamber, and that was Nine or Ten Years ago.

Hulet. It is about Eight Years ago ſince I left that Command: Who was by at that Time?

Stammers. No body.

Hulet. 'Tis ſtrange: How long had you been in the Troop before?

Stammers. I was in Dublin about a Fortnights time, then you ſent for me, and I came to Lutterels Town; the firſt Time that I came to the Troop was at Dublin, and then you came to me with Two Orders from Hewſon, and then you did pretend you was Brother to one Mr. Chambers, and then we went and quartered in Lutterels Town.

Hulet. My Lord, his Examination in Ireland and this doth not agree; you did deny this before Baldwin a Trooper; I deſire his Examination may be read, (which was accordingly read, and agreed with the Teſtimony now given,) I deſire he may mention what Man that was that I ſent for him.

Stammers. I cannot tell what Man.

Hulet. My Lord, I deſire that Servant may be either named or produced.

Stammers. I cannot remember the Man, it was Seven Years ago.

Hulet. Then again upon another Account, as he ſpeaks before, that I ſhould examine him where he had been, and that he ſhould ſay at the Lord Inchiqueen's. Captain Toogood Sworn.

Toogood. I ſhall firſt give your Lordſhips and the Jury what I have heard others ſay concerning the Priſoner at the Bar, and that is firſt Colonel Hewſon; I was in the Year 1650, about September, in Dublin Caſtle, about ſome Buſineſs with Hewſon; Captain Hulet, the Priſoner at the Bar, came into the Room, he talked with Col. Hewſon a little while; I obſerved them very familiar, and I asked Hewſon what he was, he told me he was his Captain-Lieutenant of Horſe: I deſired to know where he had him? he told me he made him ſo from a Serjeant, and a very Mettled Fellow he was; it was he that did the King's Buſineſs for him upon the Scaffold. In the Year 1653 there was a Disbanding of the Army in Ireland; this Gentleman was then continued Captain Lieutenant in Pretty's Regiment: I diſcourſed with Pretty concerning him, and one Part of it, I remember was about the King's Death; and he did tell me that he was aſſured by Colonel Hewſon, that Hulet either cut off the King's Head, or held it up, and ſaid, Behold the Head of a Traytor; Col. Pretty would not tell me which of the Two it was; but I ſaw the Perſon that did it, and methought he did reſemble this Perſon. About 12 Months after I came to live near the Priſoner in Ireland; once I remember at one Mr. Smith's at the White-horſe in Carlow I met him there, and I was asking the Priſoner at the Bar the Queſtion, Whether he was the Man that cut off the King's Head, or not? Saith he, Why do you ask me this Queſtion? I told him I had heard by ſeveral, namely, by Hewſon and Pretty; upon that he ſaid, well, What I did I will not be aſhamed of; if it were to do again I would do it: Once ſince that Time, about half a Year afterwards, I was in the ſame Place, and there talking with him about the King's Death; he was telling me it was true, he was one of the Two Perſons that was diſguiſed upon the Scaffold. I deſired to know what if the King had refuſed to ſubmit to the Block? Saith he, there were Staples placed about the Scaffold, and I had that about me that would have compelled nim, or Words to that Effect; other Times I have heard him ſpeak ſomething to this. November the laſt, in the Queens County at Maryborough, Col. Jones took upon him to be Governour, and to chooſe Two out of a Regiment that might be the Rulers of the People, Legiſlators I think they call'd them; I did Diſcourſe about the Buſineſs again, and did oppoſe it all: After a while he began to be very hot in the Buſineſs about Lambert: Said I, you were heretofore too forward; ſays he, if it be the Buſineſs of the King's Head I will never deny it, call me to an Account when you will: I have obſerved in Ireland, that it hath been generally reported that he was either the Man that cut off the King's Head, or that held it up, as I ſaid before, and I have heard them ſometimes call him Grandſire Greybeard.

Hulet. My Lord, I do confeſs I know the Gentleman tleman very well, we were in a Regiment together; I never diſcourſed with any concerning this, but only once at a Place going from Cullen to Munſter we did drink at a Place called Goran, we were diſcourſing about the Buſineſs of the King, the Juſtification of the cutting off His Head; ſaith Stammers, I did hear that you were one of the Perſons for that Purpoſe; ſaid I, they that ſay ſo do me Wrong: Saith he, it is no Matter if you were ſo, for it was a Juſt Act: Said I, whether it was or no I have nothing to do to juſtifie it; he was ſpeaking as I hope to be ſaved I would have done it. Walter Davis Sworn.

Council. What can you ſay, Mr. Davis, to this Buſineſs?

Davis. Gentlemen, that which I can ſay is this; in January laſt was Two Years I was at Dublin, I met Captain Hulet, he invited me to take Share of a Pint of Wine, I went with him to a Tavern; when we were in the Tavern he called for a Pint of Wine, and I call'd for another; before we had Drank the laſt Pint of Wine, ſaid I to Captain Hulet, I pray reſolve me this one Queſtion; it is reported that you took up the King's Head, and ſaid behold the Head of a Traytor; Sir, ſaid he, it was a Queſtion I never reſolved any Man, though often demanded; yet, ſaith he, whoſoever ſaid it then it matters not, I ſay it now, it was the Head of a Traytor.

Hulet. I confeſs we did meet together, as you ſay, but I muſt and do deny the Words.

Lieutenant-Colonel Nelſon Sworn.

Nelſon. My Lords, and Gentlemen of the Jury, upon a Diſcourſe with Colonel Axtell, as I related once this Day, about Six Years ſince, in many other Diſcourſes we fell to diſcourſe about the Death of the late King; I ſuppoſing he had been acquainted with that Affair, I deſired him to tell me thoſe Two Perſons diſguiſed upon the Scaffold; he told me I knew the Perſons as well as himſelf; ſaith he, they have been upon Service with you many a Time; pray, Sir, ſaid I, let me know their Names; truly, ſaid he, we would not employ Perſons of low Spirits that we did know, and therefore we pitch'd upon Two Stout Fellows; who were thoſe, ſaid I? It was Walker and Hulet, they were both Serjeants in Kent when you were there, and Stout Men; who gave the Blow ſaid I? Saith he, poor Walker, and Hulet took up the Head; pray, ſaid I, what Reward had they? I am not certain whether they had Thirty Pounds apiece, or Thirty Pounds between them.

Hulet. Pray let Mr. Axtell ſpeak to this, he is hard by.

Colonel Tomlinſon Sworn.

Council. Pray tell my Lords your Knowledge in this Buſineſs.

Tomlinſon. My Lords, and Gentlemen of this Jury, I cannot punctually remember what their Habits were; but they had cloſe Garments to their Bodies, they had Hair on their Faces, one was Gray to the beſt of my Remembrance, the other was Flaxen.

Council. Can you tell who ſtruck the Blow?

Tomlinſon. My Lord, I cannot remember, but I think he with the Gray Hair on his Face did it.

Nelſon. My Lord, I will not poſitively ſay it, but it came lately to my Mind, that I did hear in Ireland by Colonel Pretty that Hulet did it; my Lord, this Colonel Pretty is alive in Ireland.

Benjamin Francis Sworn.

Francis. My Lords, and Gentlemen of the Jury, as to the Priſoner at the Bar, he was very Active in that horrid Act; there was Two of them had both Cloaths alike, their Frocks were cloſe to their Bodies, (as I remember,) they were rather in Butchers Habits of Woolen; one had a Black Hat on his Head cock'd up, and a Black Beard, and the other had a Gray griſled Periwig hung down very low; I affirm that he that cut off the King's Head was in the Gray Perriwig, and I believe this was about that Man's Stature, (pointing to Mr. Hulet,) and his Beard was of the ſame Colour, if he had any. I was coming from Weſtminſter, the Scaffold was encompaſſed within with a great Guard of Soldiers of Red-coats, I think commanded by Biſcoe.

Hulet. Was you upon the Scaffold?

Francis. No, Sir, there was none of my Conſtitution upon the Scaffold.

Council. Fuller Evidence I think cannot be expected; you have heard all the Witneſſes, what can you ſay for yourſelf?

Hulet. My Lord, here is ſeveral Witneſſes examined concerning the Buſineſs, and for my Part I do not underſtand the Law; I muſt leave it to the Court. I can upon the other Account prove where I was at that very Time; I can in the next place, my Lord, ſince I came into London, for I did not hear it before, I can tell you who was the Perſon that did that Act; I can bring Forty and Forty Witneſſes that will prove who they were that did it, as I have been informed by ſeveral Witneſſes, that they know who was the Perſon that did it: Upon the other Account, I can prove where I was that Day, but I did not know when I was Arraigned what was laid to my Charge; here was ſome Examinations taken before my Lord Mayor concerning the Perſon or Perſons that did that Act; (here he offered a Paper, a Copy of the ſaid Examinations, Subſcribed Mary Brandon, and divers others.)

Mr. Secretary Morrice. Was you not examined in the Tower?

Hulet. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Secretary Morrice. Did not we tell you that you were charged with cutting off the Head of the King?

Hulet. Yes, Sir, you did tell me ſo.

Lord Chief Baron. Then you had time to provide your Witneſſes.

Hulet. I was a cloſe Priſoner.

Lord Chief Baron. Where were you on the Day of Execution?

Hulet. I was a Priſoner then at Whitehall.

Lord Chief Baron. For what?

Hulet. Upon this Account we were taken up, about Seven or Nine of us were taken up, we were all Serjeants, Three of Colonel Hacker's, the reſt of Pride's and Fairfax's, and about Ten of Clock at Night were diſcharged.

Lord Chief Baron. For what was you Impriſoned?

Hulet. For refuſing to be upon the Scaffold.

Burden. It was a Common Speech among the Soldiers, that Hulet cut off the King's Head.

Lord Chief Baron. How long before did you ſee Hulet upon the Guard?

Burden. The Day before, but not that Day, nor the Day after.

Lord Chief Baron. William Hulet, the Evidence againſt you is Twofold, one concerning the cutting off the King's Head, the other that you were in a Frock; if it be proved that you did not cut off the King's Head, yet if you were in a Frock in that Place, it will not excuſe you; if you have any Thing to ſay I will be glad to hear it.

Hulet. I deſire the Perſons may be examined upon Oath, Priſoners and others, who was the Perſon that did it; I mean Hacker, Huncks and Phayre.

Lord Chief Baron. You that are the Priſoner, for that which concerns Hacker and Phayre, you know what Conditions they are in, one already tried for his Life, the other a Priſoner in the Tower; and Hacker ſaith himſelf he doth not know the Perſon at at all; you that are Priſoner at the Bar, the Court conceives you have had Time to get your Witneſſes here; you were informed of the Buſineſs before you came here, yet notwithſtanding, it is conceived there are ſome here that can ſay ſomething tending to the Information of the Jury, but they are not to be admitted upon Oath againſt the King.

Sheriffs Officer Examined.

Sheriffs Officer. My Lord, all that I can ſay in this Buſineſs is this; one of our Fellows that belong to our Maſter, the Sheriff, John Rooten by Name, he and I were talking about this very Story, and he did acquaint me with this, That he was in Roſemary Lane a little after the Execution of the King, drinking with the Hangman, that he did urge him whether he did this Fact; God forgive me, ſaith the Hangman, I did it, and I had Forty Half-crowns for my Pains. Abraham Smith Examined.

Smith. My Lord, aſſoon as that Fatal Blow was given I was walking about Whitehall, down came a File of Musketeers; the firſt Word they ſaid was this, Where be the Bargemen? Anſwer was made, Here are none; away they directed the Hangman into my Boat; going into the Boat he gave one of the Soldiers a Half-crown; ſaith the Soldiers, Watermen, away with him, be gone quickly; but I fearing this Hangman had cut off the King's Head, I trembled that he ſhould come into my Boat, but dared not to examine him on Shore for Fear of the Soldiers; ſo out I lanched, and having got a little Way in the Water, ſaid I, who the Devil have I got in my Boat? Says my Fellow ſays he, why? I directed my Speech to him, ſaying, are you the Hangman that cut off the King's Head? No, as I am a Sinner to God, ſaith he, not I; he ſhook every Joint of him; I knew not what to do; I rowed away a little further, and fell to a New Examination of him when I had got him a little further; tell me true, ſaid I, are you the Hangman that hath cut off the King's Head? I cannot carry you, ſaid I; no, ſaith he, I was fetched with a Troop of Horſe, and I was kept a cloſe Priſoner at Whitehall, and truly I did not do it; I was kept a cloſe Priſoner all the while, but they had my Inſtruments. I ſaid I would ſink the Boat if he would not tell me true; but he denied it with ſeveral Proteſtations.

William Cox Examined

Cox. When my Lord Capell, Duke Hamilton, and the Earl of Holland, were Beheaded in Palace-yard in Weſtminſter, my Lord Capell asked the Common Hangman, ſaid he did you cut off my Maſter's Head? Yes, ſaith he; where is the Inſtrument that did it? He then brought the Ax; is this the ſame Ax, are you ſure, ſaid my Lord? Yes, my Lord, ſaith the Hangman, I am very ſure it is the ſame; my Lord Capell took the Ax, and kiſſed it, and gave him Five Pieces of Gold, I heard him ſay, Sirrah, wert thou not afraid? Saith the Hangman they made me Cut it off, and I had Thirty Pound for my Pains.

Richard Abell Examined.

Abell. My Lord, in the Houſe of one Mr. Bramſton I did hear Gregory himſelf confeſs that he Cut off the King's Head.

Lord Chief Baron. You that are the Priſoner at the Bar, the Court is willing to give all full Scope, as far as may be, to examine the Truth of the Fact; as they would not condemn the Innocent, ſo they would not acquit the Guilty: Do you deſire further Time to examine the Truth of it, before it be put upon the Jury.

Hulet. I do confeſs I do not underſtand the Laws, I deſire a little further time; I deſire the Jury may be withdrawn; I deſire a Fortnights Time, but ſubmit to the Court.

A Stranger Examined.

Stranger. My Lord, I was with my Maſter in the Company of Brandon the Hang-man, and my Maſter asked Brandon whether he cut off the King's Head, or no? He confeſſed in my Preſence that he was the Man that did Cut off the King's Head.

Lord Chief Baron. You that are the Priſoner at the Bar, the Court was willing to give you as much Time as they could by Law; the Jury hath been charged, and Evidence given; all thoſe Witneſſes have been Examined that we could hear of now for your Advantage; I will ſay ſomething to you, it was here ſaid, and given in Evidence, that Axtell did ſend a Boat to fetch the Common Hang-man: If we knew more that might tend to your Advantage it ſhould be repeated. You Gentlemen of the Jury mark it; There is firſt Gittens, he ſwears that he was in the ſame Regiment that you were in 12 or 13 Years together; he ſaith that he and others were called together upon their Oaths, and you amongſt the reſt; and there was an Oath of Secrecy, asking them if they would do ſuch an Act; they all refuſed to do it, ſo did you; but he ſaid, the Day of Execution of the King this Gittens got among them, and one Captain Webb kept the Door, and he ſaw you fall before the King, and ask the King Forgiveneſs; he ſaid he heard your Voice, and ſo knew you; and that the Day after Captain Atkins ſaid, you ſhall ſee Hulet ſhortly come to Preferment; and he ſaith he did not ſee you in the Regiment that day; and that Hewſon and all the Regiment uſed to call you Father Greybeard. Stammers he ſaith, that you was Captain-Lieutenant to Col. Hewſon's Troop; and you coming to Lutterels Town asked him ſeveral Particulars, whether he had been in the King's Army? Walking up and down, you ſaid you were the Man Beheaded King Charles, and for that you had One Hundred Pounds; this he Swears poſitively. Sampſon Toogood, he ſwears he ſaw you come to Col. Hewſons in 1650, you talked to him very familiarly; when you were gone he asked who you were? he told him you were a Capt. Lieutenant of Horſe; and he ſaid that you were a very Mettled Fellow, and did the King's Buſineſs upon the Scaffold; that afterwards Col. Hewſon's Regiment being diſcharged, you came to be of Pretty's Regiment, and that he told this Gentleman that he was aſſured by Col. Hewſon that it was you that either Cut off the King's Head, or took it up, and ſaid, Behold the Head of a Traytor. He ſaith afterwards, that in 1654 in Carlow he asked you the ſame Queſtion, and you demanded of him who told him? he anſwered he was told by ſeveral Perſons, namely Hewſon and Pretty; you ſaid, what I did I will not be aſhamed of, and if it were to do I would do it again; he ſays again at another Time, that you were One of the Two Perſons who were then upon the Scaffold, and that there were Staples to enforce the King to ſubmit, if he ſtruggled; I had that about me which would have done the Buſineſs. And he ſays, in November laſt you came to a Meeting upon a Summons of Col. Jones, and then did avouch Lambert's Quarrel; he ſaid you were too forward heretofore; you ſaid, if it be the Buſineſs of the King's Head I will never deny it, call me to an Account when you will. He heard many call you Grandfire Graybeard. Then there is another Witneſs, I think his Name is Davies, he was in Diſcourſe with you, drinking Two Pints of Wine; it is reported (ſays he) you took up the King's Head, and ſaid, Behold the Head of a Traytor; and he deſired you to reſolve him whether it was ſo or no; you ſaid again, it had been demanded often, but you never reſolved any Man; you ſaid, whoſoever ſaid it then, I ſay now, It was the Head of a Traytor. Nelſon he ſwears, that about Six Years ſince he was in Diſcourſe with Axtell about it, and Axtell told him they were a couple of Stout Men to your Knowledge, (ſpeaking to Nelſon;) I was one to do in that Affair; we made Choice of Two, Walker and Hulet; who gave the Blow? Walker; but Hulet took up the Head. Col. Tomlinſon, he ſays, that there were Two on the Scaffold, one that had a Grey Beard, and the other ſomewhat Flaxen. Nelſon alſo heard by Col. Pretty that you did it. And then Ben. Francis he ſays, they had both Frocks alike, one a Black Beard, and a Gray-griſled Perriwig, and believes he was about your Stature. This is the Subſtance of what the Witneſſes have ſaid againſt you. Gentlemen, you hear what has been proved on behalf of the Priſoner, that is, if you believe the Witneſſes that are not upon Oath, that Brandon confeſſed it, and denied he did it: Several Witneſſes that ſay Brandon confeſſed he did it, and that he told them of a Sum of Money that was given him. Gentlemen of the Jury, You ſee the whole Point in this Caſe, the Indictment is for Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of his late Majeſty; the Evidence goes Two Ways, part of the Witneſſes one way, part another way; if you believe either of them then you ought to find that the Defendant is Guilty; if either he was in the Frock, though he was not the Man that did it; or if you find he did it, it is a clear Teſtimony of his Imagining and Compaſſing the Death of the King. Now it reſts upon you to conſider the Evidence that is given for the Common Hang-man, that he ſhould be the Man that did it, that the Priſoner at the Bar did not Cut off the Head: On the other ſide, if you do believe he was One of the Two in the Frocks, upon the Relations of theſe Perſons, Pretty, Hewſon, and Axtell; if you believe it upon theſe Relations, and after his own Confeſſion, that if he was to do it again he would do it; then upon this Evidence that is given you, he is to be found Guilty, tho' he did not cut off the King's Head. You have heard the Evidence on all Sides, it reſts upon you, pray go together, and conſider of your Verdict. I have forgotten one Thing. God forbid I ſhould omit any Thing that may be as well for Advantage, as againſt the Priſoner at the Bar: If you take it ſingly, if you have nothing of other Proof, what another Man ſays of me doth not charge me, unleſs there be ſomething of my own; what you have heard from himſelf, and what you have heard by Relations from others, that is to be left to you. It is my Duty to tell you, that which is ſaid by another of me, that alone is not a pregnant Evidence; you muſt remember withall what is ſworn poſitively, what he ſaid himſelf; this being ſaid, I muſt leave it to you. Pray go together.

After a more than ordinary Time of Conſultation the Jury returned to their Places.

Clerk. Are you agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Clerk. Who ſhall ſay for you.

Jury. Our Foreman.

Clerk. William Hulet, alias Howlet, Hold up thy Hand. Gentlemen, look upon the Priſoner at the Bar: How ſay you, is he Guilty of the High-Treaſon, &c.

Foreman. Guilty.

Clerk. Look to him Keeper. What Goods and Chattels.

Jury. None to our Knowledge.

And then the Court adjourned till to Morrow Morning Seven a Clock in this Place.

October 16th. 1660.

Seſſions-Houſe in the Old-Bailey.

Proclamation being made.

Clerk of the Crown. Set Iſaac Pennington, Henry Marten, Gilbert Millington, Robert Tichburn, Owen Roe, Robert Lilburn, Henry Smith, Edm. Harvey, John Downs, Vincent Potter, Auguſtin Garland, Simon Meyne, James Temple, Peter Temple, and Tho. Wayte, (in all Fifteen,) to the Bar, which was done accordingly.

Clerk of the Crown. You the Priſoners at the Bar, thoſe of the Jury that were laſt called are to paſs, &c. if you, or any of you, will Challenge all, or any of them, you muſt Challenge them when they come to the Book, before they be Sworn.

Charles Pitfield, Chriſtopher Abdy, Richard Cheyney, George Tirrey, Daniel Cole, —— Hall, Richard Abell, Edmund Starnel, Edmund Pitt, Will. Witcomb, Fran. Dorrington, and T. Nicoll, Called and Sworn of the Jury.

Clerk of the Crown. Iſaac Pennington, Henry Marten, &c. Hold up your Hands. Gentlemen that are Sworn, look upon the Priſoners at the Bar. You ſhall underſtand that the ſaid Iſaac Pennington, &c. together with, &c. (here the Indictment was read,) unto which they and every of them have ſeverally pleaded Not Guilty, and for their Trial have put themſelves upon God and the Countrey, which Countrey you are: Now your Charge is to enquire, &c.

Council. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, the Priſoners at the Bar ſtand Indicted of High-Treaſon, for Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the late King Charles the Firſt, of Glorious Memory. The Indictment ſets forth ſeveral Overt-acts, by which that Imagination doth appear the Treaſon it ſelf is the Compaſſing: Our Evidence will go on thus; we ſhall prove againſt them all, that they did ſit (in that which they called the High Court of Juſtice) upon the King, whilſt the King was a Priſoner at the Bar, moſt of them did Sentence him; all but Harvey and Pennington did Sign that Bloody Warrant for his Execution; and that one of the Priſoners at the Bar was in before the High-Court of Juſtice, conſulting of bringing it about. When we have proved this I think it is enough. Pray call the Witneſſes.

Harvey. My Lord, according to my Duty I ſhall ſave this Honourable Court all their Trouble. I do humbly acknowledge that I was and did Sit in that Court, but I did not Sign and Seal that Warrant.

Lord Chief Baron. It is very true, Mr. Harvey.

Harvey. I hope your Lordſhips and this Honourable Bench will give me leave (in that Time which you ſhall appoint) to ſhew you my Reaſons that I did it not of Malice, and it was an Error not of Will but of Judgment; what I have to ſay will be thought not for the annihilating yet for the Extenuation of my Crimes.

Lord Chief Baron. Say now what you will, only conſider with yourſelf whether you have not already ſpoken as much as you can for the Extenuation of it; ſay what you can further.

Harvey. Let me ſpeak a Word.

Lord

Lord Chief Baron. Go on Sir.

Harvey. My Lord, I do humbly conceive if I had conceived that I had then done any Thing of Treaſon I would not for all the World have been there; I was preſent when His Majeſty did not own the Court, deſiring that both his Houſes might meet, that he might have a Conference with them for ſettling of the Peace: My Lord, heartily and unfeignedly I did endeavour that that Advice might be embraced, and that no Sentence might be pronounced. I was one of thoſe (with ſome others) that did ſo far promote it, that that which they called the High-Court of Juſtice did withdraw to conſider of it, but the Major Part of it did diſſent. But, my Lord, I was ſo unhappy as to return to the Court, though with Reluctancy; I went with a Reſolution not to go more to them, nor never did; I was ſummoned to come to the Court: I did declare I abhorred the Thing, that my Soul had Reluctancy againſt it, and I was greatly grieved and troubled at it, and I did refuſe any more to come, or to conſult about any Thing that followed, in order to His Majeſties Death, and to Sign, and to Seal. And that I may make it appear to your Lordſhips I pray I may have a Witneſs or Two examined.

Lord Chief Baron. Name them. Did he Sit upon the Day of Sentence?

Council. Yes he did; he followed it.

Mr. Edward Corbet Examined.

Mr. Corbet. My Lord, the Atteſtation which I this Day make ſolemnly in the Holy Fear of Almighty God, and in Awetul Reverence of this great Tribunal, hath only this great Scope, that Colonel Harvey, the Priſoner at the Bar, upon that Day of Signing the Warrant for that horrid Execution of His moſt Excellent Majeſty, not in Title only, but in Reality, he finding me as I was paſſing to the Duty of my Place in the Aſſembly of Divines then Sitting, he ſeized on me, and deſired Privacy of Time and Place, that he might diſburthen his Soul and Spirit unto me; it was then about Nine a Clock in the Forenoon to the beſt of my Remembrance.

Lord Chief Baron. What Day, I beſeech you?

Corbet. To the beſt of my Remembrance upon the Monday; Sir, ſays he, I deſire to make known unto you the deep Horror that ſits upon my Spirit, the Sadneſs and Grief, above all Expreſſions, that my preſent Caſe has caſt me into; I have endeavoured, Sir, ſays he, in the Sight of God, all that poſſibly I could to divert them from the Sentence, I could not prevail. Sir, ſays he, I have been this Morning ſollicited with very much Earneſtneſs that I would go and Sign, and Seal, and Order that wicked Execution, which my Soul abhorrs; and, Sir, that I might be removed and withdrawn from all Temptations and Sollicitations of ſuch a wicked Fact, I beſeech you ſpare me your Time this Day, which I did, in the Preſence of another Divine, till Four a Clock in the Afternoon, and then I parted and went to Weſtminſter, to Sign and Aſſiſt that which I did apprehend my bounden Duty, the Vindication of the Aſſembly of Divines, wherein we did teſtifie, that it was far from our Thoughts to adviſe the Parliament to any ſuch unheard of unnatural Act.

Council. We do admit, that after he ſat, and Sentence paſt, that he did not Sigu.

Harvey. Be pleaſed to call one Mr. Thomas Langham, he hath heard me often declare againſt that Act.

Mr. Thomas Langham Examined.

Lord Chief Baron. What do you ſay, Mr. Langham, as to this Buſineſs?

Langham. Sir, about the Time that His Majeſty wss executed in 1648, I was then Servant to Alderman Sleigh, who was formerly Partner with this Colonel, and he frequently came to Alderman Sleigh's every Night; and the Alderman having ſome Buſineſs with him, would ask him what News there was at the High Court of Juſtice; he uſually told him the Paſſages upon any Day; the Alderman asked him, if ſo be he thought His Majeſty might eſcape? He told them this, that he would do what lay in his Power that he might not come to have Sentence paſt; upon Saturday, being alſo there, he told him this, that he had done what lay in his Power to hinder the Sentence, but could not attain his Deſign; but he was reſolved he would never Sign nor Seal to His Majeſties Death, for it was utterly againſt his Judgment.

Harvey. There is another, (my Lord,) and but one more, that is George Langham.

Lord Chief Baron. To what purpoſe? This is believed.

Harvey. I ſhall only crave and ſupplicate this Favour of this Honourable Bench, that this Honourable Bench will be pleaſed, on my Behalf, (ſince I have endeavoured it Two Months before,) to preſent my humble Petition to His Sacred Majeſty, and to intercede for Mercy and Favour on my Behalf, myſelf, my Wife, and Thirteen Children, ſhall humbly pray.

The Court received the ſaid Petition, and promiſed to preſent it to His Majeſty.

Millington. I do not know whether it will be ſeaſonable for me to interpoſe now, I would ſpeak a little.

Lord Chief Baron. Is he next in Order?

Clerk. No, my Lord, Penington is next.

Penington. I am unwilling to be troubleſome to the Court. This I ſhall take the Boldneſs to ſay, (which ſhall be nothing but Truth,) I never had a Hand in plotting, contriving malicious Practices againſt His Majeſty, demonſtrated by my utterly refuſing to Sign the Warrant for his Execution, though often ſollicited thereto; I cannot deny but I ſate amongſt them that Day of the Sentence, but I cannot remember I was there when the Sentence paſſed. My ſittting amongſt them was out of Ignorance, I knew not what I did, therefore I hope you will believe there was nothing of Malice in any Thing I did; I was miſled to it.

Lord Chief Baron. I cannot hear you, (he not ſpeaking aloud.)

Penington. It was Ignorance, not Malice, that led me; if I had known what I had done I would not have done it; I humbly pray that there may be a favourable Conſtruction made of it, I humbly leave it with you. I did my Duty to pray for the King, but had no Malice to act willingly againſt him.

Clerk. Henry Marten.

Council. He did both Sign and Seal the Precept for ſummoning the Court, and the Warrant for Execution; ſat almoſt every Day, and particularly the Day of Sentence.

Marten. My Lord, I do not decline a Confeſſion ſo as to the Matter of Fact, the Malice ſet aſide, Maliciouſly, Murderouſly, and Traiterouſly.

Council. If you have any Thing to ſay to that we will prove it.

Lord Chief Baron. That I may inform you in it, there is Malice implied by Law, Malice in the Act itſelf: That which you call Malice, that you had no particular Intention or Deſign againſt the King's Perſon, but in relation to the Government, that will not be to this preſent Buſineſs, if it ſhould extenuate any Thing that would be between God and your own Soul; but as to that which is alledged in the Indictment, Maliciously, Murderously, and Traiterously, they are the Consequences of Law. If a Man meet another in the Street, and run him through, in this Case the Law implies Malice; though but to an ordinary Watchman, there is Malice by the Law in the Fact; if there was no such expressed Personal Malice as you conceive, yet the Fact done implies Malice in Law.

Mr. Solicitor-General. My Lord, he does think a Man may Sit upon the Death of the King, Sentence him to Death, Sign a Warrant for his Execution, Meekly, Innocently, Charitably, and Honestly.

Marten. I shall not presume to compare my Knowledge in the Law with that of that Learned Gentleman, but according to that poor Understanding of the Law of England that I was capable of, there is no Fact that he can Name that is a Crime in itself, but as it is Circumstantiated. Of killing a Watchman, as your Lordship instanced, a Watchman may be killed in not doing his Office, and yet no Murder.

Lord Chief Baron. I instanced that of a Watchman, to shew there may be a Malice by Law, tho' not expressed; tho' a Man kill a Watchman, intending to kill another Man, in that Case it is Malice in Law against him: So in this Case, if you went to kill the King when he was not doing his Office, because he was in Prison, and you hindred him from it, the Law implies Malice in this. It is true, all Actions are Circumstantiated, but the killing of the King is Treason of all Treasons.

Justice Foster. If a Watchman be killed it is Murder; it is in contempt of Magistracy of the Powers Above; the Law says that Contempt adds to the Malice.

Council. We shall prove against the Prisoner at the Bar (because he would wipe off Malice,) he did this very Merrily, and was in great Sport at the Time of the Signing the Warrant for the King's Execution.

Marten. That does not imply Malice.

Ewer Sworn.

Council. Come Sir, you are here upon your Oath, speak to my Lords and the Jury; you know the Prisoner at the Bar very well, you have sometimes served him; were you present in the Painted Chamber, January 29. 1648, at the Signing the Warrant, the Parchment against the King?

Ewer. The Day I do not remember, but I was in that Chamber to attend a Gentleman there; I followed that Gentleman, (looking at Mr. Marten,) I followed that Gentleman into that Chamber.

Lord Chief Baron. After what Gentleman?

Ewer. Mr. Marten, my Lord, I was pressing to come near, but I was put off by an Officer, or Soldier there, who told me I should not be there; I told him I was ordered to be by that Gentleman. My Lord, I did see a Pen in Mr. Cromwel's Hand, and he marked Mr. Marten in the Face with it, and Mr. Marten did the like to him; but I did not see any one set his Hand, though I did see a Parchment there with a great many Seals to it.

Sir Purbeck Temple Sworn.

Council. What do you know of that Gentleman in his Carriage of this Business?

Sir Purbeck Temple. My Lords, I being present in Town when that horrid Murther was contrived against the late King, there came some Persons of Honour, Servants to the late King, to my Fathers House, Sir Edward Partridge, to engage me to join with them to attempt the King's Escape. In order whereunto they told me, nothing would tend so much to His Majesties Service as to ende avour to discover some Part of their Counsels, for that it was resolved by Cromwel to have the King tried at the High-Court of Justice, as they called it, the next Day, and desired me (if possible) to be there to discover their Counsels, whereby the King might have Notice, and those that were to attempt his Escape. In order whereunto, the next Day, by giving Money to the Officer of the Painted-Chamber I got in by Day-light in the Lobby of the Lords-House; I espied a Hole in the Wall, under the Hangings, where I placed my self till the Council came, where they were contriving the Manner of trying the King when he should come before them: And after the manner of Praying, and private Consults amongst themselves, when their Prayer was over; there came News that the King was Landed at Sir Robert Cotton's Stairs; at which Cromwel run to a Window, looking on the King as he came up the Garden, he returned as White as the Wall: Returning to the Board, he speaks to Bradshaw, and Sir Henry Mildmay, how they and Sir William Brereton had concluded on such a Business; then turning to the Board said thus, My Masters, he is come, he is come, and now we are doing that great Work that the whole Nation will be full of, therefore I desire you to let us resolve here what Answer we shall give the King when he comes before us; for the first Question that he will ask us will be, by what Authority and Commission do we Try him? To which none answered presently. Then after a little Space, Henry Marten, the Prisoner at the Bar, rose up, and said, in the Name of the Commons and Parliament assembled, and all the good People of England; which none contradicted, so all rose up, and then I saw every Officer that waited in the Room sent out by Cromwel to call away my Lord such a one, (whose Name I have forgot,) who was in the Court of Wards Chamber, that he should send away the Instrument, which came not, and so they adjourned themselves to Westminster Hall, going into the Court of Wards themselves as they went thither. When they came to the Court in Westminster Hall I heard the King ask them the very same Question that Cromwel had said to them.

Mr. Solicitor. Gentlemen, the Prisoner at the Bar confesses his Hand to the Warrant for Executing the King; you see by his Servant how Merry he was at the Sport; you see by his Witness how Serious he was at it, and gave the Foundation of that Advice upon which they all proceeded; and now he says he did it not Traiterously, I humbly conceive he means it was Justifiable.

Sir Purbeck Temple. At another Time I was in Town on a Friday, and wanting Horses I went to Smithfield, where I saw the Horses of State of his late Majesty to be Sold in the Common Market; at which I called to the Rider, said I, What makes these Horses here? says he, I am to Sell them; Why, said I, there's the King's Brand upon them, C.R. and he shewed them me; said I, Will you sell these Horses? What Price? He asked me Three or Fourscore Pound apiece; says I, who Warrants the Sale of these Horses? Says he, Mr. Marten and Sir William Brereton. Afterwards I heard the Horses were taken into the Mews by the Prisoner at the Bar, and Sir Wil, Brereton.

Council. Was this before the Trial?

Sir Purbeck Temple. It was in 1642 or 1643.

Council. That's nothing to this Business.

Marten. My Lord, the Commission went in the Name of the Commons Assembled in Parliament, and the Good People of England; and what a Matter is it for one of the Commissioners to say, Let it be be acted by the Good People of England?

Mr. Sol. Gen. You know all Good People did abhor it; I am ſorry to ſee ſo little Repentance.

Marten. My Lord, I hope that which is urged by the Learned Council will not have that Impreſſion upon the Court and Jury that it ſeems to have, that I am ſo obſtinate in a Thing ſo apparently ill: My Lord, if it were poſſible for that Blood to be in the Body again, and every Drop that was ſhed in the late Wars, I could wiſh it with all my Heart: But, my Lord, I hope it is Lawful to offer in my own Defence that, which, when I did it, I thought I might do. My Lord, there was the Houſe of Commons, as I underſtood it, (perhaps your Lordſhips think it was not a Houſe of Commons,) but then it was the Supream Authority of England; it was ſo reputed both at Home and Abroad. My Lord, I ſuppoſe he that gives Obedience to the Authority in being de facto, whether de jure, or no, I think he is of a Peaceable Diſpoſition, and far from a Traitor. My Lord, I think there was a Statute made in Henry the Seventh's time, whereby it was provided, That whoſoever was in Arms for the King de facto, he ſhould be indemnified, tho' that King de facto was not ſo de jure: And if Supream Officers de facto can juſtifie a War, (the moſt pernicious Remedy that was ever adjudged by Mankind, be the Cauſe what it will,) I preſume the Supream Authority of England may juſtify a Judicature, though it be but an Authority de facto. My Lord, if it be ſaid that it is but a Third Eſtate, and a ſmall Parcel of that, my Lord, it was all that was extant. I have heard Lawyers ſay, that if there be Commons appurtenant to a Tenement, and that Tenement be all Burnt down except a ſmall Stick, the Commons belong to that One ſmall Piece, as it did to the Tenement when all ſtanding. My Lord, I ſhall humbly offer to Conſideration, whether the King were the King indeed, ſuch a one whoſe Peace, Crowns, and Dignities, were concerned in Publick Matters: My Lord, he was not in Execution of his Offices, he was a Priſoner. My Lord, I will not defer you long, neither would I be offenſive; I had then, and I have now, a Peaceable Inclination, a Reſolution to ſubmit to the Government that God hath ſet over me. I think his Majeſty that now is is King upon the beſt Title under Heaven, for he was called in by the Repreſentative Body of England. I ſhall, during my Life, long or ſhort, pay Obedience to him: Beſides, my Lords, I do owe my Life to him if I am acquitted for this. I do confeſs I did adhere to the Parliament's Army heartily; my Life is at his Mercy; if his Grace be pleaſed to grant it I have a double Obligation to him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, this Gentleman, the Priſoner at the Bar, hath entred into a Diſcourſe that I am afraid he muſt have an Anſwer in Parliament for it. He hath owned the King, but thinks his beſt Title is the Acknowledgement of the People; and he that hath that, let him be who he will, hath the beſt Title: We have done with our Evidence.

Marten. I have one Word more, my Lord; I humbly deſire that the Jury would take Notice, that though I am accuſed in the Name of the King, that if I be Acquitted the King is not Caſt: It doth not concern the King that the Priſoner be Condemned, it concerns him that the Priſoner be Tried: It is as much to his Intereſt, Crown and Dignity, that the Innocent be Acquitted, as that the Nocent be Condemned.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, this puts us now upon the Reputation of our Evidence; and you may ſee how neceſſary it is to diſtinguiſh between Confidence and Innocence; for this very Perſon that deſires you to have a Care how you Condemn the Innocent, he doth ſeem to intimate to you that he is an Innocent Perſon at the Bar; and yet confeſſes he did Sit upon the King, did Sentence him to Death; that he Signed the Warrant for the Execution, and yet here ſtands the Perſon that deſires you to have a Care of Condemning Innocence: What is this at the Bottom of it, but that my Fact is ſuch as I dare not call it Innocence, but would have you to believe it ſuch? Gentlemen of the Jury, was it your Intention the King ſhould be ſo Tried as this Priſoner moved? It will concern you to declare, that the People of England do abhor his Facts and Principles; every Fact the Priſoner hath confeſſed himſelf, the Sitting in that Court, which was Treaſon; his Sentencing was Treaſon; Signing the Warrant for Execution was the Higheſt of Treaſons: Gentlemen, all that he hath to ſay for himſelf is, there was an Authority of his own making, whereby he becomes Innocent; but we hope out of his own Mouth you will find him Guilty.

Gilbert Millington. I deſire you to hear me; I come not hither to diſpute, but to acknowledge; I will not trouble you with long Diſcourſes. My Lord, it is not fit for Wiſe Men to hear them, I am not able to expreſs them; I will not Juſtifie myſelf, I will acknowledge my ſelf Guilty. My Lord, the Reaſon why I ſaid the laſt Day Not Guilty, was in reſpect of being upon the Scaffold, and Murdering the King, and thoſe Things, but I will wave all things if your Lordſhip will give me Leave, and will go unto the loweſt Strain that poſſible can be; I will confeſs my ſelf Guilty every Way. I was awed by the Preſent Power then in Being. This I leave with you, and lay my ſelf at your Feet, and have no more at all to ſay, but a few Words in a Petition, which I deſire you will pleaſe to accept, and ſo I conclude.

Council. We do accept this Honeſt and Humble Confeſſion, ——and ſhall give no Evidence againſt him to aggravate the Matter.

Lord Chief Baron. Your Petition is accepted, and ſhall be read.

Robert Titchburne. My Lord, when I firſt pleaded to the Indictment, it was, Not Guilty in Manner and Form as I ſtood Indicted; my Lord, it was not then in my Heart either to deny or juſtifie any Tittle of the Matter of Fact; my Lord, the Matter that I was led into by Ignorance my Conſcience leads me to acknowledge; but, my Lord, if I ſhould have ſaid Guilty in Manner and Form as I ſtood Indicted, I was fearful I ſhould have charged my own Conſcience as then knowingly and maliciouſly to act it. My Lord, it was my Unhappineſs to be called to ſo ſad a Work when I had ſo few Years over my Head; a Perſon neither Bred up in the Laws, nor in Parliaments where Laws are made. I can ſay with a clear Conſcience, I had no more Enmity in my Heart to his Majeſty than I had to my Wife that lay in my Boſom. My Lord, I ſhall deny nothing; after I was Summoned I think truly I was at moſt of the Meetings; and I do not ſay this, that I did not intend to ſay it before, but preſerving that Salvo to my own Conſcience, that I did not maliciouſly and knowingly do it, I think I am bound in Conſcience to own it: As I do not deny but I was there, ſo truly I do believe I did Sign the Inſtrument: And had I known that then which I do now, (I do not mean, my Lord, my Afflictions and Sufferings, it is not my Suffetings make me acknowledge,) I would have choſen a Red-hot Oven to gone into as ſoon as that Meeting: I bleſs God

God I do this neither out of Fear, nor Hopes of Favour, though the Penalty that may attend this Acknowledgment may be Grievous; my Lord, I do acknowledge the Matter of Fact, and do ſolemnly proteſt I was led into it for Want of Years; I do not juſtifie either the Act or the Perſon; I was ſo unhappy then as to be Ignorant, and I hope I ſhall not now, (ſince I have more Light,) juſtifie that which I was ignorant of; I am ſure my Heart was without Malice; if I had been only asked in Matter of Fact at firſt I ſhould have ſaid the ſame; I have ſeen a little: The Great God before whom we all ſtand hath ſhown his Tender Mercy to Perſons upon Repentance; Paul tells us, though a Blaſphemer, and a Perſecutor of Chriſt, it being done ignorantly, upon Repentance he found Mercy; my Lord, Mercy I have found, and I do not doubt but Mercy I ſhall find. My Lord, I came in upon the Proclamation, and now I am here I have in Truth given your Lordſhip a clear and full Account, whatever the Law ſhall pronounce, becauſe I was Ignorant; yet I hope there will be Room found for that Mercy and Grace that I think was intended by the Proclamation, and I hope by the Parliament of England. I ſhall ſay no more, but in pleading of that humbly beg that your Lordſhips will be Inſtrumental to the King and Parliament on that behalf ——

Council. We ſhall give no Evidence againſt the Priſoner; he ſays he did it ignorantly, and I hope and do believe he is Penitent; and as far as the Parliament thinks fit to ſhew Mercy I ſhall be very glad.

Owen Roe. I have not much to ſay. I never had any Ability; therefore, my Lord, it was never my Intent upon my Plea, as was ſaid before, to deny any Thing I have done; for I was clearly convinced that I ought to confeſs it before, and I do confeſs againſt myſelf, that I did Sit there ſeveral Times, and to the beſt of my Remembrance I did Sign and Seal the Warrant for his Execution; and truly, my Lord, it was never in my Heart to contrive a Plot of this Nature. How I came there I do not know, I was very unfit for ſuch a Buſineſs, and I confeſs I did it ignorantly, not underſtanding the Law, ſo was carried away hidden in the Buſineſs, not underſtanding what I did; therefore, my Lord, I humbly intreat this Honourable Court that you will conſider of it, and look upon me as one that out of Ignorance did it; and if I had known of my Act, I would rather have been torn in Pieces with a Thouſand Horſes. When I heard of the Declaration and Gracious Pardon of his Majeſty, I confeſs I went to my Lord Mayor's, and laid hold of it, and I thought my Life as ſecure as it is now in my own Hands; but I do wholly caſt myſelf upon the King's Mercy; and as I have heard he is a Gracious King, full of Lenity and Mercy, ſo I hope I ſhall find it. I was never againſt Government; it is a Bleſſed Thing that we have it; I hope all the Nations will be happy under it. I ſhall ſubmit to his Majeſty and Government. I can ſay no more; I was not brought up a Scholar, but was a Tradeſman, and was meerly Ignorant when I went on in that Buſineſs; I do humbly intreat your Lordſhips that you would, as tenderly as may be, preſent my Caſe to the King, whom I reſt upon, and leave all to your Lordſhips Wiſdom and Diſcretion to do what you will concerning me ——

Council. We accept his Confeſſion, and do hope he is Penitent before God as well as before the World.

Robert Lilburn. Be pleaſed to give me leave to ſpeak a few Words; I ſhall be Ingenuous before your Lordſhips. I ſhall not willfully nor obſtinately deny the Matter of Fact; but, my Lord, I muſt, and I can, with a very good Conſcience, ſay, that what I did I did it very innocently, without any Intention of Murder; nor was I ever Plotter or Contriver in that Murder; I never read in the Law, nor underſtood the Caſe throughly; whatever I have done I have done ignorantly.

Lord Chief Baron. Becauſe you ſhall not be miſtaken in your Words, God forbid that we ſhould carp at your Words; the Word Innocent hath a double Acceptation, Innocent in reſpect of Malice, and Innocent in reſpect of the Fact.

Lilburn. The Truth is, my Lord, I was for the withdrawing of the Court when the King made the Motion to have it withdrawn; and upon the Day (my Lord) that the King was put to Death, I was ſo ſenſible of it, that I went to my Chamber and mourned, and would, if it had been in my Power, have preſerv'd his Life. My Lord, I was not at all any Diſturber of the Government; I never interrupted the Parliament at all. I had no Hand in thoſe Things, neither in 1648, nor at any other Time. I ſhall humbly beg the Favour of the King, that he would be pleaſed to grant me his Pardon, according to his Declaration, which I laid hold on, and rendered myſelf according to the Proclamation.

Council. We ſhall ſay nothing againſt him.

Henry Smith. My Lord, I ſhall not deſire to ſpend your Lordſhip's Time; what I have done I did it ignorantly, not knowing what I did. I ſhall not deny the matter of Fact; but as to that I pleaded Not Guilty before, it was in relation to that which I was Ignorant of the Law of the Nation; I have not been Bred to it, I humbly deſire your Lordſhips to conſider that what I did was done ignorantly, not knowing the Law.

Council. What was that?

Smith. I do confeſs that I Sat in the Court, I do not remember that I Signed or Sealed, (both the Warrants being ſhewed him) adds, my Lords, I confeſs the Hands are like mine, but whether they be ſo or no, I know not.

Council. Then we will prove it. Is the Seal yours?

Smith. I do not know.

Council. Do you confeſs you were in the Painted Chamber the 29th of January? Do you remember any Thing of that?

Smith. I do not certainly know that.

Council. My Lord, he hath ſaid enough. Shall the Jury doubt of that which he believes?

Smith. I do not remember that I did write it.

Council. My Lord, we preſs it no farther, he hath confeſſed enough.

Smith. My Lord, what I have done I beſeech you conſider I did it in Ignorance, not knowing the Law; there were thoſe about me that were able to call me, who were then in Authority, whom I dared not diſobey, if ſo, I had been in Danger alſo.

Council. My Lords, we have done; be pleaſed to direct the Jury upon theſe ſeveral Evidences and Confeſſions.

Smith. I beg one Word, I muſt declare this, I can ſpeak it ſeriouſly, that from the firſt to the laſt of theſe unhappy Wars, I have been a Man of Trouble and Sorrow; I have been (as many Wiſer Men have been) run upon Error. My Lord, I know not what I have done; I pray that this Court will be pleaſed to be a Mediator for me, that I may have his Majeſties Favour, and that this Petition may be received on my Behalf. (He then delivered ed his Petition to the Court.) I can rejoice for that Happy Settlement that is again in the Nations, and declare cheerfully my humble Submiſſion to that Government, and deſire the Lord will bleſs and proſper his Majeſty and the Parliament in theſe Nations; my Lord, I rendered my ſelf according to the Proclamation; I ſhall ſay no more.

Lord Chief Baron. Gentlemen, you of the Jury, theſe Priſoners that ſtand before you at the Bar, that is, Mr. Harvy, Pennington, Marten, Millington, Titchburne, Roe, Lilburn, and Mr. Smith, there are Eight, theſe are Perſons who by the Act of Indemnity are to be Tried for their Lives for the Treaſons they have committed, but no Execution is to be until the Parliament have further conſidered the Matter that is before us, and you are to find the Matter of Fact: What Mercy they ſhall find hereafter, that is to be left (as I told you) to the Conſideration of the Parliament, we are to proceed according to Law and Juſtice. They are all Indicted for Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of our late Sovereign Lord, Charles the Firſt, of moſt Glorious Memory; and for that that hath been opened to you there are ſo many Overt-acts, which are as ſo many Evidences to prove that Indictment, which is the Compaſſing and Imagination of their Hearts to put the King to Death. If any one of theſe be proved, that is alone enough to prove the Indictment, which is the Compaſſing and Imagining of the Heart, that is the Treaſon, the other are but Evidences. If any Thing burſt forth from the Mouth, or from the Hand, as here it is, theſe are Evidences of the Imagination of the Heart; for this you have heard by the Confeſſion of all of them, that they did enough to find the Indictment; they have all of them confeſſed their Sitting upon the King in that Traiterous Aſſembly, which they called the High Court of Juſtice. There is One of the Overt-acts expreſsly laid down in the Indictment, they took upon them an Authority to conſider how to put the King to Death, and that they did put the King to Death; but they were miſtaken, as ſome of them ſaid, that the actual Murdering of the King was not their Meaning. But if they did that which tended towards it they are all Guilty of Treaſon; it is all one to you if they be guilty of any of theſe; either Sitting, Sentencing or Signing, they are Guilty; and all of theſe, except Two, are Guilty of all theſe. The Matter is clear and pregnant; there is ſomething hath been ſaid by many of them with a great deal of Expreſſion of Sorrow; they did confeſs (all but one) the Fact; and that which tended to their Defence was Ignorance; bur that doth not at all concern you. It will be taken in its due Time into Conſideration; the ſeveral Deportments of them all, that is for another Judicature. Your Buſineſs is to find the Matter of Fact; only this let me repeat unto you, there is Mr. Harvy, who hath pleaded ſeveral Matters which are not proper for you, expreſſing his Sorrow and Penitence, we ſhall not trouble you with that, becauſe they are for the Conſideration of another Court; we ought all to have a tender Compaſſion, ought to be ſorry with and for them that are ſorrowful. The like of Alderman Penington. Marten hath done that which looks forward more than backward. I could wiſh with all my Heart he had looked more backward; that is, to Repentance of that which is paſt, than Obedience to that which is to come; it is a Trouble to repeat thoſe Things which he ſaid himſelf, and truly I hope in Charity he meant better than his Words were. Millington he hath done the like with the reſt, confeſſed the Fact, put himſelf upon Mercy wholly, and ſaid, he was overawed by the preſent Power. This I repeat, not as any Thing to you, who are to conſider only Matter of Fact. For Alderman Titchburne, he hath ſpoken very fully, and truly very conſcienciouſly —— upon the whole Matter, acknowledges his Ignorance, his Sorrow, his Conviction in Point of Conſcience; and I beſeech God Almighty to incline his Heart more and more to Repentance. They that Crucified Chriſt, (to uſe his own Words,) through Ignorance, found Mercy. Colonel Roe, he confeſſes the ſame wholly, and caſts himſelf upon the King's Mercy, and he thought it a bleſſed Thing that the King was reſtored again, and ſubmitted wholly to Mercy; and ſo did Mr. Lilburn, he ſaid he went to his Chamber and mourned the Day the King was Beheaded; I am very glad he had ſo early a Senſe of it. William Smith he did it ignorantly, he was not guilty thus far; that was, he was led on, even like one ſilly Sheep that follows another; by what relation I have heard of the Perſon; at that Time he was not thought fit to be of the Privy Council. There is nothing more to ſay to you, the Fact is confeſſed by them all. It is ſo clear you need not go from the Bar.

After a little Conſultation between the Jurors they returned to their Places ——

Clerk of the Crown. Are you agreed of your Verdict.

Jurors. Yes.

Clerk. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Clerk. Edmund Harvey. Hold up thy Hand. How ſay you, is the Priſoner Guilty of the Treaſon whereof he ſtands Indicted, and hath been Arraigned? or Not Guilty?

Jury. Guilty.

Clerk. Look to him Keeper.

Clerk. What Goods and Chattels, &c.

Jury. None to our Knowledge.

The ſame Queſtion being asked touching Alderman Penington, Henry Marten, Gilbert Millington, Alderman Titchburn, Colonel Roe, Colonel Lilburn, and Henry Smith, they were ſeverally found Guilty by the Jury in manner aforeſaid. All which Priſoners finding the Place where they ſtood to be Cold and Unwholſom, prayed the Court they might have Leave to be returned to the Priſon till the Court ſhall be pleaſed to command their farther Attendance, which was granted.

The reſt of the Priſoners aforenamed, together with W. Heveningham, brought to the Bar.

Clerk. You the Priſoners at the Bar, thoſe Perſons laſt called of the Jury are to paſs, &c. If you, or any of you, will Challenge all, or any of them, you muſt Challenge them when they come to the Book, before they be Sworn.

Clerk. Charles Pitfield, Chriſtopher Abdy, George Terry, Daniel Cole, Anthony Hall, Richard Abel, Edmund Starnel, Edmond Pit, William Whitcomb, Francis Dorrington, Thomas Nicholl, Robert Sheppard, in all Twelve, Admitted and Sworn of the Jury.

Clerk. If any Man can inform, &c.

Clerk. John Downes, Hold up thy Hand, &c. and the like was ſaid to all the other Perſons following, viz. Vincent Potter, Auguſtine Garland, Simon Meyne, James Temple, Peter Temple, Thomas Waite, and William Heveningham; look upon the Priſoners at the Bar you that are Sworn; you ſhall underſtand that John Downes, the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands Indicted, &c.

King's

King's Council. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, the Priſoners at the Bar ſtand Indicted of High-Treaſon, for Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the late King Charles the Firſt, of Bleſſed Memory; the Evidence by which we ſhall make out againſt them this Treaſon of their Heart, in Compaſſing and Imagining the King's Death, (for that is the Subſtance of the Indictment, and all that follows is but Evidence,) will be by proving that they did ſit as Judges in that pretended Court of Juſtice when the King ſtood a Priſoner at the Bar; that they did Sentence him to Death every one of them; and we ſhall prove againſt all but one of them that they did Sign that Bloody Warrant for Murthering of the King; and againſt one of them that ſtands at the Bar we ſhall prove (to his Shame and Confuſion of Face) that he did Spit in the Face of our late Sovereign Lord.

John Downes. My Lord, I have humbly pleaded Not Guilty; not with any Intention to juſtifie the Fact, or to extenuate it; but, my Lord in Regard there is that charged in the Indictment, that my Conſcience ſaith I am not guilty of, I durſt not plead Guilty; otherwiſe, my Lord, I ſhould not have troubled you with Not Guilty, but ſhould have humbly taken the Shame and Confuſion for it; it is my Intention to put the Court to as little Trouble as poſſible I can; therefore I do humbly intreat of your Lordſhips, and the Court, that you will permit me to acknowledge that which will be a ſufficient Evidence of my Conviction, if the Court ſo pleaſe, and that you will be pleaſed to hear me on my Behalf; if I can humbly offer to you ſome ſpecial Thing which is not in the Caſe of another, (I could wiſh it had, if it had we had none been here,) I do humbly acknowledge, that to ſit upon that Occaſion in that Place is Evidence enough to convince what is in the Heart, except by ſome ſignal Actions that might happen from ſome that might ſhew how it was his Unhappineſs to be put into ſuch a Buſineſs, yet had neither Malice nor Treaſon in his Heart: I do humbly conceive that there is that Goodneſs in you, that this Plea, this Allegation, will be moſt Welcome to you. My Lord, though there was ſuch a Thing, ſuch an unparallell'd Thing, I was thruſt into this Number; but never was in Conſultation about the Thing: God is Witneſs I was not put in till the Act was ready to paſs in a ſecond Commitment, by one of the ſame Number; I denied it, yet they ſaid I muſt make one, I muſt take my Share, ſo I came in. Never did I know of His Majeſty's being brought to London till he came. My Lords, in this great Unhappineſs I think it is ſome Mitigation, and I judge it a Happineſs, that ſo Wiſe, Prudent Perſons as this Court conſiſts of, that you are my Judges, that can look back, my Lord, and conſider what the Times were then, and can, my Lord, account it a Happineſs that there is a ſpecial Wiſdom in you, that in Nice Caſes you will be able to make a Diſtinction. I do indeed, my Lords, ſadly and ſeriouſly confeſs, that I was divers times with thoſe Perſons that were called Judges of the late King, at ſeveral Meetings and Sittings; it is long ago, I cannot ſay how often; I was ſeveral times there. My Lord, I do humbly beg of your Lordſhips, (I will trouble you as ſhort as I can,) that you would be pleaſed ſo far to favour me as to give me leave to give you a ſhort Account of the Buſineſs; the laſt Day His Majeſty came to that which was called then a Court, ſeveral times he was brought, (I think Thrice,) and His Charge was given in Words high enough; he ſaid He could not acknowledge their Juriſdiction; that was the Anſwer, my Lord, till the laſt day; then I confeſs I was there. He that was called Preſident did again and again tell him the Heads of his Charge; told him he had ſeveral Days given for Conſideration, that this was the laſt Day that the Court (as they call'd themſelves) would give him his final Anſwer; if he ſtood ſtill to Day, and move to the Juriſdiction of the Court, they muſt take all pro Confeſſo, and would give Sentence: My Lord, to this His Majeſty indeed with a great deal of Compoſedneſs and Wiſdom told them to this Effect, I cannot own your Juriſdiction; you have Power enough indeed, I wiſh you may uſe it well; but becauſe you are ſo ready to give a Sentence, which may be ſooner given than avoided, I think fit to let you know that I have ſomething that I deſire to ſpeak to my Parliament, for I have ſomething to offer unto them that will be ſatisfactory to you all, and will be for the immediate Settlement of the Kingdom in Peace.

——My Lord, he that was called Preſident anſwered, that no Notice could be taken of any Thing, but only whether he would Anſwer to his Charge: Upon that, my Lord, His Majeſty indeed, (with the greateſt Earneſtneſs that ever I beheld, and yet in no unſeemly Paſſion,) told them they might ſoon repent of ſuch a Sentence; that he did conjure them to withdraw once again, and to conſider of it, if it were but half an Hour, or (ſaith he, if that be too much for you) I will withdraw. My Lord, here I can make my Appeal to him that muſt Judge me when you have done with me, I had not a murderous nor a traiterous Thought againſt him; but, Sir, I confeſs ſuch deep Paſſions did fall upon me, that truly myſelf I was not. I remember the Perſons between whom I ſate, as it fell out, were one Mr. Cawly, and Col. Walton, theſe Two I ſate betwixt, theſe were the very Words I ſpake to them, Have we Hearts of Stone? Are we Men? They laboured to appeaſe me; they told me I would ruin both myſelf and them; ſaid I, if I die for it I muſt do it. Cromwel ſate juſt the Seat below me, the hearing of me made ſome Stir, Whiſpering, he loooked up to me, and asked me if I were myſelf? What I meant to do to that I could not be quiet? Sir, ſaid I, no, I cannot be quiet; upon that I ſtarted up in the very Nick; when the Preſident commanded the Clerk to read the Sentence, I ſtepping up, and as loud as I could ſpeak, ſpoke to this Effect theſe Words, or to the like Purpoſe; my Lord, (ſaid I) I am not ſatisfied to give my Conſent to this Sentence, but have Reaſons to offer to you againſt it, and I deſire the Court may adjourn to hear me; preſently he ſtept up and looked at me; nay, ſaith he, if any one of the Court be unſatisfied the Court muſt adjourn: Sir, accordingly they did adjourn into the inner Court of Wards; when they came there I was called upon by Cromwel to give an Account why I had put this Trouble and Diſturbance upon the Court? I did ſpeak, Sir, to this Effect, (it is long ago, the very Words I think I cannot ſpeak,) but to this Effect I did ſpeak: My Lord, I ſhould have been exceeding glad if the Court had been pleaſed to condeſcend to this gracious Expreſſion; but it is not too late late for me: I deſire not his Death, but his Life, and that the Nations may be ſettled in Peace: The King now is pleaſed to offer, that if he might but ſpeak with his Parliament he would offer to them ſuch Things as ſhould be ſatisfactory to us all. So (ſaid I) what would you have? Your Pretence of bringing him to theſe Proceeedings was, that after ſuch a long and Bloody War His Majeſty would not condeſcend deſcend to ſuch Conceſſions as might ſecure the Parliaments Party; but now you hear him, that he will give every one of us Satisfaction: I told them, ſadly told them, (I think I may truly ſay more ſadly then than at this Time,) that if they ſhould go precipitantly on, and give Judgment upon him, before they had acquainted the Parliament with what the King was pleaſed to offer, we ſhould never be able to anſwer it; the rather, my Lord, (and that I did preſs with all the little Underſtanding that I had if they did but conſider the laſt concluded Order that the Parliament made after the paſſing of the Act for Trial,(that which was ſo called,) I ſay there was this Order that ſhut up all, that upon any Emergency that could not at that Time be thought on in in the Houſe, the Court ſhould immediately acquaint the Houſe with it. My Lord, I did infer as ſtrongly as I could to them, that if this were not Emergent I could not tell what was: The King denied the Juriſdiction of the Court, and yet with all Vehemency deſired to ſpeak with his Parliament; were not theſe Emergencies? If not, I knew not what were Emergencies. My Lords, beſides this, there was another Thing I did preſs, that I thought was of greater Conſequence than this, as to the Satisfaction of every Man's particular Conſcience; that admitting (if it might be admitted) that the King was liable to His Subjects, that they might call him to an Account, and might Condemn him, (I beg your Pardon that I take the Boldneſs to make ſuch Admiſſions,) but if ſuch a Thing might be admitted, certainly it did exceedingly become thoſe Judges that were to give ſuch a Sentence, (not againſt a Common Perſon, but againſt the greateſt,) to be very well ſatisfied in Matter of Fact, to a full Evidence before them, that ſuch and ſuch Things that were ſaid were true. I do acknowledge this, that to the beſt of my Apprehenſion, (I wiſh it had been ſo to others,) there was a great Shortneſs in this; I do humbly affirm this, that not one Member of the Court did hear one Witneſs Viva Voce, I did preſs that if the Court did give Judgment againſt the King, without a fair Examination, I ſaid it was ſuch a Thing as no Judge at any Aſſizes would do againſt a common Perſon; what I had was from Peters, and from ſome private Whiſpers from one of them that is gone, and hath received his Sentence and Doom. Cromwel did Anſwer with a great deal of Storm; he told the Preſident, that now he ſaw what great Reaſon the Gentleman had to put ſuch a Trouble and Diſturbance upon them; ſaith he, ſure he doth not know that he hath to do with the hardeſt hearted Man that lives upon the Earth; however, it is not fit that the Court ſhould be hindred from their Duty by one peeviſh Man; he ſaid, the Bottom was known, that he would fain ſave his Old Maſter; and deſired the Court, without any more ado, would go and do their Duty. Another that ſpoke to me in Anſwer was one that hath been before you, and hath received his Sentence, but is not dead, (and I deſire I may not name his Name,) his Anſwer was to what I have ſaid, that ſome Men were either Scepticks, or Infidels. After this I did go into the Speaker's Chamber, and there I did eaſe my Mind and Heart with Tears, God only knows. I have an unhappy Memory, I have ſlipt many Things.

Lord Chief Baron. Remember yourſelf by Papers, if you have any no Man will hinder you.

Downes. I have no Papers; but, my Lord, for the Truth of this I have ſaid, there are ſome Witneſſes that will make the Subſtance, the Effect of this appear.

Lord Chief Baron. Mr. Downes, there is one Particular before you come to the Witneſſes, that after all theſe Convictions you ſigned the Warrant; you deny it, the Council will prove it.

Downes. I did never hope, or think, that any Thing I can ſay ſhould be ſo ſatisfactory to you, but Things might be retorted upon me; and perhaps what I thought might be for extenuating my Crime may fall out to my Diſadvantage: I underſtand you do proceed upon Three Particulars, either Signing the firſt Warrant for conſtituting the Court; to my Remembrance I know not of it; if my Hand was to it I have forgot.

Council. Your Hand is not to that, but we mean your Hand is to the Warrant for Execution, —— pray ſhew it him. (It was ſhewn him.)

Downes. My Lord, how to reconcile that which hath been ſaid before, with this that comes after, I leave it to you, I am totally at a Loſs. When thoſe Times were, how impetuous the Soldiers, how not a Man that durſt either diſown them, or ſpeak againſt them. I was threatened with my very Life, by the Threats of one that hath received his Reward I was induced to it. Certainly, my Lord, it doth argue that there was not Malice Predominant; Love and Hatred cannot be at the ſame Time in one Perſon. Deſign, my Lord, what ſhould be my Deſign? A poor, ordinary, mean Man. Surely, my Lord, I could not deſign any great Matters or Places I knew myſelf unfit; I humbly beg you would give me leave to tell you a little what I got——

Mr. Sol. Gen. By your Favour, my Lord, the Priſoners at the Bar may ſay what they will by Way of Extenuation; but we expect that when they enter upon theſe Diſcourſes they will ſave your Lordſhip's Time, and ours, by a publick Confeſſion, and Evidence of Sorrow. We cannot ſpend ſo long Time to hear theſe long Diſcourſes, we will rather prove it againſt every Man ſingly.

Downes. I will trouble you no further, I do acknowledge all; I humbly ſubmit, and beg your Favour, and leave myſelf upon my Countrymen the Jury, and beg the King's Mercy ſpecially. —— Pray ſpare me one Word, that you will hear but a Witneſs or Two unto that Buſineſs.

Council. He doth confeſs he Sat and Signed; we believe he is Sorrowful, and againſt his Conſcience he did Sign: and that he did it out of a Fear, and from a Threat; that he was over-awed; (ſo was the Hangman too;) but after he had apprehended this Sorrow, and declared his Judgment upon the Fact, he Signed the Warrant.

Downes. My Lord, I do humbly beg his Majeſties Mercy; I came in upon the Proclamation.

Vincent Potter. My Lord, my Condition requires Eaſe for my Body; (he had a Fit of the Stone upon him at that ſame Time;) I pray that the paſſing the Sentence for Execution may be ſuſpended.

Lord Chief Baron. The Execution muſt be, ſuſpended, for you are within that Qualification.

Potter. I deſire only this, I am not in a Condition to declare what I know, and would ſpeak; I am mighty full of Pain; if I am under that Qualification, let me reſt under that.

Council. Do you confeſs the Indictment? Or will you put us to prove it?

Potter. I am one that came in.

Lord Chief Baron. It is thus with you, whether or no did you Sit, Sign, or Act in this High Court of Juſtice againſt the King?

Potter. I will deny nothing; I confeſs the Fact, but did not contrive it; I am full of Pain.

Lord Chief Baron. According to the Demerit of the Caſe in Law you muſt receive Judgment here, but no Execution of that Judgment ſhall be, until the King, by Advice and Conſent of Lords and Commons, ſhall order the Execution of it; you are to be Tried now; do you confeſs you Signed the Warrant for Execution of the King?

Potter. I do confeſs it, my Lord.

Council. We do accept it.

Potter. I beſeech you let me go to eaſe my ſelf.

Lord Chief Baron. Officer, ſet a Chair for him; (which was done) Mr. Potter, ſit down.

Aug. Garland. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I came here this Day intending to have waved my Plea, and referred my ſelf to this Honourable Court, to be recommended to the King's Mercy and the Parliament; but hearing of ſome Scandal upon me, more than ever I did hear till within theſe few Days, I ſhall deſire your Favour in hearing of my Trial.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, he ſaith well; for if he had confeſſed the Indictment we ſhould not have accepted it. Call the Witneſſes.

Garland. I do confeſs this, I Sate, and at the Day of Sentence Signed the Warrant for Execution.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And we will prove that he ſpat in the King's Face.

Garland. I pray let me hear that, otherwiſe I would not have put you to any Trouble at all.

Clench Sworn.

Council. Do you know the Priſoner at the Bar, Auguſtine Garland?

Clench. I know him very well.

Council. Tell my Lords and the Jury how you ſaw him behave himſelf to our Sovereign Lord the King when he was at the Bar.

Clench. I was that Day at Weſtminſter-hall when the King had Sentence; they hurried the King down, and Mr. Garland came down Stairs by them; towards the Bottom of the Stairs he Spit in his Face at a little diſtance.

Council. Do you believe he did it on Purpoſe, upon your Oath?

Clench. I ſuppoſe he did it ſomewhat Suſpiciouſly in that Way; I did ſee the King put his Hand in his Left Pocket, but I do not know whether the King wiped it off.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The King wiped it off, but he will never wipe it off ſo long as he lives: He hath confeſſed that he Sate, that he Sentenced, and that he Signed: We ſay he contrived it at the beginning, and at laſt bid Defiance to the King; I ſhall deſire he may be remembred in another Place.

Garland. I do not know that I was near him at that Time: I do not remember this Paſſage; I am afraid he is an Indigent Perſon. If I was Guilty of this Inhumanity I deſire no Favour from God Almighty.

Lord Chief Baron. I will tell you this doth not at all concern the Jury, but this Circumſtance poſſibly may be conſidered in another Place.

Garland. I refer my ſelf whether you be ſatisfied that I did ſuch an Inhumane Act, I ſubmit that to you; I dare appeal to all theſe Gentlemen here, (looking upon the Priſoners,) or any other, whether they ever heard of it, nor was I ever accuſed for ſuch a Thing till a few Days ſince; but I wave my Plea, and refer my ſelf to the Court: Now, my Lord, this is the Truth of my Caſe, there is that Honourable Gentleman, the Speaker of the Houſe of Commons, knows I lived in Eſſex in the beginning of theſe Troubles, and was forced to forſake my Habitation; I came from thence to London, where I have behaved my ſelf fairly in my Way. Afterwards in 1648, I was choſen a Member into the Parliament; in June 1648 I came in a Member of the Parliament. My Lord, after the Diviſion of the Houſe by the Inſolence of the Soldiery, ſome came to me, and deſired me that I would go to the Houſe; I was then at my Chamber at Lincolns Inn; I forbore a Week and more; ſaid I, I do not expect to be admitted, for they look upon me as another Perſon; ſaid they, if you will go you ſhall have no Contradiction; I went, and went in; when I was in, the Firſt Buſineſs that came was the Buſineſs of Trial of the King, and it was put on me to be Chair-man for bringing in this Act for Trial; I did not know how to contradict that Power or Authority, (be it what it will,) but I muſt obey; (I fear my Ruin will follow it, in that reſpect, my Lord, when I came there I was forced to run throughout what they had impoſed upon me.—— Having ſeen me I could not ſhrink from them for fear of my own Deſtruction, and thereupon I did go in, and did that which I have confeſſed to your Lordſhips, not out of any Malignity to his Majeſty, I never had any Diſreſpect to him in my Life; my Lord, I did not know which Way to be ſafe in any thing, without Doors was Miſery, within Doors was Miſchief. I do appeal to all that had any Thing to do with me, that I never did any Wrong to any that was of the King's Party, but helped them as I was able. My Lord, when the Government was thus toſſed, and turned, and tumbled, and I know not what, and the Secluded Members came into the Houſe, I knew not what to do in that Caſe neither. Aſſoon as this Parliament had declared the Treaty, which was the Eighth of May, the Ninth of May I appeared before the Right Honourable the Lord Mayor of London, and did claim the Benefit of his Majeſties Gracious Declaration, and to become a Loyal Subject, as in my Heart I always was; and my Lord Mayor being there, I hope he will teſtifie that as ſoon as I heard of the Proclamation I rendered my ſelf according to the Proclamation; my Lord, this hath been the Carriage of me, being always under Fear and Force; I refer myſelf to your Lordſhips.

Simon Meyne. When I was laſt here, my Lord, that I did then ſpeak Not Guilty, was not as to the Matter of Fact, but my Conſcience telling of me that I had no Malice or ill Intention to his Majeſty, that was the Reaſon. For Matter of Fact I ſhall acknowledge what I have done, and lye at his Majeſties Feet for Mercy. I am an ignorant weak Man in the Law, I will confeſs the Fact.

Council. Did you Sign the Warrant for Summoning that Court? And did you Sign the Warrant for Execution of the King.

Meyne. I did Sit in Court.

Council. Did you Sign the Warrant for Execution.

Meyne. My Lord, I knew not of the King's bringing up, I never was at any Committee.

Council. We do not ask you that; look upon the Warrant, and ſee if your Hand and Seal be not to it.

Meyne. My Lord, it is my Hand.

Council. Then my Lord, we have done.

Meyne. My Lord, I acknowledge it is my Hand, by what importunity it may be known to ſome here; I was very unwilling to it; I was told, what Fear was there when Forty were there before, and Twenty was of the Quorum? I was thereupon drawn in to ſet my Hand to it. My Lord, I never plotted nor contrived the Buſineſs. There was a Gentleman that told me, if I did offer to ſpeak in the Houſe, Houſe (and pluck'd me down by the Coat) and he told me I ſhould be Sequeſtred as a Delinquent; (the Name of this Perſon I ſhall omit;) ſaith he, you will rather loſe your Eſtate than take away the King's Life. I leave it with you.

James Temple. At the laſt Time I pleaded to the Indictment Not Guilty, but I ſhall now deſire to ſee my Hand, and if it be my Hand I muſt confeſs all Circumſtances muſt follow. (The Warrants being ſhewn him,) I do acknowledge it is my Hand to both; I never did conſult concerning the Court.

Council. There are ſome worſe than he, but he is bad enough.

James Temple. I refer myſelf to the King and Parliament, and preſented a Petition, which was received by the Court.

Peter Temple. When I was here the laſt Time I pleaded Not Guilty —— the Reaſon was, becauſe there are divers Things in the Indictment that my Conſcience tells me I am not Guilty of; for I had not a Malicious or Traiterous Heart againſt the King. To ſave your Lordſhips Time I will confeſs what I am guilty of: I was in the Court, Sat there; if I ſee my Hand I ſhall confeſs it.

Council. Were you there when Sentence was given?

Temple. Yes, Sir.

Council. Shew him the Warrants, (which being ſhewed him,) I acknowledge they are my Hand, and refer it to your Lordſhips.

Council. Mr. Wayte. You heard the Charge read againſt you, what ſay you to it?

Thomas Wayte. Truly, my Lord, when I was here laſt I pleaded Not Guilty; I humbly deſired then your Lordſhips to hear me a Word or Two. You promiſed me then I ſhould be heard; I ſhall deſire to ſpeak for myſelf.

Lord Chief Baron. God forbid but you ſhould.

Mr. Sol. Gen. By your Lordſhip's Favour we muſt ſpeak firſt; if he will confeſs the Fact he may ſpeak what he will. Did you Sit in the Court?

Waite. Yes.

Council. The Day of Sentence?

Waite. Yes.

Council. Is your Hand to the Warrant for Execution?

Waite. I know not; pray let me ſee it. (It was ſhewn him.) My Lord, I confeſs it is like my Hand, but I do not remember it.

Council. If you do not acknowledge it it will be proved.

Waite, Truly, my Lord, I do believe it is my Hand.

Council. Then the Jury will not doubt it.

Waite. But I deſire to be heard. I am loth to trouble you much; I will tell you how I was brought into this Buſineſs. My Lord, I was a Member of that Houſe that Erected this Court when the Treaty was in the Iſle of Wight. Immediately after the Army came up I was utterly againſt that Act in the Houſe. When the Army came up to purge the Houſe I was much Troubled at it; I deſired to know the Charge they had againſt them. Two or Three Days after I did move, and there were other Gentlemen that did move, to know what Charge there was. They ſent Word we ſhould have a Charge in due Time; we ſent, and none came, but ſaid we ſhould have it in due Time; I went to thoſe worthy Gentlemen to ſee them in Priſon, and ſeeing nothing would be done, I took my Leave, and made Account to ſee them no more, and went down into the Country to Leiceſterſhire; I was ſent for up ſeveral times; I would not come with Threats upon Pain of Sequeſtration. My Lords, there were Petitions going up and down the Country for bringing the King to that Buſineſs, which was againſt my Conſcience. I went to Rutlandſhire, I heard there were ſome things working there; I uſed my Intereſt, and I thank God I ſtopped it; I came then to London when all theſe Things were deſtroyed; I came to London the Day before the Sentence was given; I went to the Houſe, (thought nothing;) ſome were ſent to the Tower, and I was ſent for to the Houſe, and my Name was in the Act unknown to me; but one ſent a Note in my Lord Gray's Name, that he would ſpeak with me; I went to him, and I ſaid, my Lord, what would you do with me? Saith he, I did not ſend for you; thereupon Cromwel and Ireton laid hold on me; ſaid they, we ſent for you, you are one of the High Court; no, ſaid I, not I, my Judgment is againſt it; they carried me to the Court. When the King deſired to ſpeak with his Parliament, I riſing up, one told me I muſt not be heard, for the Preſident was to give Judgment, and ſaid, there was an Order that none ſhould ſpeak in Court. Mr. Downes did move, and they did adjourn the Court, and I was glad I got out; Cromwel laughed, and ſmiled, and jeered in the Court of Wards. I hope your Lordſhip will be pleaſed to conſider I was no Contriver, no Soldier that put the Force upon the Houſe that erected the Court, none of the Law-makers, or did any Thing maliciouſly againſt the King. My Lord, I was looked upon with an Evil Eye for regarding the King's Friends in the Country; Gray told me the King would not Die, I hope he will not ſaid I: The next Day, on Monday I went to the Houſe, they were labouring to get Hands for his Execution at the Door; I refuſed, and went into the Houſe; ſaith Cromwel, thoſe that are gone in ſhall ſet their Hands, I will have their Hands now. That Night I went to the Lord Gray's, and he ſaid, I am afraid they will put him to Death. I ſaid ſo alſo. My Lord, I have been a great Sufferer, I was drawn in, trepann'd into it; ſince being a Friend to the King's Friends, I am almoſt ruined in my Eſtate; I beſeech your Lordſhips make the beſt Interpretation. I hope you will believe I was no Contriver; I humbly lay hold upon the King's Mercy and Favour. I came in upon the Proclamation; I pray that this Honourable Court will prefer my Petition to the King, and both Houſes of Parliament, which the Court then received.

William Heveningham. My Lord, in 1648 we were under a Force, under the Tyranny of an Army; they were our Maſters; for a Malicious and a Traiterous Heart I had not. I do abſolutely deny the Signing the Warrant for Summoning the Court, and alſo that Warrant for Execution of the King; at the Time of Sealing I had that Courage and Boldneſs that I proteſted againſt it.

Council. We do not queſtion him for that, but for Sitting in the High Court of Juſtice, and that upon the Day of the Sentence, do you deny that?

Heveningham. My Lord, I cannot ſay poſitively.

Council. If you deny the Matter of Fact it muſt be proved.

Heveningham. My Lord, I cannot ſay poſitively, but it may be I might.

Council. Either ſay poſitively you did, or elſe let the Witneſſes be called.

Heveningham. Truly, my Lord, I think I did, but my After-actions.

Lord Chief Baron. Mr. Heveningham, that ſhall be conſidered.

Council. My Lord, to Sit upon the Day of Sentence was High-Treaſon in itſelf, and is an Evidence of Compaſſing and Imagining the King's Death.

Heveningham. I ſhall lay hold of the Declaration; I came in upon the Proclamation; I pray your Lordſhips to intercede for me to the King and both Houſes of Parliament; I pray the Mercy of this Court.

Lord Chief Baron. You of the Jury, they have all confeſſed, and therefore you may go together.

Simon Meyne. My Lords, I have forgot my Petition; it is at my Lodging, I deſire I may ſend it at Night.

John Downes and Peter Temple prayed the like Favour.

Lord Chief Baron. Do, ſend them, they ſhall be received.

The Jury having conſulted together a certain Time, they went to their Places.

Clerk. Gentlemen, are you agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Clerk. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Clerk. John Downes, Hold up thy Hand——— Look upon the Priſoner; how ſay you? Is he Guilty of High Treaſon whereof he ſtands Indicted, and hath been Arraigned? Or not Guilty.

Foreman. Guilty.

Clerk. Look to him Keeper. What Goods and Chattels, &c?

Foreman. None to our Knowledge. And the like Verdicts at the ſame time paſſed in the ſame Manner againſt Vincent Potter, Auguſtine Garland, Simon Meyne, James Temple, Peter Temple, Thomas Waite, and William Heveningham.

Potter. I hope I may be freed from Irons, I am in Pain, and a Man of Bulk.

Lord Chief Baron. We can give no Order in it, we muſt Leave it to the Sheriff.

Potter. I beg it of you, my Lord.

Lord Chief Baron. We muſt Leave it to the Sheriff. Mr. Heveningham, you muſt withdraw from the Bar.

Clerk. Officer, bring down Waller, Fleetwood, Hacker, Axtell, Hulet, Penington, Marten, Millington, Titchburne, Roe, Lilburne, Smith, and Harvey, and ſet them to the Bar, which was done accordingly.

Clerk. Hardreſs Waller, Hold up thy Hand. Thou haſt been Indicted, and found Guilty of High Treaſon, what canſt thou ſay why Judgment ſhould not paſs on thee to die according to Law?

Waller. My Lords, I am now, it ſeems, Convicted by Law, and ſo adjudged: Your Lordſhips the other Day on my Deſire told me I might have Liberty to ſpeak upon my Trial, I muſt now beg the like upon a Condemned Perſon.

Lord Chief Baron. You are Convicted, not Condemned.

Waller. My Lords, I was the firſt that pleaded Guilty, I bleſs God that he gave me a Heart to do it, I find moſt Peace in the doing it; and ſince there is nothing left but Hopes of Mercy, I humbly ſubmit it to your Lordſhips to hear me in this ſad Condition, that that may make me ſeem more capable of Mercy. I have, my Lords, been ſo unhappy to have been tranſplanted out of my Country theſe Thirty Years, I have been but once theſe Eleven Years in England, this muſt needs make me a Stranger.

Lord Chief Baron. I muſt not hinder you becauſe it is for Mercy that you plead, but conſider with yourſelf whether it will not be better to give it in a Petition: I leave it to you, we can do nothing in Point of Mercy but Judgment.

Waller. Only this, (my Lord,) whether I am not the more capable of your Mercy?

Lord Chief Baron. That you may underſtand it, the Act of Indemnity of Parliament hath excepted you: yet upon ſome Qualifications we are to proceed according to Law, that is, to go to Conviction and Judgment. The Act ſays, that after Judgment there ſhall be no Execution, but that it ſhall be ſuſpended till a further Act of Parliament to be paſſed for that Purpoſe; ſo that in the mean Time we are to proceed no further than Judgment. That which concerns Mercy is referred to another Place. If you pleaſe to ſay any Thing to ſatisfie us, or to go by Way of Petition, it muſt be left to you, but what you ſay for Mercy is nothing to us.

Waller. I humbly thank your Lordſhip for this clear and noble dealing, and withal, I would beg that theſe People that are Witneſſes of my Shame and Guilt, may know that it was a Force and Temptation upon me; I ſhall not inſiſt much, I have ſaid that I did plead Guilty, which was moſt ſafe to my own Conſcience, yet I ſhould make it appear that I did appear more to preſerve the King from Trial and Sentence than any other.

Lord Finch. Sir. Hadreſs Waller, I have heard of late of your Sorrow, which I was glad to hear of, becauſe you are my Kinſman, both by your Father and Mother's Side, and alſo my Countrey-man; I was glad to hear of your great Penitence for that horrid Crime, and I would have been glad to have ſeen it now; adviſe with yourſelf, whether you do yourſelf any Good in ſpeaking to extenuate, when you know there is no Man againſt whom there are ſuch Circumſtances of Aggravation as againſt you; conſider whether a publick Penitence would not be more proper.

Waller. I beſeech you report me both to His Majeſty and Parliament, and receive me into your Grace, as being Penitent, truly Penitent: To ſay ſo now were a ſmall Thing, for the fear of the Puniſhment may procure it; but I have been more Penitent when no Eye hath ſeen me but God; when I never imagined to be queſtioned for this Sin, then my Heart hath yearned in the Buſineſs; but I ſhall not trouble your Lordſhips, God holds forth Mercy, His Majeſty holds forth Mercy, the Parliament holds forth Mercy. My Lord, let me ſay ſomething to you, (though it be but a Word,) of the Violence and Force of Temptation; you may have been under it, or may come to it; Chriſt himſelf was under it; we find that faithful Abraham, by the Power of a Temptation, delivered up his Wife to commit Adultery, which ſcarce a Heathen would; we find that valiant Peter denied his Maſter; righteous Lot committed Inceſt. None abhors this Fact more than I do; I have done it ſo long beforehand, I need not to be afraid to ſpeak it in the Face of the Judge of all Men; that is all I ſhall ſay. I rendred myſelf Three Times; I had as much Opportunity to make my Eſcape as any Perſon whatſoever.

Lord Chief Baron. It is underſtood, Sir Harpreſs.

Clerk. Iſaac Penington, Hold up thy Hand, Thou art in the ſame Condition as the former, what canſt thou ſay for thyſelf why Judgment, &c?

Pennington. My Lord, I have ſaid what I have to ſay, and ſhall not trouble your Lordſhips any further.

Clerk. Henry Marten, Hold up thy Hand. Thou art in the ſame Condition, what canſt thou ſay for thyſelf why Judgment, &c? Mar-

Marten. I claim the Benefit of the Proclamation.

Clerk. Gilbert Millington, Hold up thy Hand. Thou art in the ſame Condition, what canſt thou ſay for thyſelf why Judgment, &c?

Millington. I ſhall not trouble you with long Diſcourſes; I will ſay no more but this, I have made a publick Reſentment of my Sorrow for this Offence formerly, and many times. I ſhall now deſire no more, but humbly beg that I may have the Benefit of the Proclamation, and pray his Majeſties moſt Gracious Pardon.

Clerk. Robert Tichburn, Hold up thy Hand. Thou art in the ſame Condition, what canſt thou ſay for thyſelf why Judgment, &c?

Tichburn. My Lord, I will not trouble you with any Repetitions, I have made my humble Requeſt before, I leave it with you.

Clerk. Owen Roe, Hold up thy Hand. Thou art in the ſame Condition, what canſt thou ſay for thy ſelf why Judgment, &c?

Roe. My Lord, I have no more to ſay than I ſaid before.

Clerk. Robert Lilburn, Hold up thy Hand. Thou art in the ſame Condition, what canſt thou ſay for thy ſelf why Judgment, &c?

Lilburn. I ſhall refer myſelf without further Trouble to the Court; my Lord, I beg the Benefit of the Proclamation.

Clerk. Thomas Waite, Hold up thy Hand. Thou art in the ſame Condition, what canſt thou ſay for thyſelf why Judgment, &c?

Waite. I can declare no more than what already; my Heart is ſorry for what I have done; I beg the Benefit of the Proclamation.

Clerk. Edmund Harvey. Hold up thy Hand. Thou art in the ſame Condition, what canſt thou ſay for thyſelf why Judgment, &c?

Harvey. My Lords, I have no more than what I have ſaid before.

Clerk. John Downes, Hold up thy Hand. Thou art in the ſame Condition, what canſt thou ſay for thyſelf why Judgment, &c?

Downes. I ſhall not trouble you any further, I ſhall deſire the Benefit of his Majeſties Proclamation.

Clerk. Vincent Potter, Hold up thy Hand. Thou art in the ſame Condition, what canſt thou ſay for thyſelf why Judgment, &c?

Potter. My Lord, I do not know Law, I underſtand it not; I am not in a Condition to ſpeak what I would have willingly ſpoke; I deſire that God would have Mercy, and I look for Mercy from God, and wept.

Clerk. Auguſtine Garland, Hold up thy Hand. Thou art in the ſame Condition, what canſt thou ſay for thyſelf why Judgment, &c?

Garland. I humbly deſire your Lordſhip's charitable Opinion of me: Notwithſtanding what has been objected againſt me, I humbly refer myſelf to the Parliament.

Clerk. George Fleetwood, Hold up thy Hand. Thou art in the ſame Condition, what canſt thou ſay for thyſelf why Judgment, &c?

Fleetwood. My Lord, I have already confeſſed the Fact, I wiſh I could expreſs my Sorrow, and wept.

Clerk. James Temple, Hold up thy Hand. Thou art in the ſame Condition, what canſt thou ſay for thyſelf why Judgment, &c?

James Temple. My Lord, I can ſay no more, I beg the Benefit of the Proclamation.

Clerk. Simon Mayne. Hold up thy Hand. Thou art in the ſame Condition, what canſt thou ſay for thyſelf why Judgment, &c?

Mayne. I have told you before, my Lord, I have no more.

Clerk. Peter Temple. Hold up thy Hand. Thou art in the ſame Condition, what canſt thou ſay for thyſelf why Judgment, &c?

Peter Temple. My Lord, I came in upon the Proclamation, and I humbly beg the Benefit of it.

Clerk. Francis Hacker. Hold up thy Hand. Thou art in the ſame Condition, what canſt thou ſay for thyſelf why Judgment, &c?

Hacker. My Lord, I have nothing to ſay but what has been before your Lordſhips.

Clerk. Daniel Axtell, Hold up thy Hand. Thou art in the ſame Condition, what canſt thou ſay for thyſelf why Judgment, &c?

Axtell. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, my Caſe differs from the reſt of the Gentlemen.

Lord Chief Baron. I would be loth to hinder you, but I muſt tell you, that what hath been over-ruled muſt not be ſpoke to; if you have any Thing againſt the Indictment, Matter of Law, go on.

Axtell. I have one Thing more that I did not then mention.

Lord Chief Baron. If it tend not as an Exception to the Indictment it is not to be heard.

Axtell. My Lord, then I ſhall apply myſelf to that Point; I humbly conceive, my Lord, that my Overt-acts were not ſufficiently ſet down in the Indictment, as might be ſufficient in Law to Attaint me of High Treaſon; I do not remember that the Overt-act that was applied to me in Evidence was charged in the Indictment; I have only that Exception, becauſe of the Inſufficiency of that Point. In the next Place, my Lord, there is not the right Additions to my Name; there are many Perſons of the ſame Name; I am arraigned by the Name of Daniel Axtell, of Weſtminſter, in the County of Middleſex, Gentleman. I think none knew me to live there, and inhabit there.

Lord Chief Baron. I would not interrupt you, this is paſt; you ſhould have made your Exception to that as Maſter Marten did before concerning his Name; that ſhould have been firſt done; you have appeared and pleaded to that Name, and it was, late of Weſtminſter.

Axtell. My Lord, I have this to ſpeak in Arreſt of Judgment, that the Indictment being grounded upon that Statute of the Twenty-fifth of Edward the Third, it is either miſtaken, or not purſued; my Lords, I did Yeſterday give you the Judgment of the Lords and Commons concerning the Statute in relation to my Caſe; I ſay the Statute was miſtaken, or not purſued.

Lord Chief Baron. That was offered before, Sir, as to the Matter of it.

Axtell. My Lord, I think not, I am miſtaken if it were.

Lord Chief Baron. Then open it.

Axtell. My Lord, I do not find in that Statute that Words are an Overt-act, Words only.

Lord Chief Baron. This was over-ruled. The Things that you objected were theſe, that there is not any Overt-act that is laid that could be applicable to your Caſe; if it were not particularly applicable (you are found Guilty by the Jury,) it would be nothing: But there is an Overt-act, you were preſent at the Court, beating the Soldiers, ſending for an Executioner: But for Words, if one Man ſhould ſay, here is the King, go and kill him, this is Treaſon; but you were guilty in all according to Law. You being there, and doing this, you were not guilty only of the Words, but of all that was done; there is none but Principals in Treaſon.

What

What we ſay and do to you we well know we muſt anſwer before God Almighty for it.

Axtell. I have but one Word more; truly I do appeal to God, before whom I ſhall have another Trial, I do not find myſelf Guilty either of Conſulting, Contriving, or having a Hand in the Death of the King; I am Innocent, and I pray God that my Innocent Blood——

Lord Chief Baron. Pray Sir——

Axtell. May not cry——

Lord Chief Baron. You are now to ſpeak in Arreſt of Judgment.

Axtell. I have no more; I pray your Lordſhip's Favour and Mercy to me.

William Hulet, alias Howlet, Hold up thy Hand. Thou art in the ſame Condition, what canſt thou ſay for thyſelf why Judgment, &c?

Hulet. Truly my Lord, I have little further to ſay; if you had been pleaſed to give me further Time I ſhould have cleared myſelf; I call God above to Witneſs upon this Account that I am as clear as any Man; I ſubmit to the Mercy of the Court.

Lord Chief Baron. For that I do, (but cannot poſitively ſay it,) that at your Requeſt (notwithſtanding the Judgment will paſs againſt you) there may be ſome Time till his Majeſties Pleaſure be known before any Execution will be upon that Judgment againſt you, in the mean time we muſt proceed according to Law and Juſtice.

Proclamation for Silence whilſt Judgment is given.

The Lord Chief Baron's Speech before the Sentence pronounced againſt the aforenamed Priſoners found Guilty.

YOU that are Priſoners at the Bar, you ſtand here in ſeveral Capacities, yet all of you Perſons convicted of the deteſtable and execrable Murder of our Sovereign Lord King Charles the Firſt, of bleſſed Memory. Miſtake me not, I do not ſay that you are all of you guilty of executing the Fact, but in Law, and in Conſcience, (pro tanto, though not pro toto,) you are guilty of it, in that you prepared the Way and Means to it, in that you brought his Head to the Block, though you did not cut it off. You are here in Three Sorts, and I muſt apply my Words accordingly; and truly I do it with as much Sorrow of Heart as you have, many of you being Perſons of liberal Education, great Parts; I ſay you are of Three Sorts. There are ſome of you, that though the Judgment of Death is to paſs againſt you, by His Majeſties Grace and Favour, and the Mercy under him, of the Two Houſes of Parliament, Execution is to be Suſpended until another Act of Parliament ſhall paſs to that Purpoſe, that is, all of you but Three; for thoſe Three, the one of them that was laſt called, William Heveningham, he is in another Capacity too; for I preſume ſome Time will be given to him to conſider of ſomething relating to him, before any Order will be given for his Execution; there are Two others of you, and that is Daniel Axtell and Francis Hacker; and for you, as it yet ſtands before us, there is no Mercy, there is no room for it: But though you be in theſe ſeveral Claſſes, yet what I ſhall ſay will concern you all, becauſe I do not know how it may fall with you; none of us knows how ſoon we may come to our Deaths, ſome (probably) ſooner than others; all muſt come to it: You are now before the Tribunal of Man, but that is for Judgment for your Offence here, but there is another Judgment hereafter, and a Tribunal before which both you and we muſt ſtand, every Man here, and we muſt receive according to our Work; thoſe that have done ignorantly, by a ſerious and unfeigned Repentance God Almighty may ſhew Mercy unto them. He hath reſerved Mercy even for the greateſt Offenders. St. Paul himſelf, when he perſecuted Chriſt ignorantly, upon his Repentance he found Mercy; thoſe of you that are not yet convicted in your Conſciences of the Foulneſs of this horrid Fact, look into your Conſciences a little more, and ſee if it be not a great Judgment for your former Offence, that you ſhould be given over to a Reprobate Senſe; let me tell you, a ſeared Conſcience, a bold Confidence, not upon good Grounds is ſo far from ſecuring the Conſcience, it may ſtifle perhaps the Mouth of Conſcience, but it will riſe up more in Judgment againſt you. Here you have made your Defence, and I do not blame you for it; Life is precious, but remember the Thoughts of your Hearts are open; whether you did it ignorantly, covetouſly, or to get the Government into your own Hands, that I am not able to ſearch into, God and you only know that; give me Leave to ſay ſomething, perhaps I have repeated it by Parts before; God is my Witneſs what I ſpeak I ſpeak from mine own Conſcience, and that is this, Gentlemen, becauſe I ſaw it ſtuck with ſome of you, that is, that whatſoever the Caſe was, that by the Laws of theſe Nations the Fundamental Laws, there could not be any Coercive Power over your King. I ſpeak it again, becauſe I would as near as I could ſpeak the whole Truth, and would not miſlead any Man in ſuch a Caſe; remember that no Power, no Perſon, no Community or Body of Men, (not the People, either Collectively or Repreſentatively,) have any Coercive Power over the Perſon of the King by the Fundamental Laws; for that, Gentlemen, I ſhall begin to ſhew you that which all of you might remember, that is, your Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, and to add to this that Obligation which all this whole Nation did oblige themſelves to, by the Parliament, without Queſtion then rightly repreſented, and in Being, the firſt of King James; whereby to ſhew you, that not only Perſons, but the Body Politick of the Nations, not only the ſingle Members, but the Members in both Houſes of Parliament, were Loyal and Obedient Subjects to the King, their Head, even to yield a Natural and Humble Obedience and Allegiance. I told you the Act of 1 King James, when King James came firſt into England, We the Lords and Commons repreſenting the whole People of the Nation, (the very Words of the Act are ſo primo Jacobi, Chap. 1.) Repreſenting the whole Body of the Nation, do acknowledge an Humble and Natural Liege Obedience to the King as Supreme, his Heirs and Succeſſors; and in the Name of themſelves, and all the People, humbly ſubmit themſelves until the laſt Drop of their Blood be ſpent in Defence of the King and his Royal Poſterity; and therefore they did oblige themſelves and all the People of England, (as far as they could repreſent them, (the Words are more full than I can expreſs them,) and indeed it is ſo Dark I cannot read them; They did acknowledge to be bound to him and his Imperial Crown. Remember theſe were not Words of Complement; you ſhall find that they all of them, and ſo did ſo many of you as are Members of Parliament, yea, all of you, before you came into the Houſe of Commons, did take the Oath of Allegiance, which was made after this Recognition, the Third and Fourth of King James, or otherwiſe were not to be Members. What was that Oath of Allegiance that you took? It was, that you

you ſhould Defend the King, his Perſon, (that is in 3 Jacobi, Chapter the Fourth,) his Crown and Dignity: What was it? Not only againſt the Pope's Power to Depoſe, but the Words are, or otherwiſe; look into the Act, and reflect upon your own Conſcience, and you ſhall find that all did Swear to defend the King, his Crown and Dignity, and there it is called Imperial Crown. I would have you lay this to Heart, and ſee how far you have kept this Oath: Gentlemen, in the Oath of Supremacy, which you all took therein, you did further acknowledge that the King was the only Supreme Governour of this Realm: Mark the Words, I will repeat them that you may lay it to Heart; you that have more Time to apply it to your Fact; and you that have leſs Time, for ought I know, you have reaſon to conſider what I have to ſay; you ſware then, that the King by the Oath of Supremacy, which all of you have taken, or ought to have taken; if any of you have not taken it, yet notwithſtanding you are not abſolved from the Obligation of it; but moſt of you did take it; there you did ſwear that the King is the only Supreme Governour of this Realm; and you ſware there that you would defend all Juriſdictions, Priviledges, Prebeminences, and Authorities, granted or belonging to the King's Highneſs, his Heirs, and Succeſſors, or united and annexed unto the Imperial Crown of this Realm. For the Firſt, if the King be Supreme then there is no Co-ordination. Non habet Majorem, non habet Parem; that Word (Imperial Crown) is at leaſt in Nine or Ten ſeveral Statutes; it is the very Word in this Act that was made lately in purſuance of former Acts concerning Judicial Proceedings. And ſo in the Time of King Charles, they acknowledged him to be their Liege Sovereign; I ſay that Word Supream, and ſo the Word Imperial Crown, is in the Firſt of Queen Elizabeth, the Third and the Eighth of Elizabeth, the Twenty-fourth of Hen. 8. Chap. 12. there it is ſaid this Kingdom is an Imperial Crown, ſubject to none but God Almighty. Before theſe Times you ſhall find in the 16 of Richard the Second, the Statute of Præmunire, the Crown of England Subject to God alone. I will go higher, William Rufus, (ſome of you are Hiſtorians, and you ſhall find the ſame in Eadmerus, and alſo in Matthew Paris, ſhortly after William Rufus his Time,) when he wrote to the Pope he Challenged, and had the ſame Liberty in this Kingdom of England, as the Emperor had in his Empire; (miſtake me not, I ſpeak only as to the Perſon of the King,) I do not meddle of Rights between the King and Subjects, or Subject and Subject; you ſee in this Caſe concerning the Death of his Majeſties Dear Father, and our Bleſſed Sovereign, of happy Memory, he doth not judge himſelf, but according to Law; that which I aſſert is as to the Perſon of the King, which was the Priviledge of Emperors, as to their Perſonal Priviledges, if he had offended, and committed an Offence, he was only accountable to God himſelf. I will come back to what I have ſaid; you ſwore to be faithful to the King as Supream. The King of Poland hath a Crown, but at his Oath of Coronation it is conditioned with the People, that if he ſhall not Govern according to ſuch and ſuch Rules they ſhall be freed from their Homage and Allegiance. But it differs with our King, for he was a King before Oath. The King takes his Oath, but not upon any Condition; this I ſhew you, to let you ſee that we have no coercive Power againſt the King. The King of England was anointed with Oil at his Coronation, which was to ſhew that Abſolute Power, (I do not ſay of Government,) but of being accountable to God for what he did: The Law ſaith, The King doth no Injury to any Man; not but that the King may have the Imbecilities and Infirmities of other Men, but the King in his Single Perſon can do no Wrong: But if the King command a Man to beat me, or to diſſeize me of my Land, I have my Remedy againſt the Man, though not againſt the King. The Law in all Caſes preſerves the Perſon of the King to be untouched; but what is done by his Miniſters unlawfully, there is a Remedy againſt his Miniſters for it; but in this Caſe, when you come to the Perſon of the King; what do our Law-Books ſay he is? They call it, Caput Reipublicæ, Salus Populi, the Lieutenant of God, and let me tell you, there was never ſuch a Blow given to the Church of England, and the Proteſtant Religion. There was a Caſe, and that of the Spencers, you ſhall find in the 7th Report of the Lord Cook, in Calvin's Caſe, that Homage is due to the King in his Politick Capacity; and then they made this damnable Inference, that therefore if the King did not demean himſelf as he ought, that he ſhould be reformed, pure aſpertee, by Aſperity, Sharpneſs, or Impriſonment: But theſe were condemned by Two Acts of Parliament in Print, that they could not do that even in that Caſe; one was called the Baniſhment of Hugh Spencer; and the other is in 1 Edward 3. upon the Roll. My Maſters, in the firſt of Henry the Seventh you ſhall find it in the Printed Seven Books, he ſaith, That as to the Regality of his Crown, he is immediately Subject unto God. Mark the Doctrine of the Church of England, Gentlemen; I do not know with what Spirit of Equivocation any Man can take that Oath of Supremacy: You ſhall find in the Articles of the Church of England, the laſt but One or Two; it is that Article which ſets forth the Doctrine of the Church of England; they ſay, that the Queen, and ſo the King, hath the Supream Power in this Realm, and hath the Chief Government over all the Eſtates of the Realm; the very Words are ſo; this was ſhortly after making the Act; the Articles were in 1652, and ſhe came in 1558, or 1559; it is to ſhew you the King hath the chief Government over all the Eſtates within the Nation; and if you look upon it, you ſhall find it was not only the Judgment of the Church, but of the Parliament at the ſame Time. They did confirm this Article ſo far, that they appointed that no Man ſhould take, or be capable of a Living, but thoſe that had taken that Oath. God forgive thoſe Miniſters that went againſt it. The Queen, and the Church, were willing that theſe ſhould be put into Latin, that all the World might ſee the Confeſſion of the Church of England, and of the People of England; you may read it in Cambden: I have told you how, and wherein, the chief Power conſiſted; not in Reſpect the King could do what he would; no, the Emperors themſelves did not challenge that, but this they challenge by it, that they were not accountable to Man for what they did: No Man ought to touch the Perſon of the King; I preſs it to you in Point of Conſcience; you ſee in the Scripture, in Pſalm 51. the Pſalm of Mercy, whereby we ask Pardon of God for our great Offences; I think none of you in this Condition but will join in this; you know the Adultery and Murder that David committed, this Penitential Pſalm was made for that; what doth he ſay? Againſt thee, thee only have I ſinned, &c. tibi ſoli peccavi, Domine; not becauſe he had not ſinned againſt Man, for 'tis plain he had ſinned both againſt Bathſheba and Uriah too; but becauſe he was not liable to the Tribunal of Man, he was not bound or accountable to any Man upon Earth. And now, my Maſters, I beſeech you conſider, that ſome of you for ought I know ſuddenly, and ſome of you for ought I know not long after, all of us, we do do not know how ſoon, muſt come to make a right Account to God of what we have done. After this Life you enter into an Eternity, an Eternity, an Eternity of Happineſs, or of Woe; God Almighty is merciful to thoſe that are truly penitent; the Theif upon the Croſs, and to all that are of a penitent Heart. You are Perſons of Education, do not you go on in an obſtinate perverſe Courſe, for Shame of Men, even this Shame which you now have, and which you may have when you come to die; a ſanctified Uſe may be made of it; you pay to God ſome Part of that Puniſhment which you owe to him for your Sins. I have no more to ſay, but the next Thing I have to do, is to give the Sentence, the Judgment, which truly I do with as unwilling a Heart as you do receive it. You Priſoners at the Bar, the Judgment of the Court is this, and the Court doth award, That you be led back to the Place from whence you came, and from thence to be drawn upon an Hurdle to the Place of Execution, and there you ſhall be Hanged by the Neck, and being Alive ſhall be cut down, and your Privy Members to be cut off, your Entrails to be taken out of your Bodys, and (you living) the ſame to be Burnt before your Eyes, and your Heads to be cut off, your Bodys to be divided into Four Quarters, and Heads and Quarters to be diſpoſed of at the Pleaſure of the King's Majeſty, and the Lord have Mercy upon your Souls.

Court adjourned till Friday Morning Seven a Clock.

Friday, October 19. 1660.

Set William Heveningham to the Bar.

Serjeant Keeling. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips the Priſoner at the Bar, William Heveningham hath been Indicted of High-Treaſon, for Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the late King, of Bleſſed Memory; he has been Tried, the Jury has found him Guilty, I do humbly move your Lordſhips in the Behalf of the King that you will proceed to Judgment.

Clerk. William Heveningham, Hold up thy Hand. What canſt thou ſay for thyſelf why Judgment, &c?

Heveningham. My Lords, I have nothing more to ſay than I ſaid formerly, only I plead the Benefit of the Proclamation, and caſt myſelf upon the Mercy of our moſt Gracious Sovereign, and deſire your Lordſhips to be Mediators on my Behalf.

Lord Chief Baron. By the Act of Indemnity (of which you claim the Benefit, and we ought to take Notice of it) we are to proceed to Judgment, but no Execution of this Judgment is to be until by another Act of Parliament, by Conſent of the King it ſhall be ordered. And therefore I need not ſpeak any more of that, or any Exhortation to prepare yourſelf for Death; our Work is only to give Judgment. The Judgment of the Court is this, and the Court doth award, that you the Priſoner at the Bar be led back to, &c. and the Lord have Mercy upon your Soul.

THE

The Tryal of Sir HENRY VANE Kt. at the King's-Bench Weſtminſter, June 2. & 6. 1662. Done by himſelf and his Friends.

SIR Henry Vane was the laſt Term indicted of High Treaſon, before the Middleſex Grand Jury; and the Bill being found by them, he was upon Monday the ſecond of June this Term arraigned, to this effect:

'THAT you, as a falſe Traytor againſt his 'moſt Excellent Majeſty King Charles the 'Second, your ſupreme and natural Lord, not hav-'ing the Fear of God before your eyes, and with-'drawing that your Duty and Allegiance, which a 'true Subject ought to have and bear to our ſaid 'Liege and Sovereign Lord, the thirteenth of May, 'in the eleventh Year of our ſaid Sovereign Lord 'the King, at the Pariſh of St. Martins in the Fields 'in the County of Middleſex, did compaſs and ima-'gine the Death of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the 'King, and the antient Frame of Government of 'this Realm totally to ſubvert, and keep out our 'ſaid Sovereign Lord from the Exerciſe of his 'Regal Government. And the ſame the better to 'effect, the ſaid Sir Henry Vane, the ſaid thirteenth 'Day of May, in the ſaid eleventh Year, &c. at 'St. Martins aforeſaid, together with other falſe 'Traytors, to the Jurors unknown, did traito-'rouſly and maliciouſly aſſemble and ſit together, 'and then and there conſulted to bring the King 'unto Deſtruction, and to hold him out from the 'Exerciſe of his Regal Authority, and then and 'there uſurped the Government, and appointed 'Officers, to wit, Colonels and Captains of a 'certain Army, raiſed againſt the King; againſt 'the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his 'Crown and Dignity, and contrary to the Form of 'the Statute in that caſe made and provided.

'And the better to effect this, the twentieth of 'December, in the ſaid eleventh Year, with a Mul-'titude, to the number of a thouſand Perſons, to 'the Jurors unknown, in warlike manner aſſem-'bled, and array'd with Guns, Trumpets, Drums, '&c. did levy War againſt the Peace, &c. and 'contrary to the Form of a Statute.'

Which being read, he pray'd to have it read a ſecond time, which was granted him. He then pray'd to have it read in Latin, which all the Court deny'd, and Keeling the King's Serjeant ſaid, That tho all Pleas and Entries are ſet down on Record in Latin, yet the Agitations of Cauſes in Court, ought to be in Engliſh.

The Priſoner moved ſeveral Exceptions to the Indictment, as that the 25 Ed. 3. is not purſued; that he had levied no ſuch Force as amounted to a levying of War: Alſo the Place in which, Perſons with whom, are both uncertain; and the particular Acts of levying War being not ſet forth, he thought therefore the Indictment was inſufficient. Alſo he ſaid, Here is a long time of Action for which I am charged, and I may be concerned for what I acted as a Member in that Sovereign Court of Parliament; and if any thing concerns the Juriſdiction of that Court, I ought not to be judg'd here. At which the Court and King's Counſel took great offence.

He ſaid alſo, There hath been an Act of general Pardon ſince that time, whereby all Treaſons are put in utter oblivion; and though Sir Henry Vane were excepted, yet none conſent that he was that Sir Henry Vane. But the King's Counſel ſaid, If he would plead that Plea, they would join that Iſſue with him, if he pleaſed; which if it ſhould be found againſt him, it would be too late to plead Not Guilty.

But the Court ſaid, In favour of Life a Man may plead a double Plea, and give in his Exception, and plead over to the Felony or Treaſon, Not Guilty.

But as to the Exceptions taken to the Indictment, they gave little heed to them, but preſſed him to plead or confeſs.

Whereupon he pleaded Not Guilty; and had four days, to wit, till Friday next, for his Tryal.

Friday, June 6. 1662.

ON this Day, the Sheriff returned forty-eight Freeholders of the County of Middleſex. After thirty-two were challenged by the Priſoner, he had a Jury of twelve Men ſworn; to wit, Sir William Roberts jun. Sir Chriſtopher Abdy, John Stone, Henry Carter, John Leech, Daniel Cole, Daniel Browne, Thomas Chelſam, Thomas Pitts, Thomas Upman, Andrew Bent, and William Smith.

The † Attorney-General's Speech to the Jury.

† Sir Geoffry Palmer.

The Indictment is, For traitorouſly imagining and intending, &c. the Death of the King. This very Imagination and Compaſſing, &c. is Treaſon. Yet foraſmuch as the Intentions of the Heart are ſecret, the Law cannot take notice of them, till they are declared by Overt-Act. Therefore we ſhall give in Evidence, That for the accompliſhing of theſe Intentions, the Priſoner ſat with others in ſeveral Councils, or rather Confederacies, incroach'd the Government, levy'd Forces, appointed Officers, and at laſt levy'd open and actual War, in the head of a Regiment. If any of theſe Crimes be proved, it is ſufficient to make him guilty within this Indictment. And the open levying of War, and appearing in the head of a Regiment, is not only Treaſon of itſelf, but an Evidence of all thoſe her Treaſons he ſtands charged with in the Indictment.

Theſe things happening before the Act of Oblivion, you will take notice of that Act; and that the Priſoner being excepted by name from the Benefit of that Pardon, though he be chargeable for any Crime of Treaſon ſince the beginning of the late War, yet we ſhall confine the Facts for which we charge him, to the Reign of his now Majeſty.

After the Houſe had voted the late King's Conceſſions in the Iſle of Wight to be a good Ground for Peace, many of the Members were kept out by Force, others turn'd out; the Peers laid aſide, and at laſt the King murder'd. The firſt thing then that we ſhall lay to the charge of the Priſoner, is, That that very day wherein that horrid Act was committed, we find his Hand and Seal to a Warrant to the Officers of the Navy, to iſſue out Stores for a Summer's Guard of the Narrow Seas. This was the firſt Day of the Reign of his now Majeſty. And ſo he enumerated all the Particulars which he intended to charge him with, and proved them, as followeth.

1. The Warrant of the 30th of Jan. 48. was proved to be the Hand of Sir Henry Vane, by Thomas Lewis and Thomas Turner, as they believe; neither of them affirming that they ſaw him write it, but knowing his Hand, believed it to be ſo.

2. Ralph Darnel, an Under-Clerk of the Houſe of Commons, proved the Journal-Book of the Houſe, and ſaid, though he will not take upon him to ſay when Sir Henry Vane was there, and when he was abſent, yet he ſaid poſitively, That at what time ſoever he is ſet down in the Journal, to have acted or reported any thing, he was there. In which Book, Febr. 7. 1648. fol. 653. was the Order to ſet up a Council of State.

Fol. 684. Febr. 13. were the Inſtructions preſented to the Houſe, upon which the Council of State was to act.

1. The firſt was, That you, or any four or more, are to ſuppreſs all and every Perſon and Perſons pretending Title to the Kingly Government of this Nation, from or by the late King; Charles Stuart, his Son; or any claiming from or by them, or either of them, or any other ſingle Perſon whatſoever.

This, the Attorney ſaid, was in the firſt part of that Inſtruction, to deſtroy the King's Perſon; and in the ſecond part, the Kingly Government.

2. That you, &c. are appointed to direct the Forces of this Commonwealth, for the preventing and ſuppreſſing of Tumults and Inſurrections at home, or Invaſions from abroad; and for theſe Ends to raiſe Forces, &c.

3. That Febr. 14. 1648. fol. 695. Sir Henry Vane was choſen a Member of the Council of State, and acted upon theſe Inſtructions: which they proved thus; to wit, Firſt, That Sir Henry Vane, (as fol. 893.) 23d of March 1648, reported from the Council of State, an Eſtimate of the Number of Ships for the Summer's Guard of the Narrow Seas.

Secondly, March 30. 1649. Sir Henry Vane reports from the Council of State, That ten thouſand Pounds, Parcel of the twenty thouſand Pounds, aſſeſſed upon South-Wales for their Delinquency, be allow'd towards the ſetting out of this Fleet, for the Service of the Parliament: which was ordered accordingly, and to be paid to Sir Henry Vane, as Treaſurer of the Navy.

Thirdly, That Sir Henry Vane uſually ſat in Council; but this Deponent being never admitted to go in, after the Council was ſat, proves, that he often ſaw him go in at the Fore-door and Back-door, and often continue there all the time the Council was ſitting.

William Dobbins and Matthew Lock ſay, That they ſeveral times ſaw Sir Henry Vane ſit in a Committee of the Council, in the Years 1651 and 1652, which conſiſted only of Members of the Council; and particularly at the Committee for Scotiſh and Iriſh Affairs, where Sir Henry Vane was often in the Chair, and produced ſeveral Orders of that Committee.

Fourthly, Febr. 12. 1649. a new Council of State was choſen, of which Sir Henry Vane was one: fol. 720.

Febr. 13. 1649. All the Inſtructions of the former Year were read and aſſented to.

Feb. 22. 1649. fol. 760. Sir Henry Vane reported the Form of an Oath of Secrecy to be adminiſtred to every of the Members of the Council; which was, to keep all things which ſhould be tranſacted in Council ſecret, and to be true and faithful to their Inſtructions: which the Attorney ſaid (ſince their firſt Inſtruction was, to ſuppreſs all Perſons pretending Title from the King) was in effect an Oath of Abjuration.

Fifthly, Anno 1651, Sir Henry Vane was Preſident of the Council of State, and ſeveral Warrants were produced, to wit, May 20. 1652. and May 22. 1652. to deliver to Major Wigan two hundred Firelocks and ten Drums. The other, for the delivery of five hundred Foot-Arms, for Recruit of Colonel Ingoldsby's Regiment: and theſe were ſubſcribed, By Order of the Council, H. Vane Preſident.

April 2. 1653. A Warrant of that date was produced by the Commiſſioners of the Navy, of which he was one, for furniſhing out the Hampſhire-Frigate with Proviſions and Ammunition for the uſe of the State.

From this time to 1659, they charge him with nothing; and then the Journal-Book was produced, and atteſted by Ralph Darnel, wherein, May 7. 1659. an Order was made for appointing a Committee of Safety, (whereof Sir Henry Vane was one) That they, or any four or more of them, ſhould take care of the Safety of this Commonwealth, and they to ſit for eight days and no longer: fol. 36.

Die Ven. May 13. 1659. Sir Henry Vane reported, That they had conferred with all the foreign Ambaſſadors: That the Commonwealth is in Amity with all foreign Princes, but Spain.

Reſolved, That Ch. Fleetwood, J. Lambert, J. Desborough, James Berry, Arthur Haſlerig, Edmond Ludlow, and Sir Henry Vane, be Commiſſioners to nominate Commiſſion-Officers for the Army of this Commonwealth. By virtue hereof, they proceeded, June 17. 1659. to nominate Commiſſion-Officers, appointed Robert Moſſe a Colonel, preſenting a Liſt of his Commiſſion-Officers; and John Maſon to be Governour of Jerſey.

Die Ven. May 31. fol. 158. Sir Henry Vane reports concerning Affairs between the two Northern Kings in the Sound, wherein the Affairs of this Commonwealth are concerned.

Die Ven. Sept. 2. 1659. At the Committee of State at Whitehall: An Order was produced for the Redelivery of the City-Horſes to their reſpective Owners, ſigned H. Vane Preſident.

A Warrant was produced under the Hand of Sir Henry Vane, proved by Thomas Lewis and one Falconer, for ſo many Hangers to Col. Thompſon, as he ſhall require for his Regiment.

Three ſeveral Letters, to deliver 1200 Arms for the uſe of my Regiment; to wit, to Sam. Linn, my my Captain-Lieutenant, 30 Arms for my Company; to Major Thomas Shurman, Major of my Regiment, 4 or 5 Barrels of Powder.

Then one Marsh was produced a Witness, who proves, That Sir Henry Vane proposed the new Model of Government, Whitlock being in the Chair, in these Particulars:

1. That the Supreme Power, delegated by the People to their Trustees, ought to be, in some Fundamentals, not dispensed with.

2. That it is destructive to the People's Liberties (to which by God's Blessing they are restored) to admit any earthly King or single Person, to the Legislative or Executive Power over this Nation.

3. That the Supreme Power delegated, is not entrusted to the People's Trustees, to erect Matters of Faith or Worship, so as to exercise Compulsion therein.

Thomas Pury proves, That he was at the debating of the two last of these Propositions, and believes they were proposed to the Chairman Whitlock by Sir Henry Vane; but affirms confidently, that Sir Henry Vane gave Reasons to maintain them.

Tho. Wallis produced, proves Sir Henry Vane and Col. Rich in the Head of a Company in Winchester Park in Southwark; and that the Captain-Lieutenant Linn said to the Soldiers, That Sir Henry Vane had given them Five Pounds to drink; That the said Linn sent home a Key to his Wife to send him four Pounds out of his Trunk, to give the Soldiers.

John Cook deposeth, That he was sent to the Horseshoe-Stairs to meet Sir Henry Vane and Col. Rich, and that Sir Henry Vane delivered five Pounds to Capt. Linn to reward the Soldiers. This was all the Evidence given by the King's Counsel: To which Sir Henry Vane was required to make his Defence, and to go through with his Case all at once, and not to reply again upon the King's Counsel, who resolved to have the last word to the Jury.

Sir Henry Vane. Cook, in his Pleas of the Crown, fol. 6. saith, King is to be understood of a King regnant, and in actual Possession of the Crown, and not of a King when he is only Rex de Jure, and out of Possession. Now an Interregnum is confessed by the Indictment: All Ensigns of Authority, and Badges of Government, were visibly in another Name and Stile; the King's best Friends suing, and being sued in another Name.

The Court told him, He should first make his Case out in point of Suit, and it would be then seasonable to stand upon Matter of Law; for (say they) it is a good Rule, in facto jus oritur, and enjoined him to call his Witnesses, if he had any.

To which Sir Henry Vane desired Process of Court to summon them, and a further time to answer the Charge. But it was told him, the Jury were to be kept without Meat, Drink, Fire or Candle, till their Verdict was delivered in; and therefore that could not be granted.

He then cited the fourth Part of Coke's Institutes concerning the Privilege of Parliament, and that many of these things being transacted there——

The Court here interrupted him, and said, If the things charged, were done, justify them; if not, excuse them. So he went to give answer to the Fact.

And as to the first Warrant, Jan. 30. 1648. he said, That his Hand had been oftentimes counterfeited, and amongst other Occasions, for two great Sums, to the Value of Ten Thousand Pounds: and that he had great reason to believe, that this Warrant was forged, and produced two Witnesses to prove it.

Then said Justice Windham; It may be your Hand may have been forged for receiving of Money, but it is not to be conjectured, that it should be forged to set Ships to Sea; and directed to the Jury to consider of the Circumstances.

Sir Henry Vane. Neither of the Witnesses ever saw me set my Hand to either of these Warrants or Orders; nor doth one Witness prove that he ever saw me sit in the Council of State. He further said, That he absented from the House from December 3. 1648, till February 7. That he was chosen a Member of the Council of State without his Consent and Knowledge; and being demanded to take an Oath of Approbation of what been done to the late King, he refused, and caused it to be expunged; That these Actings in Council, (if any were) were by Authority of Parliament, of a Parliament constituted in an extraordinary manner, made indissolvable but by Act of Parliament. He insisted much on the Preamble of that Act, so as that Parliament being co-ordinate with the King, (for the Government was in the King and the two Houses) whatever he acted by them or their Authority, cannot be Treason within the Statute of 25 Ed. 3.

He cited an Ordinance of Parliament in 1642. and said, That he hoped these things had been laid asleep by the Act of Oblivion; and if they should now rise in Judgment against him, he feared they would shake that Security which the People promised themselves under that Act. But if he should be now called in question for those things which were transacted in that Parliament, of which he was a Member, he shall have the Comfort and Peace of those Actions to support him in his greatest Sufferings. He added, That if he were excepted, then must he be judged for the Crime of the whole Nation, and that Crime must be ravelled into thro him: That the Case is such as never yet fell out, to wit, That the Government being entrusted to three Estates, they should so fall out among themselves, as the People cannot tell which to obey; That where these great Changes fall out, it is not possible for any Man to proceed according to all Formalities of Law; That there was a political Power by this Act of 17 Caroli co-ordinate with the King; and where these Powers are not in Conjunction, but in Enmity to each other, no Court inferior to the Parliament, by whose Authority these things were acted, ought to be Judges of this Case, which certainly never happened before.

He farther saith, he was not the first Mover in these Actions, and that he should be called in question for these Matters by a King that was out of Possession at a time when these things were acted, would be inconvenient, to say no more; That when the three Estates were dis-joined, he thought it the best Policy to preserve the Government in its Root, to wit, the Commons; by whom it was preserved, and at last restored to its former Course: That as to the Regiment that passed under his Name, he disown'd it; That Reports of Messages are not the Fault of the Reporter; for his Judgment does not always go along with them, but he is bound to deliver his Message; That he always loved the Government as it is set forth in our antient Law-Books; and that that Parliament (so much decried) at last restored Affairs to the Posture in which they now are.

As to the Warrants signed by him, he said, they appear to be signed in the Name, and by the Order of the Council; and his Hand that subscribes, is not ſo much as active or paſſive, to the Commands of the Council. If the Council, who commanded the ſigning, were unwarrantable, the Parliament who appointed the Council, muſt be much more unwarrantable.

And here he offered theſe Points to be conſider'd, and pray'd earneſtly to have Counſel aſſigned him to ſpeak to them.

1. Whether the collective Body of the Parliament can be impeached of High Treaſon?

2. Whether any Perſon acting by Authority of Parliament, can (ſo long as he acteth by that Authority) commit Treaſon?

3. Whether Matters acted by that Authority, can be called in queſtion in an inferior Court?

4. Whether a King de Jure, and out of Poſſeſſion, can have Treaſon committed againſt him, he not being King de Facto, and in actual Poſſeſſion? and pray'd it might be argued by Counſel.

5. Whether Matters done in Southwark, in another County, may be given in Evidence to a Middleſex Jury?

As to the laſt Exception, the Court ſaid,

That he was indicted for compaſſing and imagining the King's Death in Middleſex; and any Overt-Act to prove this Imagination, may be given in Evidence whereſoever it be acted. To which Sir Henry Vane prayed the Benefit of a Bill of Exception, upon the Statute of Weſtminſter 2. cap. 31. and prayed that the Juſtices might ſeal it; which they all refuſed, and held, it lay not in any Caſe of the Crown.

The King's Counſel deſired he might call his Witneſſes, (if any he had) for if they once came to reply to him, he muſt then be ſilent; and conſented, that (if it would aid him) they would allow his Actings to be in the Name and by the Authority of the Council of State; and the Actings of the Council of State to be by Authority of what he called a Parliament.

Sir Henry Vane replied, Then what I acted in the Council of State, and Committee of Safety, conſtituted by the Parliament to endure for eight Days, you will allow me: Then you muſt prove that I ever acted in the other Council of State, after the Parliament was turned out.

Then the King's Counſel produced a Warrant, dated November 3. 1659, which was ſent in purſuance of an Order of the Committee of Safety, by Sir Henry Vane, as Treaſurer of the Navy. This Warrant was for the ſending of divers Arms Northwards after Mr. Lambert, who was gone down to oppoſe the now Duke of Albemarle.

Sir Henry Vane produced William Angel, Briſco, Middleton, &c. Officers of that Regiment which went under his Name; who having recourſe unto him for Orders about October 1659, he bad them deſiſt, and declared his Diſ-ſatisfaction in their Proceedings: and this, after their ſeveral Importunities to have Orders from him. And thus he cloſed his Defence.

Sollicitor Finch. As to pretence of the Power of Parliament, it is to be known, that it was not the eighth part of the Houſe of Commons; ſuch as were let in to do all that hath been complained, and acting under Authority of ſuch an End of a Parliament, under ſuch a Violation, was no Excuſe, but an Aggravation; but that the Parliament was, in Law, ended by the Death of the late King, notwithſtanding that Act of 17 Caroli primi, appears thus:

Firſt, The King's Writ for a Parliament is ad tractandum nobiſcum; which is intended as well of the natural Capacity of the King, as of his politick.

Secondly, 'Tis abſurd to ſay, That the Acts of Parliament of King Charles the Firſt, ſhould be his Acts in the time of King Charles the Second.

Thirdly, A Commiſſion of Sewers, enacted to be on foot for Ten Years, expires by the Death of the King, and the Authority of the Commiſſioners is at an end.

Fourthly, It is not poſſible for one King to impoſe a Parliament upon a Succeſſor. So much for his acting by Colour of Authority of Parliament.

And as to the Queſtion, Whether an Houſe of Parliament can commit Treaſon? If they depart from that Allegiance which they have ſworn at their firſt Meeting, they are impeachable for it.

As to a Co-ordination in the Parliament, he denied it.

As to the Queſtion, Whether the King being out of actual Poſſeſſion, can have Treaſon committed againſt him? he affirmed it, and ſaid, Otherwiſe, if Rebellion ſhould be ſo proſperous as to depoſe or oppreſs the King in Battel, the Offenders are not to be called in queſtion, becauſe they prevailed. He ſaid it was the Plea of Watſon the Jeſuit, who being indicted for compaſſing the Death of King James in Scotland, after he was declared King of England, and before his actual entring into this Realm, made this Defence, That the King was never in Poſſeſſion of the Crown.

Juſtice Windham. As to the Act of 17 Caroli, and the Preamble of that Act, ſo much inſiſted on by the Priſoner; 1 He held, that the Parliament had not greater Authority by it, but were only made more durable than other Parliaments have been: but he held, That the Parliament was abſolutely diſſolved by the Death of the King; and put this Caſe: If it ſhould be enacted, that ſuch a Marriage ſhould continue till it was diſſolved by Act of Parliament; if one dies, it is a Determination of it in Fact, ſo as no Man can ſay, but it is abſolutely diſſolved. 2. It muſt continue in the Degree and Dignity of a Parliament. If the Houſe be under a Force, and ſome kept out, ſome let in, to ſerve a turn, whatever they act is a Nullity in Law. For Freedom is the principal Eſſence and Honour of a Parliament; yet though the Houſe be under a Force, the Houſe is not diſſolved by ſuch Force, but the Proceedings are to be ſuſpended, till it acquire its former Liberty; and this as well by the Common Law, as by the Civil and Canon Laws of all other Countries. 3. The Parliament is the King's great Council, the Peers are Conciliarii nati; if they be forc'd away, or laid aſide, as here they were, all the reſt is but magni nominis umbra.

Twiſden held the ſame Opinion, That it is not the ſitting of a few Members within thoſe Walls, that will continue it a Parliament: And tho another Parliament, a great many Years after the King's Death, declared it to be at an end; yet that Act was but Declaration, it was at an end before.

Whether a Parliament may commit Treaſon, is not the Queſtion; but whether a few of the Houſe ſhutting out their Fellows, and uſurping the Government, were not Traytors?

Foſter held the ſame Opinion, and ſaid, The Diſtinction between the Politick and Natural Capacity of the King, was the Treaſon of the two Spencers: That Privilege of the Parliament is no Shelter for Breach of the Peace, much leſs for Treaſon.

Twiſden

Twiſden added, That to compaſs the Death of the King as a natural Perſon, was Treaſon; to compaſs his Death in his political Capacity, as to depoſe him, was Treaſon; and both provided for by the Act of 25 Edw. 3. That in the ſame inſtant the late King expired, in the very ſame his now Majeſty was King de facto; and affirmed the Caſes of Watſon and Clark, 1 Jac. If an Army be raiſed againſt the King, and the King is ſlain in the Battel, this Treaſon is queſtionable by the Succeſſor, as Stonie's Caſe is in Dyer.

Thus ended the Queſtions of Law propoſed.

The Sollicitor ſpake after to the Jury concerning the Fact, which after they withdrew to conſider; and being withdrawn about half an Hour, returned with their Verdict; which being delivered by the Foreman, in the name of his Fellows, with their Conſent, found the Priſoner guilty of High Treaſon from Jan. 30. 1648.

They not only found him guilty according to the Indictment, which was laid for what the Priſoner did, 1659; but for a long Series of High Treaſon (as they reckon) from Jan. 30. 1648.

A true Copy of the Priſoner's own Papers, containing the Subſtance of what he pleaded on the ſaid Day of his Tryal, June 6.

THAT without any ſeeking of mine, I was choſen by Writ under the Great Seal, to ſerve as Burgeſs for the Town of Kingſton upon Hull, in the Parliament that ſat down on the third of November 1640. and having in purſuance thereof, taken my Seat in the ſaid Parliament, I was obliged by Law to give my Attendance upon the ſaid Truſt, as well as upon Grounds of Duty and Conſcience.

The ſaid Parliament was not only called and aſſembled after the uſual manner, and had the Power and Privileges incident to that high Court, but was by expreſs Statute and Conſent of the three Eſtates ſo conſtituted, as to its Continuance, Adjournment, Prorogation and Diſſolution, that in none of theſe Particulars they were ſubject to Alteration, but by their own common Aſſent, declared by Act of Parliament, to be paſſed by themſelves for that purpoſe, with the Royal Aſſent.

In the Preamble to the Act for Continuance of the ſaid Parliament, theſe words are contained: Whereas great Sums of Money muſt of neceſſity be ſpeedily advanced and provided for the Relief of his Majeſty's Army and People in the Northern Parts of this Realm, and for preventing the imminent Danger this Kingdom is in; and for Supply of his Majeſty's preſent and urgent Occaſions, which cannot be ſo timely effected as is requiſite, without Credit for raiſing the ſaid Monies; which Credit cannot be obtained until ſuch Obſtacles be firſt removed, as are occaſioned by Fears, Jealouſies and Apprehenſions of divers his Majeſty's loyal Subjects, That this preſent Parliament may be adjourned, prorogued or diſſolved, before Juſtice ſhall be duly executed upon Delinquents, and publick Grievances redreſſed, a firm Peace between the two Nations of England and Scotland concluded, and before ſufficient Proviſion be made for the Repayment of the ſaid Monies ſo to be raiſed, &c. By all which the very Work that was between the three Eſtates agreed to be done for the Good and Safety of the Kingdom, was in ſundry Particulars declared and expreſſed; and not only ſo, but as is acknowledged by the late King himſelf in his Anſwer to the Nineteen Propoſitions, the Power which thereby was legally placed in both Houſes, was more than ſufficient to prevent and reſtrain Tyranny.

So that, by what hath been ſhewed, the Law it ſelf is with me, and for me, enjoining my continued Attendance on the Truſt which by this means was committed to me, and authorized me in particular to effect the things contained in the ſaid Preamble; and to act in all Matters belonging to the high Court of Parliament, for the Good and Safety of the Kingdom in time of imminent Danger: I had been liable to great Puniſhment by the Law, for Diſ-attendance and deſerting my Station therein, till lawfully or by force diſmiſſed therefrom; and this, whatever Occaſions others might have, by a voluntary or forc'd Departure from Attendance upon that Truſt.

The Actions therefore done by me in this Capacity, and according to the Law, Privileges, Cuſtoms and Power of Parliament, and that ſuch a one as was thus extraordinarily conſtituted, neither are nor can be brought within the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. cap. 2. nor are to be queſtioned, tryed, much leſs judged and ſentenced in any inferior Court. Nay, ſo far is it from this, that by a Declaration and Reſolution of Parliament, Auguſt 13. 1642. it is adjudged to be committing Treaſon in the higheſt degree, to bring both or either Houſes of Parliament under that or ſuch like Imputations.

Nor, till of late, have I ever heard but that thoſe who took the Judgment of Parliament for their Rule and Guide, (however tortious or erroneous it might afterwards be accounted in ſucceeding times) and they that acted by and under the Countenance of their declared Judgments, Orders or Ordinances, (ever acknowledged binding during the ſitting of the Parliament) were ſafe and indemnified from all Puniſhment. And for Government-ſake it ſelf, it is requiſite it ſhould be ſo; becauſe none are Judges of the Power and Privileges of Parliament but themſelves. For admit once, that their Judgment may be called in queſtion, and diſputed by private Perſons, or by inferior Courts, (whoſe Votes are included in theirs) the Fundamentals of Government are pluck'd up by the Roots. Par in pares non habet imperium, multo minus in eos qui majus imperium habent: An Equal has no Command over his Equal, much leſs over thoſe that have a greater Command or Authority.

His late Majeſty, in his Anſwer to the Nineteen Propoſitions, does very briefly and exactly ſtate the Nature and Kind of Government that is exerciſed in this Kingdom, ſaying, The Laws of this Kingdom are made by a King, a Houſe of Peers, and a Houſe of Commons, choſen by the People, all having free Votes, and particular Privileges. Theſe three Eſtates making one incorporate Body, are they, in whom the Sovereignty and Supreme Power is placed, as to the making and repealing of Laws: And the Government, according to theſe Laws, is truſted to the King, who in the Interval of Parliaments is ſole in the Exerciſe of Government, which (the Parliament ſitting) he is to exerciſe in conjunction with the two Houſes.

And his ſaid Majeſty aſſerting three ſorts of Government, Abſolute Monarchy, Ariſtocracy and Democracy, does moſt rightly diſtinguiſh the Monarchy of England from all thoſe three, and commends the Conſtitution of this Kingdom, as it is a Mixture of all three, having the Conveniences of them all without the Inconveniences of any one, as long as the Ballance hangs even between the three Eſtates, that they run jointly on in their proper Channels, and that the overflowing of either on either ſide raiſe no Deluge nor Inundation.

By

By the paſſing of the aforeſaid Act for the Continuance of the forementioned Parliament, the Intervals of Parliament were no longer, as before, at the Will and Pleaſure of the King; but the Power to continue in the ſaid Parliament, without Adjournment, Prorogation or Diſſolution, reſided in the two Houſes with the King jointly, and in none of them ſeverally: ſo that in effect, the Government of the Kingdom, during the Continuance of that Parliament, was in Conjunction of the three Eſtates, and in their common Conſents and Agreements among themſelves, given in Parliament; the aſſembling and meeting whereof was appointed and fixed to a Place certain, by Law.

By reaſon hereof, it is not the Attendance of any of the Members in Parliament (for Diſcharge of the Truſt repoſed in them, confirm'd and enlarged by the ſaid Act) that is faulty or cenſurable by the Law, but thoſe that unwarrantably depart and deſert that their Truſt and Station, are to be blamed; 6 Hen. 8. 16.

The King in Conjunction with the Parliament, is maxime Rex, and is ſupported in the Throne and Exerciſe of his Regal Power by the joint Concurrence of both Houſes. And becauſe (as his late Majeſty well obſerved) the Happineſs and Good of the Conſtitution of this Government lies in keeping the Ballance even between the three Eſtates, containing themſelves within the Bounds of their proper Channels, therefore in Attempts of either to overflow thoſe Bounds, (they being coordinate) the Office of a Parliament is by the very fundamental Conſtitution of the Government, to keep this Ballance well poiſed. And to that end (as was before mentioned) his Majeſty's own words are, in his ſaid Anſwer to the Nineteen Propoſitions; That there was legally placed in both Houſes a Power more than ſufficient to prevent and reſtrain the Power of Tyranny. If ſo, then are they the legal Judges, when there is Danger of Tyranny; and have legal Power to require their Judgment and Reſolves to be obeyed, not only when Arms are actually raiſed againſt them, but when they diſcern and accordingly declare a Preparation towards it; elſe they may find it too late to prevent the Power of Tyranny. There is no greater Attempt of Tyranny, than to arm againſt the Parliament; and there is no viſible way for the reſtraining ſuch Tyranny, but by raiſing Arms in their own and the Kingdom's Defence. Leſs than this is not ſufficient, and therefore far from more than ſufficient for the Puniſhment of Delinquents, and Reſtraint of Tyranny.

Unto the King, in Conjunction with his two Houſes, according as is provided by the Law in this Capacity of his, as maxime Rex, was the Duty of Allegiance to be yielded by his Subjects during the indiſſolved State of that Parliament: For they were the King's great Council, and Supreme Court, exerciſing the known Power and Privileges, that time out of mind have appertained to them, and been put forth by them, as the Exigents of the Kingdom have required, when Differences have happened about the very Title of the Crown, in declaring the Duty of the Subject, by yielding their Allegiance to Kings de facto, when Kings de jure have been kept out of Poſſeſſion. This our Chronicles, and the Hiſtories of former times do plentifully inform.

The Cauſes that did happen to move his late Majeſty to depart from his Parliament, and continue for many Years, not only at a diſtance, and in Disjunction from them, but at laſt, in a declared Poſture of Enmity and War againſt them, are ſo well known, and fully ſtated in Print (not to ſay, written in Characters of Blood) on both parts, that I ſhall only mention it, and refer to it.

This Matter was not done in a Corner: the Appeals were ſolemn, and the Deciſion by the Sword was given by that God, who being the Judge of the whole World, does right, and cannot do otherwiſe.

By occaſion of theſe unhappy Differences thus happening, moſt great and unuſual Changes and Revolutions, like an irreſiſtible Torrent, did break in upon us, not only to the disjointing that Parliamentary Aſſembly among themſelves (the Head from the Members, the Co-ordinates from each other, and the Houſes within themſelves) but to the creating ſuch formed Diviſions among the People, and to the producing ſuch a general State of Confuſion and Diſorder, that hardly any were able to know their Duty, and with certainty to diſcern who were to command, and who to obey. All things ſeemed to be reduced, and in a manner, reſolved into their firſt Elements and Principles.

Nevertheleſs, as dark as ſuch a State might be, the Law of England leaves not the Subject thereof (as I humbly conceive) without ſome Glimpſes of Direction what to do: in the cleaving to, and purſuing of which, I hope I ſhall not be accounted nor adjudged an Offender; or if I am, I ſhall have the Comfort and Peace of my Actions to ſupport me in and under my greateſt Sufferings.

The Reſolutions of all the Judges in Calvin's Caſe, entitled Poſt-nati, in the 7th Book of Coke's Reports, and the learned Arguments thereupon, afford me Inſtruction even in this Matter. It may be 'tis truly thence affirmed, That Allegiance is due only to the King, and how due, is alſo ſhewed.

The King is acknowledged to have two Capacities in him; one a natural, as he is deſcended of the Blood Royal of the Realm; and the Body natural he hath in this Capacity, is of the Creation of Almighty God, and mortal. The other is a politick Capacity, in reſpect of which he is a Body politick or myſtical, framed by the Policy of Man, which is immortal and inviſible. To the King, in both theſe Capacities conjoin'd, Allegiance is due; that is to ſay, to the natural Perſon of the King, accompanied with his politick Capacity, or the politick appropriated to the natural.

The politick Capacity of the King hath properly no Body nor Soul; for it is framed by the Policy of Man.

In all Indictments of Treaſon, when any one does intend the Death and Deſtruction of the King, it muſt needs be underſtood of his natural Body, the other being immortal. The Indictment therefore concludes contra Ligeantiæ ſuæ debitum, againſt the Duty of his Allegiance; ſo that Allegiance is due to the natural Body.

Admitting then, that thus by Law, Allegiance is due to the King (as before-recited) yet it is always to be preſumed, that it is to the King in Conjunction with the Parliament, the Law, and the Kingdom, and not in Disjunction from, or Oppoſition to them; and that while a Parliament is in being, and cannot be diſſolved, but by the Conſent of the three Eſtates.

This is therefore that which makes the Matter in queſtion, a new Caſe, that never before happened in the Kingdom, nor was poſſible to happen, unleſs there had been a Parliament conſtituted, as this was, unſubjected to Adjournment, Pro-

Prorogation, or Diſſolution, by the King's Will. Where ſuch a Power is granted, and the Co-ordinates thereupon diſagree and fall out, ſuch Effects and Conſequents as theſe that have happened will but too probably follow. And if either the Law of Nature or England inform not in ſuch Caſe, it will be impoſſible for the Subjects to know their Duty, when that Power and Command which ought to flow from three in conjunction, comes to be exerciſed by all or either of them, ſingly and a-part, or by two of them, againſt one.

When new and never-heard-of Changes do fall out in the Kingdom, it is not likely that the known and written Laws of the Land ſhould be the exact Rule; but the Grounds and Rules of Juſtice, contained and declared in the Law of Nature, are and ought to be a Sanctuary in ſuch Caſes, even by the very Common Law of England: For thence originally ſpring the unerring Rules that are ſet by the Divine and Eternal Law, for Rule and Subjection in all States and Kingdoms.

In Contemplation hereof, as the Reſolve of all the Judges, it was agreed;

1. That Allegiance is due to Sovereignty by the Law of Nature; to wit, that Law which God, at the Creation of Man, infuſed into his Heart for his Preſervation and Direction, the Law eternal. Yet is it not this Law, as it is in the Heart of every individual Man, that is binding over many; or Legiſlative, but as it is the Act of a Community, or an aſſociated People, by the right Dictates and Perſuaſions of the Work of this Law in their Hearts. This appears in the Caſe of the Iſraelites, Judges, Chap. 20, & 21. cited in the 4th Part of Coke's Inſtitutes, where mention is made of a Parliament, without a King, that made War, and that with their Brethren: They met as one Man to do it, in Vindication of that Juſtice unto which they were obliged even by the Law of Nature. This is that which Chancellor Forteſcue calls Political Power here in England; by which, as by the Ordinance of Man, in purſuance of the Ordinance of God, the Regal Office is conſtituted, or the King's Politick Capacity, and becomes appropriated to his natural Perſon.

Thus Politick Power is the immediate Efflux and Offspring of the Law of Nature, and may be called a part of it. To this, Hooker in his Eccleſiaſtical Polity agrees, and Salden on that Subject.

The Law of Nature, thus conſidered, is part of the Law of England, as is evident by all the beſt received Law-Books, Bracton, Fleta, Lambard upon the Saxon Laws, and Forteſcue in the Praiſe of the Laws of England. This is the Law that is before any judicial or municipal Law, as the Root and Fountain whence theſe and all Governments, under God and his Law, do flow.

This Politick Power, as it is exerciſed in Conjunction with, and Conformity to the Eternal Law, partakes of its moral and immutable Nature, and cannot be changed by Act of Parliament. Of this Law it is that Magna Charta, and the Charter of Foreſt, with other Statutes rehearſed in the Petition of Right, are for the moſt part declaratory: For they are not introductive of any new Law, but Confirmations of what was good in all Laws of England before. This agrees with that Maxim, Salus Populi ſuprema Lex; that being made due and binding by this Law, which in the Judgment of the Community, declaring their Mind by their own free choſen Delegates and Truſtees in harmony with the Eternal Law, appears profitable and neceſſary for the Preſervation and Good of the whole Society.

This is the Law, which is put forth by the common Conſent of the whole Realm, in their Repreſentative; and (according to the fundamental Conſtitutions of this Kingdom) is that with which the Kings of this Land, by the joint Co-operation of the three Eſtates, do make and repeal Laws.

But through the Diſorders and Diviſions of the Times, theſe two Powers, the Regal and Political, (which, according to the Law of England, make up but one and the ſame ſupreme Authority) fell aſunder, and found themſelves in Disjunction from and Oppoſition to one another. I do not ſay the Queſtion is now, Which of theſe is moſt rightly (according to the Principles of the Law of Nature, and the Law of England) to be adhered unto and obeyed? but unto whether Power Adherence is a Crime in ſuch an Exigent of State? Which, ſince it is ſuch a new and extraordinary Caſe, evidently above the Track of the ordinary Rules, contained in the poſitive and municipal Laws of England, there can be no Colour to bring it within the Statute of 25 Ed. 3. cap. 2. foraſmuch as all Statutes preſuppoſe theſe two Powers, Regal and Political, in Conjunction, perfect Unity, and Subſerviency, which this Caſe does not, cannot admit. So exceeding new and extraordinary a Caſe is it, that it may be doubted whether, and queſtioned how far, any other Parliament, but that Parliament it ſelf that was privy to all its own Actings and Intentions, can be an indifferent and competent Judge. But however, the Point is of ſo abſtruſe and high Conſideration, as no inferior Court can or ought to judge of it, as by Law-Books is moſt undeniable, to wit, Bracton, and others.

This then being the true State of the Caſe, and the Spring of that Conteſt that enſued, and received its Deciſion by the late War, the next Conſideration is, How far I have had my Share and Part therein, that by the Laws is not warrantable, or by what appears in way of Proof to the Jury.

For the firſt, I ſhall crave leave to give you this Account of my ſelf, who have beſt known my own Mind and Intentions throughout, and would not now, to ſave my Life, renounce the Principles of that righteous Cauſe, which my Conſcience tells me was my Duty to be faithful unto.

I do therefore humbly affirm, that in the aforementioned great Changes and Revolutions, from firſt to laſt, I was never a firſt Mover, but always a Follower, chuſing rather to adhere to Things than Perſons, and (where Authority was dark or dubious) to do Things juſtifiable by the Light and Law of Nature, as that Law was acknowledg'd part of the Law of the Land; Things that are in ſe bona, and ſuch as, according to the Grounds and Principles of the Common Law, as well as the Statutes of this Land, would warrant and indemnify me in doing them. For I have obſerved by Precedents of former Times, when there have ariſen Diſputes about Titles to the Crown, between Kings de Facto and Kings de Jure, the People of this Realm wanted not Directions for their Safety, and how to behave themſelves within the Duty and Limits of Allegiance to the King and Kingdom, in ſuch difficult and dangerous Seaſons.

My Lord Coke is very clear in this Point, in his Chapter of Treaſons, fol. 7. And if it were otherwiſe, it were the hardeſt Caſe that could be for the People of England: For then they would be certainly expoſed to Puniſhment from thoſe that are in Poſſeſſion

ſion of the ſupreme Power, as Traytors, if they do any thing againſt them, or do not obey them; and they would be puniſhable as Traytors by him that hath Right, and is King de Jure, in caſe they do obey the Kings de Facto: and ſo all the People of England are neceſſarily involved in Treaſons, either againſt the Powers de Facto, or de Jure, and may by the ſame Reaſon be queſtioned for it, as well as the Priſoner, if the Act of Indemnity and the King's Pardon did not free them from it. The Security then and Safety of all the People of England is by this means made to depend upon a Pardon, (which might have been granted or denied) and not upon the ſure Foundations of Common Law: An Opinion ſure which (duly weighed and conſidered) is very ſtrange, to ſay no more.

For I would gladly know that Perſon in England of Eſtate and Fortune, and of Age, that hath not counſelled, aided, or abetted, either by his Perſon or Eſtate, and ſubmitted to the Laws and Government of the Powers that then were: And if ſo, then by your Judgments upon me, you condemn (in Effigies, and by neceſſary Conſequence) the whole Kingdom.

And if that be the Law, and be now known to be ſo, it is worth conſideration, whether if it had been generally known and underſtood before, it might not have hindred his Majeſty's Reſtoration.

Beſides, although, until this Judgment be paſſed upon me, the People have apprehended themſelves as free from Queſtion, and out of Danger, by reaſon of the Act of Indemnity and General Pardon; yet when it ſhall appear to them that ſuch their Safety is not grounded on the Common Law, nor upon the Law of Nature, but that againſt both theſe in their Actions they are found faulty, and tainted with a moral Guilt, and that as Principals alſo, (ſince in Treaſon there are no Acceſſaries) what terrifying Reflections muſt this needs ſtir up in the Mind of every Man, that will be apt to believe his Turn will come next, at leaſt once in two Years; as hath befallen me in my Perſon, who (however I have been misjudged and miſunderſtood) can truly affirm, That in the whole Series of my Actions, that which I have had in my Eye hath been to preſerve the antient well-conſtituted Government of England on its own Baſis and primitive righteous Foundations, moſt learnedly ſtated by Forteſcue in his Book made in praiſe of the Engliſh Laws. And I did account it the moſt likely means for the effecting of this, to preſerve it, at leaſt in its Root, whatever Changes and Alterations it might be expoſed unto in its Branches, through the bluſtrous and ſtormy Times that have paſſed over us.

This is no new Doctrine in a Kingdom acquainted with Political Power, as Forteſcue ſhews ours is, deſcribing it to be in effect the common Aſſent of the Realm, the Will of the People or whole Body of the Kingdom, repreſented in Parliament. Nay, though this Repreſentation (as hath fallen out) be reſtrained for a Seaſon to the Commons Houſe, in their ſingle Acting, into which (as we have ſeen) when by the inordinate Fire of the Times, two of the three Eſtates have for a ſeaſon been melted down; they did but retire into their Root, and were not hereby in their Right deſtroyed, but rather preſerved, though as to their Exerciſe laid for a while aſleep, till the Seaſon came of their Revival and Reſtoration.

And whatever were the Intents and Deſigns of others, (who are to give an account of their own Actions) it is ſufficient for me that at a Time critical and deciſive (though to my own Hazard and ill Uſage) I did declare my Refuſal of the Oath of Abjuration, which was intended to be taken by all the Members of Parliament, in reference to Kingly Government, and the Line of his now Majeſty in particular. This I not only poſitively refuſed to take, but was an occaſion of the ſecond Thoughts which the Parliament reaſſumed thereof, till, in a manner, they came wholly at laſt to decline it: A Proof undeniable of the Remoteneſs of any Intentions or Deſigns of mine, as to the endeavouring any Alteration or Change in the Government; and was that which gave ſuch Jealouſy to many in the Houſe, that they were willing to take the firſt occaſion to ſhew their diſlike of me, and to diſcharge me from ſitting among them.

But to return to what I have before affirmed, as to my being no leading or firſt Actor in any Change; it is very apparent by my Deportment at the Time when that great Violation of Privileges happened to the Parliament, ſo as by Force of Arms ſeveral Members thereof were debarred coming into the Houſe, and keeping their Seats there. This made me forbear to come to the Parliament for the ſpace of ten Weeks, (to wit, from the 3d of December 1648, till towards the middle of February following) or to meddle in any publick Tranſactions; and during that Time the Matter moſt obvious to Exception, in way of Alteration of the Government, did happen. I can therefore truly ſay, that as I had neither Conſent nor Vote at firſt in the Reſolutions of the Houſes, concerning the Non-Addreſſes to his late Majeſty, ſo neither had I in the leaſt any Conſent in, or Approbation to his Death: But on the contrary, when required by the Parliament to take an Oath, to give my Approbation ex poſt facto to what was done, I utterly refuſed, and would not accept of ſitting in the Council of State upon thoſe Terms, but occaſioned a new Oath to be drawn, wherein that was omitted. Hereupon many of the Council of State ſat, that would take the other.

In like manner the Reſolutions and Votes for changing the Government into a Commonwealth or Free State were paſſed, ſome Weeks before my Return to Parliament: Yet afterwards (ſo far as I judged the ſame conſonant to the Principles and Grounds, declared in the Laws of England, for upholding that Political Power which hath given the Riſe and Introduction in this Nation to Monarchy it ſelf, by the Account of antient Writers) I conceived it my Duty, as the State of Things did then appear to me, (notwithſtanding the ſaid Alteration made) to keep my Station in the Parliament, and to perform my Allegiance therein to King and Kingdom, under the Powers then regnant, (upon my Principles before declared) yielding Obedience to their Authority and Commands. And having received Truſt in reference to the Safety and Preſervation of the Kingdom, in thoſe Times of imminent Danger, (both within and without) I did conſcientiouſly hold my ſelf obliged to be true and faithful therein. This I did upon a publick account, not daring to quit my Station in Parliament by virtue of my firſt Writ: Nor was it for any private or gainful Ends to profit my ſelf, or enrich my Relations. This may appear as well by the great Debt I have contracted, as by the deſtitute Condition my many Children are in, as to any Proviſion made for them. And I do publickly challenge all Perſons whatſoever, that can give Information of any Bribes or covert Ways uſed by me, during the whole Time of my publick acting. Therefore I hope it will be evident to the Conſciences of the Jury, that what I have done, hath been upon Principles of Integrity, Honour, Juſtice, Reaſon, and Conſcience, and not, as is ſuggeſted in the Indictment, by Inſtigation of the Devil, or Want of the Fear of God.

A ſecond great Change that happened upon the Conſtitution of the Parliament, and in them of the very Kingdom it ſelf, and the Laws thereof, (to the plucking up the Liberties of it by the very Roots, and the introducing of an arbitrary Regal Power, under the Name of Protector, by Force and the Law of the Sword) was the Uſurpation of Cromwell; which I oppoſed from the beginning to the end, to that Degree of Suffering, and with that Conſtancy, that well near had coſt me not only the Loſs of my Eſtate, but of my very Life, if he might have had his Will, which a higher than he hindred: Yet I did remain a Priſoner, under great Hardſhip, four Months in an Iſland, by his Orders.

Hereby, that which I have aſſerted is moſt undeniably evident, as to the true Grounds and Ends of my Actions all along, that were againſt Uſurpation on the one hand, or ſuch extraordinary Actings on the other, as I doubted the Laws might not warrant or indemnify, unleſs I were enforced thereunto by an over-ruling and inevitable Neceſſity.

The third conſiderable Change was the total diſappointing and removing of the ſaid Uſurpation, and the returning again of the Members of Parliament to the Exerciſe of their primitive and original Truſt, for the Good and Safety of the Kingdom, ſo far as the State of the Times would then permit them; being ſo much, as they were, under the power of an Army, that for ſo long a time had influenced the Government. Towards the Recovery therefore of Things again into their own Channel, and upon the legal Root of the People's Liberties, to wit, their common Conſent in Parliament, given by their own Deputies and Truſtees, I held it my Duty to be again acting in publick Affairs in the Capacity of a Member of the ſaid Parliament, then re-enter'd upon the actual Exerciſe of their former Power, or at leaſt ſtruggling for it. In this Seaſon I had the Opportunity of declaring my true Intentions as to the Government, upon occaſion of refuſing the Oath of Abjuration before mentioned.

And whereas I am charged with keeping out his Majeſty that now is from exerciſing his Regal Power and Royal Authority in this his Kingdom; through the Ill-will borne me by that part of the Parliament then ſitting, I was diſcharged from being a Member thereof about Jan. 9. 1659. and by many of them was charged, or at leaſt ſtrongly ſuſpected to be a Royaliſt. Yea, I was not only diſcharged from my Attendance in Parliament, but confined as a Priſoner at mine own Houſe, ſome time before there was any viſible Power in the Nation that thought it ſeaſonable to own the King's Intereſt. And I hope my ſitting ſtill will not be imputed as a Failure of Duty, in the Condition of a Priſoner, and thoſe Circumſtances I then was in. This I can ſay, That from the time I ſaw his Majeſty's Declarations from Breda, declaring his Intentions and Reſolutions as to his Return, to take upon him the actual Exerciſe of his Regal Office in England, and to indemnify all thoſe that had been Actors in the late Differences and Wars, (as in the ſaid Declaration doth appear) I reſolved not to avoid any publick Queſtion, (if called thereto) as relying on mine own Innocency and his Majeſty's declared Favour, as before ſaid. And for the future, I determined to demean my ſelf with that Inoffenſiveneſs and Agreeableneſs to my Duty, as to give no juſt Matter of new Provocation to his Majeſty in his Government. All this, for my part, hath been punctually obſerved, whatever my Sufferings have been. Nor am I willing in the leaſt to harbour any diſcouraging Thoughts in my Mind as to his Majeſty's Generoſity and Favour towards me, who have been faithful to the Truſt I was engaged in without any malicious Intentions againſt his Majeſty, his Crown or Dignity, as before hath been ſhewed; and I am deſirous for the future to walk peaceably and blameleſly.

Whatever therefore my perſonal Sufferings have been ſince his Majeſty's Reſtoration, I rather impute them to the falſe Reports and Calumnies of mine Enemies and Misjudgers of my Actions, than reckon them as any thing that hath proceeded from his Majeſty's proper Inclination, whoſe Favour and Clemency I have had juſt Reaſon, with all Humility, to acknowledge.

Firſt, With regard to his Majeſty's Speech, made the 27th of July, 1660. in the Houſe of Peers, wherein his Majeſty expreſly declared it to be no Intention of his that a Perſon under my Circumſtances ſhould be excepted out of the Act of Indemnity, either for Life or Eſtate.

And Secondly, However it was the Parliament's Pleaſure (my ſelf unheard, tho then in the Tower, and ready to have been brought before them) to except me out of the common Indemnity, and ſubject me to queſtion for my Actions, yet they themſelves of their own accord (admitting the poſſibility that in ſuch queſtioning of me I might be attainted) made it their humble Deſire to his Majeſty, that in ſuch caſe Execution, as to my Life, might be remitted. Unto this his Majeſty readily gave his Grant and Aſſent. And I do firmly believe, if the Houſes had pleaſed to give me the Opportunity and Leave of being heard, they would never have denied me the Indemnity granted to the reſt of the Nation.

That which remains of further Charge yet to me is the Buſineſs of a Regiment, an Imployment which, I can in truth affirm, mine own Inclinations, Nature, and Breeding, little fitted me for, and which was intended only as honourary and titular, with relation to Volunteers, who, by their Application to the Council of State in a Time of great Commotions, did propound their own Officers, and (without any ſeeking of mine, or my conſidering any farther of it, than as the Uſe of my Name) did (among others) nominate me for a Colonel, which the Council of State approved, granting Commiſſions to my ſelf, and all other Officers relating thereunto; and the Parliament confirmed my ſaid Commiſſion, upon Report thereof made to them.

This will appear by ſeveral Witneſſes I have to produce in this Matter, that will be able to affirm how little I took upon me, or at all, to give any Orders, or make uſe of ſuch my Commiſſion, any otherwiſe than in Name only.

'Tis true, indeed, that at a certain Time, when I was ſummoned to appear at the Committee of the Militia in Southwark, whereof I was a Member, that which was called my own Company of Foot (from the Reſpect which they and their Officers pretended to me) were deſirous to be in a Poſture fit for me to ſee them; 'and as I paſſed by, I took the opportunity, at their Deſire, to ſhew my ſelf to them, and only (as taking notice of their Reſpect) in ſome few Words, expreſſing the Reaſon I had to receive it in good part, I told them I would no longer detain them from their other Occaſions. After I was gone from them, I appointed my Captain-Lieutenant to give them from me ſomething to drink, as might be fitting on ſuch an Occaſion, which, to my beſt Remembrance, was five Pounds; and he laid it out of his own Money.

More than this (as I remember) was not done by me; ſo much as to the ſeeing any more the Companies of that Regiment gathered together, or giving Orders to them: Which I publickly and avowedly declined, perſuading the Officers to lay down their Charges in mine own Example, ſo ſoon as I diſcerned the Intentions of the ſitting down of the Committee of Safety, and the exorbitant Power committed to them to exerciſe, and the way of Proceedings by the Army, in intereſting themſelves in the Civil Government of the Nation, which I utterly diſliked.

And although I forbore not to keep my Station, in reference to the Council of State, while they ſat, or as a Commiſſioner of the Admiralty, during the time by them appointed to act by Parliamentary Authority, and ſo had occaſion to be daily converſant with the Members of the Committee of Safety, (whereof my ſelf, with others that would not accept, were named;) yet I perfectly kept my ſelf diſintereſted from all thoſe Actings of the Army, as to any Conſent or Approbation of mine, (however, in many Things, by way of Diſcourſe, I did not decline Converſe with them) holding it my Duty to penetrate as far as I could into their true Intentions and Actions; but reſolving within my ſelf to hold true to my Parliamentary Truſt in all Things wherein the Parliament appeared to me to act for the Safety and Good of the Kingdom. However, I was miſinterpreted, and judged by them as one that rather favoured ſome of the Army, and their Power.

Upon the whole Matter, there is not any Precedent that ever both or either of the Houſes of Parliament did commit Treaſon: For tho Privilege of Parliament does not ſo hold in Treaſon, but that particular Members may be puniſhed for it, yet it is unprecedented, that both or either Houſes of Parliament, as a collective Body, ever did or could commit Treaſon.

All the Acts done in Parliaments have been reverſed indeed, and repealed, as what was done 11 Ric. 2. was repealed 21 Ric. 2. and what was done 21 Ric. 2. was repealed 1 Hen. 4. 3. as appears by the printed Statutes: Yet I do not find that both or either Houſe of Parliament were declared Traytors for what they did in thoſe Parliaments; or that any which acted under them ſuffered for the ſame in any inferior Courts. And ſurely the Reaſon is obvious: For they had a Co-ordinancy in the Supreme or Legiſlative Power for the making, altering, and repealing Laws. And if ſo, par in parem non habet imperium. And by Authorities out of Bracton, Fleta, and others, it may appear what Superiors the King himſelf hath, (who yet hath no Peer in his Kingdom, niſi Curiam Baronum) God, Law, and Parliament.

And if either or both Houſes cannot commit Treaſon, then thoſe that act by their Authority cannot: For, plus peccat Author quam Actor, the Author offends more than the Actor. If thoſe that command do not, nor can commit Treaſon, how can thoſe that act by their Authority be guilty of it?

Further, I muſt crave leave to aſſert, by reaſon of what I ſee opened upon the Evidence, That what is done in Parliament, or by their Authority, ought not to be queſtioned in any other Court: For every Offence committed in any Court, muſt be puniſhed in the ſame, or in ſome higher, and not any inferiour Court. Now the Court of Parliament hath no ſuperior Court, as is ſaid in Coke's Juriſdiction of Courts. And the Reaſon there given that Judges ought not to give any Opinion in a Matter of Parliament, is, Becauſe it is not to be decided by the Common Laws, but ſecundum Legem & Conſuetudinem Parliamenti. This the Judges in divers Parliaments have confeſſed. And that Reaſon is not to be waved which the Lord Coke gives, That a Man can make no Defence; for what is ſaid and acted there, is done in Council, and none ought to reveal the Secrets of the Houſe: Every Member hath a judicial Voice, and can be no Witneſs.

June the 11*th.*

After the cuſtomary Formalities of the Court, The Clerk demanded of Sir Henry Vane what he had to ſay why Sentence of Death ſhould not be paſſed upon him.

Sir Henry Vane firſt alledged, That he had not yet heard the Indictment read in Latin. The Debate upon this took up ſome Time: At length ſome of the King's Counſel deſired that the Priſoner might be ſatisfied in that Point. Sir Henry deſired that Counſel then might alſo be aſſigned him, to make Exceptions thereto, if they found Cauſe; otherwiſe he valued not the hearing of it read in Latin. This was over-ruled by the Court: He ſoon therefore deſiſted from any further urging it.

The next Thing Sir Henry offered in his own Defence was the Bill of Exceptions, which he brought with him ready drawn, and offered it to the Judges, deſiring them, according to the Statute of Weſtm. 2. 31. made 13 Edw. 1. to ſign it. This he urged ſo home, that the Statute was conſulted and read in open Court, running in favour of the Priſoner to this effect, That if any Man find himſelf aggrieved by the Proceedings againſt him before any Juſtices, let him write his Exception, and deſire the Juſtices to ſet their Seals to it. 'This Act was made (ſays 'Coke) that the Party wronged might have a Foun-'dation for a legal Proceſs againſt the Juſtices by a 'Writ of Error, having his Exception entred upon 'Record in the Court where the Injury is done, 'which through the Juſtices over-ruling it, they 'could not before procure, ſo the Party grieved 'was without Remedy; for whoſe Relief this Sta-'tute was made. The Juſtices refuſing to ſet to 'their Seals, the Party grieved may have a Writ 'grounded on this Statute, commanding them to 'ſet their Seals to his Exception. This Excep-'tion extends not only to all Pleas dilatory and 'peremptory, &c. but to all Challenges of any 'Jurors, and any material Evidence, given to any 'Jury, which by the Court is over-ruled.' As in this Priſoner's Caſe, the Teſtimony about falſifying of his Hand to Writings, &c. was, by what was offered to the Jury by Juſtice Windham.

Further, ſays Coke on this Statute, 'If the Juſ-'tice (or Juſtices) die, their Executors or Admi-'niſtrators may be proceeded againſt for the In-'jury done. And if the Judge (or Judges) deny 'to ſeal the Exception, the Party wronged may in 'the Writ of Error take Iſſue thereupon, if he 'can prove by Witneſſes the Judge or Judges de-'nied to ſeal it.'

Notwithſtanding all this, the Judges over-ruled this Plea alſo, by ſuch Interpretation as themſelves put put upon that Statute, to wit, That it was not allowable in criminal Cases for Life. This makes the Law less careful for the Preservation of a Man's Life, than any Particulars of his Estate, in Controversies about which this Statute is affirmed by them to hold. Whereas Life is the greater, and innocent Blood, when spilt, is irreversible; as to the Matter, it cannot be gathered up again: The Estate is the lesser; and if an erroneous Judgment pass about it, 'tis reversible upon Traverse, Writ of Error, or otherwise.

The Reason they alledged for their pretended Opinion was this, That if it be held in criminal Cases for Life, every Felon in Newgate might plead the same, and so there would be no Goal-delivery.

Sir Henry answered, His Case was not the Case of common Felons, alledging the Grant of his Majesty to the Petition of both Houses for his Life, in case he should be attainted. There is no need therefore sure (said he) of fearing the Consequence of spinning out the Time a little with a Person in his Circumstances. Besides, (he said) he had been a Prisoner two Years, and never called on to give any account of himself and his Actions, (so is it not with Felons;) which, with other Considerations, may sufficiently evince that there is no need of such hastening his Death. He told them withal, That he desired not this for his own sake only, but for theirs, and for Posterity; that they might, on a more leisurely and unprejudiced hearing of what may be said on all hands, prevent the bringing of innocent Blood upon themselves and the Land.

But being in this also over-ruled by the Court, (say what he could) he only desired he might understand whether they would all give it as their common Judgment they would stand to, That what he desired was not his due by the Law? By this means they were all put upon it, one by one, to declare themselves in that Point, unanimously denying him the Benefit of that Act. To the By-standers their chief Reason seemed to be, That it had not been practised this hundred or two of Years.

The third Thing Sir Henry desired was, That the Petition of both Houses, with his Majesty's Answer thereunto, might be read in the Court; which, after some Dispute, was concluded to be a Thing they were not bound to take notice of, not being an Act of Parliament. Yet what is any Act of Parliament, but a Bill presented with the Petition of both Houses to his Majesty, with his Royal Assent thereto, upon publick Record? At length they condescended to read it; and that was all.

The fourth and last Thing Sir Henry Vane offered to the Consideration of the Bench was this, That in regard there were Questions touching Matter of Law in his Case, which must receive their Determination in Parliament, he desired he might have Counsel assigned him, to argue them before their Lordships. Some of these Points he instanced in, to wit,

1. Whether a Parliament were accountable to any inferior Court?

2. Whether the King, being out of Possession, and the Power Regent in others, ——

Here they stopp'd him, not suffering him to proceed, nor admitting that the King was ever out of Possession. To which Sir Henry replied, The Words of his Indictment ran thus, That he endeavoured to keep out his Majesty; and how could he keep him out of the Realm, if he were not out?

After Sentence given, Chief Justice Forster endeavoured to take off the King from any Obligation by that Grant to the Petition of both Houses, saying, That God, though full of Mercy, yet intended his Mercy only to the penitent.

Reasons for an Arrest of Judgment, writ by the Prisoner, but refused to be heard by the Court.

I. I Have been denied so much as to hear the Indictment read in Latin, as it is the original Record of the Court; yea, so much as a Copy of it in English hath been denied me during the whole Time of my Tryal; by the Sight whereof I might be able to assign the Defects of Law that may be in it.

Counsel also hath been denied, not only before I pleaded, but after; and all Points by me offered in Law to the Judges of the Court have been overruled, without admitting me Counsel to argue the same, and better inform the Judgment of the Court. I have demanded that I might put in a Bill of Exceptions upon the Statute of Westminst. 2. cap. 31. This likewise is denied me, over-ruled, and judged as out of that Statute. Neither will Counsel be allowed me in this, to shew Cause why it ought to be admitted as of Right. And as no Counsel was allowed, so neither were the Judges Counsel to me, as they said themselves they would and ought to be, but rather suffered me to wrong and prejudice my self; some of them saying, Let him go on, the worst will be his own at last. And they neither checked nor restrained the King's Counsel in their high and irritating Expressions to the Jury, to find me guilty; one of whom was seen to speak privately with the Foreman of the Jury, immediately before the Jurors went from the Bar, after he had spoken openly, That the Prisoner was to be made a publick Sacrifice, in reference to the Actions done against his Majesty that now is.

All this is very far from that Indifferency in Tryal, and from that Equality which the Law requires, and they are bound by their Oath to afford me; besides the undue Proceedings in the Business of the Petty Jury. A List of forty eight Persons was presented to me, who being to me unknown, and no Time allowed me to gain any Knowledge of them, though I was permitted to challenge and refuse three Juries, without shewing Cause, yet could not that Refusal be upon such rational Grounds as the Law supposes, which doubtless intends substantial Relief to the Prisoner, in allowing him the Liberty of such Refusal; whereas, through my Ignorance of the Persons, I might refuse the best, and chuse the worst, as to my Safety. And then, whereas the Law further allows me the Refusal of any other beyond the thirty five, on just and exceptionable Cause shewn, what just Exception was I capable to alledge in a sudden Hurry against Persons to me altogether unknown, unless it would be taken for a just one, That they were unknown to me?

All these Things being so contrary to the Right which the Judges stand obliged to do to every one, as they are for that purpose intrusted by God and the King, is just Cause for an Arrest of Judgment, and a good Reason why they should yet at length allow me a Copy of the Indictment, and assign Counsel to argue for the Prisoner against the Defects in Law that may be found therein. Without this, Law is denied me, which is my Birthright and Inheritance; the best Birthright a Subject hath, ſays Coke on Magna Charta: for thereby (ſays he) his Goods, Lands, Wife, Children, his Body, Life, Honour, and Eſtimation, are protected from Injury. The Life, Birthright, or Inheritance, we have from our Parents, may ſoon be gone, if this Fence thereof be broken down. How great a Wrong then it is for the Court to withhold it from me, is manifeſt. Are they not therefore in effect chargeable with my Blood, by ſuch unequal Proceedings as I have had in my Tryal?

II. My ſecond Reaſon for an Arreſt of Judgment, is drawn from the Iſſue that is joined in my Caſe, which ſeems to depend chiefly upon Matter of Law; and that in ſuch tender and high Points, as are only determinable in the High Court of Parliament.

For it is become the Queſtion, Whether I am guilty or not guilty, according as theſe Propoſitions following are truly or erroneouſly reſolved.

1. Whether the Parliament, that began Novemb. 3. 1640. were diſſolved by the King's Death? And whether this Court may judge things done in Parliament?

2. Whether the Powers regnant, and de facto, that ſucceſſively were in being, from Jan. 30. 1648. to Decemb. 20. 1659. were ſuch Powers de facto, as are the King, or Seigneur le Roy, within the Purview of the Statue of 25 Edw. 3. having the Exerciſe of Regal Power in all the Particulars of it, though not the Name?

3. Whether during that time fore-mentioned, his Majeſty that now is were properly King de facto? Or whether he were not out of Poſſeſſion, and without all Exerciſe of his Regal Authority within the Realm?

4. Whether the Caſe now in queſtion be a Treaſon literally within the words of the Statute 25 Edw. 3. or at moſt, any other than an interpretative and new Treaſon, not declared before the very time of my Tryal; and that only by the Judgment of the Court, or Opinion of my Judges, eleven Years after ſome of the things charged on me, are alledged to have been committed?

As for the firſt of theſe, the Act for Continuance of the Long Parliament is expreſs; That all and every thing or things whatſoever, done or to be done, for the Adjournment, Proroguing, or Diſſolving of that Parliament, contrary to that Act, ſhall be utterly void and of none effect. I then thus argue:

The Judges do upon occaſion of this Tryal reſolve, That the King's Death diſſolv'd that Parliament. No Act of Parliament hath yet declared it to be ſo; and the Judges ought to have ſome Law for their Guide, as Coke well ſays. To be ſure, if in proceſs of time the Parliament ſhall expreſly declare, That not the King's Death, but the Act for the Diſſolution of that Parliament, did diſſolve it; in ſuch caſe, theſe Judges Reſolution by virtue of ſuch Act is abſolutely void. But innocent Blood in the mean time may be ſhed, and an Eſtate wrongfully taken away. And in caſe what the Judges aſſert herein, were Law, 'tis Law not known or declared till many Years after the Fact committed. At this rate, who is ſecure of Eſtate or Life?

As to the ſecond and third Queries or Propoſitions, it does appear out of the third part of Coke's Inſtitutes, fol. 7. and the Statute 11 Hen. 7. cap. 1. that Actings for the King in Fact, are not to be queſtion'd by the King in Right. If it be ſaid, That there was no King in this caſe; it may be replied, That they who had the Power and Exerciſe of the Royal Juriſdiction, as to Peace and War, Coinage of Money, Power of Life and Death, &c. which are the higheſt Enſigns of Regal Authority, muſt needs be the Powers regnant, though not under the name of King, and are within the Statute 25 Edw. 3. cap. 2. as a Queen alſo is adjudg'd, and any Sovereign Prince, though under the Title only of Lord, as was the Caſe of Ireland before it was a Kingdom. And if ſo, why not in more ſuch Perſons as well as one, that de facto exerciſe the Royal Power and Sovereign Authority, under what Name or Title ſoever? If upon this Nicety, Judgment be given againſt me, becauſe the Powers regnant wanted the Name and Formality of a King, I ſhall doubtleſs have very hard meaſure. For the Reaſon and Equity is the ſame, if the Powers regnant had the Thing, though not the Title. And where there is the ſame Reaſon, there is the ſame Law, as is a known Rule. Now there is the ſame Reaſon the Subject ſhould be equally indemnified, that acteth under any Sovereign Authority that hath not the Name of a King, as if it had. If there had been many Kings, as a Heptarchy hath been in England heretofore, thoſe would have been underſtood to be within the Statute; and the Reaſon and Equity of the Statute is the ſame in all caſes. For the Law is made for the Benefit and Security of the Subject, whom the Law requires not to examine the Right of Sovereignty. Nor is the Danger leſs under one Government than another.

The Statute is, for ſecuring the Subjects from all dormant Titles, that they may ſafely pay their Allegiance when they receive Protection, and that they may not be in danger of being deſtroy'd by two Powers at the ſame time. For that Power which is ſupreme and de facto, will be obey'd, and make it Treaſon to do otherwiſe, be it right or wrong. And if the Subject be at the ſame time in danger of committing Treaſon againſt the Power de jure, then is he in a miſerable Condition, and State of unavoidable Neceſſity, which is provided againſt by the Laws of the Land. Otherwiſe, if he be loyal to the King de jure, he ſhall be hanged by the King de facto; and if he be faithful to the King de facto, he ſhall die by the King de jure, when he recovers Poſſeſſion.

Againſt this it was, that the Statute of 11 Hen. 7. was provided, in the Difference betwixt the two Houſes of York and Lancaſter. My Caſe is either the ſame with that, and then I deſire the Benefit of that Statute; or elſe it is new, and then I deſire, as is provided 25 Edw. 3. that it be referred to the Parliament. So that it is either within the Equity of the Statute 11 Hen. 7. or elſe it is a new Caſe, and not to be judged by this Court.

If the Judges in the Reſolves by them delivered, upon any of the Particulars before alledged, have not declared that Law that ought to guide them, but their particular Judgments or Opinions, as undertaking to guide the Law, and that in Points of ſo grand Concern as touch the Subjects Life, in caſe their Judgments after ſhould prove erroneous, the Verdict given upon ſuch Errors muſt needs be illegal and void. Judgment therefore ought to be ſuſpended, till ſuch time as the Truth and Certainty of the Law may be fully argued and cleared, and that in the proper Court for the hearing and judging of this Caſe. If this be not done, but I be forthwith proceeded againſt (notwithſtanding any thing however rationally or legally alledged to the contrary) by ſuch undue Precipitation and giving Sentence, I am (contrary to Magna Charta, or Law of the Land) run upon and deſtroy'd, without due Form and Courſe of Law. And I am like to be deprived of Eſtate and Life upon no Law or certain Rule, which was declared before the Fact; no, nor before the Tryal.

Law

Upon theſe Conſiderations, I deſire an Arreſt of Judgment, and that Counſel may be aſſigned me, and competent time allow'd to make good my Averments.

As an Argument to preſs this, I deſire leave of the Court, That the Petition of the two Houſes, and the King's Aſſent to it, may be read in open Court, atteſted by one that is preſent, who examined and compared it with the Book of Record in the Lords Houſe; by which it evidently appears, that as well the King as both Houſes of Parliament were agreed, that admitting I were attainted, yet Execution, as to my Life, ſhould be remitted. And if ſo, there is no cauſe to precipitate the paſſing Sentence; eſpecially when alſo ſuch weighty Points in the Law are yet to be argued and cleared, unleſs the Judges will evidently charge themſelves with my innocent Blood.

III. My third Reaſon for an Arreſt of Judgment, is the manifeſt Newneſs of this Caſe, being ſuch as never happen'd before in the Kingdom; which withal is of ſo vaſt a conſequence to People of all Sorts and Conditions within this Realm, as nothing more. And being ſo, (as I doubt not with your Lordſhips patience I ſhall make it appear) it is the known Law, witneſſed by Bracton, and antient approved Law-Books, That in ſuch Caſes the Judges in the inferiour Courts ought not to proceed, but bring it before the High Court of Parliament.

To prove therefore the Newneſs of this Caſe, (beſides what I have already alledged in my Defence, before the Verdict) give me leave to add that, which yet further ſhews the Newneſs and Extraordinarineſs thereof. And I beſeech your Lordſhips to let me go on without interruption, in my endeavouring to make it out as clearly as God ſhall enable me, and as briefly alſo, not to ſpend too much of your Time.

In general, I do affirm of this Caſe, That it is ſo comprehenſive, as to take in the very Intereſts of Heaven and Earth: Firſt, Of God the Univerſal Sovereign and King of Kings; Secondly, That of earthly Sovereigns, who are God's Vicegerents: As alſo the Intereſts of all Mankind, that ſtand in the Relation of Subjects to the one or both thoſe ſorts of Sovereigns.

This in general. More particularly: Within the Bowels of this Caſe is that Cauſe of God, that hath ſtated itſelf in the late Differences and Wars, that have happen'd and ariſen within theſe three Nations, and have been of more than twenty years continuance: which for the greater Certainty and Solemnity, hath been recorded in the form of a National Covenant, in which the generality of the three Nations have been either implicitly involved, or expreſly concern'd, by the ſigning of their Names.

The principal things contained in that Covenant, were the known and commonly-received Duties, which either as Men or as Chriſtians we owed and ſtood obliged to perform either to God, the higheſt and univerſal King in Church or State, or to our natural Lord and Sovereign, the Kings of this Realm, in ſubordination to God and his Laws.

Again, It contains as well the Duties which we owe to every particular and individual Perſon, in their ſeveral Stations and Callings, as to the King in general, and our Repreſentative Body in Parliament aſſembled. Theſe Duties we are thereby obliged to yield and perform, in Conſiſtency with, and in a juſt Subordination and manifeſt Agreeableneſs to the Laws of God, as is therein expreſs'd: And this alſo, in no Diſagreement to the Laws of the Land, as they then were.

By this Solemn Covenant and Agreement of the three Nations, giving up themſelves in ſubjection to God and to his Laws, in the firſt place, as the Allegiance they owe to their higheſt Sovereign, (as the Creator, Redeemer, Owner and Ruler of all Mankind) they have ſo far intereſted the Son of God in the ſupreme Rule and Government of theſe Nations, that nothing therein ought to be brought into practice, contrary to his revealed Will in the Holy Scriptures, and his known and moſt righteous Laws.

This Duty which we owe to God, the univerſal King, Nature and Chriſtianity do ſo clearly teach and aſſert, that it needs no more than to be named. For this Subjection and Allegiance to God and his Laws, by a Right ſo indiſputable, all are accountable before the Judgment-Seat of Chriſt.

It is true indeed, Men may de facto become open Rebels to God and to his Laws, and prove ſuch as forfeit his Protection, and engage him to proceed againſt them as his profeſſed Enemies. But (with your Lordſhips favour) give me leave to ſay, that that which you have made a Rule for your Proceedings in my Caſe, will indeed hold, and that very ſtrongly, in this; that is to ſay, in the ſenſe wherein Chriſt the Son of God is King de jure, not only in general, over the whole World, but in particular, in relation to theſe three Kingdoms. He ought not to be kept out of his Throne, nor his viſible Government (that conſiſts in the Authority of his Word and Laws) ſuppreſſed and trampled under foot, under any pretence whatſoever.

And in the aſſerting and adhering unto the Right of this higheſt Sovereign, (as ſtated in the Covenant before mentioned) the Lords and Commons jointly, before the Year 1648, and the Commons alone afterwards, to the very times charged in the Indictment, did manage the War and late Differences within theſe Kingdoms. And whatever Defections did happen by Apoſtates, Hypocrites, and time-ſerving Worldlings, there was a Party amongſt them, that continued firm, ſincere and chaſte unto the laſt, and loved it better than their very Lives; of which number I am not aſhamed to profeſs myſelf to be: not ſo much admiring the Form and Words of the Covenant, as the righteous and holy Ends therein expreſſed, and the true Senſe and Meaning thereof, which I have reaſon to know.

Nor will I deny, but that, as to the Manner of the Proſecution of the Covenant to other Ends than itſelf warrants, and with a rigid oppreſſive Spirit, (to bring all diſſenting Minds and tender Conſciences under one Uniformity of Church-Diſcipline and Government) it was utterly againſt my Judgment. For I always eſteem'd it more agreeable to the Word of God, that the Ends and Work declared in the Covenant ſhould be promoted in a Spirit of Love and Forbearance to differing Judgments and Conſciences, that thereby we might be approving ourſelves in doing that to others, which we deſire they would do to us; and ſo (though upon different Principles) be found joint and faithful Advancers of the Reformation contained in the Covenant, both publick and perſonal.

This

This happy Union and Conjunction of all Intereſts in the reſpective Duties of all Relations, agreed and conſented to by the common Suffrage of the three Nations, (as well in their publick Parliamentary Capacity, as private Stations) appear'd to me a Rule and Meaſure approved of, and commanded by Parliament, for my Action and Deportment, though it met with great Opppoſition, in a tedious, ſad, and long War, ; and this under the Name and Pretext of Royal Authority. Yet, as this Caſe appeared to me in my Conſcience, under all its Circumſtances of Times, of Perſons, and of Revolutions inevitably happening by the Hand of God and the Courſe of his wiſe Providences; I held it ſafeſt and beſt to keep my Station in Parliament to the laſt, under the guidance and protection of their Authority, and in purſuance of the Ends before declared in my juſt Defence.

This general and publick Caſe of the Kingdoms, is ſo well known by the Declarations and Actions that have paſſed on both ſides, that I need but name it; ſince this matter was not done in a corner, but frequently contended for in the high places of the Field, and written even with Characters of Blood. And out of the Bowels of theſe publick Differences and Diſputes, doth my particular Caſe ariſe, for which I am called into queſtion. But admitting it come to my lot to ſtand ſingle, in the Witneſs I am to give to this Glorious Cauſe, and to be left alone, (as in a ſort I am) yet being upheld with the Authority before aſſerted, and keeping myſelf in Union and Conjunction therewith, I am not afraid to bear my witneſs to it in this great Preſence, nor to ſeal it with my Blood, if called thereunto. And I am ſo far ſatisfied in my Conſcience and Underſtanding, that it neither is nor can be Treaſon, either againſt the Law of Nature, or the Law of the Land, either malum per ſe, or malum prohibitum; that on the contrary, it is the Duty I owed to God the univerſal King, and to his Majeſty that now is, and to the Church and People of God in theſe Nations, and to the innocent Blood of all that have been ſlain in this Quarrel. Nothing it ſeems will now ſerve, unleſs by the Condemnation paſſed upon my Perſon, they be rendred to Poſterity Murderers and Rebels, and that upon Record in a Court of Juſtice in Weſtminſter-Hall. And this would inevitably have follow'd, if I had voluntarily given up this Cauſe, without aſſerting their and my Innocency; by which I ſhould have pulled that Blood upon my own head, which now I am ſure muſt lie at the door of others, and in particular, of thoſe that knowingly and precipitately ſhall embrue their hands in my innocent Blood, under whatever Form or Pretext of Juſtice.

My Caſe is evidently new and unuſual, that which never happen'd before; wherein there is not only much of God and of his Glory, but all that is dear and of true value to all the good People in theſe three Nations. And (as I have ſaid) it cannot be Treaſon againſt the Law of Nature, ſince the Duties of the Subjects in relation to their Sovereigns and Superiours, from higheſt to loweſt, are owned and conſcientiouſly practiſed and yielded by thoſe that are the Aſſertors of this Cauſe.

Nor can it be Treaſon within the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. ſince beſides what hath been ſaid of no King in poſſeſſion, and of being under Powers regnant and Kings de facto, as alſo of the Fact in its own nature, and the Evidence as to Overt-Acts pretended; it is very plain it cannot poſſibly fall within the Purview of that Statute. For this Caſe, thus circumſtantiated (as before declared) is no Act of any private Perſon, of his own head, as that Statute intends; nor in relation to the King there meant, that is preſumed to be in the Exerciſe of his Royal Authority, in conjunction with the Law and the two Houſes of Parliament, if they be ſitting, as the fundamental Conſtitutions of the Government do require.

My Lords, if I have been free and plain with you in this matter, I beg your pardon: For it concerns me to be ſo, and ſomething more than ordinarily urgent, where both my Eſtate and Life are in ſuch eminent peril; nay, more than my Life, the Concerns of thouſands of Lives are in it, not only of thoſe that are in their Graves already, but of all Poſterity in time to come. Had nothing been in it, but the Care to preſerve my own Life, I needed not have ſtaid in England, but might have taken my opportunity to withdraw myſelf into foreign Parts, to provide for my own Safety. Nor needed I to have been put upon pleading, as now I am for an Arreſt of Judgment; but might have watch'd upon Advantages that were viſible enough to me, in the managing of my Tryal, if I had conſulted only the Preſervation of my Life or Eſtate.

No, my Lords, I have otherwiſe learned Chriſt, than to fear them that can but kill the Body, and have no more that they can do. I have alſo taken notice, in the little reading that I have had of Hiſtory, how glorious the very Heathens have rendred their Names to Poſterity, in the Contempt they have ſhew'd of Death, (when the laying down of their Life has appeared to be their Duty) from the Love which they have owed to their Country.

Two remarkable Examples of this, give me leave to mention to you upon this occaſion. The one is, of Socrates the divine Philoſopher, who was brought into queſtion before a Judgment-Seat, as now I am, for maintaining that there was but one only true God, againſt the Multiplicity of the ſuperſtitious Heathen Gods; and he was ſo little in love with his own Life upon this account, (wherein he knew the Right was on his ſide) that he could not be perſuaded by his Friends to make any Defence, but would chuſe rather to put it upon the Conſcience and Determination of his Judges, to decide that wherein he knew not how to make any choice of his own, as to what would be beſt for him, whether to live or to die; he ingenuouſly profeſſing, that for ought he knew, it might be much to his prejudice and loſs, to endeavour longer continuance in this bodily Life.

The other Example is that of a chief Governour, that (to my beſt remembrance) had the Command of a City in Greece, which was beſieged by a potent Enemy, and brought into unimaginable Straits. Hereupon the ſaid Governour makes his addreſs to the Oracle, to know the Event of that Danger. The Anſwer was, That the City ſhould be ſafely preſerved, if the chief Governour were ſlain by the Enemy. He underſtanding this, immediately diſguiſed himſelf, and went into the Enemies Camp, amongſt whom he did ſo comport himſelf, that they unwittingly put him to death; by which means, immediately Safety and Deliverance aroſe to the City, as the Oracle had declared. So little was his Life in eſteem with him, when the Good and Safety of his Country required the laying of it down.

The Bill of Exceptions tranſlated out of the beſt Latin Form the Priſoner could procure; no Counſel learned in the Law daring to aſſiſt him in thoſe Circumſtances, without Aſſignment from the Court, which was denied.

Firſt, Concerning my Impriſonment.

(1.) I Shall here mention my Entrance into this new Scene of Sufferings under the preſent Power (after my having been handled at Will and Pleaſure, under the ſix Years Uſurpation of Cromwel) which I conceive not to have been at all according to the Law of the Land, as may appear by the 29th Chap. of Magna Charta, and Coke upon it, with many other Statutes and Law-Books: In all which it appears that the Law of England is ſo tender, not to ſay curious, in providing for the Subject's Liberty, that he is not to ſuffer the leaſt Reſtraint, Confinement or Impriſonment, but by the lawful Judgment of his Peers, or by the Law of the Land. Contrary to all which, I was committed at mere Will and Pleaſure, and have been detained cloſe Priſoner theſe two Years, without any Cauſe ſpecified, or any particular Crime laid to my Charge.

(2.) The Grand Jury of Middleſex, without my Privity, Knowledge or Preſence, (after I had been kept a cloſe Priſoner two full Years) did meet, take the Depoſitions of Witneſſes, and find the Bill againſt me, which inevitably expoſed me to a Tryal at the King's-Bench Bar, for I knew not what: whereas Major Rolf and others have had the Right of Engliſhmen granted them, to be preſent at the Grand Jury's Proceedings; yea, and to have Counſel alſo preſent to plead any thing in a way of Reaſon or Law, for invalidating the Teſtimony, or diſabling the Witneſſes, whereby the Indictment hath been immediately quaſh'd; and ſo the Party accuſed, delivered from any Shadow of Infamy, by ſo much as appearing in the Circumſtances of a Malefactor at any publick Bar of Juſtice.

That this Priſoner had great need of that Privilege of being preſent himſelf, or having Counſel and other Friends preſent at the Grand Jury, will appear hereafter, by the ſubdolous and injurious handling of Matters there.

Thirdly, Concerning the Juriſdiction of the Court.

(3.) The Offences ſuppoſed to be committed by me, are things done not of my own Head, but as a Member of the Long Parliament, or in purſuance of their Authority. The Matters done by me, in the one reſpect or other, if they be deemed Offences, are puniſhable only in Parliament; and I ought not to be queſtioned for them in any inferior Court, as Coke ſhews in the 4th Part of his Inſtitutes, chap. 1. concerning the High Court of Parliament. For the Parliament is not confined in their Actings by the Law, which inferiour Courts are tied up to; but in divers Caſes are privileged to act extraordinarily and unaccountably to any but themſelves, or ſucceeding Parliaments. Moreover, that Parliament was extraordinarily commiſſioned, qualified and authorized by expreſs Act of Parliament, beyond all preceding Parliaments, for the Cauſes and Ends declared in the Preamble of the Act for their Eſtabliſhment, accorded and paſſed by the joint Conſent of King, Lords and Commons, whereby they became unſubjected to Adjournment, Prorogation or Diſſolution, but by their own reſpective voluntary Conſents, to be by them expreſſed and paſſed for that purpoſe, with the Royal Aſſent; which occaſioned his late Majeſty in his Anſwer to the Nineteen Propoſitions, to ſay, That the Power hereby legally placed in both Houſes, was more than ſufficient to prevent and reſtrain the Power of Tyranny.

And further, the bringing of this Caſe under the Juriſdiction of this Court, or of any other but a Parliament, may prove of very dangerous Conſequence, in point of Precedent, and moſt diſagreeing to all Rules of Juſtice. For,

Firſt, By the ſame Reaſon that I am queſtioned in this Court, not only every Member of Parliament, but the very Houſes themſelves, with all their Debates, Votes and Orders, may not only be queſtioned, but referred to a Petty-Jury, and ſo come to be judged and ſentenc'd by a Court inferior to themſelves; which Judges in all times have diſclaimed and acknowledged to be out of their power, according to the known Rule, Par in pares non habet imperium, multo minus in eos qui majus imperium habent.

Secondly, In ſuch caſe the Parties accuſed, will be debarred of Evidence or Witneſs for their Juſtification and Defence. For no Members, &c. preſent at Debates in Parliament, (who are the only Eye and Ear-Witneſſes of what is ſaid and done there) ought to diſcover the Counſels of the Houſe.

Fourthly, Concerning the Indictment.

1. I have not been permitted to have a Copy or Sight of the Indictment, nor ſo much as to hear it read in Latin, which is the original Record of the Court, and ought to be the Foundation of their whole Proceeding with me. I often deſired theſe things of the Court; yea, or at leaſt to have but the Tranſcripts of ſome particular Clauſes in the Indictment, to enable me to ſhew the Deficiencies thereof in Law, (all which, others in ſuch Caſes have often obtained) but nothing would be granted herein.

This then was my hard Lot and Uſage; I was put (after two Years cloſe Impriſonment) to anſwer for my Life to a long Indictment read in Engliſh, which whether it were rightly tranſlated how ſhould I know, that might not hear the original Record in Latin? Counſel alſo learned in the Law were denied me, though preſſed for by me again and again, before I pleaded. And had they been granted, what could they have ſaid as to Defects of Law in the Indictment, unleſs they might have a Copy of it? What can any Counſel ſay to any petty Buſineſs concerning any part of a Man's Eſtate that's in Controverſy, unleſs they may have a leiſurely View and Peruſal of the Writings thereabouts? Much more ſure will it appear requiſite to the Reaſon of all Mankind, when a Man's whole Eſtate, Life and all, are at ſtake. 'Tis true, before I pleaded, this Court promiſed I ſhould have Counſel aſſigned me after pleading, (God forfend elſe, ſaid the Lord Chief Juſtice) but 'tis as true, I never could yet ſee that Promiſe made good. All things tending to a fair Tryal were promiſed me in general before pleading, but every material Particular for the juſt Defence of my Life, hath been denied me ever ſince. And my Tryal for Life was huddled up the next Day of my appearing before you:

The

The Jury (as was told me) muſt not eat nor drink till they had done their Work: (ſo the more than forty Jewry-Men that reſolved to kill Paul, Acts 23. 21.) But why ſuch Haſte and Precipitancy for a Man's Life, that's more than Meat or Eſtate, when you can let Civil Cauſes about Mens Eſtates depend many Years? And if an erroneous Judgment be paſſed in ſuch Matters, 'tis reverſible; but if innocent Blood be ſpilt, it cannot be gathered up again, as the wiſe Woman of Tekoah ſaid, 2 Sam. 14.

2. But Secondly then, as to Defects in the Indictment, which I was in ſome meaſure enabled to obſerve from that broken hearing thereof, that was afforded me here in the Court; I ſay there are many, and thoſe very conſiderable: and by the Law of England I ought not to have been urged to plead or make anſwer to ſuch an illegal and defective Indictment.

1. There is no ſufficient Overt-Act therein alledged of the Priſoner's imagining the King's Death, or that he had any the leaſt Intention that way.

2. The Levying of a War is alledged in Southwark, and cannot therefore be tryed by a Jury of Middleſex; Dyer, fol. 234. and the 3d Part of Coke's Inſtitutes, fol. 34.

3. There is Uncertainty and Obſcurity in the main thing alledged againſt me in the Indictment; to wit, That I, together with a Multitude of Perſons, to the Number of a Thouſand, unknown to the Jury, &c. whereas no criminal Act can be tryed that is not certain; Certa res debet eſſe, quæ deducitur in Judicium.

4. The Treaſon laid to my charge, is alledged to have been committed with a Multitude of other falſe Traitors, which were pardoned by the Act of Indemnity: ſuch ſuppoſed Crimes therefore of theirs cannot be remembred or alledged, without a manifeſt Breach of the Act of Indemnity and Oblivion.

The Indictment is, or ought to be founded on ſome Clauſe or Branch of 25 Edw. 3. chap. 2. but no ſuch Overt-Act is alledged in the Indictment, or proved by Witneſſes, as doth diſcover that I had any Intention to kill, depoſe, or hold out the King from the Poſſeſſion and Exerciſe of his Regal Power.

Whereas I am accuſed of compaſſing or imagining the Death of the King, this muſt be underſtood of his natural or perſonal, not politick Capacity; for in this latter Senſe the Law ſays, The King cannot die.

Firſt then, to compaſs only the Depoſition of the King, is not within the words of that Statute, (ſeveral Kings have been depoſed by Parliaments ſince the Conqueſt) and as to my compaſſing or deſigning the natural Death of the King's Perſon, with what Colour can I be accuſed of ſuch Intentions, in the Circumſtances the King at that time was in beyond the Seas?

Secondly, The aſſembling of Men together, without any Hoſtility or Injury offered to any Perſon, but for a Man's own Security and Defence in a time of Confuſion and Diſtraction, is not levying War, or Treaſon at the Common Law, or by that Statute. Yea, in this Caſe, and at the Seaſon wherein ſuch an Act as this is alledged, it might be ſuppoſed to be done for the King's Reſtoration, as well as in oppoſition thereunto; and the moſt favourable and advantageous Conſtruction ought to be made and put upon the Priſoner's Actings or Words, where there is Ambiguity, ſo that they may be taken or interpreted divers ways. For the Law always preſumeth Actions to be innocent, till the contrary be manifeſtly proved. However, in a time of Vacancy or an Interregnum, when the Foundations of Government are out of courſe, by the Law of Reaſon, Nature, and common Prudence, every Man may ſtand upon his own Guard, endeavouring his own Security and Protection from Injury and Violence.

Thirdly, To be adherent to the King's Enemies within his Realm, &c. cannot, ought not to be underſtood of any Adheſion to a Parliament, wherein the King by Law is ſuppoſed always preſent, as a Part thereof. Nor can the Long Parliament be called the King's Enemies, without overthrowing the Act of Indemnity, which the King hath declared to be the Foundation of the Nation's preſent Peace and Security.

Laſtly, The Treaſons alledged in the Indictment are ſaid to have been committed when the King was out of Poſſeſſion: So the Indictment runs, To keep out the King, &c. Now my Lord Coke in the third Part of his Inſtitutes, fol. 7. ſaith, A King de jure, and not de facto, is not within the Statute; againſt ſuch a one no Treaſon can be committed. For if there be a King regnant in Poſſeſſion, though he be Rex de facto, and not de jure, yet he is Seigneur le Roy, within the Purvieu of this Statute; and the other that hath Right, and is out of Poſſeſſion, is not within this Act. Nay, if Treaſon be committed againſt a King de facto, & non de jure, and after the King de jure cometh to the Crown, he ſhall puniſh the Treaſon done to the King de facto.

And after, in the ſame Place he ſaith, That by Law there is always a King, in whoſe Name the Laws are to be maintained and executed, otherwiſe Juſtice would fail. The Act alſo of 11 Hen. 7. was made for Security of the Subject on this behalf. The word King alſo may and ought to be taken largely for any Sovereign Power in a King or Queen, as Coke in the place fore-quoted ſhews; and why not by the ſame Reaſon, in a Protector, though an Uſurper, or any other Perſons, one or more, in whom Sovereignty is lodged, or that have all the Badges of Sovereignty; as the calling of Parliaments, enacting of Laws, coining of Money, receiving foreign Ambaſſadors, &c.? His Majeſty that now is, is granted by the very Indictment to have been then out of Poſſeſſion: If ſo, then was there either ſome other King, or what was equivalent, ſome Sovereign Power in actual Poſſeſſion and Exerciſe, or none. If the former, then was there a King de facto, ſo no Treaſon could be committed againſt him that was King de jure only: if the latter, then the Government was diſſolved, no Allegiance was due to any Perſons, and ſo no Offence could be properly Treaſon within the Statute.

But had the late Protector had the Name and Stile of a King, no Treaſon could have been committed againſt the King de jure only. Now God forbid that you ſhould give away my Life upon ſuch Niceties, becauſe an uſurping Protector was not clothed with the Title as well as Power of a King. The Protector or any Uſurper's taking or not taking the Title of a King, in caſe he have the Power, cannot alter the State of my ſuppoſed Crime. You ought not to be biaſſed by popular Reports concerning me. 'Tis eaſier to be innocent, than ſo reported: the one is in our own power, not the other.

Fifthly,

Fifthly, Concerning the Evidence.

1. No Allegation was directly proved by two positive lawful Witneſſes, as in this Caſe it ought to be.

2. One of the Witneſſes for the King confeſſed in open Court, That to his knowledge my Hand had been counterfeited, to my Prejudice and Damage, in great Sums of Money; yet Orders pretended to be ſigned by me, (wherein my Hand may as well be counterfeited) are taken as Evidence againſt me.

3. The Iſſue of the whole Cauſe depended on the Solution of ſome difficult Queſtions of ſo high a Nature, and great Importance, as could not ſafely be determined but in the high Court of Parliament: As,

1. Whether the Long Parliament called in November 1640, were diſſolved by the late King's Death?

2. Whether the ſucceſſive remaining Powers that exerciſed the Royal Supreme Authority from 1640, to the Reſtoration of his now Majeſty, were not within the true Senſe and Meaning of 25 Edw. III. and 11 Hen. VII?

As to other pertinent Queries, thou mayeſt ſee them, Reader, in other parts of this Tryal.

That which remains as an Appendix to this Bill of Exceptions, is to lay before thee the Grounds which plainly ſhew that there was a downright Conſpiracy in Sir Henry Vane's Tenants and others, to proſecute him for Life and Eſtate, under Colour and Pretence of Juſtice.

1. Preſently after I was committed to the Tower for High Treaſon, and made a cloſe Priſoner, Mr. O-Neale, Sir William Darcy and Dr. Cradock obtained an Order from the King to ſeize and take into their Poſſeſſion all the Eſtates of ſuch Perſons that were already, or ſhould be forfeited to his Majeſty.

Hereupon the ſaid Mr. O-Neale and Sir William Darcy appointed ſome under them, in the Biſhoprick of Durham, (by name, Thomas Bowes Eſq; now deceaſed, and Captain William Darcy) to join with the ſaid Dr. Cradock, to put in execution the ſaid Warrant, as their Deputies; who thereupon went to Raby-Caſtle, and demanded the Rent-Books of Thomas Mowbray my Steward, offering him his Place under them, which he refuſed.

Contrary to this Proceeding, Sir Edward Coke expreſly declares, 'That before Indictment, the 'Goods or other things of any Offender, cannot 'be ſearched, inventoried, or in any ſort ſeized; 'nor after Indictment, ſeized, moved or taken a-'way before Conviction or Attainder, Inſtit. part '3. chap. 133. concerning the Seizure of Goods, &c. 'for Offences, &c. before Conviction.'

2. At the Inſtance and Proſecution of my Tenants and others, an Order was made by the Houſe of Commons (not of the Lords) requiring the Tenants of ſuch Perſons as were excepted out of the General Pardon, to detain their Rents in their own Hands. By Pretence of this Order, (though that Parliament that made it, were diſſolved) the Tenants refuſed to pay their reſpective Rents as they grew due, contrary to all Law and Equity; and joined together in open Defiance and Conſpiracy againſt their Landlord.

3. The ſaid Tenants (when legally proſecuted in his Majeſty's Courts at Weſtminſter, for the Recovery of the ſaid Rents out of their Hands) did petition the late Houſe of Commons to put a ſtop to ſuch legal Proſecution and Suits, which Motion of theirs, put the Houſe into a great Heat and Violence againſt me; inſomuch as that they had almoſt paſſed a Vote to ſequeſter all my Eſtate, though unheard or unconvicted.

4. William Watſon of Cock-field, and other of the ſaid Tenants, have continued in London to carry on this Conſpiracy againſt me; by whoſe means, with others, the King hath been importuned to ſend for Men from the Iſle of Scylly, in order to this Tryal.

5. By common Fame (which at leaſt affords a ſtrong Preſumption) my Goods and Eſtate have been long begg'd by ſeveral Perſons, and granted: whereas the begging of the Goods and Eſtate of any Delinquent, accuſed or indicted of Treaſon, before he be convicted and attainted, is utterly unlawful; becauſe till then nothing is forfeited to the King, and ſo not his to diſpoſe of; as Sir Edward Coke ſhews in the fore-mentioned Chapter about the Seizure of Goods, &c.

6. I am credibly informed, that about December laſt a certain Captain came from the Duke of Albemarle to Captain Linn, with threatning Language, that if he would not confeſs things againſt Sir Henry Vane, he ſhould be fetched up before the Council, and made to do it. Linn anſwered, He knew nothing againſt Sir Henry Vane, nor had any Orders from him, but from the Parliament and Council.

The ſame Captain came again, about a fortnight after, from the Duke of Albemarle, with a parcel of fine Words, That if he the ſaid Linn would teſtify, That Sir Henry Vane was in the Head of his Regiment, and that he received Orders from him, the Duke of Albemarle would gratify him with any Civility he ſhould deſire. Linn replied, he knew no Regiment Sir Henry Vane had; but that it was the Parliament's and Council of State's Regiment. The ſame Captain came again to him from the Duke of Albemarle, and told him, the Duke deſired him to teſtify Sir Henry Vane's being in the Head of his Regiment, and that he received Orders from him to fight Sir George Booth. Linn replied, He knew no ſuch things. The Captain told him, as from the Duke, he ſhould have any Place or Office in the Court: Be not afraid to ſpeak, ſaid he, I warrant you we ſhall hang Sir Henry Vane, for he is a Rogue.

7. I am credibly informed, That one of the Grand Jury declared, That after the Bill of Indictment againſt me was brought in, ſome from the King's Counſel came to deſire them, they would pleaſe to come into the inward Court of Wards: Upon which, one of the Jury ſaid, They were there to judge of Matters brought before them, and ought not to go in thither; but if the Counſel had any thing to ſay, they ought to come to them. This was ſeconded by ſome; others ſaid, They were the King's Counſel, and it was but Matter of Civility to grant them their Requeſt. Whereupon they went into the inward Court of Wards, where the King's Counſel were, to wit, Attorney-General Palmer, Sollicitor-General Finch, Serjeant Glynne and Serjeant Keeling. After a while they cauſed all to withdraw but the Jury. Then the Clerk read the Indictment in the uſual Form for levying War from 1659. After it was read, one of the Counſel told them, It was a Bill of High Treaſon againſt his Majeſty, and they were to conſider of it according to their Evidence. Then they proceeded to examine their Witneſſes.

Jefford ſaid, Sir Henry Vane offered him a Commiſſion to go againſt Sir George Booth; which, ſaid Serjeant Keeling, was to go againſt the King.

Wright being examined, whether he ſaw Sir Henry Vane in the Council, ſaid, Yes. The Attorney-General replied, That if he was amongſt them, they might find the Bill upon that.

Upon this the Jury withdrew, and were by themſelves. Then Sir John Cropley, the Foreman, ſaid, We muſt paſs this Bill: at which all the Jury were ſilent. At laſt, one ſtood up and ſaid; 'This Bill 'contains Matter of Fact, and Matter of Law. 'Some of this Jury, to my Knowledge, were ne-'ver of any Jury before, as well as I, therefore 'ignorant of the Law, (in ſo difficult and unuſual 'a Point as this is) and conſequently could not 'give in their Verdict, as to Law, but only Fact.' Several others of the Jury ſeconded him in this; and proteſted againſt giving in their Verdict, as to Matter of Law: Notwithſtanding all which, the Bill was carried up to the King's-Bench.

8. On the Day of my Arraignment, an eminent Perſon was heard to ſay, I had forfeited my Head, by what I ſaid that day, before ever I came to my Defence: what that ſhould be, I know not, except my ſaying in open Court, Sovereign Power of Parliament, which the Attorney-General writ down, after he had promiſed, at my Requeſt, no Exceptions ſhould be taken at words. And whole Volumes of Lawyers Books paſs up and down the Nation with that Title, Sovereign Power of Parliaments.

9. Six moderate Men that were like to conſider of what they did, before they would throw away my Life, were ſummoned to be of my Petty-Jury; which the King's Counſel hearing, writ a Letter to one of the Sheriffs not to ſummon them: And a new Liſt was made the Night immediately before the Day of Verdict, on purpoſe that the Priſoner might not have any Knowledge of them, till preſented to his View and Choice in Weſtminſter-Hall. Yet one of the Forty-eight of this Liſt, (who ſaid, He would have ſtarv'd himſelf before he would have found Sir Henry Vane guilty of Treaſon) was never called, though he walked in the Hall all the while. And in that Hurry of thoſe that compaſſed him about, he being alone, ſtripp'd of all Aſſiſtance, Sir William Roberts, Foreman, and Sir Chriſtopher Abdy, were ſworn by the Court, before I was aware; ſo my challenging them, might ſeem a perſonal Diſobliging, and Exaſperation of them againſt me, after they were ſworn and fixed.

The Sollicitor alſo had a long Whiſper with the Foreman of the Jury in the Court, before they went to Verdict, telling him, The Priſoner muſt be ſacrificed for the Nation, &c.

Suddenly after which, I am here called to receive my Sentence.

10. After the Day of my Tryal, the Judges went to Hampton-Court.

11. None were more forward to abſolve the King from his Grant about my Life, than they that had appeared moſt forward in promoting the Bill by way of Petition to the King for it. This Grant being upon Record, may ſeem to have the ſame Validity that other Acts of Parliament have; which are ſtill but the two Houſes Petition to the King for his Aſſent to the Bills by them drawn up and paſſed. They uſed this as a Means to induce the King to exempt me from all Benefit of the Act of Indemnity and Oblivion; and then at laſt perſuade and abſolve him from making good this Grant alſo, thereby depriving me of all viſible Relief for my Life. I conceived my Life as ſecure by that Grant, as others Lives or Eſtates are by the Act of Indemnity it ſelf; for what is that, but the Bill of both Houſes, with the King's Aſſent to it, upon their Petition?

The Petition of both Houſes of Parliament to the King's moſt Excellent Majeſty, on the behalf of Sir Henry Vane, and Colonel John Lambert, after they left them uncapable of having any Benefit of the Act of Indemnity.

To the King's moſt Excellent Majeſty;

The humble Petition of the Lords and Commons aſſembled in Parliament,

Sheweth,

'THAT your Majeſty having declared your 'gracious Pleaſure to proceed only againſt 'the immediate Murderers of your Royal Father: 'We your Majeſty's moſt humble Subjects, the 'Lords and Commons aſſembled, not finding Sir 'Henry Vane nor Col. Lambert to be of that Number, 'are humble Suitors to Your Majeſty, that if they 'ſhall be attainted, That Execution, as to their 'Lives, may be remitted.

And as in Duty bound, &c.

The ſaid Petition being read, it was agreed to, and ordered to be preſented to his Majeſty by the Lord Chancellor.

The Lord Chancellor reported, That he had preſented the Petition of both Houſes to the King's Majeſty, concerning Sir Henry Vane and Col. Lambert, and his Majeſty grants the Deſires in the ſaid Petition.

John Brown, Cler. Parliamentorum.

The Tryal of JOHN JAMES, the Fourteenth Day of November, 14 Car. II. 1662. Done by his Friends.

BEING carried in a Coach to Weſtminſter by the Under-Sheriff and brought to the King's-Bench Bar, Chief-Juſtice Forſter, Juſtice Mallet, Juſtice Twiſden, and Juſtice Windham, being Judges upon the Bench; he was commanded, according to Cuſtom, to hold up his Hand: and he did ſo, and told them he did hold up his Hand to ſignify he was there to anſwer to what ſhould be laid to his Charge. But he held up his Hand with his Glove on, which ſome were offended at, and told him he muſt pull it off. John James anſwered, it was all one to him, to hold up his Hand with it off or on; and then he did pull off his Glove, and held up his Hand, and then his Charge was read.

The Subſtance of the Indictment.

HE ſtood indicted by the Name of John James:

'1. For compaſſing and imagining the Death of 'the King.

'2. For endeavouring to levy War againſt the 'King.

'3. For endeavouring a Change of the Govern-'ment. And in this his compaſſing, imagining, 'and contriving the King's Death, he had ma-'liciouſly, traitorouſly, and by Inſtigation of the 'Devil, not having the Fear of God before his 'Eyes, declared theſe Words. (1.) That the King 'was a Bloody Tyrant, a Blood-ſucker, and Blood-'thirſty Man, and his Nobles the ſame. (2.) That 'the King and his Nobles had ſhed the Blood of 'the Saints at Charing-Croſs, and the Blood of the 'Covenanters in Scotland. (3.) That the King 'was brought in to this end, to fill up the Meaſure 'of his Iniquity; and that the King's Cup of Ini-'quity had filled more within this laſt Year than 'in many Years before. (4.) That he did bemoan 'that they had not improved their Opportunity 'when they had Power in their Hands; and that 'he did ſay it would not be long before they had 'Power again, and then they would improve it 'better; and that he did bewail the Apoſtacy of 'the People of God, and ſay, They had not 'fought the Lord's Battels thoroughly; but when 'the Lord ſhould give Power to them again, and 'give his Work into their Hands, they would do 'it better. (5.) That the Death and Deſtruction 'of the King drew very near.'

The Indictment being read, the Clerk called upon John James to anſwer to his Charge, and plead Guilty, or Not guilty.

John James deſired, before they did proceed, that he might have a Copy of his Charge, and Time to conſider of it.

The Lord Chief-Juſtice anſwered, That a Copy of his Charge was not allowed in Caſes of High Treaſon; and he told him he muſt plead Guilty, or Not guilty, or elſe a worſe Thing would follow.

John James anſwered, He humbly conceived it was his Privilege as an Engliſhman; and till he had that, he was not free to plead one way or other. He alledged that Chief Juſtice Coke had declared it good Law; and that Judge Heath had declared it alſo good Law; and that he did at Oxford give John Lilburne a Copy of his Charge, being arraigned there for High Treaſon.

Then one of the King's Counſel told him, That the Law would not grant him a Copy of his Charge in caſe of Felony, much leſs in caſe of High Treaſon; and told him, If he would not plead, they would proceed againſt him as a Perſon contemning the Court, and look upon him a Mute.

John James made anſwer, Seeing he was overruled, he pleaded Not guilty, neither in Form nor Matter.

The Clerk asked him how he would be tried?

He anſwered, By the Law of God. At which the Lawyers gave a great Hiſs.

And it was anſwered thus, or to this effect; It was not a Place or Time to talk of the Laws of God. But John James was willing to urge it again, That ſeeing the Judge did ſit there as Judge of the Law, and of God's Law, as they thought, it was meet they ſhould give him Liberty to appeal to God's Law.

Whereupon the Judge told him he muſt proceed according to their Law, or elſe a worſe Thing would follow; and ſay, By God and the Country.

John James anſwered, He was ignorant of their Law, and knew not what Snare there might be in it, never having been at any Bar before; and therefore deſired him he would open the Terms, what they meant by God, and what they meant by the Country.

The Judge anſwered, God forbid but he ſhould open the Terms: By God (ſays he) is meant your firſt Demand, to wit, the Law of God.

John James asked him, Why then his firſt Demand was not granted?

The Judge ſaid, God forbid but that you ſhould ſo be tried; but you muſt uſe the Form of the Court.

John James ſaid, If it were ſo, he was ſatisfied.

And by the Country, (ſaith the Judge) twelve Middleſex Men, Men of Truth, that would judge impartially between the King and him.

John James ſaid, If that be the Meaning, he put himſelf upon the Tryal of God and the Country.

When this was done, John James was ſent by a Habeas Corpus to the King's-Bench Priſon in Southwark, and there continued till the 19th Day of November, vember, and then was brought again to the King's-Bench Bar at Weſtminſter, to his further Tryal.

In this Interval betwixt the Commitment and Tryal, upon the firſt Day of the Week, being the 18th of November, John James received a Letter from a Perſon of Note, to advertiſe him that there were ſuch a Jury of Life and Death impannelled to proceed upon him, as had not been for many Years before, being all pick'd Men, and moſt of them Knights and Gentlemen; and that if he did not except againſt them, or moſt of the chief of them, he was a dead Man.

The ſecond Day's Tryal.

UPON the 19th of November he appeared the ſecond Time at the King's-Bench Bar, according to the Order of the Court, where were preſent,

The Judges;

Sir Robert Forſter Chief Juſtice.
Sir —— Mallet Juſtice.
Sir Thomas Twiſden Juſtice.
Sir Wadham Windham Juſtice.

Sir Jeoffry Palmer Attorney-General.
Sir Heneage Finch Sollicitor-General.

The King's Counſel;

Serjeant Maynard. Serjeant Wilde.
Serjeant Glynne. Serjeant Keeling.

The Witneſſes Names appearing in the Court;

Alderman Chard. John Tipler. Bernard Osburn.
The fourth Witneſs's Name not yet known.

The Names of the Jury.

Charles Pitfield. Humphry Higgens.
Ralph Halſaye. Thomas Snow.
Thomas Eglefield. William Cole.
Daniel Charlwood. Thomas Upnel.
Ambroſe Hanburough. Gilbert Meſe.
Anthony Hall. William Blunt.

The Witneſſes and Jury being called into the Court, John James having excepted againſt divers Knights and Gentlemen pick'd for his Jury, and the afore-named ſtanding for his Jury, the Clerk bid John James hold up his Hand as before. He did ſo; and again told them it was to ſignify he was there; (and then they laughed) and the Judge ſaid, O ho, are you come?

Afterwards, the Indictment being read again, the Clerk proceeded to tell the Court for what he was indicted and arraigned; and that he pleaded Not guilty, and had put himſelf upon God and the Country for Tryal; and therefore told the Jury they were to judge between the King and him in that Matter.

Serjeant Keeling's Speech.

Hereupon Serjeant Keeling, one of the King's Counſel, ſtepp'd up, and ſaid, My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, John James, Priſoner at the Bar, ſtands indicted for High Treaſon; for that he, with other diſaffected Perſons, Enemies unto the Government of the King, being aſſembled at Bulſtake-Alley in White-Chappel, not having God before his Eyes, but being moved by the Inſtigation of the Devil, ſpake and publiſhed theſe Words, viz. That King Charles was a Blood-thirſty Tyrannical King; and that the Nobles of England were Blood-thirſty and Tyrannical Men; and that the Cup of their Iniquity was begun to be filled by the ſhedding of the Blood of the Covenanters in Scotland; and that it was almoſt filled by the ſhedding of the Blood of the Saints this time Twelve-month; and that the Time of their Deſtruction was near at hand: And did condole the Neglect of the Opportunity and Price they had put into their hands; and that if ever the like Occaſion were adminiſtred unto them again, they would fight the Lord's Battel more effectually than they had done before. And (ſaid he) if we prove that theſe Words were ſpoken by John James, you are to find him guilty of High Treaſon; (and ſo he ſat down.) Then ſtood up Sir Jeoffry Palmer, Attorney-General.

The Subſtance of Sir Jeoffry Palmer's Speech.

Firſt, he ſpake of the Antiquity of Monarchy, and did fully aſſert the preſent Government. Then, by way of Reflection, he reviewed the twenty Years Troubles that had paſſed over our Heads in theſe Nations; and that the Veſſel of this Commonwealth had been beaten and blown upon the Waves and Billows of a tempeſtuous raging Sea, being almoſt broken to pieces, and like utterly to be loſt, unleſs God by a miraculous Providence had reſtored his Majeſty Charles the Second to his Crown and Dignity; for which (he ſaid) ever bleſſed be his Name. Then he obſerved that the beginning of our Sorrows was by the ſeditious preaching of ſome diſcontented Miniſters in this Nation, and about this City. Then he told them how much Care the Law had taken for the Preſervation of his Majeſty's Perſon and Government; and that it was as much Treaſon in the Heart, as in the Act, Mens rea facit reum. Then he did deſcant upon the Words of the Indictment, and opened them, and told the Jury, that according to the Law of England they were Treaſon, for which he ought to die: and then ſat down.

Then the Court called John Tipler, the firſt Witneſs, the Judge bidding him look upon the Priſoner Serjeant Glynne asked him, what he could ſay concerning the Words ſpoken by John James? Who ſaid (at the Time the Indictment alledged, which was on Saturday) he was at a Houſe near adjoining unto the Place where they uſually did meet; and that about Two of the clock in the Afternoon he ſtood at a Window in a Yard, next adjoining to the Meeting-place, and ſaw John James, the Perſon at the Bar, preaching, (as they call it, ſaid he) and repeated the Words that were opened by Serjeant Keeling exactly; only further, That he did wonderfully adore Oliver Cromwell, ſaying, That every Finger of his was a Champion; and that when they had Power again, they ſhould do the Work more thoroughly. And ſaid, That thereupon he told it preſently to a Juſtice, and afterwards to a Neighbour of his, who was in an extreme Fright and Horror, and ſo they both went together to Alderman Chard Juſtice, who then came immediately, and ſurprized and ſeized upon them; the Women only they let go, but the Men the Juſtice did commit to Priſon that would not take the Oath of Allegiance: That they ſeized John James in the Pulpit, where he was preaching when they came in. The Court asked him, what

 Time

Time of the Day it was? And he ſaid it was about Two of the clock in the Afternoon. And they asked him where he ſtood? And he ſaid he ſtood directly oppoſite in a Window, in a Yard next adjoining to the Meeting-place; and that he could eaſily diſcern him. Demanding of him ſome other Queſtions, that might induce the Jury to believe the Evidence given was neither with Thought of Malice to the Priſoner, nor Hope of Reward; then the Court gave the Priſoner leave to ask Tipler what Queſtions he pleaſed.

The Exception that John James took unto the Witneſs, was, That it was a hard thing for him to ſwear that he was the Perſon that was then preaching, he being without the Window, which might intercept his Sight. To which he anſwered, That he knew him very well; and that he was not deceived.

Another Witneſs was Alderman Chard, the Juſtice; who ſaid, He could ſay nothing as to the Words that were ſpoken; but ſo ſoon as John Tipler came to him, and informed him of the Words ſpoken by John James, he enquired the Place where it was, and immediately he and his Clerk and the Conſtable haſted thither, where they found John James preaching, and about thirty or forty aſſembled there to hear him. And ſaid, He there ſeized John James; and pulled him out of the Pulpit where he was preaching; and all thoſe Men that would not take the Oath of Allegiance, he committed, but the Women he let go. So the Court asked him, if it were at the Time alledged in the Indictment? And he ſaid, Yea.

Another Witneſs was a Yorkſhire Man, whoſe Name we know not: Who coming into the Court, was commanded to look upon the Priſoner at the Bar, and declare what he heard him ſay. Who anſwered, He was at Tipler's Houſe, and heard very loud Speaking, which cauſed him to come out, and hearken, and he heard very dangerous Words. The Judge asked him, what thoſe dangerous Words were? He ſaid, He could remember no more than this, that one ſaid, That the Lord had a great Work to do for his People; and that they were the People that muſt do it. The Judge asked him if he heard nothing concerning the King's Cup of Iniquity? To which he anſwered, No. And they bid him look upon the Priſoner at the Bar, and asked if that were the Man? He anſwered, He could not ſay that he was the Man.

Whereupon John James deſired the Judge to ask him, if he was the Man? And he turned his Face towards John James, as if he directed his Speech to him, and ſaid, He could not ſay he was the Man.

Another was Bernard Osburn, whom the Judge commanded to look upon the Priſoner at the Bar, and tell the Court what he heard him ſay concerning the King, and the Powers that were now in being.

Hereupon John James told Osburn, He hoped he was a Man of ſome Conſcience and Integrity, and that he feared wrongfully to take away the Life of a Man; and how great a Sin it was, eſpecially to ſhed the Blood of them that feared the Lord.

Then the Court asked the Witneſs, where he was when the Words were ſpoken? He ſaid he was in the Meeting-place: And he ſaid he heard John James ſay, That King Charles was a blood-thirſty tyrannical King; and that the Nobles of England were blood-thirſty: That he had drank pretty deep of the Blood of the Saints already, in that he had ſhed their Blood twelve Months agone at Charing-Croſs,] and the Blood of the Covenanters in Scotland; and that God had brought him in to that end, to fill up the Meaſure of his Iniquity, and he had filled it up more in twelve Months than in many Years before. They asked him if he heard nothing concerning the Lord's Battels? And he told them (as though he had forgot it) that he heard him ſay, That they ſhould have Power in their hands; and that they ſhould fight the Lord's Battels more thoroughly. And they asked him if he heard any thing concerning the Ruin of the King? He anſwered, Yes, he heard him ſay, That the Ruin of the King was very near. Then they asked him if thoſe were the Words? He ſaid, He could not ſay they were the ſame Words, but to the ſame Subſtance.

Having done this, the Judge told John James he had Liberty to ſpeak for himſelf.

Whereupon he deſired the Favour of the Court to thoſe Witneſſes he had attending the Court, in reſpect of Bernard Osburn. Whereupon four Witneſſes were called into the Court, that gave Evidence that this Bernard Osburn confeſſed to them he had ſworn againſt John James he knew not what. One of them declared further and more largely, (that was near Marriage to Bernard Osburn) That he had told her he did not only ſwear he knew not what, but that he was affrighted into what he ſwore. He did ſay, That what he ſwore to, was firſt ſworn to by another Man, and then brought to him in Writing. The former Witneſſes declared, That moreover they deſired to know of Bernard what he had ſworn againſt John James: And he told them, He could not tell except he heard the Words repeated. (Though Bernard Osburn denied in the Face of the Court that ever he ſaid any ſuch Things.) John James then told the Court, he had ſeveral Witneſſes attending the Court, that were free, if they pleaſed, to prove that the Words charged upon him were not ſpoken. The Judge told him he might call in as many Witneſſes as he would. Whereupon John James called in four Witneſſes more; all which did teſtify in the Face of the Court, That the Words charged upon him were not ſpoken. And the Court did, as before, give them the hearing.

Then the Judge bid the Jury take notice what had been ſpoke by the King's Witneſſes and his. And then the Court told John James that now he had free leave to ſpeak for himſelf, as much and as long as he pleaſed, if he had called all his Witneſſes; and told him, That when the King's Counſel had concluded, he could ſpeak no more; but now he might ſay as much as he pleaſed. Then he ſpake with much Liberty and Freedom, the Court and all preſent giving Attention to what he ſaid, which was to this purpoſe:

John James's Defenſive Speech.

HE ſaid he had ſomewhat to ſay, firſt, as to the Form of the Charge, viz. That he had malicouſly, wickedly, traitorouſly, and by the Inſtigation of the Devil, not having the Fear of God before his Eyes, &c. He told them, That in the Fear of God he did deny it; and told them he had not a malicious Thought againſt the Perſon of the King, but deſired the Salvation of his Soul, as of his own; that he had not dealt maliciouſly againſt the King, neither was inſtigated thereto by the Devil; and that by the Goodneſs of the Lord, what he had done, he had done it in the Fear of God. Neither could he be judged, as he told them, as a malicious Perſon againſt the King, in regard he never had any publick Imployment in the Nation, either againſt this this King in being, or his Father, being a Man of no account in the World, having not worn a Sword this eleven Years; and therefore desired they would in their Understanding clear him from this Charge, as a Person malicious against the King. And further he said, He was a Person that could not be supposed to have in his Eye any thing of Advantage in the World in so acting against the King. And as to the Matter of the Charge, whereas it runs, That I John James had compassed, imagined, and contrived the Death of the King; John James told the Court he did not well understand what they meant by compassing the Death of the King, as compassing and imagining is ordinarily taken: He had not, neither was he capable of endeavouring the King's Death, nor the Change of the Government; being a mean inconsiderable Person, a Man that had lived upon his Calling. And as to those Particulars lastly charged upon him, he said he was not guilty of them: He did not say the King was a Bloody Tyrant, a Blood-sucker, a Blood-thirsty Man; that in the Fear of the Lord he did utterly deny; neither did he say any thing tending thereto. He further said, He did not say the King had shed the Blood of the Saints at Charing-Cross this time Twelve-month: He did not say, They, when they had power in their hands, would improve it more thoroughly for God; and that we did not fight the Lord's Battels thoroughly. And whereas he was charged for contending for Cromwell, and that Power, (that God had so eminently wiped off from the Stage) he said he did declare against that Power, and was averse to it, and did suffer under it in his measure; and told them he did not stand there as Cromwell's Advocate. Then did he endeavour to speak more particularly to the Jury, letting them know that in a secondary way his Life was in their hands; and it was, in the Eye of Reason, in their power to save or destroy him, and wished them to have a care of shedding innocent Blood: and told them, Because of innocent Blood the Land did mourn, to wit, for the Blood shed in Queen Mary's Days, and King Henry the Eighth's; and if there were any innocent Blood shed since, he desired no more may be added to it. He told them he did desire they would act conscientiously, and not be over-awed by any Man. He told them they were his Judges in Law of Matter of Fact, and desired them to be tender of his Blood. He said, He should say very little more for himself, but one Word for the Lord, and therefore desired he might have his Fear before him; and although he was the poorest and meanest for such a Work, yet he was called forth, and did declare, That the Lord Jesus Christ was King of Nations as well as King of Saints; and that the Government of Kingdoms did of Right belong to him. And he quoted Rev. 11. 15. And the seventh Angel sounded, and there were great Voices in Heaven, saying, The Kingdoms of this World are become the Kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ, and he shall reign for ever and ever.

And when he had so spoke, the Lord Chief Justice Forster interrupted him, saying, Hold, Sirrah; Sirrah, you think you are in the Conventicle in White-Chappel, preaching. And thereupon commanded the Clerk to read the Act of Parliament, entitled, An Act for the Preservation of the King's Person and Government; wherein was expres'd to this purpose, That whosoever shall contrive or endeavour to levy War against the King or Government, &c. or endeavour to compass or contrive the Death of the King, his Wound or Maim; or that by Printing, Preaching, Writing, or other Speaking, endeavour the same; then every such Person or Persons shall be looked upon as Traytors to the King, and shall be proceeded against as in the Case of High Treason, &c. Which when the Clerk had read,

John James desired Liberty to speak, desiring the Court to produce a Statute that would reach his Case, for that did not, but the Case of such as had endeavoured to levy War against the King, or had compassed or contrived his Death or Maim: But he had not contrived or compassed the Death of the King, or the Change of the Government within or without his Dominions; and therefore desired a Statute might be produced that might reach his Case, for he conceived that was short.

The Judge told him it fully reached his Case.

And one of the King's Counsel made answer, That it reached him in every Case.

And another of the Counsel said, Treason was the first Conception and the first evil Thought in the Heart; and Treason was made visible by Preaching, or Printing, or Speaking, &c. which was a Manifestation of the Things that were in the Heart.

This being spoken, the Judge asked him if he had any more to say for himself; and told him, if he did not speak now, the King's Counsel would enter upon their Plea, and then he must speak no more for himself.

He told them he had one Word to the Jury, which he desired to lay before them: It was a Scripture written in the 29th of Isaiah, ver. 21. That make a Man an Offender for a Word, and lay a Snare for him that reproveth in the Gate.

Whereupon the Judge told him it was not to be borne; for he did inveigh against the Parliament.

Though he said, He had not the least Thought of the Parliament; but he spake it to let the Jury know, that if he were guilty of those Words, there was no Law of God to take away a Man's Life for Words.

Hereupon the King's Counsel pleaded severally one after another.

First Serjeant Glynne stood up, and said, Brother Maynard, shall we not answer something to what the Prisoner hath objected? So Glynne began.

The Substance of Serjeant Glynne*'s Speech.*

He told the Jury, That if they proved the Words alledged in the Indictment substantially, though it were not adequate thereunto in every Tittle and Iota, yet it was sufficient to satisfy their Consciences, and to find the Prisoner guilty of High Treason.

First, He began with the Exception taken unto the first Witness, That he stood without the Window, and therefore could not easily discern the Visage and Physiognomy of the Prisoner that was there a preaching. He told them he had sworn expresly it was the same Person; and that as he came into the Yard he was there a preaching, and as he went away to the Justice of Peace he saw him: and the Justice did seize the same Person, and find him preaching when he came; and therefore it must be him, and no other. And told them, That the Witness could have no end in discovering of it; for if he had kept Silence, he had consented, and so been guilty of Misprision of Treason.

Then said he, As to the Exception taken against the fourth Witness, That he said he swore he knew not what, and could not tell what he had sworn to:

He said, This was no cause to reject this Evidence; for peradventure he could not well call to mind mind the ſeveral words that were ſpoken; or peradventure he would not tell them, becauſe he might ſuppoſe that they were ſent to enſnare him in his Evidence, that they might make it void.

Then as to the Witneſſes that were brought on the part of the Priſoner, to teſtify that no ſuch words were ſpoken; he ſaid, As to that he muſt refer it unto the Conſciences of the Jury. But he ſaid, he conceived that it was altogether immaterial; for the queſtion is not, what he did not ſay, but what he did ſay. They ſay that he did not ſay theſe words, but they do not ſay what he did.

Then ſtept up Serjeant Maynard, and ſaid, That as to the Evidence of thoſe three Perſons, his Brother Glynne had ſpoken ſo much, and ſo well, that he could add no more, or very little: And urged the ſame things that Serjeant Glynne did. And further ſaid, That the Priſoner ſpoke much of his Integrity and Innocency; I believe (ſaith he) Gentlemen of the Jury, never was there any Offender, or the vileſt Miſcreant in the world, that would ever have received the Reward of his Doings, if his own Excuſe and Proteſtation might have ſaved him.

Then he ſaid, As for the Blood of the Saints that was ſpilt this time twelvemonth, he ſaid they were ſad Saints, ſuch Saints (ſaid he) as would have cut all our throats.

Then John James deſired to be heard one word, that that Gentleman had untruly alledged againſt him; but the Court refuſed to allow him the liberty.

Then ſtood up Sir Heneage Finch, Sollicitor-General.

The Subſtance of Sir Heneage Finch's Speech.

My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, be it known unto you, and to all that hear me this day, that the Priſoner at the Bar is not arraigned for his Conſcience or Religion, but for Treaſon and Rebellion, for horrid Treaſon and Rebellion, for ſpurning againſt the meekeſt King in the Earth. His Majeſty, to the great and inexpreſſible Grief of his Heart, did not think there was a Perſon ſo unworthy left within his Dominions, that would have lifted up the heel againſt him, after twenty Years rejecting of his Majeſty and his Royal Father; and having alſo conferred this Grace upon us, to reduce us to a State of Innocency, he could not think there was any Gall left in our Hearts, or any Guile to be found in our Mouths.

He then preſs'd his Treaſon upon the Conſciences of the Jury, who, as he told them, would affright their Conſciences with his Innocency. And told them, how that the Puniſhment of this Offender might affright the like Malefactors for the future: And ſaid, that there were a People, that under the pretence of Religion had the Liberty of Conſcience allow'd by the King for a time, till they were better informed; but this Man, and thoſe of his mind, are none of thoſe Men: but they endeavour not only to deſtroy the Monarch, but Monarchy itſelf; not only in England, but all the World over. This is the Principle that they are of, therefore I deſire the Jury to take notice, what may be their Duty upon that account. And that when the Priſoner was preaching that pernicious Sermon, he preſs'd it with the Peril of their Salvation, and now would affright you upon the account of innocent Blood: but you ſhall find, if his Blood be rightly and ſwiftly purſued, it may be a means of preventing the ſhedding of the Blood of thouſands, for the time to come. And withal did deſire them to conſider further, That the great Trouble this Nation had undergone for theſe twenty Years laſt paſt, ſprung from Pulpits, Conventicles, and ſeditious Preaching; and therefore if theſe Cauſes were taken away, it might prevent ſuch evil Effects for the future. And ſaid, That as to the Evidence he had produced, it had been well ſpoke to by the two Serjeants that ſpoke laſt: And as to that Evidence by the Women, he ſaid they had no reaſon to tell what was ſaid by John James, for thereby they would make themſelves guilty of Miſpriſion of Treaſon; which is to be puniſhed with perpetual Impriſonment, Confiſcation of Goods, and the Loſs of the Profits of Lands during Life.

That's well obſerved, ſaid my Lord to the Sollicitor.

Then Judge Forſter endeavoured further to inform the Jury, and to incenſe them againſt his Principle, telling them, that he was of the ſame Spirit with thoſe that did endeavour heretofore to put all the Nation in a flame, and to ſet every one againſt each other; and ſaid, No Treaſon was comparable to that Treaſon that was covered with a Pretence of Religion.

This being done, and the Jury ready to go forth, John James deſired the Court to favour him with one word to the Jury.

They told him he had had a great deal of liberty, and time to ſpeak; but now he ſhould ſpeak no more.

Then John James reply'd, That if they would not ſuffer him to ſpeak to his Jury, they had as good have hanged him at Bulſtake-Alley Gate, before he came there, and not brought him thither to cover over the Matter with the Pretence of Law.

This being ſpoken, the Judge gave him a ſore Rebuke, and told him he was not to be Judge in the Caſe.

Then my Lord and the Judges laid their heads and conferred together, whereupon my Lord ſaid thus to the Jury, or to this effect; You have heard the Evidence, you are to find the Matter of Fact as it is laid before you, whereof you are the proper Judges, and I pray God direct you.

Then the King's Counſel and the Jury departed from the Bar; and at the Return of the Jury, being about a quarter of an hour, the Attorney and Sollicitor-General came back into the Court with them.

Whereupon the Cryer called them all by name, and the Clerk asked them if they were all agreed, and they anſwered, Yes.

Then the Clerk of the Crown commanded the Priſoner to hold up his Hand, and asked the Jury, How ſay you, is John James, who hath been arraign'd and try'd, guilty of the Treaſon alledged in the Indictment, or not guilty?

And the Foreman, which was Charles Pitfield, ſaid, Guilty according to the Indictment.

Then the Attorney-General pray'd Judgment for the King. To that the Court anſwered, Never the ſame day he is arraigned, but appoint what day the Priſoner ſhall be brought, and it ſhall be granted. Then the Attorney and Sollicitor conferred together, and the Attorney ſaid, On Friday next. Till which time he was remanded to the King's-Bench Priſon in Southwark.

His

His Wife's Application to the King, after her Husband was cast.

In the interval betwixt his Casting and Condemnation, upon the fourth Day of the Week in the Evening, his Wife, by Advice of some Friends, endeavoured to make address to the King, to acquaint him with her Husband's Innocency, and the Condition of those loose Persons who had falsly accused him; which she put in writing, lest she might either want an Opportunity, or not have Courage enough to speak to him. And with some difficulty at last she met with the King as he came out of the Park, going into the Gallery; where she presented him with the Paper, which on the back-side was endorsed, The Humble Request of Elizabeth James: acquainting him also by word who she was, to whom he held up his finger, and said, Oh Mr. James, he is a sweet Gentleman! But following him for some further Answer, the Door was shut against her; which was all she could obtain at that time. The next Morning she came again to the same place, where she had not long been, but the King came out of the Gallery to go into the Park, whom she follow'd down the stairs, imploring his Answer to her Request, who then replied, That he was a Rogue, and should be hanged. One of the Lords attending him, asked her of whom she spake; whereunto the King answered, Of John James, that Rogue: he shall be hanged, yea he shall be hanged. And so she came away, satisfied in her Conscience, that what she had done was but her Duty.

What passed the Third Day of his Tryal, Novemb. 22.

BEING this day brought to the Bar, according to former Order, the Clerk proceeded according to their manner, and told the Court, that John James had been arraigned and try'd, &c. and had committed himself to God and the Country for Tryal, and by the Country was found guilty of the Crimes and Treasons alledged against him in the Indictment. And then it was demanded of John James, what he had to say for himself why Sentence of Death should not be passed upon him according to the Law? To which John James answered, That he had not much to say, only two or three Scriptures he would leave with them. The first Scripture was Jer. 26. 14, 15. As for me, do as seemeth good unto you; but know ye for certain, that if ye put me to death, you shall surely bring innocent Blood upon yourselves, and upon this City, and upon the Inhabitants thereof.

The second Scripture was Psal. 116. 15. Precious in the sight of the Lord is the Death of his Saints. He also minded that good Word of the Lord, He that toucheth the Lord's People, toucheth the Apple of his Eye. He told them he had not more to say for himself, only one word for the Lord, and so he had done: That Jesus Christ the Son of God was King of England, Scotland, and Ireland, and of all the Kingdoms of this World. Which being spoken, they silenced him, and the Court proceeded to Sentence, and the Judge pronounced Sentence according to the Law, and said thus:

'John James, thou hast been here indicted, arraigned, and tryed as a false Traytor to his Majesty, his Crown and Dignity, and hast put thy self upon the Tryal of God and the Country, and the Country have found thee guilty; and therefore, John James, thou art to be carried from hence to Prison, and from thence to the Place of Execution, and there to be hanged by the Neck, and being yet alive, to be cut down, and thy Bowels to be taken out, (a Fire being prepared) and to be burnt before thy face; and thy Head to be sever'd from thy Body, and thy Body to be quartered, and thy Head and Body to be disposed according to the King's Pleasure.'

This being done, John James had only time to say, Blessed be God; whom Man hath condemned, God hath justified.

The Tryal of Thomas Tonge, George Phillips, Francis Stubbs, James Hind, John Sellers, and Nathaniel Gibbs, at Justice-Hall in the Old-Bailey, London, Decemb. 11. 1662. 14 Car. II.

THE Commission of Oyer and Terminer being read, and Proclamation made, the Grand Jury were sworn: whose Names are,

Arthur Jourdan,
John Freestone,
Thomas Fawson,
Thomas Coney,
George Compere,
Isaac Rutter,
Chr. Rigby,
Rowland Steed,
William Standen,
John Worth,
John Rigby,
Leonard Staples.

And several Witnesses being called, there appeared William Hill, Edward Riggs, ... Tyler, ... Godolphin, ... Bonfoy, and several others; who being all sworn, were directed up to the Grand Jury.

After some hours Examination of the Witnesses, and Consultation, the Grand Jury returned the Indictment Billa Vera.

Clerk of the Peace. You good Men of the City of London, summoned to appear here this day, to inquire between our Sovereign Lord the King and the the Priſoners that are and ſhall be at the Bar, anſwer to your Names as you ſhall be called, every one at their firſt call, upon pain and peril that ſhall fall thereon. Good Men of the Ward of, &c.

Serjeant Glynne, Serjeant Maynard, his Majeſty's Serjeants at Law; Sir Jeoffry Palmer, Attorney-General; Sir Heneage Finch, his Majeſty's Sollicitor; Serjeant Keeling, his Majeſty's Serjeant; Sir Edward Turner; taking their Places in Court,

The Priſoners were commanded to be ſet to the Bar.

Clerk of the Peace. Thomas Tonge, hold up thy Hand; George Phillips, hold up thy Hand; Francis Stubbs, hold up thy Hand; James Hind, hold up thy Hand; John Sellers, hold up thy Hand; and Nathaniel Gibbs, hold up thy Hand.

Which they ſeverally doing, their Indictment was read, the Subſtance whereof is as followeth, viz.

'YOU the Priſoners that were laſt called to 'the Bar, ſtand indicted in London by the 'Names of Thomas Tonge late of London Diſtiller, 'George Phillips late of London Yeoman, Francis 'Stubbs late of London Cheeſemonger, James Hind 'late of London Gunner, John Sellers late of London 'Compaſs-maker, and Nathaniel Gibbs late of Lon'don Felt-maker; for that you ſix, together with 'divers others, particularly in the Indictment men'tioned, and others not yet taken, as falſe Tray'tors to the Illuſtrious, Serene, and moſt Excellent 'Prince, Charles the Second, by the Grace of God, 'of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, 'Defender of the Faith, &c. minding and with 'all their Force intending the Peace and Tranquil'lity of this Kingdom of England to diſturb, and 'our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King to Death and 'final Deſtruction to bring and put, the 31ſt Day 'of October in the fourteenth Year of the Reign of 'our ſaid Sovereign Lord King Charles the Second, 'traitorouſly did compaſs, imagine and intend the 'killing of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, and 'the antient Government of this Kingdom of 'England to change;' [as in the Indictment more particularly was mentioned.]

What ſayeſt thou, Thomas Tonge, art thou guilty of this High Treaſon in Manner and Form as thou ſtandeſt indicted, or not guilty?

Tonge. Not guilty.

Clerk. How wilt thou be try'd?

Tonge. By God and my Country.

Clerk. What ſayeſt thou, George Phillips, art thou guilty? &c.

Phillips. I am guilty in hearing and not diſcovering of it.

Clerk. Art thou guilty of this High Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt indicted?

Phillips. I am guilty, but not in Manner and Form as I ſtand indicted; I have heard the Words, as I formerly confeſſed to Sir Richard Brown: Not Guilty, as to the Manner and Form.

Clerk. How wilt thou be try'd?

Phillips. By God and my Country.

Clerk. How ſayeſt thou, Francis Stubbs, art thou guilty? &c.

Stubbs. Not guilty.

Clerk. How wilt thou be try'd?

Stubbs. By God and my Country.

Clerk. What ſayeſt thou, James Hind, art thou guilty? &c.

Hind kneeling down, and diſcovering much Penitency, anſwered, I am guilty, and humbly beg Mercy of his Majeſty.

Court. Record his Confeſſion.

Clerk. How ſayeſt thou, John Sellers, art thou guilty? &c.

Sellers. Not guilty.

Clerk. How wilt thou be try'd?

Sellers. By God and the Country.

Clerk. How ſayeſt thou, Nathaniel Gibbs, art thou guilty? &c.

Gibbs. Not guilty.

Clerk. How wilt thou be try'd?

Gibbs. By God and the Country.

Court. Carry up Hind to the Goal.

And the reſt ſtanding at the Bar, Silence was commanded.

Clerk. Thomas Tonge, George Phillips, Francis Stubbs, John Sellers, and Nathaniel Gibbs; you the Priſoners that were laſt called to the Bar, thoſe Men that you ſhall hear called are to paſs upon Tryal for your ſeveral Lives and Deaths: if you or any of you will challenge them or any of them, you muſt challenge them when they come to the Book to be ſworn, before they be ſworn.

Edmond Butler.

Tonge. I challenge him. [But afterwards admitted him.]

Clerk. Edmond Butler, Clement Punge, George Dixon, Samuel Paine, John Bagnal, John Gourney, William Gayler, Ralph Silverton, William Dudley, Joſeph Drake, John Peake and Robert Morrice, were ſeverally ſworn in this manner: Lay your Hand on the Book, look upon the Priſoner; You ſhall well and truly try, and true Deliverance make between our Sovereign Lord the King and the Priſoners at the Bar, whom you ſhall have in charge, according to your Evidence. So help you God.

Clerk. Count theſe, Cryer. Edmond Butler; Cryer, One. Clement Punge, Two, &c. Twelve good Men and true, ſtand together, and hear your Evidence.

Clerk. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. O Yes! If any one can inform my Lords the King's Juſtices, the King's Serjeants, or the King's Attorney, before this Inqueſt be taken, let them come forth, and they ſhall be heard; for now the Priſoners ſtand at the Bar upon their Deliverance: And all others that are bound by Recognizance to give Evidence againſt any of the Priſoners at the Bar, come forth and give Evidence, or elſe you forfeit your Recognizance. And all manner of Perſons that were ſummoned upon the Jury, and have not yet been ſworn, they are diſcharged, and may depart the Court.

Clerk. Tho. Tonge, hold up thy Hand: [and ſo to the reſt of them at the Bar.] You of the Jury, look upon the Priſoners, and hearken to their Cauſe; you ſhall underſtand that they ſtand indicted in London by the Names of Tho. Tonge, late of, &c. [and ſo as in the Indictment afore-mentioned] who together with James Hind, who ſtands convicted by his own Confeſſion, and the reſt alſo aforementioned: [and ſo reads the Indictment again.]

Upon which Indictment they have been arraigned, and thereunto have ſeverally pleaded, Not guilty; and for their Tryal have put themſelves upon God and the Country, which Country you are: Your Charge is to inquire whether they be guilty of the High Treaſon in Manner and Form as they ſtand indicted, or not guilty; if you find that they, or any of them are guilty, you ſhall inquire what Goods and Chattels, Lands and Tenements, they or any of them had at the time of committing the ſaid Treaſons, or at any time ſithence; if you find that they are not guilty, you ſhall inquire whether they or any of them did flee for it; if you find that they fled for it, you ſhall enquire of their Goods and Chattels, &c. as if you had found them guilty; if you find that they are not guilty, nor that they did flee, ſay ſo, and no more, and hear your Evidence.

Sir Edward Turner. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, and you Gentlemen that are ſworn of this Jury, the five Priſoners at the Bar, by the name of T. Tonge, G. Phillips, F. Stubbs, J. Sellers, and N. Gibbs, do ſtand indicted, for that they as falſe Traytors, together with ſeveral other Perſons mentioned in the Indictment, the 31ſt of October laſt, did, in the Pariſh of St. Michael's in the Ward of Cornhill, London, aſſemble and meet together, conſult, contrive, and deſign to levy War againſt the King, to ſubvert and change the Government as it is now eſtabliſhed, to depoſe and kill the King: And in order to effect this, they did likewiſe then and there agree and deſign to ſeize and take in their hands the King's Royal Palace called Whitehall, where the King reſides. For this they have been indicted, arraigned, and all theſe five have ſeverally pleaded Not guilty: if we prove them guilty, you muſt find them ſo.

Serjeant Maynard. Gentlemen of the Jury, you have heard the Indictment read, you have heard the Subſtance of it opened, it is ſhort in words, but of as high conſequence as any thing can be. I ſhall open the Particulars of that Evidence, that we conceive will be made good by the Oaths of Witneſſes to be produced to you. You ſee here what the Indictment is: I ſhall inſiſt upon theſe Particulars, which I ſhall open and make good to you; Firſt, What was their Deſign; Next, What was their Means of Accompliſhment, what Encouragements they uſed one to another, and what Colours they put upon this wicked Action. For the firſt, Gentlemen, I ſhall begin at the higheſt, higher no Man can go in this World, that is, to deſign and compaſs, to contrive to put the King himſelf to death, to ſeize his Perſon; ſome of them called it ſecuring, you know the Engliſh of that, a King ſecured. We will go further, for we ſhall prove to you the Perſon that with his own wicked Hand undertook the Slaughter and Murder of the King; he did contrive how he might do it, ſometimes when the King was performing an Office of Piety to viſit his Mother, other times when he ſhould recreate himſelf by Hunting: higher than this they could not go, and this they coloured over with Religion. This merciful King that had pardoned his People beyond their own Deſires, and contended to do it; this King they would murder. Had there been no more, it had been exceeding heinous; but they went further, their Malice reſted not upon his Perſon, but the Family, the Noble and Excellent Duke of York is deſign'd to be ſecured likewiſe, and uſed like his Brother: not they only, they went further, the whole Nobility was in deſign; not (Gentlemen) that every one of theſe before you uſed theſe Expreſſions, but they and their Complices, ſome one and ſome another Expreſſion: but all joined in this, to deſtroy the King and his Family, Root and Branch, that was their Expreſſion. King, his Family, Nobility, nay, go down to the Gentry, and it ceaſed not there, they go to the Clergy, as one of the Priſoners at the Bar (as you will hear) did expreſs himſelf, I think it was Stubbs, That there ſhould be never a Lawn-Sleeve, never a Surſingler ſhould have a hole to hide his head in.

Stubbs. I never opened my mouth to that purpoſe.

Serj. Maynard. That will be left to Proof: I undertake not of myſelf to prove this, but to open it, let the Witneſſes ſpeak. In diſcourſe ſome went further than that, whoſoever would not join with them in their Deſign (it was one Strange) was an Enemy; and thereupon one Cole, who is gone, deſerted them, though he was contented to have the King murdered, the Nation ruined, yet would not agree in that Principle. To accompliſh this, we ſhall prove to you they did treat of levying a War, that among themſelves it was given out that Arms were provided, ſome delivered; and their Deſigns to raiſe Money, ſeizing all the Treaſury at Whitehall, Worceſter-Houſe, and the Chamber of London; to ſeize the Perſon of the noble Duke of Albemarle, and all about him, and Quarter to be given to none, that was their Expreſſion. They did give out among themſelves, (for a while there was ſome difference among theſe Foxes, whoſe Tails were tyed together, and had fire in them) and Tonge told them (as we ſhall prove) that all Parties were now agreed, and would join: they had framed Declarations to juſtify their Proceedings, framed Papers to raiſe a Mutiny among the Mariners, and encouraged them to join with them, this will be proved. For their Means, Phillips at the Bar undertakes to procure the Word that the Guard in the City had, ſo to betray them. There was a Deſign made for ſeizing the Tower, ſeveral Men appointed for that purpoſe, they and their Complices were to come there with Papers in their hands, as if they were Mariners and had Accompts to make up, theſe were to go up to thoſe that ſat there to finiſh Accompts. To encourage themſelves, they gave out that they had dealt with the Soldiers at Windſor, and ſecured that Caſtle; if this be proved to you, there can nothing be higher. There was this one Pretence, it was given out (and perchance the Rumours of the City are come to your ears) that they had deſigned a Day for the Execution of this Miſchief; ſeveral Days were appointed, one on the Lord Mayor's Day, another on Alhallows Eve. They gave out by a feigned Letter, that there would be a Maſſacre by the French and Papiſts, of the Proteſtants; this was to raiſe a Fear and Diſcontent among the Nation, to induce them to join when this Deſign ſhould be attempted. Gentlemen of the Jury, had they gone on in this wicked Purpoſe, having poſſeſſed the People with theſe Fears, who could have told how to behave himſelf? And it ſeems ſtrange and wonderful, eſpecially looking upon the Perſons, Men of little Conſideration, deſpicable Men, and who live under the Mercies of ſo good a Sovereign, that they ſhould take ſuch a Deſign in their Hearts, and undertake the Performance. Though the Spear hath not entred into the Sides of our Sovereign, yet it muſt needs crown his Head with abundance of Thorns, that ſuch People ſhould be deſperately wicked. But we ſhall call our Witneſſes, and when you have heard this proved, we cannot be ſo uncharitable to think you ſhall need any further Aggravation, or doubt of your giving a Verdict againſt ſuch Miſcreants as theſe are.

Sir Jeoffry Palmer, Attorney-General. Theſe few Priſoners at the Bar were not all in this Contrivance, tho we have not all their Names; but in the Evidence you will hear, there was a Council of Forty, and then of Six, but none diſcovered. Theſe Six acted and infuſed into theſe and divers others what they intended, and then broke up, and gave gave out all was ready, and would be done on ſuch a day. We ſhall not trouble the Jury with giving Evidence particularly againſt theſe Men, they are joined and knit together in one Cauſe. But hear the Evidence.

William Hill, Edward Riggs, and one Bradley were ſworn.

Counſel. Mr. Hill, ſpeak your Knowledge in this Buſineſs, to my Lords and the Jury.

Mr. Hill. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, about the middle of October laſt I met John Baker, one that is now indicted, he was a Captain formerly called; I met him in Cheapſide: he meeting me (after a Salutation) invites me to drink with him; I went into a Houſe with him. When I was with him, he began to ask me what News there was in the Country; I told him I had little to inform him. He told me, if I would ſtay a while he would tell me ſome. I asked him of what nature. Says he, Not long ago the King went a hunting, ſent ſome Stags to Sir John Robinſon, now the Lord Mayor, and went but with a ſmall Guard, and I could have been one of the twenty that would have ſlain that Outlandiſh Dog. Then ſaid I, Mr. Baker, that's nothing to me; but what other News have you? Says he, I know thou art right, and I know your Father; there is ſomething on foot in the City, and if you will meet to-morrow, I will bring ſome Perſons to you that will give you Information. Sir, ſaid I, underſtanding it of dangerous conſequence, and willing to get it out, I will meet you: and we agreed to meet the next morning. That Morning three Perſons came early to my Quarters, Hill the Clothdrawer, Mr. Bradley, and this Mr. Riggs; he appointed them to meet him there, but failing himſelf, they being Strangers ſaid nothing to me then, and ſo I departed, and left them a drinking. The morrow after, he himſelf came to my Lodgings, fetches me out of my Bed, and tells me he had appointed ſome Perſons on the Exchange to give me an account. I went with him thither, and there we met with ſome Perſons that were his Acquaintance; and from thence we went to the Ship in Leadenhall-ſtreet; and among us was Hind, that confeſſed himſelf guilty: and there the Buſineſs was fully diſcourſed of, what their Intention was, that all Intereſts were agreed, Fifth-Monarchy-Men, Anabaptiſts, Independents, and Fighting Quakers; and the Congregational Churches were conſenting, and were reſolved to endeavour their Deliverance from Adverſaries at Whitehall: many Paſſages more. On the morrow after we met again, and there met with us Hind, and Brown, and Baker. There we were acquainted of their Magazine and Arms provided, and about their Correſpondence in the ſeveral Counties, that they were ſure of Windſor-Caſtle, that the head Gunner and Serjeant there were privy. We had Information concerning this Tonge, as an active Perſon in this Deſign; I ſtudied to know this Tonge, and I was brought to him at his Houſe; and there I met one Ward, Stubbs, and Hind, and ſome others, and there we had diſcourſe concerning the Buſineſs. Tonge told us ſomething of the Buſineſs of Windſor-Caſtle, and propoſed ſomething in reference to the taking the Tower, what Arms and Men they had for this Deſign. We met many times at the Ship, that Gibbs we met at Bridewell-Dock, and there was Stubbs and one Beazley with me; there we waited for a Brother of this Gibbs's, to give us Intelligence when the Day of the Inſurrection would be: we waited not long, but in came his Brother and two Perſons more, one Thomas a Bridler or Bit-maker in Shoe-Lane, and another Perſon in a handſom Garb came along with him. His Brother was ſomewhat ſhy (becauſe I was a Stranger) to ſpeak any thing, but calls for this Gibbs and Stubbs, and had ſome private diſcourſe with them, and away departed: After they were gone, we deſired to know the Intelligence; they told us that the Council of Six was broken up, all Buſineſs was ſettled, Ludlow was Commander in chief, and Alhallows-Eve was the time, that Horſe and Arms were provided. For Phillips: That day that the Meetings were intercepted, that the Trained-Bands did ſurprize them, that day this Gentleman and I (pointing to Riggs) came to the Main-Guard at the Exchange; where Serjeant Phillips was with a Buff Coat and a Halbert: and this Gentleman (meaning Riggs) ſaluted him, and thanked him for his Service in ſending down notice to the Meeting to be gone, for he was coming with the Trained-Bands to ſurprize them. He asked him, what was the occaſion of the Buſtle: ſays he, they ſay——

Sir Robert Forſter, Chief Juſtice. Who is that he?

Hill. That Phillips ſaid, They ſay they were up in the Weſt, and if they were not, I would they were, and here too, for a few would do the work. Upon the Monday after, we met him near the Exchange; and ſo likewiſe Riggs thanked him for his Service, and then he (Phillips) promiſed his further Service when the time of the Inſurrection would be.

For Sellers, I was by Agreement to have thirty Arms delivered me, and I was very preſſing to have the Arms out of the Magazine. Sellers met with this Gentleman (Riggs) and he urging Sellers about the Arms, Sellers told him that they were all delivered out the Night before, about five or ſix hundred; and that forty of their Friends went away without Arms, but that within two or three days there would be more laid in.

Sir Heneage Finch, Sollicitor-General. Mr. Hill, I will ask you one Queſtion, (with my Lord's favour;) as you have given a general Account, I will keep you to one particular Perſon, Tonge: Did Tonge, in any diſcourſe with you, tell you of one Strange that was gone into the Country?

Hill. One night he told us he had ſpoke with Strange; that he was gone into the Country, and would come back the morrow, and then we ſhould have more Intelligence.

Sir Heneage Finch. What concerning the Tower and Windſor-Caſtle?

Hill. He talked of the good Service that he had done in being at Windſor-Caſtle, with the Serjeant and Gunner, for the ſecuring of that Caſtle; that near five hundred of their Friends were in and about Windſor, ready to aſſiſt for ſurprizing that Caſtle.

Court. Who told you this?

Hill. Tonge told me himſelf, That he was inſtrumental in it.

Finch. Did he tell you any thing of the Tower?

Hill. Only he ſaid, it was fit ſome care ſhould be taken to ſurprize the Tower at the time.

Finch. Any thing of Alhallows-Eve?

Hill. He did not fix the very inſtant time, but ſaid, he look'd for Intelligence from Strange.

Sir Jeoffry Palmer. What Day of the Month was that?

Hill. I cannot remember the very day.

Serj. Maynard. What did he ſay concerning Declarations?

Hill. The Declaration was read, Stubbs acquainted us, againſt Popery, and Monopolies, for Liberty of Conſcience, and a Free Commonwealth.

Finch. Any thing of the Popiſh Maſſacre?

Hill. Yes, I had this Paper of them, a Copy of a Letter.

Sir R. Forſter. How many Copies of that Letter were to be diſperſed in the City?

Hill. About five thouſand.

Sir Jeoffry Palmer. Theſe things were to be diſperſed, to poſſeſs the People that the Papiſts about that time would maſſacre the Proteſtants, that ſo they might draw all againſt that Party to join with them; a brave Colour, when in truth there was no ſuch thing, but only to carry on their Deſign of killing the King, and altering the Government.

The Letter was read by the Clerk, and follows in his verbis.

SIR,

'OUT of the Reſpect which I bear to you in particular, and to the Proteſtant Party in general, I give you notice of this Paſſage: About a fortnight ſince, a Woman, which you muſt be ignorant where, who had it from a Correſpondent of the Papiſts, that they intend to make uſe of their Army (which all the World ſees they have provided) againſt Alhallows-Eve next; it was thought good therefore, in as prudent way as may be, to give notice to our Friends in remote Parts, that they may do what Piety to God, Loyalty to their Prince, Love to their Country, and Self-preſervation ſhould direct them. Sir, I call the Eternal God to witneſs, that this is not to trepan, to put a trick upon you, but a ſober Truth; and alſo communicated to a Juſtice of the Peace, and by him to the Privy-Council: And what the Iſſue of it is, I have not heard; I hope you will inquire, and tell us.

'From Yexford in Suffolk,
'Octob. 31. 1662.'

Serj. Keeling. Do you (Mr. Hill) remember any Diſcourſe of the Way of taking Whitehall? Name who were there, and who ſpoke.

Hill. There was Hind, and one Captain Browne a Shoe-maker in the Strand, and ſome other Perſons.

Counſel. Was Stubbs there?

Hill. Not at this Diſcourſe: but we talked of taking Whitehall at Stubbs's Houſe, when a Sea-Captain was there, that was to go to Surinam, and Stubbs invited him to ſtay at home to aſſiſt them; who was to come down with a Party by Charing-Croſs, and another Party to come up by the Cock-Pit, and to kill my Lord Duke of Albemarle, and to ſlay Sir Richard Brown in the City, and the Party in the City to keep a Drum beating, &c. And Tonge ſaid, That their main Care muſt be to keep down Sir Richard Brown, and the Trained-Bands, or elſe they ſhould never be able to ſtand.

Counſel. What concerning the Privy-Garden Way?

Hill. They diſcourſed concerning the getting down the Door and the Wall, and ſo get the ſooner to Whitehall.

Counſel. What was Stubbs's Opinion at that Communication?

Hill. His was at Blackfryars, the laſt Tueſday Night before they were taken, this Stubbs, Thomas, and Gibbs.

Court. Which Gibbs?

Hill. This black Gibbs at the Bar: They diſcourſed that they would be ſure to make an end of Kings, Princes, and Dukes, that they might have a Free State, and troubled no more with any ſuch kind of Perſons, neither Lawn-Sleeves, nor Surſinglers.

Counſel. Do you remember that Stubbs propoſed any other Way to Whitehall?

Hill. No, Sir.

Maynard. Did they ſay what Number was provided, Ten, or Twenty Thouſand?

Hill. Stubbs aſſured us, that there was a great Party in Eaſt-Smithfield right for the Work, and had their Arms.

Counſel. What Employment had Sellers about delivering the Arms?

Hill. He ſaid, the Arms were delivered out at Crutchedfryars, about ſix hundred; and that forty of their Friends went away laſt night for lack of Arms; that within two or three days there would be more.

Counſel. Did he name a Magazine?

Hill. Yes, the Magazine in Crutchedfryars.

Counſel. Did you know any thing touching the Diſcovery of the Word, and by whom?

Hill. No, Sir: But I underſtood that Tonge was aſſured by Phillips, that Phillips would get him the Word that very Night that they intended the Inſurrection.

Counſel. What was propounded, if they had taken the King, what would they do?

Hill. He ſhould have the ſame Quarter as Ludlow was to have.

Court. Who ſaid that?

Hill. Stubbs, and Gibbs, and Tonge.

Counſel. That's three of the Priſoners at the Bar: Lord have mercy upon us!

Court. Were you not acquainted of a Council of Six?

Hill. Yes, they named ſome at a venture, but they belived ſome of them were of the Six: That they met not twice in a place, ſometimes here, and ſometimes in another place.

Counſel. Who did they name?

Hill. Colonel Danvers, Phillips, Nye the Miniſter, Lockyer, and one Cole of Southampton, that theſe five were part of the ſix.

Counſel. What Diſcourſe touching the Diſtance of Place where they engaged any?

Hill. Forty miles about the Town.

Counſel. Did Tonge tell you that Strange had lodg'd any Horſe?

Hill. He ſaid, he had taken out the Horſe that were provided for a time; but Gibbs and Stubbs at Blackfryars aſſured us of the Horſe coming into the Town the night before.

Counſel. Did Tonge tell you of any Back, Breaſts, Blunderbuſſes?

Hill. Not he, Sir. It was talked of that night at the Blackfryars.

Counſel. What did you hear concerning ſending into Dorſetſhire, to ſpread Rumours there?

Hill. That they had four hundred of their Friends there, that they were ſure of, and ſeveral Caſes of Piſtols were ſent down by the Carrier.

Court. Who ſaid that?

Hill. I know not what particular Perſon, but at that Meeting, and in that Company.

Counſel. Who was preſent?

Hill. Gibbs and Stubbs.

Counſel. None of the reſt? Was Tonge or Phillips there?

Hill.

Hill. No, Sir.

Counſel. Did you hear of any other Country, either Kent, or Worceſterſhire, or Derby, or Leiceſterſhire?

Hill. Tonge informed us of the Faithfulneſs of Col. Kendrick in Kent, to bring him ſome Arms.

Court. If the Priſoners will ask him any Queſtions, they may.

Sellers. Friends, all that are here preſent, I did ever abhor ſuch an Action. Ask him whether he did hear me ſpeak thoſe words, that I ſhould ſay, That there was Arms delivered out, and that forty went away lacking, and in one or two days there would be more: which words I never did ſpeak in my life, or any ſuch thing, only what I heard from Wapſhot, as Wapſhot declared to my Lord Mayor he told me, to whom I appeal. It's true, meeting with that Wapſhot, ſays he, We hear there will be a Riſing, and there are ſome Arms delivered out. Said I, I would adviſe you to have a care of ſuch a Buſineſs.

Sir Orl. Bridgman. I would not interrupt you, you will be admitted to make your Defence afterwards; but if you will, ask him any Queſtion.

Sellers. My Lord, I ſhall come to that: Wapſhot told me there were Arms delivered, but further told me, he knew not of the Certainty of theſe things; that at night he ſhould go to a Houſe where he ſhould know. I bid him have a care. At night, as I was paſſing along, I met Riggs at Stubbs's Door; he asked me, What News at London? I ſaid, I was told there would be a Riſing, and that Arms were delivered. Is there, ſays he? Said I, I do not believe it, but I ſhall know certainly to-morrow. I did call the next morning, and asked, Is the Story true? No, ſays he, I was there, and there was no Arms; that was all that I know of the Buſineſs. Friend, did I tell you any ſuch thing?

Counſel. Tell him, and upon what occaſion.

Hill. Upon occaſion of Riggs's asking him for thirty Arms for me, (this upon the Exchange) Sellers took him a little aſide, and told him, They were all delivered out, that forty went away lacking, that more would be there within two or three days.

Sellers. That which I ſaid to Riggs, was the Meſſage I received from Wapſhot; but that I inquired, and there was no Arms there; ſo that it was but a Fallacy: for I adviſed him not to meddle with any ſuch thing. Mr. Hill never ſaw my face, till I was apprehended upon the Exchange, and brought before Sir Richard Brown.

Hill. I ſaw him upon the Exchange with this Man, (Riggs.)

Counſel. Did he ſay that any Arms were deliver'd before, and what number?

Hill. About five or ſix hundred.

Sellers. He never heard me ſpeak a word.

Counſel. How long before he was apprehended?

Hill. Never but that time with Riggs upon the Exchange, about nine days before his Apprehenſion; and he confeſſed upon his Examination, That he did ſee me with Riggs.

Court. Have you, or any other the Priſoners, any Queſtions more?

Sellers. I have more: Whether he will poſitively affirm that he ſpake with me upon the Exchange?

Hill. No, Sir, you anſwered the Queſtion to Riggs.

Counſel. You heard the Anſwer?

Hill. Yes, Sir.

Sellers. May be at the ſecond hand.

Counſel. Did you hear the Priſoner anſwer it, or had you it at the ſecond hand?

Hill. I heard it from Sellers himſelf, anſwering Riggs.

Sellers. Did you hear me?

Hill. Yes, to Mr. Riggs.

Sir Hen. Finch. He ſwears it, and you wonder at it, and ſo we do all.

Sellers. Who was there then?

Hill. It was upon the Exchange, when almoſt full.

Sellers. What Day of the Month?

Hill. I cannot remember the Day.

Sellers. I do declare before this Honourable Bench, Gentlemen of the Jury, and this great Auditory, That I never ſaw this Man's face till I was apprehended. That which I told Mr. Riggs, was what I heard Wapſhot ſay. I never till then ſaw this Man's face, nor exchanged one word with him; whereas he ſays, he heard me. I do not believe Mr. Riggs ſaw him near me, when I gave him the Anſwer.

Hill. Seeing he doth invalidate my Teſtimony, Mr. Adjutant Carent took him upon the Exchange, I ſhew'd him the Perſon; and therefore certainly I muſt ſee him before.

Sellers. It was not he, but the other in the white Clothes, that came and took me, that knew me.

Court. Will any of the reſt ask him any Queſtion?

Sellers. Here is that that I am accuſed of, That I delivered Arms, which is altogether falſe: my Lord Mayor can bear witneſs, Wapſhot confeſſed he told me ſuch a thing. I did ever abhor any ſuch thing; I was always ſerviceable to his Majeſty upon all occaſions, and all times: my Neighbours can witneſs my civil Converſation.

Court. Have you any thing more to ask him?

Sellers. I would fain know, whether the Bench and Jury are ſatisfied with this Evidence.

Court. That you will hear anon: What elſe will you ask him?

Stubbs. What he accuſes me, you have all heard: I do in the preſence of God, and this Honourable Bench, and the Jury, deny it; for it is very falſe, and believe none will verify the ſame upon Oath.

Court. Have you any Queſtions?

Gibbs. We all ſtand in the preſence of God; and I am very conſcientious of what I ſay and do; I muſt give account of all things before the Lord. This Gentleman, Mr. Hill, has aſſerted concerning me, That I ſhould deliver divers Caſes of Piſtols, as knowing the Delivery of them: if Mr. Hill, who ſtands likewiſe in the preſence of God, can produce any Man to prove, that I delivered to any Man any Piſtols, or that any were ſo delivered by my Order, or that I convey'd or ſent them away into the Country; do this in the ſight of the Lord and his own Conſcience, I expect not Mercy. But I would have him ſpeak no more of me, but what he knows of me, or by me; whether he knows I ever received any Piſtols, or delivered any at any time, for ſuch an End as he is pleaſed to ſpeak: which my Soul abhors, and God can witneſs.

Stubbs. This Mr. Hill was the Man that mentioned this, and that he had four Horſes and Arms himſelf, and had two hundred Pound in order to it. I was never any Plotter, nor contrived any thing, but am as innocent as the Child unborn; but being by an accident at Tonge's Houſe, a Strong-water-Man: Ask the other Witneſſes, whether he ſpeaks Truth——

Sir

Sir Orl. Bridgman. I would have put you in a right Way: You ſhall be all heard at large, when you make your Defence. But will you ask him any Queſtions?

Gibbs. I propounded one; I deſire an Anſwer: Whether I received or delivered any Piſtols to ſuch a Uſe?

Hill. I did not ſay he did: But at that Meeting at Black-Fryars it was diſcourſed among them, That ſeveral Arms were ſent to Dorſetſhire, to ſeveral Friends there; and he was there then: I believe he cannot deny it.

Stubbs. There was Arms ſpoken of; but that [illegible] (Mr. Hill) ſpoke of them, and upon this Conſideration, That there were Arms delivered to every Hall, Ammunition and Powder. Riggs knows he ſpoke it at that time.

Hill. Sir, that was ſpoken after the Queſtion was put, What was the occaſion of ſending the Powder and Ammunition to the Halls? Theſe Arms were ſpoken of in reference to the Deſign. I do acknowledge I told them I had ſome Arms my ſelf; and ſaid, I had two hundred Pound for carrying it on. And I know the grounds of my ſpeaking; and ſo do ſome of this Honourable Bench.

Stubbs. Hill adviſed, That they fall upon Sir Richard Brown as an Enemy to all honeſt Men.

Gibbs. This Hill ſays that I ſhould ſay theſe Things; there were more there, and had Ears as well as he, let them ſpeak.

Hill. There was Riggs, Stubbs, my ſelf, and I know not the other Names.

Gibbs. This Hill and Mr. Riggs, whoſe Face I never ſaw, came to my Neighbour's Houſe, where I was alone, found me plotting with no Man.

Hill. We were brought into his Company by one Beazly: He had been at Tower-Hill, about Two or Three a-clock, to give ſome Intelligence to ſome Perſons there about the Deſign. Riggs and I took a Coach, and went after him; and Stubbs told us we might meet him at a Baker's Houſe near the Tower. We found Beazley, and he ſaid he could not ſignify any thing to us, but would carry us to Black-Fryars, to one Gibbs: And there he brought us to this very Man. Firſt enquiring at a Houſe for him, Beazley was told he was at a Tavern at Bridewell-Stairs: We went there, and found him. He told us he could tell us little himſelf, till his Brother came; and accordingly he preſently after came. That was the occaſion that I came into his Company.

Gibbs. He ſays that I ſpoke of Piſtols delivered, and a Number; but how many he knows not: And that I ſhould talk of the Death of the King; which is as falſe as God is true. Again, I knew not of his coming, never appointed him, never was privy to any ſuch Plot; I abhor it in my Soul. I never engaged in any ſuch Deſign with any Man at any time ——

Court. You do your ſelf much wrong, and take away that Time which you may happily ſpend better.

Stubbs. I deſire to know of Mr. Hill who was preſent at that Meeting that I ſhould ſay, The King ſhould have ſuch Quarter as Ludlow.

Hill. It was ſpoken at that Meeting at Black-Fryars: After his Brother and the other Perſons were gone, it was there ſpoken, That the Council was broke up, and all ready; Alhallows-Eve the Time, and then the ſame Quarter to be given as Ludlow ſhould have, if taken.

Stubbs. You do not anſwer the Queſtion: Who was there beſides your ſelf?

Hill. There was Riggs, and that Gibbs there.

Stubbs. You have only his Evidence.

Tonge. Who was in Company when I talked of 300 Men at Windſor?

Hill. It was at your own Houſe; and there was Ward, Stubbs, Riggs, Hind, and my ſelf.

Phillips. Whether did he ever ſee my Face at any Meeting?

Hill. I never ſaw you before that Time in Cornhill.

Phillips. Upon what account did I ſpeak to Riggs then?

Hill. When you came off the Exchange, you told him you could not ſtay, your Captain was coming. Riggs thanked you for your Favour, in ſending Word to the Meeting to be gone to a certain Quaker.

Phillips. I never ſent to any Quaker to that purpoſe. I did not ſee this Man upon the Sabbath-day: But Riggs came down to me, and thought I had ſent notice to Anchor-Alley; but I did not.

Sellers. He affirmed that there was ſeveral Meettings of forty, and then of ſix; ask Mr. Hill whether I was in either of thoſe Numbers at any time.

Counſel. He did not charge you with any ſuch Thing, of being in that Number: He asks a Queſtion about Things not laid to his Charge. Let Mr. Riggs ſpeak.

Edward Riggs. About three and twenty Weeks ſince I became acquainted with Mr. Tonge, upon this occaſion: Captain Baker did ſay that he was a Man of Intelligence, but Mr. Tonge did not care for him; and told me that I might be acquainted with him. A while after I came acquainted with him accidentally, when I came to his Houſe.

Court. Whoſe Houſe?

Riggs. Tonge's Houſe. Mr. Stubbs was there. He ſaid, That he had been at Windſor, ſpoken with the Gunner and Serjeant; and that they promiſed it ſhould be ready upon ſome certain notice given. That Night he had received a Letter of ſome Buſineſs concerning a Suit of Law, he ſaid; in which there was a myſtical Meaning, which he did not tell me of. But this he ſaid, That he had made ſure of Windſor by the Gunner and Serjeant's Promiſes. This is that I know of him.

Counſel. Is this all of Tonge?

Riggs. This likewiſe he has told me, That he had ſometimes met with a certain Company; he did not ſay thirty or forty, but a pretty many there was. He named Mr. Cole, Captain Elton, Captain Leigh, that they had often met, but could not well agree. But at laſt Mr. Strange did meet with them, give them one Meeting; they could not agree neither. They went away, and ſaid theſe Words, to the beſt of my Remembrance; Mr. Strange did refuſe to join with them; but when God did bid him go, he would go, whether this Day, or next Week, or next Year, matters not; but when God bids him go, he would go. Mr. Cole was ſomewhat troubled to hear it: But ſays Mr. Cole, If you will go, give me but notice, if I cannot go ſo faſt as you ride, I will hold by your Horſe-tail. A little while after he told me, They had not met again; that Mr. Cole, becauſe they could not agree about this Buſineſs, was gone beyond-Sea; but before he was gone, he did tell me of ſome Conſiderations that were drawn, as he judged, about a Government by Maſter Cole; and gave me in a Paper ſome certain Propoſitions, three or four concerning Seamen: The Subſtance was this, What great Benefits they had by a Commonwealth.

Court. Who gave you them?

Riggs. Tonge: But it came from Mr. Cole, as he ſaid. In general, they were to declare againſt the Miſgovernment of Church and State: In particular, to Seamen; what great Advantages there would be to them. And three or four Things propounded in order to them: 1. That no Seamen ſhould pay Cuſtom for any Commodity that he did bring under the Value of ten Pounds; upwards they muſt. And likewiſe there ſhould be Care taken upon our own Coaſts, and beyond-Sea, that where any of our Engliſh Ships ſhould be caſt away, there ſhould be Care taken out of the Cuſtoms that might keep them, in their travelling homewards, either from begging or ſtarving. But Mr. Cole, when they met, as Tonge ſaid, would not agree; and therefore went beyond-Sea. After he was gone, within a Week or a Fortnight they had another Meeting.

Court. They: Which they? Name them.

Riggs. I did not hear him name many, unleſs Leigh and Captain Elton; I remember no more. And there, he ſaid, they had under Conſideration the Government of a Commonwealth; and ſo to declare againſt the Miſgovernment of the Church and State; and that there was to be a Meeting at London-Wall in a litte time after; and he was there. He afterwards told me he miſſed that Meeting; but had Intelligence brought him, That that Time that he miſſed, thirty or forty, I know not the certain Number, had referred it to ſix Men: They called it, The Council of Six; but the Names of them I never heard from him; and indeed, he ſaid he knew them not, by reaſon of his Abſence from that Meeting. But what I gathered from him was this, That he judged Captain Elton was one of them.

Counſel. He told you there was a Council of Six?

Riggs. Yes; That he heard there was, but knew them not.

Sir Heneage Finch. To make Things ſhort: Were you ever at any Meeting where there was a Diſcourſe touching ſurprizing the King, altering the Government? And who was there, upon your Oath?

Riggs. That Friday immediately before we were taken, I think October 24. there was ſome Diſcourſe in general concerning Whitehall; what might be done as to the procuring of that, and likewiſe concerning the Tower.

Counſel. Who was preſent that Friday?

Riggs. My ſelf, Hill, Tonge, Stubbs, Ward, Hind, and John Baker: And then, to the beſt of my Knowledge, there was this Diſcourſe in general. Concerning the taking of the Tower, there was ſome Propoſitions on all hands concerning the taking of that. Mr. Hind, he only mention'd, but did not ſay he would undertake it, the righting of Gunners Accompts. Mr. Tonge, he ſaid that the Way that he thought convenient might be this; When Sir John Robinſon now Lord Mayor, did late in the Evening go into the Tower, there ſhould be a Party following his Coach in, and ſo might do it. And John Baker, at that preſent Inſtant of Time did ſay, That it was neceſſary the King ſhould be ſurprized: And likewiſe ſaid then, That there ſhould be no Quarter; he would give nor take none.

Counſel. Who was preſent?

Riggs. Mr. Hill, my ſelf, Bradley, Hind, Captain Brown, and Baker, and another Hill, the Drawer, I think.

Counſel. Was not Tonge and Stubbs there then at that Time?

Riggs. Yes; they were there.

Sir Heneage Finch. I ask you this; I do not deſire large Stories, but firm and cloſe Anſwers: Were you preſent at any Meeting when the ſecuring the King, Tower, or Whitehall, was diſcourſed of, or no?

Riggs. Sir, that Friday, October 24. immediately before we were taken there was this Diſcourſe: Tonge did propound ſuch a Way for ſurprizing the Tower, by following Sir John Robinſon's Coach in at Night; and Baker did ſay, That it was neceſſary to undertake the ſecuring of the King's Perſon, and aſſaulting Whitehall; and that if there were five hundred Horſe and Foot, they would undertake it, by going into the Privy-Garden, and Back-ſtairs.

Counſel. Were you preſent when Stubbs did adviſe the aſſaulting of Whitehall by the Privy-Garden?

Riggs. No: But Baker did ſay he would undertake it.

Counſel. Who was preſent?

Riggs. Mr. Hill, Bradley, Stubbs, and Hind, was there: But that Stubbs undertook it, I cannot ſay; but he was there.

Sir Heneage Finch. Did Tonge ever tell you any thing of Phillips, or that he had Hopes of the Word?

Riggs. I came acquainted with Phillips preſently after I was acquainted with Mr. Tonge. Phillips once met me, and I carried him to Tonge's; and then Phillips freely ſaid, That there was three hundred Arms at the Artillery-Garden; he being one of the Artillery, knew where they lay, and could tell them how they might come by thoſe Arms. And that for the Word, it was neceſſary to be got. And if in caſe that it ſo fell out, that the White Regiment was then out, or he then in Office, he would endeavour to procure it. But afterward, meeting him ſeveral times, he declared he would not meddle any more with it.

Sir Heneage Finch. Were you upon the Exchange with Sellers when there was a Diſcourſe about delivering out of Arms? And what did Sellers ſay?

Riggs. Mr. Hill ſaying that he had two hundred Pound to buy Horſes, and that he had four already, and wanted Swords, and had Friends in Town wanted Arms, asked me if I knew if any were given out. I told him, that one Mr. Sellers told me, That he had heard ſome Arms were given, and to be given out that Day. Upon the Exchange, Mr. Hill, and Bradley, and I being together, Mr. Hill ſaid, Ay, there is the Perſon that told me of the Arms: I will go and ask him if there be any ſuch thing. Whether Mr. Hill heard the Diſcourſe, I cannot tell; but he ſaid, ſays he, I have enquired, and ſome Arms are delivered, and forty went without; but within two or three Days there would be more.

Sir Heneage Finch. Did Hill ſee Sellers upon the Exchange at that Time?

Riggs. Yes; but whether he heard him, I cannot tell.

Sir Robert Forſter. What induces you to believe he did ſee him?

Riggs. We were cloſe together.

Sir Robert Forſter. What about Nathaniel Gibbs?

Riggs. For Gibbs, I brought Mr. Hill acquainted with Mr. Stubbs; and he ſaid he knew one at Fleet-Bridge, that ſells Plumbs and ſuch Things, and if we would go along with him, he would tell us News.

News. Hill, Stubbs, and I, that Day I was taken, went to Beazley. Stubbs asked him, What News? Says he, I hear the Buſineſs goes on; but if you will go to one Gibbs, meaning him that is fled, he has Intelligence. So we went to an Alehouſe near him, but he was not at home; and we were told, if we would go to Bridewell, they ſaid they would ſend for his Brother, meaning him at the Bar; and ſo ſhould have an Account. Gibbs, at the Bar, being with us, he told us he knew little himſelf; but when his Brother came, we ſhould hear. Three quarters of an Hour after came Gibbs that is gone, Thomas, and another Man; I knew him not; and Gibbs called this Brother. Beazley, Stubbs, and Hill, and I, ſat ſtill. When this Gibbs came, he ſaid his Brother knew little, hoped we were honeſt Men. The News was this, That he heard that Ludlow was in Town; and that now the Council was broken up.

Court. What Council?

Riggs. The Council of Six was broken up; and that they had ſent Meſſengers into the Country to give notice, and to make their Intereſts good abroad. This is that he ſaid there, or as much as I remember.

Finch. Now I will ask you in general: Did you ever hear of any Diſcourſe at any time of theſe Meetings touching a Riſing by the Papiſts, and a Maſſacre of the Proteſtants?

Riggs. Being upon the Exchange, Hill, Bradley, and I, there was a Lieutenant came to me, and ask'd me whether I heard of the Maſſacre to be? I ſaid, No. Says he, I can let you ſee a Copy of a Letter to that purpoſe; and gave it me. Hill going to the Ship, I told him of this, and he was deſirous of having a Copy. And this was the Copy that was this Day read in Court.

Sir Jeoffry Palmer. What did you hear concerning the ſurprizing of the King at Camberwell, when he came from his Mother? And what did Phillips ſay?

Riggs. Phillips, Tonge, Stubbs, and my ſelf, being together, they were diſcourſing concerning the King's going abroad: And at that Phillips ſaid the King was to come to Hampton-Court, to ſee the Queen-Mother at Greenwich, and hinted that he might be ſurprized. Tonge ſaid it need not; there might be ſuch an Opportunity twice every Week.

Court. Priſoners, will you ask the Witneſſes any Queſtion?

Phillips. Did you not meet me on a Sabbath-day? You may remember I met you in Cheapſide; we walked to Birchin-Lane End. You asked me of a Riſing that ſhould be: I ſaid, What Riſing? Says you, To ſurprize the King coming from Hampton-Court to Greenwich. And I came and ſpoke it openly in my Family, as News that I heard. This Gentleman had me to Tonge's Houſe; and there grew the Diſcourſe. Riggs told me Tonge could tell further: And Riggs told me, That the Reaſon why the Time for it was not appointed, was becauſe the Fifth-Monarchy-Men and Anabaptiſts were not agreed. Riggs, did not I diſclaim this Buſineſs, and declared I would have nothing to do with it?

Riggs. This is certain, That afterwards he did ſay he would not have any thing to do with it; and I did not ſee him a great while after that. Concerning Baker's ſurpriſing the King, it is true, he did ſay before Hill, and I, and Bradley, That the King was a hunting, and came through the City; and ſaid, He would have been one of the Fifty would have ſurprized him, and pulled him out of the Coach.

Court. Who ſaid that?

Riggs. Baker.

Court. Who preſent?

Riggs. Bradley, Mr. Hill, and the other Hill, Brown, and others.

Finch. Do you remember no Diſcourſe concerning the coming in at the Privy-Garden?

Riggs. I have under my Hand to the Grand-Jury declared, That Baker ſaid he knew the Way to the Back-ſtairs through the Privy-Garden better than any. And Bradley did once, and but once, ſay, That he knew it as well as any, and would undertake to do the ſame, in the Preſence of Stubbs, Tonge, Hill, and the reſt of them that were there that Friday Night.

Court. Who were the reſt?

Riggs. Hill, my ſelf, Ward, Stubbs, Hind, and John Baker, at Tonge's Houſe.

Sir John Maynard. We do conceive that theſe two Witneſſes have given Evidence againſt all of them; if any thing ſtick with the Jury, let them ſpeak.

Counſel. Here Bradley, this Witneſs that we call, he was no Conſpirator; but when there was notice of the Deſign, he was imployed to find it out, and to give us an Account of it.

Sir Heneage Finch. Mr. Bradley, were you preſent at any Debate?

Gibbs. Whether did Riggs hear me ſay, That Ludlow was in Town; or that the Council was broke up, and the Buſineſs went forward?

Riggs. This I ſaid, That Hill, Stubbs, and Beazley, were preſent; and he ſaid he knew nothing himſelf, but from his Brother: This was the News, That he heard that Ludlow was in Town, Council broke up, and that there was ſent out Meſſengers to give notice to prepare for the Buſineſs; that it would be on Alhallows-Eve, or the latter end of the Week, being Saturday the next Day.

Gibbs. I never ſpake theſe Words; and do deſire that the Honourable Bench will enquire of the Perſons then preſent, whether they will avouch the ſame; whether I ſaid it from my Brother? Theſe Words I did not ſpeak; and others being preſent, had Ears as well as he.

Tonge. Mr. Riggs told me Ludlow was in Town; and told me he would enquire after him.

Riggs. I confeſs I did ſo.

Tonge. And that he was like to be taken in Cheapſide. He was continually at my Shop, and would not let me alone, prompting and inducing me to theſe Things.

Counſel. Mr. Bradley, were you at any Meeting touching Diſcourſe of ſurprizing Whitehall?

Bradley. I was one Friday Night at Tonge's Houſe, a Strongwater-Man on Tower-Ditch, where there was theſe two Gentlemen with me, (pointing to Mr. Hill and Mr. Riggs) and there was Mr. Stubbs, and John Baker, and another Gentleman, one Ward; and we had ſome Diſcourſe about ſurprizing of Whitehall, which way it might be done. Some ſaid that a Party might go through the Guard, and ſo ſurprize General Monk's Guard; others ſaid they might come down by Charing-Croſs: But Tonge ſaid, There was no coming down by Charing-Croſs, becauſe there was two great Guns planted at the bottom, and commanded all that way: But ſaid, The only way he conceived, was to bring a Party thro King's-Street, and, if it were poſſible, to get into the Privy-Garden, and ſo into the Lodgings that way. This is all that I remember.

Serjeant

Serjeant Keeling. Do you know any thing about the Ship at the East-India Houſe?

Bradley. I went to this Ship ſometimes; and with Riggs, Hill, Brown, Hind, and one Hill a Cloth-Drawer; we had divers Diſcourſes concerning the Deſign, and the News on foot.

Court. What Deſign? Expreſs it.

Bradley. To alter the Government; the ſurprizing the King, the Duke, and the General, and as many more of the Council as they could lay hands on.

Counſel. What about the Guards, ſurprizing Whitehall?

Bradley. At another Meeting they diſcourſed about the bringing down Forces to Whitehall.

Counſel. Who were preſent then? Which of the Priſoners at the Bar?

Bradley. None, unleſs Hind be there.

Counſel. At what other Meetings were you?

Bradley. I was never at any other, but twice at Tonge's Houſe. The Friday Night we had a Diſcourſe about taking Whitehall. And the Day before we were taken, I met this Mr. Riggs upon the Exchange. He asked me to go home, and dine with him; and we intended to go and ſee a Ship. His Dinner not being ready, we went over to Tonge's Shop, and had a Quartern of Strong-waters; and I took a Pipe of Tobacco. Riggs went away, and ſaid he would not ſtay: Hind ſtaid with me the whilſt. After we had taken a Pipe of Tobacco, he came again, and ſaid he heard the Buſineſs was near at hand, and that there would be ſpeedy Action. Hill was at the Shop. And after Dinner, Riggs and I, Mr. Hill and Hind, went all out together to Stubbs's Houſe. Riggs and Hill went in; Hind and I ſtaid. Standing there a little, ſaid I to Hind, What mean theſe Gentlemen to ſtay ſo long? Riggs ſaid he ſtaid for a Friend; but I will go and meet him. Said I, Will you not go on board a Ship with Maſter Hind and I? Says Riggs, No, I will go to meet my Friend: Do you go on board the Ship, and come to my Houſe; if I am not there, pray ſtay a little. We asked Mr. Hill if he would go with us; but he went with Riggs: And they told me coming back, That Gibbs had informed them the Deſign was ready, Council broke up, and Meſſengers ſent to give notice; and Ludlow in Town, and to be General.

Court. Who told you this?

Bradley. Riggs did, when he returned from Bridewell.

Tyler ſworn.

Sir Heneage Finch. Mr. Tyler, do you know Tonge?

Tyler. I know him very well.

Sir Heneage Finch. Have you ever been in his Company, and ſpake of any Deſign about ſecuring the King?

Tyler. Often.

Counſel. Tell what you have heard.

Tyler. I have met Mr. Tonge and others in three or four ſeveral Places: At the Wheat-Sheaf at Lion's once, if not twice; at the Half-Moon, Widow Jordan's, within Biſhopſgate, twice at the leaſt. Near Duke's-Place, at the Shears, I have heard ſeveral Things, and have noted it down, to be ſure to deliver the Truth. I have heard them ſpeak about Whitehall, and ſecuring of it, and of the two Guns there. Elton and he ſaid, That they might come with a Party backwards, breaking through a Barber's Shop in King's-Street, and diſmount the two Guns. But as touching the King, the Duke, and the Noble Duke of Albemarle, they propoſed what excellent Service it would be to ſecure theſe Perſons: He ſaid it was not a Thing that would admit of much Debate, inaſmuch as he had a Friend a Courtier, (I know not his Title) that would give him notice at any time when the King was gone a hunting, or his Progreſs; and that it was eaſy to take it. Tonge ſaid he ſerved the Tower-Suttlers, and was acquainted there; and ſaid, There was no way to ſurprize that but this, either about Ten or Eleven a-clock. I will undertake we may do it with forty Perſons thus, ſays he; Some to go in dropping, one by one, or two together, and others to be at ſeveral Alehouſes near, to be ready; and they within ſeizing on the Guard by a private Sign, we ſhould ſecure thoſe without; and the Soldiers, being of the old Army, will readily comply. And ſaid, There was a Perſon that lived nigh him, wears Ropes about him, is a Porter when off the Guard, and believes he can command the whole Company, and would undertake it. For Windſor-Caſtle, there was an old Gunner that he kept a Correſpondence withal; and he ſerved the Suttlers of that Caſtle alſo with Tobacco, I think he named Strong-water; and that the Soldiers were many of them his Acquaintance; and that he had received Letters from this Gunner under ſome ſtrange Title. And ſaid it was eaſy; and knew that at any time, when the Word was given, let him go, or ſend by ſuch a Token, and that Place were our own.

Court. Who ſaid this?

Tyler. Mr. Tonge. As to the other Perſon, Phillips, I can only ſay this of him: There is one Lieutenant Chapman, ſo formerly, now a Priſoner in the Tower. This Lieutenant was a Carrier of Norwich. I went to his Inn, the George in Lombard-Street, and asked for him; I was told he was at Captain Foſter's Houſe, in Leaden-Hall-Street, and there I might find him. I went to Captain Foſter's; and Captain Foſter told me he was at Supper there with his Maſter. I went up: There was this Lieutenant Chapman and Phillips, which was the firſt time I laid my Eyes on Phillips. My Buſineſs was to ſpeak with Mr. Chapman the Carrier; but I perceived by ſome Diſcourſe of Mr. Phillips, there was ſomething driving on: But I muſt ſay that Captain Foſter walked about the Room as if he minded not the Diſcourſe. There was Chapman, Phillips, Elton, and a Man looking a-ſquint; I heard Phillips call him Muſter-Maſter, but I know not the Man. I heard them diſcourſe very promiſcuouſly about Ships, and ſomething wildly. I tarried while I ſpent Two-Pence, and came away with Mr. Chapman, and asked him, what that young Blade was that talked ſo promiſcuouſly? Chapman told me he was a Serjeant, belonging to the Trained-Bands. Tell me his Name? His Name is Phillips. Do you know his Trade or Dwelling? He is a Gilder, I think. Then this is the ſame Perſon I have heard of at a Coffee-Houſe; which was thus: A Perfumer in Southwark, he heard of great Rumours about a new Commonwealth; and preſſing this Perfumer how he came to be thus informed, ſays he, There is one Phillips, that lives in Abchurch-Lane; this Man knows of it: For, ſays he, he hath ſaid himſelf, that he has gone from Committee to Committee, where Officers met about theſe Things; and he named Captain Foſter for one that was engaged in the Buſineſs. Said I, This is ſtrange! I haſtened back again in the Morning to Captain Foſter's: Sir, ſaid I, do you know that Phillips that was here laſt Night? Yes, ſays he. What is he, ſaid I? He anſwered, A Serjeant.

The thing is this, this Man does talk abroad, That there is a Meeting of the old Officers, and that you are engaged. At which Captain Foſter ſeemed to be troubled that he ſhould be ſo aſperſed, anſwered, I know nothing, no not one word of this; I do declare an Abhorrence thereto, or of any Action againſt his Majeſty; and thereupon preſently went to Phillips, and charged him with this Report: and ſoon after this Perfumer comes to my Houſe, and deſired me to go over to the Croſs-Keys where Phillips was. When I came there, ſays Phillips, Sir, I ſaw you the laſt Night, when we were talking of Ships, I hope you do not mind the Report about Captain Foſter, for I am troubled ſuch a thing is mentioned: for my part, I know not that I ſaid ſo; I am ſure I knew no ſuch thing. This was all as to Phillips; but for Tonge, I muſt needs ſay, in all the Meetings where I was, the ſeveral Places that I formerly named, and the Whalebone behind the Exchange, he ſtill diſcourſed of this buſineſs.

Counſel. What was done there concerning chuſing the Council of Six?

Tyler. He was ſpoke to, to be at the Shears, but he ſent a Note ſealed and directed, in which was incloſed either nine or eleven of the Rump-Parliament Names of Perſons: And, ſays he, for my part, I cannot come this Day, becauſe the Hamlets are to go out into the Field; (it was when Sir John Robinſon marched with his Regiment) that I may avoid Suſpicion, I muſt go with him.

Counſel. What were thoſe Names?

Tyler. I cannot tell; but they were nine or eleven of thoſe in the Tower: and he promiſed he would get a Note of thoſe Mens Names in the Tower; for he was confident of it, that they would ſit as Members, and do good Service upon the account of a Commonwealth; and ſaid, there were ſome that had a Correſpondence with them in the Tower.]

Counſel. What Correſpondence had they in the Country?

Tyler. Tonge told me at the Wheat-ſheaf, That if a Riſing ſhould be, it were neceſſary that the old Commanders up and down the Country ſhould head them: And therefore, ſays he, what Forces can be raiſed, ſhould go under that Conduct, or to that effect. He and Elkin did propoſe ſeveral Colonels, I think moſt that are now living, both in England and beyond the Seas.

Counſel. Can you tell any thing of the Rumours abroad, expecting this Deſign?

Tyler. Tonge told me this, That there was one that they called the Lord Lockhart; he ſaid he was Governour of Dunkirk; That he had thirty or forty Servants about him; That theſe Perſons expected a Riſing; and that they and himſelf would engage. We heard that Col. Roſſiter, not particularly from Tonge, but there in Company, was expected to be at Sturbridge-Fair, to head Fifteen Hundred Horſe, to be at London. Alſo he asked me this Queſtion at his Houſe, Whether I was acquainted with Captain Leigh, a Man with one Arm, a ſtout honeſt Fellow, and an active Fellow, of his Acquaintance?

Counſel. Speak your knowledge both of Perſons and Things.

Tyler. There was one Mr. Cole of Southampton, Swetnam, Gibbs a Hatmaker, not he at the Bar, Tonge, Thomas Elton, Elkin, Pryor, and one Cox a Gardiner, and Ward now a Priſoner in the Tower, and one Ward a Southwark Man, and Dyer a young Scholar; there was one Roſe of Cheſterfield, and the Perfumer I ſpoke of, I know not his Name, he lives in Southwark; and there was a Quaker, I know not his Name: the great Buſineſs was to unite all Intereſts. Elkin ſaid, There were ſeveral Meetings in St. Martins, and other Places.

Tonge. If there be any one of the ſix in London, I believe this Mr. Tyler is one.

Tyler. To clear that I am none of them, I will name thoſe whom I ſaid were the ſix; Thomas of Shoe-lane the Copperſmith, one Elton in White-Chappel, one Raddon, Captain Spurway of Tiverton, a Weſt-country Gentleman, Dr. Ward in Southwark, and Jones a Miniſter.

Sir Hen. Finch. Did Tonge tell you that the time was appointed when the Riſing ſhould be?

Tyler. I know nothing of that.

Maynard. What about Leiceſter?

Riggs. Hill ſaid, He dwelt there, and came from ſome that dwelt there, and others in Glouceſterſhire; but there was another Perſon with Stubbs and Tonge, and ſaid, There was a Report in the Country, That there would be ſome Riſing; and he came to Town to bring his Child to put him Apprentice with his Brother, and would go down again, and carry the Certainty of the News: He was one of Lambert's Soldiers.

Phillips. Mr. Tyler, did not you come in with the Carrier of Norwich to Capt. Foſter's?

Tyler. No, I did not.

Phillips. I am ſure I came accidentally to Captain Foſter's, and going, I ſaw you there.

Gibbs. Did I tell you, Mr. Riggs, that my Brother ſaid Ludlow was in Town, and there would be a Riſing ſhortly?

Riggs. Mr. Hill, Beazley, Stubbs, and I and you were together; Mr. Thomas and your Brother came in: your Brother, Beazley, Stubbs and Thomas were private in Diſcourſe. When you came again to us, we asked you what News? You ſaid, Before we came you knew not much, but your Brother could tell; but then you ſaid, Ludlow was in Town, the Council was broke up, and that Meſſengers were ſent to give notice to the Country.

Gibbs. I deny that I or my Brother ſaid ſo.

Maynard. Know you any thing of ſurprizing the King's Council, or Whitehall, or any thing of that, or altering the Government?

Tyler. As for altering the Government, that muſt needs be deſigned; for Tonge ſaid, It was debated, and thought convenient, as being the Deſire of ſeveral in the Country, that the old Parliament ſhould be choſen again: that was to ſay, That ſo many of them that had approved themſelves faithful from firſt to laſt, to a Commonwealth's Intereſt, eſpecially in the times of Declenſion. Secondly, That none ſhould have Power to elect, or be elected, but ſuch alſo as have approved themſelves faithful, as aforeſaid. Thirdly, This Houſe was to be filled up within a Month. Fourthly, That it ſhould continue one Year, and no more. Fifthly, That they ſhould not have Power in things of an Eccleſiaſtical Nature, to impoſe any thing upon the Conſciences of the People. Sixthly, That it ſhould be High Treaſon amongſt them to aſſert the Intereſt of a King, Houſe of Lords, or ſingle Perſon. Seventhly, That they ſhould not appoint any Salary-Officers. Eighthly, That while they keep to this, it ſhould be High Treaſon to diſturb them. As touching Arms, and things of that nature, the truth is, the Buſineſs which was very much urged, is this; That there ſhould be an Uniting of all Intereſts together, Quaker, Fifth-monarchy-Men, Anabaptiſt, Independent, Presbyterian, and Leveller; to which purpoſe every one was obliged at the Meeting to ſee what Intereſt they could make among the Presbyters, becauſe they looked upon them as Perſons that had moſt Money and Strength. I think there was no Presbyterian ſpoken of, except one, who is lately ſecured in the Tower: He ſaid, that if ſo be that Colonel Beanes was at liberty, he could engage him. There was one Man that was there, which was one Prior, I ſuppoſe Tonge knew him; he ſaid, He had very much Acquaintance with the Presbyters, knew many in the Country; and that there they did not meet with any Difficulties, as here; for all Intereſts, Quakers, and Presbyterians, and the reſt, are all agreed.

Sir. Hen. Finch. Very well, you ſee Tonge was at all theſe Meetings at the Wheat-ſheaf and Shears; and there were the Colonels propoſed. Did you hear of any Orders given out, in any of theſe Conſultations, to make the Riſing in the Country at the ſame time as in London?

Tyler. Mr. Gibbs's Brother told us, That he kept a Correſpondence in the Country; that in Eſſex he knew there were divers Horſe ready there; and I my ſelf ſpoke with one who is lately ſecured, who ſaid, There were divers Horſe ready thereabouts. I remember there were ſeveral at the Half-Moon at Biſhopſgate, one Smith, a Northamptonſhire Man, and one Eloſe of Cheſterfield, and Tonge; and we heard, that at Mansfield and Nottingham there was a Riſing intended; and it was aſſured, that the Country was very ripe and forward for Action. We were informed that there were two hundred Horſe at Briſtol; one Perſon, not yet ſecured, did affirm to us, That one Colonel Templar in Eſſex had two or three thouſand Men ready, his Name was Thomas; That Templar was now in Town, if we would, we might go and ſpeak with him. Said I, ſurely he doth but tell you this. Saith he, His Lieutenant-Colonel gave me this Information, and aſſures me, that his Colonel had converted his Eſtate into Money to pay his Soldiers. Upon this, having occaſion to go down into Eſſex, I promiſed Tonge I would enquire further there: and underſtanding that one Thornback a Glover, was one of theſe Templar's Men formerly, I went to his Houſe, and being not at home, I rode to Holſted-Fair; and riding there, the Man pulled me by the Coat, for he knew me; ſaith he, Mr. Tyler, my Servant ſaid you were at my Houſe to ſpeak with me. Yes, ſaid I, I underſtand your Name is Thornback; That you can give me ſome account concerning Colonel Templar; we hear in London that he hath two or three thouſand Men in readineſs, I pray inform me. Saith he, I do not believe any ſuch matter; I have ſerved him long, and if Occaſion were, he would be for you. I asked him the News: ſaith he, We all dread a Maſſacre; we underſtand by a Letter from Ipſwich, That the Papiſts intend a Maſſacre of all Proteſtants about All-hallontide, and that that Country was in great fear about it. This Thomas the Copper-ſmith told us another Story about ſome Roman Catholicks in Southwark, that had a Purpoſe to riſe and take off all Fanaticks.

After this the Court directed, that Phillips's Examination ſhould be ſhewed him at the Bar, and he acknowledged his Hand thereto; and was read as followeth.

The Examination of George Phillips, Serjeant and Bringer-up to Col. Sir William Wales's Company of Trained-Bands in the City of London, taken this 29th of October 1662. before me Richard Brown.

Who ſaith,

THAT he knoweth one Parſon Riggs, late Chaplain to Blake, who is now Clerk to one Friend a Brewer in Cat's-Hole, near the Iron-gate in St. Catherine's; which ſaid Riggs told him this Examinant, That there would be a Riſing of divers godly People in Arms, for Preſervation of Religion, about the time the Queen came to Town; and that they intended to ſeize the King's Perſon about Camberwel, in his Paſſage to ſee the Queen Mother at Greenwich: but after the Queen was come to Town, This Examinant asked the ſaid Riggs, why it was not done according to their Intendment? who replied, They were not then ready, becauſe the Congregational Churches and they were not fully agreed; but now they were come all to an Agreement, and the Work would be done in a ſhort time; That all things were now near ready both in Country and City; and that a Frigat or more would revolt from the King to them. Not long after, the ſaid Riggs carried him the ſaid Phillips to the Houſe of one Tonge, an old Army-Captain, but now a Seller of Tobacco and Strong-water in Tower-Ditch; where he heard Tonge ſay unto Riggs, That he had been at Windſor-Caſtle, and had made a Captain, two Serjeants and a Gunner to be of their Party; and that they had undertaken to deliver up the ſaid Caſtle to that Party which were now to riſe. To which Riggs replied, You have done well: And further ſaid, I am going now to ſurprize two Caſtles in Kent; one of them, as this Deponent remembreth, was to be Deal-Caſtle; and this he would and could do, for that he had ſome Correſpondence therein, and much Acquaintance near, where he formerly uſed to preach. And further ſaith, That Tonge asked Riggs, Who ſhould lead the Men that were to riſe, and who commanded in chief? To which Riggs replied, That Ludlow was appointed for that Work.

He further ſaith, That he asked Riggs and Tonge, how this Buſineſs might be carried on with Safety and Secrecy? Riggs told him, That there was a Council of Six which managed the Deſign, who ſat but one Day in a Place, and would not be ſpoken with, but by the Agitators of each County, who were employed by them to and fro in this Work, to prepare and make ready all Parties in the ſeveral Counties; and that theſe Six were of ſeveral Congregations and Opinions, to the end that all Parties might unite. And further ſaith, That one Wade, or ſome ſuch Name, whom he heard Riggs and Tonge ſay, was a Ship-Chandler in Eaſt-Smithfield, did furniſh Powder to carry on this Deſign, in whoſe Company he once was, and heard himſelf ſay as much; which ſaid Perſon he believes he knows when he ſeeth him again. He alſo ſaith, That Riggs told him all the Congregational Churches were now agreed to join in this Deſign; and that Riggs and Tonge deſired this Examinant to furniſh what Men and Arms he could: which, he ſaith, he never intended to do it, though they earneſtly requeſted it of him. Only he ſaith, In ſome things he was too faulty, which he prayeth Pardon for; which was, in ſending word to the ſeveral Meetings on Sunday laſt, That the Trained-Bands were coming to ſeize them: Upon which the chiefeſt of them made their eſcape before the Soldiers Arrival; and that he being deluded by their fair Speeches, did promiſe to give them the Word when the general Riſing was to be; in which Riſing all the Churches aforeſaid promiſed to join, and the Fifth-Monarchy-men to lead the Van. And further ſaith, That Riggs told him, They had a Declaration ready to fling among the People, againſt Biſhops and Common-Prayer; and that Liberty of Conſcience was held forth therein. But firſt, before this Declaration, they would ſeize on the King's Perſon, and that then their Declaration would take with the People. And alſo ſaith, That one Capt. Baker, one Bradley and Tonge, were privy to all theſe Tranſactions which were debated by them in his Preſence; and that the ſaid Baker came afterwards to this Examinant, and diſcourſed all the aforeſaid Particulars, and incited him to help on with the Work; and told him, their Arms and Powder were diſtributed, and that a Porter, which was formerly a Soldier, carried the Powder to ſeveral Places in a Sack. And further ſaith, That Riggs told him they had divers Friends both in London and the Country, who had, and would help them to Money; and that all their Friends were now ready in all Countries, waiting only for the Day when they were to act; and that the Treaſure in the Guild-Hall was likewiſe to be ſeized.

And that the ſaid Riggs alſo told him, That they intended to ſurprize the Tower, which they could eaſily do, having ſome therein that would aſſiſt: and this was to be put in execution in ſome Evening when Sir John Robinſon came home late, by following cloſe after his Coach with a Party of Men, which ſhould lie ready for that purpoſe.

George Phillips.

Sir William Morice, and Sir Henry Bennet, Principal Secretaries of State, ſworn.

Sir William Morice. I have had Intelligence, and ſeveral Advertiſements from ſeveral Parts of the Kingdom, that there was a Deſign of Riſing, and an Inſurrection, that it was the general Expectation and common Diſcourſe of the diſcontented and diſaffected Party; nay, it was likewiſe preached about, that the Papiſts had a Deſign to riſe and cut the Throats of the Proteſtants. I had four or five Letters to that effect ſent and brought me; and theſe Rumours were ſpread to excite others to join with theſe.

Sir Henry Bennet. Divers Letters of mine were to the ſame effect, That there was an Inſurrection intended at that time, and calling upon one another to be ready at that time.

Sir John Talbot ſworn.

Sir John Talbot. I ſuppoſe that the Evidence that I can give in relation to the Priſoners, is only the Conſequences of this Report, which they had rumoured about the Papiſts maſſacring the Proteſtants: the Conſequence was this, That it made a very great Diſturbance in Worceſterſhire and Warwickſhire, inſomuch that many Gentlemen that lived in the Country in very good Repute, came under a very great Suſpicion of all their Neighbours; and the Lieutenants wrote to one another to ſecure many: there were Guards ſet to ſatisfy the Fears of the Country. Friday Night, which the Riſing ſhould have been on, they would not intruſt the Catholicks to be in Arms, but other Volunteers.

Mr. Hodges ſworn.

Mr. Hodges. In Dorſetſhire the 23d of October laſt, there was a Diſcovery made by ſome of the Town, of an Intention of a general Riſing; and ſome of the Town were engaged in it: one Mr. Harvey a Juſtice of the Peace examined divers Perſons; four that were privy to it were ſent to the Goal, and an Expreſs ſent to Mr. Secretary Morice. Sir John Weld the younger gave ſuch an Account of Shrewſbury.

Stubbs. My Lord, the Occaſion of my going that Friday-Night, was by Mr. Hill and Mr. Riggs ſuggeſting the Papiſts riſing; I was never known to be a Plotter; I had not gone forth that Night, but only by their Perſuaſions: I never heard of any Arms, but only the Rumours of the People.

Sellers. I would fain know of Mr. Riggs what Number of Arms I told him was delivered?

Riggs. I know not the Number.

Major Thomas Bonfoy (at his deſire) was ſworn.

Major Bonfoy. I do not remember that I ever ſaw Phillips's Face, but I did underſtand it was his Cuſtom to come to the Exchange to inſinuate himſelf into my Officers, making merry with them, and endeavouring to get the Word; and I believe it was his common Practice.

Phillips. He may remember I came on the Exchange and ſpoke to him, and was looking for one of his Serjeants; I asked no Man the Word, but preſently went to the Black Lion in the new Alley, and from thence I went home; I did not ask the Word of any one. I have confeſſed before the Council, that at the beginning of Auguſt, I met Mr. Riggs in Cheapſide; he then came and cloſed with me, and walking along, ſaid he, Do not you hear of a Riſing which ſhould have been on Friday? No, ſaid I; and then I asked him where? he ſaid, At Camberwel: and I thinking nothing of it, came home and ſpoke of it in my Family, as News from Mr. Riggs. On Tueſday I met Mr. Riggs on Tower-Hill, and he brought me to the Houſe of Mr. Tonge; Tonge told Riggs he had been at Windſor, and made ſome Party to ſecure the Caſtle. Riggs ſaid he could go down to Kent, and ſecure Deal and another Caſtle; for he had been a Preacher there. As for Mr. Tyler, one Night coming near Captain Foſter's Door, and having not ſeen him in three Years before, he asked me, if I would not drink? I ſaid, Yes: Then came in the Carrier of Norwich, I never ſaw this Carrier till then: Then came Mr. Tyler, and there was talking of a Frigat, and the time of the launching of it, and how it was to be mann'd; but a little after Captain Foſter came and charged me with a Report, That I ſhould ſay he was engaged. I told him I knew it not, nor ſaid it not: I have often declared I would have nothing to do in it. It's true, Mr. Riggs came and thanked me that I ſent notice to the Meeting to be gone; and I told him I would do the People any good I could; but Mr. Riggs knows I told him it was a dangerous Buſineſs, and I would not meddle with it: I am ſure in the time of the Fifth-Monarchy Inſurrection I was faithful to the King, ventured my Life as far as any Man; Sir William Wales put truſt in me, and I did that Service there, that the Colonel himſelf did not venture to do. But that I was engaged in this Buſineſs, it is a Trouble to me, and I hope the King will be merciful to me; I did not think that ſuch a thing would be diſcloſed in ſo ſhort a time. For my part, I did not mind it, I knew nothing the Night I was taken, I was in Bed, and did not offer to eſcape; I hope the King will look upon me as one drawn in.

Stubbs. I never had any Meeting with any of the Council; moſt of the things I heard at Mr. Tonge's Houſe, meeting with Mr. Riggs by chance. For thoſe Gentlemen Mr. Tyler ſpeaks of, the Council of Forty and of Six, I never knew them: I am ſorry I ſhould be concerned in ſuch Diſcourſe, and I hope his Majeſty will have mercy on me.

Gibbs. My Lord, I was at a Neighbour's Houſe at that time, and went to drink a Cup of Beer alone in their Kitchin, not knowing of Hill, Riggs, or Stubbs coming there: I never appointed them any Meeting, they came in, and when they came in, they asked if there was not one Gibbs there; ſo the People of the Houſe told them there was. They came and told me, there were ſome Gentlemen would ſpeak with me; whereupon, they being ſtrange Faces, I ſtood up and ſaid, Gentlemen, what is your buſineſs with me? Said they, we would drink a Cup of Beer with you. Then ſaid I, ſit down. They had a deſire to be private, and to go up. Whereupon, not knowing their buſineſs, I went up, ſuppoſing they meant ſome Matters of my Trade; but we ſitting down, Mr. Riggs ſaid to me, Mr. Gibbs, what is the beſt News? And Mr. Hill alſo did urge and ask for News. Said I, Gentlemen, I know no News, nor none I can tell you. So they made inquiry then for my Brother: ſaid I, I cannot tell where my Brother is, may be your buſineſs is moſt with him; I will ſend for him: and I ſent the Maid for him, and directed her, that if he was not at home, ſhe ſhould leave word for him to come. Again they urged for News, and I told them I knew none but only this, That the Meeting was ſeized upon the laſt Sunday by armed Soldiers: But to tell them there would be any Riſing, or of any Arms delivered, or Piſtols, as Mr. Hill has related it, was a thing I was wholly ignorant of. I ſpeak as in the preſence of God, and I know I muſt one day give an account before the great Aſſizes of the World; and I fear that which they have ſaid, is out of ſome fear lying upon them, being guilty of ſome Fact, and ſo to ſhroud themſelves under falſe Lyes. They, nor no other can prove that ever I received or delivered any Arms, or that any were delivered by my Order; theſe Men ſpeak falſly.

Sir Orl. Bridgman. You miſtake yourſelf, they do not charge you with receiving or delivering Arms, but you related it: your Brother ſpeaks ſuch things had been done, and if you know of this, and do conſent and conceal it, you are equally guilty.

Gibbs. After they had asked me the News, in a ſhort time my Brother came into the Room, and I roſe from the Table, and went towards my Brother; and then my Brother asked me what thoſe Gentlemen were? I ſaid they were Strangers to me, and knew not what they came for. Says he, they are Strangers to me alſo. Immediately we aroſe, paid our Reckoning, and went away. But that ever I ſaid my Brother told me, The Council of Six was broke up, all is ready, Ludlow to be General, and Alhallow-Eve the time, or that things went on well; I deny it: my Brother ſaid no ſuch thing to me, nor I to any Man. When there was an Inſurrection by the Fifth-Monarchy Men, I was then preſently ready at Beat of Drum, went out in my own Perſon to ſerve his Majeſty at Twelve a-clock at night, tho I had Servants of my own. My Affections were ſuch, that I have always, ever ſince his Majeſty's Reſtoration, been an obedient Subject to all his lawful Commands. I belonged then to Major Kilby's Company, and did continue marching in the Company till the whole Buſineſs was over, and ventured my Life, and never did contrive any Plot, or knew of any Plot, received or delivered any Arms. As to the Inhabitants among whom I have lived many Years, they have known my Converſation; I have been a peaceable Neighbour, ſubjecting myſelf under the Government that now is, whom God continue. I deſire this Certificate may be read concerning my Neighbours Teſtimony of my Converſation.

Sir Orl. Bridgman. If you have any of them here, they may ſpeak; but the Certificate cannot be read.

The Porter's Man of Bridewell ſaid, he knew nothing but that he lived very quietly among his Neighbours.

Sir R. Forſter. Nor I neither.

Court. Mr. Tonge, what have you to ſay?

Tonge. I have nothing to ſay, but that the firſt Man that brought me into this Buſineſs was Tyler.

Sellers. All that I am charged with, is a Report of the Delivery of ſome Arms; ſeeing that a number of Arms are mentioned, I would ask what was the number?

Mr. Riggs. I cannot well tell the number, but you ſaid there were ſome Arms given, and ſome to be given, and that ſeveral had come to that place, and went away without Arms, and that within two or three days there would be more given; but as to the number, I cannot remember.

Sellers. Now take notice of Mr. Hill's Evidence, he hath aſſerted that there were five or ſix hundred; how do theſe agree? I can have ſufficient Teſtimony of my Life and Converſation.

Court. If you have any thing more to ſay in this Buſineſs, ſpeak in the name of God, no body hinders you, but keep to the Buſineſs.

Sellers. I intreat the Bench to take notice what I am charged withal; it's only a Report I received from one Man, and told to another, and the very Original was a Lye, there was no ſuch matter, and yet here is audacious Evidence: he ſays I named five or ſix hundred, and yet Riggs, to whom I ſpoke, heard me name no number.

Counſel. One ſpeaks to the Arms, but does not remember the number; they both ſpeak to the thing.

Sellers. How can Mr. Hill be a competent Witneſs againſt me, when he never ſaw my face before, but ſays Mr. Riggs told him?

Hill. I ſaid not ſo, but that I heard it from your own mouth.

Mr. Sollicitor. Mr. Riggs, why did you go to Mr. Sellers to help Mr. Hill to Arms?

Riggs. Becauſe Mr. Sellers told me the day before, that he heard there was ſome delivered, and more would be: and the next day we went to the Exchange, and there he told me this ſtory.

Sellers. I cannot hear him.

Sir Orl. Bridgman. He ſays you told him the day before there was Arms delivered, and more would be delivered; and then the next day he and Mr. Hill came on the Exchange, and then you ſpoke thoſe words which they both witneſs againſt you.

Sellers. I never ſpoke ſuch a word. It's true, what Wapſhot told me I told Riggs, which was, that there were Arms delivered; but it ſeems there was none: and I told him I would tell him the truth the next day on the Exchange. And ſo in the mean time ſpeaking with Wapſhot, he told me there was no ſuch thing, and I told Mr. Riggs, Wapſhot ſaid there was none.

Court. Pray what made you ſo buſily inquire after Arms, if you were not concern'd?

Sellers. I did not inquire after it, but accidentally meeting him in Mark-Lane, he told me.

Tonge. My Lord, as you are my Judge, ſo I hope you will be my Counſellor; and I pray your Advice whether Mr. Tyler and Mr. Riggs be competent tent Witneſſes againſt me, they being in the ſame caſe.

Sir Orl. Bridgman. Where is the Cauſe of your Exception?

Tonge. Becauſe they are in the ſame caſe.

Sir Orl. Bridgman. There are four Witneſſes all againſt you, your own Confeſſion and Examination againſt you, through the whole Buſineſs you are a principal Perſon.

Tonge. I confeſs I did confeſs it in the Tower, being threatned with the Rack.

Sir Orl. Bridgman. There is Mr. Hill, Mr. Riggs, Mr. Bradley, and Mr. Tyler: there is Hill and Bradley without exception; Bradley he was not at all concerned, he went along with you to know what you ſaid; and Mr. Hill was not a Perſon in the Deſign, but made uſe of only to find out the Plot: they did nothing unjuſtifiable, ſo they are Witneſſes without exception.

Serj. Glynne. We deſire your Lordſhip to declare whether Riggs and Tyler be lawful Witneſſes.

Sir Orl. Bridgman. I would have you know this: Whereas you make exception againſt thoſe Perſons that are guilty of the ſame Crime, that's a miſtake to ſay they are not Witneſſes; in Caſes of Treaſon, where there are Works of Darkneſs, theſe are things Men will not do by Day-light, but in Darkneſs; and who can diſcover theſe Works of Darkneſs better than they that have to do with them, if God turn their Hearts? It's true, ſuch Perſons as theſe are, if they had been convicted, they are not Witneſſes; but tho they are in the ſame fault, it is frequent practice, they are allow'd in caſe of Felony. Beſides, they are not Witneſſes alone, and there are divers Circumſtances concurring. 1 Edw. 6. 5 Edw. 6. both Statutes ſay, There ſhall be lawful Witneſſes in Caſes of High Treaſon; but that is, ſuch Witneſſes as the Law would allow before thoſe Statutes: The meaning of the Statutes was, that Men might not be taken upon bare Surmiſes; therefore the Law ſays, there ſhall be two Witneſſes. When one is accuſed of Treaſon, another in the ſame Offence unconvicted, his Evidence is made uſe of; and tho he is not ſo upright a Witneſs as others, yet he is ſuch a Witneſs as the Jury is to take notice of. Such Teſtimony was allowable before thoſe Statutes; and the Tryal is ſtill by Jury, not Witneſſes, and the Jury are to conſider of the Credit of the Witneſſes. In King James's time a † Great Perſon was condemned upon the Evidence of one in the ſame Treaſon. It is plain by ſeveral Circumſtances, you have been a principal Perſon, a Leader on of the Buſineſs: Tho a Man be but preſent when Treaſon is ſpoken, or deſigned and acted; if this Man be preſent, and ſhew any thing of Approbation, his concealing of it is as much Treaſon as he that did it, they are all Principals in Treaſon.

† Sir W. Raleigh.

Sir Heneage Finch. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, you have heard the Evidence of the Priſoners at the Bar; five of them have ſtood out their Tryal, a ſixth hath confeſſed the Fact againſt thoſe Perſons that now ſtand at the Bar: Under good favour there is a clear and unqueſtionable Proof of the Crime charged againſt them, and they have not ſaid any thing that hath either taken away the Credit of the Evidence, or excuſed the Matter. If you conſider firſt Tonge, there is againſt him four Witneſſes, and thoſe unqueſtionable; as you heard the Direction of the Court, that he knew of the Deſign, approved of it, contrived how to ſurprize Windſor-Caſtle, had corrupted the head Gunner and Serjeant there; that he did contrive to ſeize Whitehall, and if you believe Bradley, adviſed, as the fitteſt way, to break into the Privy-Garden: All this againſt Tonge, with a world of other Evidence how active he has been, his Houſe was the place of Conſultation, he imparts the Deſign to Phillips, and Phillips undertakes to get the Word of the Trained-Bands; I think none can prove more than is proved againſt him. When you come to hear the Proof againſt Phillips, it is proved that he offered to betray 300 Arms in the Artillery, where he had ſome kind of Truſt, and that he was ready to endeavour the Word when the Inſurrection was to be; and but a very little before, he is the Man that diſcovers to the Congregational Meetings, that the Trained-Bands were coming to ſurprize them, that is in his own Confeſſion, as well as the Willingneſs in him to diſcover the Word. It is proved, that Tonge and Stubbs were preſent at thoſe Diſcourſes touching ſurprizing the Tower, ſecuring the King, this is proved expreſly againſt them; Stubbs he thinks he has ſaid fairly for himſelf, when he doth ask Mr. Hill whether he did not ſay he had Horſes and 200 l. to carry on the Work; Mr. Hill ſays he did ſay ſo: then it ſeems Stubbs was inquiſitive what Helps there were to carry it on. Mr. Hill goes further; That in the preſence of Stubbs it was ſaid there ſhould be no Quarter given, but ſuch as Ludlow ſhould have if he were taken. When you come to Gibbs, he does deny all the whole matter, and indeed ſo they would all; and they have nothing to ſay, but to cry the Witneſſes have ſworn falſly, and God is a righteous God, and he will require their Blood one day: but remember what a horrid Proteſtation was in that Letter that was ſent abroad, to alarm the whole Kingdom, as if a Maſſacre was intended by the Papiſts, and the Watch-word they ſhould all riſe by; that Letter ſays, I call the Eternal God to witneſs, this is no Trepan, but a ſober Truth. Do you think, that Men who are not aſhamed to call the Eternal God to witneſs to a Lye, when 'tis to raiſe Sedition, will make any ſcruple of ſuch Proteſtations at the Bar, when 'tis to ſave their Lives? And if a Man may ſcape by his own Proteſtation, who ſhall ever be found guilty? But Gibbs thinks he ſays a great deal for himſelf, when he ſays his Neighbours can give great Teſtimony of his good Converſation. Alas! who will deny to give a good Report of any Man till he hear Evil proved againſt him? But do you think a little demure and ſober Carriage amongſt a Man's Neighbours will ſerve to ballance an Evidence of High Treaſon? Is not the Proof clear, that he did both know the Deſign and approve it? Mark what Gibbs tells the Company.

My Brother, ſaith he, for his part he will not ſpeak before you; but if you be honeſt Men: This is the News that was ſpoke, like one that was not conſenting to it. Well then, what is the News? He tells them why the Council of Six are broke up, Friday is the Day of Action, Ludlow is to be General. Can any Man be privy to theſe things, and relate them ſo cheerfully, and yet not be conſenting? Believe it, it is a hard matter to find greater Evidence of a Knowledge and Conſent againſt any Conſpirator, until he break out into open Action. Sellers, he ſays that the Witneſſes do not agree; for Mr. Hill ſpeaks, that he ſaid there was five hundred Arms delivered, and forty Men went without Arms, but within two or three days there would be more. And when Riggs comes to ſpeak, he ſays, he did ſay Arms were delivered, and and more would be, but he did not remember what number; and becauſe they agree in the thing, but not in the number, therefore he thinks they diſagree in the matter. Obſerve what reaſon was there that Riggs comes to inquire of Sellers for Arms, becauſe Sellers told him the day before Arms were delivered, and more would be, he thought, therefore he came to a very proper Perſon to tell him. If you mark, Sellers does deny openly in the Court that ever he ſaw the face of Hill till he was apprehended, altho Hill was with Riggs when the Arms were ſpoken of upon the Exchange: And then he ſays again, that Hill ſpeaks by hearſay, he is out in that too; for Mr. Hill ſwears expreſly, he heard the words themſelves from Sellers. Then here are theſe before you, four Witneſſes againſt Tonge, two againſt Phillips, and his own Confeſſion: Here are two againſt Gibbs, with theſe Circumſtances, If you be honeſt Men, this is the News, &c. Here are two Witneſſes likewiſe againſt Stubbs, who was likewiſe preſent at all their Debates, even when the King himſelf was to have had the ſame Quarter with Ludlow. Now, Gentlemen, that there was a Conſpiracy, I think you have a clear Evidence: we may thank God, and the Care of the King and his Miniſters, that it went no further; but 'tis no thanks to theſe Men, they would have carried it to the extremity, had they had power. And without queſtion this was formed by other kind of Wits than theſe poor contemptible Agitators, who are now try'd for it: you ſee there was a Council of Forty, and an Under-Council of Six, a Declaration framed to ſcatter at the time of Action, and that Action directed to be both in the City and Country, juſt in effect at the ſame pitch of time; and that it might be ſo, a wicked and an impudent Letter is contrived, and many thouſand Copies diſperſed, and it wrought ſo far, that the Countries, much about the time appointed, were in great diſorder, as you have heard it proved. Is it not plain, that an evil Spirit went throughout the whole Nation, and animated the whole Party of Malecontents? Moſt evidently it was a terrible Conſpiracy. Gentlemen, 'tis true, it is a Queſtion of Blood, but 'tis Royal Blood, 'tis the Blood of Princes and Nobles, and it concerns the Peace and Security of the Kingdom, and every Man's Propriety, and of Religion; for they had left no Man of Conſcience or Reputation behind, if they had prevailed. Conſider the Maſſacre theſe Men would have committed, had they proſpered, and oppoſe that to the pretended Maſſacre which they gave out by their Letter the Papiſts would have committed. Conſider that you have the Life of the King in your hands, and I doubt not but he and the whole Kingdom ſhall always be ſafe in the Verdicts of honeſt Men.

Sir Robert Forſter. My Maſters of the Jury, I cannot ſpeak long to you, you underſtand the Nature of this Buſineſs, ſuch as I think you have not had the like Precedent in your time. My Speech will not give me leave to diſcourſe of it; for the Witneſſes, they are none but ſuch as may ſatisfy all honeſt Men: it is clear they all agreed to ſubvert the Government, to deſtroy his Majeſty; what can you have more? Two of the Witneſſes are without exception, but I do not ſee any way but their Teſtimony is good. For the Parties, they in themſelves are very inconſiderable; theſe are but the Out-Boughs, and if ſuch Fellows are not met withal, theſe kind of People are the fitteſt Inſtruments to ſet up a Jack Straw and a Wat Tyler: therefore you muſt lop off theſe, or elſe they will encourage others. You ſee one of their own Company hath confeſs'd the Fact, out of Remorſe of his own Conſcience. But I leave the Evidence to you: go together.

Officer was ſworn to keep the Jury.

The Jury withdraw'd, and after an hour's Conſultation, the Jury return'd.

Silence was commanded, and James Hind fetch'd from the Goal to the Bar.

Clerk of the Peace. Gentlemen, anſwer to your Names; Edmond Butler, Clement Pung, [and the reſt of the Jury before mentioned] are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of the Peace. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. The Foreman.

Cl. of the Peace. Set up Thomas Tonge to the Bar: Thomas Tonge hold up thy Hand; look upon him, Maſters: How ſay you, is he guilty of the Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty?

Jury. Guilty.

Clerk of Newgate. Look to him, Keeper.

Cl. of the Peace. What Goods and Chattels?

Jury. None.

Cl. of the Peace. George Phillips to the Bar: How ſay you, is he guilty of the High Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty?

Jury. Guilty.

Clerk of Newgate. Look to him, Keeper.

Cl. of the Peace. What Goods and Chattels?

Jury. None.

Cl. of the Peace. Francis Stubbs to the Bar: How ſay you, is he guilty of the High Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty?

Jury. Guilty.

Clerk of Newgate. Look to him, Keeper.

Cl. of the Peace. What Goods and Chattels?

Jury. None.

Cl. of the Peace. John Sellers to the Bar: How ſay you, is he guilty of the High Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty?

Jury. Guilty.

Clerk of Newgate. Look to him, Keeper.

Cl. of the Peace. What Goods and Chattels?

Jury. None.

Cl. of the Peace. Nathaniel Gibbs to the Bar: How ſay you, is he guilty of the High Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty?

Jury. Guilty.

Clerk of Newgate. Look to him, Keeper.

Cl. of the Peace. What Goods and Chattels?

Jury. None.

Cl. of the Peace. Hearken to your Verdict, as the Court hath recorded it. You ſay that Thomas Tonge is guilty of the Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, and ſo all the reſt. And you ſay, that they, nor any of them had any Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, at the time of committing the ſaid Treaſon, or at any time ſithence, to your knowledge; and this you ſay all.

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of the Peace. Thomas Tonge hold up thy Hand, thou haſt been indicted of High Treaſon, thou haſt thereunto pleaded Not guilty, and for thy Tryal haſt put thyſelf upon God and the Country, and the Country hath found thee guilty; what haſt thou to ſay for thyſelf, why the Court ſhould not proceed to Judgment, and thereupon award Execution of thee according to the Law?

Tonge. I pray Mercy from the King, I cry for Mercy from the King.

Clerk

Clerk of Newgate. Tye him up, Executioner.

Cl. of the Peace. George Phillips, hold up thy Hand; thou art in the ſame caſe that Thomas Tonge is, what canſt thou ſay? &c.

Phillips kneeled down, and ſaid, I pray the Mercy of the King and the Honourable Bench.

Clerk of Newgate. Tye him up, Executioner.

Cl. of the Peace. Francis Stubbs, hold up thy Hand; thou art in the ſame caſe the two laſt Priſoners before thee are, what canſt thou ſay? &c.

Stubbs. I beg mercy, I was merely drawn in.

Clerk of Newgate. Tye him up, Executioner.

Cl. of the Peace. John Sellers, hold up thy Hand; thou art, &c. What canſt thou ſay? &c.

Sellers. I would intreat this Honourable Bench to conſider my Condition, and what my Charge is; I delivered no Arms, if I had known where they had been, I would have diſcovered them: I beg Mercy from the King and this Honourable Bench.

Clerk of Newgate. Tye him up, Executioner.

Cl. of the Peace. Nathaniel Gibbs, hold up thy Hand; thou art, &c. What canſt thou ſay? &c.

Gibbs. And pleaſe this Honourable Bench, I have ſomething to ſay, I am innocent as to my Conſcience of acting any thing treaſonable againſt his Majeſty; the Lord forgive the Witneſſes: I beg the Mercy of the King.

Clerk of Newgate. Tye him up, Executioner.

Cl. of the Peace. James Hind, hold up thy Hand; thou art guilty of the Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt indicted by thy own Confeſſion, what canſt thou ſay? &c.

Hind. I have nothing to ſay, but humbly beg the Mercy of the King.

Clerk of Newgate. Tye him up, Executioner.

Cryer. O Yes, my Lords, the King's Juſtices command all manner of Perſons to keep ſilence while Judgment is in giving, upon pain of Impriſonment.

Sir Robert Forſter. Thomas Tonge, George Phillips, Francis Stubbs, James Hind, John Sellers, and Nathaniel Gibbs, you ſix Priſoners at the Bar, you have been here indicted for one of the greateſt Crimes that can be committed upon Earth, as to this World, againſt God, our King, and your Country, and againſt every good Body that is in this Land, for that capital Sin of High Treaſon, which is a Sin inexpiable, and indeed hath no equal Sin as to this World. Upon this you have ſeverally been arraigned, and have ſeverally (except one) pleaded Not guilty, and put yourſelves upon God and the Country for your Tryals; and your Country have found you guilty: For the five that are found guilty, I muſt ſay, that in you I find little Remorſe, little Senſe of your Sin. For the little Man there, Hind, he hath much ſhew'd his Penitency. The Manner and Circumſtances of this, moſt Men here believe this did not originally ariſe from your particular ſelves, it muſt be put into you by ſome others: You ſpeak as if you deſired Mercy; where was your Mercy, that would have deſtroy'd King and Country, and maſſacred many Millions of Souls, no Reſpect of any Perſon, but your own Fellows? I ſpeak this, that you may be the more ſenſible of your own Crime, that you may truly, out of the Remorſe of Conſcience, be ſorry for your Sin: You know very well the old Counſel, and it is a good one, Fear God, and honour the King, and meddle not with them that are given to Change. Meddling with them that are given to Change, has brought too much miſchief already to this Nation; and if you will commit the ſame Sin, you muſt receive the ſame Puniſhment: for happy is he, that by other Mens harms takes heed. I ſhall not ſpend long time with you, but if you will as much as you can diſcover the Actors herein, you will do God, the King, and your Country good Service. It remains that the Court proceed to Judgment: and therefore you ſix, the one by his own Confeſſion, and other five by Conviction of Law, the Judgment of this Court is, 'That you be convey'd 'back to the place from whence you came, and 'from thence to be drawn upon an Hurdle to the 'place of Execution; and there you ſhall be 'hanged by the Neck, and being alive ſhall be cut 'down, and your Privy-Members to be cut off, 'your Entrails to be taken out of your Body, and '(you living) the ſame to be burnt before your 'eyes, and your Head to be cut off, your Body to 'be divided into four Quarters, and your Head 'and Quarters to be diſpoſed of at the pleaſure of 'the King's Majeſty: And God have mercy upon 'your Souls.'

At Juſtice-Hall in the Old-Baily, Febr. 20. in the Morning.

THE Court being ſet, Proclamation was made: 'O Yes! All manner of Perſons that 'have any thing more to do at this Seſſions of the 'Peace, and Seſſions of Oyer and Terminer, held 'for the City of London, and Seſſions of Goal-'Delivery holden for the City of London and Coun-'ty of Middleſex; draw near and give your Atten-'dance, for now the Court will proceed to the 'Pleas of the Crown of the ſaid City and County.'

God ſave the King.

Silence commanded.

Clerk of the Peace. Set John Twyn to the Bar: [who was ſet there accordingly.] John Twyn, hold up thy Hand.

Twyn. I deſire to underſtand the meaning of it. [But being told he muſt hold up his Hand in order to his Tryal, he held it up.]

Clerk, &c. 'Thou ſtandeſt indicted in London by 'the Name of John Twyn, late of London Stationer, 'for that thou as a falſe Traytor againſt the moſt 'Illuſtrious Charles the Second, by the Grace of 'God, of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, 'King, Defender of the Faith, &c. thy ſupreme 'and natural Lord and Sovereign—not having 'the Fear of God in thine Heart, nor weighing 'the Duty of thy Allegiance, but being moved and 'ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil; and the 'cordial Love, true Duty, and natural Obedience, 'which true and faithful Subjects towards our So-'vereign Lord the King bear, and of right ought 'to bear, altogether withdrawing; minding and 'with all thy force intending the Peace and com-'mon Tranquillity of this Kingdom to diſturb; 'and Sedition and Rebellion within theſe his Ma-'jeſty's Kingdoms to move, ſtir up, and procure; 'and Diſcord between our ſaid Sovereign and his 'Subjects to make and move; the 27th Day of 'October, in the Year of the Reign of our ſaid So-'vereign Lord Charles the Second, by the Grace 'of God, &c. the 15th, at the Pariſh of St. Bar-'tholomews, in the Ward of Farringdon without, Lon-'don, aforeſaid, traitorouſly didſt compoſe, ima-'gine, and intend the Death and final Deſtruction 'of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, and the 'Antient and Regal Government of England to 'change and ſubvert; and our ſaid Sovereign Lord 'the King of his Crown and Regal Government 'to depoſe and deprive. And theſe thy moſt wic-'ked Treaſons and traitorous Imaginations to ful-'fil, thou the ſaid John Twyn, the ſaid 27th Day 'of October, in the Year aforeſaid, in the Pariſh 'and Ward aforeſaid, adviſedly, deviliſhly, and 'maliciouſly didſt declare, by imprinting a certain 'Seditious, Poiſonous, and Scandalous Book, en-'titled, A Treatiſe of the Execution of Juſtice, &c. '—In which ſaid Book, amongſt other things, 'thou the ſaid John Twyn, the 27th Day of October, 'in the Year aforeſaid, in the Pariſh and Ward 'aforeſaid, falſly, maliciouſly, and traitorouſly didſt 'imprint, &c.—againſt the Duty of thy Alle-'giance, and the Statute in that caſe made and 'provided; and againſt the Peace of our ſaid So-'vereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.'

What ſay'ſt thou, John Twyn, art thou Guilty of this High Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt indicted, or Not guilty?

Twyn. I deſire leave to ſpeak a few words: My Lord, I am a very poor Man; I have been in Priſon ſeveral Months——.

Clerk. Are you Guilty, or Not guilty?

Twyn. With all due Submiſſion to your Honours, I deſire to ſpeak a few words——

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. You muſt firſt plead to your Indictment, and then you may ſay what you will; that's the Rule of the Law. We receive no Expoſtulations till you have pleaded to the Indictment, Guilty or Not guilty.

Twyn. I do not intend to anſwer to the Indictment, by what I ſhall now ſay; I am a poor Man, have a Family and three ſmall Children, I am ignorant of the Law, and have been kept Priſoner divers Months——

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Pray plead to the Indictment; you ſhall be heard, ſay what you will afterwards.

Twyn. I humbly thank you, my Lord.

Clerk. Are you Guilty, or Not guilty?

Twyn. I beſeech you to allow me Counſel, and ſome Conſideration; I deſire it with all Submiſſion.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. You muſt plead firſt; then ask what you will.

Clerk. Are you Guilty, or Not guilty?

Twyn. Not guilty of thoſe Crimes.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. God forbid you ſhould.

Clerk. How wilt thou be try'd?

Twyn. I deſire to be try'd in the preſence of that God that is the Searcher of all Hearts, and the Diſpoſer of all things.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. God Almighty is preſent here; there is no other Tryal by the Law of England, but by God and the Peers, that is the Country, honeſt Men. You ſhall have all your Challenges, and all that's due to you, by the help of God; we are bound to be your Counſel, to ſee you have no wrong: therefore put yourſelf upon your Tryal, ſay how you will be try'd.

Twyn. I deſire to be try'd in the Preſence of God.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. So you ſhall: God Almighty is preſent here, looks down, and beholds what we do here; and we ſhall anſwer ſeverely, if we do you any wrong. We are as careful of our Souls, as you can be of yours. You muſt anſwer in the words of the Law.

Twyn. By God and the Country.

Clerk. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Now ſay what you will.

Twyn. I am a very poor Man.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Nay, let me interrupt you thus far: Whatever you ſpeak in your Defence, to acquit yourſelf of this Crime, that you may reſerve till by and by. This is but an Arraignment; afterwards the Evidence for the King is to be heard, then make your Defence. If you have any Witneſſes on your part, let's know their Names, we'll take care they ſhall come in. If I did not miſtake, you deſired to have Counſel; was that your Requeſt?

Twyn. Yes.

Ld Chief Juſtice Hyde. Then I will tell you, we are bound to be of Counſel with you, in point of Law; that is, the Court, my Brethren and my ſelf, are to ſee that you ſuffer nothing for your want of Knowledge in Matter of Law; I ſay, we are to be of Counſel with you. But for this horrid Crime, (I will hope in Charity you are not guilty of it, but if you are) it is the moſt abominable and barbarous Treaſon that ever I heard of, or any Man elſe: The very Title of the Book (if there were no more) is as perfectly Treaſon as poſſibly can be. The whole Book through, all that is read in the Indictment, not one Sentence, but is as abſolute High Treaſon, as ever I yet heard of. A Company of Mad-brains, under pretence of the Worſhip and Service of God, to bring in all Villanies and Atheiſm, (as is ſeen in that Book.) What a horrid thing is this! But you ſhall have free Liberty of defending your ſelf. To the Matter of Fact, whether it be ſo or no: In this Caſe the Law does not allow you Counſel to plead for you; but in Matter of Law, we are of Counſel with you, and it ſhall be our Care to ſee that you have no Wrong done you.

Clerk. Set Simon Dover to the Bar: [Who being ſet, his Indictment was read to the purpoſe following.]

Thou ſtandeſt indicted in London, by the Name of Simon Dover, late of London Stationer, for that thou, &c. the 15th Day of Febr, in the 13th Year of the Reign, &c. at the Pariſh of St. Leonard's Foſter-lane, in the Ward of Alderſgate, London, falſly, maliciouſly and wickedly, didſt imprint a certain falſe, malicious, ſcandalous and ſeditious Book, intitled, The Speeches and Prayers of ſome of the late King's Judges, &c. and the ſame didſt ſell and utter, againſt the Duty of thy Allegiance, &c. How ſayeſt thou, Simon Dover, art thou guilty of this Sedition and Offence, whereof thou ſtandeſt indicted, or not guilty?

Dover. My Lord, and the Honourable Bench, I deſire I may be heard a few Words——

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. When you have pleaded, you ſhall.

Dover. I ſhall be willing to plead——

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. You muſt either confeſs it, or plead Not Guilty. I hope you are not guilty of this foul Crime.

Dover. I am not, by the Laws of England, guilty.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. You ſhall be tryed by the Laws of England, whether you are guilty or no.

Dover. I am willing to be ſo, and I am glad I am come before you to that purpoſe, having been long a Priſoner: I am not guilty of any thing in this Indictment, neither as to Matter, Time nor Place.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. What do you mean by Time and Place?

Dover. I am not guilty in Manner or Form. And now, my Lord, I being altogether ignorant of the Law, I humbly beg Counſel, and a Copy of my Indictment: I hope I ſhall not be deſtroyed, becauſe I am ignorant of the Law: I have been eighteen Weeks cloſe Priſoner.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. What would you have?

Dover. I deſire Time, and Counſel aſſigned me, and a Copy of my Indictment.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. For a Copy of your Indictment, though it be for a foul Offence, yet (in favour to you, it being not made ſo Capital as the other) we cannot deny it you: For Counſel you may have what you will, we need not aſſign it. [Make him a Copy,] but I will tell you, we ſhall try it now.

Dover. I do proteſt I knew not what I came for; I never imagined what my Indictment was, I know not what there's in't——

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. You ſhall have a Copy made preſently. If you have Counſel or Witneſſes, ſend for them; we muſt try you to-day; but you will have ſome time, for we will begin with the other.

Dover. I beg I may have a Copy of the Indictment in Engliſh, I cannot underſtand Latin.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. That that is againſt you, is in Engliſh; the Latin ſignifies no more, but that you did ſeditiouſly and maliciouſly print all that which is in Engliſh.

Dover. I hope I have done nothing, but I ſhall acquit my ſelf of.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. I hope you may; but we can give you nothing but a Copy of the Record: ſend for your own Clerk to underſtand it.

Clerk. Set Thomas Brewſter to the Bar: [Who was ſet; and then his Indictment was read, which was;]

That he the ſaid Thomas Brewſter, late of London, Stationer, not having, &c. [in the Form aforeſaid] the 15th Day of February, &c. at the Pariſh of Little St. Bartholomew's, in the Ward of Faringdon without, London, maliciouſly, &c. did cauſe to be imprinted the aforeſaid Book of Speeches and Prayers, &c. and the ſame did ſell and utter, againſt the Duty, &c.

Who being demanded, Whether he was guilty of that Sedition and Offence? anſwered, Not Guilty.

Clerk. How will you be tryed?

Brewſter. By God and the Country.

Clerk. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Say what you will now.

Brewſter. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I am wholly ignorant of the Proceedings of the Law; I have been a cloſe Priſoner theſe eighteen Weeks, no body to adviſe with me, ſcarce my Wife ſuffered to come to me; I deſire ſome time to take advice.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. I doubt we ſhall not be able, if you mean till next Seſſions——

Brewſter. No, my Lord, I have had too long Impriſonment already, would I had been here the firſt Seſſions after I was a Priſoner.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. If you deſire a Copy of the Indictment and Counſel, you ſhall have it.

Brewſter. I humbly thank you; but I muſt have time to conſult them, or they will do me little good.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. If you have any Friends or Witneſſes, you may ſend for them.

Brewſter. I thank you, my Lord.

Clerk. Thomas Brewſter, thou ſtandeſt again indicted in London by the Name of, &c. for that thou not having, &c. the 10th Day of July, in the 13th Year, &c. at the Pariſh of Little St. Bartholomew's, in the Ward of Faringdon without, London, &c. falſly, maliciouſly, ſcandalouſly and ſeditiouſly, didſt cauſe to be imprinted a Book, intitled, The Phœnix, or the Solemn League and Covenant, &c.—— And the ſaid Book didſt ſell and and utter, againſt the Duty, &c. How ſayeſt thou? Art thou guilty of this Sedition and Offence whereof thou ſtandeſt indicted, or not guilty?

Brewſter. Not Guilty, my Lord.
Clerk. How will you be tryed?
Brewſter. By God and the Country.

Clerk. Nathan Brooks to the Bar.

Thou ſtandeſt indicted in London by the Name of Nathan Brooks, late of London, Stationer; not having, &c. [The ſame as to Make, Time and Place, with that of Dover's] and knowing the ſaid Book to be ſcandalous and ſeditious, did ſell, utter and publiſh the ſame, againſt the Duty, &c. How ſayeſt thou, Nathan Brooks, art thou guilty of this Sedition and Offence whereof thou ſtandeſt indicted, or not guilty?

Brooks. Not Guilty.
Clerk. How will you be tryed?
Brooks. By God and the Country.
Clerk. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. If you deſire to have a Copy of your Indictment and Counſel, you may have it.

Brooks. I am a poor Man, I have not Money to get Counſel; I hope I ſhall not want that that belongs to me by Law, for want of Money.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. You ſhall not, by the Grace of God.

Clerk. Set John Twyn, Simon Dover, Thomas Brewſter and Nathan Brooks, to the Bar.

Clerk. John Twyn, thoſe Men that you ſhall hear called, and perſonally appear, muſt paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon Tryal of your Life and Death; if you will challenge them or any of them, you muſt do it when they come to the Book to be ſworn, before they be ſworn. And you that are for Seditions and Offences, look to your Challenges.

Dover. We deſire we may have a Jury of Bookſellers and Printers, they being the Men that only underſtand our Buſineſs.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. There are thoſe already that underſtand it as well as Bookſellers or Printers; beſides, half the Jury are ſuch, and they are able to make the reſt underſtand it: but you may challenge whom you will.

The Jury were,

William Samborne,	William Hall,
William Rutland,	John Williams,
Thomas Honylove,	James Fleſher,
Robert Lucas,	Simon Waterſon,
Robert Beverſham,	Samuel Thomſon,
Richard Royſton,	Thomas Roycroft.

Who were ſeverally ſworn by the Oath following:

You ſhall well and truly try, and true Deliverance make, between our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Priſoners at the Bar, whom you ſhall have in charge, according to your Evidence. So help you God.

All Four. We are all ſatisfied with the Jury.

Clerk. Cryer, make Proclamation. O Yes, If any one can inform my Lords the King's Juſtices, the King's Serjeant, or the King's Attorney, before this Inqueſt be taken between our Sovereign Lord the King and the Priſoners at the Bar, let them come forth, and they ſhall be heard; for now the Priſoners ſtand at the Bar upon their Deliverance; and all others that are bound by Recognizance to give Evidence againſt any of the Priſoners at the Bar, come forth and give Evidence, or elſe you will forfeit your Recognizance.

Clerk. John Twyn, hold up thy Hand. You of the Jury, look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Cauſe; you ſhall underſtand that he ſtands indicted in London by the Name of John Twyn, late of London, Stationer: [Here the Indictment is read over again.] Upon this Indictment he hath been arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded Not Guilty; and for his Tryal, hath put himſelf upon God and the Country, which Country you are: Your Charge is to enquire whether he be guilty of the High Treaſon, in Manner and Form as he ſtands indicted, or not guilty: if you find him guilty, you ſhall inquire what Goods and Chattels, Lands and Tenements he had at the time of committing the ſaid Treaſon, or at any time ſithence. If you find him not guilty, you ſhall inquire whether he fled for it; if you find that he fled for it, you ſhall inquire of his Goods and Chattels, Lands and Tenements, as if you had found him guilty: If you find him not guilty, nor that he did fly for it, ſay ſo, and no more, and hear your Evidence.

Mr. North, Barriſter of the Law. John Twyn ſtands here indicted, for that he as a falſe Traytor to the moſt Illuſtrious Charles the Second, &c. not having the Fear of God before his Eyes, nor weighing the Duty of his Allegiance, &c. [Here was opened the Form of the Indictment] To which he hath pleaded Not Guilty; if there ſhall be ſufficient Evidence given you of the Charge in the Indictment, you muſt do the King and the Nation that Juſtice, as to find him guilty, that Sentence of Law may paſs on him.

Mr. Serjeant Morton. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, and you Gentlemen that are ſworn of this Jury, I am of Counſel with the King againſt John Twyn, the Priſoner here at Bar, who ſtands indicted of a moſt horrid and damnable Treaſon: It is, the compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King, to deprive him of his Crown and Royal Government, and to alter and change the antient Legal and Fundamental Government of this Kingdom; which he has endeavoured to do, and did intend to do, by printing a traytorous and ſeditious Book, which in it ſelf contains as many and as great Treaſons, as it was poſſible either for the Malice of the Devil, or the corrupt and treaſonable Thoughts of blood-thirſty Men to invent: It contains Treaſons againſt the King in his own Royal Perſon; againſt his Government, both Eccleſiaſtical and Civil; full of Treaſons, (as my Lord Chief Juſtice was pleaſed to obſerve to you) Treaſons againſt the Queen, Scandals againſt all manner of Profeſſions both in Church and Kingdom, of Magiſtracy and Miniſtry. My Lord, there are in this Indictment thirteen Paragraphs of that treaſonable Book recited; and each of them contains as many Treaſons as there be Lines in it. Nay, my Lord, this treaſonable Book was intended to ſet a Flame in this Nation, to raiſe and ſtir up Rebellion in this Kingdom againſt the King and his Government. I ſhall obſerve to your Lordſhip the Time when it was to be printed; it was in the beginning of October, your Lordſhip knows, and I do not doubt but the Jury have heard, that there was a great and dangerous Deſign in this Nation, ſet on foot by Men of dangerous Principles, to imbroil this Nation in a new War, for the Deſtruction of the King and his Government. It was executed in part, as far as Time and other Circumſtances would give way and leave to the Undertakers, (the 12th of October laſt;) and, my Lord, it was proved upon the Execution of a Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer at York, that there was a Council here in London, that ſat to prepare Matter for an Univerſal Rebellion all England over. They ſent their Agitators into the North, Weſt, all Parts, to give notice to their Party to be ready to riſe at a certain Time: ſeveral Days were appointed, but it ſeems they could not be ready till that 12th of October; for the ſeditious Books that were to lead on that Deſign, and the Libels and Declarations could not be printed before that Day: and truly that had been printed and publiſhed too, if there had not been great Diligence uſed by the King's Agents and Miniſters, to take them juſt as they were preparing it. This Book, Gentlemen, doth contain a great deal of Scandal upon the King's Government, diſperſing falſe and baſe Rumours, to the prejudice of it. It is a Rule in my Lord Coke, That the diſperſing of falſe and evil Rumours againſt the King and Government, and Libels upon Juſtices of the Kingdom, they are the Forerunners of Rebellion.

We ſhall now go to the Proof: We ſhall prove that this Priſoner at the Bar, to print this Book, had two Preſſes in one Room; That he himſelf did work at one of thoſe Preſſes, his Servants at the other, by his Command, and in his Preſence; That he did compoſe part of it, print the Sheets, correct the Proofs, and reviſe them all in his own Houſe, which were corrected and brought back into the Work-houſe by himſelf, in ſo ſhort a time, that they could not be carried abroad to correct, ſo that he muſt needs correct them himſelf; That this Work was done in the Night-time, (and it was proper, it was a Deed of great Darkneſs, and not fit indeed to ſee the Light; and it was well it was ſtrangled in the Birth, or elſe, for ought I know, we might by this time have been wallowing in our Blood.) We ſhall make it appear, that this Man, when Mr. L'Eſtrange came to ſearch his Houſe, brake the Forms, conveyed away as many of the Sheets as he could from the Preſs to other Places; yet notwithſtanding, God's Providence was ſo great in the Thing, that he left there three or four Sheets, which Mr. L'Eſtrange then ſeized on, and many more within a little time after: And ſomewhat of the ſame Matter remained upon part of a Form of Letter, which his Haſte would not give him leave to break. When he was charged with it by Mr. L'Eſtrange, he confeſſed that he had printed ſome Sheets of this ſeditious Book; and being demanded by Mr. L'Eſtrange, What he thought of it? He told him, He thought it was mettleſome Stuff: he had great Joy in it; he confeſſed he had received Money for printing of this, and much other Matter, taken upon Examination before Mr. Secretary. We ſhall call our Witneſſes; I ſhould have obſerved to you, That this Man would have it done with all the privacy that could be, and to be done forthwith; there was great Haſte of it, about the beginning of October, and the Deſign in the North was upon the 12th; ſo that it was clearly intended for that Deſign.

Several Witneſſes new ſworn.

Joſeph Walker. My Lord, whereas my Maſter is indicted for printing this Book——

Ld Hyde. Your Maſter! Who is your Maſter?

Walker. He at the Bar.

Ld Hyde. What ſay you of it?

Walker. I deſire to ſee the Book; [it was ſhewed him] about the four firſt Pages of this Treatiſe I compoſed.

Ld Hyde. Who delivered it to you to compoſe?

Walker. My Maſter delivered the Copy to me.

Ld Hyde. What do you mean by compoſing?

Walker. Setting the Letters.

Ld Hyde. Well, and you ſet the Letters to print according to the Copy; and you had it of your Maſter, had you?

Walker. Yes, my Lord; but all this Copy we did not print.

[Part of the Copy in Manuſcript being ſhewed him, he ſaid, He compoſed by that Copy.]

Serjeant Morton. How much did you print?

Walker. About three Sheets.

Serj. Morton. How many of thoſe did your Maſter compoſe?

Walker. Truly, Sir, I cannot tell.

Ld Hyde. Did he compoſe one?

Walker. As to a whole one, I cannot ſay.

Mr. Recorder. Did he compoſe the Title?

Walker. Here is no Title.

Mr. Recorder. No, read the top.

Walker. A Treatiſe of the Execution, &c. [He reads the Title.]

Mr. Recorder. Did your Maſter compoſe that?

Walker. No, I did.

Ld Hyde. Did your Maſter give you that to compoſe?

Walker. Yes.

Serj. Morton. Who compoſed the ſecond, third and fourth Sheet?

Walker. I compoſed ſome of them, but to particularize, I cannot.

Ld Hyde. Who gave you what you did?

Walker. My Maſter.

Ld Hyde. Can you turn to any part of that you did compoſe?

Walker. I cannot tell that.

Ld Hyde. You compoſed, you ſay, four Pages; there are eight in a Sheet: who compoſed the other of the ſame Sheet?

Walker. I think my Maſter did.

Ld Hyde. At the ſame Time, and in the ſame Room with you?

Walker. He wrought not in the ſame Room.

Ld Hyde. After you had ſtamp'd the Sheet, who did peruſe and over-read it, to ſee if it were right?

Walker. I carried them into the Kitchen, and laid them down upon the Dreſſer by my Maſter.

Ld Hyde. Who compared them?

Walker. I know not.

Ld Hyde. Who brought them back to you?

Walker. My Maſter brought them into the Work-houſe, and laid them down.

Ld Hyde. Was there any body in the Houſe that might correct it?

Walker. Not that I ſaw.

Ld Hyde. When you had carried a Sheet down, how long was it e'er it was brought back again?

Walker. About an Hour, or an Hour and a half.

Ld Hyde. Was there any body in the Houſe beſides you and your Maſter?

Walker. There was my Fellow-Apprentice and the Woman that keeps the Houſe.

Ld Hyde. Were there no Strangers there?

Walker. No, my Lord.

Mr. Recorder. Were they printed in your Maſter's Houſe?

Walker.

Walker. Yes.

Serj. Morton. What Room?

Walker. In the Preſs-Room.

Serj. Morton. Did your Maſter work at the Preſs about this Work, any part of the time?

Walker. Yes, I ſaw him beat ſome Sheets.

Ld Hyde. When you had printed one Sheet, were there not ſome Miſtakes of the Letters to be mended?

Walker. Yes, there were Literals.

Ld Hyde. Who made the Amendment?

Walker. Upon my Oath I cannot tell.

Ld Hyde. Do you believe it to be your Maſter's?

Walker. I cannot tell that.

Ld Hyde. Have you ſeen your Maſter write heretofore?

Walker. I have ſeen him write, but becauſe I have heard of them that could counterfeit Mens Hands, I dare not ſwear it was his Writing.

Ld Hyde. Were the Amendments that were brought back, like his Hand?

Walker. The Letters were ſomething like them, but I cannot ſwear poſitively that they were his.

Ld Hyde. No, that you cannot, unleſs you ſaw him write them; but was it like his Hand?

Walker. It was not much unlike his Hand.

Mr. Recorder. Did not your Maſter uſe to correct other Works before this?

Walker. Yes.

Mr. Recorder. Then by the Oath that you have taken, were not the Corrections of this Book like thoſe of other Corrections by his own Hand?

Walker. I know not that.

Mr. Recorder. Did any body correct Books in your Houſe but your Maſter?

Walker. No, Sir.

Serj. Morton. Did not you ſee your Maſter with Copy?

Walker. Yes, he had Copy before him.

Serj. Morton. What time was this printed? by Night or by Day?

Walker. In the Night-time.

Serj. Morton. What Directions did your Maſter give you about printing it, did he direct any Privacy?

Walker. He was not much deſirous of that.

Mr. Recorder. At what time did you work about it?

Walker. In the Morning, from two till four or five.

Serj. Morton. Pray, Sir, thus; were you in the Houſe when Mr. L'Eſtrange came up?

Walker. Yes.

Serj. Morton. Were you at work then or before?

Walker. Not when he was above, but immediately before, I was.

Mr. Recorder. You are not bound to conceal Treaſon, though you are bound to keep your Maſter's Secrets.

Serj. Morton. What were you then at work upon?

Walker. Upon the Signature D, the Sheet D of this Treatiſe.

Serj. Morton. What did your Maſter ſay, when you told him Mr. L'Eſtrange was below?

Walker. Very few words; I cannot be poſitive in them.

Serj. Morton. To what purpoſe were they?

Walker. Hearing ſome body knock at the Door, I went down into the Compoſing-Room, and looked through the Window, and ſaw People; I imagined Mr. L'Eſtrange was there, and I told my Maſter: whereupon he ſaid, He was undone, or to that effect.

Mr. Recorder. Did he not wiſh you to make haſte in compoſing it?

Walker. No, he did not.

Mr. Recorder. How long had you been at work upon it? how many Days?

Walker. I cannot tell juſtly.

Mr. Recorder. You can gueſs.

Walker. About three or four Days.

Mr. Recorder. Did not your Maſter work in that time?

Walker. He was in the Work-houſe, and did ſet Letters.

Mr. Recorder. Did he not likewiſe print?

Walker. Yes, he did.

Serj. Morton. Did not you, by his Direction, break the Form when Mr. L'Eſtrange came to ſearch?

Walker. I brake one indeed.

Serj. Morton. What became of the other?

Walker. My Fellow-Apprentice brake it.

Serj. Morton. By whoſe Direction?

Walker. I had no order for it; I brought it down, and went to ſet it againſt a Poſt, and it fell in pieces.

Serj. Morton. Did you ask your Maſter who delivered him this Copy to print?

Walker. I did ask him two ſeveral times; but he made no Anſwer.

Ld Hyde. Did he not ſay, He would not tell you; or that it was no matter to you; nor nothing?

Walker. Yes, he did afterwards ſay, It was no matter to me.

Mr. Recorder. Did not your Maſter nor Fellow-Apprentice tell you who brought the Copy?

Walker. No.

Mr. Recorder. And did not you know?

Walker. No.

Serj. Morton. Was he not uſed to tell you the Authors of Books that you printed?

Walker. The Authors he did not; but for whom they were printed he uſed to tell me. My Lord, I humbly beg pardon for what I did, I was his Apprentice.

Ld Hyde. How many Sheets did you print?

Walker. Two Reams on a Sheet, which makes a Thouſand.

Ld Hyde. The firſt Page, being the Title of it, your Maſter brought to you to compoſe; at the ſame time when you were compoſing one part, your Maſter was compoſing another part of the ſame Sheet in the next Room; and part of it your Maſter did print as well as compoſe: I think you ſaid this?

Walker. Yes.

Ld Hyde. Likewiſe that the Proofs were carried to him to overlook, and he brought them back within an Hour, or an Hour and half after, and laid them down in the Work-houſe; and that you ſaw the Hand of the Amendments, but you cannot ſwear it was his, only you ſay that it was not unlike it; and that he had corrected former Sheets that you had printed, and that the Hand with which he corrected others, and this, was alike; and that there was no Stranger in the Houſe to correct it?

Walker. Not that I ſaw.

Ld Hyde. This is the Subſtance of what you ſaid?

Walker. Yes.

Mr. Recorder. Did your other Man, or you, ever correct?

Walker.

Walker. No.

Mr. Recorder. Did he uſe other Correctors at any time?

Walker. Yes, about ſome Books.

Mr. Recorder. What Books.

Walker. Hooker's Eccleſiaſtical Policy.

Ld Hyde. You did riſe to work at Two of the clock in the Morning about it; and your Maſter ſaid when you told him Mr. L'Eſtrange was below, that he was undone?

Walker. It was ſo, my Lord.

Mr. North. Mr. L'Eſtrange, pray tell my Lord and the Jury of your taking this.

Mr. L'Eſtrange. My Lord, I do remember that three or four Days, or thereabouts, before the 12th of October laſt, I had notice of a Preſs that had been at work for ſeveral Nights in Cloth-Fair, and imployed a Perſon to watch the Houſe; who told me that they ſtill gave over early in the Morning, at Day-light, or ſoon after. At length Intelligence was brought me in theſe very Words, That now they were at it as hard as they could drive, (which was about Four in the Morning.) I aroſe, went to one of the King's Meſſengers, and deſired him to take a Printer by the way; who did ſo: and I called up a Conſtable, and ſo went to Twyn's Houſe, where we heard them at Work. I knocked a matter of a quarter of an Hour, and they would not open the Door; ſo that I was fain to ſend for a Smith to force it; but they perceiving that, opened the Door, and let us in. There was a Light when we came; but before the Door was opened, it was put out. When I was got up Stairs, and a Candle lighted, I found a Form broken, (that is, the Letters diſperſed) only one Corner of it ſtanding entire; which was compared by a Printer that was there, with a Corner of a Page newly printed, and appear'd to be the ſame. This Form was brought down out of the Preſs-Room into the Compoſing-Room. As yet we could not find the whole Impreſſion; but at laſt they were found thrown down a Pair of Back-Stairs. I remember they told me the Impreſſion was a Thouſand. I asked him where he had the Copy? He told me, He knew not; it was brought to him by an unknown Hand. I told him he muſt give an account of it. He told me at laſt, He had it from Calvert's Maid. I asked him where the Copy was? He told me, He could not tell. (When I ſpeak of the Copy, I mean the Manuſcript.) We ſearched near two Hours, and could not find it: And at length went thence to the Conſtable's Houſe in Smithfield, and ſtaid there a while with the Priſoner. I asked him, Mr. Twyn, ſaid I, who corrected this Sheet? Alas, ſaid he, I have no Skill in ſuch Things. Who reviſed it then? Who fitted it for the Preſs? Truly I had no body but my ſelf; I read it over. What thought you upon reading it? Methoughts it was mettleſome Stuff: The Man was a hot fiery Man that wrote it. But he knew no Hurt in it.

Serjeant Morton. When you had taken theſe Sheets, were they wet, or not?

Mr. L'Eſtrange. They were not only wet, but half of them were imperfect, printed only on one ſide. Miſſing the Copy, I told him after he was carried to Whitehall; Mr. Twyn, (ſaid I) it may poſſibly do you ſome good yet, to bring forth the Copy: If you will be ſo ingenuous to produce the Copy, and diſcover the Author, you may find Mercy for your ſelf; pray therefore get this Copy: Perchance I may make ſome uſe of it. After that, his Servant Bazilla Winſor brought out this part of the Copy: [producing a Sheet of Manuſcript in Court.]

Ld Hyde. Joſeph Walker, was the whole Copy of this Book in the Houſe at that time, when you compoſed that which you did?

Walker. I cannot tell: I ſaw it but Sheet by Sheet?

Mr. Recorder. Did not you ſee the whole entire Copy in your Maſter's Hand?

Walker. No: But [taking ſome part of the Manuſcript in his Hand, ſaid] this is the Hand that I compoſed by.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. L'Eſtrange, where had you the entire Copy?

Mr. L'Eſtrange. It was only the Copy of the laſt Sheet, that I took in the Preſs.

Mr. Recorder. Who helped you to that?

Mr. L'Eſtrange. Bazilla Winſor, by Direction of the Priſoner, as I conceive: For I told him, If you can help me to the Copy, it may do you ſome good; and ſoon after part of it was brought me by her. I asked Mr. Twyn further, How did you diſpoſe of thoſe Sheets which you had printed, thoſe ſeveral Heaps, whither are they gone? He told me, He had delivered thoſe Sheets to Miſtreſs Calvert's Maid, at the Roſe in Smithfield.

Mr. Recorder. You ſay he told you Miſtreſs Calvert's Maid received them of him; did you ſince ſpeak with that Maid?

Mr. L'Eſtrange. I was long in ſearching Twyn's Houſe, and one of his Apprentices made his Eſcape, and probably gave notice of it: For the Night I went to Miſtreſs Calvert's Houſe, ſhe and the Maid too were fled. I have ſince taken the Miſtreſs, and ſhe is now in Cuſtody. I have heard nothing of the Maid ſince.

Juſtice Keeling. Twyn owned to you that he had corrected ſome of the Sheets; that he had read them, and ſaid, It was mettleſome Stuff.

Mr. L'Eſtrange. I did ask him in the Houſe of the Conſtable, Who corrected this? The Corrector muſt certainly know what it was. Said he, I have no Skill in correcting. But when I ſpeak of correcting, I mean who reviſed it, overlooked it for the Preſs? I read it over, ſays he.

Twyn. I never ſaid ſuch a Word.

Mr. L'Eſtrange. He ſpake this in the Preſence of two or three here preſent. Could you read over this Book, ſaid I, and not know that it was not fit to be printed? I thought it was a hot fiery Fellow; it was Mettle, or mettleſome Stuff: Somewhat to that effect.

Serjeant Morton. What did you hear him confeſs before Sir Henry Bennet?

Mr. L'Eſtrange. He owned the Thing; that is, he acknowledged he had printed the Sheet I ſhewed there, and two other Sheets of the ſame Treatiſe.

Serjeant Morton. Did he acknowledge he corrected them?

Mr. L'Eſtrange. I know not whether before Sir Henry Bennet he did, or no.

Serjeant Morton. What know you about Money received by him?

Mr. L'Eſtrange. He ſaid Calvert's Maid paid him 40 s. in part for that Work.

Twyn. I ſaid I had received Money of Calvert's Maid for Work I had done; but named not that.

Mr. Dickenſon ſworn.

About the 7th Day of October, it being Wedneſday, as I remember, about Five a-clock, we attended Mr. L'Eſtrange, my ſelf and others: We came to the Houſe of the Priſoner in Cloth-Fair, and upon the Back-ſide of his Houſe we ſtood liſtening a good while, and heard Preſſes a working.

ing. Upon that I came to the Fore-part, by Mr. L'Eſtrange's Order, and knocked; but none would anſwer: I took the Conſtable's Staff, and knocked again; and none would anſwer yet. After that Mr. L'Eſtrange knocked near half an Hour; and no body coming, he at laſt ſent for a Smith's Hammer to force it open. Afterwards they came down, and opened the Door. Then Mr. L'Eſtrange and the Printer (Mr. Mabb) went up Stairs: I continued below with the Conſtable and the King's Meſſenger, to obſerve whether any went in or out. After which, ſome Sheets fell down on the other ſide of the Houſe. Meeting with one of them, and perceiving they had diſcovered the Sheets they enquired after, I read ſome part of it; and finding what it was, I went up, and found the Sheets thrown behind the Door. Mr. Twyn, (ſaid I) I wonder you would print ſuch a Thing as this: You could not chuſe but know that it was very dangerous to do any ſuch Thing. He anſwered, That he did not conſider what it was. Queſtionleſs, ſaid I, you could not but know it was very dangerous; for when you reviſed it, you muſt needs know the Senſe of it. I think it was a dangerous Buſineſs; what did you think of it? Says he, I thought he was a good ſmart angry Fellow; it was mettleſome Stuff; or to that purpoſe. This was the Subſtance of our Diſcourſe. I did ſee ſome of the Sheets printed on one ſide, and ſome on both ſides: The Form lay diſordered; yet not ſo, but there was one Corner of it yet remaining, and I having the Sheet in my Hand did compare them together, and, to the beſt of my Remembrance, I do remember theſe very Words, Execution of Judgment, and Lord have.

Ld Hyde. Who did he ſay reviſed the Preſs?

Dickenſon. He ſeemed to confeſs that he had corrected it himſelf: for when I urged it to him, That he could not chuſe but know the Matter of it by reading it; Truly, ſays he, I thought he was an angry ſmart Fellow: It was good mettleſome Stuff, indeed.

Judge Keeling. The Queſtion asked by my Lord is, Whether he did confeſs he reviſed it, or whether you did collect it from his Reply?

Dickenſon. Truly, by that Anſwer I gueſſed he corrected it.

Recorder. Did he confeſs that he read it?

Dickenſon. I put that Queſtion to him; and, to the beſt of my Remembrance, he did not deny it.

Ld Hyde. To Mr. L'Eſtrange he confeſſed he read it over.

Thomas Mabb ſworn.

My Lord, I was with Mr. L'Eſtrange in this Man's Houſe; and being there, going up, we found the Preſs had been lately at work. There was at each Preſs a Sheet laid; I took them off the Tinpin, [ſome of the Jury underſtand that Term:] They were juſt laid upon the Points, printed on one ſide. I gave Mr. L'Eſtrange theſe two Sheets, the ſame with theſe, [ſhewing two Sheets] ſome were perfect, others imperfect. I could not find the Form a great while. I gave him the Sheet to peruſe; and in the mean while I went down, and below I found the two Forms, but broken: Somewhat indeed was ſtanding; whereof I took part in my hand, and read in the Letters. Mr. Dickenſon having the Sheets, he heard what I read, and looking on the Sheet, found them agree.

Twyn. What were the Words that you read?

Mr. Mabb. The Words were Execution and Judgment, and Lord have —— There was a Back-pair of Stairs out of his Preſs-Room, partly between his Houſe and his Neighbour's, and in the Hurry they had thrown the Sheets down there; part fell behind the Door, and part at the bottom. When I queſtioned him how many was done, he ſaid five hundred; but I adjudged thoſe I ſaw to be about ſeven hundred and fifty. Looking again over the Door, I eſpied the remainder of the Sheets, about two hundred and fifty more, and I brought them together; and then he owned there was one thouſand.

Ld Hyde. What elſe do you know?

Mr. Mabb. At the Conſtable's Houſe I heard him uſe the Words, That it was mettleſome Stuff, and that no body corrected it but himſelf. Said I, I wonder you would offer to do it; you could not compoſe it, but you muſt underſtand it. Said he, It was my bad Fortune to meddle with it. Said I, You loſt a Preſs but a little while ſince, I wonder you would do this. He ſeemed to be ſorrowful.

Serjeant Morton. He did confeſs he corrected it.

Mr. Mabb. Yes, my Lord.

Twyn. No, my Lord, I did not.

John Wickham ſworn.

Upon the 7th of October, as I take it, about Four a-clock in the Morning, Mr. L'Eſtrange came to my Houſe, being one of the King's Meſſengers, and told me I muſt go immediately with him to Cloth-Fair, and ſent me to call one Mr. Mabb by the way. I met Mr. L'Eſtrange near Mr. Twyn's Houſe between Five and Six a-clock: We had a Conſtable, and went and knocked at the Door: They knocked at leaſt half an Hour before they got in. I heard ſome Papers tumbling down, and heard a rattling above, before they went up. But I ſtood at the Back-Door, to ſecure any from running out that way; and at laſt, when they ſaid there were ſome Sheets thrown into the next Houſe, I went and looked, and there were two or three hundred, and they were wet, newly come off the Preſs. That's all I can ſay.

Serjeant Morton. Did you hear this Man ſay that he had corrected it?

Wickham. No: But I having him in Cuſtody at my Houſe, I asked him about it; he ſaid, It was a very bitter Thing, that it was his unhappy Fortune to meet with it.

Jury. Did he confeſs he printed it?

Wickham. Not to me.

Serjeant Morton. He ſaid, It was a bitter Thing; and that it was his unhappy Fortune to meet with it: Make the beſt of that; compare that with the reſt of the Evidence.

William Story ſworn.

Gentlemen of the Jury, upon the 7th of October laſt, early in the Morning, I was ſent for to Mr. L'Eſtrange into Cloth-Fair: We went to the Houſe of this Twyn. After ſome time knocking, they went up Stairs, and brought down ſeveral Papers: I know not what they were. I went into the next Houſe with Mr. Wickham, and there we found two or three hundred Sheets, and brought them to Mr. L'Eſtrange. I asked the Priſoner at my Houſe, whether he could not write or read? He ſaid, Yes. Did not you uſe to read what you printed? He ſaid, ſaid, Yes. Did not you know Treaſon when you read it? It was a fiery Thing; I did not mind it much: But I ſhould have got Money by it.

Mr. Mabb. He owned he had but a very ſmall Price for the doing of it.

Mr. Joſeph Williamſon ſworn.

That which I can ſay is, That I know this [looking upon a Paper] to be my own Hand-writing, and to be the Examination taken of this Twyn. I took it; and he owned it after it was written.

Serjeant Morton. What was the Subſtance of it?

Ld Hyde. What did he confeſs before Mr. Secretary, when he was examined?

Mr. Williamſon. He ſaid, That the Copy of the Book was brought to him by one Evans, Maid to Miſtreſs Calvert. That for the Author, being asked if he knew him, he ſaid he did not; and that he had ſeen the Copy of three Sheets of the Book; that he had printed only two of thoſe Sheets, a thouſand Exemplaries of each.

Judge Keeling. Did he confeſs that?

Mr. Williamſon. Yes. And further, That he had delivered them to this Evans at the Sign of the Roſe in Smithfield; that he himſelf had corrected thoſe Sheets he had printed, and that he had read them after they were printed; that for his Pains and Printing of them, he had received forty Shillings in part from this Maid at the Delivery of them at the Roſe; that the Maid carried away thoſe Exemplaries from the Roſe; and that he parted with her at the Door.

Serjeant Morton. I hope you obſerve, Gentlemen. We have now done: We deſire the Priſoner may give his Anſwer to it; and then we ſhall make our Reply.

Ld Hyde. What ſay you? You have heard the Witneſſes, and what is laid to your Charge.

Twyn. I did never read a Line of it in my Life.

Ld Hyde. That's impoſſible. I'll tell you: Firſt, your own Man, who ſet part, ſwears you did both ſet and print part of this Book your ſelf: You gave him the Title to ſet. You compoſed one part of the Book, whilſt he was compoſing another part. Is it poſſible you could compoſe, and not read a Line of it? He tells you further, when the firſt Sheet was printed, he brought it into the Kitchin, and laid it down, knew not of any one in the Houſe but your ſelf; about an Hour, or an Hour and half after, you brought it back again corrected, laid it down; and the Hand that corrected it, was not unlike your Hand upon other Corrections of Books. Pray, Brother Morton, let the Jury have Books, and Mr. Lee read the Indictment, that they may ſee they agree.

Serjeant Morton. I obſerved to you there were thirteen Treaſonable Paragraphs; you ſhall find them marked out in the Margent.

Ld Hyde. You ſhall ſee there are Treaſons with a witneſs: See the very Title.

Mr. Lee. [Reads the Title of the Indictment.] 'A Treatiſe of the Execution of Juſtice: Where-'in is clearly proved, That the Execution of Judg-'ment and Juſtice is as well the Peoples as the 'Magiſtrates Duty; and if the Magiſtrates per-'vert Judgment, the People are bound by the Law 'of God to execute Judgment without them, and 'upon them.'

Ld Hyde. That you gave to your Man to ſet.

Mr. Lee reads, 'It is one of the Scarlet Sins of 'this Nation, that the People ſuffered their Ru-'lers, &c.'—— The particular Paſſages are too impious to be publiſhed, and indeed too foul to be repeated, but in Subſtance. Thoſe mentioned in the Indictment are as follows:

Firſt, The Supreme Magiſtrate is made accountable to the People.

Secondly, The People are rebelliouſly incited to take the Menage of the Government into their own hands.

Thirdly, They are animated to take up Arms, not only againſt the Perſon of his Sacred Majeſty, but likewiſe againſt the Royal Family.

Fourthly, They are ſtirred up to a Revolt (in that very Term) as an Action honourable and conſcientious; making Publication in the next Clauſe of Encouragement to any Town, City, or Country in the three Nations to begin the Work.

Fifthly, The People are laboured not only to caſt off their Allegiance to the King, but in direct Terms to put his Sacred Majeſty to death. And to the Purpoſes before mentioned tends the whole Scope of the Treatiſe.

Serjeant Morton. You may judge of the reſt by this: We will not put you to any more Expence of Time; there hath been ſufficient Treaſon in that which you have read.

Ld Hyde. Now ſay what you will. But I muſt tell you, in thoſe Particulars that have been compared, there is as much Villany and Slander, as is poſſible for the Devil or Man to invent: It is to deſtroy the King in his Perſon; to rob him of the Love and Affections of his People; to deſtroy the whole Family, and all Government, Eccleſiaſtical and Civil. And this read by your ſelf, owned, and cauſed to be printed.

Twyn. Except it was that Sheet which Mr. L'Eſtrange read to me when I was taken, I never heard it before, nor read it.

Ld Hyde. Your Man ſwears that you did ſet and print part of it: It's impoſſible to compoſe and ſet, but you muſt read it. Nay, you did examine and correct the Sheets; brought them up again. Mr. L'Eſtrange ſwears you confeſſed you read it over; it was mettleſome Stuff. Mr. Dickenſon ſays you did not ſay you read it over; but he ſaying to you it was impoſſible you ſhould ſet it, and not read it, you told him alſo it was mettleſome Stuff: You could not judge it to be mettleſome Stuff, but you muſt read it. There is Mr. Williamſon ſays that you confeſſed before Mr. Secretary Bennet that you had ſeen three Sheets, printed off two Sheets, corrected thoſe two Sheets; and after printed, and delivered them; and that you had forty Shillings in part of Payment. Beſides this, when Mr. L'Eſtrange came firſt, you were up, (nay, at Two a-clock in the Morning:) When they came and knocked at the Door, they heard Preſſes going, you would make no Anſwer till they called a Smith, with intent to force it open. When they came in, they found a Form brought out of the Printing-Room, and broken, all but one Corner; that taken up by a Printer, and compared with the Lines of the printed Sheets, and found to agree. Some of the Sheets were printed on one ſide only, the reſt perfected, you threw them down Stairs, part into your Neighbour's Houſe; ſaid you were undone, when you underſtood Mr. L'Eſtrange was there. What needed all this, but that you knew what you were doing, and did it purpoſely to do miſchief?

Twyn. I did never read or hear a Line of it, but when Mr. L'Eſtrange read it when I was taken.

Judge Keeling. Was it printed at your Houſe, or no?

Twyn.

Twyn. I know not but that it might: Not that I did it with my own Hand.

Judge Keeling. The Papers were found wet with you: Who was in your Houſe?

Twyn. My two Servants.

Judge Keeling. Did any ſet them at work but your ſelf? Did they work of their own Heads?

Twyn. I did uſe to ſet them at Work; but I did not ſet them on that particular Work.

Ld Hyde. Have you any thing elſe to ſay? God forbid but you ſhould be heard; but the Jury will not eaſily believe ſuch Denials againſt ſo much Evidence.

Judge Keeling. Tell us to whom you carried this Copy to be corrected?

Twyn. I know not who corrected it.

Ld Hyde. If you have any thing to ſay, ſpeak it; God forbid but you ſhould have a full Hearing: Say what you will.

Twyn. I ſay I did not read it, nor heard it, till Mr. L'Eſtrange read it.

Ld Hyde. Have you any thing elſe?

Twyn. It's poſſible I may upon Conſideration.

Ld Hyde. We cannot ſpend all the Day: I muſt let the Jury know they are not to take your Teſtimony.

Serj. Morton. I am of Counſel for the King: I ſhall reply, if he will ſay no more.

Judge Keeling. You have heard your Charge; this is your Time to make your Anſwer: If you do not ſpeak now, you muſt not ſpeak after. Therefore if you have any thing to ſpeak in your Juſtification, or Witneſſes to call, now is your Time.

Ld Hyde. Let me give you this Caution: We cannot ſpend Time in vain; we have other Buſineſs before us, and it grows late. The beſt Counſel I can give you, is this: You ſaid at firſt, That you deſired to be tried in the Preſence of God. You are here in the Preſence of Almighty God, and I would to God you would have ſo much Care of your ſelf, and do ſo much Right to your ſelf, to declare the Truth, that there may be means of Mercy to you. The beſt you can now do towards Amends for this Wickedneſs you have done, is by diſcovering the Author of this villanous Book: If not, you muſt not expect, and indeed God forbid that there ſhould be any Mercy towards you.

Twyn. I never knew the Author of it, nor who it was, nor whence it came, but as I told you.

Ld Hyde. Then we muſt not trouble our ſelves. Did you never ſee the Hand before, with which this Copy was written?

Twyn. No.

Ld Hyde. I am very confident you would not then have been ſo mad, as to have taken ſuch a Copy: A Copy fraught with ſuch abominable Treaſon and Lyes; abuſing, in the firſt place, the late King that is dead, who was, I'll be bound to ſay it, as virtuous, religious, pious, merciful, and juſt a Prince as ever reigned, and was as villanouſly and barbarouſly uſed by his rebellious Subjects. Nay, you have not reſted here, but have fallen upon this King, who has been gentle and merciful beyond all Precedent. Since he came to the Crown, he has ſpared thoſe that had forfeited their Lives, and all they had: And he has endeavoured to oblige all the reſt of his People by Mildneſs and Clemency. And after all this, for you to publiſh ſo horrid a Book, you can never make amends: God forgive you for it.

Twyn. I never knew what was in it.

Ld Hyde. You of the Jury, I will ſay only this: That in Point of Law, in the firſt place, there is no doubt in the world, by the Law of the Land, the publiſhing ſuch a Book as this is as high a Treaſon as can be committed: By this he has endeavoured to take away the Life of the King, and deſtroy the whole Family, and ſo conſequently to deliver us up into the hands of Foreigners and Strangers. It is a great Bleſſing that we have the Royal Line amongſt us. But, I ſay, there is no queſtion (and my Brothers will declare the ſame, if you doubt it) that this Book is as fully Treaſon by the old Statute, as much the compaſſing and endeavouring the Death of the King, as poſſible: And he reſts not there, but he incites the People to Rebellion, to dethrone him, to raiſe War. And the publiſhing of this Book is all one and the ſame, as if he had raiſed an Army to do this. The Proof is, That he ſet part, printed part, and corrected it; by his own Confeſſion, read it over, It was mettleſome Stuff; confeſſed how many Sheets he printed; the Reward and Recompence, you took notice of it. And I preſume no Man among you can doubt but the Witneſſes have ſpoken true: And for his Anſwer, you have nothing but his bare Denial. And ſo we ſhall leave it to you.

Set Simon Dover to the Bar.

Dover. My Lord, I pray Time, till Monday Morning: I have ſent away the Copy of my Indictment.

Ld Hyde. The Seſſions will be done to-night: Mr. Recorder and the reſt are to go away on Monday; and therefore we muſt end to-night.

Dover. I beſeech your Lordſhip I may have Time till Night.

Ld Hyde. Men clamour, and ſay they are hardly uſed, their Tryals being put off: Are you content to lie in Goal till the next Seſſions?

Dover. No, my Lord, I have had enough of that: We are willing now to have it tried.

Ld Hyde. You have had a Kindneſs done to you, that it is not laid Treaſon; and therefore go on to your Tryal. But becauſe you ſhall not ſay you are ſurprized, if you will not go on now, you muſt lie in the Goal till the next Seſſions: We cannot bail you.

Dover. My Lord, the Indictment is full of Law, and I underſtand not the Formalities of it: I deſire but till Four a-clock.

Ld Hyde. We muſt do it before we go to Dinner, or not at all; for there is Judgment to be given to the Goal, and all of us Judges are commanded by the King to attend him to-night.

Dover. I am not able to plead to it.

Ld Hyde. Then becauſe you ſhall not ſay you had not all the Right imaginable, we will diſpatch the reſt of the Goal to-night, and adjourn the Seſſions till Monday Morning, and you ſhall then have a fair Tryal, by the Help of God. You and your Company, Nathan Brooks and Thomas Brewſter, are you all deſirous to be tried on Monday Morning?

All three. Yes.

Ld Hyde. Becauſe you ſhall not want Advice, or any thing elſe, you ſhall have all the Liberty you will deſire, to ſend for Perſons; but you muſt be Priſoners till then.

All three. We humbly thank you.

Then the Jury went out; and after about half an Hour's Conſultation, they returned to the Court, and took their Places.

Clerk. Are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Clerk. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. The Foreman.

Clerk. Set John Twyn to the Bar: Look upon him, my Maſters; how ſay you, is he guilty of the High Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Newgate. Look to him, Keeper.

Clerk. Hearken to your Verdict, as the Court hath recorded it: You ſay that John Twyn is guilty of the High Treaſon whereof he ſtood indicted, and that at the time of committing the ſaid Treaſon, or any time ſince, he had no Goods, Chattels, Lands nor Tenements, to your knowledge; and ſo you ſay all?

Jury. Yes.

Clerk. John Twyn, thou haſt been arraigned for High Treaſon, and thereunto haſt pleaded Not guilty, and for thy Tryal haſt put thyſelf upon God and the Country, and the Country hath found thee Guilty; what canſt thou now ſay for thyſelf, why the Court ſhould not proceed to Judgment, and thereupon award Execution of Death againſt thee, according to the Law?

Twyn. I humbly beg Mercy; I am a poor Man, and have three ſmall Children, I never read a word of it.

Ld Hyde. I'll tell you what you ſhall do: Ask Mercy of them that can give it; that is, of God and the King.

Twyn. I humbly beſeech you to intercede with his Majeſty for Mercy.

Cl. of Newgate. Tye him up, Executioner.

Cryer. O Yes! My Lords the King's Juſtices command all manner of Perſons to keep ſilence while Judgment is in giving, upon pain of Impriſonment.

Ld Hyde. John Twyn, and John Dunſmore, (one convicted for clipping of Money) I am heartily ſorry that your Carriage and grievous Offences ſhould draw me to give that Judgment upon you that I muſt. It is the Law pronounces it, God knows it is full ſore againſt my Inclination to do it; I will not trouble myſelf or you with repeating what you have done; but only this in the general, John Twyn, for you: Yours is the moſt grievous and higheſt Treaſon, and the moſt complicated of all Wickedneſs that ever I knew; for you have, as much as poſſibly lay in you, ſo reproached and reviled the King, the dead King, and his Poſterity, on purpoſe to endeavour to root them out from off the face of the Earth. I ſpeak it from my Soul, I think we have the greateſt Happineſs of the World, in enjoying what we do under ſo gracious and good a King; yet you in the Rancour of your Heart thus to abuſe him! I will be ſo charitable to think you are miſled. There's nothing that pretends to Religion, that will avow or juſtify the killing of Kings, but the Jeſuit on the one ſide, and the Sectary on the other: indeed it is a deſperate and dangerous Doctrine, fomented by divers of your Temper, and it's high time ſome be made Examples for it. I ſhall not ſpend my time in diſcourſe to you, to prepare you for Death; I ſee a grave Perſon whoſe Office it is, and I leave it to him. Do not think of any Time here, make your peace with God, which muſt be done by Confeſſion, and by the Diſcovery of thoſe that are guilty of the ſame Crime with you. God have mercy upon you; and if you ſo do, he will have mercy upon you. But foraſmuch as you John Twyn have been indicted of High Treaſon, you have put yourſelf upon God and the Country to try you, and the Country have found you guilty: therefore the Judgment of the Court is, and the Court doth award, 'That you be led back to the place from whence 'you came, and from thence to be drawn upon an 'Hurdle to the place of Execution; and there 'you ſhall be hanged by the Neck, and being 'alive, ſhall be cut down, and your Privy-Mem-'bers ſhall be cut off, your Entrails ſhall be taken 'out of your Body, and you living, the ſame to 'be burnt before your eyes; your Head to be cut 'off, your Body to be divided into four Quarters, 'and your Head and Quarters to be diſpoſed of 'at the Pleaſure of the King's Majeſty. And the 'Lord have mercy upon your Soul.'

Twyn. I moſt humbly beſeech your Lordſhip to remember my Condition, and intercede for me.

Ld Hyde. I would not intercede for my own Father in this Caſe, if he were alive.

Monday, Febr. 22. 166¾.

THE Court proclaimed.

Clerk. Set Simon Dover, Thomas Brewſter, and Nathan Brooks to the Bar: Look to your Challenges.

The ſame Jury ſworn anew.

Clerk. Set Tho. Brewſter to the Bar, and the reſt ſet by. You of the Jury look upon the Priſoner; you ſhall underſtand that he ſtands indicted in London by the Name of Thomas Brewſter, &c. [and here he reads the Indictment] for cauſing to be printed, and ſelling a Book called, The Speeches, &c. Upon this Indictment he hath been arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded Not Guilty, and for his, &c. Your Charge is to inquire whether he be Guilty of this Sedition and Offence, or Not Guilty. If you find him, &c.

Mr. North. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, Tho. Brewſter ſtands here indicted of a foul Miſdemeanour; it is for cauſing to be printed, publiſhing and uttering a ſeditious, ſcandalous, and malicious Book. The Indictment ſets forth, That he not having, &c. [Here Mr. North opens the Indictment] and to this Indictment he hath pleaded Not Guilty. If there be ſufficient Proof of the Charge, you are to find him guilty of the Matter contained in it.

Thomas Creek, George Threſher, Thomas Loft, and Peter Bodvel ſworn.

Mr. North. Tho. Creek, tell my Lord and the Jury what you know concerning Brewſter, and your printing of a Book called The Speeches, &c. and his uttering and publiſhing of it.

Creek. I ſhall, Sir. There is a Miſtake in the Time, for it was before Chriſtmas, that Mr. Brewſter, Mr. Calvert, and Mr. Chapman did come to me at the Cock in Little-Britain; and there they had ſome Copy of the Beginning of the Speeches of the Men that ſuffered, that were the King's Judges, and they ſpake to me to print it: and I did print part of the Book, I cannot tell you how much, without I had the Book, and then I can tell you how much I did print. [The Book being ſhewed him] If this be my printing; I ſuppoſe it was done afterwards, another Impreſſion, and I muſt not own it in that. [He was ſhewed one of another Impreſſion]

My

My Lord, thus far I own; the Printers that are of the Jury will judge [pointing to the Page] this is my Letter, and here I ended.

Ld Hyde. What Folio is that you ended at?

Creek. You ſhall ſee, it is 36.

Mr. North. By whoſe Order did you print that?

Creek. They all gave me Order together.

Ld Hyde. They all! Name them.

Creek. Mr. Calvert, Brewſter, and Chapman.

Mr. North. Did they charge you to do it privately?

Creek. With as much Privacy and Expedition as I could.

Mr. North. When you had printed them, what did you do with them?

Creek. I diſpoſed of them by their Order.

Mr. North. Did you print but one Impreſſion, or more?

Creek. Yes, my Lord, I did print part of a ſecond Impreſſion.

Mr. North. That we uſe as Evidence, that he had uttered the firſt, becauſe he went upon a ſecond: How many did you print at firſt?

Creek. To my beſt remembrance, the firſt Impreſſion was 3000.

Ld Hyde. Theſe three employ'd you to print this Book, and you printed to the 36th Folio?

Creek. Yes.

Ld Hyde. And who printed the other part?

Creek. I cannot ſay poſitively.

Ld Hyde. Theſe three did afterwards direct you to give out the Sheets to ſuch and ſuch Perſons, Bookbinders, to ſtitch up, and diſpoſe of?

Creek. Yes.

Ld Hyde. The firſt was three thouſand, you ſay: what number did they take?

Creek. They had all; they ſent for them of me as faſt as I did them.

J. Keeling. Who did you ſend the Proofs to?

Creek. They were ſent for to my Houſe.

J. Keeling. Sometimes by Calvert, ſometimes his Man, ſometimes his Maid, ſometimes by Brewſter.

Ld Hyde. Do not you know who began where you left off?

Creek. I am not able poſitively to ſay, I do believe, and I have heard, and ſpoken with them that ſaid Mr. Dover did; but I cannot poſitively ſay it.

Ld Hyde. You were not by, to ſee it done?

Creek. No.

Ld Hyde. What grounds have you to believe that Dover printed the reſt?

Creek. Grounds! Truly it is ſo long ago, to ſwear poſitively I cannot.

Ld Hyde. It is but three Years ago.

Creek. To the beſt of my remembrance, Mr. Dover in the time of printing of it did meet me, and converſe with me about it; but to expreſs Time or Place, I cannot.

Ld Hyde. Did you and he agree that he ſhould print the other part?

Creek. No, my Lord; I had nothing to do to agree it with him.

Ld Hyde. Did he declare to you that he printed the other?

Creek. To the beſt of my memory he told me he printed ſome Sheets.

Mr. North. Who changed Sheets with you?

Creek. Some Sheets were changed at Mr. Dover's.

J. Keeling. Who paid for the Printing?

Creek. Mr. Brewſter paid me ſome, and ſome Mr. Calvert paid me.

Ld Hyde. If you deſire to ask him any Queſtions, you may.

Brewſter. By and by I ſhall, my Lord.

Dover. I deſire he may tarry till I come to my Tryal.

Serj. Morton. Don't doubt it.

Mr. North. George Threſher, ſpeak your Knowledge to my Lord and the Jury, whether Brewſter did not bring you the Book called The Speeches, &c. to be ſtitch'd, and what you did with them; tell the manner of it.

Threſher. May it pleaſe you, my Lord, and the Honourable Bench, it is thus: This Book it ſeems was printed, Mr. Brewſter came to my Houſe to know whether I could fold them, and ſtitch them in blue Paper. That night I went to ſeveral Printers, Mr. Dover was one of them; we had ſeveral Sheets from thence, (I did not ſee them printed) I carried them home, and went about the working them that night.

J. Keeling. How many Books were delivered to you?

Threſher. Firſt and laſt, about 500.

J. Keeling. Who delivered them to you?

Threſher. Some were brought to my Houſe.

J. Keeling. By whoſe Direction?

Threſher. Mr. Brewſter's.

J. Keeling. Did you deliver them to any body?

Threſher. Yes, to Nathan Brooks, ready ſtitch'd.

J. Keeling. Who paid you for them?

Threſher. Mr. Brewſter for them he had, and Brooks for them he had.

Mr. North. Thomas Loft, tell your Knowledge in this buſineſs.

Thomas Loft. May it pleaſe you, all that I can ſay is this: There was to the number of about or near upon a thouſand, as I take it, folded and ſtitch'd in my Maſter's Houſe, one Mr. Perry, I was then his Apprentice; they were ſent in, as I judge, by Mr. Brewſter's Order, but I cannot poſitively ſay it: my Maſter appointed us to do them; I ſaw Mr. Brewſter there ſometimes, but I cannot poſitively ſay that Mr. Brewſter paid for the doing of them.

Mr. North. Did not your Maſter preſs the Diſpatch?

Loft. My Maſter did ſo; but I know not whether they converſed to that purpoſe.

Mr. North. Who fetch'd them away?

Loft. His then Apprentice did fetch ſome of them from our Houſe.

Mr. North. Peter Bodvel, tell my Lord and the Jury what you know.

Bodvel. I did carry ſome three Years ago ſome Bundles of Books from Mr. Creek's Houſe, and I think they were the Bundles of the Speeches of the King's Judges.

Ld Hyde. From whence had you them?

Bodvel. From Mr. Creek's.

Mr. North. What did you do with them? Were they ſold?

Bodvel. I did ſee ſome of them ſold in the Shop.

Mr. North. Who ſold them?

Bodvel. Myſelf, and my Miſtreſs ſometimes.

Ld Hyde. Were they brought to the Shop to ſell, by his privity?

Bodvel. I do believe he knew of them.

Ld Hyde. By the Oath you have taken, did he ſend you for them to the Printer's?

Bodvel. He or my Miſtreſs did.

Ld Hyde. Has he been in the Shop when they have been ſold?

Bodvel. I cannot truly tell, it's three Years ago.

J. Tyrrel. To whom did you pay the Money that you received for them?

Bodvel. We put it in the Box.

J. Keeling. Do not Bookſellers keep account what Books they ſell, and ſet down the Money?

Bodvel. Not for Pamphlets.

Mr. North. Did he not ſend you to the Bookbinder's for them, when they were ſtitch'd?

Bodvel. It was by his or my Miſtreſs's Order.

J. Keeling. What was your Bookbinder's Name?

Bodvel. Perry.

J. Keeling. Where was this Book kept? Publickly, as other Books, or in other Rooms?

Bodvel. In the Shop, my Lord.

J. Keeling. Were they publickly to view, as other Books?

Bodvel. Not ſo publick as other Books, but publick enough, Mr. L'Eſtrange knows.

Ld Hyde. I know you uſe to let your Titles of a new Book lie open upon your Stalls; did you lay theſe open?

Bodvel. No, my Lord, they did not do ſo.

Ld Hyde. Who was the cauſe they did not? Did your Maſter direct the Privacy?

Bodvel. I think he did, we had ſome direction to that end.

Ld Hyde. Not to lay them open upon the Stall?

Bodvel. No.

Ld Hyde. Give the Jury ſome Books, and read the Indictment; let them be compared.

Clerk reads the Indictment: firſt the Title; 'The Speeches and Prayers of ſome of the late 'King's Judges, viz. Major-General Harriſon, 'Octob. 13. Mr. John Carey, Octob. 15. Mr. Juſtice 'Cook, Mr. Hugh Peters, Octob. 16. Mr. Thomas Scot, 'Mr. Gregory Clement, Col. Adrian Scroope, Col. John 'Jones, Octob. 17. Col. Daniel Axtell, and Col. Fran'cis Hacker, Octob. 19. 1660. The Times of their 'Deaths, together with ſeveral Occaſional Speeches, 'and Paſſages in their Impriſonment, till they 'came to the place of Execution. Faithfully and 'impartially collected for further Satisfaction.

Mr. Cook's Letter to a Friend, fol. 40. 'And ſo I 'deſcend to the Cauſe, for which I am in Bonds; 'which is as good as ever it was: And I believe 'there is not a Saint that hath engaged with us, 'but will wiſh at the laſt Day that he had ſealed 'to the Truth of it with his Blood, if thereupon 'called; for I am ſatisfied, that it is the moſt 'Noble and Glorious Cauſe that has been agitated 'for God and Chriſt ſince the Apoſtolical Times; 'being for Truth, Holineſs, and Righteouſneſs, 'for our Liberties as Men, and as Chriſtians for 'removing all Yokes and Oppreſſions.' And fol. 41. 'It is ſuch a Cauſe, that the Martyrs would 'again come from Heaven to ſuffer for it, if they 'might: I look upon it as the moſt high Act of 'Juſtice that our Story can parallel, &c.'

[Not to trouble the Reader with all the Particulars mention'd in the Indictment; ſince the reſt are but more of the ſame in other words.]

Ld Hyde. What ſay you to this Book?

Brewſter. I deſire to ask Mr. Creek a few Queſtions: Mr. Creek, how much of that in the Indictment did you print?

Creek. The Jury may ſee if they pleaſe.

Ld Hyde. Truly if he ſays true, he ſays he printed no part of that with which you are charged, but the Title-Page; he left off at Folio 36. your Charge is the Title, and beginning at Fol. 40.

Brewſter. So that you ſee he printed nothing for me that is in the Indictment.

J. Keeling. Did you print the Title?

Creek. Yes, my Lord.

Ld Hyde. And you printed the reſt, by his, Calvert's, and Chapman's Directions.

Creek. They delivered me the Copy together to print.

Ld Hyde. If you have any thing to ſay, ſpeak to the Court, the Jury will hear you.

Mr. North. Pray, my Lord, give me leave to ask Creek one Queſtion: There were two Impreſſions printed, did not you print more in one, than in the other?

Creek. I am upon my Oath; to the beſt of my remembrance I printed the ſame that I did before, for I had ſome of it ſtanding, and ſo I had the ſame Sheets again.

Mr. North. Had you no more?

Creek. No, I had rather leſs.

Brewſter. That's uſual, he that prints the firſt, doth print the ſame of the ſecond.

Ld Hyde. He ſays he did ſo; what have you to ſay to the Charge?

Brewſter. I conceive that part that I ordered the printing of, is not included in the Indictment.

Ld Hyde. Yes, every part: he ſays in both Impreſſions he printed to the 36th Folio; and all the reſt was printed by your direction.

Creek. No, my Lord, I printed to the 36th Folio by his Direction, the reſt was printed elſewhere.

J. Keeling. Your Indictment was this, For cauſing to be printed this Book, called The Prayers, &c. and for ſelling and uttering of it. For the Evidence that you cauſed it to be printed, he ſwears you directed ſome, and it is not likely you would print half, and let the other half alone; we leave that to the Jury, for your uttering that, anon.

Ld Hyde. There are theſe two particular Charges in the Indictment, that you muſt anſwer: The firſt is, your cauſing it to be printed; and it is not eſſential, or of neceſſity, that every Particular that is in the Indictment be proved to be done by you: you cauſed this Book to be printed, with ſuch a Title; that he ſwears he did for you: then let the Jury, or any Man living judge whether you did direct the Book to be wholly perfected, or by halves. The ſecond Charge is, that you uttered them: You delivered five hundred of theſe to be ſtitch'd up, and diſpoſed of them, ſo that you are in effect both Printer and Publiſher of the whole Book.

Brewſter. He ſpeaks of one part that I ordered, there is no more Proof, and that was but to the 36th Page: he ſpeaks alſo of ſomebody elſe that was preſent with me; and where they had the reſt of the Copy printed, he tells you he knows not.

Ld Hyde. Have you any more to ſay?

Brewſter. Yes, my Lord: Tho he ſays I cauſed that Part to be printed, yet he doth not ſay I did it maliciouſly, or with any deſign againſt the Government.

Ld Hyde. The thing ſpeaks itſelf.

Brewſter. Bookſellers do not uſe to read what they ſell.

Ld Hyde. You have forgot what he ſwore; you brought the Proof.

Brewſter. He did not ſwear that; he ſays Mr. Calvert's Man, and ſometimes others.

Ld Hyde. Ask him again.

Creek. I did declare, that the Proofs were ſent for, and carried away and read, ſometimes by Mr. Calvert's Man and others, and ſometimes by his Servants, not by himſelf; they were wrapt up and ſent.

Ld

Ld Hyde. For a Man to pretend he did not know, when, he being Maſter, ſends for the Proofs by his Servant; for any Man to ſuppoſe this is not the Maſter's Act, (nay, and directing it to be done privately) you ſhall never find a Man guilty: they were ſold in his Shop.

Brewſter. The grand part of the Indictment lies, That it was done maliciouſly and ſeditiouſly, and then it ſays knowingly; though it be granted I did do it, and ſell it, yet it does not follow that I did it maliciouſly and ſeditiouſly; I did it in my Trade: we do not uſe to read what we put to print or ſell. I ſay, my Lord, ſelling of Books is our Trade, and for the bare exerciſing of it, knowing nothing of evil in it; it came out in a time too, when there were no Licenſers, or appointed Rules; ſo that whatever was done we are not accountable for, for we read very ſeldom more than the Title, that ſome of the Jury knows; ſo that I hope I cannot be ſaid to do it maliciouſly or knowingly. I can give Teſtimony I am no Perſon given to Sedition, but have been ready to appear upon all Occaſions againſt it.

Ld Hyde. Have you any more? if you have, ſay it.

Brewſter. My Lord, they are the Sayings of dying Men, commonly printed without Oppoſition.

Ld Hyde. Never.

Brewſter. I can inſtance in many; the Bookſeller only minds the getting of a Penny: that declares to the World, that as they lived ſuch deſperate Lives, ſo they died; ſo that it might ſhew to the World the Juſtice of their Puniſhment; and ſo I think it a Benefit, far from Sedition. It was done ſo long ago too, it was not done in private, it went commonly up and down the Streets, almoſt as common as a Diurnal: it's three Years and a quarter ago, or thereabouts.

Juſtice Tyrrel. You ſpeak of your Behaviour, have you any Teſtimony here?

Brewſter. I do expect ſome Neighbours; Major-General Brown knows me, Capt. Sheldon, Capt. Colcheſter, and others: I can give a very good account as to my Behaviour ever ſince.

Ld Hyde. Say what you will, and call your Witneſſes, and make as much ſpeed as you can.

Juſtice Keeling. There is another Indictment againſt you, and while that is trying, your Neighbours may come.

Brewſter. My Lord, I ſhall deſiſt for the preſent.

Serj. Morton. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; I am of Counſel for the King againſt Thomas Brewſter, Bookſeller, that ſtands here indicted, for that he, contrary to the Duty of his Allegiance which he owes to our Sovereign Lord the King, did cauſe maliciouſly a ſeditious and ſcandalous Book to be printed, wherein there are divers ſcandalous Clauſes contained, that are in Diſparagement of the King's Royal Prerogative, and againſt his Government, Crown and Dignity; and likewiſe that he hath ſold and uttered the ſame Books in Contempt of his Majeſty's Laws. This is the Effect of the Indictment: It has been proved to you by four Witneſſes, that for which he ſtands indicted; Firſt, That he did cauſe part of the Book to be printed; that's clearly proved by Creek: likewiſe that he has ſold and uttered thoſe Books in his Shop; nay, he confeſſes that he did, and ſays they were ſold openly as a Diurnal; and therefore he thinks it was lawful for him to do it. He has gone about to make a Defence of this his ſeditious Behaviour; he tells you he did not print all the Book; it is not ſaid, that he printed ſuch and ſuch a Letter of the Book, but that he cauſed ſuch a Book to be printed: and it is to be preſumed, if he cauſed one part, he would cauſe the other, or otherwiſe it would be a Book of maimed Senſe and imperfect. Gentlemen, for the uttering and ſelling of them, that himſelf confeſſes: you have heard the Excuſes he hath made, whether you will not find him guilty of this Crime, that I muſt leave to you, and to the Direction of the Court.

Ld Hyde. You of the Jury, you ſee the Indictment is for cauſing a libellous and ſeditious Book to be printed, under ſuch a Title, that is, The Speeches and Prayers, &c. it is for cauſing this, ſeditiouſly, factiouſly and wickedly to be printed; and for ſelling and publiſhing it abroad to the King's People. For the Matter of Evidence, you have heard it; I will not repeat the Particulars to you, only ſomething to what he has ſaid, that you may not be miſled. Firſt, He ſays, it does not appear, that he did it maliciouſly or knowingly; there are ſome things that you that are of the Jury are not to expect Evidence for, which it is impoſſible to know but by the Act it ſelf. Malice is conceived in the Heart, no Man knows it unleſs he declares it: As in Murder, I have Malice to a Man, no Man knows it; I meet this Man and kill him; the Law calls this Malice. If a Man ſpeak ſcandalous words againſt a Man in his Calling or Trade, he lays his Action, Malice, though he cannot prove it but by the words themſelves. If I ſay a Printer or Stationer is an ignorant Perſon, has no Skill in his Trade, I would not have any Man to deal with him, he underſtands not how to ſet Letters, or the like; here is nothing of Malice at all appears, yet if you bring your Action, you muſt lay it, maliciouſly; it is the deſtroying your Trade, and you will have Damages. I inſtance in this Particular, that you may ſee there is Malice ſuppoſed to a particular private Perſon in that Slander, much more to the King and the State. The thing it ſelf, in cauſing a Book to be printed that is ſo full of Scandals and Lyes, to inveigle, miſguide, and deceive the People, this is, in Conſtruction of the Law, Malice; and though no Malice appear further. The next is this; factiouſly, ſeditiouſly, knowingly: this carries Sedition as well as Malice. Such a barbarous tranſcendent Wretch that murdered his Prince, without the leaſt Colour of Juſtice, to declare that he rejoiced in his Bonds; and that the Martyrs would willingly come from Heaven to ſuffer for it. Horrid Blaſphemy! All the Saints that ingaged in it, to wiſh that they had ſealed it with their Blood! What can you have more to incourage and incite the People to the killing of Kings, and murdering their lawful Prince! This they publiſh, and ſay it was ſpoken publickly; let it be upon his own Soul that did it: for in caſe he did it, no Man knew it but thoſe that heard it. But to publiſh it all over England, (3000 of the firſt Impreſſion, and a ſecond;) this is to fill all the King's Subjects with the Juſtification of that horrid Murder: I will be bold to ſay, not ſo horrid a Villany has been done upon the Face of the Earth, ſince the crucifying of our Saviour. To print and publiſh this, is Sedition. The next thing is your Trade. I have a Calling to uſe, and I may juſtify the uſing of it, ſo long as I uſe it lawfully; but that muſt not juſtify me in all manner of Wickedneſs againſt the King and State. As if a Lawyer (I will put it in my own Coat) pleads a Man's Cauſe, and againſt the King; this is juſtifiable, he ought to plead for his Client, but he muſt plead as becomes him. If a Lawyer in defence of his Client will ſpeak Sedition, do you think he is free from being puniſhed? So of a Printer; if a Printer prints ſeditious and facious Books, he muſt look to himſelf; that's no part of his Calling to poiſon the King's People: ſo tho printing of a Book be lawful, he muſt uſe it as the Law appoints him, and not to incite the People to Faction. Writing of Letters, you know it is common and lawful; but if I write treaſonable Letters, give notice to riſe, do ſuch and ſuch unlawful Acts, I am to be puniſhed for theſe Letters. A Printer he is a publick Agent, he is to do what he is able to anſwer, or elſe he muſt take what follows. He ſays, There was no Act againſt him: it is true, you ſee he is not indicted upon the Statute, but at the Common Law, for an Offence in the nature of a Libel. If I were a Printer, and would compile a Pamphlet againſt a Man, though not in Authority, and diſparage him, this is the publiſhing of a Libel, and an Offence for which he ought to be indicted, and puniſhed by the Common Law; and he that prints that Libel againſt me, as a publick Perſon, or againſt me as Sir Robert Hyde; that Printer, and he that ſets him at work, muſt anſwer it; much more when againſt the King and the State. Another thing is this; he talks to you of dying Mens Words: if Men will be ſo vile to be as wicked at their Deaths, as they had been in their Lives; put the Caſe of that Man on Saturday convicted for printing a horrible villanous thing, if he will be ſo unchriſtian to himſelf, as to juſtify this at his Death, or to ſpeak as bad as he had cauſed to be printed, is that a Juſtification to publiſh them, becauſe they are the Words of a dying Man? God forbid. A Robber declares at the Gallows, it is for a noble Cauſe, for taking a Purſe upon the High-way, that it is an unjuſt Law to condemn to death for ſuch Crimes. Shall any Man publiſh this in print, and not be liable to be puniſhed for it? If any that were tried here upon Saturday, ſhall villify the Lord Mayor, or any of the Bench, traduce them for doing of Juſtice, ſhall this go unpuniſhed, if a Man take it up and print it? This I ſpeak to let you ſee this is without Colour of Law: He pretended he did it not knowingly; I will not repeat the Evidence; He ſent for them, had them ſtitched, cauſed them to be kept privately, (not upon the Stall.) And obſerve, he tells you it was done long ago: it is but three Years ago that they were as publickly ſold as Diurnals, he ſays. I ſhall repeat no more, I know you are Men of Underſtanding, and of Obedience to your King; it is high time to take notice of this diſperſing of Pamphlets: if therefore you do believe that he did cauſe it to be printed, or publiſhed it, or both, he is guilty of the Miſdemeanour laid in the Indictment; (and he hath a great Kindneſs in that it is not made Capital:) If you do believe that he did either cauſe it to be printed or publiſhed, that's enough to find him guilty of this Indictment.

Clerk. Hearken to the other Indictment: He ſtands indicted in London, &c. and this is for cauſing to be printed a certain Book called, The Phœnix, &c. publiſhing the ſame, [the Indictment was wholly read.] To this Indictment he hath pleaded Not Guilty; ſo your Iſſue is to enquire whether he be guilty of this Offence, or not guilty.

Mr. North, [opened the Indictment in manner as before.] To this he hath pleaded Not Guilty; if the Charge of the Indictment be ſufficiently proved, you are to find him guilty.

Serj. Morton. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, here is another Bill of Indictment preferred againſt Thomas Brewſter; it is, that contrary to the Duty of his Allegiance to his Sovereign Lord the King, and purpoſely to incite the People to Sedition, and to withdraw them from their natural Allegiance to the King, he hath cauſed to be imprinted maliciouſly, falſly and ſcandalouſly, a certain ſcandalous Book, entitled, The Phœnix, &c. And this he hath done to diſturb the Peace of the Kingdom, and to withdraw the People from their Allegiance; and to the Scandal of his Majeſty's Government, he hath cauſed this Book to be printed, uttered and ſold: and this we take to be a great Offence againſt the King, and his Crown and Dignity. Gentlemen, the diſperſing of ſeditious Books is of great danger to the Kingdom; falſe Rumours, they are the main Incentives that ſtir up the People to Sedition and Rebellion, that raiſe Diſcontentments among the People, and then preſently they are up in Arms. Diſperſing ſeditious Books is very near a-kin to raiſing of Tumults; they are as like as Brother and Siſter: Raiſing of Tumults is the more maſculine; and printing and diſperſing ſeditious Books, is the Feminine Part of every Rebellion. But we ſhall produce our Witneſſes, we ſhall prove that this Thomas Brewſter cauſed this Book to be printed; that when it was printed he did receive three hundred; That theſe he cauſed to be ſtitch'd up; That he uttered and ſold them, part in his own Shop, and part elſewhere. It being an Offence of that great and dangerous Conſequence, which tends to the Diſturbance of the Peace of the Kingdom; I hope you will take it into your ſerious Conſideration, and if the matter ſtand proved againſt him, you will give him his due Demerit.

Creek, Threſher, Loft and Bodvel, ſworn again.

Mr. North. Creek, tell my Lord and the Jury what you know of the printing of the Book called, The Phœnix.

Creek. My Lord, it was in May that Mr. Calvert, Brewſter and Chapman brought that Book to me to print.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. What Book? name it.

Creek. The Phœnix, &c. it was printed for them three. All that I can ſay, is, That Mr. Brewſter's Part was delivered to me by his Direction.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Who paid you for printing of it?

Creek. Mr. Brewſter paid for his Part.

Juſtice Keeling. How many was his Part?

Creek. His Part of 2000, that was 600 and odd.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Theſe three Men joined to bear each Man his Share?

Creek. Yes, every Man was to have his Share.

Juſt. Keeling. Did he wiſh you to do it with Privacy?

Creek. Yes, with Expedition and Privacy.

Brewſter. Was the Copy written or printed?

Creek. It was all printed formerly, ſome in Quarto, ſome in Octavo, and might have been bought ſingle in any place almoſt.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. What do you mean by all printed formerly?

Creek. My Lord, they were in ſeveral Parcels printed; there was Mr. Calamy's Sermon, and Mr. Douglas's Sermon, and the reſt.

Juſtice Keeling. How long ago was it ſince they were brought to you to print?

Creek. It was in May, three Years.

Brewſter. Did I order you how you ſhould print them, or Mr. Calvert? Did not you hear him ſay, that that they had ſtaid two Hours for me at an Alehouſe to be his Partner?

Creek. I did hear him ſay ſo.

Juſtice Keeling. What made you ſo loth to be their Partner? were they two Hours perſuading of you?

Creek. No, they waited two Hours for him to be their Partner.

Serj. Morton. Threſher, did Brewſter deliver any of thoſe Books to you to ſtitch up?

Threſher. Yes, and pleaſe you, my Lord, and I had them by Mr. Brewſter's Order to fold.

Serj. Morton. How many?

Threſher. To the number of 2 or 300.

Mr. North. Did he not enjoin you Privacy?

Threſher. Yes, I think he did.

Juſtice Keeling. When they were bound, had you a Note to deliver thoſe Books ſafely to any?

Threſher. Yes, from his own Hand; he deſired me to go and give them to ſuch and ſuch Perſons, Bookſellers. Said I, I ſhall hardly remember them: he thereupon gave me a Note of their Names to whom I ſhould deliver them; I judge they were to be truſted more than others.

Serj. Morton. Did you deliver them accordingly?

Threſher. Yes, I did.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. How many did you deliver in that manner?

Threſher. Two dozen and more.

Juſt. Keeling. If you will ask him any Queſtions, do.

Brewſter. Did I give you any Order to deliver them to any particular Bookſellers?

Threſher. Yes, you did; I believe Mr. L'Eſtrange and Mr. Williams (one of the Jury) can remember I ſhewed them the Paper you wrote to that purpoſe.

Mr. Williams. I did ſee the Note.

Brewſter. I do not remember I gave you any Order, they were all common things before.

Juſtice Keeling. You may ask him what Queſtions you will.

Brewſter. I ſhall ask him no more.

Mr. North. Peter Bodvel, ſpeak what you know concerning the ſelling or uttering the Book called, The Phœnix, &c.

Bodvel. I never knew of the printing of them, I never knew my Maſter ſell any of them, nor heard him give order for ſelling of them.

Juſtice Keeling. Did you ſell any of them for him?

Bodvel. I think I did ſell ſome.

Serj. Morton. Were they in the Shop to be ſold?

Bodvel. Yes, they were.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Were they in the Shop publickly, with the Title-page lying open upon the Stall, as other Books do, when they are newly out?

Bodvel. We ſeldom did ſo with Bound-Books.

Juſtice Keeling. Where were the Books found when they were ſeized?

Bodvel. I think they were in ſome of the upper Rooms.

Juſtice Keeling. Where were they found, by the Oath you have taken?

Bodvel. That Mr. L'Eſtrange can tell better than I, I did not ſee him find any of them.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. By the Oath you have taken, where was the Place whence you were to fetch them, when you were to ſell them?

Bodvel. In the Hall, the Room over the Shop.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Were they put up privately?

Bodvel. They were ſo.

Juſtice Keeling. What private place was that?

Bodvel. It was a Hole in the Wall.

Juſtice Tirrel. By whoſe Direction were they laid there?

Bodvel. I know not whether by his, or my Miſtreſs's.

Juſtice Keeling. Were not ſome found under the Bed?

Bodvel. I heard that Mr. L'Eſtrange found ſome of the Titles under the Bed.

Serj. Morton. I think it is enough; what ſay you to it, Friend?

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Obſerve this, and anſwer it: It appears that you and two more (Calvert and Chapman) did agree with Creek for printing this Book, (ſeveral Parcels drawn into one Volume) and you were to bear each of you a third Part, and to have a third Part of the Books; he ſwears you did both pay your Part, and had your Part of the Books: Theſe Books were printed before, and ſo they were common enough, and therefore you muſt needs know what was in them. The third full Part was brought to you, and delivered by your Appointment; you gave a Note how they ſhould be diſpoſed of, and you owned them not in publick: (your own Soul told you they were not to be juſtified) two Dozen were delivered privately to particular Perſons, by your Direction. Lay theſe things together, and now anſwer them: For the Indictment is, That you cauſed ſuch a Book to be printed and publiſhed.

Brewſter. In the firſt place, the Evidence does ſay, That Mr. Calvert did acknowledge when he gave him the Copy to print, that he ſtaid ſo long for me, in order to be their Partner, he that was the Collector of it together. They were all printed before, and printed by Licence; for the Books, I never read them: we ſeldom read the Books we ſell, being they were before printed, and with Licence ſold ſingle, (as the Gentlemen of the Jury know) I thought there was no Crime to print them all together. It was done in an Interval when there were no Licenſers, we knew not where to go: what has been printed formerly, we took it for granted it might be reprinted, till this late Act for Printing; and this was done before this Act.

Juſtice Keeling. Have you any more to ſay?

Brewſter. No, my Lord, I ſhall leave it to the Jury. But, my Lord, here are now ſome Neighbours to teſtify that I am no ſuch Perſon as the Indictment ſets forth, that I did maliciouſly and ſeditiouſly do ſuch and ſuch things.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. We will hear them, though I'll tell you it will not much matter; the Law ſays it is Malice.

Capt. Sheldon ſworn. My Lord, all that I can ſay, is, he was ready at Beat of Drum upon all Occaſions; what he has been guilty of by printing or otherwiſe, I am a Stranger to that; I know he was of civil Behaviour and Deportment amongſt his Neighbours.

Juſtice Keeling. It is very ill that the King hath ſuch Trained-Soldiers in the Band.

Cap. Hanſon and others, offered to like purpoſe.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. If you have a thouſand to this purpoſe only, what ſignifies it?

Juſtice Keeling. Are you his Captain?

Capt. Sheldon. No, my Lord, Capt. Bradſhaw.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. He ſhould be caſhier'd the Band; not but that he ſhould be charged with Arms. I'll tell you, do not miſtake your ſelf, the Teſtimony of your civil Behaviour, going to Church, appearing in the Train'd-Bands, going to Paul's, being there at Common-Service, this is well: but you are not charged for this; a Man may do all this, and yet be a naughty Man in printing abuſive Books, to the miſleading of the King's Subjects.

If you have any thing to ſay as to that, I ſhall be glad to find you innocent.

Brewſter. I have no more to ſay.

Ld Hyde. Then you of the Jury, there are ſome things in this Indictment (as in the other) neceſſary to be ſtated to you; my Brothers and I have conſulted here about it: the Indictment is for cauſing a factious and ſeditious Book, called, The Phœnix, &c. with divers other things therein, to be printed. But, pray let them ſee the Book, and compare it with the Indictment.

Clerk. [Reads the Indictment, and firſt the Title.] The Phœnix, or the Solemn League and Covenant. [Edinburg, Printed in the Year of Covenant-Breaking.] A King abuſing his Power, to the Overthrow of Religion, Laws, and Liberties, which are the very Fundamentals of this Contract and Covenant, may be controuled and oppoſed. And if he ſet himſelf to overthrow all theſe by Arms, then they who have power, as the Eſtates of a Land, may and ought to reſiſt by Arms; becauſe he doth by that Oppoſition break the very Bonds, and overthrow the Eſſentials of this Contract and Covenant. This may ſerve to juſtify the Proceedings of this Kingdom againſt the late King, who in an hoſtile way ſet himſelf to overthrow Religion, Parliaments, Laws, and Liberties. [The reſt is much at the ſame rate, only now and then a ſpice of Blaſphemy, for the Credit of the Holy League: A greater Sin (is the Breach of that Scotch Covenant, according to our Author, pag. 158.) than a Sin againſt a Commandment, or againſt an Ordinance, &c.]

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. You of the Jury, you ſee the Indictment agrees with the Book. There's a great deal of Mercy that this Man hath not been indicted of Treaſon; for thoſe very Particulars you have heard are as high Treaſon as can be. Firſt he doth declare, That the King abuſing his Power, the People may reſiſt, and take up Arms againſt him: That's expreſs Treaſon, without any more ado. Then he tells you what a horrid Thing it is to break that Solemn League and Covenant; juſtifies the raiſing of Arms and Rebellion againſt the late King, unthroning and murdering of him. I tell you that Solemn League and Covenant was a moſt wicked and ungodly Thing, againſt the Law of God, and the Law of the Land. To have ſuch villanous Stuff to be publiſhed, it is a great Mercy of the King it had not been drawn higher. You ſee the Man is ſo far from acknowledging any Guilt, that he juſtifies the Fact.

Brewſter. No, my Lord, I do not juſtify my ſelf.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Yes, you do. The Printer ſwears he was to go ſhare and ſhare like: He had his part; he publiſhes them to ſome particular Friends: I ſay he juſtifies this. He tells you in his Defence, That it was commonly printed; that it was done by printed Copy, and that done formerly by Licence; and when Things are printed by Licence, they do not expect or need any new or ſecond Licence: They were commonly ſold aſunder; here they are only printed together. That he ſays is nothing. What is this but juſtifying the printing of it? Obſerve, weigh, and ſee what kind of Defence here is. The Title, what is it? The Phœnix, or Solemn League and Covenant. You all know it, and rue it. When was it printed? It was when the wicked Rebels here could not ſeduce ſufficient Numbers of the King's Subjects to ſupport their Rebellion; and then they invite their Dear Brethren (as they called them) the Scots to unite with them. The Scots were cunning; they would not do it till they had entred into a Covenant, in a League; and then they conſent to unite with the Rebels here. This League and Covenant was indeed in Defence of the King; but how long? So long as he defended them, (the Presbytery and Scotch Diſcipline.) When they had got this good King into their hands, they put what Terms upon him they pleaſed; and then were theſe ſeditious Sermons printed. Douglas's was printed in Scotland; was it licenſed here? No, it was done there, and brought hither. Then for the other Sermon, by what Licence was that printed? Obſerve the Time when it was printed; was it not to ſet forward Rebellion, to ſet up the Scotch Presbytery; and this in Forty-five, when they were in Arms againſt the King, after the King put himſelf upon his Defence, and was at Oxford? Do you tell me of the Licence of Rebels then for your Juſtification? Now, when the King is ſo happily return'd, now to publiſh theſe Things a-freſh to the People, that they might do the ſame again! And I tell you once again, It is Mercy in the King that he was not indicted for Treaſon. I ſhall leave it to you, you have had it fully proved.

Clerk. Set Simon Dover to the Bar. [And here the Indictment is read.]

Mr. North. Opens this Indictment as the reſt.

Serjeant Morton. We have but two Witneſſes, and they will prove the Matter clearly. There were two Impreſſions of this Book; we will prove he had a Share in both of them.

Creek ſworn again.

Creek. I delivered before what I can ſay.

Judge Keeling. Look you, you muſt deliver all that Evidence over again, becauſe it concerns another Perſon.

Creek. I did ſay, and ſay ſtill, That, to the beſt of my Memory, Mr. Dover did print part of that Book, and that he and I did converſe about it in the Time it was doing; but I cannot ſwear it poſitively, becauſe I cannot remember the Time when, or the Place where.

Judge Keeling. Did you change Sheets with him?

Creek. With him, I cannot ſay; but ſome Sheets were changed by our Men.

Serjeant Morton. You ſay you think you had ſome Diſcourſe with him: Did not you ſpeak about the Danger of printing it?

Creek. We talked of making an end of it.

Serjeant Morton. Can you remember to what Letter you printed?

Creek. I have ſhewed the Gentlemen of the Jury.

Judge Keeling. Had you no Diſcourſe of the Danger of it?

Creek. I thought it could not come to any thing: I did tell Sir R. Brown, (then Lord Mayor) That if they hanged twenty more, I thought I ſhould print their Speeches.

Judge Keeling. You knew the Contents of the Book?

Creek. Yes, I did.

Judge Keeling. Such Men as you, the King and the Government hath a great Intereſt in your Trade: That you ſhould think it lawful to print what a Man ſays when he dies, and to ſcatter it abroad, though never ſo bad, it's a great Offence: I would not have it paſs for ſo clear a thing.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. If you are of ſuch Principles, to print what you liſt, you are not fit to live in a civil civil Place; for a Printer or Bookſeller to print any thing one againſt the other, is actionable. Do you think the Preſs is open to print what you liſt?

Creek. I did ſo then.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. I'll deal plainly with you: For this Book, if you had had your due, you ought both to have been drawn, hang'd, and quarter'd. When did you give Mr. L'Eſtrange Information of this Matter?

Creek. Lately, when I was a Priſoner in Ludgate.

Mr. Royſton. [One of the Jury.] I deſire to ask him one Queſtion; Whether Mr. Creek ſaw this Book a printing at Mr. Dover's Houſe, or no?

Creek. No, I did not.

Serjeant Morton. They changed Sheets.

Threſher ſworn.

Threſher. This is all that I have to ſay, That the firſt Night that Mr. Brewſter ſent for me to ſtitch theſe Books, it was very late before we could get them: I went that Night to Mr. Dover's, and had ſome of the Sheets, the reſt at Mr. Creek's. I did not ſee him print any of them.

Serjeant Morton. What Quantity was there of them?

Threſher. I ſuppoſe there was two or three hundred Sheets.

Mr. North. Were they not of this Book?

Threſher. Yes, of the Speeches.

Mr. North. Where were they delivered?

Threſher. In the lower Room: I ſuppoſe ſome of them were hanging upon Lines before I had them.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. What ſay you to it?

Dover. I deſire to ask him ſome Queſtions. I do ſay I never ſaw the Man before: I would ask whether ever he ſaw me before in his Life?

Threſher. Not before that: I was never in his Houſe but that Night. By this Token I ſaw you, and you me; When I came for the Sheets, you asked Mr. Brewſter whether he and Mr. Calvert were agreed, or elſe you would not deliver the Sheets.

Dover. I deſire to know what Time and Place: I am charged in the Indictment on a Day and Place.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. That's not very material.

Dover. He fixes nothing on me.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. That the Jury can beſt tell: Have you any more Queſtions?

Dover. No, my Lord.

[The Indictment and Books were compared.]

Dover. My Lord, there is no Perſon ſwears that I printed it, or part of it: Nothing fixed upon me.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. The firſt Man ſwears that you ſet it to printing.

Creek. I do not ſwear it poſitively; I never ſaw him print a Sheet: It was the Report of the Town that he did it.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. You printed it: For whom?

Creek. For Brewſter, Calvert, and Chapman.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. But you ſay that you and he did converſe about it when it was printing.

Creek. I did ſay, To the beſt of my Memory we did.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. By the Oath you have taken, who did you change Sheets with?

Creek. I cannot ſay I did change any with him: I ſay that ſome Sheets were changed by my Men, and they told me they had them of his Men.

Dover. Where are thoſe Men that changed the Sheets? Which of my Men are they?

Juſtice Keeling. Look you, Dover, you are indicted for cauſing to be printed this wicked Book, and for publiſhing and vending of it. You are a Printer by your Trade, as well as this Man that comes againſt you: He ſays he did not ſee you print it; but he took it and believed that you printed it. I tell you how far that weighs: You are a Printer by Trade; and comes the other, and deſires the Sheets; you would not deliver them unleſs Mr. Brewſter and Mr. Calvert were agreed. How come the Sheets to your Houſe, being a Printer, and yet you not print it? Anſwer that.

Dover. I ſhall, my Lord: It is no Conſequence at all. Admit I had theſe Sheets, it is no Conſequence at all that I printed them; for Printers and Bookſellers uſually have Books they did not print themſelves.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Threſher, by the Oath that you have taken, did you ſee thoſe Sheets hang upon the Line in his Houſe?

Threſher. My Lord, I judged theſe had lately hung up: And I ſaw other Sheets hanging there; and I knew nothing to the contrary but thoſe that hung upon the Line were the ſame with theſe.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Here are Sheets upon the Lines; you delivered him to fold part of thoſe on the Lines: What would you have more plain? You would not deliver them, if they were not agreed: Then they were agreed, and you delivered them.

Dover. I ſay this; I look upon the Witneſs to be altogether invalid: He is a Perſon of no good Repute.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. A better Man than you, for ought appears: You are indicted for a foul Offence, ſo is not he.

Dover. I am not the Man you take me to be.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. You ſhall have Evidence, if you will, that you are at work at this time upon as bad as this.

Dover. If it be a Crime, I am ſorry for it.

Mr. L'Eſtrange ſworn.

Mr. L'Eſtrange. Shall I ſpeak to the whole Matter, or only to the Particular you laſt mentioned?

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Say your Knowledge.

Mr. L'Eſtrange. When I came to his Houſe, which was about the middle of October, to ſearch, I found at that preſent a little unlicenſed Quaking Book; and in his Pocket the Libel that was thrown up and down the Town, called, Murder will out, ready printed.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Which was a villanous Thing, and ſcattered at York.

Mr. L'Eſtrange. Since that, I was at his Houſe, to compare a Flower which I found in the Panther, (a dangerous Pamphlet;) that Flower, that is, the very ſame Border, I found in his Houſe; the ſame Mixture of Letter, great and ſmall, in the ſame Caſe; and I took a Copy off the Preſs. I found over and above this Letter, [producing the Letter] dated the 7th of February, 1663. and directed, For my Dear and Loving Wife, J. Dover. Is it your Lordſhip's Pleaſure I ſhall read it all?

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. If it be touching the printing of Things you found, do.

Mr. L'Eſtrange. [Reads it.] I would fain ſee my Siſter Mary; therefore ſince Siſter Hobbs will not come, take her Order, and inſtead of her Name, put in Siſter Mary's: It will never be queſtioned here. However, do it as wiſely and handſomely as you can, &c. [And then in a Poſtſcript,] You muſt either get Tom Porter, or ſome very very truſty Friend, (poſſibly C. D. may help you) to get for you a ſafe and convenient Room to dry Books in, as ſoon as poſſibly you can. [And again:] Let me know what you intend to do with the two Sheets and half: I will have it publiſhed when I am certain I ſhall be tried.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Let the Jury ſee now, whether you are the Man you would be thought.

Dover. I deſire to know whether my Name be to that Letter?

Mr. L'Eſtrange. No, it is not.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Where did you receive or find this Letter?

Mr. L'Eſtrange. My Lord, I found it about his Wife.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Let the Jury judge if this come from you, or no.

Judge Keeling. You of the Jury, you muſt underſtand this, That what is ſaid now is only upon his Reputation, not to the Point in queſtion at all: That Matter reſts upon its own Bottom.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. I'll deal plainly with you: Had he not ſtood upon ſuch Terms, I ſhould not have ſpoke of this: But when a Man will be thus bold and confident, I thought it proper, to let you ſee how he continues now in the Goal.

Dover. I do not vindicate my ſelf in it; but I ſpeak againſt the Witneſs: I do conceive that the Witneſs does not fix any thing upon me.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Have you any thing elſe to ſay to the Indictment?

Dover. I am indicted as a malicious and factious Man: The Witneſſes ſay no ſuch thing.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. You are not indicted ſo, but that you have maliciouſly and factiouſly cauſed to be printed ſuch a ſeditious Book; not your Perſon, but the Action.

Dover. There is nothing of that proved: Admit I was guilty of it, it was done when there was no Act or Law in being touching Printing. The Witneſſes do not ſwear poſitively that I did do it: One ſays he did not ſee me; the other, that he only believed it; that he did ſee ſome Sheets upon the Line, and they were the ſame for ought he knew; does not remember the Time or Place of our Diſcourſe: I do not know that ever I had half an Hour's Diſcourſe with him in my Life: I never had any Meeting with him about any ſuch Matter, nor had any Converſe with him. The Title of the Book ſays, Faithfully and Impartially collected for further Satisfaction; ſo that it cannot be interpreted maliciouſly. It's a Maxim in Law, That the beſt Interpretations are to be put upon the Words of the Indictment, in favour of the Priſoner at the Bar: And I hope this Honourable Bench and the Jury will mind that. I am a Printer by Trade; what I did was for my Livelihood: The Scripture ſays, He is worſe than an Infidel that takes not care for his Family. I ſpeak not this to juſtify any thing againſt his Majeſty or his Government. Through my Ignorance I may poſſibly tranſgreſs: If I have done any ſuch Thing, I am ſorry for it; I hope I ſhall be more careful for the future. The other part of the Indictment is for ſelling of them: No Man ſwears that I ſold one Book of them. Mr. Creek ſays, That ſome of his Men told him that he had ſome of thoſe Sheets from ſome of my Folks; but of whom he does not ſay. That I did meddle with them, knowing them to be ſcandalous, I hope there is nothing proved of that nature: There being then no Law, I humbly hope there was no Tranſgreſſion.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Have you done?

Dover. I humbly deſire your Honours, and this Jury, to take notice of what I have ſaid.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. You of the Jury, I will not ſpend Time (it is too late) in repeating the Evidence: You have heard the Evidence particularly, and his Anſwer. He doth in part make the ſame Anſwer with his Fellows, which was, That it is his Trade. It's true, no doubt but he ought to maintain his Wife and Children by his lawful Calling; but if a Thief ſhould tell you that he maintained his Wife by Stealing, is that lawful? Printing Books lawfully, no Man will call him to account for it; but if he prints that that is abuſive to the King and his Government, that's no part of his Trade, and his Trade will not bear him out in it: He is charged for printing and publiſhing of theſe ſcandalous Books, That he did it knowingly, maliciouſly, falſly, factiouſly, and ſeditiouſly. I told you, That although all theſe Things be not proved, yet if he did it, the Law calls it Malice, Faction, and Sedition. Conſider the Circumſtances: You ſee it is done in the dark; the Sheets delivered at his Houſe, and Diſcourſe about Delivery of them; he would not deliver them unleſs Brewſter and Calvert were agreed. I leave the Evidence to you in this Caſe: Pregnant, ſtrong, undeniable Circumſtances are good Evidence. Though a Man doth not come and tell you he declared to him he knew what was contained in this Book, yet if there be ſufficient Evidence to ſatisfy you in your Conſciences that he knew what was in it, and was privy to the printing and publiſhing of it; there's enough for you to find the Indictment. You are to weigh Circumſtances as well as pregnant full Proof in Caſes of this Nature.

Clerk. Set Nathan Brooks to the Bar. You of the Jury, you ſhall underſtand that he ſtands indicted, &c. Reads the Indictment.

Mr. North afterwards opened the Indictment.

Serjeant Morton. This Man, we ſhall only prove him guilty of ſtitching and diſperſing the ſaid Books.

Threſher ſworn.

Threſher. This Man I have not ſeen theſe three Years.

Serjeant Morton. Did he ſet you to work in ſtitching thoſe Books?

Threſher. He brought none to me, that I can remember: But by Mr. Brewſter's Order I delivered about two hundred, or thereabouts, and carried them to his Houſe in St. Martins, and he took them at the Stair-foot, and paid me for ſtitching of them in Blue Paper.

Serjeant Morton. Who furniſhed you with Blue Paper?

Threſher. I went by Mr. Brewſter's Order to a Stationer in Bread-Street, and received ſome.

Brooks. I deſire to know whether in thoſe Books he ſaid he delivered me, there were thoſe Paſſages in the Indictment?

Threſher. I know not: They were the Speeches and Prayers that I delivered you.

Brooks. How did you deliver them to me?

Threſher. They were ſtitch'd; and I tied them up with a piece of Packthred, and carried them to him: He received them himſelf, and came afterwards to an Alehouſe, and gave me a Flaggon of Beer. He knew what they were; for ſome being imperfect, he ſaid Mr. Brewſter muſt make them good: And Mr. Brewſter gave Order, if he came for them, they ſhould be delivered him.

Brooks.

Brooks. Did you know there were thoſe Paſſages in them?

Threſher. No, not I.

Brooks. I knew only the Title of it.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Let there be what there will in it, if you knew the Title, look you to it. Have you any thing elſe to ask?

Brooks. No, my Lord.

Henry Mortlock ſworn.

Serjeant Morton. Mr. Mortlock, how many of thoſe Books did you receive of this Nathan Brooks?

Mortlock. About forty or fifty.

Serjeant Morton. What talk had you about receiving them?

Mortlock. I do not remember any Diſcourſe.

Serjeant Morton. Where did you receive them?

Mortlock. I am not certain whether in my Shop, or no.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Were they open?

Mortlock. They were tied up.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Did you ſpeak for them?

Mortlock. I cannot tell; he brought them to me.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. How came he to bring them to you?

Mortlock. May be I might ſpeak for them; I paid him for them.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. You and he knew what Book it was?

Mortlock. I think we did.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Did you not open them? They might have been The Devil of Edmonton, for ought you knew. Did you open them afterward? And did they appear to be this Book?

Mortlock. Yes.

Mr. L'Eſtrange ſworn.

Mr. L'Eſtrange. I came to the Houſe of Nathan Brooks about October laſt, and knocking at the Door, they made a difficulty to let me in: At laſt, ſeeing not how to avoid it, Brooks opened the Door. I asked him, what he was? He told me he was the Maſter of the Houſe. By and by comes one that lodged in the Houſe, and throws down this Book [ſhewing the Book] in the Kitchin, with this Expreſſion, I'll not be hang'd (ſays he) for ne'er a Rogue of you all: Do you hide your Books in my Chamber? This Book had the Speeches in it, with other Schiſmatical Treatiſes. After this I ſearched the next Houſe; and there I found more difficulty to get in. But after a long Stay, I ſaw the ſecond Floor in a Blaze; and then with a Smith's Sledge I endeavoured to force the Door. At length the Fire was put out, and one comes down and opens the Door. I went in, and up Stairs, where I found about two hundred of the Prelatick Preachers, and certain Notes of Nathan Brooks, wherein he mentions the Delivery of ſeveral of theſe Speeches, and other ſeditious Pamphlets. There is one Particular, wherein he records, That Thomas Brewſter did in the Preſence of Captain Hanſon undertake to bear his Charges of Impriſonment; this Nathan Brooks having been formerly impriſoned for a Crime, wherein Brewſter was to bear him out.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hide. What was it that burnt above?

Mr. L'Eſtrange. My Lord, they had burnt, I ſuppoſe, ſome of the Prelatick Preachers, (a deſperate Book:) I found one Bundle untied, and I ſuppoſe (as the Man told me after) that it was a part of that which was burnt.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. You ſay this was in the next Houſe to Brooks; what had Brooks to do there? Had he conveyed thoſe Books thither?

Mr. L'Eſtrange. The Owner of the Houſe ſaid he knew nothing of them: But a Man and his Wife, lodging in the Chamber where the Fire was, ſaid, That Nathan Brooks had delivered with his own Hands to them thoſe Parcel of Books that were there found.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. You hear what he ſays, That one of your Gueſts came down, ſaid he would not be hanged for ne'er a Rogue of you all; throws down the Book ——

Brooks. What's that to me, if a Man have a Book in his Houſe, and throw it down, and ſay ſo, doth that concern me? He did not bring it out of my Chamber.

One Mercer ſworn.

Mercer. My Lord, [having the Book in his Hand] this is the Book that I did find in a Room, brought up by Nathan Brooks; and I brought it down: I had it in a Room where two Boys and my Siſter lay. He came firſt, and knocked at our Chamber-Door: Said I, Who is there? Says he, A Friend. Who are you? Brooks, your Landlord, ſays he: Pray open the Door, and lay up this Book for me. No, ſaid I, if you were my Father or Brother, I will not receive it; I will not meddle or make with you. After I had denied the Book, he flings it into the next Room.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. How came you by the Book?

Mercer. After Mr. L'Eſtrange had enquired there for Books, I knew nothing; but my Wife called to my Siſter, and asked her if ſhe heard Mr. Brooks in the Room? She ſaid, Yes, and he had left a Book with her. Having notice, I went up Stairs, took the Book, and brought it down preſently.

Brooks. Is that the Book, the very individual Book, that I brought up there?

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. He ſwears this, That you knocked, and prayed him to take in a Book; he refuſed it: You went up to the next Chamber, and there you left it. And his Wife asking afterwards if you had been there, his Siſter ſaid, Yes, you had left a Book. He brought it down; and this appears to be the very individual Book, nothing can be more clear.

Mercer's Wife ſworn.

That Morning they knocked at Brooks's Door, we were a-bed; I heard a Noiſe of Thieves. Upon that, I being awake, and my Husband aſleep, I awaked him, and deſired him to go to the Window. He asked who was there? One ſaid to him, Riſe, and open the Door. Said my Husband, I am but a Lodger; let my Landlord open it, if he will. Who is your Landlord? Mr. Brooks. That's the Man I look for, ſays the other. So with that, after ſome time, Mr. Brooks went down, and opened the Door. Mr. L'Eſtrange coming up to my Husband, ſays he, Are you ſure there is nothing in your Rooms? There is nothing, ſaid he. When my Husband went down, I called to my Siſter: Said I, Did you hear Mr. Brooks there? Yes, ſaid ſhe, he has left a Book here. Said I, Do you know what's in it? It may bring us all into Trouble. And my Husband having confidently denied any ſuch thing, fearing he might be troubled, I called him up, and told him of it. Said my Husband, I'll call up the Gentleman, tleman, and give it him. No, ſaid I, go take the Book, and carry it him.

Mercer's Siſter ſworn.

Thomazin Mercer. It is very true that that is the very Book I received from Mr. Brooks.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Now the individual Book is brought to light.

Brooks. What was the Title of it?

T. Mercer. I know not; but there was the Speeches of the ten Men that were executed.

Brooks. Did you ſee that Book, that very Book?

T. Mercer. Yes.

One Mr. Merridale ſworn.

Mr. Merridale. My Lord, this very Book did Mercer bring down, told us, He would be hang'd for never a Rogue of them all: Did he think to lay his Books at my Door? I know this is the very Book: I took notice of the Picture of Sir Henry Vane in it; and he there owned it.

Mercer. I can tell that he owned it, and ſaid it was brought to him to be bound.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Here are two hundred of theſe Books delivered to you to ſell; fifty you deliver to another. When Mr. L'Eſtrange comes to ſearch, you open not your Doors: When you ſee you could not ſtay longer, you run up to deliver it to Mercer, your Gueſt: He would not receive it; you deliver it to his Siſter: She keeps it in her Hands. When her Husband had denied Books to be there, and his Wife underſtanding afterwards you had left it, ſhe was afraid of her Husband for denying it, calls him, and gives him the Book; and then he ſaid, He would be hanged for never a Rogue of you all; throws down the Book: And that was the very Book ſhe received from you; and your ſelf did own it, and confeſs it.

Brooks. As for Mr. L'Eſtrange, it is not ſo; he ſays, when firſt he knocked at the door, I did not hear him: afterwards I called out, Who's there? ſaid one, Which is Mr. Brooks? ſaid I, Here. I told them, if they would be civil, I would open the door, give me but leave to put on my Breeches. I went and opened it. He doth not ſwear poſitively they are my Books. My Lord, this Mercer was a Lodger in my Houſe; I have often deſired him to pay his Rent, and ſince I have been taken, I have ſent ſeveral Meſſengers: I told him I would ſeize his Goods, and thereupon he ſpeaks againſt me maliciouſly. I deſire you to conſider, I being only a Workman, how can I be guilty of Sedition and Scandalous Things? I never printed any thing, I am only a Bookbinder, that's my Trade: I hope you will conſider, that I am only a bare Workman. My Lord, I deſire when they go out, that ſomebody may ſtand at the door, that no body may go in to the Jury.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. We will take care of that: Have you any more to ſay?

Brooks. No, my Lord.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. You of the Jury, you have heard ſo much of the other Indictments of the ſame nature, I need not ſay much to this. That which he ſpeaks touching his Trade, I muſt repeat the ſame as before; he is not queſtioned for uſing, but abuſing of his Trade; for publiſhing and diſperſing ſeditious and ſcandalous Books, printing and publiſhing, but the Evidence is only for publiſhing. If you be ſatisfied that he publiſhed it, that's the Crime; printing alone is not enough, for if a Man print a Book to make a fire on, that's no Offence, it is the publiſhing of it which is the Crime. You have heard the Evidence, how far forth it is proved, two hundred delivered to him, fifty by him delivered to another: This Book you ſee his own Conſcience tells him what it was; when Mr. L'Eſtrange came, he would have ſlipt it into his Gueſt's Chamber; he refuſed it: then he carries it to another. Lay your Evidence together; if you find him guilty of the publiſhing, it is enough.

Jury. We deſire to know upon what Statute Law this Indictment is grounded?

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Upon none; but it is an Offence at Common Law, I told you ſo at firſt.

[The Jury went forth, and after near an hour's Conſultation, returned to the Court, and took their places.]

Clerk. Are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Clerk. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. The Foreman.

Clerk. Set up the Priſoners to the Bar: How ſay you, is Tho. Brewſter guilty of the Offence whereof he ſtands indicted, for printing the ſeditious Book called The Speeches, &c. or not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty of ſelling and uttering the ſaid Books.

Clerk. What ſay you, is he guilty of the Offence of printing and publiſhing the Book called The Phœnix, &c. or not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty of publiſhing it.

Clerk. How ſay you, is Simon Dover guilty of the Offence for printing and publiſhing The Speeches, &c. or not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Clerk. How ſay you, is Nathan Brooks guilty of the Offence for printing and ſelling the ſaid Book?

Foreman. Guilty of ſelling it.

Clerk. Hearken to your Verdicts as the Court hath recorded them: You ſay, that &c. and ſo you ſay all?

Jury. Yes.

Mr. North. My Lord, we humbly pray Sentence againſt the Priſoners.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. You three, Thomas Brewſter, Simon Dover and Nathan Brooks; you have been ſeverally indicted for a heinous and great Offence: Brewſter, you have been indicted for two ſeveral Books, as full of Villany, and Slander, and Reproach to the King and Government, as poſſibly can be: And I will tell you all three, it is the King's great Mercy you have not been indicted capitally; for every one of thoſe Books are filled with Treaſon, and you for publiſhing of them, by ſtrictneſs of Law, have forfeited your Lives and All to the King: It is his Clemency towards you. You may ſee the King's Purpoſe; he deſires to reform, not to ruin his Subjects. The Preſs is grown ſo common, and Men take the Boldneſs to print whatever is brought to them, let it concern whom it will; it is high time Examples be made. 1. I muſt let you and all Men know, by the Courſe of the Common Law, before this new Act was made, for a Printer, or any other, under pretence of Printing, to publiſh that which is a Reproach to the King, to the State, to his Government, to the Church, nay to a particular Perſon, it is puniſhable as a Miſdemeanour. He muſt not ſay, He knew not what was in it; that is no Anſwer in Law. I ſpeak this, becauſe I would have Men

Men avoid this for time to come, and not think to ſhelter themſelves under ſuch a Pretence. I will not ſpend time in diſcourſing of the Nature of the Offence, it hath been declared already; it is ſo high, that truly the higheſt Puniſhment that by Law may be juſtly inflicted, is due to you. But, Thomas Brewſter, your Offence is double; therefore the Judgment of the Court is,

'That you ſhall pay to the King, for theſe Offences committed, an hundred Marks: And for you, (the other two) Simon Dover and Nathan Brooks, you ſhall pay either of you a Fine of forty Marks to the King.

'You ſhall either of you ſeverally ſtand upon the Pillory from Eleven to One of the Clock in one Place at the Exchange, and another Day (the ſame ſpace of time) in Smithfield; and you ſhall have a Paper ſet over your Hats, declaring your Offence, For printing and publiſhing Scandalous, Treaſonable, and Factious Books againſt the King and State.

'You ſhall be committed till the next Goal-delivery without Bail; and then you ſhall make an open Confeſſion and Acknowledgment of your Offences in ſuch Words as ſhall be directed you.

'And afterwards you ſhall remain Priſoners during the King's Pleaſure: And when you are diſcharged, you ſhall put in good Security by Recognizance, your ſelves 400 l. a-piece, and two Securities each of you of 200 l. a-piece, not to print or publiſh any Books, but ſuch as ſhall be allowed of. And this is the Judgment of the Court.'

The Tryal of Mary Moders, alias Stedman, ſtiled the German Princeſs; at the Seſſions in the Old-Bailey, on Wedneſday the third of June 1663. 15 Car. II.

THE Court being ſat, a Bill of Indictment was drawn up againſt Mary Moders, alias Stedman, for having two Husbands now alive, viz. Tho. Stedman and John Carleton. The Grand Jury found the Bill, and was to the effect following, viz.

'THAT ſhe the ſaid Mary Moders late of London Spinſter, otherwiſe Mary Stedman, the Wife of Tho. Stedman, late of the City of Canterbury in the County of Kent Shoemaker, May 12. in the Reign of his now Majeſty the ſixth, at the Pariſh of St. Mildred's in the City of Canterbury, in the County aforeſaid, did take to Husband the aforeſaid Thomas Stedman, and him the ſaid Thomas Stedman then and there had to Husband. And that ſhe the ſaid Mary Moders, alias Stedman, April 21. in the fifteenth Year of his ſaid Majeſty's Reign, at London, in the Pariſh of Great St. Bartholomews, in the Ward of Farringdon without, felonioufly did take to Husband one John Carleton, and to him was married, the ſaid Tho. Stedman her former Husband being then alive, and in full Life: againſt the Form of the Statute in that caſe provided, and againſt the Peace of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, &c.

Afterwards the ſaid Mary Moders, alias Stedman, was called to the Bar; and appearing, was commanded to hold up her Hand: which ſhe accordingly did, and her Indictment was read to her as followeth.

Clerk of the Peace. Mary Moders, alias Stedman, thou ſtandeſt indicted in London by the Name of Mary Moders late of London Spinſter, otherwiſe Mary Stedman, the Wife of, &c. [And here the Indictment was read, as above] How ſayſt thou, art thou guilty of the Felony whereof thou ſtandeſt indicted, or not guilty?

Mary Moders. Not guilty, my Lord.

Cl. of the Peace. How wilt thou be try'd?

Priſoner. By God and the Country.

Cl. of the Peace. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

And afterwards ſhe being ſet to the Bar in order to her Tryal, ſhe pray'd time till the morrow for her Tryal: which was granted, and all Perſons concerned were ordered to attend them at Nine of the clock in the Forenoon.

[The Reader is deſired to take notice of the following Paſſage:]

After ſhe was arraigned, and going back to the Goal, her Husband the young Lord told her, He muſt now bid her Adieu for ever. To which ſhe replied,

Nay, my Lord' 'tis not amiſs,
Before we part, to have a Kiſs.

And ſo ſaluted him, and ſaid, What a Quarter and Noiſe here's of a Cheat! You cheated me, and I you: You told me you were a Lord, and I told you I was a Princeſs; and I think I fitted you. And ſo ſaluting each other, they parted.

June 4. 1663.

THE Court was ſat; Proclamation was made.

Cl. of the Peace. O Yes, all manner of Perſons that have any thing more to do, &c. Set Mary Moders to the Bar: Where ſhe accordingly ſtood.

Cl. of the Peace. Mary Moders, alias Stedman, hold up thy Hand: which ſhe did. Thoſe Men that you ſhall hear called, and perſonally appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King and you for your Life: if you will challenge them, or any of them, you muſt do it when they come to the Book

Book to be ſworn, before they are ſworn. And then were called,

William Rutland,	Simon Driver,
Arthur Vigers,	Robert Kerkham,
Arthur Capel,	Hugh Maſſon,
Tho. Smith,	Tho. Weſtley,
Fran. Chaplin,	Richard Clutterbuck,
Robert Harvey,	Randolph Tooke.

And ſhe challenged none; but they were ſeverally ſworn by the Oath following:

Look upon the Priſoner: You ſhall well and truly try, and true Deliverance make, between our Sovereign Lord the King and the Priſoner at the Bar, whom you ſhall have in charge, according to your Evidence. So help you God.

Cl. of the Peace. Cryer make Proclamation: 'O 'Yes! if any one can inform my Lords the King's 'Juſtices, the King's Serjeant, or the King's At-'torney, before this Inqueſt be taken between our 'Sovereign Lord the King and the Priſoner at the 'Bar, let them come forth, and they ſhall be 'heard, for now the Priſoner ſtands at the Bar 'upon her Deliverance: and all others that are 'bound by Recognizance to give Evidence againſt 'the Priſoner at the Bar, come forth and give Evi-'dence, or elſe you'll forfeit your Recognizance.'

The Witneſſes being called ſeveral times, and not appearing, young Carleton came into the Court in a rich Garb trimmed with ſcarlet Ribbands, and pray'd that in reſpect his Father and the reſt of the Witneſſes were not all ready, the Tryal might be deferred for half an hour; and he going back, and paſſing the Priſoner his Princeſs, who ſtood there in a black Velvet Waſtcoat, dreſſed in her Hair, trimmed alſo with ſcarlet Ribbands, ſhe (veiling her Face with her Fan) laugh'd at him, to the great Obſervation of the Court: and ſo the young Lord left the Court (by Advice of his Friends) and betook himſelf to an adjoining Houſe, where he ſtood the whole Tryal.

After ſome ſtay, the Witneſſes came into the Court, and the Priſoner was ſet to the Bar, and Silence being commanded, the Indictment was again read.

Cl: of the Peace. Upon this Indictment ſhe hath pleaded Not guilty, and for her Tryal hath put herſelf upon God and the Country; which Country you are. Your Charge is to inquire whether ſhe be guilty of the ſaid Felony, or not guilty: if you find her guilty, you ſhall inquire what Goods and Chattels ſhe had at the time of the Felony committed, or at any time ſithence: if you find her not guilty, you ſhall inquire whether ſhe did flee for it; if you find that ſhe fled for it, you ſhall inquire of her Goods, &c. as if ſhe had been guilty: if you find ſhe be not guilty, nor that ſhe did flee for it, ſay ſo, and no more, and hear your Evidence.

Several Witneſſes were ſworn by the Oath following:

The Evidence that you ſhall ſwear between our Sovereign Lord the King and the Priſoner at the Bar, ſhall be the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth. So help you God.

James Knot. My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, I gave this Woman in Marriage to one Thomas Stedman, which is now alive in Dover, and I ſaw him laſt Week.

Court. Where was ſhe married?

Knot. In Canterbury.

Court. Where there?

Knot. In St. Mildred's, by one Parſon Man, who is now dead.

Court. How long ſince were they married?

Knot. About nine Years ago.

Court. Did they live together afterwards?

Knot. Yes, about four Years, and had two Children.

Court. You gave her in Marriage, but did the Miniſter give her to her Husband then?

Knot. Yes, and they lived together.

Jury. Friend, did you give this very Woman?

Knot. Yes.

Court. What Company was there?

Knot. There was the married Couple, her Siſter, myſelf, the Parſon, and the Sexton.

Court. Where is that Sexton?

Knot. I know not, my Lord.

Court. You are ſure they were married in the Church, and this is the Woman?

Knot. Yes, I am ſure of it.

Court. How long ago?

Knot. About nine Years ago.

Court. Did you know this Woman before the Marriage, and how long?

Knot. Yes, I knew her a long time, I was an Apprentice ſeven Years near her Mother's Houſe in Canterbury.

Court. Then ſhe's no foreign Princeſs? Of what Parentage was ſhe?

Knot. I did not know her own Father, [and in that he might be believed] but her Father-in-Law was a Muſician there.

Court. You ſee her married: what Words were uſed at her Marriage, and in what manner?

Knot. They were married according to the Order of the Land, a little before the Act came forth touching Marriages by Juſtices of the Peace.

Court. Was it by the Form of Common-Prayer, any thing read of that Form?

Knot. I did not take notice of that, I was but a young Man, and was deſired to go along with them.

William Clark being ſworn, ſaid, My Lord, I was laſt Week in Dover, in company with this James Knot and Thomas Stedman; and he the ſaid Stedman did own that he did marry one Mary Moders, a Daughter of one in Canterbury, and that Knot gave her, and that he had two Children by her, and declared his Willingneſs to come up to give Evidence againſt her, but wanted Money for his Journey: And I have underſtood that a Perſon here in Court was of a Jury at Canterbury, at a Tryal between Day and Mary Stedman at the Bar, for having two Husbands.

Court. Was ſhe cleared?

Clark. I cannot tell.

Young Carleton's Father ſworn: My Lord, I was at Dover the laſt Week, on Wedneſday; I ſaw the Husband of this Woman, and the Man acknowledged himſelf to be ſo, and did ſay that James Knot was the Man that gave her in Marriage to him.

Court. Where is this Man her Husband? Hearſays muſt condemn no Man: what do you know of your own knowledge?

Carleton the Elder. I know the Man is alive.

Court. Do you know he was married to her?

Carleton. Not I, my Lord.

Sarah

Sarah Williams. My Lord, this Woman was bound for Barbadoes, to go along with my Husband, and ſhe deſired to lodge at our Houſe for ſome time, and did ſo; and when the Ship was ready to go, ſhe went into Kent to receive her Means, and ſaid ſhe would meet the Ship in the Downs; and miſſing the Ship, took Boat and went to the Ship. After ſeveral days remaining there, there came her Husband with an Order, and fetch'd her aſhore, and carried her to Dover-Caſtle.

Court. What was his Name that had an Order to bring her on ſhore again?

Sarah Williams. His Name was Thomas Stedman.

Court. Have you any more to prove the firſt Marriage?

Carleton the Elder. No, none but Knot; there was none but three, the Miniſter dead, the Sexton not to be found, and this Knot who hath given Evidence.

Court. What became of the two Children, Knot?

Knot. They both died.

Carleton the Elder. Stedman ſaid in my hearing, that he had lived four Years together, had two Children by her, and both dead; five Years ago laſt Eaſter ſince ſhe left him.

Court. Mr. Carleton, what have you heard this Woman ſay?

Carleton. My Lord, ſhe will confeſs nothing that pleaſes him.

Court. Mr. Carleton, did you look in the Church-Regiſter for the firſt Marriage?

Carleton. I did look in the Book, and he that is now Clerk, was then Sexton, (juſt now not to be found;) he told me, that Marriages being then very numerous, preceding the Act before-mention'd, the then Clerk had neglected the Regiſtry of this Marriage. If ſhe intended this Trade, ſhe likewiſe knew how to make the Clerk miſtake regiſtring the Marriage.

Young Carleton's Brother ſworn; who ſaid, My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, I was preſent at the Marriage of my Brother with this Gentlewoman, which was on or about April 21. 1663. They were married at Great St. Bartholomew's, by one Mr. Smith, a Miniſter here in Court, by Licence.

Mr. Smith the Parſon ſworn: My Lord, all that I can ſay, is this; That Mr. Carleton the younger told me of ſuch a Buſineſs, and deſired me to marry them: they came to Church, and I did marry them by the Book of Common-Prayer.

Court. Mr. Smith, are you ſure that is the Woman?

Parſon. Yes, my Lord, it is; I believe ſhe will not deny it.

Priſoner. Yes, my Lord, I confeſs I am the Woman.

Court. Have you any more Witneſſes?

Carleton. We can get no more but Knot to prove the firſt Marriage, the laſt is clear.

Judge Howel. Where is Knot? Remember yourſelf well what you ſaid before. You ſay, you know that Woman at the Bar, that you had known her a great while, that ſhe was born near you in Canterbury, that you were preſent at her Marriage, that Parſon Man married them, that none were preſent but yourſelf, the married Couple, Parſon, Sexton, and her Siſter.

Knot. Some others came into the Church, but none that I knew; I am ſure none went with her, but thoſe I named.

Court. Who gave her in Marriage?

Knot. I did.

Court. How came you to do it?

Knot. I was Stedman's Shop-Mate, and he deſired me to go along with him.

Court. Were her Parents then living, or no?

Knot. Her Mother was.

Jury. How old are you?

Knot. Two or three and thirty Years.

Jury. How long ago was this Marriage?

Knot. About nine Years ſince.

Court. Then he was twenty three, and might do it: What is your Trade of Life?

Knot. I am a Cordwainer, otherwiſe a Shoemaker; Stedman was ſo too; we wrought both together.

Jury. We deſire to know whether ſhe had a Father and Mother then living?

Knot. She had a Father-in-Law.

Court. Did you know her Mother?

Knot. Yes.

Court. How long before that Marriage did her own Father die?

Knot. I did not know him. [He ſaid ſo before indeed.]

Court. What Age was ſhe when married?

Knot. I ſuppoſe about nineteen or twenty.

Priſoner. May it pleaſe your Honours, and Gentlemen of the Jury, you have heard the ſeveral Witneſſes, and I think this whole Country cannot but plainly ſee the Malice of my Husband's Father againſt me; how he cauſleſly hunts after my Life. When his Son, my Husband, came and addreſſed himſelf to me, pretending himſelf a Perſon of Honour, and upon firſt ſight preſſed me to Marriage; I told him, Sir (ſaid I) I am a Stranger, have no Acquaintance here, and deſire you to deſiſt your Suit. I could not ſpeak my mind, but he (having borrow'd ſome thredbare Compliments) replied, Madam, your ſeeming Virtues, your amiable Perſon, and noble Deportment, renders you ſo excellent, that were I in the leaſt intereſted in you, I cannot doubt of Happineſs: And ſo with many words to the like purpoſe, courted me. I told him, and indeed could not but much wonder, that at ſo ſmall a Glance he could be ſo preſumptuous with a Stranger, to hint this to me: but all I could ſay, would not beat him off. And preſently afterwards he having intercepted my Letter, by which he underſtood how my Affairs ſtood, and how conſiderable my Means were, he ſtill urged me to marry him: and immediately by the Contrivance of his Friends, gaping at my Fortune, I was hurried to Church to be married, which the Parſon at firſt did without Licence, to ſecure me to my Husband, and ſome time after had a Licence.

And my Husband's Father afterwards conſidering I had a conſiderable Fortune, preſſed me, that in reſpect I had no Relations here, and becauſe, ſays he, we are mortal, you would do well to make over your Eſtate to my Son your Husband; it will be much for your Honour, Satisfaction of the World, and for which you will be chronicled for a rare Woman. And perceiving he had not baited his Hook ſufficient (with ſome fair Pretences) to catch me then, he and his Son, who were both willing to make up ſome of their former Loſſes in circumventing me of what I had, they robb'd me of my Jewels, and Clothes of great value; and afterwards pretended they were counterfeit Jewels, and declared that I had formerly been married to one at Canterbury, which Place I know not: and this grounded on a Letter (of their own framing) ſent from Dover, with a Deſcription of me; that I was a young fat Woman, full-breaſted, that I ſpoke ſeveral Languages; and therefore they imagined gined me the Perſon, and ſo violently carried me from my Lodging before a Juſtice of Peace, only to affright me, that I might make my Eſtate over to them. The Juſtice having heard their ſeveral Allegations, could not commit me, unleſs they would be bound to proſecute me; which my Huſband being unwilling to, the Juſtice demanded of his Father whether he would proſecute me, ſaying, they muſt not make a Fool of him: and ſo after ſome Whiſperings, the Father and his Son were both bound to proſecute, and thereupon I was committed to Priſon. And ſince that, theſe People have been up and down the Country, and finding none there that could juſtify any thing of this matter, they get here an unknown Fellow, unleſs in a Priſon, and from thence borrow'd, you cannot but all judge, to ſwear againſt me. My Lord, were there any ſuch Marriage as this Fellow pretends, methinks there might be a Certificate from the Miniſter, or Place; certainly if married, it muſt be regiſtred: but there is no Regiſtry of it, and ſo can be no Certificate, no Miniſter nor Clerk to be found. And if I ſhould own a Marriage, then you ſee that great Witneſs cannot tell you whether I was lawfully married, or how; but it is enough for him (if ſuch a paltry Fellow may be believed) to ſay, I was married. I was never yet married to any but John Carleton, the late pretended Lord: But theſe Perſons have ſought all ways to take away my Life, bring Perſons to ſwear againſt me, one hired with Five Pounds, and another old Fellow perſuaded to own me for his Wife; who came to the Priſon, and ſeeing another Woman, owned her, and afterwards myſelf, and indeed any body. If ſuch an old inconſiderable Fellow had heretofore woo'd me, it muſt have been for want of Diſcretion, as Carleton did for want of Money; but I know of no ſuch thing. Several Scandals have been laid upon me, but no mortal Fleſh can truly touch the leaſt Hair of my Head for any ſuch like Offence; they have framed this of themſelves. My Lord, I am a Stranger and a Foreigner; and being informed there is Matter of Law in this Tryal for my Life, my Innocence ſhall be my Counſellor, and your Lordſhips my Judges, to whom I wholly refer my Cauſe. Since I have been in Priſon, ſeveral from Canterbury have been to ſee me, pretending themſelves (if I were the Perſon as was related) to be my School-Mates; and when they came to me, the Keeper can juſtify, they all declared they did not know me.

Court. Knot, you ſaid ſhe lived near you at Canterbury; what Woman or Man there, have you to prove ſhe lived there? Have you none in that whole City, neither for love of Juſtice nor Right, will come to ſay ſhe lived there?

Knot. I believe I could fetch one.

Court. Well ſaid! Are they to fetch! ſtill?

Priſoner. My Lord, I deſire ſome Witneſſes may be heard in my behalf.

Elizabeth Collier examined. My Lord, my Huſband being a Priſoner in the Gatehouſe, I came there to ſee my Husband, and did work there on days; and there came in an old Man, his Name was Billing, he ſaid he had a Wife there: ſays Mr. Baley, Go in and find her out; and he ſaid I was his Wife, turned my Hood, and put on his Spectacles, looks upon me, and ſaid I was the ſame Woman his Wife; and afterwards ſaid I was not, and ſo to others: I can ſay no more.

Jane Finch examined. My Lord, there came a Man and Woman one night, and knock'd at my door; I came down, they asked to ſpeak with one Jane Finch. I am the Perſon, ſaid I. We underſtand, ſaid they, you know Mrs. Carleton now in Priſon. Not I, ſaid I, I only went to ſee her there. Said they, be not ſcrupulous; if you will go and juſtify any thing againſt her, we will give you 5 l.

Court. Who are thoſe two?

Finch. I do not know them, my Lord.

Mr. Baley examined. My Lord, there has been at leaſt five hundred People have view'd her; ſeveral from Canterbury, forty at leaſt that ſaid they lived there: and when they went up to her, ſhe hid not her Face at all, but not one of them knew her.

Court. What Country-woman are you?

Priſoner. I was born in Cologn in Germany.

Court. Mr. Carleton, how came you to underſtand ſhe was married formerly?

Carleton Elder. I received a Letter from the Recorder of Canterbury to that purpoſe.

Priſoner. They that can offer 5 l. to ſwear againſt me, can alſo frame a Letter againſt me: They ſay I was nineteen Years of Age about nine Years ago, and am now but twenty-one.

Court. Mr. Carleton, you heard what Knot ſaid; he ſaid ſhe lived near him four Years a Wife, why did not you get ſomebody elſe from thence to teſtify this?

Carleton. Here was one Davis that was at her Father's Houſe, and ſpoke with him——

Court. Where is he?

Carleton. I know not; he was here.

Court. You were telling the Court of a former Indictment againſt her, what was that for?

Carleton. She was indicted for having two Huſbands, Stedman of Canterbury her firſt Husband, and Day of Dover Chirurgeon, her ſecond Husband. The Indictment was traverſed the Year before his Majeſty came to England, ſhe was found not guilty.

Court. Who was at that Tryal?

Carleton. One here in Court was of the Jury; but that Party ſaid there was ſuch a Tryal, but knows not that this is the Woman.

Judge Howel. Gentlemen of the Jury, you ſee this Indictment is againſt Mary Moders, otherwiſe Stedman, and it is for having two Husbands, both at one time alive; the firſt Stedman, afterwards married to Carleton, her former Husband being alive. You have heard the Proof of the firſt Marriage, and the Proof doth depend upon one Witneſs, that is Knot; and he indeed doth ſay, he was at the Marriage, gave her, and he names one Man the Parſon that married her, that he is dead; none preſent there but the married Couple that muſt needs be there, the Parſon, this Witneſs, her Siſter, and the Sexton; that he knows not what is become of the Sexton. All the Evidence given on that ſide to prove her guilty of this Indictment, depends upon his ſingle Teſtimony. It is true, he ſays ſhe was married at Canterbury, but the Particulars, or the Manner of the Marriage, he doth not ſo well remember, whether by the Book of Common-Prayer, or otherwiſe; but they lived together for four Years, had two Children. If ſhe were born there, married there, had two Children there, and lived there ſo long, it were eaſy to have brought ſomebody to prove this: that is all that is material for the firſt Marriage.

For the ſecond, there is little Proof neceſſary; ſhe confeſſes herſelf married to Carleton, and owns him; the queſtion is, Whether ſhe was married to Stedman or not?

You

You have heard what Defence ſhe hath made for herſelf, ſome Witneſſes on her behalf: If you believe that Knot, the ſingle Witneſs, ſpeaks the Truth ſo far forth to ſatisfy your Conſcience that that was a Marriage, ſhe is guilty. You ſee what the Circumſtances are, it is penal, if guilty, ſhe muſt die; a Woman hath no Clergy, ſhe is to die by the Law, if guilty. You heard ſhe was indicted at Dover for having two Husbands, Stedman the firſt, and Day the ſecond. There, it ſeems by that which they have ſaid, ſhe was acquitted; none can ſay this was the Woman: that there was a Tryal, may be believed; but whether this be the Woman try'd or acquitted, doth not appear. One here, that was of that Jury, ſays there was a Tryal, but knows not that this is the Woman. So that upon the whole, it is left to you to conſider of the Evidence you have heard, and ſo to give your Verdict.

[The Jury went forth, and after ſome ſhort Conſultation returned to their places.]

Their Names were called, and all anſwered.

Cl. of the Peace. Are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Clerk. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. The Foreman.

Clerk. Mary Moders alias Stedman, hold up thy Hand: Look upon her, Gentlemen; what ſay you, is ſhe guilty of the Felony whereof ſhe ſtands indicted, or not guilty?

Foreman. Not guilty.

[And thereupon a great number of People being in and about the Court, hiſſed and clapped their hands.]

Clerk. Did ſhe fly for it?

Foreman. Not that we know.

Afterwards ſhe deſired, that her Jewels and Clothes taken from her, might be reſtored to her. The Court acquainted her, that they were her Husband's, and that if any detained them from her, he might have his Remedy at Law: She charging old Mr. Carleton with them, he declared they were already in the cuſtody of his Son her Husband.

The Tryals of Col. James Turner, John Turner, William Turner, Mary Turner, and Ely Turner, Confederates; at Juſtice-Hall in the Old-Bailey, London, the 15*th*, 16*th*, and 19*th of* January 1663.

JAMES TURNER the Titular Colonel, William Turner, Mary Turner, and Ely Turner, were brought to the Bar.

Clerk of the Peace. James Turner, hold up thy Hand: which he did. John Turner, hold up thy Hand.

Col. Turner. He is not here, but he is hard by, and I will ſend for him. My Lord, it has been reported he was fled; it was a miſtake, he is in Fleetſtreet, where he has been ever ſince this Buſineſs.

[And thereupon he ſent one for him, and then the Court proceeded to ſome other Buſineſs. About half an hour after, the ſaid John came into the Court, and was ſet among the other Priſoners at the Bar.]

Cl. of the Peace. James Turner, hold up thy Hand; John Turner, hold up thy Hand; William Turner, hold up thy Hand; Mary Turner, hold up thy Hand; Ely Turner, hold up thy Hand: which they all did, and then the ſaid Clerk read their Indictment; which was as followeth:

'YOU ſtand indicted in London by the Names of James Turner late of London Gentleman, John Turner late of London Labourer, William Turner late of London Labourer, Mary Turner late of London Spinſter, (otherwiſe Mary Turner the Wife of the ſaid James Turner) and Ely Turner late of London Labourer; for that you the ſaid James Turner, John Turner, and William Turner, the 7th Day of January, in the fifteenth Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord Charles the Second, by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, about Ten of the clock in the night-time of the ſame Day, with Force and Arms, &c. at London, that is to ſay, in the Pariſh of St. Dyonis Backchurch, in the Ward of Limeſtreet, London, aforeſaid, in the Dwelling-Houſe of one Francis Tryon Merchant, there feloniouſly and burglarly you did break and enter; and on him the ſaid Francis Tryon, againſt the Peace of God, and of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, in his Dwelling-Houſe aforeſaid, then and there being and reſting, feloniouſly and burglarly did make an Aſſault, and him the ſaid Francis Tryon in corporal Fear of his Life feloniouſly and burglarly you did put; and one Pendant Pearl ſet in Gold, and a precious Stone fix'd thereto, of the Value of 150 l. Two Pendant Pearls with Half-moons, ſeven Diamonds, and eight Rubies fix'd to every of them, of the Value of 80 l. One Topaz and Pendant Pearl at the bottom thereof, of the Value of 20 l. One Emerald Jewel, and 5 Diamonds, of the Value of 150 l. One Gold Ring, and Diamonds ſet therein, of the Value of 30 l. One other Gold Ring, and 9 Diamonds fix'd in the ſame Ring, called an Agar Ring, of the Value of 5 l. One Jewel, and thirty ' ſeven

And 'that you the ſaid Mary Turner and Ely Turner 'knowing the ſaid John Turner the Felony and Bur'glary aforeſaid, to have committed; the ſaid John 'Turner afterwards, that is to ſay, the 8th Day of 'January in the Fifteenth Year aforeſaid, at London 'aforeſaid, that is to ſay, in the Pariſh of St. An'drew Underſhaft, in the Ward of Aldgate, feloni'ouſly did receive, comfort and maintain, againſt 'the Peace of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, 'his Crown and Dignity.

How ſayeſt thou, James Turner, art thou Guilty of the Felony and Burglary whereof thou ſtandeſt indicted, or Not Guilty?

Col. Turner. My Lord, and the honourable Bench, I ſhall no way be refractory, nor do any thing that doth not become a Gentleman; but I humbly beſeech your Honours that you will ſtand my Friend, that I may have Juſtice, and your Honours Opinion——

* Ld Hyde. You are to plead now to your Indictment.

* Chief Juſtice of the King's-Bench.

Col. Turner. I do not refuſe it; my Lord, I beg your Honour to hear me a word——

Ld Hyde. Plead to the Indictment, and then ſay what you will; till that be done, all you can ſay will ſignify little: we are to receive your Anſwer to your Plea firſt, afterwards ſay what you will; you muſt now ſay Guilty or not Guilty.

Turner. I ſhall not refuſe to plead, but I beg my own Goods may be reſtored to me; my Houſe, my Lord, is locked up, and Children turned out of doors, and I have nothing to ſupport us.

Ld Hyde. Are you Guilty or Not Guilty? You ſhall have right done you.

Turner. I will take your Honour's word for it; I am not Guilty.

Clerk. How will you be tried?

Turner. By God and the Country.

Clerk. How ſayeſt thou, John Turner, art thou Guilty of the Felony and Burglary whereof thou ſtandeſt indicted, or Not Guilty? [And ſo William Turner and likewiſe Mary Turner, and Ely Turner, as Acceſſaries, being demanded the like Queſtions, ſeverally pleaded Not Guilty, and put themſelves on God and the Country to be tried.]

Ld Hyde. Now, Mr. Turner, let us know who has ſeized any thing of yours.

Turner. The Sheriffs, Sir Richard Ford and Sir Richard Rives, and they are in poſſeſſion of my Houſe; I have none but a Child of 7 and 9 at home, and have not a Shirt to command. It's true, the Sheriff, Sir Richard Ford, was ſo civil yeſterday as to give me ſome Linen.

Sir Richard Ford. I ſhall give your Lordſhip an account of this: I ſuppoſe, my Lord, we have done nothing but what was cuſtomary; a Seizure we have made now, but after we had heard this Gentleman was committed for Felony and Burglary, and that none but Children were in the Houſe, my Lord, we thought it our Duty, both for his Good, to ſecure his Eſtate, if acquitted, and ſo for the King, if convicted, that ſo the ſame might not be imbezel'd; and thereupon cauſed an Inventory to be taken thereof: But, my Lord, we diſpoſſeſſed none: it is true, we have left a Servant or two, for whom we are, and muſt be reſponſible; whatever they would diſpoſe or had occaſion for, they had it without Contradiction. We offered him, that if he had any Friend of his own that would undertake them to be forth-coming, in caſe he were convict, we would leave them in poſſeſſion of them; we have made no Seizure, what we have done, is according to Cuſtom; if we have not done that which your Lordſhips approve of, we beg your pardon.

Ld Hyde. We are to look to that which is according to Law; the Goods of a Man that is accuſed of

Felo-

Felony (he is but only ſo yet) he forfeits none of his Goods, till convict, more than that he is to live upon them during his Tryal; but on the other hand, where a Man is accuſed of Felony, and indicted for it, it is but Prudence, and agreeable to Law, to take care the Goods be not imbezel'd; becauſe, if a Conviction follow, they are forfeited to the King; therefore the Sheriffs have done but what they ought to do: they are not taken from you, what you have occaſion for, either for Money (or Goods to turn into Money) for your preſent Supply, till your Tryal be over, God forbid but you ſhould have it, and you ſhall have it, if you have any Friend that will undertake the Goods ſhall be forth-coming for the King, in caſe you be convicted, or for your ſelf, if acquitted, it ſhall be done. In the mean time what you have occaſion for your ſelf, Wife or Children, God forbid but you ſhould have it: and this is as much as by Juſtice you ought to claim.

Turner. I ſubmit to your Honour, and I beg of your Honour and the Bench to be of Counſel for me; for though the World looks on me as a Sollicitor, it is a miſtake, my Lord, it is not in Law, I am a Stranger to it; it has been only in Dealings for Monies, by Purchaſes and the like. But, my Lord, I am informed your Lordſhip may reſtore me theſe Goods without Security; if the Law directs Security, I am ready to give it.

† Chief Juſtice of the Common-Pleas.

† Ld Ch. J. Bridgman. For that, that you may not miſtake the Law, it is very true, the words of the Statute of Richard III. ſay, A Man's Goods ſhall not be ſeized before indicted. You muſt underſtand the Difference of the Law, that has made the Miſtake; it was then good, but not now; then a Man's Courſe was to indict them and proceſs againſt them before committed, but now it is altered; for when it remained indifferent, whether Guilty or Not Guilty, he was to be maintained out of his Goods; ſo ought you and your Family: for the Town being anſwerable for the Goods of ſuch a Felon, that they might not be amerced, in ſuch Caſes ſufficient Sureties were given: the Statute of Philip and Mary, that gives the Power of Commitment by Juſtices of Peace, and ſo now it is quite altered; and though they cannot ſeize the Goods, yet they being reſponſible for them, they ought to have good Security.

Sir Richard Ford. I do aſſure your Lordſhips, that from the very firſt Hour we put our People into the Houſe, none of his Family there then or now have been denied any thing in the Houſe: if I be not miſinformed, that very Night that he was committed, there was conveyed out of his Houſe for his Uſe and his Occaſions, ſome ſay 200 l. they that ſay leaſt, ſay 100 l. they have had a free Diſpoſal of what was in the Houſe; and then, my Lord, could we do leſs than what we have done?

Turner. I would have made a ſhort buſineſs of this, I tendred Security of 5000 l. to their own Content, they accepted of the Perſons, but one ſtanding by, ſaid, By no means; and ſo it is ſtill undone. If you pleaſe, I have Security now.

Ld Hyde. There need not much a-do for Security; if your Tryal were not to be preſently, then there were Cauſe for you to inſiſt on this; but now there is but one Night: if you want any thing for this Night, the Sheriffs here offer you what you will, to-morrow will determine the Queſtion, whether theſe Goods are yours, or no.

Turner. I will ſubmit to the Court, I will not be refractory; here is Security, if you pleaſe; if not, I am content

Ld Hyde. If you want any thing, either Money or Clothes, or any thing elſe, you may have them.

Turner. My Lord, the greateſt thing will be ſome Writings and Papers, which will concern me at my Tryal to clear me then.

Ld Hyde. Do this; nominate one Perſon, the Sheriff another to go with him, and what Writings you will have brought, they ſhall take a Note of them, and bring them to you.

Turner. I have divers Writings of Gentlemens Eſtates, Bonds and Things in my Hands, and the Papers are amongſt them; and I do beg I may, with the Keeper, go my ſelf now.

Ld Hyde. I cannot, nor the Court, give you leave; you ſtand indicted for Felony and Burglary.

Turner. Let my Sons go, my Lord.

Ld Hyde. They are indicted too, and are not bailable; if Mr. Sheriff (who is anſwerable for you) will ſend any with them, he may.

Sir Rich. Ford. I ſhall be willing to ſerve you, Gentlemen, ſo far my ſelf, if your Lordſhip will ſpare me from further Service here, to go with ſuch Perſon as he ſhall appoint.

Ld Hyde. We leave that to Mr. Sheriff's Civility, we can give no Rule for it.

Turner. I may be cut off of my Life, if I want my Papers.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Bridgman. Doth your Life depend upon this Evidence in Matter of Fact?

Turner. My Lord, I heve been ſo ſtrangely handled in this buſineſs, I know not where it depends.

Sir Rich. Ford. If he will ſay in what Trunk or Cheſt they are in, they ſhall be brought to the Court. [Thereupon Mr. Turner offered to ſend a Pillowbeer, and the Sheriff ſaid he ſhould have the Writings.]

Ld Hyde. Provide your ſelf for to-morrow, Mr. Turner, we will then go on.

Turner. I have an humble Requeſt to your Honours and honourable Bench; I would beg an Order to bring in ſome Witneſſes who are Mr. Tryon's Friends now, though mine lately; divers would come in, but ſend me word they dare not, except they are ſummoned by an Order of your Lordſhips.

Ld Ch. Juſt. We will help what the Law will do, but this cannot be done; thoſe that will come in voluntarily, may; the Law will not admit us to ſummon any Witneſſes: you ſee when any come againſt the King, we cannot put them to their Oaths, much leſs can we precept them to come.

Turner. Pray, my Lord, let ſome of the Sheriff's Officers wiſh them to come, not from the Bench.

Ld Ch. Juſt. We cannot direct any thing in't.

Turner. I deſire the Party himſelf may be here.

Ld Ch. Juſt. We cannot compel him.

Turner. Then I have no Witneſs in the World; this is a ſad thing, that the Proſecutor, being able, will not come; I hope you will adviſe him to come.

Ld Ch. Juſt. The Law is open, the ſame to every Man, you ſhall have that that is due to any Man, you cannot have more, and leſs you ſhall not have; if he be bound, we will call him.

Turner. What if he will forfeit his Recognizance?

Ld Ch. Juſt. We cannot help that, but we think you need not fear his not coming, he intends to be here.

And afterwards the Priſoners were conveyed back to the Goal.

16 January, in the Morning.

THE Court being ſet, and Proclamation made, the Jury was call'd, viz.

William Bookey,	Thomas Hickſon,
Thomas Seawell,	John Andrews,
William Allen,	John Jacob,
John Port,	David Bolger,
Francis Coles,	Henry Hague,
Robert Maſters,	Lewis Tayte.

Who ſeverally anſwered to their Names.

Clerk. Set up James Turner, John Turner, William Turner, Mary Turner and Ely Turner; [Who (with ſome Felons) were accordingly ſet to the Bar.] You, the Priſoners that were laſt called to the Bar, thoſe Men that you ſhall hear called and perſonally appear, muſt paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King and you for your ſeveral Lives and Deaths. If you, or any of you will challenge them or any of them, you muſt challenge them when they come to the Book to be ſworn, before they be ſworn.

Silence commanded twice.

Clerk. William Bookey, look upon the Priſoner: 'You ſhall well and truly try, and true Deliverance 'make between our Sovereign Lord the King and 'the Priſoners at the Bar, whom you ſhall have in 'Charge according to your Evidence. So help you 'God.'

And ſo all the reſt were ſworn, ſave only Lewis Tayte, againſt whom he excepted, there being ſome little Difference at preſent between them; but my Lord Chief Juſtices told him he need not give any reaſon for it, he was free to except any without Cauſe. Thereupon Capt. Edward Micoe was ſworn in his room. Count theſe, Cryer.

William Bookey, &c. Twelve good Men and true, ſtand together and hear your Evidence.

Clerk. Cryer, make Proclamation. O Yes! If any Man can inform my Lords the King's Juſtices, the King's Serjeant, or the King's Attorney, before this Inqueſt be taken between our Sovereign Lord the King and the Priſoners at the Bar, let them come forth, and they ſhall be heard; for now the Priſoners ſtand at the Bar upon their Deliverance: and all others bound by Recognizance to give Evidence againſt any the Priſoners at the Bar, come forth and give Evidence, or elſe you will forfeit your Recognizances.

Clerk. Cryer, call Francis Tryon, William Hill, Fred. Ixam, John Garret, Jacob Watcher, Eliz. Fry, Ann Ball, John Guerney, Francis Millington, John Alſop, Peter Culley, Ralph Tasker, William Daws, John Rouſe, Richard Roberts, Nath. Clarke, Robert Cole, Edward Cole. They all came into the Court.

Clerk. James Turner, hold up thy Hand: And ſo the reſt.

[Here the Indictment was read again.] Upon this Indictment they have been arraigned, and thereunto have ſeverally pleaded Not Guilty, and for their Tryals have put themſelves upon God and the Country, which Country you are. Your Charge is to enquire whether the ſaid James, John and William Turner, or any of them, be Guilty of this Felony and Burglary in Manner and Form as they ſtand indicted, or Not Guilty: And whether the ſaid Mary and Ely Turner, are guilty of the Felony, as Acceſſaries to the ſaid John. If you find them Guilty, you ſhall enquire what Goods and Chattels, Lands and Tenements, they or any of them had at the Time of the committing this Felony or Burglary, or at any time ſince: If you find them Not Guilty, you ſhall enquire if they fled for it; if you find that they did fly for it, you ſhall enquire, &c. as if you had found them guilty. If you find them not guilty, and that they did not fly for it, ſay ſo and no more, and hear your Evidence.

But if you acquit James, John and William Turner of the Felony and Burglary, then you ſhall not enquire after Mary and Ely as Acceſſaries.

Sir Thomas Aleyn ſworn. The Evidence that you ſhall give, &c.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Pray, Sir Thomas Aleyn, tell your knowledge to the Jury.

Sir T. A. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; upon Friday-Morning laſt was ſevennight, I heard of this Robbery at Guild-Hall, and the Perſon robbed being my Acquaintance, I went to viſit him in the Afternoon; and coming there, not thinking but the Buſineſs had been already examined, ſeveral Perſons with Mr. Francis Tryon put me upon the Buſineſs to examine it. I went and examined the two Servants, the Man and the Maid: upon their Examination I found they had ſupped abroad at a Dancing-School, and had been at Cards, and came home afterwards; but before they came home, they heard that an antient Gentleman, one Mr. Tryon, was robbed, and then they haſtned home. I examined them further, whether they uſed to go abroad after their Maſter was in Bed? The Man confeſſed he had been abroad twenty or thirty times at Col. Turner's Houſe at Supper, about a Year ſince. The Maid denied they had been there at all: but it is true the Man's ſaying he ſupped there (though it was falſe) was the firſt Occaſion of Suſpicion of Col. Turner. When I had examined theſe two, I went to the Examination of Turner, Where he was all that Day, where at Night? he told me, At ſeveral Places and Taverns, and in Bed at Nine of the clock, and was called out of his Bed: but having my ſelf ſome Suſpicion of him, I wiſhed him to withdraw. I told Mr. Tryon, that I believed if he was not the Thief, he knew where the things were. The old Gentleman ſaid, He could not miſtruſt him, he had put a great Confidence in him: But I deſired him to give me leave to charge him with it; and thereupon I called him in, but he denied it; but not as a Perſon of his Spirit, which gave me ſome Cauſe of further Suſpicion. I deſired to ſearch his Houſe; nay, told him I would whether he would or no. He deſired to go home; I told him, if he would go with them (ſome Perſons there) he ſhould: but you ſhall not ſpeak with your Sons or Daughters, or Servants, they ſhall be examined by me. They ſearched his Houſe, the Marſhal and Conſtable, they ſaid they could find nothing. The old Gentleman was very unwilling to charge him with Felony; ſome Friends there were as well ſatisfied as I was, that he was guilty of it; and they brought me a Paper that he would charge him: and thereupon I wiſhed him to read that Paper, told him I could do no leſs than ſend him to Newgate. Says he, you will not undo a Family, will you? Will you not take Bail? No, I cannot. What Proof have you material againſt me? I will give you as good Bail as any Man; give me leave to ſpeak with Mr. Tryon. I did give him leave: He had no ſooner ſpoke with him, but Mr. Tryon would not charge him, he promiſing to endeavour deavour to find the Thief. I took Mr. Turner on one ſide, and told him, I did as verily believe if he was not the Thief, he could find him out, as I believed I ſhould go home to my Wife and Children; and I ſaid, That if an Angel from Heaven ſhould come and tell me otherwiſe, I could hardly believe it. This paſſed on this Night: I could not ſleep all the Night, ſtill it was in my Thoughts that this Man was the Man that had done the Robbery. Next Morning, after Nine, there came a Gentleman to me, a Perſon of Quality, a Merchant; if your Lordſhip deſires, I ſhall name him.

Ld Chief Juſtice. Pray name him.

Sir T. A. It was Alderman Love, my Lord: He told me that he thought I was a Friend to Juſtice: If I would go preſently into the Minories my ſelf, I might diſcover the Perſon that robbed Mr. Tryon; if I ſtaid, or ſent others, the Birds would be flown: Mr. Turner has this Morning removed ſeveral hundred Pounds. I went preſently with a Footboy. When I came to Biſhopſgate, meeting with Major Tasker, knowing not whether I went without the Liberties, ſaid I to him, Are you in haſte? Pray go along with me: And he went with me.

This Gentleman, Alderman Love, told me I ſhould meet with a Maid-Servant of his that knew me, though I knew not her: She will meet you at ſuch a Corner, and go with you. When I came without Aldgate, I met with two Maids that were the Perſons to ſhew me the Place: The Maid told me theſe were the Maids. I bid them come behind me. At the further End of all the Minories I went into a Shop, and found Colonel Turner with his Hands in a Cheſt: I charged him to take nothing out, and not to ſtir himſelf. There was two Wallets, one of 100 l. and the other 200 l. I took the Keys from him, laid them upon the Compter: I went with him into the next Room, which was the Kitchin; and in another Cheſt was two Wallets more: and now the Gentleman was ſpeechleſs. I told him it was juſt as I told him the laſt Night, that your Roguery would come out: What (ſaid I) is become of the reſt of the Money? Says he, Your haſte will ſpoil all. I called in the Maid, to examine her: But ſhe was fearful, and ſo trembled there was no examining her before Colonel Turner. But in concluſion, ſaid I, Colonel Turner, if you will tell me whether this be Mr. Tryon's Money, I will do you all the Favour I can. Says he, I cannot ſay it is his Money. I called for a Conſtable, and made a Mittimus to ſend him to Newgate, thinking he would diſcover the Truth. Said I, Will you give me your Examination? He did: It is in Court. I asked him whence this Money came? He told me it was removed by himſelf, his Wife, and Children this Morning.

Turner. My Son and I, I told you.

Sir T. A. I asked him where he had received it? He told me at a Goldſmith's, fourteen Days ſince: He did not remember his Name. I asked why he ſhould remove his own Money? His Anſwer was, He did remove it for two or three Days, till this Foolery was over.

When I ſaw I could get nothing further from him, I diſcourſed with him touching the Remainder of the Money and the Jewels. Says he, Sir Thomas, do not trouble your ſelf, you will loſe the Jewels and the reſt of the Money by this Courſe; and, ſays he, I am now in purſuit of them: If you will give me leave to go to the old Gentleman, I know all will be well. I was not content to let him go: But preſently we called a Hackney-Coach, and my ſelf, and him, and Major Tasker went, and carried that Money to Mr. Tryon. When we came there, I told Mr. Tryon I thought we had brought 500 l. of his Money; and I did not doubt but I had brought a Perſon that could tell of the reſt of his Money and Jewels. Colonel Turner deſired to ſpeak with Mr. Tryon himſelf in private. I gave him leave. He calls me a little after: Sir, ſays he, Mr. Tryon and I am agreed; I muſt have this Money delivered to me again: I have aſſured him he ſhall have all his Money and Jewels again by Three of the clock this Afternoon. I told him I could not agree that he ſhould have the Money back again, preſs'd him that he would ſtay there, and ſend for the reſt of the Money and Jewels. But he would (if I did not) truſt him: Mr. Tryon would have the reſt of his Money and all his Jewels again.

Turner. I ſaid, I would endeavour it.

Sir T. A. If he had ſaid he would have endeavoured it, I would not have parted with him; but he ſaid he ſhould have the Money and Jewels, &c. I told him I would meet him at that Time at Mr. Tryon's. Then I took Mr. Tryon, and ſaid, Whatever Promiſe you have made in private, you muſt excuſe my aſſenting to any thing againſt the Law: But do not tell him of it, leſt you loſe the Jewels: I muſt commit him to Newgate, and I muſt bind you to proſecute him. He deſired me I would not come ſo ſoon as Three, not till Four or Five of the clock, and all would be brought thither. I ſtaid till about Four. In the interim I heard ſome Particulars, what theſe Maids would teſtify; which Teſtimony had I received before I had parted with him, I would not have parted with him for any Conſideration. But when I came thither in the Afternoon, I heard Colonel Turner was arreſted, and was then at the Hoop-Tavern with the Officers. I ſent immediately the Marſhal and his Men to bring him to me. The Officers and he came; and then Colonel Turner told me, I had brought all theſe Things, but the Officers prevented me; I was a very unfortunate Man: Give me but leave till tomorrow Morning at Nine of the clock, and you ſhall have all. Said I, I have now heard more; and you muſt produce the Money and Jewels, if you expect any Favour from me, or I know what to do. He preſſed very hard an Hour, or almoſt two, that he might be truſted to go for them; if he did not go, Mr. Tryon would loſe the reſt of his Money and Jewels. I told him I had rather they ſhould be all loſt, than I ſhould forfeit my Diſcretion and Reputation. And thus he kept us till Seven or Eight at night. At laſt he would have gone with one Perſon. I told him no: If there were enough to ſecure you, I might give leave. Saith he, the Party will not ſee more than one; for his Life would be in danger. Whither would you go? I would go, ſaith he, (to my beſt Remembrance) to Tower-Hill or White-Chappel. I ſhould have met him at Five of the clock; and now I muſt meet him about Nine. I will call in the Officers: They will tell you, your being upon a Judgment, they will not part with you without the Liberties: Nor will I give leave, becauſe the Sheriffs will blame me. The Officers ſaid they could not go without the Liberties, for it would be an Eſcape in Law. Pray give me leave to go near thoſe Places, and I will ſend. Nay, then you may as well ſend from hence. He begged leave to go to the Hoop-Tavern, and ſend for his Wife; which I did grant. And there he did ſend for his Wife. They brought me word he had ſent his Wife for the Jewels and the reſt of the Monies. He ſent to me not to think the Time too long, for he had had notice his Wife was coming. I directed the Marſhal, when his Wife came, he would ſecure her. About Eleven of the clock they brought his Wife; who told me ſhe had delivered the Jewels: They thought they were in two Bags. Then he came to me, and deſired to ſpeak with Mr. Tryon in private, and told me Mr. Tryon's Soul was pawned to him, and his to the Thief, that no Diſcovery ſhould be made. But when I examined his Wife what Money went from her Houſe that Morning, ſhe ſaid ſhe knew of none. Where had you the Jewels? She knew of none: But ſhe had a Couple of Bags that ſhe was ſent for: Near White-Chappel or the Tower a Perſon ſhould meet her, and ask what ſhe did there, and ſhe ſhould ſay ſhe walked up and down for ſomething that ſhould be given her by a Perſon; which, if he did, ſhe was to bring it to him that ſent her. He did deliver the two Bags, which ſhe delivered to her Husband; but what was in them, ſhe knew not. There was Sir Thomas Chamberlane, Mr. Millington, my ſelf, and Colonel Turner, with Mr. Tryon. The two Bags was laid upon a Dreſſer. He told us they were now come; and having performed his part, he hoped Mr. Tryon would perform his. Have you performed your part? Have you brought the Jewels and the Remainder of the Money? He told us the Money was not brought: For the 600 l. I ſhall give Mr. Tryon my Bond, to pay him at ſix Months. We preſs'd to ſee the Jewels: We run them all over. But I ſhould have told you one Thing: She brought a Cat's-Head-Eye-Ring upon her Finger. This the Gentleman was like to forget: He delivered it to me, to deliver that with the reſt. When we had told out the Jewels, we croſſed them out upon the printed Paper as they were called. She ſaid all that was in the Paper, except one Carcanet of Diamonds and Jewels, valued at 200 l. that is fallen behind the Cheſt, or aſide. You have 2000 Pounds worth of Jewels over what is in the Paper; but that Carcanet ſhall be forth coming. He now preſſed that no Proſecution might be, for two Souls were pawned, (as I ſaid before) and deſired an End of the Buſineſs. I told him further, and preſſed him: Said I, I have ſtaid a great while, and would ſtay longer, if he might have the 600 l. and the Carcanet. But when I ſaw there was nothing more to be got from him, now (ſaid I) what would you have this poor Gentleman to do for you? What he hath promiſed you, I know not; he is a Stranger to the Law: If there had been but you two had it, and it had not been publiſhed to the World, and the Neighbours publick Examination taken, ſomewhat might have been between your ſelves. But would you have this Gentleman bring himſelf into danger? He will loſe all his Goods again; for he will be indicted himſelf. What will he be the better for Diſcovery, when he muſt loſe his Jewels and Money, and be liable to a Proſecution, as you will be, were he ſo ignorant? Do you think that I underſtand the Law no better, being a Juſtice of Peace, to bring my ſelf into danger? All the Kindneſs I can do for you, is, (to be ſhort) I muſt ſend you and your Wife to Newgate.

How ſay you, Maſter Alderman? Then I had better to have kept the Jewels. Thoſe were his Words; to the beſt of my Remembrance he ſaid ſo.

My Lord, I asked him ſeveral Queſtions: Why he ſhould give a Bond for ſix hundred Pounds, if he was not concerned in this Buſineſs? But he knew not what to anſwer. Saith he, Will you not take Bail? Said I, I can take no Bail: I muſt ſend you to the common Goal, and then I am diſcharged. Pray ſend me to the Compter. No, I cannot. Do you think I would make an Eſcape? I cannot tell; but I would not bring my ſelf into danger. He prayed me I would give him leave to go home. I muſt make my Warrant: If the Marſhal and Conſtable will do any thing, I ſhall not direct them.

He deſired his Wife might go and fetch ſome Linen.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Bridgman. What Day were the Jewels delivered?

Sir T. A. Saturday.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Bridgman. Thurſday was the Robbery, Friday he was examined, Saturday the Money was removed, and that Night the Jewels were brought, and he committed.

Sir T. A. If I have ſaid any thing that he is not ſatisfied wherein I have not true ſpoken, let him ask me; I ſhall not do him the leaſt Wrong.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Do ſo, Mr. Turner.

Turner. Do your Honours underſtand of Sir Thomas the Time the Robbery was committed? I ſhall ask him ſome Queſtions.

Sir T. A. I have only one Word more to ſay to you: That before he went to the Hoop-Tavern, nay, ſaid I, Colonel Turner, be ingenuous whether this was not Mr. Tryon's Money that he removed? And he confeſſed it was.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. That Money was removed from his own Houſe.

Sir T. A. Yes; but his Wife, Children, and Maid denied it.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Mr. Turner, will you ask him any Queſtions? What are they?

Turner. I would ask all this back again: You are upon your Oath, Mr. Alderman.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. You need not tell him that he is ſworn; the Court and Jury underſtand it ſo.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Bridgman. Go on, Mr. Turner; ask your Queſtions.

Turner. My Lord, I demand of Sir Thomas Aleyn whether I did not tell him at the firſt there was a wicked young Man had belyed my Houſe and Family, ſaying that he ſupped there that Night, when he had not ſupped at my Houſe theſe twelve Months.

Sir T. A. I think I have done him that Right already. He deſired me to examine that young Man, who ſaid he ſupped at Colonel Turner's; but I found he had not been, nor was not there.

Turner. Upon Friday Night, when the Alderman preſſed me concerning the Thing, I told him I had ſome Suſpicion of ſome Perſons, who formerly ſhould have robbed Mr. Tryon a Year ago, and I employed Moſely the Conſtable and Mr. Tryon's Man to go to Ratcliff, and I went another Way. Pray ask Sir Thomas whether I did not promiſe him to do all I could.

Sir T. A. I preſſed him hard; he ſaid he would endeavour it.

Turner. Whether did not I tell him that that Money was carried there on purpoſe to gain the other Fellows that had the Jewels? Said I, If this Money be taken away, he that hath the Jewels will not bring them, and the Remainder of the Money; but that this Money muſt bring him to it, that they might ſhare it.

Sir T. A. There was not one Word of this: His Examination was contrary. He told me 400 l. was received of a Goldſmith, he knew not his Name, and 200 l. was in his own Houſe; and that he removed it for two or three Days, till this Foolery was over. He ſaid it was his own Money.

ney. I ſaid, an honeſt Man need not thus remove his own Money.

One thing I have omitted: When I was examining of him in the Minories, word was brought me his Son was fled away at the Back-door. I bid them run after him, but they ſaid they ſaw him leap over a great Ditch; he was not heard of till yeſterday, tho I ſent out my Warrants for him.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Yourſelf (as Sir Thomas Aleyn ſwears) ſaid you knew not of whom you had part of the Money, but the other was your own, and yet afterwards that the Money was Tryon's; why did you ſay ſo?

Turner. I will tell you the reaſon; I would not have my buſineſs ſpoiled, and did feign thoſe Anſwers. My Lord, I do demand of him whether Mr. Tryon and I had not made a bargain in the Morning, whether or no if he might have his Goods the Perſon ſhould be free, and that he had agreed no Blood ſhould be ſpilt; that he had rather loſe all his Money and Jewels, than to forfeit ſuch an Aſſeveration which the Thief had bound me that I ſhould ſwear to him, That by the Blood of Jeſus Chriſt that was ſhed for him and all Sinners, his Life ſhould be free.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. You are beſide the buſineſs.

Turner. My Lord, I ask Alderman Aleyn whether I did not tell him this?

Sir T. A. I told your Lordſhips two Souls were pawned, as he ſaid before.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Do not ſpend your time thus; the Queſtion's ſhort, whether you are guilty of robbing, or breaking the Houſe of Mr. Tryon, or no?

Turner. I am as free as any Man here.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. They will not believe your own words.

Sir T. A. I think I have done him no wrong by this Evidence.

Turner. I hope, my Lord, I ſhall have the benefit to call him again for a Witneſs for me.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. You may ask him now.

Turner. No, when I come to my Defence.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Yes, yes.

Turner. Oh your Honours moſt humble Servant, I am very ſorry I have put him to this trouble.

Mr. Tryon, his Servant, and Mr. Garnet ſworn.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Mr. Tryon, pray (as you are able) give an account of this Buſineſs.

Tryon. My Lord, about Eleven of the clock, or ſomething paſt, upon Thurſday Night laſt was a Seven-night, two Men came into my Chamber when I was faſt aſleep, one on the one ſide, and another on the other ſide of the Bed; one had a Lanthorn that opened on one ſide, and waked me: when I ſaw him, I was much aſtoniſhed (as I might well) knew them not, ſaid, My Maſters, who are you? I was newly out of my Sleep; being an antient Man, I apprehended another Man for the Party I ſpoke to, but was not the Man, and named him by his Name, What do you do here at this time of night? What is your buſineſs? Said nothing to me: one took both my Hands, the other with a little Cord bound me very hard, inſomuch here yet is the dents of it; and bound my Feet, gagg'd me, and uſed me barbarouſly, moſt inhumanly: I muſt ſuffer it, becauſe I could not tell how to avoid it. When they had done, they told me this withal, You ſhall not loſe a Hair of your Head. I knew not their Intentions, I fear'd what it was, for when they had done this, they left me; I had no body could come to me in my Houſe, my Servants I knew not upon what grounds they were forth at Supper when I a-bed, which was of ill conſequence. After I had been an hour in this manner, I rolled myſelf out of my Bed, and fell down; and, ſaving your Lordſhips Preſence, a Chamber-pot fell, broke, and I fell upon it, and very much hurt myſelf upon the pieces of the Pot: and ſo with much ado, it pleaſed God, I know not how myſelf, I got to the Chamber-Window which lay to the Street; I called out, Murder! and Thieves! My Neighbours ſaid, I call'd with ſo ſtrong a Voice, they wondred to hear me. Quickly after, many of my Neighbours came in, and one Mr. Peter Vanden-Anchor a Dutchman, that ſelleth Rheniſh Wine, he came in and unbound me; and ſo after I was unbound, I went down to the Ware-houſe as I was, without Clothes about me, only my Waiſtcoat and Shirt, and ſaw that they had been there. I conſidered thoſe that had done the thing, were very privy to my Houſe; they knew where to fetch the Key of my Caſh, in a Drawing-Box, taking the Mony there, which was about One Thouſand and odd Pounds: ſome Plate there was they did not meddle with it.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. How came they by the Jewels?

Tryon. I forgot ſomething concerning ſome Jewels, theſe Jewels were in a Drawer under my Table in the Compting-houſe, he was privy to that, becauſe he did frequent my Houſe very long, and was very familiar.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Who was privy to all this?

Tryon. James Turner.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Mr. Turner, would you ask Mr. Tryon any Queſtions?

Turner. By and by, when I come upon my Proof.

William Hill, Mr. Tryon's Man, ſworn.

All that I can ſay, is this: When I went out, I locked the Door double, and thoſe things were there then.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. About what time?

Hill. Seven or Eight of the clock.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Was he a-bed then?

Hill. Yes, my Lord. When I came home again, I found all theſe things gone: going down into the Compting-houſe, we found ſome Jewels gone, and ſome left, and thoſe were inconſiderable to thoſe that were gone; the beſt were cull'd and gone. On Saturday Col. Turner was arreſted with two Serjeants, and ſent the Boy at the Hoop-Tavern for me: I took two Friends with me, Mr. Gurney and Mr. Pilkington; he pray'd me to ſpeak to my Maſter that he would give Bond for him, that the Serjeants might diſcharge him, and he haſte about his buſineſs, or elſe it would be ſpoiled. Proceeding into ſome Diſcourſe, I was ſaying to him, it was a great Providence that I and the Maid was not then at home, for if we had, we ſhould have been killed. He anſwered, Saith he, No; they would only have bound you and the Maid. I asked him, how it was poſſible to get in? He anſwered, One went through the Entry in the day-time, and there lay till night, went up ſtairs, found a Candle, lit it, went up to his Chamber, took the Key, and went down and let in others.

Turner. This Story I was informed I told him.

Hill. I asked him how he came to know it? He ſaid he examined them.

Ld Bridgman. Did he never tamper with you about making Mr. Tryon's Will?

Hill.

Hill. Yes, my Lord; he came to me about a Year ago, I went with him to the Cock behind the Exchange, it was in a morning, he took me privately aſide, told me the old Gentleman your Maſter is very ſickly, cannot live long, had a good Eſtate, or to that purpoſe, and it was pity he would never make a Will, and ſuch an Eſtate ſhould go to the building of Paul's. Saith he, I have preſs'd him ſeveral times touching making his Will; he ſaid he had done it, when we both knew he had not, and I believe he will not make one. He told of one that could counterfeit a Hand.

Ld Bridgman. Was it not Grainger?

Hill. Yes, my Lord; that that Man could counterfeit a Will, and I and Mr. Garret, and another Good-fellow ſhould be the three Executors, and a third Perſon Overſeer, and that would pleaſe the Old-man. I anſwered, I would not have to do in ſuch an unjuſt thing for all the world.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Did you go to Turner's to Supper that night this Robbery was committed?

Hill. No, my Lord, to Mr. Starkey's in Fanchurch-ſtreet; the Maid went along with me.

Ld Bridgman. One Queſtion more: You ſaid you came in and found the Doors open, did you come in before the Neighbours?

Hill. No, my Lord, I had not known of it but that one Gentleman at Supper went home with a Gentlewoman in Leadenhall-ſtreet, and hearing there was ſuch a Robbery in Lime-ſtreet, I run with a great fright, came in and found the Doors open, and found the Neighbours within.

Turner. The thing underſtood touching the Will, hath another face: his Uncle was an Acquaintance of Mr. Grainger, his Uncle that bound him Apprentice, that lived in Cripplegate, now in Cornhill. This Grainger had counterfeited a Will touching my Lord Gerrard, and ſomebody elſe about an Eſtate. Said I to this young Man, You have an Uncle acquainted with a notable Fellow, one Grainger, and your Maſter making no Will (ſpeaking merrily) this Fellow is able to make it for him. Ask him if I did not tell him his Uncle was acquainted with ſuch a Perſon.

Hill. You told me ſo indeed.

Ld Bridgman. Hill, by the Oath you have taken, did he not perſuade you to endeavour that you and he and Grainger ſhould counterfeit a Will?

Hill. He did, my Lord: he told me, That I, Mr. Garret, and another Good-fellow, ſhould be the three Executors, and another Perſon Overſeer, and that this Grainger could do it undiſcernibly. I anſwered him, I would not meddle with it for all the world.

Turner. Go, go, go, this is Malice; for it was mere jeſting with him.

Elizabeth Fry ſworn.

Mrs. Turner came to my Houſe on Saturday morning laſt, at Six a-clock in the morning: ſhe knocked me out of my Bed. I asked, who was there? She ſaid, A Friend. Who are you, ſaid I? Come and ſee, ſays ſhe. I ſaid, Who, Mrs. Turner? She ſaid, Yes. I went and dreſſed me, and let her in. She ſaid, There was a Friend of hers, a Merchant newly broke, he had a Wife, and ſeven or eight Children; they deſired to ſecure the Money till they had taken their Oaths the Money was not in their Houſe. She ſaid, Her Husband and her Son Ely was coming with it. I went and lighted a Candle, there was ſhe and her Son Ely with the Money. She asked me, if I had a ſpare Cheſt? I ſaid, Yes, there was one within. She went in, opened the Cheſt, and ſhe put in the Wallets of Money, I know not how much, my Lord. I asked her if there was any more to come? She ſaid, Yes, her Husband was coming with more. She went to the door and let it in, but I know not who brought that.

Ld Bridgman. Did not Mr. Turner come in?

Fry. Yes, my Lord, he opened the Bags, and asked his Wife touching the Seals. She ſaid, the Gentlewoman that owned the Money had deſired me to pull them off. They offered me twenty Shillings for my Kindneſs in it, told me they had power to give it from the Gentlewoman; deſired me if my Siſter or any ſhould ask about it, bid me conceal it, becauſe the Diſcovery would ruin the poor Gentlewoman and her Children, but rather to ſay that they deſired me to let ſome Linen lie there.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Were the Bags ſealed?

Fry. I ſee none ſealed.

Ld Bridgman. How many Wallets were in the Shop?

Fry. I ſaw but three, and they put one into a Cheſt in the Shop, and two in the Kitchin.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. At that time when the Money was brought, was there any diſcourſe of Eleven Hundred Pound?

Fry. To my beſt remembrance it was ſo.

Turner. Not a word of the Sum.

Fry. There was five Wallets brought into my Houſe, three in the Shop, two in the Kitchin.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Had they Bags at each end?

Fry. Yes, my Lord.

Sir T. Aleyn. You hear what the Wench ſays; ſhe ſays, there was five Wallets, three in the Shop, two in the Kitchin: I took two in the Shop, and only one in the Kitchin.

Fry. My Lord, I have two Apprentices, little Girls, when all the People were in the Shop, ſaid out aloud, That they ſaw Mrs. Turner go out of the Shop with ſomething in her Apron, covered with a red Cloth, while I was above, my Lord.

Turner. Who ſhould convey it away?

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Your Son was there.

Turner. Pray, my Lord, ask her which is Ely.

Fry. That is, (pointing to Ely.)

Turner. It was falſe, this Ely carried none, the Boy knew nothing of it; both my Sons are dear to me, and if either more than the other, it muſt be my eldeſt, and yet I muſt ſay, it was John my eldeſt Son that carried the Money, this Boy was at home: ſhe hath forſworn herſelf.

Fry. Your Wife told me, that Ely was to bring ſome.

Mr. Gurnet ſworn.

My Lord, I met with Colonel Turner on Saturday Morning after the Robbery; he told me, ſays he, I have been as good as my word, I ſent my Son to make ſome diſcovery of this Buſineſs, and I did not doubt but to clear myſelf of it, and make a diſcovery: this was on the Exchange. Says he. I have met with them. With what? With the Jewels and Money. Where are they? I have brought Five Hundred Pound; the reſt, with the Jewels, I ſhall have at Three a-clock this Afternoon: will you be there? Yes, ſaid I, who were they? They were Friends. Friends! what and uſe him ſo barbarouſly! O, ſays he, they were two Strangers, they went beyond their Commiſſion.

Major

Major Ralph Tasker ſworn.

On Saturday Morning I met Sir Thomas Aleyn; paſſing by, he called me; ſays he, there is a buſineſs in hand, pray go along with me. We went along through Aldgate, and into the Minories, and paſſing along the Minories, theſe two Maids we overtook, and asked them where the Houſe was; they ſhew'd us, we went in, Mr. Turner was there, his Hand in the Cheſt, Sir Tho. Aleyn ſtaid it: we ſeized the Money; there was two Bags of Buckram, I conceived there was Two Hundred Pound in either of them, and another in the Kitchin, Sir Tho. Aleyn deſired me to ſecure them. I ſaw a Fellow play bo-peep in a Back-Room, and preſently was a noiſe, he was fled and gone; his Son they ſaid it was. Sir Thomas Aleyn preſſed very hard to Mr. Turner, and deſired to know whoſe Money that was. Says Turner, By the Eternal God it is my own Money, with many other Proteſtations. A Conſtable was ſent for, and we carried the Money and Turner in a Hackney-Coach to Mr. Tryon, and there left the Money on a Table with Mr. Tryon: they had ſome diſcourſe; Turner came forth and ſaid, The old Gentleman and I are agreed, I will truſt the Money no longer with you, but with the old Gentleman himſelf. Said I, let me be diſcharged of it, do what you will with it.

Ld Bridgman. Did you ſee the Bags out of the Wallets?

Sir T. Aleyn. We ſaw one which was ſealed, I think, with the Biſhop of Chicheſter's Seal.

Ann Ball ſworn.

On Saturday Morning Mrs. Turner came to this Maid's Houſe, and deſired to come in; ſhe ſtept out of Bed, and asked who was there? ſhe ſaid, a Friend. She went to the door, and asked who was there? Mrs. Turner ſaid, Open the door, and you ſhall ſee. Opening of it, ſhe came in: who is it, Mrs. Turner? Yes, ſays ſhe. What would you have? I have a little Money I would leave here: This ſhe came and told me. She lighted a Candle, I ſaw Mr. Turner and his Wife come in, I heard a great noiſe and a quarter, I lay ſtill, heard not what they ſaid. When they were gone, the Maid told me what they had brought into the Houſe. Said I, I thought it had been Pewter: ſaid I, if you keep this Money, we ſhall be utterly undone, if you do not tell ſome People of it. She went to her Siſter to make her acquainted with it.

Ld Bridgman. You ſaw Mr. Turner and his Wife come in?

Ball. I did, but knew not what they did there: ſhe did go to her Siſter, and ſo it came to Sir Thomas Aleyn by accident.

Ld Bridgman. Now for the Seal, who were thoſe that ſaw the Seal?

Frederick Ixam ſworn.

My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, being at the Houſe of Mr. Tryon on Saturday in the Evening, I was deſired, with others there preſent, to ſee the Bags taken out of the ſeveral Wallets; three, I think. I ſaw them taken out, three had no Seals on, one was very much defaced, and the other had a Seal, which being queſtioned to be the Seal of the Biſhop of Chicheſter, it was compared with the Seal of a Letter which Mr. Tryon brought down, and declared to be a Letter received from the Biſhop of Chicheſter, and thoſe two Seals agreed: the Bags being here in Court, will be a further Evidence. The Letter was produced by Mr. Tryon, and owned by him to be the Biſhop of Chicheſter's, and they agreed.

Mr. Hanſon the Goldſmith ſworn.

[The Bag ſealed was ſhewn him.]

Ld Bridgman. Have you ſeen the Letter?

Hanſon. Yes.

Ld Bridgman. Doth that Seal and the Seal of the Bag agree?

Hanſon. Yes.

Ld Bridgman. Mr. Tryon, whoſe Letter was that?

Mr. Tryon. Dr. Henry King's, Biſhop of Chicheſter.

Ld Bridgman. Open the Letter, and ſee whether that be the Letter you received from the Biſhop of Chicheſter.

Tryon. Shall I read it?

Ld Bridgman. No.

Tryon. It is his Hand and Seal.

Ld Bridgman. Shew the Bag and Letter to the Foreman of the Jury: [which was done, and moſt of the Jury view'd it.]

Ld Bridgman. You obſerve this Evidence; this was one of the Bags that was taken in the Minories, that Colonel Turner was then removing: Mr. Tryon had Six Hundred Pounds of the Biſhop of Chicheſter's in Bags ſealed; it appears by the Letter to be his Seal, and theſe Gentlemen ſwear this was one of the Bags then pulled out of the Wallet, and Sir T. A. has had it in his cuſtody ſince.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. One thing more obſerve, he asked his Wife when the Money was brought into this Woman's Houſe, Have you taken off the Seals? His Wife ſaid, The Gentlewoman directed her to take them off.

Ld Bridgman. Some were taken off, but it ſeems this was left on.

[Here Turner ſpoke ſomewhat to the Jury.]

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Pray Mr. Turner diſcourſe not with the Jury, your whiſpering will do you little good: tho I think they are honeſt Men, and will not be guided by you, yet we expect the ſame Carriage from you as from other Priſoners; you ſhall have all the Juſtice that may be.

Cole the Serjeant ſworn.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Speak your Knowledge.

Cole. On Saturday in the Afternoon about Three a-clock, my Brother and I arreſted Colonel Turner in an Action of Seven Hundred Pounds.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. At whoſe Suit?

Cole. At the Suit of Thomas Lyon, who with others was Bail for him.

Turner. It was only hearing of this Foolery that cauſed it.

Cole. My Lord, we went to the Hoop-Tavern, he ſent for Mr. Tryon's Man, that he ſhould engage for this Account, that he might have his Liberty to look after Maſter Tryon's Buſineſs. Soon after came the Conſtable, and he charged us to aſſiſt him to go before Sir Thomas Aleyn. By and by I was ſaying, Colonel Turner, how could this Houſe be robb'd, and none of the Doors broke? O, ſaid he, I took a Man in the Minories, who has diſcovered it to me: he told me, that one going into the Cellar in the day-time, lay there till night, then went up ſtairs, found a Candle and lit it, went up to the old Gentleman's Chamber, took the Key from his Bed-ſide, and went down, and let all the reſt of the Thieves in. The Young-man being there, ſaid, It was well the Maid and I was not at home, we ſhould have been killed. No, ſays he, you would not have been killed, only bound.

Turner. As the Fellow told me.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Did he not ſay nothing touching Mr. Tryon's Tooth?

Cole. He ſaid, that the Fellow putting his Finger in his mouth to gagg him, the old Gentleman bit him; and he ſtruggling to get out his Finger, pull'd out his Tooth.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. You are very perfect at it, Mr. Turner, every way.

Turner. Ay, my Lord, I examined him every way.

Cole the Yeoman ſworn.

My Lord, I can ſay only what my Brother ſaid before.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Tell it.

Cole. I arreſted him, &c. [And ſo related in the ſame manner his Brother did.]

Ld Bridgman. Mr. Hill, what do you know about breaking your own Desk?

Hill. My Desk was ſafe lock'd, and the Key in my pocket; I loſt out of that Desk about forty-five Pound of my own.

Ld Bridgman. Where did it ſtand?

Hill. Upon a Table in the Ware-houſe; the Jewels were in a Drawer under the Table in the Counting-houſe.

Ld Bridgman. How did you leave Mr. Tryon's Door?

Hill. Double lock'd.

Ld Bridgman. Who had the Key?

Hill. I had.

Ld Bridgman. Was there more than one Key?

Hill. Always two.

Ld Bridgman. Who had the other?

Hill. The other Key was in my Maſter's Chamber.

Ld Bridgman. Mr. Tryon, how was your own Door open'd?

Tryon. I called ſome of my Neighbours, and Mr. Vanden-Anchor came up to me: it ſeems they had forced open the Door with a Crow of Iron.

Ld Bridgman. The Door of your Chamber, do you mean?

Tryon. No, the Street-Door.

Ld Bridgman. How was your Chamber-Door open'd?

Tryon. I never lock my Chamber-Door, but pull it to.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Mr. Hill, the Counting-houſe where the Jewels were, was that lock'd?

Hill. Yes, and the Drawer I think was lock'd; ſometimes he does, and ſometimes he does not lock it.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Was the Houſe-Doors open, or no?

Hill. Before I came, the Neighbours had broke open the Door.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Mr. Tryon, were your Counting-houſe and Till, where the Jewels lay, lock'd?

Tryon. Ever, my Lord.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. That Night?

Tryon. Yes, my Lord.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Was it opened with a Key, or broken open?

Tryon. I know not how it was opened, my Key was among a Bunch of Keys.

Peter Vanden-Anchor ſworn.

Ld Bridgman. When Mr. Tryon cry'd out, you came in, did not you?

Vanden-Anchor. Yes, my Lord.

Ld Bridgman. How did you find him?

Vanden-Anchor. I was lately come home, my Daughter heard a great Voice of Murder and Robberies: I went out, and ſome of the Neighbours were breaking open the Door, and I was the firſt that went into the Houſe; and ſo I went preſently up to Maſter Tryon's Chamber, and found him bound with this Rope; and put it into my pocket, and ſearched about the Houſe, and ſeveral Neighbours came in.

Chaplain ſworn.

I was at the door with Maſter Vanden-Anchor, we went into the Ware-houſe and Counting-houſe, and all open, Caſh was taken away without any breaking. Says Maſter Tryon, All my Money is gone, a Thouſand and odd Pounds: ſeveral Pieces of Plate were there left. We went up with Maſter Tryon, and ſent for a Chirurgeon to dreſs his Thigh: By this time his Man came in; I asked him where he had been? ſays he, I have been at Colonel Turner's at Supper. Where is the Maid? ſays he, She is fallen into a Swoon. Some Maids came home with her; I asked her where ſhe had been? ſhe ſaid, at one Chamberlin's a Goldſmith's. Said I to her, The Man ſays one thing, and you another. A little after comes in Colonel Turner, with his Lanthorn, and his Hair turned up under a Cap, and there he made a great buſtle. I went to Chamberlin's to inquire touching the Maid; he ſaid, they had been there with a Dancing-Maſter. I went to Maſter Tryon's again: we asked him, who he thought bound him? he named one Chriſtmas, but I knew him not.

Lord Mayor. Did you not find any Door, that you obſerved, to be broken?

Chaplain. No, but all open'd with Keys.

Mr. Chriſtmas ſworn.

My Lord, I know little of the buſineſs. About Two a-clock on Friday Morning there comes a Conſtable and other People, and knock'd at my Ware-houſe Doors: the Man's Servant of the Houſe roſe up, and asked them who they would ſpeak with? they ſaid, they would ſpeak with one Chriſtmas. Hearing my Name, I roſe up, I asked what was the matter? They ſaid, they muſt have me to Maſter Tryon, he was robb'd. If he was, ſaid I, it doth not concern me. They told me, I muſt go to Maſter Tryon. I ſaid, he was not a civil Man to ſend for any at this time of night out of their Beds. Then another Conſtable came, and ſaid he would break open the Doors. Said I, I am not afraid to come to you, I am not the Man you take me to be. Nothing would ſatisfy, but I muſt go; I told them I would: and then they took me into their charge, and carried me to the Exchange.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Who beſides the Conſtable?

Chriſtmas. Two Young-men that I know, one Bagnall's Man, and Browning's Man: they told the Conſtable, I was a Man of Repute, and an honeſt Man, and my Word would be taken at the Exchange for many hundred Pounds. After that, they intended to carry me to Maſter Tryon; and the Conſtable ſtable of Broadſtreet carry'd me to the Counter: There I was till Ten a-clock, and then the Conſtable and Turner came to me. Turner asked me, what Juſtice I would go before: I told him, it was indifferent to me; Sir John Frederick, or the next, Sir Richard Brown, or before Sir Thomas Aleyn, Sir John Robinſon, all one to me whom I go before; but I think it moſt convenient to go before Sir Thomas Adams, becauſe he lives in the ſame Pariſh with Mr. Tryon. We went there, and no Man charging me, Sir Thomas diſcharged me, but deſired me I would go over to Mr. Tryon.

Ld Bridgman. I obſerve this Gentleman was of a pretty Bulk, ſomewhat corpulent, and ſo is Mr. Turner.

Turner. My Lord, I humbly beg I may have a Stool to ſit down, I am troubled with the Gout.

Ld Bridgman. You may have one.

Mr. Millington ſworn.

My Lord, I came to Mr. Tryon's on Saturday in the Afternoon, about the Evening; and being ſent for to come with Mr. Turner, he told me of the Arreſt that was made upon him, and ſaid, that he ſhould not comply with his words, in bringing the Jewels and Remainder of the Money. He deſired me I would go and intercede, that he might have his liberty to go about the Jewels: but I did not think it convenient to make myſelf concerned in it. He alledged, that if he did it not preſently, the Thief would be gone. It was hinted, that they that were with him, might go along with him, the Marſhal and Serjeants: He ſaid, if ſo many came, they would fright him away; for he ſaid, he was walking about Tower-Hill or White Chappel. But it was deny'd, and could not be granted that they ſhould go, it being out of their Liberties. He deſired to go near thoſe places, keeping within the Liberties, and to ſend for them. Sir Thomas Aleyn told him, he might as well ſend for them thither. He deſired to go to the Hoop-Tavern, and then ſome went with him to his Houſe: his Wife was private with him behind a Partition; then he came out, and ſpoke publickly to his Wife, ſays he, There is a Man will be walking all alone, either at White-Chappel, or on Tower-Hill, do you go there; if he ſees you, he will ask you whether you want any thing, and will deliver you what I told you. We went to the Hoop-Tavern again, and about two hours after, the Jewels were brought by his Wife. That being done, we went to Mr. Tryon's, Mr. Turner carried the Jewels; being at Mr. Tryon's, the Jewels were there opened: we found by peruſal, that there was only a Carcanet Jewel wanting, of the Value of about Two Hundred Pounds; and Mrs. Turner ſaid, the Man told her, that that Carcanet was fallen behind a Cheſt, but did not doubt to procure it to-morrow. Afterwards Sir Thomas Aleyn told him, now he could do no leſs than commit him to Newgate. Mr. Turner told him, then he had better have kept the Jewels. The Remainder of the Money being asked for, he ſaid he would be bound for it.

Mr. Mannock ſworn.

Ld Bridgman. What Diſcourſe paſſed between you and Mr. Turner at Newgate?

Mannock. My Lord, he told me Mr. Tryon was to give him 500 l. to get the Jewels and Money, and that he had got him 500 l. and moſt of the Jewels; and that if Sir Thomas Aleyn had not ſecured him, he did believe that he ſhould have had them all: but Newgate was not a place to find them out.

Ld Bridgman. Did he tell you of bringing any Money from his own Houſe? that the 500 l. he delivered Mr. Tryon, was procured from his own Houſe?

Mannock. He did tell me ſo, my Lord.

Turner. My Lord, I own it, I ſhall unfold the Riddle by and by.

Sir Thomas Chamberlain ſworn.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. What know you, Sir Thomas, of this buſineſs? Pray let the Jury hear you.

Sir Thomas Chamberlain. My Lord, on Friday Morning I was at the Eaſt-India Houſe, keeping Court there for that Company: afterwards I went to the Exchange, and being tired, I called in at the Coffee-houſe, and there heard that Mr. Tryon was robb'd. I went directly home, and dined: About Three a-clock I went to Mr. Tryon's Houſe, an old Friend of mine, my Father's Servant heretofore, I went to viſit him, and found a great many People about him; Sir Thomas Aleyn, Lady Garret, and the Counteſs of Carliſle was there. I told him, Mr. Tryon, I underſtand you have been robb'd. Yes, ſays he, I have a great loſs. I found him very ſtaggering what he ſhould do. I ſaid, you muſt now do like a Man, or you will loſe all: ſaid I to Sir Thomas Aleyn, If you do not help the poor Man, being antient, he will quite loſe all. With that I went up above in the Houſe, Sir Thomas Aleyn was pleaſed to call me along with him, I was by at all the Examinations; I did miſtruſt, and told Mr. Tryon in French, that no doubt but that Gentleman was in the Robbery: the reaſon was, that he being a frequent Man in the Houſe, knew every thing; he was there continually, coming for Jewels and things, and no Man could do it but himſelf; that was my Judgment. I told Sir Thomas Aleyn, aſſuredly he had a hand in it. My Lord, the while we were examining the Servants, word was brought in, that he was harkning at the Door, and in the Yards, which made me more and more miſtruſt him. We heard that the Maid had been gadding abroad ſeveral times; I deſired Sir Thomas Aleyn to examine the Maid how often ſhe had ſupp'd at Turner's, ſhe denied any time. The Young-man was examined, who ſaid, they had been thirty or forty times feaſted at Colonel Turner's. My Lord, Sir Tho. Aleyn has given you a juſt Account, but he omitted one thing: he had a Note ſent him, which he had in his pocket, touching Mr. Turner's going about Removal of the Money into the Minories; and before Turner came in, he examined Miſtreſs Turner upon that Note: ſays he, you were there too, and carried the Money. Says ſhe, She is a Lyar and a Whore for ſaying ſo. Col. Turner came in and ſaid, Why do you torment and vex my Wife? and falling a curſing, and ſwearing, and banning, ſaid ſhe was with child, you will make her miſcarry, let her alone. Sir Tho. Aleyn examined him where he had been that day, and that night; he told him of many Taverns, and going to ſee his Horſe, and I know not what, but we found him faultering. When the Jewels were brought, there being two Notes, Sir Thomas Aleyn had one, and I another. The old Gentleman was ſo joyful to ſee them again, that lying by him, and handling them, he pull'd two or three down with his ſleeve. Says Mr. Turner, Come, I know what belongs to them better than any of you, and read them over, and I will ſhew them you. There wanting one Jewel, says he, That Rogue that has the other Money, hath this Jewel, but I do not doubt but I shall find that out too. We put them all together, and Sir Thomas Aleyn sealed them with his Seal. For the Bags of Money, I saw them taken out, and one being sealed with a small Seal, I put on both my Spectacles, I found a Lion Rampant at top in one of the Quarters; said I, This is a Seal of some great Person: And then a Letter was brought down, and being compared, I was satisfied in my Conscience they were alike. Sir Thomas Aleyn told him he must make a Mittimus for him and his Wife: said she, Do you send me of your Errands? you shall send somebody else another time; I thought it would come to this. After much ranting and swearing (I thought the Devil would have fetch'd him out of the Room) he said, that he had better have kept the Jewels, than to bring them forth, and to suffer for it himself, for he had pawned his Soul, and would not reveal it; and said, that Mr. Tryon had likewise engaged the like to him. For the Six Hundred Pound, he offered his Bond.

Lord Mayor. Pray repeat one part of your Evidence again; that was, that somebody came to Mr. Tryon's House, from the House in the Minories, charging Mrs. Turner to have been at that House.

Sir T. Chamberlain. I said, that before Turner came in with the Jewels, Sir Thomas Aleyn had received a little Note, wherein was affirmed, that Turner and his Wife had been there; with which she was acquainted, and swore and took on, she was a Whore, for she was not there.

Sir T. Aleyn. When I examined Mrs. Turner, she would own nothing. Why, said I, will you deny this which is so apparent? That you were there (the Maid told you so now) you deny'd it when I charged you with it.

Mrs. Turner. I did not, it's false; what did——

Turner. Prithee be patient, dear Mal, come sit thee down.

Sir T. Aleyn. I asked Mrs. Turner whether she knew of any Money carried to the Minories that day; she said, she knew of no Money at all, and said she was a Whore that said it.

Mrs. Turner. They put it to me, that I knew who brought the Money to my House, and that a Woman acquainted them so; I said she was a lying Whore that said so.

Ld Ch. Just. Bridgman. Mr. Hill, what time of night did you go out that night?

Hill. It was Seven or Eight a-clock.

Ld Ch. Just. Bridgman. Was the Door lock'd?

Hill. Yes.

Ld Ch. Just. Bridgman. Did you carry the Key with you?

Hill. Yes.

Ld Ch. Just. Bridgman. Was there any more Keys?

Hill. There was another above in the Chamber by my Master's Bed.

Ld Ch. Just. Bridgman. Did you find that other Key when you came back?

Hill. Yes.

Ld Ch. Just. Bridgman. In the same place?

Hill. I know not that.

Ld Ch. Just. Bridgman. Mr. Hill, you have been acquainted with some Transactions between Mr. Tryon and Turner; was he not employ'd about a Mortgage?

Hill. Two or three.

Ld Ch. Just. Bridgman. Was not the Names of some Persons given to you to that purpose?

Hill. We have two or three Mortgages my Master lent him so much Money upon: We heard of one Man, but whether he gave order to Mr. Turner to take so much Money upon the Land, we know not.

Ld Ch. Just. Bridgman. Mr. Tryon, have you inquired after the Persons?

Tryon. No, my Lord; I did believe all was true.

Garret. I have inquired after Sir Theophilus Gilpin, but cannot find that he has any Estate in England.

Turner. My Lord, Gilpin only assigns a Judgment of Wescott's.

Ld Ch. Just. Bridgman. Then if Wescott be good, it is sufficient; you should inquire after him.

Sir T. Aleyn. My Lord, John Turner, his Son there, fled away from me, when I came to the House in the Minories.

Ld Ch. Just. Bridgman. Why did you fly away?

John Turner. I did not, Sir.

Sir T. Aleyn. No! You ran away as fast as you could; you got over a Ditch.

John Turner. My Lord, a Woman cry'd out, Get away and save your Life! And I not knowing what the matter was, I went away.

Col. Turner. Poor Boy! he thought Thieves had been coming, and affrighted him.

Sir T. Aleyn. As to Ely Turner, I examined him upon the Sunday, the day after his Father was committed; he would not confess the carrying of any Money, and the Maid swearing it, I committed him also.

Col. Turner. What's that of Ely? Upon my Soul, the Boy carried none.

John Turner. I carried what was carried.

Col. Turner. My Lord, one Son is as dear to me as the other, but if either be more, it must be my eldest; but yet I must say, it was John my eldest Son that carried the Money.

Sir T. Aleyn. My Lord, William Turner was brought before me on Tuesday or Wednesday: Sir Richard Brown sent out his Warrant for him, being a Person of evil Name, and likely to do such a Fact; being taken, he was brought before me. My Lord, when Mr. Tryon looked upon him, he suspected him: I examined him when he saw Col. Turner; he said, not these three Years, not to speak to him; and yet one at the Cock behind the Exchange said, this William Turner staid for Col. Turner at his House two hours; that Col. Turner came in, paid for the Pot of Drink, and for ought he knew they both went together: thereupon I committed him.

In the Afternoon I ordered this Person to send his Servant; one came and made Oath that he came in, and inquired for Col. Turner, asked for him, staid two hours for him; that they went both out of the House together: and this was on the Wednesday, the day before the Robbery.

William Dawes sworn.

All that I can say, is this: William Turner was at my House on Wednesday was seven-night last; comes in, and called for a Flaggon of Beer; there comes in a Customer of mine, says he to me, What do you with such a Fellow in your House? Have a care of him, he is a dangerous Fellow. Presently after Col. Turner came in, and paid for a Flaggon of Beer, and went away.

Col. Turner. I drank not with him, did I?

Dawes. Not that I saw.

Ld

Ld Ch. Juſt. Bridgman. Sir Thomas Aleyn, did not this William Turner deny that he had ſeen Col. Turner lately?

Sir T. Aleyn. He ſaid poſitively he had not ſeen him theſe three Years, ſo as to ſpeak to him; ſaid, he was grown too high for him.

John Rouſe (Dawes's Servant) ſworn.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Bridgman. Do you remember when Will. Turner was at your Maſter's Houſe? Which is he?

Rowſe. That's he (pointing to William) he was there upon Wedneſday the 6th of this Month.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Did James (called Colonel) Turner come there then?

Rowſe. William came, and ſaid he ſtaid for the Colonel; and by and by the Colonel came.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. When he came, what did they?

Rowſe. He went to the Bar, and paid the Reckoning.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. What time of the day?

Rowſe. About Twelve or One a-clock.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Bridgman. Did you ever ſee them both there before?

Rowſe. No, I never ſee them together before, but ſeveral others have inquired for Col. Turner at our Houſe.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. By the Oath you have taken, did William Turner ſay he ſtaid for Col. Turner, and that after Col. Turner came, he paid for the Drink, and they both went away together, and this on the Wedneſday?

Rowſe. Yes, Sir, it was ſo.

Col. Turner. My Lord, I left him there; he follow'd me to the Exchange about his Arrears, as twenty poor Gentlemen do.

Mr. Garret, Mr. Watcher, Mr. Pilkinton, and Mr. Peter Cully, ſworn.

Mr. Cully. My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, I was at Mr. Tryon's this day ſeven-night; as I came from him, I met Sir Thomas Aleyn, Col. Turner, and Major Tasker coming up ſtairs: they asked who was there with Mr. Tryon? I told them nobody. Turner deſired earneſtly they would ſtay a little; for (ſays he) before God you will ſpoil all the buſineſs by and by. After he had been a little time with Mr. Tryon, he comes forth again, he takes up the Bags of Money, ſays he, theſe belong to me, this is not Mr. Tryon's Money: he carries it to the old Gentleman; he comes into the Room, ſays he, Gentlemen you may be all gone, the old Gentleman is ſatisfied, his Money and Jewels ſhall be forth-coming by Five a-clock this Night; Perſons of Quality are concerned in the buſineſs, and the old Gentleman will not proſecute. I asked Col. Turner, why was the Money carried from your Houſe to the Minories? He ſaid there was none, and did affirm it with an Oath. When the Bags were taken out of the Wallets, upon comparing of a Seal of one of the Bags with the Seal of a Letter produced, I found them the ſame. That's all I can ſay.

Mr. Watcher. My Lord, laſt Saturday between Twelve and One of the clock came Col. Turner on the Exchange, and ſaid that Mr. Tryon ſhould have all his Money and Jewels by Three of the clock that Afternoon; and if any Man could ſay, that he loſt Sixpence of his Money, or Sixpenny-worth of his Jewels, he had two Fellows in cuſtody that ſhould ſuffer for it. And asking him why the Money was that Morning removed from his Houſe to the Minories, he ſaid with a great Oath, the Money was never in his Houſe.

Mr. Garret. When Col. Turner brought home the Money, he took up one of the Wallets, and ſaid, Jack take notice this is my Money.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Where was this?

Garret. In my Couſin Tryon's Houſe; and that he only left it with my Couſin Tryon. When we looked over this Money in the Evening, we found that Seal that this Gentleman (pointing to Mr. Cully) hath ſpoke of; it was a little defaced, but yet apparent enough.

Turner. I did ſay ſo, my Lord; he ſpeaks Truth.

Mr. Pilkinton ſworn.

I can ſay no more than hath been ſaid already: I ſhall repeat it. Being at the Hoop-Tavern with Mr. Tryon's Man, and others, with the Officers, we were diſcourſing of his Robbery; and I was ſaying, That I admired, he being ſo antient a Gentleman, they would uſe him ſo barbarouſly as hath been related. Said Colonel Turner, In that they went beyond their Commiſſion, they had no Order for it. And being asked how they got into the Houſe, he ſaid one got into the Cellar in the Day-time: [And ſo related it in the ſame manner as ſeveral Witneſſes before.] Being asked how his Tooth came to be beaten out? Says he, It was not with a Blow; but the Man's Finger being in his Mouth, he cloſed his Teeth, and ſtruggling to get out his Finger, his Knuckle thruſt out the Tooth. And then Mr. Tryon's Man ſaying, If he and the Maid had been at home, they ſhould have been killed: No, ſaid Turner, you would only have been bound.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Now Mr. Turner you have heard your Charge; you will do well to make an Anſwer to it; you ſee what is laid to your Charge.

Turner. Ay, my Lord: I ſhall clear it all, every Syllable of it.

Mr. Martin's Coachman was called, and ſworn.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Bridgman. Tell the Jury what you know: Did you ſee any People about Mr. Tryon's Houſe upon Thurſday Night?

Coachman. I did, my Lord: I was come by from the Playhouſe with my Coach; I ſaw four Men, two on one Side of the Door, and two on the other Side; every one had a Handkerchief tied about his Neck, and every one of them had a good Cudgel in his Hand.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Bridgman. What Time a-night was that?

Coachman. About Eight or Nine a-clock at Night.

Lord Mayor. Was their Faces turned towards Mr. Tryon's Door, as if they were to go in, or to knock?

Coachman. No, Sir, two ſtood towards Fenchurch-Street, and two ſtood toward Leaden-Hall-Street. I did ſuſpect ſuch a Buſineſs; for they pulled down their Hats over their Faces.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. What kind of Cudgels had they?

Coachman. Sticks ſomewhat bigger then Walking-Staves.

Mr. Tryon, looking upon William Turner at the Bar, ſaid, This Man, whoſe Name is (as I underſtand) William Turner, I do ſuppoſe to be one of the two that was in my Chamber at the Bed's-side, and that indeed did strike out my Tooth. I asked him, Why do you use me so inhumanly, like a Beast, and not like a Man? I am quiet; what would you have? Says he, Be still, you shall not lose a Hair of your Head.

Ld Ch. Just. Hyde. You believe that to be the Man.

Tryon. I would be loth to charge him; but he is as like him as any ever I saw.

Ld Ch. Just. Hyde. Had they either Vizors or Masks on?

Tryon. Nothing, my Lord; bare-faced. One said to the other, It's but past Eleven of the clock; else I had not known it: I was asleep, with Surprize amazed, being an antient weak Man.

Ld Ch. Just. Hyde. As near as you can conjecture, is that the Man?

Tryon. Yes, both of Face and Pitch.

Lord Mayor. Mr. Tryon, did you observe those Persons that were at your Bed-side, whether they had Handkerchiefs or Crevats about their Necks?

Tryon. My Lord, I did not take notice of that; I do not remember it.

Ld Ch. Just. Hyde. You hear your Indictment: That you, and William, and John, are indicted for the Felony and Burglary, for breaking and entring into the House of Mr. Francis Tryon, and stealing the particular Goods and Money, as you have heard: I would propose this to you, to make your Defence touching your Charge: Which is, first, that you and William met the Day before; he came in first, and said he staid there till you came; you came, and paid the reckoning, and went away: You two were together the Day before; what your Business was, you can better tell than I. The Night he was robbed, his Servant being gone, the Door was double locked: You knew all the private Places, where the Keys lay, all the Rooms wherein Cash, Jewels, where every thing was: And it was not possible this Burglary could be committed but by one that knew those Things.

Turner. There are about twenty People that knew as much as I; his Servants, and such as had been his Servants.

Ld Ch. Just. Hyde. It falls out that the self-same Night after this House was robbed in the Morning early, you, your Wife, and Son, go to remove store of Money out of your House.

Turner. It was two Nights after the Robbery: Pardon me, my dear Lord.

Ld Ch. Just. Hyde. When you carry this, you go with a false Story, That a Merchant was broke, and you must needs have some of the Money for his Wife and eight Children; and this Money was to be set aside for them. ——

Turner. It was so, my good Lord. ——

Ld Ch. Just. Hyde. You will do well to hold your peace a while: Your Wife and you disowned you removed any Money; yet afterwards, when the Money was brought there, and taken upon Suspicion, (you taken in the very Place removing the Money) you owned it to be your own: That then it appeared that one of those Bags was sealed with the Bishop of Chichester's Seal; and at the Time of the Burglary, there was 600 l. in Bags left with Mr. Tryon, sealed with the said Seal; and one of those Bags you brought back was taken with you, and owned to be your own, and had the same Seals. That's proved by four or five Witnesses, compared with the Seal of a Letter of the Bishop. Your Son, on their coming thither, he takes footing, and leaps over the Ditch to escape, which is a good just Ground of Suspicion that he is guilty of somewhat that he would not abide to answer. Your self and Wife take upon you to know every Thing: You know how the Usage was; that there was a purpose they should not be killed; that he was gagged; that they exceeded their Commission; if the Man and Maid had been at home, they should have been but bound. All Particulars you take upon you to know, and to confess the whole and the manner of it; nay, tell the Story how they came in. ——

Turner. As I was informed. ——.

Ld Ch. Just. Hyde. Lay all this together, unless you answer it, all the World must conclude that you are one that did this Robbery.

Turner. I shall answer it; and I hope to give all the World Satisfaction. Pray call

Mr. Vandeputt,
Mr. Covell,
Mr. Esnow,
Mr. Cook,
My Maid,
And the Lord Marquis of Dorchester's Servant.

Ld Ch. Just. Hyde. Tell us to what purpose.

Turner. To clear every Particular.

Ld Ch. Just. Hyde. Open it.

Turner. I shall first prove that upon Thursday Night, the Time of this supposed Burglary, that my self, my Wife, and all my Family, were in Bed, fast asleep, and innocent, not knowing any thing of this Business. This I shall prove; if not, let me hang and all my Family.

Ld Ch. Just. Bridgman. All this may be true, and yet this not to the purpose.

Turner. Then I cannot be guilty of the Burglary.

Ld Ch. Just. Bridgman. If you will lay and plot such a Robbery, though you are not there, yet you are guilty of it; for it is ordinary that the main Setter will not be present at such Times, but will be then in Bed, that People may take notice thereof. But satisfy the Court by what Means you came by this Money and Jewels, and then call your Witnesses.

Turner. I shall go on by degrees, and certify the whole.

Ld Ch. Just. Hyde. My Lord Bridgman hath put you upon the right Business: Do that in the first place; make it appear how you came to know so exactly the whole Carriage of this Business, and how you came by the Money and Jewels.

Turner. I shall do it, my Lord. The Constable coming for me, by Direction of Mr. Tryon, to assist him, I came to him; saith he, Some Villains have been here, and have robbed me this Night; which made me weep. Said I, These are wicked People: I gave you notice how you should have been robbed about a Year since; but that was prevented. And saith Mr. Tryon, For God's sake assist me in this, and I shall be thankful to you. Sir, said I, did you see the Faces of them? Said he, It run in my Mind very strongly that one of them is Christmas. Said I, Who is he? Saith he, 'Twas Hanson the Grocer's Man. I know Hanson, said I. Mosely, go and knock up Hanson, and know where Christmas is, and bring him to Mr. Tryon. Mosely took two or three Men, and went to Thomas Hanson, in Mark-Lane, and there found at a Bricklayer's House where Christmas lay: He was a little refractory to rise. Another Constable coming, he came down; and then they sent Christmas to the Compter. Mosely came and told us he was in the Compter. I sat with Mr. Tryon that Night. But, my Lord, pray observe how how my Name came into queſtion: The young Man and Maid being out, came home late, the Conſtable was there then: Friends, ſaith he, where have you been? Saith he, I have been at Colonel Turner's at Supper; which was a notorious Lye, and brought me here in queſtion; God forgive him for it. Away comes the Conſtable, by Direction of Mr. Tryon, and Hill's Lye together. He came to my Houſe; we were all aſleep. I aroſe, and asked, Who is there? It is I, ſaid Mr. Moſely: Mr. Tryon is robbed; pray come down. I came down, and opened my Door. Saith he, Was Mr. Tryon's Man and Maid here at Supper? When? ſaid I. To-night, ſaid he. I have had no Suppers theſe nine Months, ſaid I: This William is a very Rogue. Whereupon the Conſtable replied, Are your Sons within? Yes, in Bed theſe two Hours. Do you ſuſpect any thing by my Sons? He went and looked, and ſaw my Wife, he finds my Sons faſt aſleep; the one indeed was awake. Pray, ſaid I, ſee that you know them again. Upon my Honour, my Lord, this (pointing to Ely) was aſleep.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Upon your Honour, Sir! pray ſpeak by your Honeſty.

Turner. Lapſus Linguæ, my Lord: It is my uſual Phraſe. I hope I ſhall appear to be a good Man. This Child was awake: He ſaw the Maid, my Daughters; ſearched every Room, ſearched every Place that was to be imagined to be ſearched. Saith the Conſtable, I am very glad that your Servants, your Children, and you are in this Condition: I will acquaint Mr. Tryon what a Rogue this Hill is, how he hath belyed you. Nay, ſaid I, pray take me with you; and ſo I went with my Hair put under my Cap. When I came to Mr. Tryon's, I asked him who had been there? Pardon me, my dear Lord, if I were guilty, I ſhould not ſpeak any thing to excuſe it. When I had underſtood this, I gave the Conſtable five Shillings, and deſired him to ſearch about this Buſineſs. I went to Mr. George Day the Goldſmith, and gave him a Note of thoſe Things, to be printed, that they ſaid they had loſt. Friday came; and at Night Sir Thomas Aleyn was pleaſed to argue it with me. I told him and the Gentleman theſe muſt be ſome Rogues that know the Houſe; which put me in mind of a former Crew that was to rob him a Year ſince.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Bridgman. He would be glad you would ſpeak to the purpoſe.

Turner. I did charge the Conſtable and Mr. Pilkinton that they would get up before Day; and that they would go to ſuch and ſuch Places, where the Conſtable and I had privately ſpoken of, to Ratcliff, or Ratcliff-Croſs. The Conſtable and Mr. Tryon's Man had been there; but the Man and his Wife was gone into London: But afterwards, by Inquiry, the Boy ſaid they were gone into Hertfordſhire a Week before. This Boy is in two Tales: Here is ſome, pray God theſe People be honeſt.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Bridgman. Go on.

Turner. Your Honour's Servant, my Lord. Afterwards I went beyond the little Poſtern between the two Tower-Hills, near the Tower-Ditch: There is one John Wild, who had been formerly here in Newgate; he ſhould have been tranſported. This Fellow coming into my Mind, I having before been to take him in Eaſt-Smithfield, I had News he uſed White-Chappel, Eaſt-Smithfield, and Tower-Hill, and had Lodgings by the Blue-Boar by the little Poſtern, and at Noah's-Ark, and at the Lion in the Wood, the Corner-houſe at Tower-Ditch. This Houſe about Tower-Ditch and the Nag's-Head at White-Chappel were the two Places where I found thoſe Perſons about a Twelvemonth ſince, that ſhould have robbed him. Going now from Houſe to Houſe, I paſſed a Fellow in Black, in a large Coat, ſuch another Man as this, (pointing at one that ſtood by:) He was in a black Looſe Coat, and he was trimmed with Ribband at the Knees. This Perſon I paſſed him, and he paſſed me; and then I out-went him: And meeting him on the other Side, I was confirmed it muſt be one of theſe Fellows I looked for, one Wild or White. Paſſing the ſecond time, I ran to him, thruſting to him. What mean you, Sir? ſaid he. Said I, I mean to lay flat Felony to your Charge: Do not you know me? No, ſaid he, with a great Oath. Then I know you. Who is it, Colonel Turner? ſaid he. I ſaid, Ay. Saith he, What do you mean? Said I, Mr. Tryon's Houſe was robbed, and you are the Perſon that I will lay flat Felony to; you ſhould have been one of them that were to rob him a Year ſince, when Colonel Aſhton betrayed you all. He began with ſome hard Oaths: Be quick, ſaid I, I will call out; you are an undone Man; I will lay this Felony to you.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Bridgman. What Night was this?

Turner. The Friday Night following, about Twelve a-clock at Night. I ſhifted my Hold from his Collar to the Waiſtband of his Breeches: I thought I had him ſecure. Said I, Wild, do not deceive your ſelf, play not the Fool; if you will ſave your Life, let me ſee where thoſe Goods and Moneys are, elſe you will go to pot. Saith he, Pray ſpeak lower; we ſhall be heard. Well, I will ſpeak lower. We walked to the Hill. I had faſt hold of his Breeches all this while; and yet I was afraid he might have ſome Dagger, and ſtab me: Said I, Be brief, you are not alone; either reſolve me, or I will call out. Then I will tell you, ſaith he: Colonel Turner, I underſtand you are a Perſon of Honour, and a Gentleman that will keep your Word; and if you will upon a ſerious Vow and Promiſe ſave my Life, I will unfold the Buſineſs: But if you will not, with a great Oath, ſaith he, you ſhall hang me, and loſe all the Jewels. Said I, What will you have of me? Saith he, You ſhall ſwear to me, That by the Blood of that Jeſus Chriſt that died for you, and I, and all Sinners, that I ſhall have my Life free, in caſe I diſcover the Thing to you; and then I will tell you more: If you will not, I will tell you nothing, do with me what you will. Saith I, Wild, I ſhall ſtand with you ſo long, that I ſhall have my Throat cut. Upon my Salvation, ſaith he, ſtooping down upon his Knees, ſaith he, Let me never riſe up, if I am not juſt to you; and not a Hair of your Head ſhall be touched. Said I, Come, ſtand up: I do declare to you that I will endeavour with old Mr. Tryon: Tell me where the Things are. They are not far off. Where are they? They are at two Places: But do you ſwear to me. He did, in ſhort, make me ſay the ſame Words that I have repeated, and that I would get Mr. Tryon to engage himſelf too by the ſame Oath I did ſwear to him; thinking my Life in danger, and thinking my Friend's Goods likely to be loſt; and did and do intend by the Help of God to make good my Oath. Saith he, Walk with me. He whiſtled once, the ſecond time, and at a pretty diſtance a third time; and within a little while came another Fellow to him, at the further End, by the Horſe-Shoe-Tavern. He comes: Saith he, Art thou come, Tom? I think he called him White. Ay, ſaith he. What ſhall we do? We are all undone; my Face is known. But I have lit in the Hands of a Gentleman who will ſave my Life;

Life; but for you, he knows you not. Saith he, the Money muſt be returned; go and fetch that Money. Said I, Shall not I go with them? No, ſaid he. And truly, my Lord, I was very glad to take him at his Word: If I had gone, I might have had my Throat cut. There was this 500 l. brought at twice, three and two. They went again, and brought, as I take it, two and one; ſo there was three and two, and two and one.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Bridgman. Who brought it?

Turner. White. All this while I had the Fellow by the Breeches, and would not part with him. It was from a little paſt Twelve till Four bringing, and was left on the Cauſey, and went away and fetched the other. This Fellow and I, all alone together, had this Diſcourſe: Said I, What deſperate Villains were you to go and uſe the old Gentleman in this manner, fourſcore Years of Age: You beat and abuſed him; you are ſtrange mad Fellows: Why could you not let him ſleep in his Bed? he was aſleep when you came in: You were the maddeſt Fellows that ever was. Saith he, Some of you have ſtabb'd him. I think you deſerve ten thouſand Deaths for laying your Hands on him, tho you did not take Six-penny worth of his Goods. Saith he, There was no Intention of hurting him: Upon my Soul there was no Order or Commiſſion. Saith I, How got you in? Saith he, The Door ſtands open half a Day together, almoſt: One got into the Cellar, and ſtood till all was a-bed: He went into the Kitchin, found a Candle ſtanding lighted, and went up into the old Gentleman's Chamber, and there he found the Key of the Door, came down, opened the Door, and let the reſt in. How many was there of them? Saith he, Three or four. Said I, What did you do; and what would you have done? We would only have bound them. How got you the Treaſure? By a Key out of the old Gentleman's Pocket: I think there is no hurt to the old Gentleman; I would not for all the World there ſhould. You ſhall have the Things again: And pray keep your Word with me. About Four a-clock in the Morning they brought the Money. Now, ſaid I, what ſhall we do with it? I can do nothing with it: You muſt carry it home to my Houſe. Theſe two Fellows carried one three, and the other two Bags.

We went through Aldgate with the Money, and ſo to my Houſe: My Wife, nor Sons, nor no Soul, God is my Witneſs, knew any thing of this Buſineſs but my ſelf. I knocked at the Door: This young Man (pointing to John) came down, and he unbolted, unlocked, and unlatched the Door. My Parlour and Kitchin is all of one Floor: They followed me in, and threw down the Money. He bringing the Candle to me; No, ſaid I, do not bring it. Said I, Wild, what ſhall I do for the Jewels and the reſt of the Money? You ſhall have them brought you where you will appoint to-day. I will have them brought hither. Saith he, That cannot be. I have forgot my ſelf: This Money muſt not lie here; you muſt remove it from hence: For the other Youths that have the reſt of the Money and Jewels, will never be brought into the City. If you will remove it into the Minories, my Life for it, you will have it all. I will pretend there we will ſhare it. You muſt not let it lie at all, but carry it preſently thither. I will tell what I will do: Have you any Acquaintance about Tower-Hill, where you will leave it? No, ſaid he. Nor I neither, ſaid I. I went up Stairs to my Wife; Mall, ſaid I, have you any Acquaintance about the further Tower-Hill? I durſt not truſt my Wife nor Sons; for I thought their Tongues might be too long, and left them in perfect Ignorance: Truly, I muſt clear them. Mall, ſaid I, there is a Gentlewoman, whoſe Husband is failed, (this was a feigned Story, my Lord) it muſt be ſecured about Tower-Hill: She was pretty well awake. Saith ſhe, There is the Commiſſary-General of the King, his Daughter Betty Fry keeps a Shop of Linen at the lower End of the Minories. Do you think ſhe will be private, and let it lie for four or five Hours? Undoubtedly ſhe will, ſaith ſhe. Prithee get up, and put on thy Clothes, and go thither. Wild, where ſhall I find you about Eight or Nine a-clock? I will lodge this at the Seamſtreſs's Shop, upon the Right-hand at the farther End of the Minories: Tell me where I ſhall meet you, and we will have this Money carried there; my Son and I, we will have it lodged. Saith he, You ſhall have me walking within three Doors of the Blue-Pig; ſo he called it. Saith I, What mean you? Saith he, It is a little Sign, no bigger than a Pig, but it is called the Blue-Boar: There you ſhall have me walking in the under or upper Cauſey. My Lord, I took this Boy, (pointing to John) who knew nothing: I told him it was a Friend's Money. I raiſed my Wife: Mall, ſaid I, come away. My Wife went before; the Boy and I took the Money: I carried two, and he three. My Wife went and knock'd up the Maid, the Door was open when we came; God forgive this Maid that ſwears it was this Son, ſhe is miſtaken, upon my Salvation this Boy was abed and aſleep. When the Money was there, I ſtaid by my Wife; ſaid I, what have you done with this Money? I did not tell my Wife any thing. I came home; coming home, there was my Son and Wife. I drank a Cup of Syder, (for I kept a Hogſhead of Syder in my Houſe) as ſoon as I drank it, I went out of doors immediately: ſaid I to this youngeſt Son, Stay at home, I ſhall have occaſion to uſe you by and by. I went to Mr. Tryon's; coming there, I found Mr. Gurney the Merchant: ſaid I, Mr. Gurney, I have Good News, I have ſome hopes of ſtrong Preſumptions, that Mr. Tryon will not loſe one penny-worth of his Goods. Marry, ſaid he, I am glad of that. We went up to Mr. Tryon's, we found him ſitting by a little Charcoal Fire, as much as you may cover with your hands: he told us he had been up ever ſince Three of the clock. We asked him, what he would have to comfort him: he told us, he had ſomething. Mr. Gurney after ſome diſcourſe took his leave of him, ſo I ſat down. (Jeſus! what a noiſe is here in the Court, my Lord! I can hear but with one Ear.) I ſay, I ſat down at the Bed-ſide of Mr. Tryon, he on the Stool: Mr. Tryon, ſaid I, I have Good News for you. Saith he, Haſt thou! I am glad of it with all my Soul. Sir, ſaid I, I am informed you will not loſe any of your Goods or Money, there is but thirty-eight Shillings ſpent of all your Money, the Rogues took but forty Shillings out, and Wild told me there was two Shillings ſaved: I dare boldly ſay, by Three of the clock in the Afternoon you will be maſter of them again. I would be glad of that, and will give you five hundred Pounds. But, Sir, ſaid I, there is a Tale hangs by this: You know you ſhould have been robbed about a Year ſince; and I have apprehended Wild, who was one of the intended Thieves. Then he hath made me ſwear, By the Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, &c. that he ſhall have his Life, if you have your Goods: He hath engaged me that you ſhall likewiſe ſwear by the like Oath, or elſe you ſhall hang

hang him, and ſo loſe your Goods. Said I, I have a great part of your Money, but the Jewels and the reſt of your Money is wanting. The old Gentleman was almoſt overjoy'd: This is not true, ſaid he. Said I, I do declare this is true in the preſence of God, make no words of it; if the buſineſs be diſcovered, we ſhall loſe the Jewels. Well, ſaid he, I will be ruled by you, Colonel; and the Lord God make me thankful I have ſuch a Friend in the world that hath done this for me, I ſhall never make you amends: and thereupon he entred into the ſame Oath, That by the Blood, &c. the Blood of the Man ſhould not be ſpilt, tho he loſt both Money and Jewels, I diſcourſed with him, I told him over and over again, left him ſatisfied that I would be with him again, and bring him more tidings, but by Three a-clock I doubted not but he ſhould have all. Then it was almoſt Eight at Night; away went I to Tower-Hill to look my Merchant John Wild, he was here in Newgate formerly: there found I him walking by the Blue-Boar, careleſly walking there, with his Coat under his Arms. Said I, How now, what News? I think I have now pleaſed you, ſaith he. What have you done? ſaid I. I have lodged the Money hard by, and all is right. What have you done? Is all right on the other ſide? All ſhall be well: but where have you lodg'd it? Here at a Seamſtreſs's, at the corner of the Minories: ſaid he, The Money muſt be removed, there are Saleſmen thereabouts, and the Fellow that hath the Jewels he is known, he will not come thither; remove it towards the Water-ſide, any where, and the things ſhall come, my Life for it. They had a Cat's-Eye Ring, they were ſuch wiſe Lapidaries, they called this a Hundred-Pound Ring, when it was not worth Five Pound. He gave order that the Money might be again removed to the other end by the Horſeſhoe-Tavern. I run home, fetch'd my Son; ſaid I, Wife, we muſt have away the Money. My Lord, he told me he would have away the Money to the Half-Moon Tavern in St. Katherine's, or the corner Tavern at the Iron-gate; ſaid I, Are not you reſolved? Well, ſaid he, it ſhall be carry'd to St. Katherine's, he would meet my Son at the Noah's-Ark at Tower-Ditch: let my Son but hand the Money over that Path, and he would hand it to the other. We did carry it, carry'd again. At his ſecond carrying, comes Sir Thomas Aleyn, he had heard ſome Cry of Money left, he comes with a great Company of People after him, and the fooliſh Wench ſaid to my Son, Mr. John, fly for your Life. John being ſurprized and affrighted, he went out of the Back-door, went over the Ditch, and went to my Houſe. Sir Thomas Aleyn had alſo ſent to ſecure my Houſe. When the Lad came home into the ſtreet, my Doors were ſhut up: (Gentlemen of the Jury, do you underſtand?) the Boy ſeeing ſuch a Rout at the Door, ſaith the People, Mr. John, your Father's Houſe is ſhut up about Mr. Tryon's Money. He walked by the ſtreet, and went into Biſhopſgate-ſtreet, and Cheapſide, into Paternoſter-Row, and ſo into Fleet-ſtreet: I did not hear of him till Saturday in the Afternoon.

When Sir Thomas Aleyn came, ſaith he, Mr. Turner, here we have catch'd you and the Money. Said I, If you be haſty and paſſionate, as you were laſt night, you will ſpoil all the whole buſineſs. Tell me, ſaith he, whoſe Money it is. Said I, It is my Money. The truth is, the old Gentleman hath promiſed me 500 l. it is the naked truth; I would not have Sir Thomas Aleyn have the honour of gaining it, but I would have the honour of gaining it my way.

Sir Thomas would know whether it was my Money, I told him I had received part of it at a Goldſmith's; ſo I put Sir Thomas off. Come, come, ſaid he, we will carry this Money to Mr. Tryon. Said I to Mr. Tryon, Here is part of your Money, you know what I told you even now. Ay, ſaith he, God be thanked, before Sir Thomas Aleyn. I asked him, what his Promiſe was, and told him how the Paſſage was in ſhort; and the old Man did acknowledge that ſuch a Promiſe was made, and would have down upon his knees. I paſſed my word to him, that by Three a-clock I doubted not but he would have his Jewels, and the reſt of the Money. Saith Sir Thomas Aleyn, Go, (whether he ſaid live and proſper, I know not) Go, God bleſs you; and upon my honour (I think that was his word) the old Man ſhall make good his Word. Ay, but Sir Thomas, what will become of me and you, by this Buſineſs, for I underſtand the Law? How will this Buſineſs be daubed up? You will be fined; Sir Thomas, I muſt break my Word, he muſt be apprehended, or I muſt ſuffer. Saith Sir Thomas, Do not trouble me with that, get but the Goods, and the old Man's Word ſhall be made good, leave that to me. More than that, he ſaid, He would make up the Buſineſs, or he would ſmother it. My Lord, you have a great deal of Patience, I am humbly bound to you, here is nothing but the naked Truth, ſtep by ſtep, as I trod it. Afterwards Wild came and ſaid, All will be well. Said I, What have you done? Are you ſure, ſaith he, the Jewels nor nothing ſhall be ſtirred? Said I, You ſee all is ſpoiled; Sir Thomas Aleyn is come where we had lodged the Money, the thing is known, do not they hear of it? Yes, they hear as well as you, and know what is done, and ſome have eyes upon you. Said I, They will run away with the Jewels. No, you ſhall meet about Three a-clock; nobody knows me but you, your Wife, and your Son, who ſaw me this Morning at Three a-clock, either by the Blue-Pig at Tower-Hill, or Nags-Head over againſt White-Chappel Church.

It is agreed, for God's ſake look to it, your Life and mine is concerned; if the Jewels be loſt, I will perſecute you to the Death, look they are preſerved, and not purloin'd. Saith he, The Bags were never opened. I parted with him, he was to look for me at Three of the clock: coming home about Change-time, who ſhould I meet with but Mr. Stubbs, who told me that it was all the News upon the Exchange, that you have been in the Robbery. Said I, Do not trouble your head, I have diſcovered the buſineſs. Then ſaid Stubbs, You know I and Thomas Lyon are Bail for you. At that time I ſatisfied him. Afterwards that day I met with Mr. Cole the Officer; ſaid he, Colonel, I arreſt you. For what? for more Fooleries yet? Thomas Lyon will not be ſatisfied. By Six of the clock this buſineſs will be all over: nothing will ſerve your turn but Violence, Violence, no Force, no Law, I was forced to go to the Hoop-Tavern. I got them to ſend for Mr. Stubbs and Lyon; they came: ſaid I, What will you have? I am in proſecution of a Buſineſs for Mr. Tryon, you will undo it with this ſixpenny Buſineſs: ſay what Security you will have, and you ſhall have it: ſaid I, Mr. Tryon and Sir Thomas Aleyn ſhall give you their Security, to ſave you harmleſs for being my Bail. Said they, Hold Mr. Tryon, we'll do it; we are content: they went away, and told me they would get a Bond, and come preſently; but what was this preſently? I will warrant you they ſtaid two hours; it was Seven a-clock at night before I parted with them. I was fain to ſend the little Boy for Mr. Hill, Mr. Pilkinton, Mr. Millington; this was either a Curſe from God ſent upon me, or a Plot of Roguery that the Money ſhould be loſt. They came not back till Seven of the clock, and then without a Bond; and I fell a little violent: But I was telling them how theſe Rogues told me the whole Carriage of this Robbery; when it came that Mr. Tryon and Sir Thomas Aleyn heard that I was in cuſtody, he ſent a Conſtable with a Warrant to bring us all before him. When we came there, I deſired Sir Thomas to let a Gentleman go with me; I will break my Oath with the Fellow, and we will apprehend him, and make him bring the Jewels. Sir Thomas Aleyn told them, if they would all go together, they might; but to go out of the Liberties, he could not let them go: I have you, and I will keep you, and do find him if you will. How now, Sir Thomas, ſaid I, are you come to that? Have you fooled me all this while? I'faith, I thank you, for you have trapanned me very fairly; if any thing miſcarry in my Honour and Reputation, or Blood, you are in the fault: Here I do declare, ſaid I, if you will let me go, I will take him. Then Sir Thomas did incline to let me: what ſay you, Officers, will you go out of your Liberties with this Gentleman? Sir Thomas, ſaid I, there is no Liberty or Privilege for Felons; I will ſeize a Felon myſelf in any ground in England without Warrant. I do remember this Wild did condition, that in caſe I could not come, I ſhould truſt no Man living but myſelf, becauſe he had had my Soul pawn'd to him. I asked him whom he would truſt: He ſaid, if I could ſend my Wife, deſcribing her to him, that ſhe was a full ſhort Woman about forty or fifty Years old, ſhe had a long black Scarf on; then let him alone, if I cannot come, I will ſend ſuch a Woman, and ſend the things by her, and preſerve your Life. I told Sir Thomas this Story. My Wife came to me publickly, I did not whiſper with her——

Mrs. Turner. Nay, look you, Husband——

Col. Turner. Prithee, Mall, ſit down: you ſee, my Lord, my Wife will interrupt me with Nonſenſe. Prithee ſit thee down quickly, and do not put me out: I cannot hold Womens Tongues, nor your Lordſhip neither.

Ld Bridgman. This is not a May-game.

Turner. My Lord, it is a ſerious Buſineſs, and I hope God will bleſs it—— Pray, ſaid I, Mall go, as you love and honour my Life and Credit, or any thing that concerns me, I beg you to go. Then I will go, ſaith ſhe; whither muſt I go? You muſt go to the further Tower-Hill, ſix doors beyond the little Poſtern: now it is ſo much of the clock, from Five to Seven he will walk there. A Fellow will come to you in black, that Man that in the Morning took the Money from Jack, he will know you, and once in a quarter or half an hour he will come to you. If you do not find him in half an hour, ſtay no longer, but pack away to White-Chappel, ask for the Nags-Head in White-Chappel, and once in a quarter of an hour you will have a Man come to you, and take notice of you, and ask you who you are; and you muſt ſay, that you walk for one to give you ſomewhat: he will deliver you ſomewhat, and whatever he delivers you, bring it hither. Said I to them, You may ſend if you will, and dodge my Wife, and catch him that way; they would not. I ſent my poor Wife away, and, ſaving your Lordſhip's preſence, ſhe did all bedirt herſelf, a thing ſhe did not uſe to do, poor Soul: She found this Nags-head, ſhe ſat down, being ſomewhat fat and weary, poor Heart! I have had twenty-ſeven Children by her, fifteen Sons, and twelve Daughters. Seven or eight times this Fellow did round her——

Mrs. Turner. Let me give that Relation.

Col. Turner. You cannot, it is as well: prithee ſit down, dear Mall, ſit thee down, good Child, all will be well. When ſhe came back, ſhe came with ſomething in her Apron: What are you ſped, ſaith he? I know not what: a Man came to me, and asked me who I look'd for; I told him, I look'd for any Man that would give me any thing. Are you Colonel Turner's Wife? And upon her Anſwer he gave her theſe Bags into her Apron, and was gone a matter of a yard from her: Step back again, that is not all, here is a Diamond Ring worth a Hundred Pound, give that to your Husband. And this Diamond Ring proves a Cat's-Eye Ring, and worth but Four Pound.

Mrs. Turner. Well, and did not I bring theſe——

Col. Turner. Look you, my Lord, this Woman will put me out. My Lord, ſhe did deliver all theſe things, and went home. I did take out theſe Goods: Now, ſaid I, Mr. Tryon, you ſee all is come, (Sir Thomas Chamberlain was there) I have perform'd all in my part, look to the reſt, that you perform yours. Some People report, that there is other Jewels of my own; my Lord, they are all his own, and he will not diſown it, and I do not expect my Five Hundred Pounds for what I have done, according to his Promiſe, That as Jeſus died, &c. that the Man ſhould not be proſecuted, nor loſe a Hair of his Head, if he loſe his whole Eſtate: and I do expect my Money, not ſuch a Reward as this. After which I was committed by Sir Thomas Aleyn, and ſo was my Wife. Now pray let me call my Witneſſes, and if I cannot make it good that I am clear, let me be hang'd. My Lord, I ſhall humbly intreat that Mr. Vandeput may be called, Mr. Cowel, and the others.

Ld Bridgman. What do you prove by them?

Turner. To prove part of this buſineſs, That I did aſſure Mr. Tryon of his Goods; and to my Reputation. I forgot one chief thing, I am not a Man in debt, take notice of that, no Man in the world hath my Bill for 5 l. There is only this Conteſt between Mr. Vanburgh and myſelf, which is left to Arbitrators, and the Lord Mayor is Umpire: It is known I have an Eſtate, and there is one thing remarkable; Gentlemen of the Jury, I could have had all theſe Jewels at any time in Truſt; I could have broke as well as others, and paid 5 s. in the Pound: I lately made payment of 2600 l. for Goods, and I can have 20000 l. Credit any day upon the Exchange: Why I that had this Credit, that might break for ſo much Money, why ſhould I put my Neck in a Halter? Theſe are very ſtrong Argumepts for me, that I am not ſuch a Perſon.

Ld Bridgman. I will tell you what you have done: You have made a very long Story, and have taken up the time of the Court theſe two hours in a Narrative; and when all is done, anſwer me, Have you any Witneſs to prove all this Diſcourſe between you and Wild?

Turner. I have by, Witneſſes to prove I ſaid this, that there was ſuch Diſcourſes between us.

Ld

Ld Bridgman. No doubt of it; and ſo will many a Man at Newgate frame ſuch a Story as this.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. You have told a long Story about Wild, that you took him by the throat, and that you were alone; what Weapons had you?

Turner. None, my Lord.

Ld Bridgman. Had you a Lanthorn with you?

Turner. No, my Lord.

Ld Bridgman. What time of the Night was it?

Turner. Twelve a-clock, my Lord.

Ld Bridgman. You ſtaid till Four, ſo they were four hours a bringing of the Money.

Turner. Yes, my Lord.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. You took a Man in the dark by the throat, that Man that was guilty of ſuch a thing, as when that you did let him go to call his Companions, to bring the Money, bring Fellows to you ſingle; I would be glad to know, whether in this caſe they would not have knock'd you on the head, and killed you?

Turner. My Lord, Wild had engaged his Soul, and I my Soul to him, that if I would not diſcover him, I ſhould go away free.

Ld Bridgman. Great Security indeed!

Col. Turner called ſeveral Witneſſes, viz. Mr. Vandeput, Mr. Cowel, Mr. Legooſe, Mr. Snow, and Mr. Moſely the Conſtable. I deſire my Maid may be called: pray ask Sir Thomas Aleyn what he hath done with my Maid, he took her up with Sir Richard Brown and two Marſhal's Men: (pray Gentlemen make not a laughing buſineſs of this) Sir Thomas, pray where is my Maid?

Sir Tho. Aleyn. I had this Maid upon Examination, I found cauſe of further Examination, and thereupon directed an Officer to take her, and ſhe is now in the Garden.

Mr. Moſely the Conſtable examined.

When I came firſt to Mr. Tryon, at Mr. Tryon's Houſe, he was bound; then he asked where his Man and Maid was? he ſaid he could not tell. By and by the Man came in, and being asked where he was, he anſwered he was at Col. Turner's at Supper. Preſently after we went to Col. Turner's, he came to the Window, his Wife and two Sons were in bed.

Ld Bridgman. Did Mr. Tryon give you order to come to him?

Moſely. Yes, my Lord, he did.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Moſely, you were Conſtable, were you not? What diſcourſe had you with Mr. Turner about a dangerous place that you did ſuſpect, where ſome People may be to do ſuch a Feat?

Moſely. I never heard of any ſuch thing ſpoken.

Ld Bridgman. You ſay Mr. Tryon he wiſhed you to call Turner to him; did he give you any Order or Direction to ſearch his Houſe? Who wiſhed you to go up to the Houſe to ſee whether his Sons and Daughters were in bed?

Moſely. Mr. Turner did, my Lord.

Turner. He doth not ſay true, my Lord: pray ask him, when he came to my door and I opened it, whether Mr. Tryon's Servant were there at Supper that night? I ſaid no. Is your Sons within, ſaid he? I ſaid, Ay. Pray let me ſee them.

Moſely. I came to Mr. Turner's Houſe, and knock'd at the door with ſome others with me; at laſt the Colonel came out of his Bed. I ſuppoſe he came out of his Bed; being partly naked, he came down to the door; I asked him, where are your Sons? They are in bed, ſays he. Said I, Mr. Tryon is robb'd, he would have you come to him.

Ld Bridgman. Did he deſire you to go up?

Moſely. No, my Lord; but I asking him whether his Sons were in bed, he ſaid, I prithee go up and ſee.

Turner. My Lord, I would prove where my Sons were on Thurſday Night at Ten a-clock.

Lord Marquiſs of Dorcheſter*'s Servant examined.*

My Lord, till Nine a-clock they were with me at my Lord Marquiſs's Houſe.

Ld Bridgman. What time came they thither?

Marq. Servant. Between Seven and Eight at night.

Col. Turner*'s Maid examined.*

Turner. Come, Maiden, pray tell my Lord and the Court when my Sons came home this night.

Maid. Between Nine and Ten a-clock.

Ld Bridgman. Were your Maſter and his Sons in bed all Friday Night, or no?

Maid. Yes, my Lord, they were.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Did your Maſter go forth on Friday Night?

Maid. No, he was at home and in bed all that Night till Eight a-clock in the Morning, and Thurſday Night before.

Turner. A ſilly Soul, ſhe knows not what ſhe ſays.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. I will ask you again, was your Maſter at home on Friday Night?

Maid. No, I think he was not.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Why did you ſay ſo before?

Maid. I cannot remember, Sir.

Ld Bridgman. She knows her Maſter's Mind.

Turner. No, upon my Soul, my Lord.

Ld Bridgman. My Maſters of the Jury, this is the Uſe that is made of this Maid's Teſtimony; ſhe will ſay any thing, ſhe is no fit Witneſs, no Truſt to be given to her either one way or other.

Turner. Pray call Mr. Cowel, Mr. Legooſe, Mr. Cook the Goldſmith.

Ld Bridgman. What do you call theſe for?

Turner. To prove my Condition, my Credit and Reputation.

Ld Bridgman. The Jury knows that already.

Mr. Cook. Thus much I can ſay, that I have known him ſome twenty Years, I have had dealing with him to the value of ſeveral hundred Pounds, I have truſted him, and have found him very faithful; I have ſeen in his poſſeſſion Jewels to the value of eight or ten thouſand Pounds: by which I ſuppoſe, if he had been ſuch a Perſon, he might have done himſelf a kindneſs by breaking.

Mr. Legooſe. All I can ſay, is, I have an acquaintance with this Perſon, he was a Sollicitor, dealt honeſtly and faithfully in a Buſineſs wherein I was concerned; he hath lived very well.

Sir Richard Brown. Where you have heard one Man ſay he is an honeſt Man, have you not heard a hundred ſay otherwiſe?

Mr. Legooſe. There hath been an ill Report, that he hath been a Perſon that lived high.

Turner. Sir Richard Brown, no Man in England can ſay black is my Eye.

Sir Rich. Brown. Mr. Turner, you ſay you were upon Tower-Hill all Friday Night; whither went you in the Morning?

Turner. I came home between Four and Five in the Morning.

Sir Rich. Brown. Your Maid offered to depoſe even now, that you did not riſe all that Morning before Eight of the clock.

Turner. Lapſus Linguæ, if the Girl be miſtaken.

Ld Bridgman. Do not trouble yourſelf with that, her Evidence is of no force.

Mr. Jefferies. Col. Turner, I cannot ſay any thing that will be advantageous to you; my Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, I have heard Mr. Tryon hath truſted him with Jewels to a good value, and that Mr. Tryon had a very good Repute of him.

Sir Rich. Brown. Pray what Report hath he upon the Exchange?

Turner. I owe nothing there, Sir Richard, nor none there can lay any thing to my charge, except it be that I am a Cavalier.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Mr. Turner, have you any more?

Turner. My Lord, I do want theſe Goldſmiths, they do not appear, they promiſed me they would.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. How can we help it?

Turner. I do humbly beg your Honour and this Honourable Bench, that the old Gentleman, my old Friend, may declare what paſſed between us on Saturday Morning.

Ld Bridgman. Conſider what you do, for here would you have Mr. Tryon ſwear againſt himſelf: hear what you would put him to, take it as you put it, tho I do not believe a word of it. As you put the Caſe, here is Wild commits a Robbery, you come and truck with Wild, and agree with him that Mr. Tryon ſhall let him go, ſhall not meddle with him, there ſhall be no Proſecution, ſo the Jewels and Money may be brought: Would not you get Mr. Tryon to conceal a Felony and Felon, and he confeſs againſt himſelf he made this Agreement with you? that Mr. Tryon did conſent to it, that he promiſed you five hundred Pound to ſhuffle up this Buſineſs?

Turner. Hear me, pray; you put me out: I had not let this Man go, I begged that they would go with me, Sir Thomas Aleyn would not let us go, we would have taken him, I was ſenſible of the Danger; it may be we might have had the Felon and the Goods too.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. No doubt, upon your own Story, all this while you had no poſſibility of having the Goods, unleſs the Life of this Fellow may be given you; ſo you were fain to agree, and plight your Word to him, pawn your Soul that he ſhould be free, untouch'd, ſo he would diſcover the Goods and Moneys. Sir Thomas Aleyn, ſpeak to that Particular again.

Sir Tho. Aleyn. My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, he tells a long Story, that he was kept abroad till Seven a-clock at night; I do verily believe he was brought to Mr. Tryon's at Five a-clock, and there he kept us till Seven, and all he would do, was, he deſired to go himſelf, or with one Perſon at the moſt, or elſe we ſhall loſe all the Jewels, ſaith he, for two Souls are pawned: he did not in the leaſt argue the taking of the Thief. I muſt ſay this, when I came to him on Monday, he ſaid if I had ſent a good Guard, we might have taken the Thief. Said I, a Lyar had need have a good Memory. Then you muſt only go yourſelf, or with one Perſon; he hath told you, that I ſaid there ſhould be no Proſecution. I ſaid only this, whatever Mr. Tryon had promiſed you, I knew not; but if you expect Favour, let the old Gentleman have his Jewels again.

Sir Tho. Chamberlain. I heard no ſuch thing.

Ld Bridgman. What did he tell you?

Sir Tho. Chamberlain. He would have gone with one with him, and pretended he could find out the Jewels only.

Mr. Millington. There were ſome Propoſitions made, he deſired firſt I ſhould go with him ſingly; I told him there would be no Security, but if he would get a ſufficient Guard, I would go with him: but he went home to his Wife, and never made mention of any Party's Name, but that there was a Party he expected the Jewels of.

Ld Bridgman. Did he propoſe any thing touching the taking that Man?

Millington. Nothing but that he had pawned his Soul there ſhould be no diſcovery of it?

Ld Bridgman. Did he deſire that you ſhould go and take the Man?

Millington. No, but that we might go and ſecure the Jewels.

Serj. Cole. My Lord, there was a great deal of danger; we are Bail for Eight Hundred Pounds; if he had been taken away, we are all undone: he only propounded of having the Jewels, and nothing of the Man.

Mr. Gurney. I underſtood you, Col. Turner, only for the Jewels, and not for the Man.

Mr. John Marſhal. My Lord, he did move Sir Thomas Aleyn that I might go with him to White-Chappel and about Tower-Hill. I told Sir Thomas, it was very unſafe for me to go, being late, and out of the Liberties, tho I was a Conſtable, I could not command Aſſiſtance there; and intreated Sir Thomas to excuſe me: I thought it not ſafe for him. He did then repeat the Engagement of his Soul to the Thief, and of Tryon's to him.

Ld Bridgman. Did you ever hear him ſay, deſire or propoſe, that you ſhould go and take the Thief?

Marſhal. No, my Lord, it was to get the reſt of the Jewels.

Alderman Smith. Do not you know that I ſpake to you again and again, and adviſed you by all means to let us know where this Man is; that I would go myſelf, or any of theſe Perſons preſent? you utterly refuſed it, and ſaid there was two Souls pawned, and you would not diſcover it.

Turner. That was at firſt, afterwards I mention'd them all.

Ld Bridgman. For what?

Turner. To take the Thief.

Ld Bridgman. You ſee not any Man teſtify any ſuch thing.

Yeoman Cole. Sir Thomas Aleyn called my Brother and I both in the Room to him, and the Marſhal and his Man; and ſaid, Col. Turner would have us go without the Liberties for theſe Jewels: I think, ſaith Sir Thomas Aleyn, it is not ſafe to go out of the Liberties, Mr. Marſhal ſaid the ſame. He deſired us to go with him, but Sir Thomas refuſed it.

Ld Bridgman. This is a notable piece of Cunning; when he was moved by Alderman Smith and others, all this while he names no Man; but now he was under an Action, he would have them go with himſelf out of the Liberties, and yet never ſaith a word to take the Man: he knew very well it was out of the Liberties. Truly I think, if Sir Thomas Aleyn had done it, I ſhould not have taken him to be Sir Thomas Aleyn. Did you deſire any of them to go with your Wife?

Marſhal. He deny'd us to go with his Wife; his token was this, the Thief would meet no Man.

Turner. My Lord, to the Buſineſs now. I am here indicted for Burglary: it appears to your Honours and the Bench, that it was Ten of the clock when my Sons came from my Lord the Marquiſs of Dorcheſter's Houſe; ſaid I, You Knaves you, what do you out ſo late? Said they, It was paſt Nine before we had done, and my Lord's Gentlemen made us ſtay Supper. They were all in their beds at a little paſt Ten of the clock. You hear what Moſely the Conſtable ſaith, he finds us ſleeping in the Houſe; how ſhould this Burglary be laid on me? I am indicted here for Burglary, and that I cannot be, for that I was at home.

before

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Have you done?

Turner. Ay, my Lord.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. William Turner, what ſay you? You ſee what is laid to your charge; firſt, you are a Perſon of looſe Life: there were two at his Bed-ſide, he believes you to be the Perſon that gagg'd him, and help'd to bind him.

William Turner. I was never in his Houſe in my life, till with Sir Thomas Aleyn.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Where were you?

Will. Turner. At home.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Make that appear.

Will. Turner. I have none here.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. He ſaith it was a Man as like you as can be.

Will. Turner. And I am as innocent as may be.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. John Turner, that which is againſt you is this: You on Saturday Morning very early was buſy with your Father and Mother in the removing the Money; and then when you had notice that you would be apprehended, you got away.

John Turner. Sir, I did not know who it was that was come, whether to apprehend, or upon any other ſcore; but the Woman ſpeaking to me, Flee for your Life, or ſuch Expreſſions, made me go away I know not how.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Did not you bring ſome Money?

John Turner. I did, my Lord.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. How much was brought at that time?

John Turner. I carried away two Bags to Wild.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Did you know him?

John Turner. Yes, my Lord.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Did you carry theſe to Wild on Saturday-Morning? Did not you carry them to Fry's Houſe?

John Turner. We took them afterwards from the Houſe where Wild appointed us to meet.

Ld Bridgman. At what time of the day did you carry them back to Wild?

John Turner. Before Sir Thomas Aleyn came that day, I was coming for more.

Ld Bridgman. To what Place?

John Turner. At Tower-Ditch.

Ld Bridgman. At what Houſe?

John Turner. No Houſe, but I delivered them at Tower-Ditch.

Ld Bridgman. At what time of the day?

John Turner. It was before Sir Thomas Aleyn came, about Eight or Nine of the clock in the Forenoon.

Ld Bridgman. Was there no People there? Who was there?

John Turner. I cannot tell; I ſaw ſeveral other Perſons.

Ld Bridgman. Did Wild ſtand in the ſtreet?

John Turner. Yes.

Ld Bridgman. How came you to know him?

John Turner. By my Father's Direction; and I had ſeen the Man at our Houſe that Morning when he brought in the Money.

Ld Bridgman. Whereabouts? Was it near the Queſt-houſe? that is, the great Houſe that ſtands in the middle of the way?

John Turner. It was hard by the Sign of Noah's-Ark.

Ld Bridgman. This is a likely Story to be believed, that you ſhould in the day-time, between Eight and Nine in the Morning, meet in the Tower-Ditch that Man that was a noted Thief, that had been in Newgate; that you ſhould tarry for this Man to receive two Bags of Money: ſee how it hangs together!

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. How often did you go?

John Turner. Twice.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. How much at a time?

John Turner. A ſingle Bag.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Had you a Coat or Cloke?

John Turner. Juſt as I am now.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. Had Wild a great black Coat? And what did he do with the Money?

John Turner. I know not; but I delivered one in the ſtreet, and then went and fetch'd another, and he ſtaid ready for it.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Bridgman. Was this all the Money that was brought in the Morning, ſave that that Sir Thomas Aleyn brought away?

John Turner. It was all, to my Knowledge.

Sir Tho. Aleyn. Colonel Turner confeſſed to me on Thurſday Morning that more came unto his Houſe, but that Rogue Wild took it away.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Bridgman. How much?

Sir Tho. Aleyn. About 200 l.

Ld Mayor. How many Turns did you make when the Money was carried from your Father's Houſe to the Minories?

John Turner. Twice.

Ld Mayor. Who went firſt?

John Turner. We went both together.

Ld Mayor. How much was carried between you both?

John Turner. The firſt time I carried 200 l. as I can judge.

Ld Mayor. Who carried any more?

John Turner. My Father.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Bridgman. What did you bring the ſecond time?

John Turner. Three hundred Pound.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Bridgman. William, one thing more: What was the Occaſion of meeting you and James Turner at the Alehouſe?

William Turner. I did not meet him, my Lord.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Bridgman. You came thither, and called for a Pot of Ale, and ſaid you ſtaid for Colonel Turner.

W. Turner. It is not right: I only asked if Colonel Turner uſed the Houſe. By and by he came, and paid for the Pot.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Bridgman. You two went together: What was the Occaſion of your meeting together?

Col. Turner. Finding him there, I ſaid I could not drink with him; and ſo we parted.

W. Turner. I called for a Pot of Drink; and having no Money to pay for it, Colonel Turner coming by, I called him in, and deſired him to pay for it; which he did.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Bridgman. The Boy ſwore you ſaid you ſtaid for Colonel Turner: Can you juſtify you were at home, or in any other Place? It is a great Suſpicion: The old Gentleman charged you to be very like the Man; and you can give no account where you were; and Turner and you met together the Day before.

W. Turner. I was at home.

Ld Mayor. William Turner, when did you ſhave your Beard laſt?

W.

W. Turner. Before Chriſtmas.

Ld Mayor. Who ſhaved it for you?

W. Turner. A Barber in Golden-Lane.

Ld Mayor. When his Hair is ſhaved off his Chin, the other Man, whoſe Name is Chriſtmaſs, being a ſmooth-chinn'd Man, it's very poſſible that might beget the Miſtake in Mr. Tryon.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. You of the Jury, it is high time to let you go together to conſider your Verdict: We will trouble you no more in this Buſineſs to-day. Here is an Indictment againſt James Turner, John Turner, and William Turner, for a Burglary in breaking the Houſe of Mr. Francis Tryon in the Night-time, and taking away a great deal of Money and Jewels; you have heard it particularly named. It is likewiſe charged, That Mary and Ely knowing of John to have committed this Felony and Burglary, did comfort and abet him afterwards. I ſhall ſpeak to them two firſt: Mary, the Wife of James Turner, though it appears all along that ſhe had a hand in this Buſineſs, yet nothing appears at all but doing only that which her Husband had directed; then by Law ſhe cannot be Acceſſary for committing of Felony. For Ely, the other Acceſſary, I did not obſerve in the whole Courſe of the Evidence any thing at all againſt him, that he was privy to any thing at all; for that of the carrying of the Money, it appears to be John: For them two, Mary and Ely, nothing is faſten'd upon them. Then the Matter is to James, John, and William Turner: I hope, and I am ſure you are nearer, and you take Notes of what hath been delivered: I have not your Memories; you are young, and no Perſons better; you are Men of Underſtanding, I need not repeat Particulars to you. Thus much I muſt ſay in general, That it is not always neceſſary: But for that I ſhall deſire my Lord Bridgman to declare it to you. A Man may be guilty of a Burglary, tho he be not in the Place, in the Room where it was committed: Or thus, If three or four Men come together with purpoſe to rob a Houſe; two go in and do the Feat, and the reſt ſtay without, to ſee no body comes to prevent, or to receive, one or other coming to that purpoſe; thoſe that are without the Houſe are as guilty of the Burglary as the other that went in. No Man will deny the Law to be ſo. Then weigh your Evidence: It appears by the Coachman that he ſaw four Men, that had Handkerchiefs about their Necks; two upon one ſide, the other two upon the other ſide of the Door. Though there were but two appeared to Mr. Tryon, yet there being four in Company, and Mr. Turner himſelf tells ye, that by the Story from his Intelligencer there was three or four. Whom they were, or whether there was any or no, God knows; but rather ſuppoſe it to be a Story of his own framing: He walk'd up and down on Tower-Hill, took the Thief by the Throat, and there kept him about two Hours, and paſt Four a-clock before they brought the ſecond Bags. Then weigh that particular Knowledge that Mr. Turner had of all theſe Things: That upon Wedneſday before he met with this William Turner, a Perſon you ſee, of what Quality I ſhall not repeat, he cannot give account of himſelf what he is; and that Night, when this Robbery was committed, he ſays he was at home; they are his own Words: He might have had Witneſs to have proved this as well as Mr. Turner. But for James Turner, it's true it appears, and no doubt he was that Night at home: The Conſtable went to his Houſe upon the occaſion of Tryon's Man's ſaying he ſupp'd there, went to find whether he ſupp'd there; that was indeed falſe: But the Conſtable and thoſe that went there, found them a-bed. But then take the time when this Robbery was done: It was between Eight and Nine, and he was found in bed at paſt Ten, tho indeed the Thieves ſaid it was Eleven, as you might underſtand by Mr. Tryon: It muſt be left to you upon the Proof. You ſee when he comes the next Day, he undertakes to find out the Thieves, and that only upon a Suſpicion; that there being a Purpoſe to rob Mr. Tryon a Year before, he goes to the ſame Place now, he found Wild out then: He had very good Luck; that becauſe he lodged there a Year before, he muſt have the ſame Lodging now: It's a likely Matter that Thieves, as Wild is, ſhould keep their Lodgings thus conſtantly. There he finds him, takes him by the Throat, and there they were playing a while: There one comes, goes, and brings ſome part of the Money. After all this, the next Day he muſt take his Word to come again, and to bring the Jewels. Obſerve but this: After which time as the Money was received, yet by a Token, though he never ſaw the Woman before, deſcribing her a ſhort fat Woman, with a long black Scarf, he muſt meet her, asked her what ſhe wanted, and muſt give her Jewels of that Value: 'Tis one of the fineſt fram'd Stories that I have heard, that this Man ſhould come to be thus privy after himſelf ſtood charged, and the Jewels brought for all this; and yet he muſt know nothing of it. You obſerve the Evidences, and their Circumſtances themſelves: The Witneſſes he called in point of Reputation, that I muſt leave to you. I have been here many a fair Time: Few Men that come to be queſtioned, but ſhall have ſome come and ſay, He is a very honeſt Man; I never knew any Hurt by him: But is this any thing againſt the Evidence of the Fact? But you have here the whole; I ſhall leave it to you.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Bridgman. Gentlemen of the Jury, my Lord hath repeated to you the Evidence: I ſhall repeat nothing of that; only one or two Things I ſhall obſerve to you. Firſt, In point of Law: And I muſt agree in Opinion with what my Lord ſays. But in this Caſe there will be ſomething more conſidered; that is, Whether or no (for this is the Law) if a Man have a falſe Key, (we are now upon the point of Law) and we ought to be of Counſel with him and you, to direct that which is right: If he appear plainly to be an Acceſſary, you muſt find him guilty of this Indictment: For that you muſt conſider Circumſtances, whether he broke open the Houſe or no. Then you muſt obſerve Mr. Tryon's Door was ſhut; it was not broken open by a Crow: Therefore you may conclude that it is very probable they had a Picklock: But that I muſt leave to you. Either they muſt come in by one being in the Houſe, or by a Picklock. But to ſay by one in that Houſe, you have no Reaſon to preſume on that: If by a Picklock, whoſoever they were, they muſt be known, not Strangers to the Houſe: Not William Turner alone, but he that knew the Houſe, and all the Paſſages and Doors; knew where the Keys and Jewels were. Then who probably ſhould be in the Houſe? It was not for a Stranger to be in the Houſe, only one that muſt know all. If that James Turner ſhall appear to you to have a Hand in it, if you think he was Acceſſary, you muſt find him guilty as Principal.

Col. Turner. God forbid.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Bridgman. If he were amongſt them, if the Door be opened by a Picklock, it is a direct Burglary,

Burglary, as if broke open by an Iron Bar: But that muſt be left to you. In the next place, to prove the Burglary, you ſee what a Story he tells you, with all the Circumſtances, as if he had been there: He tells you from this Wild (if there be any ſuch, you muſt take it upon his Word) how the Man's Tooth came out, what he meant to do with the other Perſons, and all other Things about that Affair. Obſerve another Thing of Sir Thomas Chamberlain: Says he, We ſuſpected him from the firſt: We could not examine any, but he would be thruſting in, and liſtening. I ſay, admit that you ſhould be by the Evidence perſuaded he had a hand in the Buſineſs, you muſt find him a Principal: For nothing in the World more ordinary, if a Man intend to commit ſuch a Felony or Burglary, he will be ſure to have Witneſs to prove he was here, or in ſuch a Place, at the Time when this Robbery was committed. By all that I can gueſs, and I believe that I gueſs right, this Robbery was between Eight and Nine a-clock at Night. When the Conſtable came to Mr. Turner, no doubt, as it was his wiſeſt Way, he was then in bed; but can prove nothing at all elſe. The Truth is, upon all that he hath ſaid himſelf, if it be true as he hath ſaid, he hath made himſelf a direct Acceſſary to a Felony: For firſt of all, being examined before a Juſtice of Peace, Sir Thomas Aleyn, he ſaid himſelf that the Money he carried, was the Money he had of a Goldſmith: Truly his whole Story is a direct Romance. This Man muſt go upon the Friday Night, about Eleven or Twelve a-clock: And there is a Proverb of a Blind-Man's catching a Hare; if it can be applicable to any thing, it muſt be to this. He muſt go between Eleven and Twelve a-clock at Night, without a Lanthorn, a good way above his own Houſe, and there he muſt walk and think ſome Mephiſtophilus ſhould come and tell him who is the Man: That he ſhould take him by the Throat, though he could call two more with one Whiſtle, and there get him to deliver the Money: Truly he was a very noble and ingenious Thief. But all this you muſt take upon his own Word. Now he knows the Money was diſcovered, then it was a Merchant's that had failed, and muſt be ſecured for the Uſe of his Wife and Children. If you do believe all this that he hath ſaid, he was neither Principal nor Acceſſary to this Felony, but Acceſſary enough to Wild; but that's not the preſent Buſineſs. It is whether upon all theſe Circumſtances, the Money having been found with them, he being the Man that brought the Money, and his Wife the Jewels, whether you do believe the reſt of the Story he hath made for himſelf? If you believe he had a hand in the Buſineſs, you muſt find him as Principal. I ſhall deſire a little further Direction: Suppoſe it were as he ſays, That one was within, and he opens the Door, and lets in others, if he himſelf was one that did come in, I take it to be Burglary in them all; it was an unlawful coming in. So that upon all theſe Circumſtances, firſt, whether you do believe that he had a hand in it, or no, or this fine Story that is made; next, whether you do believe this was one that was there; you muſt believe him guilty as Principal. But I leave it to you.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Hyde. To the laſt I ſay, If one comes in by Day, with a purpoſe before-hand to rob the Houſe by Night, if he opens the Door, which is almoſt impoſſible here, becauſe the Man ſwears it was double-lock'd, it muſt be opened with a Key; if he opened the Door, and the reſt comes in and robs him, that is Burglary in them all.

Thereupon the Jury withdraw'd; and after near an Hour's Conſultation, they returned to the Court, and took their Places: Their Names being called, they ſeverally anſwered.

Cl. of the Peace. Are ye all agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Clerk. Who ſhall ſpeak for you?

Jury. Foreman.

Clerk. Set James Turner to the Bar. Look upon him: How ſay you? Is he guilty of the Felony and Burglary whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

John Turner, William Turner, Mary Turner, and Ely Turner, were by the ſaid Jury ſeverally acquitted.

January the 19*th*.

In the Morning the ſaid William Turner was again arraigned and indicted for the felonious ſtealing of 45 l. of the Moneys of William Hill, Servant to the ſaid Mr. Tryon, and ſtolen in the ſaid Robbery of Mr. Tryon; but the Tryal thereof was deferred till the next Seſſions.

Afterwards, ſome of the Juſtices of the Bench having received Intimation that Lodgings were lately taken in Duke's-Place by the ſaid Col. Turner, William Turner, and others, for the carrying on of the aforeſaid Robbery; the ſaid Col. Turner and William Turner were ſeverally examined by that worthy Gentleman Sir Thomas Aleyn, who with great prudence had managed this Affair, who preſſed ſeveral Queſtions to the ſaid Priſoners; who finding their ſaid Deſign fully diſcovered, declared as followeth:

The Examination and Confeſſion of Colonel James Turner and William Turner, two of the Perſons in the Robbery of Mr. Tryon, taken by Sir Thomas Aleyn Knight and Baronet, in the Preſence of the Right Honourable Sir Anthony Bateman Knight, Lord Mayor of the City of London, Sir Richard Brown Knight and Baronet, Sir John Robinſon Knight and Baronet, Sir Rich. Ford and Sir Rich. Rives Knights, Sheriffs of the City of London, the 19*th of* Jan. 1663.

THAT the contriving and ſetting of this Robbery was wholly acted by Col. James Turner; and that it was in agitation about Chriſtmas laſt, and ſhould have been put in execution a Week ſooner, but that the other Friend, whom Col. Turner brought, was drunk, and one White, who was one of the Actors, would not venture his Life with him: That there were four Perſons that robbed him, Col. James Turner, William Turner, White a Sollicitor, and White's Friend, whoſe Name they knew not: That upon Thurſday the 7th Day of January inſtant, Col. James Turner, William Turner, White, and the other Perſon, whoſe Name they knew not, met at the Red-Lion in Biſhopſgate-Street, near to St. Helen's, about Three of the clock in the Afternoon, where they dined: Col. Turner fetched a Neck of Veal from the Cook's for their Dinner; and then they agreed to rob Mr. Francis Tryon (who lives in Lime-Street) that Night, and went to meet again at the ſame Houſe by Six of the clock that Evening: But the Room where they were to meet being taken up, they went over to the Four Swans, or the Green Dragon, and there they all ſtaid ſtaid till Eight of the clock. Col. Turner did then aſſure them that the Doors ſhould be opened; for that by his own Confeſſion he had got the Impreſſion of the Key of the Door in Wax, and had another Key made by it; but knew not the Smith that made the Key. From that Place Col. Turner carried them to the new Market in Leadenhall, where they ſat upon the Stalls for the ſpace of half an Hour; and then he came unto them, and told them the Man and Maid were now gone out, and that now was their Time. Thereupon Col. Turner opened the Door with his Key, and let them in. Then they went up the Stairs, Col. Turner leading the way. He lit a Candle in the Kitchin, and went up into Mr. Tryon's Chamber, all four of them. Col. Turner went near the Bed's-feet, the Curtains being drawn cloſe. White and the other Perſons put a Cloth into Mr. Tryon's Mouth, ſtopp'd it, and bound his Feet and his Hands. Col. Turner brought down the Key of the Ware-Houſe and the Counting-Houſe out of his Pocket, opened the Ware-Houſe Door and the Counting-Houſe, and took the Keys of the Iron Cheſt, and took out the Money and the Jewels. William Turner carried two Wallets with four Bags of Money, as he conceives: And Col. Turner ſaid that the ſaid William Turner carried four hundred Pounds, and White carried two Wallets more, ſuppoſed to be four Bags of ſome hundred Pounds. Col. Turner and the other Perſon carried the reſt of the Money, only Col. Turner carried away the Jewels in his two Bags. That William Turner did not ſee any Money, but as they ſaid it was Money. They did not ſtay in Mr. Tryon's Houſe above an Hour. That they carried all the aforeſaid Money and Jewels into a Lodging in one Nicholas Hickenſon's Houſe in Louſy-Lane in Duke's-Place, which they hired ſome Days before, pretending it for the Uſe of a Maſter of a Ship, his Mate, Purſer, and Boatſwain. They carried the Money in about Ten a-clock at Night: When the Maid let them in, they blew out the Candle, carry'd up the Money and Jewels, William Turner going under the Name of Purſer. Colonel Turner and William Turner came away that Night, and left the Money and the Jewels there. The next Morning Col. Turner fetch'd away the Money and Jewels at five Turns to his own Houſe. And ſaith, That William Turner was to have a hundred Pounds of the Money for his Pains, White and his Friend twenty Pounds a-piece for their Pains, and Colonel Turner was to have the reſt. That William Turner knew not of any of the Jewels, nor White, none but Col. Turner. That after that Night William Turner never ſaw Col. Turner, nor the other Perſons in the Robbery, till himſelf with Col. Turner and others were arraigned for the Fact at Newgate. Neither did the ſaid William Turner ſee any Money or Jewels opened; neither did he receive one Penny of the Money; neither was he in the Counting-Houſe of Mr. Tryon. That neither Col. Turner's Wife nor Sons knew of this Robbery; only that they helped him to remove the Money away on Saturday Morning. That the Money was in the Houſe on Friday at Night, when the Conſtable and Marſhal ſearched his Houſe; but they had hid them. That Col. Turner being asked where the Jewels were on Saturday Morning, ſaid, He did deliver them at Six of the clock to White in both the Bags. That the Carcanet of Rubies was not in thoſe Bags. That Col. Turner, in the concluſion, confeſſed, That he had not done that he did, but that he did lately underſtand that another Perſon was made Executor, and that he was reſolved to have ſomewhat.

After Colonel Turner's Examination, Sir Thomas Aleyn told Colonel Turner, that the firſt part of Repentance was Confeſſion, the ſecond Reſtitution; and he being a convict Perſon, and in all probability not likely to continue long in this World, it were much better for him to reſtore what was another Man's, than to think to enrich his Wife and Children, by leaving them that which he knew was none of his; and that one Penny of his own Eſtate left him, would continue longer with him than a Pound of another body's: and thereupon he was preſſed to reſtore Mr. Tryon the reſt of his Money, and the Carcanet of Rubies and Diamonds yet in his cuſtody. This had ſuch a preſent Influence upon Mr. Turner, that he ſaid he would immediately go and fetch the Carcanet; which he accordingly did, and delivered the ſame into the hands of Sir Richard Rives, one of the Sheriffs.

January 19. in the Evening.

Clerk. Set James Turner to the Bar. James Turner, hold up thy Hand: Thou ſtandeſt here convicted of Felony and Burglary, for the felonious ſtealing of the Goods and Money of Francis Tryon; what canſt thou ſay, why the Court ſhould not give thee Judgment to die according to Law?

Col. Turner. My Lord, I humbly deſire your Honour, and the Honourable Bench, you would be pleaſed to grant me a Reprieve.

J. Howel. That we cannot do; the Court muſt give Judgment upon you: If you can by any means prevail with his Majeſty to do it, you may uſe your Intereſt; but the Court cannot do it.

Col. Turner. I deſire your Honours I may be tranſported.

J. Howel. That likewiſe is in the power of his Majeſty: That he may do, if he pleaſe. It is not in the power of the Court: We have nothing to do but to give Judgment.

Col. Turner. You do it with others.

J. Howel. No, not in this Caſe of Burglary; but leave that to his Majeſty's mere Mercy and Grace.

Col. Turner. My Lord, I ſhall humbly deſire that my Wife and the two Youths may be diſcharged.

J. Howel. She is found not guilty; and therefore ſhe ſhall have her Acquittal upon the Diſcharge of the Goal. Thoſe that are acquitted, they muſt be diſcharged, if the Court do not ſee Cauſe for their further Detention.

Col. Turner. I pray the young Man and my Wife may be diſcharged.

J. Howel. Whoſoever are found not guilty, muſt have their Diſcharge according to Law.

Col. Turner. My Lord, I hope the Bench is ſatisfied about the young Man.

J. Howel. Say no more.

Col. Turner. Your Honour's humble Servant.

Clerk. Set James Turner to the Bar.

J. Howel. I muſt pronounce the Judgment of the Court, which is, That you go to the Place from whence you came, and ſo to that Place of Execution which ſhall be appointed to you by Authority, there to be hanged by the Neck till you be dead; and the Lord have Mercy on your Soul.

Accordingly the ſaid Col. James Turner was drawn in a Cart from Newgate to Lime-Street-End in Leadenhall-Street, the 21ſt of January, and was there executed on a Gibbet erected for that purpoſe.

The Tryal of Mr. Benjamin Keach, at the Aſſizes held at Ailsbury in Buckinghamſhire, October 8, and 9. 1664. 16 Car. II.

Benjamin Keach of Winſlow, in the County of Bucks, having wrote a little Book, entitled, The Child's Inſtructor; or, A New and Eaſy Primmer: In which were contained ſeveral Things contrary to the Doctrine and Ceremonies of the Church of England; as, That Infants ought not to be baptized; That Laymen may preach the Goſpel; That Chriſt ſhall reign perſonally upon the Earth in the latter Day, &c. He had no ſooner got it printed, and ſome of them ſent down to him, but one Mr. Strafford, a Juſtice of the Peace for that County, received Information of it. Whereupon, taking a Conſtable with him, he went himſelf in queſt of the ſaid Books; and coming to the Houſe of Mr. Keach, found and ſeized ſeveral of them, bound Mr. Keach over to anſwer for it at the next Aſſizes in a Recognizance of an hundred Pounds, and two Sureties with him in fifty Pounds each.

The next Aſſize holden for the ſaid County was at Ailsbury on the 8th and 9th Days of October, 1664. Lord Chief Juſtice Hyde being Judge. On the firſt of which Days, in the Forenoon, Mr. Keach was called upon; who anſwering to his Name, was brought to the Bar, and examined as follows:

Judge. Did you write this Book? [Holding out one of the Primmers in his Hand.]

Keach. I writ moſt of it.

Judge. What have you to do to take other Mens Trades out of their hands? I believe you can preach as well as write Books. Thus it is to let you, and ſuch as you are, have the Scriptures to wreſt to your own Deſtruction. You have made in your Book a new Creed: I have ſeen three Creeds before; but I never ſaw a fourth till you made one.

Keach. I have not made a Creed, but a Confeſſion of the Chriſtian Faith.

Judge. Well, that is a Creed then.

Keach. Your Lordſhip ſaid you had never ſeen but three Creeds; but Thouſands of Chriſtians have made a Confeſſion of their Faith.

After this the Judge obſerved to the Court ſeveral Things which were written in the ſaid Book, concerning Baptiſm and the Miniſters of the Goſpel, which were contrary to the Liturgy of the Church of England, and ſo a Breach of the Act of Uniformity.

Keach. My Lord, as to thoſe Things ——

Judge. You ſhall not preach here, nor give the Reaſons of your Damnable Doctrine, to ſeduce and infect his Majeſty's Subjects. Theſe are not Things for ſuch as you are to meddle with, and to pretend to write Books of Divinity: But I will try you for it before I ſleep.

After this he gave Directions to the Clerk to draw up the Indictment; and the Witneſſes were ſworn, and ordered to ſtand by the Clerk till the Indictment was finiſhed, and then to go with it to the Grand Inqueſt.

Judge. Gentlemen of the Grand Jury, I ſhall ſend you preſently a Bill againſt one that hath taken upon him to write a new Primmer for the Inſtruction of your Children: He is a baſe and dangerous Fellow; and if this be ſuffered, Children by learning of it will become ſuch as he is. And therefore I hope you will do your Duty.

The Indictment being long, took ſo much time to draw it up, that the Tryal did not come on till the next Day.

The next Day, the Court being ſet, the Grand Jury found the Bill, and brought it in indorſed Billa vera.

Clerk. Benjamin Keach come to the Bar.

Mr. Keach comes to the Bar.

Clerk. Hear your Charge. 'Thou art here indicted by the Name of Benjamin Keach, of the 'Pariſh of Winſlow, in the County of Bucks: For 'that thou being a Seditious, Heretical, and Schiſmatical Perſon, evilly and maliciouſly diſpoſed, 'and diſaffected to his Majeſty's Government, and 'the Government of the Church of England, did'ſt 'maliciouſly and wickedly, on the 1ſt Day of May, 'in the 16th Year of the Reign of our Sovereign 'Lord the King, write, print, and publiſh, or 'cauſe to be written, printed, and publiſhed, one 'Seditious and Venomous Book, entitled, The 'Child's Inſtructor, or, A New and Eaſy Primmer; 'wherein are contained, by way of Queſtion and 'Anſwer, theſe Damnable Poſitions, contrary to 'the Book of Common Prayer, and the Liturgy 'of the Church of England: That is to ſay, in 'one Place you have thus written; Q. Who are 'the right Subjects of Baptiſm? A. Believers, or 'godly Men and Women only, who can make Confeſſion 'of their Faith and Repentance. And in another 'place you have maliciouſly and wickedly written 'theſe Words; Q. How ſhall it then go with the 'Saints? A. O very well. It is the Day that they 'have longed for: then they ſhall hear that Sentence, 'Come ye Bleſſed of my Father, inherit the King'dom prepared for you; and ſo ſhall they reign with 'Chriſt on the Earth a thouſand Years, even on Mount 'Sion, in New Jeruſalem; for there will Chriſt's 'Throne be, on which they muſt ſit down with him. 'Then follows this Queſtion, with the Anſwer 'thereto, in theſe plain Engliſh Words; Q. When 'ſhall the Wicked and the fallen Angels, which be the 'Devils, be judged? A. When the thouſand Years

'ſhall be expired, then ſhall the reſt of the Devils be raiſed, and then ſhall be the general and laſt Judgment, then ſhall all the reſt of the Dead and Devils be judged by Chriſt and his glorified Saints; and they being arraigned and judged, the Wicked ſhall be condemned, and caſt by the Angels into the Lake of Fire, there to be burned for ever and ever.

'In another place thou haſt wickedly and maliciouſly written theſe plain Engliſh words: Q. Why may not Infants be received into the Church now, as they were under the Law? A. Becauſe the fleſhly Seed is caſt out: Tho God under that Diſpenſation did receive Infants in a lineal way by Generation, yet he that hath the Key of David, that openeth and no Man ſhutteth, that ſhutteth and no Man openeth, hath ſhut up that Way into the Church; and hath opened the Door of Regeneration, receiving in none now but Believers. Q. What then is the State of Infants? A. Infants that die are Members of the Kingdom of Glory, tho they be not Members of the Viſible Church. Q. Do they then that bring in Infants in a fleſhly lineal way, err from the way of Truth? A. Yea, they do; for they make not God's Holy Word their Rule, but do preſume to open a Door that Chriſt hath ſhut, and none ought to open. And alſo in another place thou haſt wickedly and maliciouſly compoſed A ſhort Confeſſion of the Chriſtian Faith; wherein thou haſt affirm'd this concerning the ſecond Perſon in the Bleſſed Trinity, in theſe plain Engliſh words: I alſo believe that he roſe again the third Day from the Dead, and aſcended into Heaven above, and there now ſitteth at the right hand of God the Father; and from thence he ſhall come again at the appointed time of the Father, to reign perſonally upon the Earth, and to be Judge of the Quick and Dead. And in another place thou haſt wickedly and maliciouſly affirmed theſe things concerning true Goſpel-Miniſters, in theſe plain Engliſh words following: Chriſt hath not choſen the wiſe and prudent Men after the Fleſh, not great Doctors and Rabbies; Not many Mighty and Noble, ſaith Paul, are called: but rather the Poor and Deſpiſed, even Tradeſmen and ſuch-like, as was Matthew, Peter, Andrew, Paul, and others. And Chriſt's true Miniſters have not their Learning and Wiſdom from Men, or from Univerſities, or human Schools for human Learning. Arts and Sciences are not eſſential to the making of a true Miniſter, but the Gifts of God, which cannot be bought with Silver and Gold; and alſo as they have freely received the Gift, ſo they do freely adminiſter: They do not preach for Hire, for Gain and filthy Lucre: They are not like the falſe Teachers, who look for Gain from their Quarter; who eat the Fat, and clothe themſelves with the Wool, and kill them that are fed; thoſe that put not into their mouths, they prepare War againſt: Alſo they are not Lords over God's Heritage, they rule them not by Force and Cruelty, neither have they power to force and compel Men to believe and obey their Doctrines, but are only to perſuade and intreat; for this is the Way of the Goſpel, as Chriſt taught them——

'And many other things haſt thou ſeditiouſly, wickedly, and maliciouſly written in the ſaid Book, to the great Diſpleaſure of Almighty God, the Scandal of the Liturgy of the Church of England, the Diſaffection of the King's People to his Majeſty's Government, the Danger of the Peace of this Kingdom, to the evil Example of others, and contrary to the Statute in that caſe made and provided.' How ſay you, Benjamin Keach, are you guilty, or not guilty?

Keach. The Indictment is ſo very long, that I cannot remember half of it, nor have I been accuſtomed to plead to Indictments; therefore I deſire a Copy of it, and liberty to confer with Counſel about it, in order to put in my Exceptions, and then I ſhall plead to it.

Judge. 'Tis your Intention, I perceive, to delay your Tryal to the next Aſſize.

Keach. No, my Lord, I have no deſign by this to delay my Tryal.

Judge. I will not deny you what is your Right, but you muſt firſt plead to your Indictment, and afterwards you ſhall have a Copy of it.

Keach. I deſire I may have a Copy of it before I plead, in order to put in my Exceptions againſt it.

Judge. You ſhall not have it, before you plead Guilty or Not Guilty.

Keach. 'Tis what has been granted to others.

Judge. You ſhall not have it firſt; and if you refuſe to plead Guilty or Not Guilty, I ſhall take it pro confeſſo, and give Judgment againſt you accordingly.

Keach. Not Guilty, my Lord.

Judge. Now you may have a Copy of your Indictment, and I will give you an Hour's time to conſider of it.

Keach. If I may have no longer time, I don't deſire one.

Judge. I have ſomething elſe to do than wait upon you; you are not a Perſon fit to go abroad till next Aſſize, and you will think it hard if I ſhould commit you to Goal till then: but becauſe you ſhall not ſay but that you were offered fair, if you will find ſufficient Sureties for your Appearance at the next Aſſize, and for your good Behaviour till then, you ſhall not be try'd till then.

Keach. My Lord, I am content to be try'd now.

Judge. Go on then, a God's Name.

Clerk. Gentlemen of the Jury, anſwer to your Names. &c.

Then the Jury were ſworn, well and truly to try the Traverſe between the King's Majeſty and the Priſoner at the Bar.

Judge. Clerk, read the Indictment. [He reads it.]

Gentlemen of the Jury, the Priſoner at the Bar has pleaded Not Guilty, and your Charge is to inquire whether he be guilty or not.

Then the Witneſſes were ſworn, who were Neal and Whithall.

Neal depoſed, That Juſtice Strafford ſent for him to his Houſe; when he came there, the Juſtice ſent him back again for his Staff of Authority: which being done, he went with the Juſtice to one Moody's Stall, and asked for ſome of the Primmers which he had: he anſwered, that he had none. That from thence they went to Mr. Keach's Houſe, where firſt they ſaw his Wife, who told them he was in an inward Room. They asked her, if there were not ſome Primmers in the Houſe? ſhe ſaid, there was; and about thirty were brought forth, and delivered to them.

Then Juſtice Strafford himſelf was alſo examined: he ſaid, That he found the Primmers now before the Court in Benj. Keach's Houſe, and ſeized them; and that the Priſoner at the Bar had confeſſed before him, that he writ and compoſed the ſaid Book.

Then a Copy of the Priſoner's Examination before the ſaid Juſtice, ſigned with his own Hand, was produced and read; wherein was contained, That the Priſoner being asked whether he was the Author or Writer of the ſaid Book? anſwered, Yes he was. And further declared, That he delivered a part of the Copy to one Oviat a Printer at London, ſince dead; and that the reſt of the Copy he he ſent up by another Hand, but that he knew not who printed it: That about forty of them were ſent down to him, of which he had diſperſed about twelve, and that the Price was Five-pence each Book.

After this the Judge called for a Common-Prayer-Book, and laid it before him; and ordered one of the Primmers to be given to the Gentlemen of the Jury, and bid them look on thoſe parts where the Leaves were turn'd down.

Judge. Clerk read thoſe Sentences in the Indictment, which are taken out of the Book, that the Jury may turn to them, and ſee that the ſaid Poſitions are contained in the Book.

Clerk. Q. Who are the right Subjects of Baptiſm? A. Believers or Godly Men and Women only, who can make Confeſſion of their Faith and Repentance.

Judge. This is contrary to the Book of Common-Prayer, for that appoints Infants to be baptized, as well as Men and Women. [Here he read ſeveral places in the Liturgy, wherein the baptizing of Infants is enjoined and directed.]

Clerk reads. Q. How ſhall it then go with the Saints? A. Oh very well! it is the Day that they have long'd for: then they ſhall hear that Sentence, Come ye bleſſed of my Father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you: And ſo ſhall they reign with Chriſt on the Earth a thouſand Years, &c.

Judge. This is contrary to the Creed in the Book of Common-Prayer, and is an old Hereſy, which was caſt out of the Church a thouſand Years ago, and was likewiſe condemned by the Council of Conſtance about five hundred Years ago, and hath lain dead ever ſince, till now this Raſcal hath revived it.

Clerk reads. Q. Why may not Infants be received into the Church now, as they were under the Law? A. Becauſe the fleſhly Seed is caſt out, &c. Q. What then is the State of Infants? A. Infants that die, are Members of the Kingdom of Glory, tho they be not Members of the Viſible Church. Q. Do they then that bring in Infants by a fleſhly lineal Way, err from the Truth? A. Yea, they do; for they make not God's Holy Word their Rule, but do preſume to open a Door that Chriſt hath ſhut, and none ought to open.

Judge. This alſo is contrary to the Book of Common-Prayer, which appoints Infants to be received into the Church, and directs the Prieſt to ſay, when he hath ſprinkled the Child, We receive this Child into the Congregation of Chriſt's Flock. And whereas he ſays that Infants that die are Members of the Kingdom of Glory, tho not of the Viſible Church, he ſpeaks this of Infants in general, and ſo the Child of a Turk or Heathen is made equal with the Child of a Chriſtian: But the Church hath otherwiſe determined; that is, if an Infant die after Baptiſm, and before it hath actually ſinned, it is ſaved, becauſe Original Sin is waſh'd away in Baptiſm. Read on.

Clerk. Alſo in another place thou haſt wickedly and maliciouſly compoſed A ſhort Confeſſion of Faith, in which thou haſt affirmed thus, concerning the ſecond Perſon in the Bleſſed Trinity, in theſe plain Engliſh words; I alſo believe that he roſe again the third Day from the Dead, and aſcended into Heaven, and there now ſitteth at the right hand of God the Father; and from thence he ſhall come again at the appointed time of the Father, to reign perſonally upon the Earth, and to be the Judge of the Quick and the Dead.

Judge. This is contrary to our Creed: for whereas he ſaith, From thence he ſhall come again at the appointed time of the Father, to reign perſonally upon the Earth, and to be Judge both of the Quick and the Dead; our Creed only ſaith, From thence he ſhall come to judge both the Quick and the Dead.

Clerk. And in another place thou haſt wickedly and maliciouſly affirmed theſe things concerning true Goſpel-Miniſters, in theſe plain Engliſh words following: Chriſt hath not choſen the wiſe and prudent Men after the Fleſh, not great Doctors and Rabbies; Not many Mighty and Noble, ſaith Paul, are called, &c. as above.

Judge. This alſo is contrary to the Book of Common-Prayer; for whereas the Poſition in the Indictment ſaith, Chriſt hath not choſen great Rabbies and Doctors, but rather the Poor and Deſpiſed, and Tradeſmen; the Book of Common-Prayer doth admit of ſuch. [Here he read ſome Paſſages concerning the Qualification of Miniſters, and their Manner of Conſecration.] Becauſe Chriſt, when he was upon the Earth, made choice of Tradeſmen to be his Diſciples, therefore this Fellow would have Miniſters to be ſuch now; Taylors, and Pedlars, and Tinkers, and ſuch Fellows as he is: But it is otherwiſe now, as appears from the Manner in which the Church has appointed them to be choſen, ordained, and conſecrated.

The Judge having thus gone through the Indictment, the Priſoner began to ſpeak in his Defence.

Keach. As to the Doctrines——

Judge. You ſhall not ſpeak here, except to the Matter of Fact; that is to ſay, whether you writ this Book or not.

Keach. I deſire liberty to ſpeak to the Particulars in my Indictment, and thoſe things that have——

Judge. You ſhall not be ſuffered to give the Reaſons of your damnable Doctrine here, to ſeduce the King's Subjects.

Keach. Is my Religion ſo bad, that I may not be allow'd to ſpeak?

Judge. I know your Religion, you are a Fifth-Monarchy-Man; and you can preach, as well as write Books; and you would preach here, if I would let you: but I ſhall take ſuch order, as you ſhall do no more miſchief.

Keach. I did not write all the Book, for there is an Epiſtle to it written by another Hand; neither can it be proved that I writ all that is put into the Indictment.

Judge. It is all one whether you writ it yourſelf, or dictated to another to write it: but it appears by your Examination under your own Hand, that you wrote it all.

Keach. Becauſe I writ the major part of it, I was contented to let it go with the word all in my Examination before Juſtice Strafford; but I cannot in Conſcience ſay I wrote it all: nor is it proved that I publiſhed it.

Judge. Yes, you did; for Moody had ſix Books of you.

Keach. I did neither ſell them, nor deliver them to him.

Judge. He had them at your Houſe, and it is not likely he ſhould take them without your Conſent.

Keach. I do not ſay he had them without my Conſent.

Judge. It is all one then, as if you delivered them.

Here the Judge ſumm'd up the Evidence, and gave his Charge to the Jury; but this the Amanuenſis has omitted.

The Jury being withdrawn, ſtaid for ſome hours; at length one of the Officers who attended them came in.

Officer.

Officer. My Lord, the Jury about the Primmers cannot agree.

Judge. But they muſt agree.

Officer. They deſire to know whether one of them may not come and ſpeak with your Lordſhip, about ſomething whereof they are in doubt.

Judge. Yes, privately: [And then ordered one to come to him on the Bench.]

Then the Officer called one, and he was ſet upon the Clerk's Table, and the Judge and he whiſpered together a great while; and it was obſerved, that the Judge having his hands upon his ſhoulders, would frequently ſhake him as he ſpake to him. Upon this Perſon's returning, the whole Jury quickly came in, and being according to Cuſtom called over by their Names, the Clerk proceeded.

Clerk. Are you agreed in your Verdict?

Jury. Yes, yes.

Clerk. Who ſhall ſpeak for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Clerk. How ſay you, is Benjamin Keach guilty of the Matters contained in the Indictment againſt him, or not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty in part.

Clerk. Of what part?

Foreman. There is ſomething contained in the Indictment, which is not in the Book.

Clerk. What is that?

Foreman. In the Indictment he is charged with theſe words, When the thouſand Years ſhall be expired, then ſhall all the reſt of the Devils be raiſed; but in the Book it is, Then ſhall the reſt of the Dead be raiſed.

Clerk. Is he guilty of all the reſt of the Indictment, that Sentence excepted?

One of the Jury. I cannot in Conſcience find him guilty, becauſe the Words in the Indictment and the Book do not agree.

Judge. That is only through a Miſtake of the Clerk's, and in that Sentence only; and you may find him guilty of all, that Sentence excepted: but why did you come in before you were agreed?

Foreman. We thought we had been agreed.

Judge. You muſt go out again, and agree: and as for you that ſay you cannot in Conſcience find him guilty, if you ſay ſo again, without giving Reaſons for it, I ſhall take an Order with you.

Then the Jury withdrew, and in a little time returned again.

Clerk. Are you agreed in your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Clerk. How ſay you, is Benjamin Keach guilty of the Matters charged in the Indictment againſt him, or not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty of the Indictment; that Sentence, wherein Devils is inſerted inſtead of Dead, only excepted.

Upon this, Benjamin Keach was called to the Bar, and the Judge proceeded to paſs Sentence upon him as follows.

Judge. Benjamin Keach, you are here convicted of writing and publiſhing a ſeditious and ſcandalous Book, for which the Court's Judgment is this, and the Court doth award, That you ſhall go to Goal for a Fortnight, without Bail or Mainpriſe; and the next Saturday to ſtand upon the Pillory at Ailsbury for the ſpace of two Hours, from Eleven of the clock to One, with a Paper upon your Head with this Inſcription, For writing, printing, and publiſhing a ſchiſmatical Book, intitled, The Child's Inſtructor, or a New and Eaſy Primmer. And the next Thurſday to ſtand in the ſame manner, and for the ſame time, in the Market of Winſlow; and there your Book ſhall be openly burnt before your face by the common Hangman, in diſgrace of you and your Doctrine. And you ſhall forfeit to the King's Majeſty the Sum of 20 l. and ſhall remain in Goal until you find Sureties for your good Behaviour and Appearance at the next Aſſizes, there to renounce your Doctrine, and make ſuch publick Submiſſion as ſhall be enjoined you. Take him away, Keeper.

Keach. I hope I ſhall never renounce thoſe Truths which I have written in that Book.

Clerk. My Lord, he ſays he hopes he ſhall never repent.

But the Judge taking no notice, the Goaler took him away.

According to the Sentence paſſed upon him, he was kept cloſe Priſoner till the Saturday following, and then about Eleven a clock was carried to the Pillory at Ailsbury; where he ſtood full two hours to a minute, was deny'd the liberty of ſpeaking to the Spectators, and had his Hands as well as his Head carefully kept in the Pillory the whole time.

On the Thurſday following he ſtood in the ſame manner and for the ſame time at Winſlow, the Town where he lived, and had his Book burnt before him.

After this, upon paying his Fine, and giving ſufficient Security for his good Behaviour, he was ſet at liberty; but was never brought to make a Recantation.
